

Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka

Told in Slow Motion

[Entirely Based on the Classics Ram Charit Manas, Kavitawali, Geetawali, Adhyatma Ramayan & Anand Ramayan]

---##---

Presented in English By:-

Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia

Ayodhya (Faizabad, U.P.)

Full address of Author—36-A, Rajghat Colony, Parikrama Marg,
P.O.—Ayodhya, Pin—224123
Distt.—Faizabad, U.P. India.

Mobile: +919451290400, +919935613060

Website: < www.tulsidas-ram-books.weebly.com >

Email of Author: (i) < ajaiChhawchharia@gmail.com >

(ii) < ajaikumarbooks@gmail.com >

Facebook ID < www.facebook.com/ajaikumarchhawchharia8 >

Linkedin: www.linkedin.com/AjaiKumarChhawchharia

**

© By Author—All rights reserved by the author. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form or by any means without permission of the author-Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia.

NOTE: Author's Books are available at:--

- (1) www.amazon.com in its Kindle + Paper-Back Print Editions.
- (2) www.pothi.com in a Print edition.
- (3) www.draft2digital.com and its various vendors' platforms in E-Book edition:
URL: <https://www.draft2digital.com/ajaikumarchhawchharia>
- (4) www.tulsidas-ram-books.weebly.com
- (5) Archive.org: https://archive.org/details/@ajai_kumar_chhawchharia
- (6) Goodreads:
https://www.goodreads.com/author/show/991710.Ajai_Kumar_Chhawchharia

Language: English + Sanskrit + Hindi / Vernacular.

Contents:

Part 1

Birth of Ravana, Establishment of the Demon Kingdom, and their Reign of Terror:-

Dedication: Page 8

Preface: Page 9-29

Introduction: A Brief Outline of the Story and its Important Characters: Page 30-37

Chapter 1: The Tale of Ravana's Previous Life—The Story of king Pratapbhanu: Page 38—118

Ram Charit Manas = Page 38-118

Chapter 2: The Birth of Ravana, his various Boons and Curses, and the Establishment of the Demon Kingdom: Page 118-201

Section 2.1 Anand Ramayan = Page 118-162

Section 2.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 162-192

Section 2.3 Ram Charit Manas = Page 193-201

Chapter 3: The Reign of Dread and Terror unleashed by Ravana and the Demons:
Page 202-212

Ram Charit Manas = Page 203-212

Chapter 4: Gods and Mother Earth pray to Lord Vishnu to save them from Ravana's Tyranny, and the Lord's Promise to them: Page 212-239

Section 4.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 213-231

Section 4.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 231-239

-----**-----

Part 2

Abduction of Sita by Ravana, Her Discovery by Hanuman, and the Burning of Lanka:-

Chapter 5: The Story of Sita's abduction by Ravana: Page 240-386

- Section 5.1.1 {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 244-260
 Section 5.1.2 {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Anand Ramayan = Page 260-261
 Section 5.1.3 {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Ram Charit Manas = Page 261-264
 Section 5.2.1 {The story of Sita's abduction by Ravana} Ram Charit Manas =
 Page 264-335
 Section 5.2.2 {The story of Sita's abduction by Ravana} Adhyatma Ramayan
 = Page 336-374
 Section 5.2.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 374-386

Chapter 6: The Search for Sita, and her Discovery as a Captive in Lanka: Page 387-598

{Lord Ram begins his search of Sita; meeting Jatau and Sabari; friendship with Sugriv, the prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha; sending messengers in all the directions to locate Sita; she is sighted in Lanka by Sampati; the reconnaissance party deputed Hanuman to go and ascertain facts; Hanuman crosses the ocean to land on the shore of Lanka}

- Section 6.1 (sub-sections 6.1.1—6.1.6) Ram Charit Manas = Page 387-504
 Section 6.2 (sub-sections 6.2.1—6.2.6) Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 504-573
 Section 6.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 574-595
 Section 6.4 Kavitalawali Ramayan = Page 596-598

Chapter 7: Hanuman meets Sita; The Burning of Lanka by Hanuman; His return to give the good news of Sita's discovery to Lord Ram: 599-926

- Section 7.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 599-743
 Section 7.2 Adhyatma Ramayan (sub-sections 7.2.1—7.2.5) = Page 743-850
 Section 7.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 850-901
 Section 7.4 Kavitalawali Ramayan = Page 901-926

-----**-----

Part 3

Lord Ram collects an Army of Monkeys and Bears to Launch a Campaign to Recover Sita, Vibhishan Joins Lord Ram, Crossing the Ocean and the Arrival of the Lord's Forces in Lanka, the Prelude to the War and Attempts to avoid it through an Emissary for Peace:-

Chapter 8: Lord Ram Collects a Huge Army of Monkeys and Bears and Launches a Military Campaign to Free Sita from the Clutches of the Demons; the Arrival of the Lord's Army on the Shore of the Ocean: Page 926-954

- Section 8.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 927-935
 Section 8.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 936-951
 Section 8.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 951-954

Chapter 9: Vibhishan, the brother of Ravana, joins Lord Ram: Page 955-1091

- Section 9.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 955-1008
 Section 9.2 Kavitalawali Ramayan = Page 1008-1009

Section 9.3 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1010-1047

Section 9.4 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 1047-1091

Chapter 10: Building a Bridge across the Ocean; Crossing of it and Landing of Lord Ram's Forces on the Soil of Lanka: Page 1091-1170

Section 10.1 Ram Charit Manas (sub-section 10.1.1—10.1.2) = Page 1092-1159

Section 10.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1159-1170

Chapter 11: A brief Recapitulation of the Story from the episode of Sita's abduction by Ravana till the time Lord Ram landed in Lanka from 'Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan'; The Kodand Ram & Sarang Pani Ram = Page 1170-1197

Section 11.1—11.3 = Page 1170-1190

Section 11.4 Kodand Ram & Sarang Pani Ram = Page 1191-1197

-----**-----

Part 4

Prelude to the Sacking of Lanka:-

Chapter 12: Ravana's wife Mandodari's many attempts to avoid the war by trying to make her husband abandon his stubbornness, heed sane advice and come to terms with reality: Page 1199-1272

Section 12.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1201-1244

Section 12.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1244-1259

Section 12.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 1259-1263

Section 12.4 Kavitalawali Ramayan = Page 1264-1272

Chapter 13: War Parleys in both the camps of Lord Ram and Ravana; Lord Ram sends Angad as an Emissary of Peace to avoid the Destructive War: Page 1273-1384

Section 13.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1274-1379

Section 13.2 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 1379-1384

Part 5

The War Begins: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces and the Horrors of War; The Sack of Lanka; Death of Kumbhakaran and Meghanad; Battle with Ravana and His Death:-

Chapter 14: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces—The Horrifying and Blood-Curdling War between the Demons and the Army of Monkeys and Bears; The Sack of Lanka begins; The Ravages of War: Page 1385-1453

Introduction = Page 1385-1387

Section 14.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1387-1431
 Section 14.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1431-1441
 Section 14.3 Kavitawali Ramayan = Page 1441-1453

Chapter 15: The first round of Battle with Meghnad leading to Laxman's fainting:
 Page 1454-1597

Section 15.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1455-1529
 Section 15.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1529-1570
 Section 15.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 1570-1594
 Section 15.4 Kavitawali Ramayan = Page 1594-1597

Chapter 16: Battle with Kumbhakaran and His Death: Page 1597-1666

Section 16.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1598-1646
 Section 16.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1646-1666

Chapter 17: The second round of Battle with Meghnad and His Death: Page 1667-1712

Section 17.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1667-1694
 Section 17.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1694-1712

Chapter 18: The Final Battle with Ravana and His Death: Page 1713-1924

Section 18.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1714-1871
 Section 18.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1871-1924

-----**-----

Part 6

The War Ends with Victory for Lord Ram's Forces; Vibhishan made the New King of Lanka; Sita is Re-United with Lord Ram; The Return of Lord Ram with His Companions back to His Capital at Ayodhya:-

Chapter 19: The War Ends with Victory for Lord Ram's Forces; Jubilation in the ranks of the Gods and their Praise of Lord Ram; Appointment of Vibhishan as the New King of Lanka: Page 1924-1967

Introduction = Page 1924-1925
 Section 19.1 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 1925-1928
 Section 19.2 Kavitawali Ramayan = Page 1928-1930
 Section 19.3 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1930-1951
 Section 19.4 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1951-1967

Chapter 20: Sita Re-United with Lord Ram: Page 1967-2011

Section 20.1 Ram Charit Manas = Page 1967-1996
 Section 20.2 Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 1996-2011

Chapter 21: Epilogue:-

Lord Ram Embarks on His Journey Back Home to Ayodhya with His Companions onboard the Air-Plane called Pushpak; Lord Ram's Arrival in Ayodhya to a warm and tumultuous Welcome; Lord Ram's ascending the Throne of Ayodhya as a King and the Lord Emperor; Lord Ram's guests from Kishkindha and Lanka return to their respective kingdoms: Page 2011-2200

Section 21.1 (sub-section 21.1.1—21.1.6) Ram Charit Manas = Page 2012-2140

Section 21.2 (sub-section 21.2.1—21.2.3) Adhyatma Ramayan = Page 2140-2185

Section 21.3 Geetawali Ramayan = Page 2185-2200

Chapter 22: The whole Story of the "Ramayana"—Recapitulated and Told Quickly in a 'Fast Motion' mode: Page 2201

Ram Charit Manas = Page 2201-2230

Appendix : About the Author = Page 2231

-----**-----

DEDICATION

THIS BOOK IS DEDICATED TO MY BELOVED LORD RAM

I dedicate this Book to Lord Sri Ram who is my dearest of dear, most beloved, the essence of my life and being, and for whom, and for whose pleasure, and on whose behest, and on whose divine mission, this book is dedicated.

Nothing that I write is of my own creation. It is the Lord who is getting it done. So I deserve no credit. However, being an ordinary man like the rest of us, I may have committed errors, and for those I beg forgiveness. I hope this book will help to continue the great tradition of singing the glories of the different aspects of same indivisible one Divinity in order to meet diverse needs of the Soul, the Spirit, one such being to find peace and happiness amidst the surrounding turmoil of the world by being able to spend some time in the thoughts of the Divine Being, the same 'Parmatma', the same Lord known by different names in different tongues.

I submit this effort at the holy feet of my beloved Lord Ram, and surely also to Lord Hanuman who was very dear to the Lord, with this humble little prayer that comes to my lips: 'Lord God; Glorious and Blessed be Thy Name. I yield Thee my most hearty thanks and reverential gratitude that Thou hast given me the honour and the privilege and the opportunity to serve Thee and fulfil Thy desire to spread Thine Good Word for the good and welfare of the human kind through the Books Thou hast got written through these humble hands of mine. And for that mercy and graciousness of Thee, I shall ever and for ever remain Thine grateful and thankful and obliged.'

I hope the reader will find my book useful and interesting. Since English is an international language, this book will help the English speaking world to access this wonderful story narrated straight away from masterpieces of classical Indian scriptural texts.

"He leadeth me! O blessed tho't!
O words with heav'nly comfort fraught!
What-e'er I do, wher-e'er I be,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me!" [A Hymn]

Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia
Author

Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka

Told in Slow Motion

[Entirely Based on the Classics Ram Charit Manas, Kavitawali, Geetawali, Adhyatma Ramayan & Anand Ramayan]

Preface

This is a most fascinating and charming story of Ravana, the Great King of the Demon Race. It was Ravana for whom the Supreme Lord of the World, Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, had to come down here on earth as a human being, in the form of Lord Ram, the prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya.

The Story of Ravana is intertwined with and inseparable from the divine Story of Lord Ram, the incarnate Supreme Being, because the Lord had to come down to earth expressly due to Ravana, for the latter had become so extremely demonic in his behaviour, breaking all boundaries of tolerance and tormenting everyone so much that mother earth and the gods had found it impossible to bear the burden any longer. So they ultimately prayed to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of this world, to do something to eliminate this scourge, at which the Lord promised them that there is only one way to do it, and it is that he would have to personally deal with the matter by manifesting himself as a human being in the person of a great prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya, and in this form he would be known by the name of Lord Ram.

The Lord selected the household of the king of Ayodhya, named Dasrath, to reveal himself in the form of 'Sri Ram' for a specific reason, and it is that Dasrath had done severe penance in his previous birth as king Manu, along with his queen Satrupa, and had at that time sought the boon of having the privilege of being able to enjoy the feeling of supreme happiness, thrill and ecstasy that one would feel when loving and showing affection to the Lord of the World in a physical way just like ordinary parents do with respect to their beloved and dearest son.

Now, this grand and magnificent story has been immortalised in the form of the well-known epic called 'The Ramayana', of which there are many versions and renderings in many languages. The 'Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka' is an integral part of this story of Lord Ram. But since all the versions and renderings of the Ramayan are centred around the main character or hero of the story, i.e. Lord Ram, Ravana is side-lined; Ravana's central role in the story as being the primary cause of Lord Ram's birth and the events that followed that made the wonderful story of the 'Ramayan' so famous and of epic proportions is almost forgotten and neglected—for it is an undisputed matter-of-fact that neither would have Lord Vishnu revealed himself as Lord Ram, nor would we have the classic known as the Ramayan if there was no Ravana and his clan of ferocious and vicious demons who lived in Lanka.

Our present Book titled “The Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka” is a unique journey of discovery and exploration because we would be reading this wondrous and magnificent Story with an analytical mind by closely examining each and every development that comes our way just like adventurers and explorers would do look around carefully, with a lot of interest, zeal and enthusiasm, to watch out for any new things they may discover, things not hitherto paid attention to or described by anyone but which are of exceptional interest and value, while walking on a path not traversed earlier by others.

Our Book and its Story therefore are not a routine re-telling of the classic Ramayan; it is an exciting and thrilling and adventurous journey along a new path not traveled, not explored and not discovered afore-time. This being the case, as with all explorations and discoveries, we shall be moving slowly in our narration and the reading of this grand and fascinating Story, observing closely and analytically, as best as we can, all the events and episodes as they unfold before us.

For the purpose of the narration of this magnificent and wondrous ‘Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka’ from different perspectives, to make it multi-disciplinary in its approach, to give it a Kaleidoscopic effect, and to make it as interesting, absorbing, diverse and colourful as possible, we shall draw our narrative from different sources—such as all the classics of Tulsidas that describe this story, i.e. Ram Charit Manas, Kavitawali and Geetawali, and from Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, as well as from Anand Ramayan of Valmiki. This will give us a very comprehensive narration and present the story from different angles and perspectives as described in all these books, for each has its own beauty, and a combination of them all would be a classical narrative in its own right.

A blend of prose and poetry as represented respectively by Ram Charit Manas, Adhyatma Ramayan and Anand Ramayan on the one hand, and by Geetawali Ramayan and Kavitawali Ramayan on the other hand, makes for a wonderfully delightful reading of this Story, and adds flavour to the narrative as each of these classical books have their own style of narration that is unique to each of them. So while the narration from the first three books, viz. Ram Charit Manas, Adhyatma Ramayan and Anand Ramayan tell the Story in a continuous stream of events linked one to another, the other two books, viz. Geetawali and Kavitawali are more focused on describing single events selected from the Story, using different classical styles of poetic composition to narrate one event in different ways.

This unique approach of blending all these books together to tell one Single Story serves an excellent purpose: the reader first reads the Story as it is told in the first three books (Ram Charit Manas, Adhyatma Ramayan and Anand Ramayan) in a continuous flow of narration of events, and then at certain intervals he pauses to rewind and read verses from the other two books (Geetawali Ramayan and Kavitawali Ramayan) in a virtual ‘slow motion’ mode to focus his attention on certain developments that need closer examination and enjoyed more thoroughly as was envisioned by their composer Tulsidas when he penned these two books as independent narratives of the Story of the Ramayan in addition to Ram Charit Manas which describes the Story in a continuous flow of narrative like the usual pattern of telling a tale. The pause thus created by the insertion of Geetawali and Kavitawali in the general flow of the narration of this Story gives a closer, ring-side and focused view of certain singular events to the reader as they need special attention, a pattern he would thoroughly enjoy and relish in his mind as he reads along. It also helps to add colour of different hues to the Story just like a 'big picture' that is made from a mosaic of different colours and pieces fitted together and arranged in a perfect manner.

The Anand Ramayan tells us that the Ravana whom the world feared so much, and who was regarded as being the strongest and the bravest warrior in the creation, one who could not be challenged, one who was deemed to be invincible and inviolable by all accounts, was in reality a weakling, someone who only boasted of his immense powers and strength in front of those who were gullible and could be cowed down by his boisterous claims, for it is a fact that he had been defeated repeatedly and subjected to severe humiliation many a times but he never learnt a lesson or felt ashamed at the abject insults and outright rebukes heaped on him, pretending on the contrary that nothing had happened and continuing with his recklessness.

He had been blessed by some truly extraordinary boons which would have ordinarily made him actually unconquerable in this creation so much so that not even the God of Death could have harmed him, but his own sinful and pervert deeds and his over-confidence in his abilities created situations that led to some severe curses being cast upon him that created holes in the defensive armour provided by the boons he had acquired, curses which virtually neutralized the benefit he had from these boons, resulting ultimately into his fall and death. We read these in the narrative of the Anand Ramayan very succinctly.

But a time came when he realized the folly of all this, but it was too late by then to make amends. He realized that his soul was doomed if he was not careful even at that late hour and does not devise a device by which his salvation and emancipation can be somehow arranged. It was this grave realization, albeit late yet sincere and convincing, that made Ravana manoeuvre things in such a delicate way that he could be killed by the Supreme Lord himself, because he correctly judged that if the Supreme Lord himself comes to kill him, which means to free his soul from the evil body in which it dwelled, then it would be sure and certain that his soul would find redemption—because the merciful and compassionate Lord who loves all would not allow anything to the contrary to happen, as it was his vow and reputation that he provides deliverance to the fallen and the sinful!

It ought to be expressly noted here in the context of the observations made above that, in all sooth and without any doubt, this was the singular reason why Ravana voluntarily invited the wrath of Lord Ram, who was a human incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, by abducting his wife Sita, who was actually goddess Laxmi, so that the Lord would willingly and certainly liberate his soul from the cage of his evil body by 'killing him' in the epic war of Lanka! This fact is explicitly said in (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 120-125, (b) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 23, and (c) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 59-60; Uttar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59.

Ravana's character is a study in contrast however: he was born a Brahmin, had a great pedigree because he had an illustrious sage named Visrawa as his father and another great sage Pulastya as his grandfather, was well-versed in the scriptures by the grace of his learned father and grandfather, was in the earlier stages of his life an honourable young man who abhorred anything deemed to be incorrect and immoral, but who by the fiat of fate had gradually made a U-turn to become one of the most vile, sinful, pervert and hated creature in the Lord's creation. When we read his history we discover that the blame of converting this otherwise righteous son of an illustrious sage into a truly demonic creature, a blood-thirsty monster who was most immoral and cruel by nature, one who derived sadistic pleasure in doing evil deeds and tormenting others without a cause, and who did everything unworthy without a trace of shame in him, rests squarely upon his mother, named Kaikasi, who was the daughter of a demon named Sumali. True to her upbringing and the evil blood running through her veins, she had no compunctions or regrets in overseeing her own son's fall from grace by converting him into a shameful and evil demon. We learn from Ravana's story how a mother has a greater influence upon her son and plays a far more crucial role in moulding a person's character, behaviour and nature that determine his future and fate than his father does.

When we say that Ravana was a 'demon' we refer not so much to his physical features that were monster-like as to his nature, temperament and character traits that were demonic to the extreme, being sinful, evil, pervert, cruel, haughty, arrogant, wicked, greedy, unrighteous, deceitful, blood-thirsty and war-mongering, sexually promiscuous and lascivious, and having virtually all the negative characteristics that are collectively called Tama Gunas—the dark moral traits in a person. So we see that in spite of being born in the family of great Brahmin sages, Ravana turned into a most loathed creature in this creation who had no shame worth the name left in him.

Ravana had become a big Hector and Achilles of his time; a big bully and tormentor, a merciless brute, a ruthless and unbridled warrior, a haughty, arrogant and egoist ruler of the world, but at the same time matchlessly brave, bold, valorous, courageous, strong, fearless and mighty, someone invincible and immune to death except for one weakness in his body which made him vulnerable, his Navel, for if someone hit him here with a sharp weapon, such as an arrow, it was destined that Ravana would die, very much like Achilles' Heels.

The story of Lord Ram that has been immortalised in the form of the great epic known universally as the 'Ramayan', a story that has been narrated and retold in different ways and in different languages through the ages by many an illustrious sages, saints, bards and poets, is though centred around the personality of Lord Ram and his time and deeds, but it is also not a deniable fact that it was the Lord's conquest of Lanka of which Ravana was a king, and the death of Ravana and other great demon warriors that included his kin in the war, that is perhaps the only singular event that has led to the glorification of the story of the Ramayan as well as the event that has made Lord Ram become an immortal hero who had vanquished the evil forces represented by the demons of whom Ravana was a king.

The glorious and most fascinating story of Lord Ram cannot be de-linked and separated from the story of Ravana, as both of them played an equally important role in the story. Lord Ram's name and that of Ravana are integral to the story of Ramayan, and undeniably the fame and the glory of both depends upon the other—for had it not been for Lord Ram and the death of Ravana at his hands, especially of the fact that at the time of death Ravana's soul had emerged from his gross body in the form of a brilliant shaft of light to enter the divine body of Lord Ram who represented the Supreme Being, Ravana would have been one of the thousands of demons who took birth and were killed in due course of time, and similarly Lord Ram had acquired such fame and glory as he indeed had for the simple and manifest reason that the Lord had conquered and eliminated an invincible and all-powerful warrior as Ravana who had the privilege of protection from death due to the boons that were granted to him by the Creator himself, and whose name sent shivers amongst the Gods who cowered for cover as soon as they heard of him.

The Lord's fame and glory and honour and majestic powers got incontrovertibly well established and recognized in the annals of history, and acquired the glorious sheen and the radiance and splendour with which it has shone down the ages due to the Lord's conquest of the cruel, evil and sinful demon race, and the elimination of the scourge and havoc caused by these demons led by their great and mighty king Ravana who had become invincible and unconquerable even for the Gods.

It is surely and without gainsay an irrefutable and unchallengeable fact therefore that it is due to Ravana that the glory of Lord Ram was brought to the fore and had shone in the world like the splendorous sun in the sky, because had it not been for the Lord's conquest of Lanka and his elimination of the cruel demons led by Ravana and his kin, the Lord would have been one of the long chain of kings and princes of the royal dynasty that ruled over the kingdom of Ayodhya since a long time in the past. Lord Ram at the most would have been the greatest and the most renowned king in the illustrious dynasty of Ayodhya descending from king Ikshwaku and king Raghu, with all the kings of this line being great and mighty and renowned in their own rights, all being judicious rulers and ardent followers of the laws of Dharma (righteousness, probity, propriety and goodness) who ruled with kindness and compassion; and that would have been all.

Ravana's prowess, valour and might can be judged from the fact that the mighty and all-powerful Gods scampered for cover as soon as they heard Ravana approaching, and his mere name instilled the fear of life in them. These Gods, small and big, had all of them surrendered themselves and yielded before his great warrior of the demon race. Surely therefore it was no mean feat for Lord Ram to defeat and eliminate such a formidable force as what Ravana represented.

The Gods were the rulers of the world, and to subjugate them was equivalent to subjugating the world. Ravana had fought fierce battles with the Gods to vanquish them, but he had another formidable enemy which came in the way of the fulfilment of his ambition of being the supreme ruler of the whole world. They were the sages, ascetics and hermits who had tremendous spiritual and mystical powers acquired by their austerities and penances, and it became necessary for Ravana to somehow get over this remaining obstacle. It was easy for him to defeat an enemy such as the Gods in war, but Ravana was in a quandary when it came to vanquishing the sages, hermits and ascetics—because they never took up arms and 'fought' like a warrior. So what should he do? He began tormenting and harassing them; defiling their religious sacrifices, plundering their hermitages, and constantly inflicting extreme cruelty upon them and creating such nuisance for them that gradually the burden of sins became overwhelming.

Had Ravana's show of strength and valour and attempt at supremacy been limited to the Gods it would not have been so bad for him, but his torture of innocent creatures and tormenting of holy souls was his undoing and led to his downfall.

Therefore, throughout history and mythological narratives, Ravana has been depicted as being a horribly sinful and evil character. That perhaps is the reason why the word 'demon', which itself symbolises an evil and terribly sinful nature, had come to be appended to his name. As a result, our minds have been conditioned to treat Ravana as a hugely 'demonic' person with an evil character and as a fallen soul, a vile person who has always been reviled and demonised by one and all, but it is so easily and usually forgotten that though it is true that on the face he was indeed a sinful and evil person by his deeds and the actions of his gross physical body, but internally he was an illustrious and enlightened soul, a soul so high and powerful that even the Supreme Being (Lord Vishnu) had to come down to earth as a human being (Lord Ram) and do severe Tapa (penance, austerity and suffering of hardship for some great cause) by way of spending fourteen long years in the forest, walking barefoot for thousands of miles to reach the city of Lanka, face the ignominy and humiliation of having his divine consort (Sita) abducted, make humble monkeys and bears as friends, suffer the ravages of a bloody war, and so on and so forth—just to kill Ravana!

Is this in itself not an extraordinary and an unbelievable thing that the Supreme Being—who is supposed to possess unimaginably great supernatural and mystical powers that would empower him to create or destroy and recreate the entire creation by as much as a mere wish—could not eliminate one single individual (Ravana) whom all the Gods and all other creatures had wanted to be got rid of, an individual who had subdued the heaven and the earth, and who had unleashed a reign of terror that directly challenged the authority of the Supreme Being himself, without having to take the trouble of having to come down to earth as a human and having to fight a hand-to-hand battle with his opponent?

The implied message is obvious. It was not easy to eliminate Ravana, because he had such stupendous mystical powers as none others possessed, not even Lord Vishnu. This power of Ravana was acquired by intense Tapa and sharpening of the spiritual prowess of his soul. So therefore to achieve the feat of slaying Ravana his opponent was required to have mystical powers and strength that would surpass that of Ravana, powers that cannot come while living in the luxury of heaven, as was the case with Lord Vishnu. So therefore, if Ravana was to be vanquished, Vishnu too would be required to do Tapa that was at least equal to if not more severe than that done by Ravana as indicated by the Lord's coming down from heaven to the mortal world and suffering its horrors and pains like an ordinary human being.

And besides all this, there are other remarkable facts about Ravana that distinguishes him from all the other characters we meet in the story of the Ramayan. At the time of his death when he collapsed on being shot by Lord Ram's arrow, his soul had exited from his gross body and emerged from it in the form of a blazing shaft of lightning which went straight and entered the body of Lord Ram! This singular event is narrated in all the versions of Ramayan, the epic tale describing the story of Lord Ram. This particular event is of immense significance and of great spiritual importance because, according to the metaphysical philosophy enunciated by the Upanishads and the Purans and the Vedas, the ultimate destination of the Atma, the soul of all living beings, where it finds its eternal rest and peace, is its merger with the Parmatma, the Supreme Soul of creation. In the case of Ravana and Lord Ram, the former represented the living being, the individual creature, and the latter represented the Supreme Being. So therefore, Ravana's soul merging with the supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram—and that too in a visible manner that was witnessed by all, including the Gods who were anxiously watching the developments in the battle-field of Lanka from the sky—is an incontrovertible proof of Ravana's greatness, of the purity of his heart and the piety of his soul!

In all sooth and without gainsay indeed, what better and stronger proof is there that is needed to establish that Ravana's soul was of the purest and the most holy kind, because nothing that is impure and unholy can ever hope to find its place in the bosom of the Lord of the World (here represented by Lord Ram)!

Ravana was also well learned in the Vedas and other scriptures. In fact, during his time there was perhaps no one who was a greater scholar than him. He was a great devotee of Lord Shiva, the Lord who is called a 'Mahadeva', i.e. the 'Great Lord' amongst all the Gods, and had composed a hymn in the Lord's praise the like of which has never been replicated in the realm of Sanskrit hymns. It is called Ravana's Shiva Tandava Stotra. To wit therefore, Ravana was not entirely an atheist, for had he been one he would neither have worshipped Lord Shiva nor a goddess named as Katyayani, the goddess of war, whom he regularly worshipped.

But due to circumstances and certain events of his previous life, about which we shall read in due course in this Book, he had become a 'demon' by his external physical body. He knew that with his evil deeds it is not possible for him to attain liberation and deliverance of his soul, and neither were there any hopes for finding emancipation and salvation. He realized throughout that his gross body had become very sinful and tainted, and that this darkened veil has trapped and stifled his Atma, his soul, that retained its sublime nature. So being wise and worried about his fate he decided that the only way to free his Atma from the snare of his sinful and vile body was to die and get rid of the gross body. But he wanted to make sure that his deliverance and salvation were assured, and he determined that to make it a certainty it was necessary to die at the hands of the Supreme Lord himself.

He was fully aware that the world recognizes him as the most vile fellow in the Lord's creation. He wanted to remove this scar, this dark taint from his name for ever in a way that the world could stand witness to and see it for itself. He could have got liberation for himself from his demon body by fighting and getting killed by Lord Vishnu somewhere in the heaven during a stage-managed battle fought there. But obviously no one on earth would have known about it, except some great sages or scribes who had access to the events occurring in heaven. The result would be that the taint sticking to his name would have survived even after he was dead and had actually found deliverance and salvation.

That is why he had manoeuvred things in such a way that would force the Supreme Being to come down right here on earth and kill Ravana in front of the whole world.

And to make sure that the taint of evil was removed from his soul and name for all times to come, he ensured that his Atma would visibly exit his body and enter the body of Lord Ram—so that everyone would witness it first-hand, and the honour of his soul would be restored.

It is clearly written in Adhyatma Ramayan¹ as well as Ram Charit Manas² and Anand Ramayan³ that Ravana wanted himself to be killed at the hands of Lord Ram, who was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, as he determined it was the only way for his salvation, and that is why he stole Sita to create a pretext by which the Lord would come and fight with him and then kill him. {¹Adhyatma Ramayan, (a) Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 59-61; (b) Uttar Kand, (i) Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59; (ii) Canto 4, verse no. 11; ²Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3-5 that precedes Doha no. 23; ³Anand Ramayan, Saarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 137-139.}

Even at the time of abducting Sita, the wife of Lord Ram, Ravana had been careful to treat her as he would have treated his own mother and offered her his mental respect, bowing to her silently. {Ref: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 16 that precedes Doha no. 28.} To observe the greatest respect for Sita, Ravana had not physically grabbed her by the hand to take her away, but had respectfully scooped the earth from beneath her feet like the way a gardener uses to transplant a living plant from one place to another. He had then taken her to Lanka and placed that scooped-up soil with Sita sitting on it in his royal garden. {Ref: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 51-52, and verse no. 65.}

This was not all. Ravana had taken due precaution that Sita could live reasonably comfortably by keeping her under the shade of a huge tree, called Ashok Tree, that was surrounded by a lush green garden. To be on the safer side and to ensure that the lady demon guards (i.e. the demonesses) who were assigned to keep an eye on Sita would not torment her unnecessarily, he had appointed an old and pious demoness named Trijata to be with Sita at all times. Trijata had comforted Sita whenever she was depressed and hopeless, even predicting to her that Ravana's death was imminent. Trijata had admonished other guards when they tried to tease Sita, and had instilled the fear of death in them so much that hence forth they stopped tormenting her. In fact, Trijata was Sita's close confidante and friend all throughout her captivity, and it was Trijata who had kept Sita's spirits high and buoyant. {Ref: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Aranya Kand, Doha no. 29-b; (b) Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 10—Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 12; (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 100.}

To be fair to Ravana, had he had the intention to torture Sita and make her buckle under pressure, or to prevent Lord Ram getting her back in the eventuality of the Lord winning the war, say then would he have taken such precautions as appointing a good-natured demoness to guard Sita from the cruelty of other guards? It shows clearly that he had simply staged a drama of abduction of Sita to prepare a pretext that would ensure that he could leave his sinful body by getting killed at the hands of the Supreme Being when he comes right over to face him in the battle-field for freeing Sita from his clutches. {Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 23.}

We read in all the versions of the Ramayan (except Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas) that Lord Ram ruled for ten thousand of years after his Lanka campaign and the war with Ravana, and during this long time he and his brothers had launched many a military campaigns in far off countries and established their domains there. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 4, verse no. 29; and Canto 9, verse nos. 16-22; as well as many Cantos of Uttar Kand in Valmiki's Ramayan.} But none of the events of later life and none of the great sacrifices, wars and expeditions undertaken by Lord Ram became as famous and glorifying for the Lord as was his campaign at Lanka and the slaying of Ravana.

Lord Ram's father, king Dasrath, had also fought many a great battles on behalf of the Gods {refer for example: Valmiki Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 12-18}, and so did almost all his ancestors. One of them was Sagar who is remembered as the great king after whom the ocean is called 'Sagar' in the ancient scriptures.

So surely enough we see that Ravana had indeed played a pivotal role in the establishment and spread of the glory and the fame of Lord Ram as we know of them by the reading of the wonderful story of the Ramayan.

Having said this, now let us see briefly who the 'demons' were according to mythology. They are called 'Asurs' or anti-Gods. The Asurs symbolised the malevolent powers and evil or negative forces of creation as opposed to the Gods who stood for benevolence and goodness and positive aspects.

Both the Gods and the Asurs descended from sage Kashyap, their common father. Kashyap was the grandson of the creator Brahma. The elder wife of Kashyap was Aditi from whom the Gods came into being, and his other two wives were Diti and Danu from whom the Daityas and the Danavas, for whom we use the common word 'demons', were respectively born. While Indra became the king of the Gods, Virochan was appointed as the king of the demon clan.

As time passed and thousands of millenniums elapsed, countless generations of demons evolved and spread over all parts of this creation. So, if the Gods made themselves omnipresent in a subtle form of good virtues, auspiciousness and righteous values, the Demons made their presence felt in the form of evil characters, negativity and sinfulness. The world paradoxically is a fine balance between the two—as the Grand Supreme Creator wished it to be so. So when this delicate balance gets disturbed and evil becomes ascendant, it is then that the Supreme Guardian of creation intervenes personally to set things right, and restore the order and balance that he had created himself. This in simple words answers the question of why the Supreme Being has to come down to earth repeatedly in one form or the other.

Now coming back to our story of Ravana, let us have a quick glance at his previous life and see why he became a demon at all. It will also tell us why he became so revengeful and antagonised against the Gods, Brahmins and sages.

In his previous life he was known as king Pratapbhanu. This story is narrated in the epic Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 153, to Doha no. 176. It was narrated to sage Bharadwaj by sage Yagyawalkya. We shall be reading it in detail in the very first chapter of our present Book.

Briefly, however, it is as follows. Some long time in the past, there was a great king by the name of Pratapbhanu (pronounced as Pratāpbhānu), also known as Bhanupratap. His name literally means ‘one whose glory and fame shone like the splendour and radiance of the sun in the sky’. He was a noble and righteous king who ruled judiciously over the kingdom of Kaikaya after his father Satyaketu abdicated the throne in his favour and went to the forest to do penance. This kingdom was famous for prosperity and happiness that comes with righteousness and probity, where the laws of Dharma (ethics, propriety, nobility and goodness) and Truth prevailed.

But unfortunately, as is usually the way with kings, he was very ambitious. He wished to conquer and rule over the whole world, and even be able to subdue elders and wise men such as the Brahmins if they try to stand in his way, so that he may rule unopposed for eternity. It is not possible in this mortal world that anyone can become eternal and be untouched completely by the rules of creation. Likewise, the tide of time and fiat of fate cannot be conquered, undermined and subdued forever, and so it is also not possible to remain unconquerable for eternity.

So, by-and-by, this ambitious nature of Pratapbhanu led to his ultimate downfall. He fell into a trap of a king whom he had defeated sometime earlier in battle, and who was bidding his time to take revenge. This defeated king went to the forest to hide in the disguise of a hermit, and wait. Once it so happened that the noble king Pratapbhanu fell into his trap when he got lost during hunting. The cunning fellow promised false boons to the king and prevailed upon him to arrange for a grand feast for Brahmins where he would manipulate things and get him blessed by Brahmins with the boons of things he so much desires. As fate would have it however, the king’s enemy mixed cooked meat in the food that was being served to the invited guests. When this became known, the angry Brahmins cursed the king that he along with his entire family and all his subjects would become flesh-eating demons themselves. With the passage of time, Pratapbhanu was born as the demon Ravana, and his kin were born as the other members of his demon race.

When king Pratapbhanu was cursed to become a demon by the Brahmins for no fault of his as he was completely unaware that meat has been mixed in the food served to them for which they cursed him—a fact even the Gods had acknowledged in the first place and regretted by the Brahmins themselves¹, the king was full of indignation, anger, vexation and exasperation. Though the damage was already done but this singular injustice done to an otherwise upright and righteous king had a lasting effect on his psyche, and he was so internally fired with anger and a feeling of vengeance that it could not be forgotten but would rear its ugly head in his next birth as the demon Ravana. He bided for his time, and when he got empowered he decided to punish those who had been instrumental in his becoming a demon—i.e. the Gods, the Brahmin and the sages—so much so that no sooner had he got the boons of invincibility from the Creator he unleashed a horrific wave of retribution upon them². {Refer: ¹Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 170—to Doha no. 174; ²Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 181—to Doha no. 182.}

By-and-by, king Pratapbhanu himself became the famous demon Ravana; his younger brother named Arimardan became the demon Kumbhakaran; his chief minister who was an ardent follower of righteousness became Vibhishan; his son became Meghanad; and all the rest of his kin and subjects became demons of different denominations and stature in their next life. {Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 176.}

The next phase of the tale is the story of the birth of Ravana as well as his kin and the rest of the demons, the establishment of their kingdom and a reign of terror that they relentlessly unleashed. This has been narrated in (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 176—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 184; (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, (i) Canto 1, verse nos. 23-61; (ii) Canto 2, verse nos. 1-60; (c) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 1-139. We shall be reading all these texts one-by-one in our narrative in this Book.

Let us have a brief and quick glance at this part of the story. There was a sage by the name of Pulastya. He was the son of the creator Brahma. Pulastya was married to a daughter of Trinbindu, and from her he begot an illustrious son name Visrawa (pronounced as Viśravā). Visrawa was married to the daughter of sage Bharadwaj, and from her he got a son named Kuber who became the treasurer of Gods. Kuber had first established Lanka, the city of gold created by Vishwakarma, the architect of the Gods.

The demons at that time had been hiding in the nether world due to the fear of Lord Vishnu and the powerful Gods. One of them named Sumali (Sumāli) had once come to the surface of earth with his daughter Kaikasi. They saw Kuber roaming in all his godly splendour in an airplane called Pushpak which belonged to the Gods. Both father and daughter became jealous, and Sumali asked his daughter to go and ask Visrawa to marry her so that she also gets sons that would have the same glory as that of Kuber. Kaikasi, being a beauty in her own right, approached Visrawa with the proposal, and though it was not the proper thing to do, the sage could not turn her away and restrain himself; so he accepted it. Eventually, the three brothers Ravana, Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan were born to her. A girl was also born; her name was Supernakha. But since their mother was a female demon (a demoness), all of them became demons.

In the early stages of life Ravana was a good young man, befitting his father Visrawa. But his evil mother kept on nagging at him and made him jealous of Kuber who happened to be his half-brother. She instigated him to do Tapa and acquire powers which would enable him to enjoy the pleasures and comforts of life¹. Even after acquiring the boon of invincibility and immense strength and powers, internally Ravana was still a righteous and pious person, for when the demon Sumali, his mother Kaikasi's father, and other demons such as Prahastya, tried to instigate him to revolt against Kuber and the Gods, Ravana had refused, saying that Kuber was his elder step-brother and he had done no harm to him, so there was no justification in confronting him. However, Sumali wanted to take revenge against the Gods, especially their leader Lord Vishnu, because they had vanquished the demons and forced them to live a life in hiding. With a powerful grandson in the form of Ravana by his side, Sumali wished to settle old scores with the Gods. He used all tricks in the book and succeeded in making Ravana revengeful vigorously². And then there was no looking back, for Ravana successfully paid the Gods their due in their own coin!

{¹Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 3-6; ²Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 24-33.}

At this juncture Ravana reflected deeply and recalled the events of his previous life: how injustice was done to him when the Brahmins had cursed him for no fault of his own, and how they were alerted by the Gods that meat was mixed in their food. Even at that time, as we have read herein above, he was filled with vengeance as he felt he was a victim of gross injustice and wrongly implicated for a sin or a crime which he was ignorant about, and that feeling was now stoked and ignited into a raging fire of hatred and retribution once he had acquired the wherewithal for its requital. In this context one can easily recollect the story of Edmond Dantes made immortal by Alexandre Dumas in his classic tale of ‘The Count of Monte Cristo’. In this story, Dantes was falsely implicated and imprisoned, losing his honour and esteem, but providence was favourable to him as he ultimately escaped and acquired the wherewithal for retribution which he unleashed vengefully to attain a triumphant revenge.

Similarly here, Ravana, as king Pratapbhanu, was condemned to become a demon for a reason of which he had no inkling himself but was nevertheless held guilty of, but once he empowered himself by obtaining boons from Brahma the creator, he sought revenge with a vengeance, and even succeeded in it. But ultimately his conscience bore heavily upon him as he realised what his hubristic nature has yielded to him, for later on he felt excessive spiritual discomfort for a life spent relentlessly in sins and perversions so much so that he sincerely yearned for liberation and deliverance of his soul from the quagmire it had landed itself in. In Dumas’ classic cited above, Monte Cristo too feels uneasy with his actions of revenge and retribution, and regrets their consequences, ultimately pardoning Dangers who had trampled mercilessly, out of extreme selfishness and jealousy, upon his fate early on in life when he was known as Edmond Dantes, by forcing Dantes to utter condemnation, hastening the death his grief-stricken and heart-broken father, and separating him from his betrothed, not being aware that Providence held other plans for the innocent Edmond.

It was around this time that Lord Ram, a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, had come down to fulfil the long-pending prayers of the Gods and Mother Earth, which was to free them from the torture and horrors inflicted upon them by Ravana. So Ravana saw a window of hope: he decided that he would invoke the dirtiest part of his nature and kidnap Sita, Lord Ram’s wife, to force the Lord to come and kill him. It was his way of finding liberation from a demon’s body that was in accordance with his nature—face his opponent in the battle-field, and fall down fighting, not by showing cowardice by turning his back to the enemy. Ravana’s remorse and penitence for a sinful life was sincere, his desire for final deliverance was honest, and so Lord Ram honoured his wishes by accepting his Soul within his own Self at the time of Ravana’s death, thereby pardoning Ravana. These irrefutable facts are endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, (a) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103, and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 23, as well as in Adhyatma Ramayan, Uddha/Lanka Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 73-70.

Coming back to our story, as we have read already destiny was preordained for the three brothers, Ravana, Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan, because all of them had been cursed in their previous life to become ‘flesh eating demons’—i.e. be cruel and animal-like. Besides this, the unfulfilled yearning of the late king Pratapbhanu to rule over the world unopposed reared its ugly head once again in his current life as Ravana. So when they did Tapa, Ravana sought the boon of invincibility so that he can conquer the world. The creator Brahma who had come to give them the boons was dismayed. Enough was enough he thought. So he and the other Gods manoeuvred things and deluded his brother Kumbhakaran when his turn came for asking his desired boon. Kumbhakaran asked for something that was absurd: he wanted to eat a huge meal and then enjoy sleep for six months! It was immediately granted before he could change his mind. Vibhishan, who was a righteous minister of the king in his early life, though retained his inherent piety, and he sought the boon of devotion for Lord God. It too was granted.

We observe a remarkable thing here. In the midst of the great desert of evil, vices, cruelty, unlawfulness and sin that the demons stood for in general, Vibhishan, Ravana's brother, was like an oasis of peace, piety, devotion for God, non-violence, probity, goodness and righteousness. This is the beauty of Nature and of Creation: to keep the seed of hope and goodness alive it is so arranged that goodness and virtuousness manage to exist, even if in an infinitesimally small ratio, in the surrounding ocean of overpowering nature of sins, evil and vices. When the time comes, the next phase of goodness and virtuousness would sprout from this hidden seed! So was it in the case of the demons too—when all the cruel and sinful demons were eliminated in the war of Lanka, the remnants of them who were good by nature lived on to keep the genes of the demon race alive. They were ruled by Vibhishan as their new king.

In due course of time, Ravana had conquered the whole world and had unleashed his cruel reign of terror. This forced Lord Vishnu to come down as Lord Ram. By-and-by, Ravana stole Sita, the wife of Lord Ram. In order to recover her, a search party consisting of monkeys and bears, whose king Sugriv was befriended earlier by Lord Ram, was sent. Out of them, one named Hanuman managed to cross the vast ocean and locate Sita in Lanka. When he was humiliated by Ravana and the demons tried to kill him by setting his tail on fire, Hanuman had burnt the whole city of Lanka. This set the stage for the war. When he came back and reported everything to the Lord, a mighty army was assembled and a campaign launched.

Meanwhile, Vibhishan too had joined Lord Ram's camp when he was publicly insulted by Ravana. The army crossed the ocean over a bridge constructed over its surface to span it. Before the actual war, Lord Ram sent Angad, the nephew of Sugriv, the king of the monkeys and bears, as an emissary to the court of Ravana in an attempt to avoid the blood-spilling war. But it came to naught. So finally the attack was launched.

What followed was a legendary war, the most horrifying war that the earth ever witnessed. We shall read it in great detail by way of quoting directly from the scriptures as we progress with our narrative in this Book.

Finally, Ravana met his end, and so also ended the sinful reign of the demons. Those who survived did not dare to repeat the mistakes of their predecessors. The new kingdom of Lanka was helmed by Vibhishan who ruled with probity and in accordance with the laws of Dharma. So though the new kingdom was also called a kingdom of demons, but its nature and constitution and structure was completely different from what it had been earlier under Ravana.

The question that seems pertinent here is this: If Ravana's 'true self', i.e. his Atma or soul, was actually of a holy and exalted nature as the 'Atma' is expected to be because the Atma is by nature pure and holy as it is pure consciousness and it represents the Supreme Soul or the cosmic supreme Consciousness of this creation, then why did Ravana become so ruthless and cruel, and why was he not contented by being the ruler of the golden city of Lanka and the sovereign of the demon race? Well, there are some obvious reasons why this came to be. In his previous life Ravana was the great king Pratapbhanu, and he was very ambitious, desiring to conquer the whole world and having no enemy so much so that he wanted even to subdue the Brahmins (who were elders in the society and learned people) because he feared them the most. It is because the Brahmins represented Gods, and should the king go astray from his righteous path the Brahmins could have stopped him in his track or even curse him if he did not mend his ways. Pratapbhanu did not want any fetters. So by-and-by, as the fate destined and events unfolded, Pratapbhanu, in his zeal to subdue Brahmins, had fallen in the trap of one of his earlier enemies—a king whom he had defeated in battle and who had disguised himself as a hermit to bid for time to settle scores—who manipulated things in such a way that the unaware Pratapbhanu was cursed by the Brahmins to become a 'demon who ate flesh' and 'would live a hateful and ignominious life full of sins that would make his soul slide down gradually that would ultimately lead him to interminable suffering in hell'.

When this king Pratapbhanu took birth in the next life as Ravana, this hidden desire of his to conquer the world and trounce all opponents surfaced once again. This was coupled by his suppressed anger at the Brahmins and the Gods for his cursing to become a 'demon'. So he decided to settle scores with them and pay them in their own coin. Hence, once he acquired immense powers and strength after doing severe Tapa, he started wreaking vengeance upon them, right, left and center.

In these developments, his demoness mother Kaikasi and his maternal grandfather the demon Sumali played a crucial role. The demons had, in some long time past, been defeated by Lord Vishnu, the Lord of heaven, and so they ran away and hid themselves somewhere in the nether world. When one of their descendants, i.e. Ravana, became powerful and invincible by the virtue of doing Tapa and being blessed by the creator Brahma himself, it was natural that now they decided to square things up with the Gods and their leader Vishnu. The Brahmins, sages and ascetics—they all offered their worship to the Gods and Lord Vishnu, and it was the offering that they made in the fire sacrifices which provided nourishment to the Gods. So Ravana decided to starve the Gods by defiling or destroying the fire sacrifices. Again, since the Brahmins and sages and ascetics had great spiritual powers, and it were the Brahmins and Gods who had been instrumental in Pratapbhanu's becoming a demon, Ravana decided to teach them a good lesson by unleashing terror on them.

And this is also the apparent reason why Ravana had not spared Lord Ram—who was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu whom the demons treated as their arch enemy because it was Vishnu who had earlier forced them into hiding till the time Ravana came on the stage to challenge Vishnu's and Gods' might—from all the horrors he possibly could inflict upon the Lord, such as abducting his wife Sita, making her suffer in captivity, forcing Lord Ram to undergo the pain, the horrors, the physical injuries and sufferings that he had to endure during the war.

But internally Ravana realized that whatever he is doing is not good for him, and he yearned for salvation and deliverance if the opportunity presented itself. That is why when he was able to determine that Lord Vishnu has after all come to eliminate him, he decided that it was the opportunity he had been waiting for, and if he could manoeuvre things and bring Vishnu to Lanka it would be good for him.

Of course Ravana knew that Vishnu couldn't and wouldn't go to meet him as a 'friend' because the demons were arch enemies of the Gods. Therefore, the only way for Ravana to meet Lord Vishnu was in the form of an 'enemy'. And since Lord Vishnu, here in the form of Lord Ram, cannot normally become anyone's enemy without a grave cause, Ravana decided to do the worst of abducting the Lord's wife so that no option would be left for Lord Ram but to fight with him in order to liberate Sita. And this would serve Ravana's purpose excellently—he would not even have to go and beg Vishnu to forgive him for his misdemeanours and sins, and liberate his soul from the evil body of a demon, but it would be Vishnu who would be forced to free his soul from remaining trapped in a demon's body by killing him in battle!

It was indeed a well-planned and well-orchestrated stage-managed move by Ravana, and perfectly executed, to attain emancipation and salvation. And he indeed succeeded in it in a marvelous fashion because Lord Ram had himself provided the final liberation and deliverance to the Atma or soul of Ravana from the trap of an evil demonic body when the Lord had slayed him and freed his soul. And the greatest wonder of them all is that Ravana's soul had emerged from his body and entered the body of Lord Ram to become one with the Supreme Soul, a fate that made Ravana immortal and eternal as well as worthy of high praise and honour—for no sinful being can ever find rest by becoming 'one' with the Supreme Being. This incident is clearly written in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103; and Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 11, verse no. 78-79.

There are some obvious lessons—secular, temporal, spiritual and metaphysical—that we learn from the story of Ravana. Now, let us see them at a glance.

The first is this: Though the soul, known as the Atma of an individual, is primarily independent, immaculate, pure and destined to be holy, yet when this same Atma assumes the form of a 'Jiva-Atma', i.e. when the Atma comes to dwell in a gross body and assumes the form of a living being known as a Jiva (hence the combined name 'Jiva-Atma'), it automatically has to assume a gross identity for its own self like that of its host, the Jiva. The result is that the Atma now becomes subject to and conditioned by all the laws of Nature that applies to the gross body of the Jiva—such as it being influenced by Maya (delusions), by Ahankar (pride and ego), the three Gunas (such as the Sata, Raja and Tama, which are the basic qualities that determine the nature and character of all living beings), the numerous Vasanas (desires, passions and temptations that arise due to the inherent nature of the sense organs of the gross body of a creature that are naturally attracted to their respective sense objects in this material world), and so on and so forth.

To wit, the Atma loses its pristine purity, and instead becomes tainted and scarred. This starts its downward slide, and if it is not wise and alert then it falls in a dark pit from which it takes numerous generations for it to rise. But by-and-by rise it does, because a time comes when the Jiva realizes its follies and stupidity that led to the Atma being subjected to the ignominy and suffering that it got in spite of its primary form of being above all reproach. And then the suffering Jiva seeks a remedy for all his ills and strives to do all that is necessary and within its powers to have his Atma, which incidentally is the Jiva's 'true self and real identity' instead of its gross body, freed from this vicious trap and find liberation.

And what is this 'liberation'? The Atma's liberation is its freedom from the fetters of the gross body which had been its habitat for generations, to escape from its clutches and fly like a bird released from a cage.

But then, where would this liberated Atma go to find its rest and peace? The Jiva-Atma's destination, after finding freedom from the trap of the gross body of the creature, is the Supreme Atma or the Cosmic Soul from which it had got separated in the beginning. It is here that the 'parent' of the Jiva-Atma lives, and like all prisoners who flee from the gates of the prison there is peace and happiness to be found in the arms of one's loving parent! So it is also with the Jiva-Atma—for when the individual's Atma merges with the Supreme Atma, also known as the 'Parmatma' or the 'Lord God', then it finds its eternal rest, peace and bliss, for now there is no more suffering and pain and misery that were its lot in the form of a Jiva-Atma.

This unique journey of the 'Atma' is clearly marked in the story of Ravana. In his previous life as king Pratapbhanu, he became a victim of desires—he wanted to rule the whole world without having any opposition. This led to his curse and downfall as a demon. In the next body of Ravana, the demon, his Atma showed its holiness when he first refused to toe his mother's and maternal grandfather's line to usurp the kingdom of Lanka because he said that it rightfully belonged to his half-brother Kuber, the treasurer of Gods. But then the voice of his inner-self—what we call the 'voice of conscience' which is the voice of the Atma—was suppressed by the din caused by the voice of passion and lust stoked by none other than his own so-called well-wishers, i.e. his mother (Kaikasi) and maternal grandfather (Sumali), when they convinced him of the futility of such words of ethics, wisdom and righteousness as they would serve him no good if he really wished to enjoy the pleasures and comforts of life in this world which would be all his if he ruled like a king. Once again Ravana's Atma fell in a trap. But by-and-by he realized his mistake, and discovered to his dismay the depth of the dark pit of sin in which he has made his Atma fall, a depth from which liberation was well-nigh impossible by conventional means as prescribed by the scriptures. So what should he do now? He was in a quandary; so perplexed and anxious for his salvation was he that he decided to go the whole hog and turn the thing right on its head. He decided to become an epitome of sin and cruelty, for he knew that it would be his gross body that would commit these sins and misdemeanours, while his Atma he would decidedly endeavour to keep clean and separated from all the evil that would be associated with his body.

How is this possible? Well, Ravana was no ordinary demon; he was well-versed in the scriptures and highly learned in their principles. He was fully aware of the fact that the Atma is a sublime and holy entity that is different and separate from the grossness associated with the physical body of a creature. Hence, if he ensured that this sublime Atma was not involved in the evil committed by the gross body then there is no fear of the Atma's further decline. On the other hand, he analyzed correctly as the later events prove, that if he managed to force the Supreme Being to come down to eliminate him, and if he could manoeuvre things in such a way that the Supreme Being destroys his evil-smearing gross body, then his Atma would be automatically freed from this sinful cage of a demon's body, and find its liberation.

What's more, if the Supreme Being is right in front at the time his Atma exits from the gross body upon the latter's destruction, it won't have to go anywhere in search of the Supreme Atma to find its final rest—for the simple and obvious reason that that much sought-after 'Supreme Atma' or the 'Parmatma' would be standing right in front, there itself! Ravana concluded that this game-plan suited him perfectly as he will have the best of the two worlds simultaneously—he would be able to rule and enjoy the fruits of the material world like its sole sovereign while he was alive, and at the same time he would also be able to have salvation and deliverance of his Atma ensured with the least effort—for he knew that other paths such as those prescribed in the scriptures by which the soul can attain liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation were extremely arduous and entail a lot of severe effort which he decided he won't be able to endure any longer. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 23.}

But Ravana knew that to force the Supreme Being to take this trouble of coming down himself to provide liberation to his Atma right here in this mortal world was not a child's joke, unless he managed to devise a device for it. And what was the clever device he devised? It was to unleash an unprecedented reign of terror and horror on the creatures of this world, a dread of such a great magnitude that it would force the Supreme Being to intervene personally to settle things and bring order.

When we go through the story and read how Ravana relentlessly and without regret unleashed terror, how he refused to relent and avoid a destructive war that would certainly lead to his death at the hands of Lord Ram who represented the Supreme Being in a human body, and how his Atma finally escaped from his body to enter the body of Lord Ram—we would come to the conclusion that the entire story was well-planned and pursued by Ravana with the singular aim of finding liberation and deliverance for his Atma.

Ravana was vilified and demonized alright because his deeds were such that they needed to be denounced and condemned in no uncertain terms, but at the same time it is also true that had he been as true a demon internally as he has been made out to be it would not have been possible for him to have attained an exalted and rare death by the virtue of being killed at the hands of the Supreme Being himself, and to have his soul visibly exiting his body to enter and merge with the Supreme Soul to find its ultimate dissolution and rest as it did actually happen when he died. And besides this, the Supreme Being would never have accepted a fallen and sinful soul to come and reside within his own cosmic soul as Lord Ram had allowed Ravana's soul to do. This development had even astonished the Gods who were supposed to be 'all-knowing', for they had never expected that their enemy Ravana would attain that end which is inaccessible for even the greatest of sages and ascetics. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.}

The other lesson that this story teaches us is this: No matter how pure the Atma or the Soul of a creature is, if one is careless and allows one's self to fall prey to temptations and passions as well as bad company, then this innocent Atma of his is made to suffer. First Pratabhanu fell to temptations, and then Ravana too fell to temptations, and in the process the Atma suffered.

The next lesson is this: That though the Atma, which incidentally is the true 'self' of all living beings and is pure consciousness—an entity of which the cosmic counterpart is known as the Supreme Consciousness represented by the Supreme Being or the Parmatma, the Lord God—is above reproach, yet it is accused of so many negative things just because of its association with the gross body in which it comes to dwell and becomes known as the 'Jiva-Atma'. When a wise person becomes aware of this Truth, i.e. when he knows that 'he' is not the gross physical body but the 'Atma' that lives in it, that this Atma is pure and sublime unlike the gross body which the world recognizes as the identity of that person, then this wisened person disassociates himself from the gross body and becomes happy and contented in the Atma. To wit, he becomes 'self-realized' and 'enlightened'. Then even if his body does commit any error he would remain free from its taints because he has begun to identify himself with his Atma and not his gross body.

But this eclectic thought should be genuine and honest; it should not be a conceited method and a pretentious way to avoid punishment for the sins committed by the body. Such a self-realized person would not at all be agitated should his body be punished for any of its crimes and transgressions, and he would be able to maintain complete calm and peace in all circumstances and adversities that would cause immense suffering for ordinary creatures who think their identity is their body.

And one more relevant lesson is that the Jiva-Atma, i.e. the living being, cannot claim immunity from punishment on the plea that his 'true self' is his Atma and that this Atma does not do anything, but it is the body that does everything and commits sins. Why? Because the Creator has given the Jiva, especially the human being who is placed on the highest plane of evolution, the power to think, to analyse, to decide, to choose, and to act with discretion. This being the case, a Jiva who occupies a higher place in the ladder of evolution cannot blame everything on providence; he cannot say that fate had destined him to be sinful, so he is committing sins. No; this is a fallacious and an erroneous argument—because the power to decide what to do and what not to do rests with the Jiva himself, and it is independent of what providence had provided for him.

So the Jiva himself is responsible for the future course of his Atma—whether the Atma rises or falls in the hierarchy of evolution, whether the Atma rises higher and higher to ultimately escape from the shackles of this gross existence and find its final freedom and deliverance, or whether it suffers a downhill slide and enters the cycle of birth and death and remains trapped in it. This is what is called the 'Law of Karma': a law that essentially says that one reaps the fruits of the sort of seeds he sows. If the creature does good and meritorious deeds out of choice, his Atma gets to acquire merit, and the reverse happens if a creature does sinful deeds that would exhaust whatever good the Atma already has.

The most important thing which this story tells us is that no matter how much the gross body of an individual is condemned and vilified, it is a fact that it harbours an entity known as the Atma which is eternally pure and truly holy. And hence, true wisdom of a person lies in an enlightened view that helps him to clearly distinguish between his Atma and his body, and thereby manage to maintain the independence and holiness of the Atma, which by the way is that person's 'true self and true identity', in spite of all the problems that are associated with his gross body. For this he has to keep a safe distance from the body—i.e. he has to learn not to have any attachment with the body and be free from all the prodding of its sense organs. He ought to let the body do what it is destined to do, but he must be determined that he has aught nothing to do with it. This will enable him to maintain internal calm and happiness, the hallmarks of the Atma, even while he lives like an ordinary Jiva in this mundane world and appears to be involved in its affairs. With this eclectic attitude, such a self-realized and wise person is rightly called a 'Jivan Mukta'—i.e. a person who has found liberation from the fetters of this body and the delusions associated with the world even while he lives in the same world and has interacts with it using his body, for he knows that his 'true self', i.e. his Atma, is not at all involved in any of these mundane things that would trap him in the cycle of transmigration.

Now however, though it is true that the Atma remains independent of the gross body, yet it cannot claim total immunity from blame if the creature commits some gross and grave sin. For after all, a living being is a 'living being' because of the presence of this Atma inside his body, and this Atma is supposed to be at the helm of affairs in the creature. A sovereign cannot deny responsibility for the misdeeds committed by his ministers and subjects; likewise, the Atma cannot say that it is not to be blamed by what the creature does. So directly or indirectly, the Atma gets the stigma of sins committed by the creature. But the trick for a wise and self-realized creature is to understand the subtle relationship between the Atma and his gross body, as well as the working of the 'Law of Karma', and make diligent effort to steer himself clear of misdeeds and evil as best as he can.

The unwitting effect of the deeds done by the body upon the Atma can be understood by a simple example. Suppose a man lives in a house that has a dirty and unkempt appearance, that appears to be falling apart due to neglect, and is also present in a bad neighbourhood. That person's name would also be shamed by the virtue of his association with this house.

Take another example. Suppose a man borrows and wears a shirt that was worn by another person earlier who is known to be a chain smoker. It is observed in practical life that if a person smokes incessantly, the clothes he wears acquire a typical odour unique to tobacco. So when this second person, who himself may not have touched a cigarette all his life, wears this shirt that has the odour of tobacco clinging to it and then goes out on the street for a short while and meets people who do not know anything about him, they would naturally think that this gentleman smokes because the odour is unmistakably that of a tobacco smoker.

This is what happens to the Atma as well. Even though the Atma is inherently pure and uncorrupt, nevertheless its association with a corrupt body gives an impression that the Atma itself is corrupt. The story of Ravana clearly points in this direction. Ravana was no doubt an evil character, but his Atma, his soul, too became maligned because of its association with his evil body. The event where his soul exited his body in a brilliant shaft of light to enter the body of the Supreme Being represented by Lord Ram was a singularly watershed event to bring to the knowledge of the world the metaphysical truth of the Upanishads—that the Atma or the soul of a Jiva, the living being, is always pure and holy irrespective of the sort of body that the Jiva has. So therefore, a wise man is one who always practices equanimity and equality while dealing with others in this world because he sees the hidden ‘self’ of a Jiva in the form of the latter’s holy and immaculate Atma instead of the grossness associated with his external body.

This creation has its origin in the Supreme Being, and hence all that is present in it also has its origin in the Supreme Being. This is true for both the negative forces as well as the positive forces. The Lord had planned things in such a way that a fine balance is to be maintained between these two opposing forces of Nature. But while the positive forces are by their nature self-restraint and modest because they stand for good virtues and spiritual merit, the negative forces on the other hand are unrestrained and immodest to the extreme as they represent all the sinful and evil things in this creation.

Hence, the chances of positive forces going out of hand and those who have them becoming haughty and arrogant due to their excellent virtues and glorious qualities are remote and rare to come by as compared to the negative forces represented by evil, vices and bad qualities that make those who possess them start hopping and jumping with vigour at the slightest encouragement.

The Lord is an impartial judge; he takes sides with none. So the chances of the Lord’s intervention to rein-in positive forces are rare simply because the owners of such forces observe self-discipline themselves, something not true for the owners of negative forces who go berserk easily and with a vengeance. This is why there more stories of the Lord having to intervene and eliminate demons who represent negativity are known vis-à-vis his intervention to restrain those who have positive qualities.

But often times it so happens that those who are supposed to be possessors of good virtues and excellent spiritual powers that they get by the virtue of their doing various religious sacrifices, doing penances and observance of austerity and other spiritual efforts, start behaving in a haughty and arrogant manner in the erroneous belief that there is no one to counter them. It is then that the Supreme Being decides to teach them a good lesson so that they understand their limits. This is evident in the story of Ravana. The Brahmins had become so confident of their powers and mystical abilities that they feared no retribution from any quarter. They would curse anyone, even those who were not at fault, at the slightest provocation because they wished everyone to bow and yield before them—as is clear when the Brahmins had cursed king Pratapbhanu to become a demon for no fault of his. These Brahmins thought that even as a demon, Pratapbhanu would not be able to harm them. So, the Lord taught them a bitter lesson and gave them back in the same coin in which they had tried to subjugate others in the Lord’s creation. Ravana wreaked vengeance upon them relentlessly to bring them to heel, and the same Brahmins who would curse at will anyone who dared to offend them had to run for cover under the terror unleashed by Ravana. Where was their power to curse and spell doom on their opponents now? Why couldn’t they now lift their hands and say ‘Ravana, we curse you to burn to ashes’?

So in this way, the Supreme Being gave a clear hint that no one has the authority to upset the laws of the Creator. If he could punish the evil creatures represented by the demons, he could also punish those who called themselves holy and good but became proud and arrogant enough to exceed the threshold of modesty and restraint.

This is therefore a wonderful, marvellous and captivating tale of intrigue, dilemma, apparent contradictions and a lot of maneuvering by the Jiva-Atma. The Story keeps the mind riveted as it unfolds in a gradual but fascinating way.

The above discussion must have made the reader aware by now of the voluminous and extensive nature, as well as the wide canvas that has been used to narrate this most awe-inspiring and fascinating ‘Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka’ in our present Book. So therefore, the subject matter of the Book has been divided into 6 Parts with a total of 22 Chapters spread amongst them, and these Chapters are further sub-divided into Sections and sub-sections, each systematically numbered—all with the intention to make this vast Story properly structured, so as to make it easy to read and comprehend.

Finally, I wish to give my thanks to Sri Somil Bharti, B.Tech (IIT Kanpur) and MBA (IIM Calcutta) who has done the Roman Transliteration of the verses of the Original Text for me. He has always done it so gladly, even though he is a busy professional in his life.

I had tried to do my best, yet surely some errors may have crept in. For this I beg forgiveness from my esteemed readers, for after all I am an ordinary human being like the rest of us. I had to do this Book single-handedly as I have no companion or assistant of any kind to help me. With age factor working against me (for now I am in the sixty-fourth year of my life) I may have overlooked things and made inadvertent mistakes. So they are to be kindly overlooked by the reader.

Amen !

Author: Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia.

Date: 30th September, 2018

Full address of Author—36-A, Rajghat Colony, Parikrama Marg,
P.O.—Ayodhya, Pin—224123
Distt.—Faizabad, U.P. India.

Mobile: +919451290400, +919935613060

Website: < www.tulsidas-ram-books.weebly.com >

Email of Author: (i) < ajaichhawchharia@gmail.com >

(ii) < ajaikumarbooks@gmail.com >

-----**-----

Introduction:

A Brief Outline of the Story and its Important Characters

This magnificent and enthralling “Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka” is one of the best known classical tales of an era that predates our present civilization, and it goes back to hundred and thousands of years in history, yet it is so captivating and wonderful that its charm and fascination has never faded down the ages, and it has been told and retold in its numerous versions, both in the form of the many oral traditions as well as in the form of one of the most ancient and fascinating classics of India, the epic known to the world as the ‘Ramayana’. The awe-inspiring Story is so wondrous and marvellous that it has spawned many a versions of the Ramayana across cultures and in different languages. As a result, though the main frame of the Story remains the same but the finer details have undergone changes and a lot of tinkering through the many ages and the countless generations through which it has travelled.

The Ramayana, in essence, is the story that describes the life and time of Lord Ram, who was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of creation, who had to come down to earth to eliminate the ruthlessly cruel demon race presided over by their king known as Ravana because they had overturned and trampled upon the laws of Dharma, the rules that governed proper functioning of the world and helped maintain peace, happiness and order in the society where all the living beings followed the norms of propriety, probity, goodness and righteousness in this world. It’s the story of the conquest of the evil by the good; it’s the story of how the Supreme Being watches patiently when some members of his own creation fall on the path of sin, giving them ample opportunity to make amends and repent, but when he determines that things have slid beyond a certain threshold level and needs his personal intervention, the Lord—being the Sovereign, the Supreme Commander, the Guardian and the Father of this creation—does step in to set his house in order and carry out his moral obligation.

In the case of Ravana and the demon race he headed as their king, things had deteriorated to such an extent that the Lord’s humble children, the ordinary creatures represented by human beings, as well as the Mother Earth that sustained and nourished them, and the Gods who protected them all, were themselves extremely horrified and tormented so much so that if nothing was done then everything that stood for life and goodness would be pushed to extinction under the fiery onslaught of sin, evil, cruelty and vices that the demons stood for. So it became obligatory for the Lord to intervene personally.

In order to introduce the reader to this marvelous Tale told in our Book in its entirety, covering its expanse in all its hues and emotions, we shall outline here the way the Chapters are arranged in this Book, as it would also help to give an idea of the flow of the narrative.

Chapter no. 1: We shall begin our narrative from the time of King Pratapbhanu—as this king was the one who later on, in his next life, became the demon King Ravana due to certain unfortunate developments.

Chapter no. 2: This Chapter describes the birth of Ravana, the various boons and curses he got, and the establishment of the demon kingdom.

Chapter no. 3: In this Chapter we read how after establishing his kingdom of demons at Lanka, Ravana had unleashed a dreadful reign of terror and cruelty that horrified all living beings.

Chapter no. 4: The Gods and Mother Earth could not bear things any more and so they prayed to Lord Vishnu to save them from Ravana's tyranny. The Lord promised them to come down personally in the form of Lord Ram to set things in order. This part of the story is covered in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 5: In order to accomplish his mission of eliminating the cruel demons and slaying their king Ravana along with his kin, Lord Ram had to find an excuse to travel to Lanka, the citadel of the demons and the capital city of Ravana. In order to give effect to his grand plan, the Lord had to maneuver things in such a way that his wife Sita would be abducted by Ravana, which would provide the Lord with a ready-made excuse to go and vanquish the evil demons so that Sita could be freed. How this grand plan of the Lord was implemented and Sita was abducted by Ravana is narrated in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 6: The Lord then began his search for Sita though he knew everything in advance. During his wanderings in the wild forest, the Lord met Jatau, the vulture who had tried to save Sita but was gravely injured when Ravana sliced off his wings, and Sabari who was an old woman living alone in an abandoned hermitage. From them the Lord came to know that Ravana had taken Sita away, and he was advised to proceed to the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha where he should befriend Sugriv, the prince of the monkeys, who would help the Lord to first find where exactly Sita was, and then launch a military campaign to recover her.

Lord Ram went in the direction told and befriended Hanuman and Sugriv. By-and-by, spies and heralds were dispatched in all the directions to find out the whereabouts of Sita. One team consisting of chief monkeys and bears reached the shore of the southern ocean where they meet Sampati, an old vulture and elder brother of Jatau. He told them that Sita was held captive in Lanka across the ocean. So it was decided now to send Hanuman and ascertain the facts. He crosses the ocean to land on the shore of Lanka. These events are narrated in vivid detail in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 7: After landing in Lanka, Hanuman goes about his job in right earnest. During his search he first meets Vibhishan, the younger brother of Ravana, and befriends him. Vibhishan guides him to the garden named Ashok Van where Sita was held captive under a massive tree. Hanuman meets Sita, informs her of the latest developments, and assures her that soon Lord Ram would come to free her. Then he plunders the garden on the excuse that he is hungry and wishes to eat fruits. During his rampaging he kills a large part of the demon army sent to capture him, but finally yielded and allowed himself to be tied so that he could have a chance to meet Ravana personally and judge him. He was taken to the royal court of the demons where an acrimonious exchange of sharp words took place between him and the demon king. Ultimately, Ravana was so infuriated that he ordered that Hanuman's tail be burnt as a punishment. However, Hanuman was waiting for this opportunity, for he freed himself and ran amok in the city, dragging the reams of clothes tied on his tail and set alight by the demons, thereby sparking a wild fire that ravaged the gilded city of Lanka and reducing it to a dark hulk of a ruin of burnt-out rubble. Taking leave of Sita, Hanuman leapt across the ocean to come back to Kishkindha and report to Lord Ram about the success of his mission. These developments are covered in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 8: Lord Ram wastes no time in collecting a huge army of monkeys and bears to launch a military campaign to free Sita from the clutches of the demons. The army departs on its mission from Kishkindha and reaches the shore of the south ocean. We read about it in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 9: Meanwhile, ever since Hanuman had laid Lanka to waste by burning it down, there was a general air discontent and fear in the city. Many senior ministers tried to persuade Ravana to avoid a ruinous war by giving Sita back to Lord Ram, but of course to no avail. One among them was his own brother Vibhishan. But Ravana was so angry at this that he kicked Vibhishan in full court, at which the latter decided to quit Lanka and join the camp of Lord Ram. This Chapter describes these events.

Chapter no. 10: The only problem to be overcome now by Lord Ram's army was to cross the mighty ocean. For this a bridge was constructed on its surface; it was a miraculous feat indeed. The army then crossed over to land on the soil of Lanka. We read about it in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 11: Lord Ram did not wish to go down in history with the ignominy of not having given the angel of peace a chance so that bloodshed and ruin could be averted. So after war parleys were held it was decided to send Angad, the crown prince of the kingdom of Kishkindha and one of Lord Ram's close confidantes, to go as an 'emissary of peace' to explore if there was any hope of avoiding a destructive war. Angad's mission, however, failed. This Chapter narrates these developments.

Chapter no. 12: So then, the War finally begins. Ravana's wife Mandodari tried her best on her part repeatedly to convince her stubborn husband to see reason and abandon his haughtiness, but as the fiat of fate determined and providence willed, Ravana would pay no heed to her entreaties for his doom was pre-destined. We read about Mandodari's entreaties in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 13: War Parleys in both the camps of Lord Ram and Ravana are urgently held. Lord Ram decides to send Angad as his emissary to the demon court in an attempt to make peace and avoid a destructive war.

Chapter no. 14: In this Chapter we watch from our ring-side seats as the initial wave of attack by Lord Ram's forces commences, and the fort of Lanka crumbles under the force of the onslaught. We get a glimpse of the horrifying and blood-curdling war between Ravana's army of demons and Lord Ram's army of monkeys and bears as the sack of Lanka and the ravages of war begin.

Chapter no. 15: During the initial phases of the war, Ravana's son Meghanad had fought a fierce duel with Laxman, Lord Ram's brother, and had gravely wounded him so much that Laxman had become unconscious and fell on the battle-field. Hanuman had then gone to the northern mountains and brought one of its hills that contained a special life-giving herb by administration of which Laxman could be revived. This phase of the war is described in this Chapter.

Chapter no. 16: After Laxman was revived and joined the war once again, Ravana was extremely perturbed. He persuaded his brother Kumbhakaran to face the enemy and defeat it. Kumbhakaran was flabbergasted for he understood the foolishness of this war; so he warned Ravana of the ruinous consequences of his decision to fight Lord Ram. However, Kumbhakaran joined the battle, and was ultimately slayed by Lord Ram, becoming the first major casualty of the war. This Chapter describes Kumbhakarn's fierce battle with Lord Ram and his army, and his ultimate death.

Chapter no. 17: Next we read in this Chapter about the second battle between Laxman and Meghnad, the mightily powerful son of Ravana. He was finally killed by Laxman, and Meghand's death was the second major casualty of the war after Kumbhakaran.

Chapter no. 18: The war entered its final stage, and in this Chapter the no-holds barred battle between Lord Ram and Ravana, that culminated in the latter's death, has been described vividly.

Chapter no. 19: The war ends with victory for Lord Ram's forces. There is mass celebration and jubilation everywhere, especially in the ranks of the Gods who were exceptionally elated and praised Lord Ram highly. Then Lord Ram appointed Vibhishan as the new king of Lanka. We read all about it in this Chapter.

Chapter 20: Now the main objective of the war was to be accomplished—which was Sita's reunion with Lord Ram. This Chapter narrates this pleasant development.

Chapter no. 21: After being reunited with Sita and fulfilling the promise he had made to Mother Earth and the Gods—that he would free them from the torments of Ravana and his cruel demon hordes, Lord Ram embarked on his journey back home to Ayodhya with his companions onboard the air-plane called Pushpak. A heart-warming and arousing reception was given to the Lord when he finally landed on the soil of Ayodhya at the end of his fourteen years of forest sojourn; he arrived home to a tumultuous welcome. Lord Ram is then crowned as the King-Emperor amidst wide-spread festivities, and then we read about the departure of his guests for their respective homes in Kishkindha and Lanka. This brings us to the End of this fascinating and marvellous Story.

Chapter no. 22: The whole Story of the "Ramayana" has been recapitulated and re-told quickly in a 'Fast Motion' mode in this final chapter, and for this we shall be reading Ram Charit Manas's Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 64—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 68.

It ought also to be pointed out here that, in order to make our Book as comprehensive and have as wide a sweep as possible, we shall be curating, collating and reading from four classics that present this Tale in most fascinating terms—viz. (i) Ram Charit

Manas, (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, (iii) Geetawali Ramayan, and (iv) Kavitali Ramayan.

-----**-----

The Main Characters of the Story

1. King Pratapbhanu: He was a great King of a kingdom known as Satyaketu. The kingdom was famous for prosperity and happiness that comes with righteousness and probity, where the laws of Dharma (ethics, propriety, nobility and goodness) and Truth prevailed. King Pratapbhanu was a noble king who ruled with justice and prudence.

But unfortunately, as is usually the way with kings, he was very ambitious. He wished to conquer the world, even be able to subdue elders and wise men such as the Brahmins if they try to stand in his way, so that he may rule un-opposed for eternity. It is not possible in this mortal world that anyone can become eternal and be untouched completely by the rules of creation. Likewise, the tide of time and fiat of providence cannot be conquered, undermined and subdued forever, and so it is also not possible to remain unconquerable for eternity.

So by-and-by this ambitious nature of Pratapbhanu led to his ultimate downfall. He fell into a trap of a king whom he had defeated sometime earlier in battle, and who was biding his time to take revenge. This defeated king went to the forest to hide in the disguise of a hermit, and wait. Once it so happened that the noble king Pratapbhanu fell into his trap when he got lost during hunting. The cunning fellow promised false boons to the king and prevailed upon him to arrange for a grand feast for Brahmins where he would manipulate things and get him blessed by Brahmins with the boons of things he so much desires. As fate would have it however, the king's enemy ensured that the Brahmins would curse the king and his entire family and subjects to be condemned to become blood thirsty demons so that their generations after generations would remain accursed for their sinful and evil deeds!

With the passage of time, Pratapbhanu was born as the demon Ravana, and his kin were born as the other members of his demon race.

2. Ravana: He was a grandson of sage Pulastya, who in turn was a son of the creator Brahma. Pulastya was married to the daughter of Trinbindu, and from her he begot a son named Visrawa.

Visrawa had two wives. His first wife was the daughter of sage Bharadwaj, and she gave birth to Kuber who later on became the treasurer of Gods.

Visrawa's second wife was Kaikasi, daughter of the demon Sumali. From her were born Ravana and his siblings. His sister was Supernakha, and his two younger brothers were Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan.

Ravan's wife was Mandodari, and his son was Meghanad—the one who roared like the thunder clap.

3. Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan were the two brothers of Ravana. Out of the two, Vibhishan was a pious soul, a follower of Dharma (principles of good character and righteousness), and a devotee of Lord God.

Kumbhakaran, on the other hand, was more like his elder brother Ravana, for he had demonic traits dominant in him. But fortunately for the world, he was quite lazy, and preferred to eat and sleep, for he slept for six months at a stretch. But on the day he woke up to eat, the land was laid barren as he swallowed whatever came his way—wine, meat and whatever else he could lay his hand on.

Kumbhakaran was so-called because he had huge ears like that of fat pitcher. Kumbha = a huge pot or pitcher; Karan or Karna = ear.

Kumbhakaran was killed by Lord Ram during the Battle, and like his brother Ravana he too found eternal rest for himself when his soul emerged from his body and merged with Supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram.

4. Meghanad: He was the son of Ravana, and one of the most unconquerable of the demons. He had subdued Indra, the king of Gods. He got his name because his roar resembled that of a thunder-clap. Megha = cloud; Naad = sound.

He had fought bravely and made Laxman faint during the Battle of Lanka. He had earlier ensnared Hanuman when no other demon could subdue him. He was finally slayed by Laxman.

5. Vibhishan: He was the younger brother of Ravana and a devotee of Lord Vishnu. When Hanuman had entered Lanka in his search for Sita, it was Vibhishan whom he first met and who had guided him to the place where Sita was held captive. Later on, when Vibhishan tried to persuade Ravana to give Sita back to Lord Ram and avoid the ruinous war, he was insulted and kicked by Ravana which compelled him to abandon Lanka and join Lord Ram. When the war ended, Lord Ram made him the next king of Lanka.

6. Supernakha was Ravana's sister. She was as cruel and demonic as her brother Ravana. She had huge nails and fan like ears. Hence she got her name. Sup (pronounced as soop) = a winnowing basket (representing large ears); Nakha = nails.

7. Trijataa: She was a demoness deputed by Ravana to keep a close watch on Sita. She became sympathetic towards her ward Sita and had always encouraged the latter to keep hope inspite of overwhelming despair.

8. Mandadori: She was the wise wife of Ravana who had tried on several occasions to persuade her husband to return Sita and prevent the ruinous war. She was a daughter of the demon Maya.

9. Marich (pronounced as Maaricha):--The demon who was forced by Ravana to become a deer with a golden skin so that Sita could be distracted. Seeing this unique deer, Sita asked her husband Lord Ram to go and bring the deer for her. When the Lord went away, Ravana abducted Sita. Marich was eventually shot down by Ram.

10. Baali/Vaali:-- The king of Kishkindha and the monkey race. He was also the elder brother of Sugriv, the friend of Lord Ram.

11. Sugriv:-- The younger brother of Baali who was thrown out of the kingdom due to certain misunderstanding between the two brothers. He lived in exile on top of the Rishyamook Mountain where Lord Ram and he became friends. He was reinstated on the throne of Kishkindha, and in return he had helped Lord Ram in finding out about the whereabouts of Sita and rescuing her by lending his huge army of monkeys and bears to the Lord.

12. Hanuman:-- A companion of Sugriv and said to be the son of the Wind God. He became an ardent follower, a great devotee and a trusted lieutenant of Lord Ram. of Lord Ram. It was he who went to Lanka to discover Sita, and burn the city down. Later on in the war, he had brought the herb to revive Laxman when he was wounded in the battle field. Hanuman played a pivotal role in the epic war and the conquest of Lanka.

13. Angad:-- He was the son of Baali, brother of Sugriv. He later on became a faithful follower of Lord Ram. His devotion for the Lord was no less than that of Hanuman. Lord Ram had sent him as his messenger to Ravana in a last attempt to avoid the war.

14. Lord Ram:-- An incarnation of Lord Vishnu in the form of a human being. Vishnu had come down to earth as Lord Ram on the request of the Gods and Mother Earth to slay Ravana and the cruel demons who had unleashed a horrifying reign of terror in the world.

Lord Ram was born as a prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya, and his worldly father was the kingdom's ruler Dasrath. When the Lord had to go to the forest, his wife Sita was abducted by Ravana. This was the reason why Ravana met his end—for Lord Ram launched a campaign to retrieve Sita which led to the fierce War of Lanka and the annihilation of the cruel demons.

15. Laxman:-- He was Lord Ram's younger brother who had accompanied the Lord all the way to Lanka from Ayodhya. Laxman was Lord Ram's comrade-in-arm and his constant companion all through the period the Lord had been away from Ayodhya on his mission to get rid of the demons and free the world of their scourge. Laxman had fought shoulder-to-shoulder with the Lord during the War of Lanka.

16. Sita:-- She was the daughter of king Janak of the kingdom of Janakpur. She was married to Lord Ram and had accompanied him to the forest. Ravana had abducted her to avenge the insult of Supernakha whose nose and ear were cut by Laxman on the instructions of Lord Ram as she was creating unwarranted mischief and nuisance for the Lord, going even to the extent of trying to seduce him and trap him in fits of sensual passion.

It was Sita's abduction that led to the burning and final sac of Lanka, as well as the killing of Ravana, Kumbhakaran, Meghanad etc.

17. The Monkeys and the Bears:-- They were actually the Gods in disguise. When Lord Vishnu had promised the Gods and Mother Earth that he would come down to earth in order to eliminate the demons and free the world from their torments, the creator Brahma had asked all the Gods to help Lord Vishnu by assuming the form of monkeys and bears and descending down to earth to help Lord Ram, who was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, in his endeavour to get rid of the demons.

These Gods in the form of the monkeys and bears had formed the 'army of Lord Ram' which had defeated the demon army of Ravana and conquered Lanka.

-----**-----

Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka

Told in Slow Motion

[Entirely Based on the Classics Ram Charit Manas, Kavitawali, Geetawali, Adhyatma Ramayan & Anand Ramayan]

Part 1

Birth of Ravana, Establishment of the Demon Kingdom, And their Reign of Terror

(With Roman Transliteration of Verses, English Exposition and Notes)

In this Part 1, we have the following Chapters:

Chapter 1: The Story of Ravana in his Previous Life.

Chapter 2: The Birth of Ravana and the Establishment of the Demon Kingdom.

Chapter 3: The Reign of Terror unleashed by Ravana and the Demons.

Chapter 4: Gods and Mother Earth pray to Lord Vishnu to save them from Ravana's Tyranny, and the Lord's Promise to them.

-----**-----

Part 1

Chapter 1: The Story of Ravana in his Previous Life.

The story of the previous life of Ravana, the great king of the demon race and the ruler of the kingdom which had its capital on the island of Lanka, is a very fascinating tale about a noble king of a great kingdom who was overcome with a jealous desire to rule over the whole world un-opposed, how this desire led him to become a victim of conceit and treachery, how his yearning was exploited by a cunning enemy who took advantage of his hidden desire to settle old scores and seek revenge upon him by ensuring that the unsuspecting king was condemned for life to become a demon, to lead a life of ignominy and denunciation, a life which would have led him to slide down to even further lower levels of existence had he not been provided salvation by the Supreme Being who came down to this mortal world himself in the form of Lord Ram to liberate Ravana's soul from his evil body and grant eternal rest to him.

This wonderful story has been narrated in the great epic known as 'Ram Charit Manas' written by Goswami Tulsidas. It is described in its Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 153—to Doha no. 176.

Now, let us read this interesting story from Ram Charit Manas verbatim in detail.

चौ०. सुनु मुनि कथा पुनीत पुरानी । जो गिरिजा प्रति संभु बखानी ॥ १ ॥
बिस्व बिदित एक कैकय देसू । सत्यकेतु तहँ बसइ नरेसू ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunu muni kathā punīta purānī. jō girijā prati sambhu bakhānī. 1.
bisva bidita ēka kaikaya dēsū. satyakētu taham' basa'i narēsū. 2.

[Sage Yagyavalkya was once asked by sage Bharadwaj why the Supreme Being had to come down to this mortal world in the form of a human prince known as Lord Ram. While answering Bharadwaj, sage Yagyavalkya narrated a fascinating story that on some previous occasion had been told by Lord Shiva to his divine consort Parvati (who was known as Girija as she was the daughter of the king of mountains).

It was the story of a great king known as Pratpabhanu, who was the son of a great and righteous king called Satyaketu. He ruled over a mighty kingdom known by the name of Kaikaya¹.]

Sage Yagyavalkya (also spelled as Yagyavalkya) said to sage Bharadwaj: 'Listen oh sage. Listen to this great, ancient and legendary tale which Lord Shiva had narrated to Girija (his divine consort) in some time in the past. (1)

There was a famed kingdom (a principality) known as 'Kaikaya²'; it was famous throughout the world. A great king by the name of 'Satyaketu³' ruled there. (2)

[Note—¹It is believed that this story of Ravana's previous life when he was king Satyaketu of the kingdom of Kaikaya is narrated in three most ancient and obscure texts known as (i) Agastya Ramayan written by sage Agastya, (ii) the Maha-Ramayan, and (iii) Shiva-Samhita.

²The kingdom of 'Kaikaya' lied on the other side of two ancient rivers named Vyaas and Shaalmali. At the time of this story, its capital was known as Girivraj or Raajgriha. At present it lies in the state of Kashmir in the north of India, nestled in the mighty range of the Himalayas. Its present name is 'Kakkaa'; locally it is also called 'Gakar'. It is believed that it was established by sage Kashyap.

By the fiat of fate it so chanced that when Satyaketu, alias Pratapbhanu, was cursed by the Brahmins to be doomed, then the cunning false-hermit, who had been instrumental in arranging the feast where the Brahmins cursed the king, informed all his enemies of the development. They launched attacks from all sides to take advantage of the situation, confident that Pratapbhanu could be easily conquered now. In the ensuing wars, while all kings returned with the spoils of war and contented at being successful in defeating their erstwhile arch enemy, one of them remained behind to establish his sovereignty there. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 175.}

In due course of time, one of the princesses of this kingdom of Kaikaya was married to king Dasrath of Ayodhya; her name was 'Kaikeyi' or 'Kaikai'—meaning the daughter of the kingdom of Kaikaya. She was the step-mother of Lord Ram and the mother of Bharat. It was she who became instrumental in Lord Ram's going to the forest for a fourteen year period of exile during which the famed war of Lanka took place and Ravana was slayed by him.

³The name 'Satyaketu' of the king is significant. It means one who holds high the Flag (ketu) of Truth (satya). To wit, king Satyaketu was an upholder of truth and righteousness, and ruled over his kingdom judicially and in accordance to the laws of Dharma (probity, propriety, nobility, compassion, prudence, righteousness, ethics and morality).

It is really such a wonder and an irony of fate that such a great and righteous king who was loved by his subjects and had not a scar on his character that would go against him should become a hated 'demon' known as Ravana who was loathed by the world.]

धरम धुरंधर नीति निधाना । तेज प्रताप सील बलवाना ॥ ३ ॥

तेहि कें भए जुगल सुत बीरा । सब गुन धाम महा रनधीरा ॥ ४ ॥ dharama dhurandhara nīti nidhānā. tēja pratāpa sīla balavānā. 3.

tēhi kēm̄ bha'ē jugala suta bīrā. saba guna dhāma mahā ranadhīrā. 4.

The King (Satyaketu) was a great champion of good virtues and an upholder of Dharma (the principles of auspiciousness, righteousness, probity, propriety, ethics and noble conduct). He was well-versed in the laws of politics and statesmanship, was endowed with glory, esteem and dignity that come with being meritorious and above reproach, and was famed for his valour and strength, but at the same time he was very polite and courteous. (3)

He had two sons who were like their father—i.e. they were repositories of virtues and had all the merits of their father, possessing all the fine qualities and characters that he had. They were strong, valiant, righteous and noble like their father¹. (4)

[Note—¹A son inherits his father's genes and legacy. A worthy son is one who takes forward the name of his father and his family to higher glories, instead of doing anything that would put them to shame. If a father is meritorious and good, his son would normally be like him. This natural law of inheritance of qualities is endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precedes Doha no. 142

where the birth of Dhruva, the great devotee of Lord Vishnu, is mentioned. It is said here that there was a very noble and righteous king named Swayambhu, and from him was born Uttanpad, a son who was like him in all meritorious virtues, and then Dhruva was born to Uttanpad and he also inherited the glorious virtues of his grandfather and father.

Amongst the great qualities of a king is his being righteous and judicious in the affairs of the state, being compassionate and considerate when dealing with his subjects, having excellent knowledge of statecraft and principles of statesmanship, and being courageous and valiant in the battle-field. Satyaketu and his two sons had all these virtues in them.]

राज धनी जो जेठ सुत आही । नाम प्रतापभानु अस ताही ॥ ५ ॥
अपर सुतहि अरिमर्दन नामा । भुजबल अतुल अचल संग्रामा ॥ ६ ॥ rāja dhanī jō jēṭha suta āhī. nāma pratāpabhānu asa tāhī. 5.

apara sutahi arimardana nāmā. bhujabala atula acala saṅgrāmā. 6.

The elder son, who was the heir to the throne, was called ‘Pratapbhanu’¹. (5)

The second son was named ‘Arimardan’². He had immense strength and valour in his arms that was unmatched by any other warrior. During a duel or a war, he was extremely steadfast and stood his ground like a mighty mountain. [To wit, it was well-nigh impossible to defeat him in a duel. He never turned his back and fled the battle-field. During a war he made his enemies bite dust, and his mere presence sent chill down the spine of his adversaries.] (6)

[Note—¹The word ‘Pratapbhanu’ literally means ‘one whose glories and fame shone like the sun’; or ‘one who shone like the sun for his glories and fame’.

In his next birth also as Ravana, this unique quality of the king lasted because there was no one to match Ravana’s fame in the world.

²The word ‘Arimardan’ refers to ‘one who vanquishes his enemies and crushes their strength’. This surely was true even in this prince’s next birth when he was born as Kumbhakaran. No one dared to confront him in the battle-field, and when he stepped to face his enemy, the latter’s army was scattered like dry leaves in a severe storm.

Arimardan was stronger in physical strength as compared to his elder brother Pratapbhanu. This was also replicated in their next birth as Kumbhakaran and Ravana respectively.

When we shall eventually be reading about the battle at Lanka we shall read how Kumbhakaran single-handedly dispersed Lord Ram’s army helter-skelter under his vicious onslaught¹, while no such feat could be achieved by Ravana. {¹Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precede Doha no. 65; and Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 67.}

We shall cite an instance from the battle of Lanka to highlight how Arimardan was stronger than Ravana. It so happened once during the course of the war that Hanuman, who was a very strong warrior in his own right and matched Ravana and Kumbhakaran in their might and valour, had been punched by Ravana forcefully which made Hanuman buckle and fall back a bit, but he managed to recover from the blow quite easily and got up angrily to face Ravana and give him a strong blow of his fist in revenge which made Ravana fall unconscious for a moment. But when Kumbhakaran gave a mighty fistful to Hanuman, the latter swooned and fell down unconsciousness for some time, unable to recover instantly. These two events are respectively mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 84; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 65.]

भाइहि भाइहि परम समीती । सकल दोष छल बरजित प्रीती ॥ ७ ॥
जेठे सुतहि राज नृप दीन्हा । हरि हित आपु गवन बन कीन्हा ॥ ८ ॥ bhā'ihī bhā'ihī parama samīti. sakala dōṣa chala barajita prīti. 7.

jēṭhē sutahi rāja nṛpa dīnhā. hari hita āpu gavana bana kīnhā. 8.

The two brothers warmly loved each other, and there was perfect unity between them. Their affection for each other was genuine and selfless, without guile, deceit and blemishes of any kind. (7)

The king (Satyaketu) abdicated the throne and installed his elder son (Pratapbhanu) on it¹. After that, the king went to the forest to lead an austere life for his spiritual pursuits and devote the rest of his life in devotion of Lord Hari². (8)

[Note—¹According to ancient tradition, when a king became old he should appoint his eldest son to throne as his heir. This is also borne out when king Dasrath decided to anoint his eldest son Lord Ram to the throne of the kingdom of Ayodhya. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 2; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precede Doha no. 4; (ii) Doha no. 31.}

²This was another tradition according to which a man was expected to spend the last quarter of his life as a Sanyasi—i.e. one who renounces all his attachment with the world and spend his remaining days in meditation and contemplation in preparation for his ultimate death and attainment of peace for his soul. Prior to that, he should hand over all his worldly responsibilities to his heirs and withdraw himself to the forest or any other serene place that would give him freedom from involvement with the world and its endless worries. This is called Vaanprastha—literally meaning 'heading to the forest'.

So in accordance to this tradition, king Satyaketu handed over the reign of the kingdom to his elder son and went to the forest to lead a life of devotion and contemplation. There he would spend his remaining days in worshipping Lord Hari, also known as Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being.

This event also shows that the family of Pratapbhanu was god-fearing and devoted to Lord Vishnu. It's such a twist of fate and an irony of providence that members of the same family would become arch enemies of Lord Vishnu in their next birth as Ravana, Kumbhakaran, and the rest of the demon race.]

दो०. जब प्रतापरबि भयउ नृप फिरी दोहाई देस ।
प्रजा पाल अति बेदबिधि कतहुँ नहीं अघ लेस ॥ १५३ ॥

dōhā.

jaba pratāparabi bhaya'u nṛpa phirī dōhā'ī dēsa.
prajā pāla ati bēdabidhi katahum' nahīm agha lēsa. 153.

When Pratapbhanu ascended the throne and was declared a king, a royal proclamation to this effect was made throughout the land.

He ruled the kingdom most righteously in accordance with the laws and rules laid down in the Vedas (scriptures). There was no trace of sin and evil throughout the realm during his reign. (Doha no. 153)

चौ०. नृप हितकारक सचिव सयाना । नाम धरमरुचि सुक्र समाना ॥ १ ॥ सचिव सयान बंधु बलबीरा । आपु प्रतापपुंज रनधीरा ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

nṛpa hitakāraka saciva sayānā. nāma dharamaruci sukra samānā. 1.
saciva sayāna bandhu balabīrā. āpu pratāpapuñja ranadhīrā. 2.

The king had an able and wise chief minister. His name was 'Dharmaruchi'¹. This minister was clever and prudent like the legendary sage Sukracharya (who is said to be the Guru or the priest and preceptor of the demon race) in his wisdom, knowledge, prudence and abilities. (1)

All circumstances were favourable (for a great kingdom with a glorious future)—the minister (Dharmaruchi) was most competent, intelligent, skilled and wise, the king's brother (Arimardan) was counted as the first in the rank of great warriors and those who were brave and valiant, and the king (Pratapbhanu) himself was a veritable treasury of fine glorious qualities as well as one who was steady in the face of an enemy in the battle-field. (2)

[Note—¹The word 'Dharmaruchi' literally means 'one who takes great interest in Dharma—i.e. in the laws of probity, propriety, righteousness and ethics'. If a king's chief advisor and minister is good and competent, the king rises and acquires fame in the world, and the kingdom prospers.

Just like a man has two hands that help him to carry on with his duties in this world, a king has two arms that help him rule over his realm. One arm is his chief minister, and the other arm is his brother, and in the case he has none then his kin whom he can trust. In the case of king Pratapbhanu, both his minister and brother were excellent, and so he was very lucky and in a very fortunate situation.

In the next verse we read that this fortunate circumstance was complemented by the king having an excellent army at his command. This enabled him to extend his rule over vast stretches of the earth, and also to maintain good law and order situation.]

सेन संग चतुरंग अपारा । अमित सुभट सब समर जुझारा ॥ ३ ॥
सेन बिलोकि राउ हरषाना । अरु बाजे गहगहे निसाना ॥ ४ ॥

sēna saṅga caturaṅga apārā. amita subhaṭa saba samara jujhārā. 3.
sēna bilōki rā'u haraṣānā. aru bājē gahagahē nisānā. 4.

He had a vast army of countless veterans at his command. This army had four divisions or wings (sēna caturaṅga)¹. The soldiers were all brave, courageous and fearless in the battle-field as well as in their commitment and loyalty to the king and the throne. (3)

When the king observed his mighty and virtually invincible forces, he felt very elated. To celebrate the occasion, trumpets and kettledrums were sounded tumultuously. (4)

[Note—¹The ‘four wings’ of the army of those times traditionally consisted of horsemen, elephants, foot soldiers and chariots. Of course there were variants in the form of archers who used bows and arrows, soldiers who used swords, lancets and spear to fight hand-to-hand battles, the artillery brigade, the boomerangs, the battering-rams, etc. It was a formidable army no doubt.]

बिजय हेतु कटकई बनाई । सुदिन साधि नृप चलेउ बजाई ॥ ५ ॥
जहँ तहँ परीं अनेक लराई । जीते सकल भूप बरिआई ॥ ६ ॥

bijaya hētu kaṭaka'ī banā'ī. sudina sādhi nṛpa calē'u bajā'ī. 5.
jaham' taham' parīm anēka larā'īm. jītē sakala bhūpa bari'ā'īm. 6.

Being elated and confident of success, the king decided to launch a campaign to conquer the world. So he arrayed a huge army for this purpose, and determining an auspicious day when to start on his campaign, he marched forward with his army to the accompaniment of drums and other musical instruments to announce his departure. (5)

He fought many a battles with kings on the way who dared to oppose him, conquering them all by the might of his overwhelming force. (6)

[Note—All through history we come across such ambitious kings as Pratapbhanu was, those who led great military campaigns in order to extend their dominion over vast tracts of land. But the great lesson of history was lost and forgotten by them all—that for the time being they did manage to hold sway over the destiny of others, but the rules of Nature and of that of Creation always superseded their ambitious design and lust for power because the tide of time overturned everything upside down, great empires rose and fell, entire civilisations flourished and perished, and a time came when all such great conquerors and emperors whose rein once extended from one corner of the earth to the other, who prided themselves as being the owners and the rulers of the land where the ‘sun never sets’, had to die like all others, quite frequently miserably and in ignominy, probably also lost in obscurity with their memory covered in the dust of time when all their acquired riches and glory shrank and got lost, becoming merely some chapter in the pages of history which only a few interested bothered to open and read.]

सप्त दीप भुजबल बस कीन्हे । लै लै दंड छाड़ि नृप दीन्हे ॥ ७ ॥ सकल अवनि मंडल तेहि काला । एक प्रतापभानु महिपाला ॥ ८ ॥

sapta dīpa bhujabala basa kīnhē. lai lai daṇḍa chāḍi nr̥pa dīnhē. 7.
sakala avani maṇḍala tēhi kālā. ēka pratāpabhānu mahipālā. 8.

The king conquered all the seven continents by the virtue of the strength of his arms. He demanded and got tributes (spoils of war in the form of taxes, gifts and compensations) from the kings he vanquished. And then he let them off, reinstating them back on their respective thrones as titular kings who were vassals under the Crown worn by Pratapbhanu¹. (7)

Throughout the length and breadth of the land, the rein of Emperor Pratapbhanu was proclaimed and established (and there was no one to challenge him). He was the only Ruler of the earth in those times². (8)

[Note—¹Pratapbhanu declared himself a supreme Emperor. So after subjugating these kings, he extracted huge tributes from them and made a treaty whereby these kings were restored their kingdoms with the condition that they would hold their title at the pleasure of the Emperor to whom all will owe their allegiance. They would pay regular tributes and stand in attendance in his court whenever called to do so. Otherwise, the punishment would be severe and swift, mostly in the form of their heads being severed.

This had been the norm with great conquerors since times immemorial.

²When Lord Ram became the king of Ayodhya, a similar situation prevailed during his time—for there was no other king who was a match for the Lord anywhere on this earth. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 22.]

दो०. स्वबस बिस्व करि बाहुबल निज पुर कीन्ह प्रबेसु । अरथ धरम कामादि सुख सेवइ समयँ नरेसु ॥ १५४ ॥

dōhā.

svabasa bisva kari bāhubala nija pura kīnha prabēsu.
aratha dharama kāmādi sukha sēva'i samayam̐ narēsu. 154.

After having conquered the whole world and making it surrender to the might of his arms, the king returned victorious to his own capital. He revelled and rejoiced in the light of the glory of his conquests and the acclaim that went with it; he enjoyed the spoils of war in the form of its riches, comforts and pleasures.

The king chose appropriate times to indulge in the various pastimes usual for great conquerors and emperors¹, such as enjoying the comforts and pleasures of huge wealth (aratha), merit and fame that comes by following the laws of Dharma (i.e. by adhering to the principles of righteousness, probity and propriety inspite of being great and powerful; following religious practices—“dharama”), fulfilment of sensual pleasures and worldly desires, and so on and so forth (kāmādi). (Doha no. 154)

[Note—¹In Valmiki’s Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 63, verse no. 9, Kumbhakaran has told Ravana that a person who enjoys things when the time is appropriate for them, such as enjoying meal when it is time to eat, going to sleep when it is time for it, relaxing and doing other activities at their proper and designated times, i.e. doing in the morning, in the afternoon and the evening things that are supposed to be done then, then such a person or a king is praised as being prudent, wise and intelligent; he is lauded as being a follower of Dharma.

So, king Pratapbhanu too followed this principle and did things at the proper and appropriate time.]

चौ०. भूप प्रतापभानु बल पाई । कामधेनु भै भूमि सुहाई ॥ १ ॥

सब दुख बरजित प्रजा सुखारी । धरमसील सुंदर नर नारी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bhūpa pratāpabhānu bala pāī. kāmadhēnu bhāi bhūmi suhāī. 1.

saba dukha barajita prajā sukhārī. dharamasīla sundara nara nārī. 2.

The earth became invigorated (green and lush) and started giving excellent yields (such as crops, minerals, fruits, vegetables, marine products etc.) when it got the support of the mighty arms of king Pratapbhanu. In fact, the earth became a personified form of the heavenly cow called ‘Kaam-dhenu’ which gives an abundance of milk and fulfils all the desires of those who seek anything from it.¹ (1)

There was no misery and pain of any kind that would make the subjects of the kingdom suffer in any way, and all the people were happy and contented. All the men and women were virtuous and adherents of the law of Dharma (principles of righteousness, probity, good conduct and thought), and their cheerful and pleasant physical appearances and demeanours showed that there was nothing that either worried them or made them feel unhappy.² (2)

[Note—When the earth is ruled by a good and noble king, there is happiness and prosperity everywhere. The subjects are taken well care of, and the fame of the king spreads to all corners of the earth. Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 21—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 22 where we read the same thing about the glory of the kingdom that was ruled by Lord Ram.

The kind of prosperous and rich kingdom that was established under king Pratapbhanu and the happiness of its subjects finds an exact resonance in the kingdom of Ayodhya that was ruled by Lord Ram. This is described in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Doha no. 23.

¹Refer specifically to: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 23 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede it.

²Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Doha no. 21 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; (ii) Doha no. 26.]

सचिव धरमरुचि हरि पद प्रीती । नृप हित हेतु सिखव नित नीती ॥ ३ ॥ गुर सुर संत पितर महिदेवा । करइ सदा नृप सब कै सेवा ॥ ४ ॥ saciva dharamaruci hari pada prīti. nṛpa hita hētu sikhava nita nīti. 3.

gura sura santa pitara mahidēvā. kara'i sadā nṛpa saba kai sēvā. 4.

The king's chief minister named Dharmaruchi was very virtuous and judicious, and true to his name he diligently followed the laws of Dharma (proper conduct and thought; upholding the principles of prudence, auspiciousness, righteousness, ethics, probity and propriety above all other considerations). He was also god-fearing and was devoted to Lord Hari whom he worshipped with great faith.¹

He always thought for what would be good for the king, and was careful about the latter's welfare. Keeping this in mind, he always ensured that he would give wise and prudent advice to the king on day-to-day basis. (3)

The king made it a point to always serve and pay his obeisance and worship to his Guru (preceptor and moral guide), the Gods, the saints and pious men, the spirits of his ancestors, and the holy men known as Brahmins who are deemed to be representatives of Gods on earth. (4)

[Note—¹These grand virtues of the chief minister have already been pointed out in Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 154 herein above.]

भूप धरम जे बेद बखाने । सकल करइ सादर सुख माने ॥ ५ ॥ दिन प्रति देइ बिबिध बिधि दाना । सुनइ साज बर बेद पुराना ॥ ६ ॥ bhūpa dharama jē bēda bakhānē. sakala kara'i sādara sukha mānē. 5.

dina prati dē'i bibidha bidhi dānā. suna'i sāstra bara bēda purānā. 6.

Whatever duties that the Vedas have prescribed for a king, he (Pratapbhanu) carried out all of them cheerfully and with due diligence with the thought that he was paying respect to the scriptures. Hence, he enjoyed doing his duties and fulfilling his obligations. (5)

He routinely gave liberal donations and made charities in various forms on a daily basis.

He also used to listen to religious discourses based on the Vedas, Purans and other scriptures¹. (6)

[Note—¹It was a normal practice with great kings to listen to religious discourses. The great king Dasrath, the king of Ayodhya and the father of Lord Ram too listened to them—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 359.

Even Lord Ram used to listen to such discourses regularly though he knew all the things that were told during such sessions. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 26.

We also read here that the scriptures were read and discussed in each household of Ayodhya during the reign of Lord Ram—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 26.

There is a wonderful book titled ‘Narad Bhakti Sutra’ which is dedicated to the theme of Bhakti or devotion for Lord God. In its verse no. 17 it is said that listening to the scriptures where the glories of the Lord are narrated helps to nourish Bhakti in the heart of a devotee. An English version of this book has been written and published by this author and is available on-line.]

नाना बापीं कूप तड़ागा । सुमन बाटिका सुंदर बागा ॥ ७ ॥
बिप्रभवन सुरभवन सुहाए । सब तीरथन्ह बिचित्र बनाए ॥ ८ ॥ nānā bāpīm kūpa tarāgā. sumana bāṭikā sundara bāgā. 7.

biprabhavana surabhavana suhā'ē. saba tīrathanha bicitra banā'ē. 8.

The king got constructed excellent water-bodies such as ponds, wells and lakes, wonderful gardens and orchards, as well as beautiful homes for Brahmins and shrines for the Gods in all the holy pilgrim places on earth. (7-8)

[Note—Such activities were undertaken by all great kings as means of charity and social work.]

दो०. जहँ लगी कहे पुरान श्रुति एक एक सब जाग । बार सहस्र सहस्र नृप किए सहित अनुराग ॥ १५५ ॥

dōhā.

jaham̃ lagi kahē purāna śruti ēka ēka saba jāga.
bāra sahasra sahasra nr̥pa ki'ē sahita anurāga. 155.

Whatever religious sacrifices have been described in the Vedas and Purans, the king performed them faithfully and diligently countless numbers of times, one by one.¹ (Doha no. 155)

[Note—¹Usually a great king was expected to do the ‘Ashwamegh Yagya’, or the horse sacrifice. Even Lord Ram had done it. We also read that Lord Ram was very particular about following the path of religious practices and goodness as advised by the scriptures. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 24.

To wit, all great kings became ‘great’ and renowned because they had followed the path shown by the scriptures.]

चौ०. हृदयँ न कछु फल अनुसंधाना । भूप बिबेकी परम सुजाना ॥ १ ॥

करइ जे धरम करम मन बानी । बासुदेव अर्पित नृप ग्यानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

hr̥dayam̐ na kachu phala anusandhānā. bhūpa bibēkī parama sujānā. 1.
kara'i jē dharama karama mana bānī. bāsudēva arpita nr̥pa gyānī. 2.

The king was very wise and intelligent. He had never desired for anything.¹ (1)

Whatever meritorious deeds that the king did, he faithfully offered them all to Lord Vasudeo (i.e. Lord Vishnu)². (2)

[Note—¹The king was well-versed in the doctrines of the scriptures, and so he knew fully well that if a person leads an honourable life in accordance to the principles laid down in the scriptures then all good things in the world come to him even without his asking for them. So therefore, why should he worry about anything; why should he allow himself to be tainted with the negativity associated with 'desires and passions'?

Verily, all his needs, of the world and of the spirit, were being taken care of by his doing meritorious deeds and strictly following the religious path prescribed in the scriptures. So what sense was there in asking for things which he has in abundance, or even if he did not have them currently they would come to him by-and-by.

'Narad Bhakti Sutra', verse nos. 5 and 7 highly praise the virtue of not having any kind of desires.

²It has been said in the scriptures that the best form of service to the Lord God is to offer everything to him; all deeds and their fruits ought to be offered selflessly to the Lord. This is one of the best forms of Bhakti or devotion.

It is said that those deeds and their fruits that are not offered to the Lord God are worthy of shame, and it would be good not doing any such deed at all no matter how meritorious they may be.

In this context, the reader should refer to verse nos. 14, 19 and 61 of a wonderful text on Bhakti, called 'Narad Bhakti Sutra'. An English version of this book has been written and published by this author.]

चढ़ि बर बाजि बार एक राजा । मृगया कर सब साजि समाजा ॥ ३ ॥

बिंध्याचल गभीर बन गयऊ । मृग पुनीत बहु मारत भयऊ ॥ ४ ॥

caḍhi bara bāji bāra ēka rājā. mṛgayā kara saba sāji samājā. 3.

bindhyācala gabhīra bana gaya'ū. mṛga punīta bahu mārata bhaya'ū. 4.

Once upon a time, the king mounted his gallant horse and went on a hunting expedition with all his courtiers, and fully equipped with all the royal paraphernalia needed for the purpose. (3)

He entered the deep recesses of the forest nestling in the lap of the lofty ranges of the Vindhyachal Mountain in pursuit of game, and by-and-by shot many a beautiful deer and other wild animals. (4)

फिरत बिपिन नृप दीख बराहू । जनु बन दुरेउ ससिहि ग्रसि राहू ॥ ५ ॥ बड़ बिधु नहिं समात मुख माहीं । मनहुँ क्रोध बस उगिलत नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥ phirata bipina nrpa dikha barāhū. janu bana durē'u sasihi grasi rāhū. 5.

baṛa bidhu nahim samāta mukha māhīm. manahum'krōdha basa ugilata nāhīm. 6.

During the course of his hunting, he saw a majestic wild boar¹ that was roaming in the forest. He was so huge and awesome that it appeared that the demon 'Rahu' had come to hide in the wilds, fearing for his own life, after having eclipsed the moon². (5)

It appeared that since the Moon was too large for the demon's mouth, the latter could not gobble it up, and this made the demon seethe with anger as he did not want to let the prey slip away³. (6)

[Note—¹This was no ordinary wild boar. It was actually a demon named 'Kalketu' who had seven sons and ten brothers. Together they had been causing great horror for the Gods and the Brahmins. So king Pratapbhanu engaged them in a battle and killed all his sons and brothers, but the demon Kalketu managed to escape. He took a vow of revenge upon the king and hid in the forest looking for an opportunity. In due course of time he met a king who had also been defeated by Pratapbhanu in battle and who had managed to escape arrest and fled to the forest. This defeated king disguised himself as a hermit and waited for his chance for revenge.

As destiny would have it, both these arch enemies of king Pratapbhanu, who were buring with the fire of hate and revenge, joined hands and became friends-in-common-cause. The story of this boar and his friendship with the erstwhile king disguised as a hermit is narrated herein below in Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 170. They planned a wicked and nasty device which would bring ruin to king Pratapbhanu and his entire family.

²According to mythological legend, the demon 'Rahu' has only a head with a mouth with which it periodically gobbles up the Moon and the Sun. This marks the occurrence of the lunar and the solar eclipses respectively. Since the demon's head is severed from his neck, the Moon and the Sun first enter the demon's mouth and then eventually emerge from the hollow of the neck below. This marks the end of the eclipse.

Now Rahu gets frightened that the Moon God and the Sun God would punish him, so he runs away and hides in a thick forest where the light of neither the Moon nor the Sun can reach. This is said to be the legend.

The wild boar which king Pratapbhanu sighted in the dark forest was so huge and fearsome and fat that it resembled the demon Rahu who had the shape of a huge rounded ball because he had only his head.

³Actually what is being said here in a dramatic way is that the king wanted to shoot this wild boar, but no matter how hard he tried to achieve success in his effort, the boar always escaped him. This angered the king beyond measure, and so he pursued his game relentlessly, without bothering to be careful and seeking assistance from the soldiers and courtiers who were accompanying him as this would mean his personal defeat and humiliation.

We will read soon how the king's desire to hunt this boar without taking due precautions about his own security led him into the unknown depths of the forest where he got lost because all his companions were left behind while he was on hot pursuit of the game. Then as the fiat of fate had destined for him, he fell a victim of a trap laid by one of his enemies whom the king had defeated in battle some time in the past, and who was bidding for time to settle scores with him.]

कोल कराल दसन छबि गाई । तनु बिसाल पीवर अधिकाई ॥ ७ ॥
घुरुघुरात हय आरौ पाएँ । चकित बिलोकत कान उठाएँ ॥ ८ ॥ kōla karāla dasana chabi gā'ī. tanu bisāla pīvara adhikā'ī.

ghurughurāta haya ārau pā'em̃. cakita bilōkata kāna uṭhā'em̃. 4.

The boar had enormous wide jaws; his body was of huge proportions; and he was very fat and bulky. (7)

When the boar heard the tramping sound of the hooves of the king's horse, he growled and grunted angrily and held his ears erect. (8)

दो०. नील महीधर सिखर सम देखि बिसाल बराहु । चपरि चलेउ हय सुटुकि नृप हाँकि न होइ निबाहु ॥ १५६ ॥

dōhā.

nīla mahīdhara sikhara sama dēkhi bisāla barāhu.
capari calē'u haya suṭuki nr̥pa hām̃ki na hō'i nibāhu. 156.

When the king observed the huge wild boar who resembled the mighty mountain known as Neel Giri (literally the 'blue mountain') in its girth and the height, he got tempted so much to hunt him down that he whipped his steed and spurred it to move swiftly towards the boar, challenging the latter and saying that he would not be able to escape now¹. (Doha no. 156)

[Note—¹In his enthusiasm and excitement, the king shouted at the boar. If he would have been wise and careful like a good and scrupulous hunter, he would have quietly shot an arrow to kill the boar instead of alerting it and giving it a chance to run away. But the king was so over-confident of his strength and powers that he forgot to follow rules. He forgot, for instance, that he is not in a battle-field facing a warrior whom he must challenge first before launching his attack as is the proper rule for a duel. A wild animal who is about to be shot dead won't wait for an arrow before fleeing from the spot for its dear life.]

चौ०. आवत देखि अधिक रव बाजी । चलेउ बराह मरुत गति भाजी ॥ १ ॥

तुरत कीन्ह नृप सर संधाना । महि मिलि गयउ बिलोकत बाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāṭī.

āvata dēkhi adhika rava bājī. calē'u barāha maruta gati bhājī. 1.

turata kīnha nṛpa sara sandhānā. mahi mili gaya'u bilōkata bānā. 2.

When the wild boar saw the king's horse approach rapidly, he fled with the swiftness of wind. (1)

The king immediately mounted an arrow and shot it at the boar, but the latter, as soon as he observed the king aiming the arrow, stopped dead on its track and crouched low on the ground to hide himself in the surrounding undergrowth, thickets and wild grass that grew in abundance in the dense forest. (2)

तकि तकि तीर महीस चलावा । करि छल सुअर सरीर बचावा ॥ ३ ॥

प्रगटत दुरत जाइ मृग भागा । रिस बस भूप चलेउ सँग लागा ॥ ४ ॥

taki taki tīra mahīsa calāvā. kari chala su'ara sarīra bacāvā. 3.

pragaṭata durata jā'i mṛga bhāgā. risa basa bhūpa calē'u saṁga lāgā. 4.

The king took repeated aims and shot many arrows, but the clever boar dodged him each time by different maneuverings¹. (3)

The boar repeatedly hid and reappeared as if to tease the king, who was so peeved and embarrassed at this apparent humiliation and virtual defeat that he kept on his hot pursuit of the boar angrily, and deciding not to give up he went very far and deep in the dense forest (without taking precautions about his own safety and calling for support from others in the royal entourage that had accompanied him)². (4)

[Note—¹Thus the boar escaped the arrow and getting killed. We have read earlier that the boar was of a gigantic size and the king was moving at a great speed on his steed. Since the target was large, the king had aimed the arrow in its general direction. Besides this, he was astride a galloping horse, and to shoot an arrow the two hands must be free—one to hold the bow and the other to aim the arrow. It obviously means that the king had to let go of the rein of the horse while it was in swift motion in order to hold the bow, take aim and shoot the arrow. He was confident that the arrow will hit the bull's eye as the target was so huge, and so he must have aimed higher than is usual for a hunter aiming his arrow at an ordinary game.

But this game outwitted the hunter, for it immediately crouched and lay low on the ground in self-defence even as the arrow whizzed past it. Since the king's horse was moving at great speed, it overshot the boar. And by the time the king gathered his wits to look around and search for his prey, the latter rose and quickly vanished in the surrounding thickets in the dense forest.

²The king was ashamed of himself at his failure to hunt down a single boar, and thinking what others would say of him if he called out for support and help, he decided to take a great risk and so continued to pursue his game alone.]

गयउ दूरि घन गहन बराहू । जहँ नाहिन गज बाजि निबाहू ॥ ५ ॥
अति अकेल बन बिपुल कलेसू । तदपि न मृग मग तजइ नरेसू ॥ ६ ॥

gaya'u dūri ghana gahana barāhū. jaham̃ nāhina gaja bāji nibāhū. 5.
ati akēla bana bipula kalēsū. tadapi na mṛga maga taja'i narēsū. 6.

By-and-by, the wild boar went deep into the thickest part of the dense forest where horses and elephants could not have any access (because this part of the forest was extremely dense and thick with wild undergrowth, thick trees, entangled creepers and tall wild grass). (5)

Though the king was all alone and frustrated, still he did not abandon his game to return back to his companions¹. (6)

[Note—¹Obviously, as has been noted earlier, he felt ashamed at his failure to hunt down a single boar, and what others would say of him when they found out that he returned empty-handed. This prospect was preposterous and intolerable for him. So he continued with his pursuit.]

कोल बिलोकि भूप बड़ धीरा । भागि पैठ गिरिगुहाँ गभीरा ॥ ७ ॥ अगम देखि नृप अति पछिताई । फिरेउ महाबन परेउ भुलाई ॥ ८ ॥ kōla bilōki bhūpa baṛa dhīrā. bhāgi paiṭha giriguhām̃ gabhīrā.

agama dēkhi nṛpa ati pachitā'ī. phirē'u mahābana parē'u bhulā'ī. 4.

When the boar discovered that the king was very resolute and would not give up his pursuit, he fled and hid himself swiftly in a dark and deep cave on the side of a great mountain. (7)

The king found to his utter dismay that he would not be able to enter that cave. Disgusted and frustrated, he at last turned back. But by this time he had gone so far deep in that foreboding forest that he lost his way in its dark and un-chartered environ. (8)

दो०. खेद खिन्न छुद्धित तृषित राजा बाजि समेत । खोजत ब्याकुल सरित सर जल बिनु भयउ अचेत ॥ १५७ ॥

dōhā.

khēda khinna chud'dhita tṛṣita rājā bāji samēta.
khōjata byākula sarita sara jala binu bhaya'u acēta. 157.

Overcome with dismay, frustration and humiliation, the distraught king was very thirsty and hungry. He held his tired and thirsty horse dejectedly, and roamed about in the forest searching for some water-body such as a pond or a stream to quench his and the horse's thirst and refresh themselves somewhat.

For want of water, the two, the king and the horse, were very agitated and almost on the edge of fainting. (Doha no. 157)

चौ०. फिरत बिपिन आश्रम एक देखा । तहँ बस नृपति कपट मुनिबेष्टा ॥ १ ॥

जासु देस नृप लीन्ह छड़ाई । समर सेन तजि गयउ पराई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

phirata bipina āśrama ēka dēkhā. taham̃ basa nṛpati kapaṭa munibēṣā. 1.

jāsu dēsa nṛpa līnha chaṛāī. samara sēna taji gaya'u parāī. 2.

While so wandering in the forest, the king sighted a hermitage. In it lived a king disguised as a hermit. (1)

This king had been defeated by Pratapbhanu some time in the past, and his kingdom was conquered and subjugated by the victorious Pratapbhanu who failed to lay his hands on the defeated king as he managed to escape after abandoning his army and his subjects. But the vanquished king, who escaped from thus being captured, retreated to the forest to hide there in the form of a hermit, bidding for time to seek his revenge upon his enemy Pratapbhanu if a favourable opportunity presented itself by providence some time later on. (2)

समय प्रतापभानु कर जानी । आपन अति असमय अनुमानी ॥ ३ ॥

गयउ न गृह मन बहुत गलानी । मिला न राजहि नृप अभिमानी ॥ ४ ॥

samaya pratāpabhānu kara jānī. āpana ati asamaya anumānī. 3.

gaya'u na gṛha mana bahuta galānī. milā na rājahi nṛpa abhimānī. 4.

This defeated king was full of grief and remorse, and thought that the while the time was bad and unfavourable for him it was good and favourable for Pratapbhanu (and so it was useless to resist then). (3)

Thus overcome with shame, regret and humiliation, he did not (or refused to) return to his palace, and abandoned the kingdom. He was too proud to surrender himself before the victorious king (Pratapbhanu) and make a treaty of peace with him¹. (4)

[Note—¹As destiny would have it, it was this same king whom Pratapbhanu met in the forest, disguised as a hermit! Frankly speaking and to do justice to the vanquished king, no great self-respecting warrior would like to surrender his dignity and self-esteem by kneeling before his vanquisher, especially if he is attacked by someone without any provocation just because his opponent wishes to conquer the whole world by the might of his arm and make everyone bow before his ego as Pratapbhanu had wished.

So this king swallowed a bitter pill that was forced down his throat. Naturally he was filled with vengeance and hatred for Pratapbhanu.

We see in history that the higher one rises the more his ego becomes inflated, and the more he thinks that he is the chosen one, as the case of Pratapbhanu clearly depicts. Such a person becomes cocooned in his own world of grandiose self-belief, thinking that he is the greatest of them all. He gradually becomes a tyrant, a dictator and a hypocrite, someone who gets distanced from reality, someone who loses the virtues of humbleness and simplicity, and someone who has no friends but enemies all around him.

Pratapbhanu had risen to such great heights of unbridled power and authority that unwittingly he had surrounded himself with jealous enemies who were all bidding their times to settle scores with him but of whom he was not aware because they all wore a cloak of submission and loyalty to him while hating him from within.]

रिस उर मारि रंक जिमि राजा । बिपिन बसइ तापस कें साजा ॥ ५ ॥
तासु समीप गवन नृप कीन्हा । यह प्रतापरबि तेहिं तब चीन्हा ॥ ६ ॥ risa ura māri raṅka jimi rājā. bipina basa'i tāpasa kēm sājā. 5.

tāsu samīpa gavana nrpa kīnhā. yaha pratāparabi tēhiṁ taba cīnhā. 6.

Hence, the defeated king suppressed his anger and went to the forest like a poor man who is insulted, robbed of his rightful possessions and thrown out by someone who is rich and powerful, against whom this poor fellow is powerless to seek revenge. In the forest, this king hid himself in the disguise of a hermit. (5)

It was this king that Pratapbhanu approached when he sighted the hermitage in the thick forest. As soon as the king, who was disguised as a hermit, saw Pratapbhanu, he immediately recognized him (as his arch-enemy, the person who had usurped his kingdom and thrown him to such misery and humiliation). (6)

राउ तृषित नहिं सो पहिचाना । देखि सुबेष महामुनि जाना ॥ ७ ॥ उतरि तुरग तें कीन्ह प्रनामा । परम चतुर न कहेउ निज नामा ॥ ८ ॥ rā'u tr̥ṣita nahim̄ sō pahicānā. dēkhi subēṣa mahāmuni jānā.

utari turaga tēm̄ kīnha pranāmā. parama catura na kahē'u nija nāmā. 4.

The king (Pratapbhanu) was very agitated and weary with thirst, and so he could not recognize who that hermit actually was. Hence when he saw the holy external appearance and attire of a hermit, he mistook the person living in the hermitage to be some great sage. (7)

He alighted from his horse and bowed reverentially to the (fake) hermit, but he took the precaution of not disclosing his name and who he was. (8)

[Note—The king's enemy who was disguised as a hermit immediately knew that the stranger was king Pratapbhanu, but the latter could not recognize who that hermit actually was. The reason is that Pratapbhanu was weary with thirst and emotionally exhausted so much that his mind did not function properly. Another reason is that the defeated king had disguised himself so perfectly that it was difficult to know his true identity. And third, during the course of his career of battles and wars and conquests, he had vanquished so many kings that it was not possible for him to keep track of each and every one whom he conquered and captured, and those who escaped.

What to talk of Pratapbhanu, even Lord Ram's great messenger Hanuman was misled by a demon named Kaalnemi who was sent by Ravana to capture and kill Hanuman while he was on his way to bring the herb to revive Laxman, the brother of Lord Ram, who lay wounded in the battle-field of Lanka during the epic war. We shall read about it in due course. Kaalnemi had also disguised himself as a hermit and created a nice magical hermitage with a pond of water. Hanuman too was thirsty, and when he saw that pond he went there to refresh himself. Hanuman also could not recognize the demon, and thought that he was some sage. But a demoness who was assigned the task to kill Hanuman went and hid as a crocodile in that pond. As soon as Hanuman went in the water, she caught hold of him, but was immediately slayed by the Lord's messenger. She disclosed Kaalnemi's truth and soon Hanuman slayed him.

This story is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 56—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 58.]

दो०. भूपति तृषित बिलोकि तेहिं सरबरु दीन्ह देखाइ । मज्जन पान समेत हय कीन्ह नृपति हरषाइ ॥ १५८ ॥

dōhā.

bhūpati tṛṣita bilōki tēhiṃ sarabaru dīnha dēkhā'i.
majjana pāna samēta haya kīnha nṛpati haraṣā'i. 158.

This false hermit observed that the king (Partapbhanu) was overcome with thirst, so he showed him the pond of water.

The king cheerfully took a bath and drank water himself, and also refreshed his horse likewise. Then he felt rejuvenated and energized once again. (Doha no. 158)

[Note—Obviously, Pratapbhanu felt obliged and was much grateful to this hermit. And in his elation he lost his usual discretion and caution. He felt that this is a true and helpful hermit who has virtually saved his and his horse's lives as if he was god-sent. The cunning hermit's demeanours and attires were so perfect that he gave no occasion for suspicion.

The pretentious hermit saw that Pratapbhanu was armed as he come a-hunting, while he himself was completely unarmed as a hermit ought to be. Besides it, he saw that a great chance has knocked at this door to settle old scores with his arch-enemy who has landed himself at his doorstep as if he was sent by providence.

So he concluded that if he played his cards carefully and with wisdom then he could fulfil his long-cherished wish to square up with Pratapbhanu. On the other hand, if he made one wrong move and Pratapbhanu could find out who that hermit actually was, he would be killed by well-armed king instantly. So the cunning hermit played his game to perfection and with care.]

चौ०. गै श्रम सकल सुखी नृप भयऊ । निज आश्रम तापस लै गयऊ ॥ १ ॥
आसन दीन्ह अस्त रबि जानी । पुनि तापस बोलेउ मृदु बानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

gai śrama sakala sukhī nr̥pa bhaya'ū. nija āśrama tāpasa lai gaya'ū. 1.
āsana dīnha asta rabi jānī. puni tāpasa bōlē'u mṛdu bānī. 2.

When the guest king (Pratapbhanu) was fully refreshed and felt rejuvenated, he became cheerful. Then the hermit took him back to his hermitage.¹ (1)

Observing that the time for the sun to set had arrived, the hermit gave the king a seat to sit down and relax. Then he addressed the king with polite words. (2)

[Note—¹This shows that the water-body was a little way off the hermitage. The false hermit accompanied Pratapbhanu to ensure that the latter did not go away after taking a bath, drinking water and refreshing himself. Because he rightly concluded that if he would be present at the site then the great king would be obliged to thank him and observe some basic courtesy by asking his leave, at which point the hermit would encourage him to come with him to his hermitage and take some rest before proceeding ahead with his journey.

Since it was almost night time, it would be easy to persuade the king to spend the night there in the safety of the hermitage because the forest was full of danger if one ventured into it during the darkness of the night. And if the things went the way the deceitful hermit planned quickly in his head, he would see to it that Pratapbhanu is ruined.

²The unsuspecting king agreed to stay overnight because he too did not wish to go forth through a forest with which he was not acquainted. And the treacherous hermit hit the dagger hard and sunk it till its hilt! He of course had to be polite if he wanted to trap the king into talking. Otherwise, the king could say he was tired and excuse himself to go and take rest.

So, as the king was already grateful to this hermit, he readily agreed to sit down and have a little chat with him when offered a seat and the hermit expressed a desire for some light talk.]

को तुम्ह कस बन फिरहु अकेलें । सुंदर जुबा जीव परहेलें ॥ ३ ॥
चक्रबर्ति के लच्छन तोरें । देखत दया लागि अति मोरें ॥ ४ ॥

kō tumha kasa bana phirahu akēlēm. sundara jubā jīva parahēlēm. 3.
cakrabarti kē lacchana tōrēm. dēkhata dayā lāgi ati mōrēm. 4.

The hermit enquired politely, 'Say, who are you and why are you wandering alone in this wild forest? You are handsome and young, so why do you risk your precious life by venturing alone in this fierce wilderness?' (3)

I feel great pity for you because I see in you signs of a great emperor who rules over all the directions of the earth like it were a great circle of his dominion (cakrabarti)'.
(4)

नाम प्रतापभानु अवनीसा । तासु सचिव मैं सुनहु मुनीसा ॥ ५ ॥
फिरत अहेरें परेउँ भुलाई । बड़ें भाग देखेउँ पद आई ॥ ६ ॥ nāma pratāpabhānu avanīsā. tāsu saciva mairṁ sunahu munīsā. 5.

phirata ahērēm̐ parē'um̐ bhulā'ī. baṛēm̐ bhāga dēkhē'um̐ pada ā'ī. 6.

The king replied with caution, saying, 'Listen oh sage! There is a great king named Pratapbhanu, and I am his minister'¹. (4)

I was hunting and pursuing a game when I lost my way. It is due to good fortune that I came here and saw your holy feet. (6)

[Note—¹The king tried to be extra careful here. He was aware that he is renowned for being truthful, but here the situation demanded that he cannot speak the truth for fear of disclosing his identity to a stranger. So he devised a device by saying half-truth, that he was a minister with king Pratapbhanu. In a way he gave a hint to the stranger that if a king's minister is so great that he has signs and an air of a great ruler who rules over all the directions of the earth, then one can imagine the glory and majesty of the king under whom this minister works.

Refer Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 158 herein above where we read that at the time the king first met the hermit he had not disclosed his name then also. The reason is that wisdom and discretion dictates that a king should keep his identity secret in an alien land for he can't be sure whether he is amongst friends or foes.]

हम कहँ दुर्लभ दरस तुम्हारा । जानत हौं कछु भल होनिहारा ॥ ७ ॥
कह मुनि तात भयउ अँधिआरा । जोजन सतरि नगरु तुम्हारा ॥ ८ ॥ hama kham̐ durlabha darasa tumhārā. jānata hauṁ kachu bhala hōnihārā. 7.

kaha muni tāta bhaya'u am̐dhi'ārā. jōjana sanāri nagaru tumhārā. 8.

It is rare for ordinary mortals like us to have a sight of sages and their holy feet. So I think that some great is in store for me and some good tidings are coming my way.'
(7)

The hermit replied, 'My dear, it is dark already now, and your capital city is at a distance of seventy yojans (roughly five hundred and sixty miles) from here'¹. (8)

[Note—¹The cunning hermit smiled on the sly at his good fortune and thought to himself—“Well, well; it seems that the king is about to fall in my net, if only I could manoeuvre things a little more to my liking.”

¹ Yojan = roughly 80 miles.]

दो०. निसा घोर गंभीर बन पंथ न सुनहु सुजान ।

बसहु आजु अस जानि तुम्ह जाएहु होत बिहान ॥ १५९ (क) ॥

dōhā.

nisā ghōra gambhīra bana pantha na sunahu sujāna.
basahu āju asa jāni tumha jā'ēhu hōta bihāna. 159 (a).

Listen oh gentleman (sujāna)! The night is pitch dark, and the fearsome forest is thick and deep. There is no proper track through it (which you can take back to your city).

So therefore, keeping this in mind, it would be wise for you to stay here overnight and go your way at dawn.' (Doha no. 159-a)

तुलसी जसि भवतव्यता तैसी मिलइ सहाइ ।

आपुनु आवइ ताहि पहिं ताहि तहाँ लै जाइ ॥ १५९ (ख) ॥ tulasī jasi bhavatabyatā taisī mila'i sahā'i.

āpunu āva'i tāhi pahim̃ tāhi tahām̃lai jā'i. 159 (b).

Tulsidas (the learned poet-saint who composed this classic tale called Ram Charit Manas) observes in a solemn way that whatever is destined by destiny and is inevitable in one's fate is invariably preceded by circumstances and developments that lead up to the main chain of events. Either such circumstances or developments come to visit at the doorstep of a person who is to face some fiat of providence, or he is himself pulled along involuntarily towards those circumstances and developments that would lead to situations that would be in sync with his destiny. (Doha no. 159-b)

[Note—Put simply it means that what is destined to happen would happen, and no one can change it. There are certain developments in everyone's life which support this conclusion, when no matter how hard one tries and devises things his way they would always go against his wishes and what he had hoped for. In the same way, some unexpected developments occur of which one has no inkling, but they pull him out of some intractable situation which seemed to him almost hopeless a moment ago.

In the present case, Pratapbhanu's destiny brought him face to face with a person whom he had vanquished himself some time ago, but unfortunately he could not recognize him. Though no power on earth could stand the might of Pratapbhanu if all such powers united against him in battle, a lone, poor and unarmed erstwhile king who has been disenfranchised from his kingdom and power by Pratapbhanu who had trounced him would prove one day to be his nemesis and vanquisher without even a fight.

A king who would have knelt before Pratapbhanu in the battle-field praying for mercy, now has the latter bowing before him in gratitude for saving his life by providing him water to drink!

A king whose ruin was caused at the hands of Pratapbhanu now became the cause of ruin of Pratapbhanu himself—and that too without a fight. And the greatest irony is that the prey (Pratapbhanu) came to be killed voluntarily by him (the defeated king now disguised as a hermit) who he had earlier wished to destroy in battle.

This Doha essentially says that “destiny, fate and providence are very powerful forces in a person’s life, and whatever is to happen will surely happen in one’s life no matter how hard one tries to change or avoid it”.]

चौ०. भलेहिं नाथ आयसु धरि सीसा । बाँधि तुरग तरु बैठ महीसा ॥ १ ॥

नृप बहु भाँति प्रसंसेउ ताही । चरन बंदि निज भाग्य सराही ॥ २ ॥ ॥

caupāī.

bhalēhiṃ nātha āyasu dhari sīsā. bāṃdhi turaga taru baiṭha mahīsā. 1.
nṛpa bahu bhāṃṭi prasansē'u tāhī. carana bandi nija bhāgya sarāhī. 2.

Accepting the offer of the hermit gladly, the king said, ‘Alright oh Lord’, and went to tie the horse to a tree. Then he came back and sat down before the hermit¹. (1)

The king praised the hermit a lot, bowed at his feet, and congratulated himself (at finding a friendly person in the midst of a hopeless situation)². (2)

[Note—¹This shows that till now the king had been standing with his horse, but now that he has to spend the night in the hermitage he tied the horse to a tree and came to sit down comfortably.

²The king was all praises for this hermit because he felt that the latter was a nice person: first the hermit had shown him water, even accompanied to the pond for the sake of courteousness, and now he has requested the king to spend the night at the hermitage because it was already dark and night had come, the path back to his city was long, and it passed through a dense and hostile forest. The king already had an experience of the sort of wild forest he would have to cross because it was in this forest that he had lost his way. So when offered the chance of staying overnight, he gladly accepted it as god-sent.

In the situation in which the king found himself currently, any other person in his place too would have felt obliged to the hermit who played the role of a perfect host who was most courteous and hospitable.]

पुनि बोलेउ मृदु गिरा सुहाई । जानि पिता प्रभु करउँ ढिठाई ॥ ३ ॥

मोहि मुनीस सुत सेवक जानी । नाथ नाम निज कहहु बखानी ॥ ४ ॥

puni bōlē'u mṛdu girā suhāī. jāni pitā prabhu kara'um̃ dhiṭhāī. 3.

mōhi munīsa suta sēvaka jānī. nātha nāma nija kahahu bakhānī. 4.

After he was comfortably seated and felt thankful to the hermit for the hospitality offered by him, the king said most politely, using sweetness in his voice, ‘Oh Lord! I regard you as my father¹, and so I am venturing to speak to you out of turn. [To wit, even though you have not asked me to say anything, nevertheless I feel sufficiently free to talk to you as a son would to his father, for there is no formality between the two of them.] (3)

Oh sage, you too should regard me as your son and follower, and so please be kind to tell me your name (so that I may become aware about who you are)². (4)

[Note—¹The king wished to show his respect to the hermit and express his thanks to him. He calls the latter his ‘father’ because a hermit and a sage are no less respectable than a father for a man. Besides this, the hermit had saved his life by showing him water and asking him no to venture into the wild forest in the night as it would be too dangerous for his security.

While addressing the king earlier in Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 159, the hermit had used the affectionate word ‘tāta’ for the king, which means “oh dear”, a term that is usually used in classical texts for someone who is very dear, such as a son. So the king reciprocated this gesture by addressing the hermit as his father.

There is another point here. The king was in the company of a stranger with whom he had to pass the night. So he thought it wise to create some kind of close bond, even if it was superficial or artificial, with his host so that the latter’s conscience would stop him from doing any mischief while the king was unarmed and asleep.

²Earlier the hermit too had asked the king who he was in Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 159, so the king decided that there was no harm in asking the hermit his name. This was also done to start a conversation, and to keep busy and pass time. It would also help the king to reward the hermit after he returned to his capital the next day.]

तेहि न जान नृप नृपहि सो जाना । भूप सुहृद सो कपट सयाना ॥ ५ ॥
बैरी पुनि छत्री पुनि राजा । छल बल कीन्ह चहइ निज काजा ॥ ६ ॥ tēhi na jāna nṛpa nṛpahi sō jānā. bhūpa suhṛda sō kapaṭa sayānā. 5.

bairī puni chatrī puni rājā. chala bala kīnha caha'i nija kājā. 6.

The king could not recognize who the hermit was, but the latter had immediately known who his guest actually was as soon as he saw the king¹.

The king was simple-hearted and had no deceit in him, but the hermit was a cunning fraud who was skilled in conceit and pretensions. (5)

In the first instance the hermit was an enemy, and then he was a Kshatriya by race (i.e. a warrior), and to top it all he was an erstwhile king who was defeated and his kingdom usurped. So (since he was seething with anger) he wished to accomplish his task (of seeking revenge) by hook or by crook². (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1 and 6-7 that precede Doha no. 158.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 158.

There are three things mentioned here which went squarely against Pratapbhanu—viz. (i) the hermit being a king who was defeated by Pratapbhanu, and whose kingdom was conquered and subjugated by him, (ii) the hermit being a warrior by birth, and for such a person the greatest humiliation in life is defeat and being forced to run away from the battle-field, and (iii) the hermit being the guest's arch enemy. All these three factors went against Pratapbhanu.

This situation was made worse and exacerbated because the king could not recognize his enemy so that he could have been alert and taken due precautions. The cunning hermit played his cards well and expertly by being most polite and courteous so that no suspicion was raised in the mind of the king. And he mightily succeeded in his game-plan because the king actually failed to recognize his enemy and fell right into the trap laid out for him by his sworn enemy!

The hermit had been waiting for such an opportunity for a long time when he could extract his revenge upon his enemy Pratapbhanu, and now this opportunity came knocking at his door. As the hermit had been a king himself before he was defeated by Pratapbhanu and had to escape and hide in the forest, he knew the tricks of the trade well, and so he knew how to trap an enemy without harming his own interests and extract whatever he wanted from the latter.

So we see the irony of fate here and the truth of what has been said as a maxim in Doha no. 159-b herein above that “destiny, fate and providence are very powerful forces in a person's life, and whatever is to happen will surely happen in one's life no matter how hard one tries to change or avoid it”.]

समुझि राजसुख दुखित अराती । अवाँ अनल इव सुलगइ छाती ॥ ७ ॥
सरल बचन नृप के सुनि काना । बयर सँभारि हृदयँ हरषाना ॥ ८ ॥ samujhi rājasukha dukhita arātī. avāṃ' anala iva sulaga'i chātī. 7.

sarala bacana nṛpa kē suni kānā. bayara sambhāri hṛdayaṃ haraṣānā. 8.

The disenfranchised and disinherited king (i.e. the hermit) had remembered the pleasures and comforts of royalty which had been snatched away from him. So he was burning with a fire of hatred and vengeance for the person (i.e. Pratapbhanu) who had robbed him of such privileges. (7)

Hearing with his ears the king's unsuspecting and polite words, he (i.e. the cunning hermit) felt very happy and reassured in his heart (that now finally he would achieve his objective and square up with his arch enemy). (8)

दो०. कपट बोरि बानी मृदुल बोलेउ जुगुति समेत । नाम हमार भिखारि अब निर्धन रहित निकेत ॥ १६० ॥
dōhā.

kapaṭa bōri bānī mṛdula bōlē'u juguti samēta.
nāma hamāra bhikhāri aba nirdhana rahita nikēta. 160.

The pretentious hermit spoke artfully words that were polite on their face but ambiguous and full of deceit. He said, 'My name now is a 'beggar', because I am poor and without a home of my own.¹' (Doha no. 160)

[Note—¹The king ought to have taken note of these words, but he failed. A true hermit would never refer to himself as a 'beggar (bhikhāri)' to hint at his hidden regret of having left the pleasures and wealth of a household. A hermit is expected to be happy and cheerful in his chosen way of life of renunciation and meditation. This should have rung alarm bells for Pratapbhanu, but as destiny had wished his fall he overlooked the obvious, so deluded his mind was.

Perhaps the king missed the obvious because he thought that the hermit was being truthful as indeed he had no wealth at present. But at the same time, he concluded, that prior to becoming a hermit he was a rich man—as hinted by the hermit saying that 'now I am a beggar' with no home and riches. That means he had them previously.

The hermit knew how a king thinks and treats others. If the other person is of a noble and rich bearing and heritage, a king would treat him with respect; otherwise he pays little or no attention to him. For the hermit to succeed in his game-plan, it was absolutely necessary for him to gain Pratapbhanu's full attention and confidence. He decided that the chances of Pratapbhanu paying more heed to what he says and accept his advice would be high if the king thought that this hermit was of a noble upbringing but had left all his wealth due to his spiritual urges. This is why it is said here that the hermit "spoke artfully" words that had dual meaning—it was first to test how alert his victim was, and then to inspire so much confidence in him that he would not question the hermit's integrity when he actually began implementing his nefarious design to wreak revenge upon the unsuspecting king.]

चौ०. कह नृप जे बिग्यान निधाना । तुम्ह सारिखे गलित अभिमाना ॥ १ ॥
सदा रहहिं अपनपौ दुराँ । सब बिधि कुसल कुबेष बनाँ ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kaha nṛpa jē bigyāna nidhānā. tumha sārīkhē galita abhimānā. 1.
sadā rahahim̐ apanapau durā'ēm̐. saba bidhi kusala kubēṣa banā'ēm̐. 2.

The king (Pratapbhanu) replied, 'Those who are intelligent and repositories of wisdom and prudence, as well as free from pride and ego like you [1], always keep the reality about themselves and their glory secret and hidden from others like you have done, for they feel that it is always better to remain incognito and conceal their proficiency and knowledge by remaining in tattered clothes (so that no one pays attention to them and leaves them alone in peace) [2]. (1-2)

[Note—We observe that the king was also speaking in a language that conveyed a double meaning—for what he said might be a genuine praise of a wise and enlightened sage or hermit who wish to remain anonymous so that no one comes to disturb him to seek favours, and at the same time it may mean that the king praised the hermit in sarcasm to indicate that he has indeed recognized who this hermit actually was but was being courteous as the latter had extended warm hospitality to the former.

From what we shall be reading in a moment now, the former case is true—for the king had praised the hermit with a genuine spirit of respect for him and a belief that he was fortunate to have met a nice hermit in the wild forest who came to his rescue when he was lost and would have faced a grave situation during the night in a dangerous place full of wild beasts.

The king's overwhelming sense of gratitude and relief at having found some humble and an apparently holy man was so great that it eclipsed his own wisdom and disarmed him of his usual sense of precaution and prudence. The king fell for the holy attire of the fraudster.

A message that is conveyed by this story is that one should never let down one's guard and take anyone at face value, for more often than not appearances are very misleading.

A true hermit or ascetic would indeed like to live anonymously. Though he may have mystical powers and may be very wise and learned, yet he wishes to be left alone so that he can pursue his spiritual goals. He does not want to be disturbed and mobbed by favour seekers who would flock to him for their worldly desires to be fulfilled if the word leaked out that a particular sage or hermit or ascetic can alleviate their troubles by his spiritual powers. No one in his right senses would normally like to be associated with a beggar in tattered clothes, and so a wise hermit would dress himself accordingly in rags to avoid worldly company.

Besides this, a hermit is expected to be free from pride and ego; he is not supposed to go boasting about his past achievements or present spiritual prowess. So the king said that he respected the hermit for his humbleness and lack of pride in spite of being full of wisdom and abilities. It is not easy to live and survive alone in the middle of the wilderness, surrounded by an uninhabitable forest full of wild beasts, away from civilization and all possible human contact. So a hermit or an ascetic who manages to do so successfully obviously must have some exceptional powers that other men do not possess. Hence, when the king saw the circumstances in which this hermit lived in the middle of a wild forest he was naturally overcome with awe and determined that this was a truly holy man who deserved his praise.]

तेहि तें कहहिं संत श्रुति टेरें । परम अकिंचन प्रिय हरि केरें ॥ ३ ॥

तुम्ह सम अधन भिखारि अगेहा । होत बिरांची सिवहि संदेहा ॥ ४ ॥

tēhi tēm kahahim santa śruti ṭērēm. parama akiñcana priya hari kērēm. 3.
tumha sama adhana bhikhāri agēhā. hōta birāñci sivahi sandēhā. 4.

Verily indeed it is asserted by the Vedas and great saints that those who are simple and unpretentious, who have no worldly assets and attachments are dear to the Lord God¹. (3)

When the Creator (birāñci) and Lord Shiva see someone who is as penniless and homeless as you are, even they begin to doubt about the actual powers and abilities of such a person. [This being the case, how can I know who you actually are or about your spiritual powers and achievements when even the two senior Gods of the Trinity, i.e. the creator Brahma and the concluder Shiva fail to know in depth about the exalted state of persons like you.]² (4)

[Note—¹To wit, the Lord loves those who are attached and devoted to none except the Lord himself, those for whom the Lord is the only wealth, only kin and only support. The Lord does not like a hermit or an ascetic who goes around boasting about his spiritual status. He likes the humble and the meek. The same idea is expressed in the New Testament of the Holy Bible, St. Matthew, 5/3-8; and Galatians, 5/23.

It has been said in the Upanishads and other scriptures that a Sanyasi, i.e. a person who has renounced the world and taken the vows of renunciation ought not to lust for worldly name and wealth any longer. It is because worldly contact creates a disturbance for the hermit's or ascetic's mind and creates a hindrance in his spiritual pursuit. This is also the reason given by this hermit in Doha no. 161 herein below.

²The king is being clever in this instance: he wishes to hide his inability to recognize the fraudulent hermit by saying that it is necessary as well as a convention to show respect to a person who is attired in a holy garb, no matter who actually he is.

The king is being wise and cautious here also, and a bit sarcastic. He defends his inability to recognize the real identity of the hermit because of his holy garb which has such a powerful influence upon the mind of the beholder who is usually trained and accustomed to show the greatest of respect to this attire as well as the person who wears it. This is because the attire of a hermit or an ascetic is universally respected by one and all, and even the great Gods such as Brahma and Shiva pay their homage to a person who is attired like a hermit and an ascetic.

So therefore, the king says that he is paying homage to this 'attire of a hermit' without going into further details about the person himself because he who dons a holy garb is to be shown due respect, especially when he exhibits other glorious traits of humbleness, simplicity, lack of pride and desire for worldly riches as asserted by Vedas and great saints, and as exhibited by his host in the present instance.

Earlier we have read that the king calls this cunning hermit his 'father-like' in Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 160. And now he praises the cunning hermit by comparing him with some great sage who is attired in a holy garb and is extremely humble and wise. So once again the king takes a precaution not to arouse any suspicion in the mind of a stranger in whose company he has to spend the night in a forest. He does not want that the hermit, in case he is some scoundrel, get a hint that the king doubts his integrity because that would be very dangerous for the king's own security. But at the same time, by saying that even great Gods do not know the reality of someone who is in a holy garb such as that of a hermit or an ascetic, the king gives a subtle hint that he is not fully convinced of the truth about his host!

The next verse clearly implies that the king is not fully convinced about the authenticity of the hermit, but he still shows respect to him because of his attire of a hermit which is respectable and makes its wearer an object of respect.]

जोसि सोसि तव चरन नमामी । मो पर कृपा करिअ अब स्वामी ॥ ५ ॥

सहज प्रीति भूपति कै देखी । आपु बिषय बिस्वास बिसेषी ॥ ६ ॥

jōsi sōsi tava carana namāmī. mō para kṛpā kari'a aba svāmī. 5.
sahaja prīti bhūpati kai dēkhī. āpu biṣaya bisvāsa bisēṣī. 6.

Whoever you are, I still bow at your feet and pay my respects to you. Now, oh lord, be kind upon me and bless me by your grace¹. (5)

The hermit observed that the king had indeed been unable to recognize him, and instead has developed great faith, respect and affection for him. [To wit, instead of being suspicious of the hermit, the king developed great affection for his cunning host, and became totally submissive to him.]

So the hermit was now confident that he would be able to carry out his plans as he had wished². (6)

[Note—¹The king urges the hermit to spare him because he is bowing at his feet as a token of surrender. The king thought that in case this stranger hermit had some sense of conscience and humanity in him, then no matter who he is he will be bound by guilt if he does any harm to someone who has surrendered unconditionally before him. Well, this principle applies under normal conditions to someone who is noble in heart, naturally merciful by disposition, of high thinking and exemplary scruples, but not to someone who is burning with the fire of revenge.

Here the hermit is burning with a desire for vengeance, and so whatever scruples and morality he may have in his conscience were reduced to ashes in the raging fire of retribution.

²And what was the hermit's plan and wish? It was to settle old scores with king Pratapbhanu and ruin him. Now that he was successful in gaining the full confidence of the king, the hermit prepared for his next move. He wanted to drive the dagger home till its hilt. To wit, he decided that if he took revenge just now he would be able to easily kill the king who was alone, but it would far better if he maneuvered things in such a way that the entire family of the king is ruined for generations to come. So he did not hurry with plunging the dagger right then and there!]

सब प्रकार राजहि अपनाई । बोलेउ अधिक सनेह जनाई ॥ ७ ॥

सुनु सतिभाउ कहउँ महिपाला । इहाँ बसत बीते बहु काला ॥ ८ ॥

saba prakāra rājahi apanā'ī. bōlē'u adhika sanēha janā'ī. 7.
sunu satibhā'u kaha'um' mahipālā. ihām' basata bītē bahu kālā. 8.

Hence, the hermit played the next move of his game by showing greater affection to the (unfortunate and unaware) king with the aim of winning him over completely and acquiring his full confidence without a trace of doubt¹. (7)

So he said, 'Listen oh great king²! I am telling you all that is the truth. A lot of time has passed while I have lived here. (8)

[Note—¹The false-hermit was by this time convinced that he has succeeded in his plan to deceive the king and get his confidence. The king treated him with great respect just like a great king would treat a hermit who comes visiting his court. The king was not only full of praise for the hermit but also bowed before him, called him a 'fatherly' figure, and now seeks his 'blessings'.

²We have read earlier that the king had never told who he actually was. In Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 159 the king had told the hermit that he was a 'chief minister' of king Pratapbhanu. So now when the hermit addressed him as 'the king', he was more convinced of the hermit's mystical powers which enabled him to know the truth of who his guest was!

This simple ploy of the hermit pulled the innocent king nearer to the trap that was being spread out for him for now he was sure that this hermit was no ordinary man but one who has transcendental powers.]

दो०. अब लगि मोहि न मिलेउ कोउ में न जनावउँ काहु । लोकमान्यता अनल सम कर तप कानन दाहु ॥ १६१ (क) ॥

dōhā.

aba lagi mōhi na milē'u kō'u mair̥m na janāva'um̥ kāhu.
lōkamān'yatā anala sama kara tapa kānana dāhu. 161 (a).

[The hermit continued—] 'No one has met me till now (for I live far away from populated areas, in a remote and secluded part of the forest), and neither do I (prefer to) reveal my identity to anyone. I prefer anonymity because worldly recognition and honour are like a fire that destroys the symbolic forest of Tapa (spiritual benefits gained by practicing austerity and penance).¹ [To wit, a true hermit and ascetic are expected to avoid company with others and lead a life in obscurity and serenity so that he can pursue his spiritual objectives without any interference.] (Doha no. 161-a)

[Note—¹The cunning hermit wishes to keep the king engaged in conversation and gain more access to his confidence so that he would tie the noose more tightly. He knew that king Pratapbhanu was extremely ambitious and had a hidden desire to conquer the whole world, as this was the only reason why he had attacked and conquered, without any provocation, the kingdom of which this hermit of ours was a king earlier. So if the guest king could somehow be cajoled into believing that luckily he has now met a great hermit who possesses supernatural powers, then it is quite possible that he may seek the hermit's help to fulfill his desires and complete whatever remnants of victory that still elude him, and successfully conquer those territories that are still not under his sovereignty.

The hermit therefore tried to impress the king about the magical powers that he possesses, about his great spiritual prowess and special achievements, that usually come to great hermits and ascetics by the virtue of their doing severe Tapa. With these powers the hermits and ascetics can achieve stupendous feats that ordinary mortals cannot even think of.]

सो०. तुलसी देखि सुबेषु भूलहि मूढ़ न चतुर नर ।
सुंदर केकिहि पेखु बचन सुधा सम असन अहि ॥ १६१ (ख) ॥

sōraṭhā.

tulasī dēkhi subēṣu bhūlahirṁ mūrha na catura nara.
sundara kēkihi pēkhu bacana sudhā sama asana ahi. 161 (b).

Tulsidas observes that an honourable and pleasant-looking attire and appearance often misleads everyone, for not only the ordinary people but even those who are intelligent and sagacious are deceived by them.

See the peacock; it is so beautiful to look at (with its fantastically wonderful plumes that have an array of colours), and it also has a voice that is attractive and sweet to hear, but ironically it feeds on poisonous snakes. (Sortha no. 136-b)

[Note—The learned poet Tulsidas (who has written this book Ram Charit Manas) makes a great point here as a warning for all of us: that one should not judge someone by his looks, for appearances are more often deceiving and do not tell the truth. So one must always be on guard when dealing with strangers and unknown situations.

A peacock is so lovely to look at from the outside, but it is so horrible from inside that it devours snakes and manages to digest the reptile. The snake that would kill one and all by its poison is unable to harm the peacock because the latter is more poisonous than the snake, and hence is easily able to neutralize the weaker poison contained in the body of the snake.

Who would believe that a bird which looks so pleasant from the outside and has a sweet voice would have such strong poisonous instincts that it does not fear the poison of the snake and easily gobbles it up?

To wit, a person who by his appearances looks very friendly and helpful may actually be some dangerous scoundrel preying for a victim, who will stab one behind one's back without warning so much so that even while putting up a show of warmth with an affectionate embrace, he may gladly and without any remorse drive a knife in the back of the unsuspecting victim during this embrace.

One thing is to be noted here. The voice of a peacock is not actually 'sweet and pleasant' as it is made out to be here, for it is shrill and sharp. But the peacock usually cries out in jubilation when it sees the dark rain-bearing clouds in the sky at the onset of the rainy season. So therefore, the peacock's cry against the background of the sound of thunder of the approaching storm and rain appears very pleasant to hearer because it signals the arrival of rain that is welcomed by one and all at the end of a harsh summer.]

चौ०. तातें गुपुत रहउँ जग माहीं । हरि तजि किमपि प्रयोजन नाही ॥ १ ॥

प्रभु जानत सब बिनहिं जनाएँ । कहहु कवनि सिधि लोक रिझाएँ ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tātēm guputa raha'um' jagā māhīṁ. hari taji kimapi prayōjana nāhīṁ. 1.
prabhu jānata saba binahīṁ janā'ēm'. kahahu kavani sidhi lōka rijhā'ēm'. 2.

[The pretentious hermit continued with his honey-laced talk. He said—] 'That is why¹ I prefer to remain anonymous and hidden from the world, for I don't want and need to do anything with anyone except Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being)². (1)

The Lord is all-knowing and he knows everything without saying a word or being told of anything. So therefore, say, what use is there in trying to please and appease the world³? (2)

[Note—¹The hermit has already given the reason for it in Doha no. 161-a herein above. And he further elaborates on it now onwards.

²To wit, I spend my time in meditation and contemplation and worship of Lord Hari with great devotion. Being a true hermit and an ascetic, why should I waste my time and energy by thinking of other things and worrying about them? I feel contented in my spiritual pursuits, and prefer to lead a calm and serene life in seclusion, away from all contacts and free from attachments. My basic needs are taken care of by the Lord, and so there is no occasion for me to venture outside into the world.

³The pretentious hermit is so cunning that he speaks excellent words of wisdom like a really great, sagacious and enlightened saint so as to convince the king of his noble thoughts and greatness, make him more faithful and devoted towards himself. A truly faithful devotee of the Lord God would seek from no one except his Lord. So the hermit tries to impress upon the gullible king that he is a loyal devotee of Lord Hari, and hence a holy and reliable soul, for devotees of Lord Hari are deemed to be pure in heart and pious souls.

A cheat and a scoundrel would go to any length to achieve his objectives, and he has no compunctions or reservations in employing any dirty trick he can think of as long as his nefarious design succeeds. Lying and falsehoods cause no embarrassment to such persons.]

तुम्ह सुचि सुमति परम प्रिय मोरें । प्रीति प्रतीति मोहि पर तोरें ॥ ३ ॥ अब जाँ तात दुरावउँ तोही । दारुन दोष घटइ अति मोही ॥ ४ ॥

tumha suci sumati parama priya mōrēm. prīti pratīti mōhi para tōrēm. 3.
aba jaum tāta durāva'um' tōhī. dārūna dōṣa ghaṭa'i ati mōhī. 4.

You (the guest king) have a clean conscience and purity of mind; that is why I have (developed an) affection for you and have confidence in you. (3)

My dear, this being the case, if I hide anything from you then it would be a great sin on my part¹. (4)

[Note—¹What was the thing that the hermit alluded to when he said that he did not want to hide anything from the king? Well, in the beginning this hermit has told the king that he does not want to reveal to anyone who he was, what mystical powers he possessed, or anything else about his spiritual life and achievements, and especially not to a stranger. He has always preferred to remain anonymous and hidden from publicity. This is clearly evident from Doha nos. 160 and 161, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows Doha no. 161.

But then now the same hermit has revealed quite a bit about himself before the king—that he worships Lord Hari and is the Lord's great devotee, that he seeks from no one except Lord Hari, that he has lived in seclusion for a long time doing Tapa, that he has transcendental powers by which he could know that his guest was ‘a king’ and ‘not a king’s minister’ though the guest himself told him that he was king Pratapbhanu’s chief minister, and so on.

So the hermit now gives a reason why he confided in the king and told him some secrets that he has not revealed to anyone else till now—and it is that he was very impressed by the king’s simplicity and faith in him, and so he decided that when one pure heart meets another pure heart there should be openness between the two.

This was a very clever ploy as it further reinforced the king’s trust in the hermit. It helped the hermit to appeal to the natural emotions of the king to open up with a holy person; the king would now be encouraged to share some of the secrets in his own heart with the hermit just as the hermit has shared some of his own secrets with him in a voluntary way. The hermit correctly guessed that the king would overcome his initial reluctance and open up.

And what message is there in this verse? It is that those who really and truly trust each other should have an open heart and not hide anything between them. This attitude helps them bond and come to each other’s aid in times of need. It also helps both the partners to seek and give selfless advice on various matters. But at the same time it is of utmost importance that one chooses one’s partner most carefully and take due precautions and undertake diligence before reposting complete faith on anyone. For otherwise, one would be doomed as was the unfortunate case of king Pratapbhanu who fell prey to a scoundrel’s sweet words.]

जिमि जिमि तापसु कथइ उदासा । तिमि तिमि नृपहि उपज बिस्वासा ॥ ५ ॥
देखा स्वबस कर्म मन बानी । तब बोला तापस बगध्यानी ॥ ६ ॥

jimi jimi tāpasu katha'i udāsā. timi timi nr̥pahi upaja bisvāsā. 5.
dēkhā svabasa karma mana bānī. taba bōlā tāpasa bagadhyānī. 6.

The more the hermit talked of indifference to the world and his devotion to spiritual pursuits, the more the king’s faith in him increased. (5)

When the false and deceitful hermit, who was like a cunning crane preying on its victim¹, determined that the king had developed full trust and faith in him so much so that he has become fully devoted to him in his thought, word and deed, he (the hermit) said—(6)

[Note—¹The crane stands in the water on one of its legs and the neck bent inwards, appearing to be immersed in deep meditation. But its attention is fixed on the water where some fish might come to the surface. And as soon as the crane sights the fish, it immediately picks it up in its beak. This metaphor of the crane is used to imply a person who pretends to be holy on the outside but is very selfish and cruel internally; he traps his victim by pretending to be his well wisher and dear friend, but at the first opportunity he would pounce at his unsuspecting victim and extract whatever he had planned from him.]

नाम हमार एकतनु भाई । सुनि नृप बोलेउ पुनि सिरु नाई ॥ ७ ॥

कहहु नाम कर अरथ बखानी । मोहि सेवक अति आपन जानी ॥ ८ ॥

nāma hamāra ēkatanu bhā'ī. suni nṛpa bōlē'u puni siru nā'ī. 7.
kahahu nāma kara aratha bakhānī. mōhi sēvaka ati āpana jānī. 8.

‘Brother (bhā'ī), my name is Ekatanu (ēkatanu)¹.’

When the king heard this, he bowed his head (in reverence)² and said—(7)

‘Please consider me to be your devoted follower (or servant) and explain to me the meaning of your name. (8)

[Note—¹The hermit is trying to become more and more informal with the king in his effort of developing greater rapport with him. We note that the hermit is playing his trick very expertly, step-by-step, in order to judge how much the king is willing to yield himself to the former.

So therefore now the hermit uses a dearer and more informal term of address for someone, such as the word ‘brother’. He goes a step further in his effort to draw the unsuspecting king, who was slowly slipping into the trap being laid out by the villainous hermit, closer to him with greater trust and faith when he would address the king as his ‘son’ in the Chaupai that follows Doha no. 162 herein below.

The word ‘Ekatanu’ is explained by him in the next Doha no. 162 herein below.

²The king ‘bowed his head’: this shows that the king has begun to treat the hermit with greater respect with each passing moment.]

दो०. आदिसृष्टि उपजी जबहिं तब उतपति भै मोरि । नाम एकतनु हेतु तेहि देह न धरी बहोरि ॥ १६२ ॥

dōhā.

ādisṛṣṭi upajī jabahim taba utapati bhai mōri.
nāma ēkatanu hētu tēhi dēha na dharī bahōri. 162.

[The hermit replied—] ‘I was born when the creation came into being. My name is ‘Elatanu’ which means ‘one who has had only a single body’, for I never died and therefore I hadn’t taken a birth again. [To wit, I have been in this body of a hermit which you see now ever since the dawn of creation, for I never died, and so there was no need for me to take a new birth again.]¹’ (Doha no. 162)

[Note—¹Of all the claims that this hermit made this was the most outlandish. This is a mortal world, and no creature can claim immortality for its gross body; no human being can claim that his gross body has survived and lived in the same way since the beginning of creation. It’s absurd and impossible.

This ridiculous claim of the hermit should have rung alarm bells for the king. But as destiny had planned otherwise, the king’s wisdom was eclipsed and he could not see the tell-tale signs of lies and falsehood in the hermit's words of excessive absurdity.

Well, the hermit made a final test to see whether some sense of prudence and common sense still was left with the king, or has he become totally numbed in his mind and intellect. When a thug wants to rob his victim, he first gives him some intoxicating substance, and then waits and watches what effect it has on the victim. Only when he finds that the drug has its full effect upon the prey that the villain strikes and then flees with the booty.

There is one very interesting observation that can be made here in connection with the word 'Ekatanu'. While one of its meanings is as described above—i.e. a person who has had the same body since the creation started, the other meaning is that 'I have no other physical body', or 'I don't have a second or duplicate body'. If we were to take this second meaning into consideration then also we conclude that the king had been very stupid not to realize that no one has a 'duplicate body' or a 'parallel body' or 'a second body other than one's own body'. The hermit was playing a trick with words upon the king—and the deluded king could not see through it!

This term may also mean that the hermit was the 'only son of his parents'. If he had some other sibling, especially a 'twin', then it could be said that there is another person in the likeness of the hermit as brothers carry the same genes in them, have the same parents, and their features also match each other to a great extent.]

चौ०. जनि आचरजु करहु मन माहीं । सुत तप तें दुर्लभ कछु नाही ॥ १ ॥
 तपबल तें जग सृजइ बिधाता । तपबल बिष्नु भए परित्राता ॥ २ ॥ तपबल संभु करहिं संघारा । तप तें अगम न कछु संसारा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

jani ācaraju karahu mana māhīm. suta tapa tēm durlabha kachu nāhīm. 1.

tapabala tēm jaga srja'i bidhātā. tapabala biṣnu bha'ē paritrātā. 2.

tapabala sambhu karahīm saṅghārā. tapa tēm agama na kachu sansārā. 3.

[The hermit continued to explain to the king the meaning of his name. Thus he said—
] 'Oh son1, don't be surprised at all about this (that I have not died and thus have been able to live through countless ages with this same body with which I took birth at the beginning of creation as I have told you about myself). For, nothing is impossible by the virtue of the powers granted by doing Tapa (strict spiritual practices such as observing austerity, doing penance and offering self-sacrifices)². (1)

[Elaborating upon the stupendous powers and astounding abilities that are granted by doing Tapa, the hermit said—] The creator Brahma creates this universe on the strength of Tapa; it is on the strength of Tapa that Lord Vishnu is able to take care of this creation and provide for its needs; (2)

Lord Shiva is able to conclude or bring to an end this creation by relying on the powers granted by Tapa.

Verily indeed, there is nothing impossible and there is nothing that can't be done or achieved in this world by relying on the strength of Tapa.³ (3)

[Note—¹Earlier the hermit had addressed the king as a 'brother', and now he addresses him as a 'son'. This is an obvious attempt on his part to gain the king's unbridled confidence and faith. The hermit plays subtly on the king's emotions by referring to the king's own submission at the time he accepted the hermit's offer to spend the night at the hermitage when the king had said to the hermit that he was like a 'father' for him—refer: Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 160.

The cunning hermit decided that before he bared his fangs and dug his teeth deep into the victim it is crucial for him that his prey is firmly in his clutches so much so that he would do the hermit's bidding faithfully and obediently like a devoted disciple who carries out his Guru's (preceptor's) orders without asking any questions or expressing any doubts.

²When the hermit had said that he has retained the same body ever since the dawn of creation, without dying and taking birth even once, the king was incredulous and absolutely astonished as this seemed to be an outlandish and impractical suggestion that defied the laws of Nature. The clever hermit was closely observing every gesture and expression on the face of the king, so he immediately picked up the signal that the king is not ready to take this bait so easily. Hence, he went on an overdrive to explain why he has managed to retain the same body ever since taking birth at the beginning of civilization.

He gave credit to his doing severe Tapa for this most magical feat. This explanation seemed reasonable and acceptable to the king because he was himself very well-versed in the doctrines of religious practices and knew that anything can be achieved by the force and power of Tapa. He knew that Tapa grants transcendental and supernatural powers to its practitioners.

When the hermit observed that the king seemed satisfied with this explanation, he felt very glad in his heart, because now he could use this ruse of his being able to do the impossible by the powers gained by him due to his Tapa in order to give effect to his nefarious designs to take revenge upon the king, as would be evident shortly.

³The hermit wished to be sure that the king is convinced of his reasoning that he has been able to live with the same body for ages after ages on the strength of Tapa. So he cites some of the irrefutable proofs for it—that of Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva. Even the scriptures have endorsed this point that these three Gods of the Trinity gain their powers by doing Tapa.]

भयउ नृपहि सुनि अति अनुरागा । कथा पुरातन कहै सो लागा ॥ ४ ॥

करम धरम इतिहास अनेका । करइ निरूपन बिरति बिबेका ॥ ५ ॥

उदभव पालन प्रलय कहानी । कहेसि अमित आचरज बखानी ॥ ६ ॥

bhaya'u nr̥pahi suni ati anurāgā. kathā purātana kahai sō lāgā. 4.

karama dharama itihāsa anēkā. kara'i nirūpana birati bibēkā. 5.

udabhava pālana pralaya kahānī. kahēsi amita ācaraja bakhānī. 6.

Hearing these sagacious words of wisdom, the king felt very enamoured of the hermit and developed great admiration for him.

Then the hermit began to tell him many ancient stories and antecedents from the Purans (mythological histories)¹. (4)

He (the hermit) then gave a lengthy discourse on the principles of Karma and Dharma (the principles governing deeds and righteousness as laid down in the scriptures) along with many stories that would explain these doctrines.

He also gave discourses elaborating on the virtues of Gyan (gnosis; knowledge and spiritual enlightenment) and Vairagya (renunciation and detachment).² (5)

He told the king many wonderful and fascinating stories about this creation—about its origin, its sustenance, and its final end, stories that were awe-inspiring and interesting. (6)

[Note—¹It was a usual practice in ancient times that when someone went to a great sage and sought his blessings, the sage would spend some quality time with his guest by talking about the scriptures and spiritual topics. Great sages who had established hermitages would routinely give discourses on ancient scriptures and explain them to the host of other junior sages and disciples who lived with him to acquire knowledge.

²The hermit wanted to keep the king engaged in conversation and create an impression on him. He wanted to subtly tell the king that he was no ordinary hermit but was indeed a great and learned sage who is well acquainted with all the scriptures as a sage ought to be, and there is aught nothing that he knows not. That he lives alone and does not have many juniors surrounding him does not mean that he is not highly knowledgeable and wise.

So therefore he gave a long discourse on a wide variety of topics so that the king is fully convinced of his greatness and vast knowledge.]

सुनि महीप तापस बस भयऊ । आपन नाम कहन तब लयऊ ॥ ७ ॥
कह तापस नृप जानउँ तोही । कीन्हेहु कपट लाग भल मोही ॥ ८ ॥

suni mahīpa tāpasa basa bhaya'ū. āpana nāma kahana taba laya'ū. 7.
kaha tāpasa nṛpa jāna'um' tōhī. kīnhēhu kapaṭa lāga bhala mōhī. 8.

Hearing all these wise talks, the king was fully convinced of the greatness of this hermit, and he developed full faith in him. The king now trusted the hermit so much that he proceeded to disclose his real name to the latter. (7)

But the hermit interjected, and before the king could divulge his true identity the hermit said, 'Oh king, I know already who you actually are. I very much appreciate your stance that you tried to withhold the truth from me¹. [In Doha no. 163 herein below the hermit explains why he appreciated the king's deception.] (8)

सो०. सुनु महीस असि नीति जहँ तहँ नाम न कहहिं नृप ।

मोहि तोहि पर अति प्रीति सोइ चतुरता बिचारि तव ॥ १६३ ॥
sōraṭhā.

sunu mahīsa asi nīti jaham̐ taham̐ nāma na kahahim̐ nṛpa.
mōhi tōhi para ati prīti sō'i caturatā bicāri tava. 163.

‘Listen oh king. It is a well established doctrine of statecraft that a king should not divulge his name (and true identity) at an alien place or before a stranger.

Observing this wisdom, prudence and sagacity of yours, I have developed great affection and respect for you. [To wit, instead of feeling offended that you have tried to deceive me by telling me an untrue statement about your identity when I asked you about it, I, on the contrary, liked your approach that you followed the principles of kingship by concealing your identity before a stranger like me.]’ (Doha no. 163)

चौ०. नाम तुम्हार प्रताप दिनेसा । सत्यकेतु तव पिता नरेसा ॥ १ ॥
गुर प्रसाद सब जानिअ राजा । कहिअ न आपन जानि अकाजा ॥ २ ॥ caupāṭi.

nāma tumhāra pratāpa dinēsā. satyakētu tava pitā narēsā. 1.
gura prasāda saba jāni'a rājā. kahi'a na āpana jāni akājā. 2.

[The hermit continued—] ‘Your name is Bhanupratap, and king Satyaketu was your father. (1)

*Oh king! By the grace of my Guru (spiritual preceptor) I know everything, but perceiving that telling the complete truth could bring harm to me I do not wish to tell more¹.

{*This verse may be read as follows also: ‘Oh king! I know everything by the grace of my Guru. It is alright that you did not tell the truth about yourself to me for fear of harming your self interests as I have already explained that a king is well within his rights to do so.’² (2)

[Note—¹The hermit has given ample hints to the king that there is something amiss. What was there that the hermit feared from the king that prevents him from telling the ‘whole truth’? Surely if the full truth came out, the king would know that this hermit was his enemy!

But it is an irony of fate and a quirk of providence that still the king could not realize that there was something wrong somewhere. Why would a hermit who claims possessing exceptional mystical powers by the virtue of Tapa so much so that he could even defer death and overturn the laws of Nature by remaining alive and retaining the same body ever since the dawn of creation, fear harm from an ordinary mortal such as a human king if he told him the whole truth? Wasn’t there something obviously mysterious in this? Obviously the king was so much influenced by the hermit that he had let down his guard beyond reason.

²This interpretation may be okay on the face of it, but since it is a repetition of what has already been said in Doha no. 163, the other explanation—that the hermit did not wish to tell more about what he knew about the king because it may bring harm to him—seems more plausible here. What harm would it bring to the hermit? If told the full truth the king would know that this hermit was actually his arch enemy!]

देखि तात तव सहज सुधाई । प्रीति प्रतीति नीति निपुनाई ॥ ३ ॥
उपजि परी ममता मन मोरें । कहउँ कथा निज पूछे तोरें ॥ ४ ॥

dēkhi tāta tava sahaja sudhā'ī. prīti pratīti nīti nipunā'ī. 3.
upaji parī mamatā mana mōrēm. kaha'um' kathā nija pūchē tōrēm. 4.

Oh dear, observing your simplicity of manners, straightforwardness, affection and faith in me, as well as your prudence of mind and expertise in political wisdom – (3)

-- I developed affection and liking for you. That is why I told you about myself when you had asked me about it¹. (4)

[Note—¹The hermit is clearly double-talking. On the one hand he says that he does not want to tell the whole truth as it may harm him, and then he says he has told the king about himself in a truthful manner. If that is the case, then what was that extra information which the hermit did not wish to disclose to the king for fear of inviting harm to his own security or welfare as he has said in Chaupai line no. 2 herein above? Obviously the hermit wished to keep secret his own true identity from the king for it was definitely going to bring harm to him as he was the king's sworn enemy.

We have read that the hermit said that he has retained the same body since he took birth at the beginning of creation, and so there was nothing else to tell except about his present life. To wit, he seems to convey the idea that he has told the 'whole truth' to the king. This is contrary to his own admission that he would not like to tell the whole truth for fear of harm coming his way.]

अब प्रसन्न मैं संसय नाहीं । मागु जो भूप भाव मन माहीं ॥ ५ ॥
सुनि सुबचन भूपति हरषाना । गहि पद बिनय कीन्हि बिधि नाना ॥ ६ ॥ aba prasanna mair̄ sansaya nāhīm. māgu jō bhūpa bhāva mana māhīm. 5.

suni subacana bhūpati haraṣānā. gahi pada binaya kīnhi bidhi nānā. 6.

Now since I am very pleased with you, you can ask for any boon from me that you wish for in your heart.' (5)

When the king heard these pleasant and favourable words, he felt very fortunate and exhilarated. He held the feet of the hermit and prayed to him in many ways (i.e. devotedly and faithfully, to express his gratitude and devotion for his benefactor)¹. (6)

[Note—¹Here we see that the king has totally surrendered himself before the cunning hermit—by his actions, mind and emotions, as is evident in his (i) holding the hermit's feet, (ii) feeling exhilarated, and (iii) praying to him with devotion.]

कृपासिंधु मुनि दरसन तोरें । चारि पदारथ करतल मोरें ॥ ७ ॥

प्रभुहि तथापि प्रसन्न बिलोकी । मागि अगम बर होउँ असोकी ॥ ८ ॥ krpāsindhu muni darasana tōrēm. cāri padāratha karatala mōrēm. 7.

prabhuhi tathāpi prasanna bilōkī. māgi agama bara hō'um' asōkī. 8.

The king prayed, 'Oh sage who is an ocean of mercy, kindness and grace! By having had the good fortune of seeing your holiness I feel that all the four fruits that come to meritorious persons¹ have come in my hands. [Say, what more would I want!] (7)

But still oh my lord, since you are so pleased with me I beg your leave to ask for a boon that is very difficult to obtain². (8)

[Note—¹The four great fruits that come to a person for meritorious life are the following—(i) Artha—wealth and prosperity; (ii) Dharma—credit that comes with righteousness and auspiciousness; (iii) Kaam—fulfillment of all desires; and (iv) Moksha—liberation and deliverance of the soul; emancipation and salvation at the time of death.

²The king decided that he has got one rare god-sent chance to fulfill his unfulfilled desires which he would express in the next verse, and he did not want to miss this golden opportunity. By all that the hermit told him about himself—about his transcendental knowledge, about his doing great Tapa and about living like an immortal being—the king was convinced that this hermit indeed has the mystical ability to grant him what is virtually impossible to attain. And since the offer of granting boons came from the hermit himself, the king felt sure that he was too willing to grant whatever the king would ask for.

The king thought that he would be foolish for him to let go of this chance.]

दो०. जरा मरन दुख रहित तनु समर जितै जनि कोउ ।

एकछत्र रिपुहीन महि राज कलप सत होउ ॥ १६४ ॥

dōhā.

jarā marana dukha rahita tanu samara jitai jani kō'u.
ēkachatra ripuhīna mahi rāja kalapa sata hō'u. 164.

[The king now makes his request in one breath, without a pause.] 'Let my body be free from the pains and misery associated with old age and death; let no one defeat me in battle; let me have sole sovereignty of the whole world (i.e. let my reign be unopposed and unchallenged, and let me be a sole monarch of the whole world); let there be no enemy of mine on this earth; and let my reign last for a hundred Kalpas¹.'* (Doha no. 164)

[Note—(a) 1 Kalpa = It is equivalent to 1 day in the creator Brahma's total life span of 100 years. Each Kalpa consists of 1000 four-Yug cycles, called the 'Chatur Yugs'. The visible creation's one life-span consisting of this four-Yug cycle called the 'Chatur Yugs' is this one day of Brahma. At the end of this Chatur Yug, there would be dissolution or the so-called 'dooms-day' when everything would be submerged in water. Then the next phase of life consisting of the next four-Yug cycle would start.

Each Kalpa (i.e. 1 day of Brahma's life) is also divided into 14 Manvantars, and each such Manvantars is ruled by one Manu, the first male. Therefore, 1 Manu rules over 71.42 (1000/4) four-Yug cycles.

We are now passing through the 51st year of Brahma's life, and our present Kaliyug belongs to the 7th Manvantar out of the 14 Manvantars, and its Manu is called Vaivasvata, and it is 28th Kaliyug of the four-Yug cycle.

In human years, 1 Kalpa is equivalent to 4.32 billion (4.32×10^9) years.

To wit, the king wanted that he should rule for virtually an eternity! When he discovered that his host, the hermit, had himself lived for eternity by the virtue of the great magical powers of Tapa that he said he did, the king became greedy and thought that here was an opportunity for him to acquire 'a life of eternity' without having to undertake the stress of doing Tapa. He must have sat on the edge of his seat and trembling with excitement at this fantastic prospect. And the fraudster hermit must surely have read the expression on the king's face that revealed his eagerness and willingness to do anything the former asked him to do if it would fulfill his outlandish desires. So the preying hermit must have smiled within himself that his trick is working perfectly and having the desired effect on his victim.

*The king was so excited that he asked for so many boons in one breath; he did not want to pause and lose time for the fear that the hermit may say 'granted' even before all that he wanted to say was complete.

The king was very wise. He thought that in case the hermit would say that he can grant only one boon, the king asked for protection from the fear of death and old age as the first request. He guessed that this boon was surely within the reach of the hermit to grant as he himself has conquered death and old age by his own admission—refer: Doha no. 162 herein above.

So in case the hermit refused or was unable to grant the rest of the boons, then at least the king thought that he will be free from death.

Then he did not lose a breath in asking for the boon of invincibility and sovereignty over the whole world almost for eternity. This shows how highly ambitious and greedy-for-power he was.

Another important observation about the king is that completely worldly man and had no element of spiritualism in him even in its rudimentary form, for had he been a spiritually-minded person and a devotee of the Lord God then when he had got the rare opportunity to ask for any boons that he wished to be granted, howsoever difficult they may be, he would have sought for his spiritual welfare, enhancement of his devotion for God, and for liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation of his soul. He would never have asked for worldly gains, and would never have lusted for eternal life of his body so that he could enjoy the pleasures and comforts of material things of this gross, mortal world that come in abundance to a mighty emperor that he wanted to become.

This perhaps explains why his downfall was never regretted by anyone, not even by the gods. And this is also the reason why the so-called hermit had no remorse at having misused his holy attire to defraud the king as the latter was not a spiritually inclined man, but a completely selfish and worldly man of great greed and lust for power.]

चौ०. कह तापस नृप ऐसेइ होऊ । कारन एक कठिन सुनु सोऊ ॥ १ ॥
 कालउ तुअ पद नाइहि सीसा । एक बिप्रकुल छाड़ि महीसा ॥ २ ॥ तपबल बिप्र सदा बरिआरा । तिन्ह के कोप न कोउ रखवारा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kaha tāpasa nrpa aisē'i hō'ū. kārana ēka kaṭhina sunu sō'ū. 1.
 kāla'u tu'a pada nā'ihī sīsā. ēka biprakula chāḍi mahīsā. 2.
 tapabala bipra sadā bari'ārā. tinha kē kōpa na kō'u rakhavārā. 3.

[The hermit told the king that it would be as he wished, but there was an obstacle in its successful implementation, so the king should know about it.]

The hermit replied to the king, 'Oh king, it could be as you wish, but there is a certain difficult reason why its successful implementation becomes doubtful. (1)

[And what is that reason?] Even Kaal (the god of death) would bow his head before you (i.e. even 'Death' would obey you, and would not be able to harm you). But oh great king, there is one exception—and it is the Brahmins.

[To wit, except the Brahmins no one would be able to harm you in any way and bring about your death. So the only ones who could destroy your dreams to live for eternity and rule over the world as its sole and unopposed emperor who has no enemy to fear from are the Brahmins. Why is it so? The answer is this—] (2)

This is because the Brahmins are always superior to others in this world by the virtue of the natural powers vested in them due their doing Tapa. Hence, there is no one who can protect anyone against their wrath and curse. (3)

[Note—The hermit spoke in a very amiable and convincing way. It is true that Brahmins are deemed to be superior to others in the world by the virtue of their knowledge and spiritual way of life. So the king was all the more sure that the hermit is his guardian and benefactor who though wishing to willingly grant all that he wants also wants to warn him of the only obstacle that stands in the way of fulfillment of his wishes, so that precautionary measures can be taken. And the king felt more thankful for this sagacious advice.

Now the next question was: how to overcome this obstacle? The eager king decided that he must obey what the hermit, whom by this time he had begun to trust unquestionably and completely as his best friend and well-wisher, would advise him to do.

The hermit on his part was taking extra care not to arouse any suspicion in the mind of the king that the hermit is taking him for a ride for what he wants is impossible for even the Creator to grant, so how can a human being do so. Even the Brahmins, who can curse and cause ruin, cannot grant anyone eternity! Besides this, the hermit wished that he alone should not be seen as the one who is to be blamed for the destruction of the career of a great king and cause ruin and suffering to the kingdom and its innocent subjects. So why not devise a device whereby the entire Brahmin community would share the blame, and unless one knows this secret history of the king meeting the hermit in the deep forest no one would ever cast aspersions on the hermit.

So the cunning hermit thought that in case his plan failed and king Pratapbhanu could not be totally ruined but escaped with minor problems caused by Brahmins, then the king would at least not harm the hermit, but would always feel obliged and grateful to him instead.

May be that the king, on his return to his capital, arrange for some huge gift or a large largesse for the hermit as an immediate reward for his benefactor, before his ruin actually happens. So it was a win-win situation for the clever hermit.]

जौं बिप्रन्ह बस करहु नरेसा । तौ तुअ बस बिधि बिष्नु महेसा ॥ ४ ॥
 चल न ब्रह्मकुल सन बरिआई । सत्य कहउँ दोउ भुजा उठाई ॥ ५ ॥
 बिप्र श्राप बिनु सुनु महिपाला । तोर नास नहिं कवनेहुँ काला ॥ ६ ॥ jauṁ bipranha basa karahu narēsā. tau tu'a basa bidhi biṣṇu mahēsā. 4.

 cala na brahmakula sana bari'ā'ī. satya kaha'um̃ dō'u bhujā uṭhā'ī. 5.
 bipra śrāpa binu sunu mahipālā. tōra nāsa nahim̃ kavanēhum̃ kālā. 6.

Therefore oh king, if the Brahmins could be somehow controlled and brought under your wish (i.e. if some device can be devised by which the Brahmins could be subjugated and reined in by you) then it is certain that even the creator Lord Brahma, the protector Lord Vishnu and the concluder of creation Lord Shiva would all be yours. [To wit, if you can make the Brahmins obey you then you can also make the Gods of the Trinity obey your will.] (4)

In all sooth and without gainsay, I raise my two arms to solemnly declare the truth that it is not possible to exert any pressure and compel the Brahmin race to surrender to one's wishes and whims. (5)

So let it be known that without the curse of Brahmins, your ruin cannot happen any time, in any era, and under any circumstance.¹ (6)

[Note—¹The bait was too alluring for the rapacious king to let go so easily. Why, so thought the ambitious king who was made more greedy by the prospect of ruling over the earth as well as the heaven—now he was on the verge of conquering not only the mortal world but even superseding the three great Gods of the Trinity, what to talk of humbler gods such as the 'god of death' or the 'god of war'! Why not clinch the deal with both hands and do the bidding of this great hermit who was so willing to help, reasoned the gullible king.

And as a consequence, the 'dagger' was being sunk deeper and deeper into the king by his treacherous enemy who was disguised as a 'holy' hermit!]

consequences of offending the Brahmins only if he could subjugate them in entirety, the ministers, whom the hermit knew from his early days as an erstwhile king to be extremely wise and intelligent, would immediately smell that something was amiss, and they were sure to alert the king, who would then send his army to capture the fictitious hermit and bring him to justice.

So therefore the hermit instilled the fear of ruin and harm should the king divulge anything of his meeting with the hermit.

He also warned the king that it would be very demeaning and insulting for his own reputation, dignity and self-respect to admit that he 'got lost in the forest'. Say, what his courtiers and subjects would think of his majesty when they learn that their great king could not find his own way back to the capital and needed the help of a hermit to return!

And that, inspite of already being an emperor and ruling over interminable tracts of land on the earth, their king was still not satisfied and wanted more and still more of everything. This would not auger well for the king's reputation as it would portray him as a greedy, rapacious and selfish man who has no end to his yearnings, especially if it becomes known that he wants to subjugate the Brahmins, whom the whole society respects, so that he can become a virtual demi-god or a despotic dictator who would not tolerate anyone to oppose him.

To wit, the hermit created so much fear in the mind of the king that he would never disclose about his meeting with the hermit to anyone. See Chaupai line no. 2 herein below where the hermit has clearly warned the king of personal harm if this story is leaked.

This veil of secrecy was necessary so that the enemy-hermit could put into effect the plan he had devised in his mind to bring about the fall of king Pratapbhanu.]

चौ०. तातेँ मैँ तोहि बरजउँ राजा । कहें कथा तव परम अकाजा ॥ १ ॥

छठें श्रवन यह परत कहानी । नास तुम्हार सत्य मम बानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tātēṁ mair̥m tōhi baraja'um̃ rājā. kahēṁ kathā tava parama akājā. 1.

chaṭhēṁ śravana yaha parata kahānī. nāsa tumhāra satya mama bānī. 2.

[The hermit told the king—] 'Oh king, the reason why I advise you not to disclose anything about our meeting to anyone else is that it would cause great harm to your own interests (and jeopardize the successful accomplishment of the plan by which your desires could be fulfilled).

[To wit, if you tell anyone about our meeting then it would create an obstacle in the fulfillment of your wishes, and would be against your own good. That is why I have told you earlier that if you disclose anything, then the consequences of such disclosure would be yours. So I pray that you keep quiet and maintain a discreet silence about everything—our meeting and whatever we have discussed here.¹] (1)

If any sixth ear (i.e. anyone third person other than the two of us) comes to hear of this story (of our meeting and what transpired between us), then I tell you truly that your ruin is certain². (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Doha no. 165 herein above.

²Refer to the note that is appended to Doha no. 165 herein above. The hermit tried his best to bar the king from disclosing anything to anyone, not even to his trusted ministers, for the fear of certain harm. If the king had not been swept off his feet by the prospect of gaining unbridled powers and authority in this world by toeing the line of this hermit, and had been a little more scrupulous and alert than what he seemed to be at present, he wouldn't have reposted so much complete trust on a stranger as to not even disclose anything about his meeting with him to his own trusted aides and ministers, for it is an established doctrine for a king that he should not hide anything of importance from his most trusted ministers on whom his own safety and the security of the kingdom depend.

Had the king discussed this event with his trusted ministers upon his return to the capital, it is almost certain that his ruin could have been averted—for the wise ministers would have smelled a rat and started their investigation.]

यह प्रगटें अथवा द्विजश्रापा । नास तोर सुनु भानुप्रतापा ॥ ३ ॥
आन उपायँ निधन तव नाही । जौं हरि हर कोपहिं मन माहीं ॥ ४ ॥

yaha pragaṭēm athavā dvijaśrāpā. nāsa tōra sunu bhānupratāpā. 3.
āna upāyam' nidhana tava nāhīm. jaurm hari hara kōpahim mana māhīm. 4.

Listen oh king Bhanupratap. Your ruin will happen if either you reveal anything of this story to anyone, or due to the curse of Brahmins¹. (3)

Your death would not happen by any other means, even if the Lord Hari (Vishnu, the protector of creation) and Lord Har (Shiva, the concluder of creation) become wrathful at you. [To wit, except the two conditions—viz. (i) your disclosing our meeting to anyone else, and (ii) the Brahmins cursing you—you would be fearless, and no other power in creation could bring about your death.]² (4)

[Note—¹The hermit knew that the king would be scared out of his wits if he is convinced that his ruin can come if he discloses this story to anyone. Earlier the king was told that no one can ruin him except the Brahmins, and the king had joyously exclaimed that now he was certain that no one can harm him as he was sure the Brahmins would not cause his ruin as he was their greatest patron and protector.

So the hermit changed his tactic immediately—because he did not want anyone, especially the Brahmins, to know beforehand what he had planned to do. We shall learn gradually that the hermit had planned a dirty scheme whereby he would get the Brahmins to curse the king to get ruined and become a demon. And to give effect to this plan it was essential that the Brahmins did not know that the horrible mischief that was about to happen was not the creation of the king to defile their religious beliefs or make them do something that is evil and sinful for Brahmins. But if this story was disclosed before the mischief actually happened, then the Brahmins would be alerted as to the real culprit, and then they would curse this hermit instead of the king. Obviously the hermit would not want this to occur. So he virtually threatened the king with ruin if he told anyone about what transpired at the hermitage.

²It is to be noted here that the hermit has cleverly omitted 'Brahma, the creator', who is the first of the Trinity of Gods, when he names Vishnu and Shiva who would not be able to harm the king. This is because of two reasons—(i) the Brahmins represent Brahma, and in fact they derive their name from the word 'Brahma', and he has already said that Brahmins can cause the king's ruin and downfall if they so wish and curse him; and (ii) Brahma is the patriarch of creation, the Father of creation, and hence the senior-most God, so his most exalted stature must not be compromised for selfish interests of mortals—for after all, no matter how much the hermit was burning with the fire of revenge upon the king, he himself feared the wrath of the supreme Creator if he dared to insult him by implying that the mortal king was superior to the Creator himself because he would be immune to the Creator's writ.

Since the Brahmins represent the creator Brahma, so it is why there is no one to supersede them. It is said that those who cannot be killed by the fierce weapon of Indra, the king of the Gods, or the death-baton of Kaal, the god of death, or by the discus of Lord Vishnu—even such powerful and invincible ones are reduced ashes by the fire of wrath of Brahmins. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 13-14 that precede Doha no. 109 which expressly endorses this view.]

सत्य नाथ पद गहि नृप भाषा । द्विज गुर कोप कहहु को राखा ॥ ५ ॥
राखइ गुर जौ कोप बिधाता । गुर बिरोध नहिं कोउ जग त्राता ॥ ६ ॥ satya nātha pada gahi nrpa bhāṣā. dvija gura kōpa kahahu kō rākhā. 5.

rākha'i gura jaum kōpa bidhātā. gura birōdha nahim kō'u jaga trātā. 6.

The king reverentially held the feet of the hermit and said, 'Oh lord, what you say is indeed the truth. Who can protect one against the wrath of Brahmins and the Guru (moral preceptor and spiritual guide)¹. (5)

If the creator Brahma becomes angry at someone then his Guru can provide protection to him against Brahma's wrath. But if the Guru himself becomes angry or annoyed due to some reason, then say who in this creation can provide solace and succour to anyone against his Guru?

[To wit, the Guru can protect his disciple from any harm even if the creator himself becomes angry at him, but if the Guru is offended for any reason then there is no succour or solace to be found from any quarter anywhere in this world.] (6)

[Note—¹The king was so much awed by the hermit's grandiose talk and got so influenced by him that he regarded the latter as his 'Guru'. This is clearly hinted in the pervious verses where we read that the king has submitted himself unconditionally before the hermit. Refer especially to Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 160; Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 161; Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 162; Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 163; Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 164; and Doha no. 167 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.]

जौ न चलब हम कहे तुम्हारे । होउ नास नहिं सोच हमारे ॥ ७ ॥

एकहिं डर डरपत मन मोरा । प्रभु महिदेव श्राप अति घोरा ॥ ८ ॥

jaum̐ na calaba hama kahē tumhārēm̐. hō'u nāsa nahim̐ sōca hamārēm̐. 7.
ēkahim̐ ḍara ḍarapata mana mōrā. prabhu mahidēva śrāpa ati ghōrā. 8.

So therefore, if I do not follow your instructions and do as you tell me, then I shall not regret if any harm or ruin comes to me from any quarter. [To wit, I promise you that will fully obey your commands like a faithful follower.] (7)

But oh lord, there is now but only one fear that is tormenting my heart and mind, and it is that the curse of Brahmins is very fierce.

[To wit, by your grace I have now nothing to fear from anyone because since I have decided to treat you as my Guru, I am sure that even Brahma would not be able to harm me. But my only fear is from the curse of Brahmins, for which there seems to be no remedy.] (8)

दो०. होहिं बिप्र बस कवन बिधि कहहु कृपा करि सोउ । तुम्ह तजि दीनदयाल निज हितू न देखउँ कोउ ॥ १६६ ॥
dōhā.

hōhim̐ bipra basa kavana bidhi kahahu kṛpā kari sō'u.
tumha taji dīnadayāla nija hitū na dēkha'um̐ kō'u. 166.

Hence, oh lord, please be kind enough to tell me how the Brahmins can be brought under my control and how I can prevail upon them.

For oh lord, I do not see anyone else who would think for my good and welfare more than you.¹ (Doha no. 166)

[Note—¹This Doha clearly shows that the king has become completely subdued by the pretentious hermit. He has become subservient to the hermit in his selfishness to rule over the world unopposed. The lesson we get here is often times one's greed and selfish ambitions lands one in such grave and dire situations that one's wisdom and prudence are eclipsed, one lets down one's guard, and allows oneself to fall prey to circumstances that could well have been avoided with a little astuteness, a little alertness and a little application of mind.

To wit, a person whose desires don't end will some day find himself in a difficult situation that would only cause him misery and pain.]

चौ०. सुनु नृप बिबिध जतन जग माहीं । कष्टसाध्य पुनि होहिं कि नाहीं ॥ १ ॥
अहड़ एक अति सुगम उपाई । तहाँ परंतु एक कठिनाई ॥ २ ॥
मम आधीन जुगुति नृप सोई । मोर जाब तव नगर न होई ॥ ३ ॥
आजु लगेँ अरु जब तेँ भयऊँ । काहू के गृह ग्राम न गयऊँ ॥ ४ ॥
जौ न जाऊँ तव होइ अकाजू । बना आइ असमंजस आजू ॥ ५ ॥

caupā'ī.

sunu nr̥pa bibidha jatana jaga m̥hīm. kaṣṭasādhyā puni hōhīm ki nāhīm. 1.
 aha'i ēka ati sugama upā'ī. tahām̥ parantu ēka kaṭhinā'ī. 2.
 mama ādhīna juguti nr̥pa sō'ī. mōra jāba tava nagara na hō'ī. 3.
 āju lagēm aru jaba tēm bhaya'ūm̥. kāhū kē gṛha grāma na gaya'ūm̥. 4.
 jaur̥m na jā'ūm̥ tava hō'i akājū. banā ā'i asaman̥jasa ājū. 5.

[The hermit now decided that it was the right time to roll out his plan which would bring about ruin of his arch enemy who was now firmly in his grip. So he replied to the king—] ‘Listen king. There are many ways in this world (by which what you desire can be achieved), but while on the one hand they are difficult to implement, it is also not certain whether the desired result can be obtained by pursuing them. (1)

However, there is one simple and easy way out, but even in this device there is one great difficulty. (2)

Oh king! This easy device is known only to me, and it is me alone who can put it into effect. But the only problem is that it is not possible for me to go to your capital city. (3)

The reason is till this day, ever since I was born and have been living in this hermitage, I have never gone out to visit any village or anyone’s home. (4)

But if I do not go to your place it would mean that your future good would suffer. It’s surely a very piquant situation, and it has left me in a grave dilemma¹.’ (5)

[Note—¹The enemy-hermit pretends to be a great friend, well-wisher and benefactor of the unsuspecting king. He in effect tells the king that the only thing that separates the king and the fulfillment of his desires is the reluctance of the hermit, whom by now the king has begun to treat as his Guru and true friend, to go to his capital so that the method by which the king would achieve what he wants can be put into effect. This was a clever ploy to prevail upon the king that things should be managed in such a way that the identity of the hermit could be kept a top secret. The hermit knew that if he accompanied the king to the capital, or even if he went alone after the king had returned and the king showed acquaintance with him, he would certainly draw immense attention from all quarters, and it is almost certain that one of the wise ministers or captains of the king’s army would recognize him as an erstwhile king who was defeated once by Pratapbhanu, and who ran away from the battle-field to avoid being captured. Oh no, this risk is not acceptable. So the hermit did not like to go to the capital openly.

First the hermit says that he could help the king achieve his objective of ruling unopposed in the world for eternity and also being able to have sway over the pious Brahmins and make them all obey his wishes. But for that it is necessary that he visit the king’s capital as the way to do it was known only to him, and he cannot go as it would make him break his vows of not going to any village or home throughout life like a true ascetic who should not.

Then the hermit immediately realized his error—that should the king decide it would not be proper to compel his Guru to break his vows to achieve selfish ends, then all the planning that the hermit had meticulously done so far would come crumbling like a pack of cards.

Hence the cunning fellow instantly changed track and showed his willingness to help the king, for whom he pretended to have developed a great liking, if some way could be devised by which he can remain incognito and anonymous while implementing the plan by which the king's desires could be fulfilled. This strategy would help the enemy-hermit to escape detection and capture.

He was sure that the king, who was bent to fulfill his wants by any means, would go to any length to realize his dreams, and so he will make sure that the hermit could remain secret during his visit to the capital.]

सुनि महीस बोलेउ मृदु बानी । नाथ निगम असि नीति बखानी ॥ ६ ॥
 बड़े सनेह लघुन्ह पर करहीं । गिरि निज सिरनि सदा तृन धरहीं ॥ ७ ॥ जलधि अगाध मौलि बह फेनू । संतत धरनि धरत सिर रेनू ॥ ८ ॥

sunī mahīsa bōlē'u mṛḍu bānī. nātha nigama asi nīti bakhānī. 6.

baṛē sanēha laghunha para karahīm. giri nija sirani sadā tṛna dharahīm. 7.

jaladhi agādha mauli baha phēnū. santata dharani dharata sira rēnū. 8.

[The hermit had guessed it right, for the king now began earnestly beseeching him to endure some sufferance for the welfare of his disciple. It would be a noble deed on the part of the hermit, said the king, as great and pious souls willingly undergo hardship if it brings happiness and good to others. So the hermit should overcome his reluctance and help the king.]

Hearing what the hermit said, the king pleaded with him with a sweet and pleasant voice, 'Oh lord. The Vedas (scriptures) have praised the maxim [6] that those who are senior and great ought to show kindness to those who are junior and subordinate to them. For instance, great and majestic mountains always cheerfully bear countless humble twigs or blades of grass on their summits [7]. (6-7)

Similarly, the vast and fathomless ocean always allows the foam to flow easily over its surface.

The great earth too bears dust particles on its head (i.e. on its surface).' (8)

[Note—The king was alarmed when he felt that the magic pot was slipping from his hand, for if the hermit refused to go to his capital then his dreams of attaining eternal sovereignty over one and all would fail miserably. So he virtually bent over backwards and employed the best of skills at pleading he could muster at the moment to somehow prevail upon the hermit to overcome his reluctance to come to the king's capital and complete the rituals that he alone could do.

So the king was extremely polite because at this juncture he could not force the hermit to do anything against the latter's wishes. The king guessed that if he managed to evoke the natural kindness and graciousness that was present in the hermit's heart then there are fair chances that the hermit would agree to suffer a little for the larger good of his devoted disciple.

This is why the king invoked the Vedas as it would be difficult to contradict what they proclaim. Then he also cited some obvious examples to drive home the point that great men do not hesitate to suffer a bit if this sufferance would bring happiness and good to others. It would be a charitable deed on the part of the hermit to ensure the king's better future.

Saying this, the king fell at the hermit's feet and clasped it so that the hermit wouldn't gather courage to say 'no' as we will read in the following Doha.]

दो०. अस कहि गहे नरेस पद स्वामी होहु कृपाल । मोहि लागि दुख सहिअ प्रभु सज्जन दीनदयाल ॥ १६७ ॥

dōhā.

asa kahi gahē narēsa pada svāmī hōhu kṛpāla.
mōhi lāgi dukha sahi'a prabhu sajjana dīnadayāla. 167.

Saying this, the king fell at the hermit's feet and clasped them. He pleaded, 'Oh lord, please show kindness and grace upon me; please have pity on me. Please endure a little sufferance for my sake as you are very gentlemanly (sajjana) as well as kind and gracious towards those who are miserable and in a pitiable situation (like me) (dīnadayāla)'. (Doha no. 167)

[Note—We will note how a selfish and rapacious person falls from grace, sacrifices his stature and self-respect, and compromises his dignity and honour in order to achieve his goals and satisfy his never-ending greed.

This king was not an ordinary king—for he was already an emperor who had conquered countless kings and extended his domain to virtually cover the entire length and breadth of the earth; he had all that a king would normally want to have. His kingdom was great; he had renown as being a righteous and meritorious king; his subjects were happy and prosperous; his writ prevailed everywhere. Refer: Doha no. 153—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 156.

But still he was not contented! He now wanted to supersede even the Trinity Gods, to overcome the Laws of Nature, and to attain eternity which even the creator Brahma does not have as his life also has an end. So when the hermit promised the impossible to him the king virtually started salivating. Refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 165.

So therefore, when the king found that as simple an obstacle as a hermit's vows that he would not visit any city or a household—a vow that seemed utterly frivolous, ridiculous and obsolete to the king who was accustomed to material comforts and sensual pleasures of the world, and who was surrounded by submissive priests who lived a comfortable life of material comfort relying solely on the king's largesse, never once talking of renunciation and dispassion—stood between the success and failure of his goals, he was utterly flabbergasted and disgusted. He decided he must somehow prevail upon the hermit to fulfill his wishes, no matter what.

But he also feared the hermit's wrath, so preferred to take a soft approach rather than using a king's usual method of insisting that his orders be carried out either by the fear of punishment or by the bait of a grand reward.]

चौ०. जानि नृपहि आपन आधीना । बोला तापस कपट प्रबीना ॥ १ ॥

सत्य कहउँ भूपति सुनु तोही । जग नाहिन दुर्लभ कछु मोही ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jāni nr̥pahi āpana ādhīnā. bōlā tāpasa kapaṭa prabīnā. 1.

satya kaha'um̃ bhūpati sunu tōhī. jaga nāhina durlabha kachu mōhī. 2.

When the hermit, who was expert in conceit, deceit and pretensions, became absolutely sure that the king had come completely under his influence, he said, --- (1)

'Listen oh king. I tell you the truth that there is nothing in this world that is not possible for me'. (2)

[Note—¹The hermit has already said that he can do the impossible by the virtue of the powers that Tapa has granted him—refer Doha no. 162 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that follow it.

He repeats his stupendous abilities here once again to refresh the king's memory and make him more submissive and devoted, as well as to prepare the king mentally to believe that the seemingly incredulous magical feat the hermit would propose in a moment can actually be done successfully and desired fruits obtained.]

अवसि काज मैं करिहउँ तोरा । मन तन बचन भगत तैं मोरा ॥ ३ ॥

जोग जुगुति तप मंत्र प्रभाऊ । फलइ तबहिं जब करिअ दुराऊ ॥ ४ ॥ avasi kāja mair̃ kariha'um̃ tōrā. mana tana bacana bhagata tair̃ mōrā. 3.

jōga juguti tapa mantra prabhā'ū. phala'i tabahir̃ jaba kari'a durā'ū. 4.

I (hermit) will certainly do the work for you as you are my devoted follower and an ardent devotee by your Mana (heart and mind), by your body (deeds and actions) and by your words (by what you say; by the words that express your inner feeling for me)¹. (3)

But mind you—Yoga (meditation), Yukti (clever planning, means and ways, and proper devices employed to achieve success in any secret endeavour), Tapa (austerity and penance) and Mantra (divine esoteric formulas that grant mystical powers) bear fruit only when they are kept secret.

[To wit, if you indeed want success then you must vow to keep secret what I am about to divulge presently, as it involves certain magical charms and esoteric rituals that needed to be done so as to cast a mystical spell upon the objects that are needed to be tamed, in this case the Brahmins.]² (4)

[Note—¹The king had become so overwhelmed by the hermit's holy attire and pious talk that he had submitted himself completely to the latter and thought himself to be extremely lucky to have discovered a great sage. The clever hermit had adroitly observed this quite early during the meeting: Refer to (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 161, and again to (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 162.

²Not wanting to take any risk caused by revelation of his identity and evil designs, and thereby putting to grave peril his own security and life, the evil hermit continues to harp on the importance and the necessity of complete secrecy of the plan and its implementation.]

जौं नरेस में करौं रसोई । तुम्ह परसहु मोहि जान न कोई ॥ ५ ॥
 अन्न सो जोड़ जोड़ भोजन करई । सोड़ सोड़ तव आयसु अनुसरई ॥ ६ ॥
 पुनि तिन्ह के गृह जेवँइ जोऊ । तव बस होइ भूप सुनु सोऊ ॥ ७ ॥
 जाइ उपाय रचहु नृप एहू । संबत भरि संकल्प करेहू ॥ ८ ॥

jauṁ narēsa maim̐ karaum̐ rasō'ī. tumha parusahu mōhi jāna na kō'ī. 5.
 anna sō jō'i jō'i bhōjana kara'ī. sō'i sō'i tava āyasu anusara'ī. 6.
 puni tinha kē gr̥ha jēvam̐ jō'ū. tava basa hō'i bhūpa sunu sō'ū. 7.
 jā'ī upāya racahu nr̥pa ēhū. sambata bhari saṅkalapa karēhū. 8.

[And finally the hermit reveals to the king the formidable and monster plan. He said assertively—] If I prepare and cook the meal for a grand feast that you are required to organize for all the Brahmins, and you serve this food yourself to the invited guests (the Brahmins) without anyone knowing that the food has been cooked by me, --- (5)

--- Then all those who partake of this food will become unquestionably obedient to you; they would obey your commands without reservations, become totally subservient to you, and be under your full sovereignty. (6)

Listen oh king. Not only this, but all those who would subsequently eat food in the homes of such guests whom you would have served in the feast too would come under your spell and command, and this chain would go on expanding and getting wider in an exponential manner to eventually cover the entire Brahmin race! (7)

So, oh king, go and make haste to carry out this magical device. And make sure that you take a vow that such feasts would be organized on a regular basis for one full year. (8)

[Note—The credulous king obviously had lost all his wits in his zeal to accomplish the impossible. Couldn't he logically think how a hermit, who has lived all his life in the forest subsisting on forest produce and lean and simple food, would be skilled enough to cook delicious fare for a grand royal feast where thousands of guests would be fed—not for one day but for a whole year.

Would that not mean that the hermit would not be able to attend to his routine of spiritual practices for this long period of time? No matter how nice and obliging the hermit may be, but this proposition of abstaining from his religious practices for one full year just for the sake of a king ought to be absolutely unacceptable and ridiculous for any good hermit to even contemplate. Wasn't there something fishy in the whole matter?

But what to say—destiny's writ is so strong and blinding that the wisest and the cleverest fall in the trap as if a piece of iron is being pulled by an invisible magnet.]

दो०. नित नूतन द्विज सहस सत बरेहु सहित परिवार ।
मैं तुम्हरे संकल्प लागि दिनहिं करबि जेवनार ॥ १६८ ॥

dōhā.

nita nūtana dvija sahasa sata barēhu sahita parivāra.
mair̥ tumharē saṅkalapa lagi dinahim̥ karabi jēvanāra. 168.

Everyday you must invite a hundred thousand Brahmins with their families! I will personally prepare the food daily that you would serve the guests for one full year. (Doha no. 168)

[Note—The hermit knew fully well that all that he proposes to do is absurd and ridiculous to the extreme. If the number of Brahmins he said the king must feed daily extends for a year then it does not need a mathematician to calculate after all the Brahmins who live on this earth would have partaken of the food in one round would be invited repeatedly again and again. What after all is the use of this futile exercise if one meal is enough to cast a magical spell on the Brahmins, especially if all those who eat in the household of the Brahmin who has already eaten the king's food at the feast would also come under the king's spell?

It seems extraordinarily superfluous and extravagantly unnecessary. But still the greedy and deluded king could not see the trap laid out for him!]

चौ०. एहि बिधि भूप कष्ट अति थोरें । होइहहिं सकल बिप्र बस तोरें ॥ १ ॥
करिहहिं बिप्र होम मख सेवा । तेहिं प्रसंग सहजेहिं बस देवा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ēhi bidhi bhūpa kaṣṭa ati thōrēm̥. hō'ihahim̥ sakala bipra basa tōrēm̥. 1.
kariyahim̥ bipra hōma makha sēvā. tēhim̥ prasaṅga sahaḥjēhim̥ basa dēvā. 2.

'Oh king, in this easy way and with the least of trouble all the Brahmins would come under your spell. (1)

The Gods, in turn, would easily come under your sway by the virtue of the various 'Sewas' (services) that these Brahmins offer to them, such as doing 'Homa' (offerings meant for the Gods that the Brahmins make to the sacred fire during sacrifices), and 'Makha' (fire sacrifice rituals)¹. (2)

[Note—¹The offerings that are made to the sacred fire during sacrifices are meant for the Gods as they derive their nourishment and strength from the food that are offered during such rituals.

It has already been assured by the hermit in Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 168 herein above that "all those who eat in the households of Brahmins who were fed by the king during the grand feast that is being planned in order to cast a spell of magical charm upon the Brahmins and bring them all under the will of the king, would also become obedient to him, and this chain would continue so that ultimately the entire Brahmin race would be under the king's magical charm".

So therefore it is logical that the food which the Brahmins, who have already eaten the magically charmed food at the king's feast and have come under his spell, prepare in their homes and then offer such food to the Gods via the medium of the fire sacrifices that they do would also bring the Gods who partake this magically charmed food to come under its effect, which means that they would also become obedient to the king just like the other Brahmins who happen to eat this food.

It indeed is a fantastically clever idea that is wonderfully planned and proposed to be executed in a masterly fashion aimed to bring both the Brahmins and the Gods under the tutelage of the king at one stroke. No wonder than that the king was awe-struck at the ingenuity of the hermit! Anyone in his place would have marveled at the hermit's stupendous intellect and astounding genius at being able to devise such a flawless device as so short a notice.]

और एक तोहि कहउँ लखाऊ । मैं एहिं बेष न आउब काऊ ॥ ३ ॥
 तुम्हरे उपरोहित कहूँ राया । हरि आनब मैं करि निज माया ॥ ४ ॥
 तपबल तेहि करि आपु समाना । रखिहउँ इहाँ बरष परवाना ॥ ५ ॥ मैं धरि तासु बेषु सुनु राजा । सब बिधि तोर सँवारब काजा ॥ ६ ॥ aura ēka tōhi kaha'um' lakhā'ū. mair̥m ēhir̥m bēṣa na ā'uba kā'ū. 3.

 tumharē uparōhita kahum' rāyā. hari ānaba mair̥m kari nija māyā. 4.
 tapabala tēhi kari āpu samānā. rakhiha'um' ihām' barāṣa paravānā. 5.
 mair̥m dhari tāsu bēṣu sunu rājā. saba bidhi tōra sam'vāraba kājā. 6.

[I shall now tell you another important secret.] (Since) I will never come to your place to accomplish your objective in my present form (as I have already told you that my identity should be kept completely secret), so I give you a sign or a hint (by which you would be able to recognize me). (3)

Oh king, I shall carry-off your family priest by the virtue of my magical powers (nija māyā). (4)

Employing the mystical powers that I possess by the virtue of my Tapa, I shall keep him here in this hermitage disguised as myself during the whole year (while I would be at your place to keep my promise to you and carry on with my obligations of preparing the magical food to be served at the feast). [To wit, by this ruse no one will doubt or become suspicious of anything. Should any secret agent come to enquire here at my hermitage, he will find the dummy hermit here and become assured that everything is alright. And since your priest would be under the spell of my charm he too would be so much deluded that he wouldn't ever know who he actually is or anything about his changed circumstances.] (5)

I will assume his (your priest's) form and fulfill all your desires in every possible way. [The people will think that it is your own family priest who has advised you to undertake this grand and novel exercise. It is he who is overseeing the entire process, right from organizing the feast, inviting Brahmins, preparing food, and serving it to the guests. No one would doubt anything, and you will have nothing to fear. I too will be able to carry out my plans with a free hand.] (6)

गै निसि बहुत सयन अब कीजे । मोहि तोहि भूप भेंट दिन तीजे ॥ ७ ॥
मैं तपबल तोहि तुरग समेता । पहुँचैहउँ सोवतहि निकेता ॥ ८ ॥

gai nisi bahuta sayana aba kījē. mōhi tōhi bhūpa bhēṅṭa dina tijē. 7.
mair̥m tapabala tōhi turaga samētā. pahum̐cāiha'um̐ sōvatahi nikētā. 8.

It is now quite late in the night, so go and sleep. Oh king, I shall meet you three days from now¹. (7)

While you would be asleep, I shall employ the magical powers that I have got by the virtue of my Tapa and convey you and your horse to your home (even without waking you up from your sleep). (8)

[Note—¹The hermit did not want to show that he was in any great hurry. The king must be given due time to rest and think. After all that had happened during the course of that day, the king would be too upset and weary to act in a proper way if the entire plan was to be rolled out the very next day. It will also create suspicion in the mind of the king's ministers etc. who, in all probability, must be in great anxiety and alarmed beyond measure when they failed to follow the king and had lost track of him as he was running behind the game during the hunt. Surely they would be searching for the king in the forest the entire next day of the hunt.

When the hermit would transport the king back home by some magical means he plans to employ about which we shall read in a moment, the good news that the king has returned unharmed would spread immediately. And by-and-by the search party would come to know of it and return to the capital by the end of the day or the next day.

Everyone will think that after hotly pursuing the game and slaying it in some distant part of the forest, the king had returned home late in the night and sneaked in. It would seem absolutely okay as great kings would often go out in disguise and in a surreptitious manner to find out how the things were going on in the kingdom and what the condition of its citizens was. This is because they wanted to take stock of the situation first hand without relying blindly upon their informers and spies.

So the next one day or two would be spent in this way. By the third day however, the things would settle down to normal. This is why the hermit chose the 'third day' to carry out the plan.]

दो०. मैं आउब सोइ बेषु धरि पहिचानेहु तब मोहि । जब एकांत बोलाइ सब कथा सुनावीं तोहि ॥ १६९ ॥

dōhā.

mair̥m ā'uba sō'i bēṣu dhari pahicānēhu taba mōhi.
jaba ēkānta bōlā'i saba kathā sunāvaur̥m tōhi. 169.

Now remember, I shall come there in the disguise I have told you about (i.e. as your royal priest). So you must recognize me when I call you for a private meeting and narrate this entire story for your recollection¹. (Doha no. 169)

[Note—¹How will the king know whether or not the priest to whom he is talking in his capital is his benefactor hermit? It will be when the hermit, who would be disguised as the royal priest, tells the king all that had transpired in the hermitage in the forest. Then the king would immediately know who the priest actually was, and then he must obey what is commanded to him to do.]

चौ०. सयन कीन्ह नृप आयसु मानी । आसन जाइ बैठ छलग्यानी ॥ १ ॥
श्रमित भूप निद्रा अति आई । सो किमि सोव सोच अधिकाई ॥ २ ॥
caupā'ī.

sayana kīnha nṛpa āyasu mānī. āsana jā'i baiṭha chalagyānī. 1.
śramita bhūpa nidrā ati ā'ī. sō kimi sōva sōca adhikā'ī. 2.

The king obeyed the hermit's orders and went to sleep, while the deceitful and fraudulent hermit, who pretended to be all-knowing and possessing mystical powers, went and sat down on his seat¹. (1)

The king was very tired, so he immediately fell asleep. But how could the hermit sleep as his mind was very busy with thoughts². (2)

[Note—¹The false hermit was extra cautious. He thought that the king may pretend to sleep but might be watching what the hermit does for the rest of the night. Since the hermit had given the impression that he does a lot of Tapa, he thought that it would be wise to go and sit on his seat and pretend to be doing meditation.

Besides this, he did not want to sleep just to ensure that the king did not get up quietly and slip away in the dead of night. It would bring every thing that the hermit had planned coming down with a crash. And he also did not want to sleep for the fear that the king might have seen through the veil of deceit and would get up quietly and kill the hermit by his sword.

²This is the fourth reason why the hermit did not go to sleep. His mind was too occupied with thoughts and plans that sleep defied him. His arch enemy was right in his front, sleeping soundly and unarmed. Should he stab him here and now? No, that would destroy the bigger plan. He wanted the entire family of king Pratapbhanu to be destroyed, and so if he killed the king alone now then the rest of them will remain alive, and one day they will surely spy him out and then torture him to death.

So the hermit sat and contemplated.]

कालकेतु निसिचर तहँ आवा । जेहिं सूकर होइ नृपहि भुलावा ॥ ३ ॥

परम मित्र तापस नृप केरा । जानइ सो अति कपट घनेरा ॥ ४ ॥ kālakētu nīsicara taham'āvā. jēhim sūkara hō'i nṛpahi bhulāvā. 3.

parama mitra tāpasa nṛpa kērā. jāna'i sō ati kapaṭa ghanērā. 4.

Meanwhile, Kalketu, a demon who used to roam around during the night (kālakētu nīsicara), arrived there. It was he who had disguised himself as a wild boar to waylay the king (Pratapbhanu) and make him go astray¹. (3)

This demon had become a fast friend of the hermit, and he was skilled in deceit and carrying out magical feats of delusion. (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 156—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 157.]

तेहि के सत सुत अरु दस भाई । खल अति अजय देव दुखदाई ॥ ५ ॥ प्रथमहिं भूप समर सब मारे । बिप्र संत सुर देखि दुखारे ॥ ६ ॥ tēhi kē sata suta aru dasa bhā'ī. khala ati ajaya dēva dukhadā'ī. 5.

prathamahim bhūpa samara saba mārē. bipra santa sura dēkhi dukhārē. 6.

He (the demon Kalketu) had seven sons and ten brothers. They had become invincible and used to torment the Gods a lot. (5)

When the great king Pratapbhanu saw the misery and sufferings to which the Brahmins, saints and sages as well as the Gods were subjected to by these demons, he had slayed them in the beginning of his many campaigns. [But somehow this demon Kalketu managed to escape, and he went to the dense forest to hide in it.] (6)

तेहिं खल पाछिल बयरु सँभारा । तापस नृप मिलि मंत्र बिचारा ॥ ७ ॥
जेहिं रिपु छय सोइ रचेन्हि उपाऊ । भावी बस न जान कछु राऊ ॥ ८ ॥ tēhim khala pāchila bayaru sambhārā. tāpasa nṛpa mili mantra bicārā. 7.

jēhim ripu chaya sō'i racēnhi upā'ū. bhāvī basa na jāna kachu rā'ū. 8.

This wicked fellow developed hatred for the king and vowed to take revenge when the opportunity would come in due course. He forged a friendship with the hermit (who was also an enemy of king Pratapbhanu as he had been defeated in a battle and had managed to escape to the forest where he hid in the guise of a hermit).

Both of them (i.e. the demon Kalketu whose family members were killed by Pratapbhanu, and the erstwhile king who was defeated in battle and whose kingdom was snatched by Pratapbhanu, and who now lived in disguise as a hermit) hatched a conspiracy by which a plan was contrived to bring about complete ruin of their common enemy (i.e. king Pratapbhanu).

But unfortunately due to the fiat of fate, the king was totally unaware of this wicked plot and the identity of the perpetrators of this sinister conspiracy. (7-8)

दो०. रिपु तेजसी अकेल अपि लघु करि गनिअ न ताहु । अजहुँ देत दुख रबि ससिहि सिर अवसेषित राहु ॥ १७० ॥
dōhā.

ripu tējasī akēla api laghu kari gani'a na tāhu.
ajahum' dēta dukha rabi sasihi sira avasēṣita rāhu. 170.

[The sagacious and erudite poet-saint Tulsidas, the author of this classic Ram Charit Manas, cites a well established maxim which states that—] One must not underestimate and take lightly a powerful enemy even though he may be alone (at the time due to certain circumstances)¹.

For instance, the demon Rahu, who has nothing left out of his body except his head, is able to perpetually torment both the Sun and the Moon by devouring them periodically (inspite of being fully aware that he cannot permanently harm them in any way as they would soon emerge from the severed part of his neck)². (Doha no. 170)

[Note—¹King Pratapbhanu was so over-confident of his own invincibility, of his strength, powers and authority that at the time the defeated king as well as the defeated demon ran away from his clutches he had not searched them out and take them into his custody or had completely eliminated them because he thought that they wouldn't be of any consequence in the future, and they would not dare and would not be able to cause him any harm whatsoever. So he paid no attention to the escapees. Little did he know at the time that these two seemingly impotent enemies who had been completely routed, and hence rendered toothless and harmless as they had no support of arms or an army, would one day prove to be his nemesis and the cause of his ruin.

Had the king been wise he would have hunted them down and put them into a prison. To the message is that even the smallest and seemingly harmless enemy is dangerous and he should never be taken lightly, nor should his sweet words be taken at face value. Even if an enemy can't do much harm to his adversary he can still be a cause of incessant problems and constant harassment that is more irritating than an outright confrontation. It's like something of a skin affection that causes constant irritation and incessant annoyance even if it is not life-threatening.

²The demon Rahu had his head severed from his neck by Lord Vishnu's discus when he had tried to cheat on the Gods by disguising himself as one of them and sitting surreptitiously between the Sun God and the Moon God when the Amrit, the nectar of immortality, was being distributed at the time when it was produced by the legendary 'churning of the ocean by the gods and the demons'. The Sun and the Moon discovered his deceit and they warned Lord Vishnu who cut off Rahu's head, but by that time a drop of Amrit had fell in his head. So he couldn't be killed.

The Creator then found a way out so that Rahu may survive inspite of being decapitated. He told him that once in a while he would be able to devour one of the Gods as a retribution for what has been done to him. Since the cause of this misfortune that befell Rahu was the Sun and the Moon gods, he took a pledge that when he felt hungry he would gobble up the rounded ball of the Sun and the Moon as a repast to feed his hunger.

So whenever Rahu feels hungry he lunges at the ball of the Moon and the Sun and swallows them into his open mouth. But soon these balls emerge from the hollow cavity of the neck from where the body of Rahu was severed. According to mythology, these two events—i.e. eating and then discharging of the Sun and the Moon by Rahu are known as the Solar and the Lunar eclipses respectively. The eclipse starts when either of the two enters Rahu's mouth, and the eclipse ends when they emerge from his severed neck.

What is implied here is that the Sun and the Moon Gods took Rahu very lightly when his head was cut off from his neck, as they thought what a decapitated enemy would ever do to them, never realizing that the same enemy, who seemed rendered impotent to cause any harm as his body was cut into two, would continue to torment them till the end of creation.

Similarly, king Pratapbhanu had thought that since he was so mighty that he had conquered all the great kings and valiant warriors of the time, a single king or demon who ran away like an impotent coward from the battle field were of no more importance than a tiny insect, and so he did not bother to waste his energy and time to pay any heed to them for he feared nothing from their quarter. And now this negligence on his part proved to be his own grave.]

चौ०. तापस नृप निज सखहि निहारी । हरषि मिलेउ उठि भयउ सुखारी ॥ १ ॥

मित्रहि कहि सब कथा सुनाई । जातुधान बोला सुख पाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tāpasa nrpa nija sakhahi nihārī. haraṣi milē'u uṭhi bhaya'u sukhārī. 1.
mitrahi kahi saba kathā sunāī. jātudhāna bōlā sukha pāī. 2.

The hermit-king saw his friend, the demon (Kalketu), arrive. So he got up and met him cheerfully, feeling very glad and accomplished. (1)

Then the hermit told him the entire story (of what had transpired between him and king Pratapbhanu). Hearing everything the demon felt very happy, and he then said—
(2)

अब साधेउँ रिपु सुनहु नरेसा । जाँ तुम्ह कीन्ह मोर उपदेसा ॥ ३ ॥

परिहरि सोच रहहु तुम्ह सोई । बिनु औषध बिआधि बिधि खोई ॥ ४ ॥

कुल समेत रिपु मूल बहाई । चौथें दिवस मिलब मैं आई ॥ ५ ॥ aba sādhe'um' ripu sunahu narēsā. jaum tumha kīnha mōra upadēsā. 3.

parihari sōca rahahu tumha sōī. binu auṣadha bi'ādhi bidhi khōī. 4.
kula samēta ripu mūla bahāī. cauthēm divasa milaba mairm āī. 5.

‘Listen king. If you do according to what I advice you then be sure that I have finally conquered our common enemy (i.e. we will now be able to destroy him without bringing any harm to our own safety). (3)

Now discard all worries and go to sleep. The Creator has become benevolent upon us and he has virtually cured the disease without any medicine! [To wit, it was not an easy thing to bring about our enemy’s destruction so easily. But it seems that the Creator has listened to our prayers as now this destruction of our arch enemy is certain, and that also by an easy method and the least effort. It’s a virtual boon for us!] (4)

After eliminating the enemy and throwing him out (ruining him) from his very roots along with his entire family, I shall come back to meet you on the fourth day.’¹ (5)

[Note—¹It is obvious by now that this demon, who had great magical powers in him as demons usually had and as proved by his becoming a wild boar earlier, was the one who would do all the nasty tricks that would culminate in king Pratapbhanu’s fall. The hermit-king played the role of laying the bait and trapping the prey, but the actual killing was done by this demon.

The hermit had told king Pratapbhanu that he would meet him on the ‘third day’. So now the demon tells him that everything would be fixed and ended on the third day itself if things go according to plan, and on the fourth day he will return to convey the good news of Pratapbhanu’s destruction to his friend, the hermit. Then it would be time to rejoice!]

तापस नृपहि बहुत परितोषी । चला महाकपटी अतिरोषी ॥ ६ ॥
 भानुप्रतापहि बाजि समेता । पहुँचाएसि छन माझ निकेता ॥ ७ ॥ नृपहि नारि पहिं सयन कराई । हयगृहँ बाँधेसि बाजि बनाई ॥ ८ ॥ tāpasa nr̥pahi bahuta paritōṣī. calā mahākapaṭī atirōṣī. 6.

 bhānupratāpahi bāji samētā. pahum̐cā'ēsi chana mājha nikētā. 7.
 nr̥pahi nāri pahim̐ sayana karā'ī. hayagr̥ham̐ bām̐dhēsi bāji banā'ī. 8.

After having reassured the hermit in various ways¹, the angry demon (Kalketu), who was exceptionally cunning, deceitful and wicked, started on his mission with a vengeance. (6)

He (the demon) used his magical powers to convey (transport) the king and his horse to the palace almost in an instant. (7)

The king was placed at his usual place by the queen’s side, and the horse was taken to the stable and tied up properly there in the usual manner². (8)

[Note—¹The hermit was very skeptical if this master scheme of deceit and stab-in-the-back would actually succeed as he knew of the might and the intelligence of king Pratapbhanu as well as his ministers. He was apprehensive that the king may become suspicious in case the demon, who would actually carry out the plan instead of the hermit himself, made any slip or committed some error somewhere, wittingly or unwittingly. That would be disastrous for both of them—for the king would immediately capture the demon and torture him to reveal the truth of his companion, the hermit. And then both of them would be sent to the gallows.

So it was necessary for the demon to reassure his friend, the hermit, not to worry on any count.

²It is indeed a great feat of magic that is beyond imagination. Surely the queen was asleep at the time, and the guards of the stable must be dozing. None got the hint that the king and the horse have come back all of a sudden. When we read this story of magical transportation and of the subsequent feast that was organised in the king's capital, then many of the tales from the fables of 'One Thousand and One Arabian Nights' come to the mind.]

दो०. राजा के उपरोहितहि हरि लै गयउ बहोरि ।
लै राखेसि गिरि खोह महुँ मायाँ करि मति भोरि ॥ १७१ ॥

dōhā.

rājā kē uparōhitahi hari lai gaya'u bahōri.
lai rākhēsī giri khōha mahum̐ māyām̐ kari mati bhōri. 171.

The demon carried away the king's royal priest (employing the same magical powers with which he had brought the king and his horse), and after casting a delusory spell upon the abducted priest, he hid him in a cave in the mountain. (Doha no. 171)

चौ०. आपु बिरचि उपरोहित रूपा । परेउ जाइ तेहि सेज अनूपा ॥ १ ॥
जागेउ नृप अनभाएँ बिहाना । देखि भवन अति अचरजु माना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

āpu biraci uparōhita rūpā. parē'u jā'i tēhi sēja anūpā. 1.
jāgē'u nr̥pa anabha'ēm̐ bihānā. dēkhi bhavana ati acaraju mānā. 2.

He (the demon Kalketu) disguised himself as the royal priest and went to lie down on his wonderful bed. (1)

The king woke up before dawn, and when he found himself inside the palace he was astonished beyond measure¹. (2)

[Note—¹The last thing of which the king was aware of was his being in a hermit's hermitage in the midst of a forest in the night, and of his going to sleep at the hermit's request. Then as he was very tired he immediately sank into deep sleep. But when he woke up he found himself inside his palace and lying on his own bed. It was sure to stun him and befuddle his mind. For a moment he could not bring himself to understand that what he was seeing was actually a fact and not merely a dream. It took him some time to reflect on the developments of the previous night and gather his wits sufficiently enough to have some bearing about himself and his whereabouts.]

मुनि महिमा मन महँ अनुमानी । उठेउ गवँहिं जेहिं जान न रानी ॥ ३ ॥
कानन गयउ बाजि चढ़ि तेहीं । पुर नर नारि न जानेउ केहीं ॥ ४ ॥ muni mahimā mana mahum̃ anumānī. uṭhē'u gavam̃him jēhim jāna na rānī. 3.

kānana gaya'u bāji caḍhi tēhim̃. pura nara nāri na jānē'u kēhim̃. 4.

Reflecting upon the developments the king concluded that it is due to the hermit's astounding mystical powers that this miracle could happen (that he has been transported so secretly from the hermitage in the deep forest to his palace in the capital, a distance of seventy yojans, so quickly and imperceptibly). [To wit, the awe-inspired king attributed his presence in the palace to the magical powers of the hermit whom he believed could do the most supernatural things one can hardly think of.]

So (to ensure that no one could know what had happened) he got up very quietly in such a way that the queen would have no inkling that he had come there and then gone away, and sneaked out of the palace surreptitiously. (3)

He silently picked up the same horse and secretly rode out to the forest so that no one in the city, not a single male or female citizen, could know anything of the matter¹. (4)

[Note—¹One would wonder how the king managed to go out of his palace to the stable, collect his horse, and from there go out of the city to the forest without anyone knowing anything about it.

The answer is common sense and it lies in the precautions that kings normally took as a matter of security. In the case of danger, a king had some secret route by which he would escape before the enemy could lay his hand upon him. King Pratapbhanu had gone out of the city by this route.]

गएँ जाम जुग भूपति आवा । घर घर उत्सव बाज बधावा ॥ ५ ॥
उपरोहितहि देख जब राजा । चकित बिलोक सुमिरि सोइ काजा ॥ ६ ॥

ga'ēm̃ jāma juga bhūpati āvā. ghara ghara utsava bāja badhāvā. 5.
uparōhitahi dēkha jaba rājā. cakita bilōka sumiri sō'i kājā. 6.

When it was noon time, the king returned. When the news spread of his return safely, there was mass celebration in the city as every household rejoiced with playing of music and singing of songs. (5)

When the king saw his priest he was speechless as he immediately recollected the work that was discussed between him and the hermit, and for which this priest was chosen as a medium by which it could be successfully accomplished¹. (6)

[Note—¹The king upon his safe return was met by all his anxious ministers, courtiers, commanders and citizens. Of course the royal priest was one of them. So as soon as the king's eyes fell upon this unfortunate man his mind alerted him about all that the hermit had said the previous night.

Let us not forget that the demon had abducted the original priest and replaced him with his own disguised form—refer: Doha no. 171 herein above. The demon was a master in deceit and magic, so he also knew the art of hypnotism. When the eye of the king met this decoy priest's eyes, the demon cast his deep, penetrating and hypnotic gaze upon the king to bring him under his magical spell. The deluded king thereafter acted like a puppet, meekly dancing to the tune of the crafty puppeteer!

One can very well visualize the scene of the moment—while everyone was exuberant and lively, embracing each other and thanking God for the king's safe return, and all the chief courtiers and ministers joyously milling around the king and expressing their happiness at his coming back with a smile on their cheerful faces, the priest stood quite aloof and almost emotionless even though he also attended the welcoming ceremony for the king and sported a formal smile on his otherwise somber face. No one noticed it as no one could ever doubt, even in their wildest of imaginations, about anything being amiss or any kind of fish-play, chiefly with respect to the royal high priest who was held in high esteem.

But when the eyes of the two met, i.e. of the king and the priest, some unworded and silent message was exchanged between the two of them. Even if the king felt excited for a fleeting moment and blood rushed to his cheeks, he suppressed his emotions consciously as he remembered the word of honour he had given to the hermit—which was to exercise the greatest of restraint and discretion, and keep everything top secret.]

जुग सम नृपहि गए दिन तीनी । कपटी मुनि पद रह मति लीनी ॥ ७ ॥
समय जानि उपरोहित आवा । नृपहि मते सब कहि समुझावा ॥ ८ ॥

juga sama nr̥pahi ga'ē dina tīnī. kapaṭī muni pada raha mati līnī. 7.
samaya jāni uparōhita āvā. nr̥pahi matē saba kahi samujhāvā. 8.

The king remained on tenterhooks for three days that passed (while he waited for the hermit to come and meet him), and these three days seemed to be like three Yugs for him to pass. [To wit, the three days looked like ages for the king, and the time passed so slowly for him as if three cycles of creation and destruction had passed.]

During this time the king's mind was always thinking reverentially of the hermit who pretended to be holy and pious but albeit was full of wickedness, deceit and fraud¹. (7)

When the appointed time arrived (i.e. the third day), the priest came to the king and told the king about the secret story (to signal him about his identity and to remind him about the job at hand)². (8)

[Note—¹That is why the word used for the hermit in the text is 'kapaṭī muni'—i.e. a sage or hermit who is full of wickedness, fraud, deceit and pretension.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 169 in this context where the hermit had told the king that when he would come to him and remind him about the work to be done on the third day, then the king must recognize him.]

दो०. नृप हरषेउ पहिचानि गुरु भ्रम बस रहा न चेत । बरे तुरत सत सहस बर बिप्र कुटुंब समेत ॥ १७२ ॥

dōhā.

nṛpa haraṣē'u pahicāni guru bhrama basa rahā na cēta.
barē turata sata sahasa bara bipra kuṭumba samēta. 172.

The king was jubilant when he recognized his Guru. He was unaware of the reality due to the veil of delusions which had been cast upon him to shroud his wisdom and make his mind and intellect become defunct so much so that even his natural instincts for prudence and self-preservation were undermined¹.

So he immediately (without due diligence and consulting his advisors) invited a hundred thousand chosen Brahmins along with their families for a meal². (Doha no. 172)

[Note—¹One very important observation can be made here. The king was driven blind by his ambitions to bring even the learned Brahmins under his sway, and through them to have control over the Gods—this was what was promised to him by the hermit. Refer: Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 168 herein above. This would make him the sole and unchallenged ruler of the whole world as he desired—refer: Doha no. 164 herein above.

In his eagerness to accomplish even the impossible, the greedy king had thrown to the winds the basic principles of caution that should have warned him much early of something being wrong when the hermit had told him that “he would remove his royal priest surreptitiously using his powers of Maya or the ability of creating delusions, and sneak himself in his stead”—refer: Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 169.

The king should have thought this matter over carefully: Why would a holy and pious hermit—who is supposed to lead a life of renunciation and detachment from all worldly pursuit—adopt such wrong and deceitful ways to please someone, no matter what the motivation was? Why would a holy man cheat someone, especially when the object of such cheating was himself supposed to be a pious and holy man as the royal priest was expected to be? How can a person who practices cheating and deceit for any reason or cause be a true hermit or sage? But the king was so overwhelmed by his ambitious greed that he did not bother to pay attention to such tell-tale signs of fraud and mischief that seemed to be insignificant or inconsequential to him as long as his wishes could be fulfilled.

²On the face of it, things looked perfectly normal. The king had faced some grave misadventure when it appeared that he was all but lost in the un-chartered forest; then he returned safe and sound the next day. It was obviously a time to celebrate. In such good times great kings were accustomed to give a grand feast to feed the Brahmins and others in the kingdom. The citizens and the ministers thought that the priest was within his rights and was doing his duty to advise the king for the grand feast. So no suspicion was raised!]

चौ०. उपरोहित जेवनार बनाई । छरस चारि बिधि जसि श्रुति गाई ॥ १ ॥

मायामय तेहिं कीन्हि रसोई । बिंजन बहु गनि सकइ न कोई ॥ २ ॥

caupāṭi.

uparōhita jēvanāra banāṭi. charasa cāri bidhi jasi śruti gāṭi. 1.

māyāmaya tēhim kīnhi rasōṭi. binjana bahu gani saka'i na kōṭi. 2.

The royal priest (who was actually the demon Kalketu in a disguised form) supervised the preparation of the food for the grand repast. He prepared the food according to the way prescribed in the Vedas for a grand feast that is organized on such occasions—i.e. the food was of all the four categories, and had all the six kinds of tastes¹. (1)

He used his magical powers to create a huge illusion that made the food look extraordinarily wonderful and supernaturally good, with a wide variety of viands and sumptuous delicacies that defied imagination and description. (2)

[Note—¹The four classical categories of food are—(a) Bhakshya--that which is eaten raw by tearing and lacerating with the help of teeth, that which requires proper chewing and mastication before it can enter the food pipe, e.g. bread, fruits, vegetables, chewing of sugarcane; (b) Bhojya--that which is cooked and eaten with fingers or spoons, requiring least chewing or masticating and can be easily swallowed down the gullet, e.g. rice, curry; (c) Lehya--that which is licked with the tongue, e.g. eating pickles or honey; and (d) Choshya--that which is sipped or sucked, e.g. water, milk, tea.

The Garbho-panishad of the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition, verse no. 5 however classifies the four basic types of foods as—(i) Lehya: that which is licked; (ii) Peya: that which is drunk; (iii) Khaadya: that which is chewed or masticated; and (iv) Choshya: that which is sucked.

The six classical forms of tastes are the following flavours that the tongue feels—sweet, acidic, bitter, pungent, sour and salty. They are compared to the six seasons in this world. Refer Bhavana Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, verse no. 2, stanza no 10.

Sometimes, the six tastes are listed as being sweet, salty, sour, bitter, pungent or hot, and astringent. Sometimes acidic (vinegar) and bland are also regarded as separate category of tastes. Refer Garbho-panishad, verse no. 1 of Krishna Yajur Veda tradition.]

बिबिध मृगन्ह कर आमिष राँधा । तेहि महुँ बिप्र माँसु खल साँधा ॥ ३ ॥

भोजन कहुँ सब बिप्र बोलाए । पद पखारि सादर बैठाए ॥ ४ ॥

bibidha mṛganha kara āmiṣa rāṁdhā. tēhi mahum̃ bipra māṁsu khala sām̃dhā. 3.

bhōjana kahum̃ saba bipra bōlā'ē. pada pakhāri sādara baiṭhā'ē. 4.

And in this food he mixed meat of different animals as well as that of Brahmins. [To wit, in order to ensure that the food served by the king to the invited guests would be completely defiled and polluted in terms of its sanctity, the wicked demon did not limit himself to mixing animal meat, but he went further to mix even the flesh of dead Brahmins with the food.] (3)

The ignorant king welcomed the invited Brahmins for the repast, and he duly washed their feet as a mark of respect before they were seated. (4)

परुसन जबहिं लाग महिपाला । भै अकासबानी तेहि काला ॥ ५ ॥
 बिप्रबृंद उठि उठि गृह जाहू । है बड़ि हानि अन्न जनि खाहू ॥ ६ ॥
 भयउ रसोई भूसुर माँसू । सब द्विज उठे मानि बिस्वासू ॥ ७ ॥
 भूप बिकल मति मोहँ भुलानी । भावी बस न आव मुख बानी ॥ ८ ॥ parusana jabahim lāga mahipālā. bhai akāsabānī tēhi kālā. 5.

 biprabṛnda uṭhi uṭhi gr̥ha jāhū. hai baḍi hāni anna jani khāhū. 6.
 bhaya'u rasō'īm bhūsurā māṁsū. saba dvija uṭhē māni bisvāsū. 7.
 bhūpa bikala mati mōham' bhulānī. bhāvī basa na āva mukha bānī. 8.

As soon as the king started serving the meal to the invited Brahmins, a mysterious voice was heard in the sky which warned the guests¹—(5)

‘Oh Brahmins! Get up and go back to your homes. To eat this food would be very demeaning and sinful for you all, so don’t eat it even taste a bit of it. (6)

The meal is mixed with the flesh of Brahmins.’

All the assembled Brahmins believed this mysterious voice that warned them, and they got up immediately. (7)

The stunned king was dumbfounded and taken aback. His mind was befuddled by delusory veil that was already cast upon it, so he couldn’t think coherently. He was under the spell of ill-fate that had provisioned for his doom, and so he could not say a word (in self-defense). (8)

[Note—¹One may wonder who was he that spoke mysteriously from the sky? Was this some God warning the Brahmins that the food was defiled by meat?

No, it was not the voice of any God, but it was the demon Kalketu himself. How can we deduce this? Well, if it had been some God then the voice would have also told the Brahmins that one demon named Kalketu had mixed meat in the food that was being served.

Not only that, the Gods would have alerted the unsuspecting king at the very beginning that meat was being mixed in the royal kitchen, and he must inspect it immediately.

Therefore in all probability, the meat was actually mixed just at the nick of time when the food was taken from the kitchen and was being served to the Brahmins. This ensured that no alarm was raised and the king alerted, for if the mixing was done in the kitchen itself then at least some of the cooks and assistants who were engaged keeping in mind the vastness of the scale of the enterprise, at least some would have known that meat is being mixed, and it is absolutely sure that the king would have been informed. Obviously no one in his right mind would have ever expected that the king would order meat to be mixed in the food meant for the Brahmins.

That is why he was stunned and stood dazed as he just could not comprehend what was happening.

So it is definitely the voice of the demon Kalketu.

We shall read shortly that this voice is heard again, but the second time it is the Gods who are speaking because they realized that the Brahmins had unwittingly cursed an innocent king whose only fault was that he believed a hermit and also that he was unduly ambitious. But that does not mean that he had planned to defile the religious beliefs of the Brahmins and make them commit such a grave sin as eating meat. So the Gods came to the defense of the king, but by this time the damage was already done and it was too late to rectify it.]

दो०. बोले बिप्र सकोप तब नहिं कछु कीन्ह बिचार । जाइ निसाचर होहु नृप मूढ़ सहित परिवार ॥ १७३ ॥

dōhā.

bōlē bipra sakōpa taba nahim kachu kīnha bicāra.
jā'i nisācara hōhu nr̥pa mūṛha sahita parivāra. 173.

The Brahmins were taken aback and became very angry, and without thinking anything they vehemently cursed the king, 'Oh stupid king! Go and become a demon yourself, along with all your other family members. (Doha no. 173)

चौ०. छत्रबंधु तैं बिप्र बोलाई । घालै लिए सहित समुदाई ॥ १ ॥
ईस्वर राखा धरम हमारा । जैहसि तैं समेत परिवारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

chatrabandhu tair̥m bipra bōlāī. ghālai li'ē sahita samudāī. 1.
īsvara rākhā dharama hamārā. jaihasi tair̥m samēta parivārā. 2.

Oh fallen Kshatriya (king) who pretended to be friend of all (chatrabandhu)! You had invited all the Brahmins along with their kith and kin in order to destroy their religion and make them all fall into committing a grave sin (because eating meat is strictly prohibited for a Brahmin). (1)

It is by the grace of God that our religion and spiritual practices could be saved, but you will be condemned and destroyed along with all your kith and kin. [To wit, you had tried to make us eat meat, so you too would be turned into meat-eating monster along with your entire family.] (2)

संबत मध्य नास तव होऊ । जलदाता न रहिहि कुल कोऊ ॥ ३ ॥
नृप सुनि श्राप बिकल अति त्रासा । भै बहोरि बर गिरा अकासा ॥ ४ ॥
बिप्रहु श्राप बिचारि न दीन्हा । नहिं अपराध भूप कछु कीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥ sambata madhya nāsa tava hō'ū. jaladātā na rahihi kula kō'ū. 3.

 nṛpa suni śrāpa bikala ati trāsā. bhai bahōri bara girā akāsā. 4.
 biprahu śrāpa bicāri na dīnhā. nahim̃ aparādha bhūpa kachu kīnhā. 5.

Your complete ruin shall occur within a year. No one would be left in your clan to offer water to your spirit after you are dead.' (3)

The king was extremely agitated and horrified with fear when he heard the curse.
 The voice from the sky spoke once again¹— (4)

'Oh Brahmins! You had not given due thought before cursing the king, for the king is not at fault at all.' (5)

[Note—¹In this context, refer to the note appended to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 173 herein above.

The first time it was the demon Kalketu who spoke so that the Brahmins would curse the king. But this second time it is the Gods who are speaking because they realized that the Brahmins had unwittingly cursed an innocent king whose only fault was that he believed a hermit and also that he was unduly ambitious. But that does not mean that he had planned to defile the religious beliefs of the Brahmins and make them commit such a grave sin as eating meat. So the Gods came to the defense of the king, but by this time the damage was already done and it was too late to rectify it as the Brahmins regretted for their curse but were unable to do anything now.]

चकित बिप्र सब सुनि नभबानी । भूप गयउ जहँ भोजन खानी ॥ ६ ॥
 तहँ न असन नहिं बिप्र सुआरा । फिरेउ राउ मन सोच अपारा ॥ ७ ॥
 सब प्रसंग महिसुरन्ह सुनाई । त्रसित परेउ अवनीं अकुलाई ॥ ८ ॥ cakita bipra saba suni nabhabānī. bhūpa gaya'u jaham̃ bhōjana khānī. 6.

 taham̃ na asana nahim̃ bipra su'ārā. phirē'u rā'u mana sōca apārā. 7.
 saba prasaṅga mahisuranha sunā'ī. trasita parē'u avanīm̃ akulā'ī. 8.

The Brahmins were astonished and speechless when they heard this message from the heaven¹.

Meanwhile, the vexed king went to the kitchen to inspect the stock of food kept there in preparation for it being served. (6)

There in the kitchen he discovered that neither was there any food nor the Brahmin cook (i.e. the priest who was supposed to be supervising the cooking of the meal)².

Flabbergasted and completely crestfallen by the misfortune that stared on his face, the king returned with a heavy heart and overcome with dark foreboding thoughts crowding his mind. (7)

He came back to where the Brahmins were waiting³, told them the entire story, and terrified and out of his wits, he fell down trembling out of fear at their feet (seeking mercy and reprieve). (8)

[Note—¹The Brahmins could neither imagine nor believe that such a grand event can take place in full public view without the king being in the knowledge of what is actually happening. But since this was proclaimed by the heavenly voice they had to believe its truthfulness.

²We have read that the demon Kalketu knew stupendous magical tricks, and he had used his magical abilities to prepare a huge feast with diverse categories of food in such a short span of time as a single day. This feat is not practical and humanly possible even for a great king to pull off. Hence the demon had just created an illusion of prepared food.

³Why were the Brahmins waiting? It is because they were themselves confused about what had actually happened and wanted to know the truth. So they waited out of curiosity for the king to go and find out what had actually happened.

Meanwhile their anger abated a little and they began regretting that they had been too hasty in making the curse.]

दो०. भूपति भावी मिटइ नहिं जदपि न दूषन तोर । किँ अन्यथा होइ नहिं बिप्रश्राप अति घोर ॥ १७४ ॥

dōhā.

bhūpati bhāvī miṭa'i nahim jadapi na dūṣana tōra.
ki'ēṁ an'yathā hō'i nahim bipraśrāpa ati ghōra. 174.

The Brahmins said to the king, 'Oh king! It is not possible to change what has been written in one's fate by providence, though it is clear that you were not at fault.

A Brahmin's curse is very terrible and it cannot be altered or revoked.¹ (Doha no. 174)

[Note—¹If one were to look at this episode dispassionately, one is bound to think that if the Brahmins could curse someone if he is at fault, then they should also show some sort of mercy and compassion when it is proved that the cursed person is not at all at fault. Why is this one-sided approach? If someone is empowered to punish then he is also empowered to give reward, or at least reduce the intensity or severity of the punishment.

If the Brahmins cursed the king to become a flesh-eating ogre when they believed that he was trying them to eat meat and fall into committing a grave sin, then when it was revealed that the king was innocent they could have reduced the gravity of the curse and diluted it with some kind of positive boon even if it was not possible to completely revoke the main curse.

That is possibly why when the king became a demon named Ravana he wrecked havoc on the Brahmins. He was particularly antagonistic with the hermits and others who were attired in a holy garb as it is they and this garb that had cheated him in his previous life.

Why was Ravana not antagonistic with the demons? It is because he was totally unaware that some demon named Kalketu was the chief culprit that brought ruin to him.]

चौ०. अस कहि सब महिदेव सिधाए । समाचार पुरलोगन्ह पाए ॥ १ ॥ सोचहिं दूषन दैवहि देहीं । बिरचत हंस काग किय जेहीं ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

asa kahi saba mahidēva sidhā'ē. samācāra puralōganha pā'ē. 1.
sōcahiṁ dūṣana daivahi dēhīṁ. biracata hansa kāga kiya jēhīṁ. 2.

The invited Brahmins went their way, and the citizens heard the news¹. (1)

All the citizens were extremely distressed, perturbed and perplexed beyond measure. They began to blame Providence for the most unexpected evil turn of events, lamenting that the Creator had begun the process of making a swan but produced a crow instead². (2)

[Note—¹When the large group of Brahmins were going back home it is but natural that they were all animatedly talking and discussing about the events of the day. Besides them, there were countless attendants, waiters and servitors of the king at the feast. So the news of the king being cursed spread like wild-fire all through the length and breadth of not only the city but even to the distant realms of the kingdom.

The citizens loved their king very much as he was a very righteous ruler who ruled judiciously and in accordance with the laws of Dharma (propriety and probity; principles laid down for good governance in the scriptures). If the king became great and strong it was so much the better for the common man as it would deter attack from enemies and herald peace and prosperity.

The happy citizens therefore looked forward to a great future when suddenly this bad turn of events struck them like lightening—for they knew that their own future was intricately and inseparably linked to the future of their king, and so if the king was doomed their own future was doomed too.

As a result, a dark pall of gloom descended upon the capital. What was a bright day of celebrations and rejoicing a moment ago suddenly turned into a gloomy day of mourning and grief.]

उपरोहितहि भवन पहुँचाई । असुर तापसहि खबरि जनाई ॥ ३ ॥ तेहिं खल जहँ तहँ पत्र पठाए । सजि सजि सेन भूप सब धाए ॥ ४ ॥ uparōhitahi bhavana pahum'cā'ī. asura tāpasahi khabari janā'ī. 3.

tēhiṁ khala jaham'taham'patra paṭhā'ē. saji saji sēna bhūpa saba dhā'ē. 4.

Meanwhile, the demon brought the royal priest back home, and then he informed his friend, the hermit, of the news (that the mission has been successfully accomplished). (3)

That rascal (the hermit-king) then immediately sent out letters to other kings (who were defeated and conquered by Pratapbhanu earlier, and had harboured a secret desire for revenge)¹.

When these kings (who were obviously acquainted with this hermit-king, and so could recognize his signature or handwriting or the language that kings usually use for royal messages) heard the news (which greatly pleased them), all of them made haste, arranging their armies and launching attacks either singly or in groups (to vanquish king Pratapbhanu once and for all)². (4)

[Note—¹The hermit-king was well acquainted with the events of king Pratapbhanu's 'campaign of conquest' when he had fought many battles and had subjugated countless kings by the force of his arms in order to become an emperor. Not a single king was happy at this development, and though they all surrendered to Pratapbhanu but secretly all of them hated him and would welcome a chance to square accounts with him.

The question arises—who was the messenger who took the hermit-king's letters to these kings? The answer is easy—it was his demon friend Kalketu. We have already seen that Kalketu possessed great magical powers, so it was just a sport for him to reach all the kings and deliver the message in a short span of time.

²It is quite possible that this hermit-king had been maintaining some sort of secret contact with all like-minded kings. They were all waiting for such an opportunity, so as soon as the message came that their sworn enemy king Pratapbhanu had been cursed to doom by the Brahmins, a curse which is bound to be true no matter how strong Pratapbhanu was, they hurried to grab the chance and get the honour of being the first one to vanquish an all-powerful emperor whom the world praised as being invincible a day ago.

These kings were sure that they will now certainly succeed to bring Pratapbhanu to his knees and force him to bite dust as he was now heavily encumbered with a great mill-stone in the form of the Brahmin's curse around his neck; it was like a shackle from which he can't break free, and which was bound to sink him, and along with him his entire family, into an abyss from which there was no door of recovery.]

घेरेन्हि नगर निसान बजाई । बिबिध भाँति नित होइ लराई ॥ ५ ॥

जूझे सकल सुभट करि करनी । बंधु समेत परेउ नृप धरनी ॥ ६ ॥

ghērēnhi nagara nisāna bajā'ī. bibidha bhām̐ti nita hō'i larā'ī. 5.

jūjhē sakala subhaṭa kari karanī. bandhu samēta parē'u nr̥pa dharanī. 6.

These enemy-kings surrounded the capital city from all the sides, playing their battle drums and sounding their trumpets of war. Every day there were fierce battles. (5)

All the greatest of warriors and fighters of the kingdom fought bravely and courageously before all of them fell down in the battle-field one-by-one (to have a dignified death befitting an honourable warrior who is lauded for such a death, instead of running away from the battle-field).

Ultimately even the king (Pratapbhanu) fell down in the battle-field along with his brother (named Arimardan). [Alas, the noble king Pratapbhanu and his brave brother Arimardan too died in the battle.] (6)

सत्यकेतु कुल कोउ नहिं बाँचा । बिप्रश्राप किमि होइ असाँचा ॥ ७ ॥
रिपु जिति सब नृप नगर बसाई । निज पुर गवने जय जसु पाई ॥ ८ ॥ satyakētu kula kō'u nahim bāmčā. biprasrāpa kimi hō'i asāṁčā. 7.

ripu jiti saba nrpa nagara basāī. nija pura gavanē jaya jasu pāī. 8.

Alack, no one in the illustrious family of the great and noble king Satyaketu (i.e. his descendants king Pratapbhanu, his brother Arimardan, and others) survived!

[To wit, all in the family of king Satyaketu died one after another in the battles that raged in the wake of the Brahmins cursing king Pratapbhanu and his entire family.]

Say, how can a curse of Brahmins be false?

[To wit, it was only due to this curse that every single member of the great king Pratapbhanu's family died; no one escaped. His clan was completely annihilated. Had it not been for the curse there was no one on earth who would have dared to defeat the mighty king.] (7)

After having conquered and completely destroying their arch enemy (king Pratapbhahu), all the attacking kings re-established the city, and collecting rich spoils of war and tributes from its citizens they went back to their respective kingdoms, basking in the glory of conquest and feeling exuberant at having had the honour of defeating a seemingly invincible emperor¹. (8)

[Note—¹As is normally the case in such situations of military campaigns where a number of allied forces unite against a single enemy, when the war is over and the allied forces become victorious, they divide the spoils of war in proportion to their contribution in the war effort, restore and reconstruct the city, reach an agreement whereby the dominant partner or the one who had first entered the besieged city and conquered it is given control over the city, agreeing to appoint a governor who presides over a senate having representatives of all the partners, and then the rest of the partners return home leaving the day-to-day administration of the city to the people chosen by them by common consent.

So was also the case with the capital city of king Pratapbhanu. After the war ended, its citizens were rehabilitated, a new administrative machinery was put into place, the victors exacted their share of tributes and spoils of war, and then they returned jubilant and victorious to their own homelands.]

दो०. भरद्वाज सुनु जाहि जब होइ बिधाता बाम । धूरि मेरुसम जनक जम ताहि ब्यालसम दाम ॥ १७५ ॥

dōhā.

bharadvāja sunu jāhi jaba hō'i bidhātā bāma.
dhūri mērusama janaka jama tāhi byālasama dāma. 175.

[This story was narrated by sage Yagyawalkya to sage Bharadvaj. So Yagyawalkya said—]

‘Listen Bharadwaj. When the Creator turns hostile and becomes malevolent towards someone then even an inconsequential particle of dust turns into an insurmountable mountain as huge as Meru¹ for him, his own father becomes a personified form of the god of death for him, and the harmless rope or an ordinary garland becomes like a poisonous snake for him². (Doha no. 175)

[Note—¹Mt. Meru is the huge mountain where Gods are supposed to have their abode on earth.

²All these three instances can be seen to have proved themselves in the case of king Pratapbhanu.

The first is the instance of “an inconsequential particle of dust turns into an insurmountable mountain as huge as Meru”. The king who was defeated by the mighty king Pratapbhanu and who ran away from the battle-field to hide in the forest disguised as a hermit, was most inconsequential and not worthy of paying any more attention because he had lost his army and all his supporters. He was alone and banished to the forest. For all practical purposes this disenfranchised and defeated hermit-king presented no cause of worry for the mighty king Pratapbhanu. He was virtually like a speck of dust against the might of an emperor. But as it happened, this seemingly harmless and hapless hermit turned to be the nemesis of Pratapbhanu. So in effect, ‘the miniscule dust became like a huge mountain which crushed Pratapbhanu underfoot’.

The second instance of “father becoming a personified form of the god of death” is made true also as Pratapbhanu himself calls the hermit ‘father-like’ in Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 160 herein above, but this same fellow mercifully plotted the ruin of a person whom he accepted as his ‘son’—refer: Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 163 herein above.

In the third instance of “the harmless rope or an ordinary garland becoming like a poisonous snake” we find that the large number of Brahmins whom the king had always shown respect and who had always benefited from the king’s charities and patronage now did not hesitate to bite him viciously by cursing him to utter doom].

चौ०. काल पाइ मुनि सुनु सोइ राजा । भयउ निसाचर सहित समाजा ॥ १ ॥

दस सिर ताहि बीस भुजदंडा । रावन नाम बीर बरिबंडा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kāla pā'i muni sunu sō'i rājā. bhaya'u nisācara sahita samājā. 1.
dasa sira tāhi bīsa bhujadaṇḍā. rāvana nāma bīra baribaṇḍā. 2.

[Sage Yagyawalkya told sage Bharadwaj—] ‘Listen oh sage! In due course of time the same king (Pratapbhanu) became a demon along with his whole clan.

[To wit, all the members of his near and extended family as well as his close associates such as ministers and courtiers and commanders and servitors and other members of the royal entourage became demons in their next births¹.] (1)

He had twenty arms and ten heads, and his name was ‘Ravana’². He was extraordinarily strong and brave, and had long and sturdy arms that were like huge maces or clubs. (2)

[Note—¹It is not clearly said here if the citizens of his capital and the subjects of his kingdom too became demons. In the previous Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 175 it is mentioned that the victorious kings ‘re-established the capital before returning back home’.

This question is answered below in Chaupai line no. 6 which says that king Pratapbhanu’s servitors, his attendants, servants, ministers, courtiers, commanders of the army, governors of his kingdom and all others who served him directly or indirectly, along with their own family members such as their sons etc, had become demon in the next birth.

We can visualise two scenes here as follows:

(i) It may be that only those who were close to king Pratapbhanu and fought for him in the battles to die in the battle-field were the ones who ‘were reborn as demons’. The ordinary citizens did not participate in the actual battles, and so they escaped death. Hence there was no question of their being ‘born again or taking a rebirth’ as either demons or anyone else.

(ii) The other possibility is that everyone, including the citizens, became demons. But then it would mean that every single person was slaughtered in the war. This was obviously not the case as then who would live in the reconstructed city. Even during modern wars when the army defending a city surrenders, its inhabitants are spared death. The only casualties are the ones that occur while the battle rages, and not after the defending army surrenders. In this case therefore, after king Prtapbhanu was killed the war automatically ended, and with it ended further bloodshed.

So in all probabilities, and logically also, only those who died during the duration of the battles and who were close to king Pratapbhanu became demons. The rest of the subjects, who were not directly serving the king or who had managed to flee the city, survived, only to come back when the war ended and the victors were rehabilitating it.

²Thus, king Pratapbhanu became the demon king Ravana in the next birth.

The Atharva Veda’s Ram Purva Tapini Upanishad, Canto 3, verse no. 18 describes the meaning of the word ‘Ravana’ as follows—

“Since the demon had abducted Ram’s consort (Sita) from a ‘Van’ (pronounced as won or one; meaning a dense forest), he was called ‘Ravana’¹. [The first letter of the word Ram and the word Van are combined to form the name of the demon as ‘Ra+van = Ravana’.]

There is another interpretation. ‘Ravana’ also means—‘the one who makes others weep, cry, lament and wail due to the severe pain, misery, torments, terror and sorrows inflicted upon them’ (for Ravana’s actions had made Sita suffer, weep and wail). Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 16.

Further, he made a lot of noise or false claims, or he used to brag haughtily about his achievements, his strength and powers as well as of his invincibility and lordship over even the heavens. Wherever he went, he behaved most wildly and acted like a savage, making a lot of din and clamour to spread fear and terror.

So, the first part of his name Ravana comes from the word Rav for ‘fuss, noise, chatter, clamour, nuisance and din’². Thus, he became famous as ‘Ravana’ because he made a lot of noise and false claims.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram and Laxman began their search for Sita (18).

[Note—¹There is an interesting connotation of the word ‘Ravana’. Since his name includes the Beej Mantra for Lord Ram which incidentally is also the Beej Mantra for the eternal fire element, i.e. the letter ‘Ra’, it implies that Ravana was not an ordinary soul but a highly learned and scholarly one. Then, the word ‘Van’, meaning a forest, implies that he was a ‘treasury’ of scriptural knowledge and learning. The fact that he became a ‘demon’ instead of a living being behooving of his high standard of scriptural scholarship, knowledge, learning and erudition as well as his birth in the Brahmin race shows how merely literal knowledge and expertise in the scriptures would not necessarily mean that a person is exalted, worthy of honour and reverence, and spiritually liberated if he has not actually understood the hidden meaning of the doctrines and philosophy of the scriptures, and if he has not actually implemented them in practice in his life and deeds.

Ravana had become extremely haughty and arrogant because of his knowledge and acquisition of mystical powers that come naturally to them who do severe Tapa (penances, austerities, religious exercises), and Ravana had scored high on this count. He had done exemplary Tapa so much so that it had pleased Brahma the creator as well as Shiva the concluder. There are numerous instances in the story of the Ramayana when he has told those who had tried to persuade him to abandon his stubbornness and make peace with Lord Ram that he knows fully well that Ram is not an ordinary prince but the Supreme Being himself, and that Sita is not an ordinary woman but Shakti herself. He had stressed to them that he has purposely created this situation of animosity with the Lord by stealing Sita with full knowledge that this would lead to his getting slayed at the hands of the Lord, and that this was the only once-in-a-lifetime opportunity that he has got for his spiritual liberation from the prison of the evil body of a demon that he had acquired for himself due to his own follies and misdeeds. He would not let go of this golden chance by any means. When we take this point of view of Ravana into account, the whole story of Ramayana assumes a divine hue as the story of a highly learned and realised soul who has committed some mistakes in the past due to arrogance and lack of wisdom as to what his deeds would amount to, but realises and acknowledges later on that he is a sinful man. All the deplorable actions of Ravana around which the story of the epic Ramayana is woven are actually the attempt of a soul to find redemption for its past sins, and find emancipation and salvation once and for all.

Besides this point of his scriptural knowledge, it is also well established that he was the greatest devotee of Lord Shiva at that time. Shiva is the Lord who is honoured by the title of being a ‘Maha-Deva’—the great Lord God. Shiva is also the patron God of ascetics and hermits, and he is the wisest and most enlightened God in the pantheon of Gods. So, the point is—how can one expect an ardent and faithful devotee of such a great God as actually being as sinful and unholy internally as Ravana’s external behaviour and life has made him appear to be?

²In this regard there is a legend that when Ravana lifted Mount Kailash, where Lord Shiva has his abode, in order to transplant it in his own kingdom of Lanka, Lord Shiva had exerted immense pressure on this mountain so as to make it exceedingly heavy and difficult to be shifted and moved over to Lanka by Ravana. At that time, Ravana had made a lot of fuss and created a lot of nuisance. Hence he came to be known as ‘Ravana’.]”

The ‘ten’ heads of Ravana has a symbolic meaning. Usually the demons had only one head like all living beings. They were called ‘demons’ because of their evil and sinful deeds, corrupt and pervert mind and intellect, cruelty of behaviour, reckless and ruthlessness tendencies, and despicable general demeanours. The demons had a preponderance of the Tama Guna, and a negative nature marked by horribly violent and intolerably volatile temperament. They had contempt for ethics and morality; they paid no heed to the principles of Dharma (righteousness, probity, propriety, nobility and auspiciousness).

The numeral ‘ten’ simply means that their king Ravana was ten times more sinful and ten times more powerful than the rest of them. It also means that negativity and evil nature of Ravana was ten times more than other demons of his race. So the Lord decided to get rid of this great menace for creation first, and then treat the ten-headed Ravana’s killing as a warning to the rest of the demon race to mend their selves or face the same punishment. The Lord wished to give the rest of the demons a chance to mend their ways out of fear for their lives, if for nothing else. In fact, this is what exactly happened. Not all the demons were killed and eliminated from the surface of earth during the epic war at Lanka—and the surviving ones were ruled by Vibhishan who was the younger brother of Ravana and who had taken sides with Lord Ram in the epic war at Lanka in which his elder brother Ravana was killed.

This proves one more very important and pertinent point—merely possessing a gross body like that of a demon does not mean that a Jiva is condemned if his Atma, his inner being is not demonic or sinful, and instead is holy and pious like other wise and realized souls in this creation. Further, merely Gyan or knowledge of the scriptures does not ensure that the creature would be provided with Mukti or spiritual liberation and deliverance—this is proved by the fact that though Ravana was an expert in the knowledge of the Vedas and other scriptures, and though he was a Brahmin by birth, he still was the most evil Jiva alive at that time. Therefore, it is how a Jiva (living being, a creature) puts his body and knowledge to practical use that is of paramount importance rather than merely possessing a certain type of gross body or being able to have an access to knowledge and scriptures.

Hence, while the Lord felt it necessary to eliminate the demon king Ravana, the same Lord made his brother Vibhishan as the king of the remaining demon race.

There is another interpretation of depicting Ravana with ten heads. He was not an ordinary demon or villain, for Ravana was an expert in the four Vedas (Rig, Sam, Yajur and Atharva), the four Up-Vedas or sub-Vedas (Dhanur Veda pertaining to the science of warfare, Aurveda pertaining to herbal medicines, Arthashastra pertaining to economics and public administration, and Gandharva-veda related to music, song and dance-drama), the Purans (mythological histories) and the Dharmashastras (other scriptures relating to the philosophy of Dharma or the laws of probity, propriety and righteousness). But inspite of having thoroughly studied all the Vedas and scriptures, inspite of being an expert in their tenets, and inspite of having this huge body of knowledge at his disposal, Ravana still became extremely pervert and sinful because of his vanity, passions, lust for power, ego, haughtiness and arrogance. He did not understand the spiritual message and meaning of the scriptures, and he did not utilise this knowledge for his spiritual welfare, most probably because he limited himself to their literal knowledge only, a knowledge that gave him immense temporal powers and fame but proved to be his unmaking.

This has the message for all spiritual aspirants and seekers of Mukti that mere knowledge of the scriptures is not sufficient for one’s salvation; one must implement them in practice. By killing Ravana the Lord has sent a strong message to such people who are proud of their overpowering control over the literal versions of the scriptures that salvation is not theirs if they are not careful in how they utilise this knowledge and skill intelligently with proper wisdom. The Lord would not excuse them even if they are Brahmins (Ravana was a Brahmin by birth) and learned (Ravana was matchless in his knowledge of the scriptures) if they become sinful and fall from their path.

Why is he known as ‘Ravana’? According to one story, once Ravana got on his chariot and flew above Kailash, the mountain abode of Lord Shiva. Nandi, the mount of Shiva, told him to stop, but the arrogant Ravana did not pay any heed. So Nandi blocked his path in the sky. Peeved and feeling insulted, Ravana scooped up the entire mountain and put it on his shoulder to throw it somewhere. Lord Shiva used his might and pressed the mountain with his big toe. This crushed Ravana under the weight and the pressure, and he began to yell. He remained for a thousand years crushed under the weight of the mountain and continued to pray to Lord Shiva to free him. At that time Shiva cursed him—‘you have been wailing for so long under the weight of the mountain and you are in the habit of making others wail by your cruelty, so your name will be Ravana, or ‘the one who wails himself and make others wail too’.’ This story is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Saar Kand, Sarga 13, verse nos. 84-85.

His ten heads—Ravana had pleased Lord Shiva by offering his own head. As soon as he offered one head, another came up on his shoulder. He continued to offer them ten times, and each time a new head was created.

Once, the monkey king of Kishkindha, Vaali (or Baali), had put Ravana under his armpit for many days while the latter had gone to challenge the former when he was doing some worship. Peeved by Ravana’s arrogance and impertinence, Vaali had tucked him under his arms to stop him from annoying him any further. When his worship was finished and he had returned back to his capital at Kishkindha, he realised that Ravana was still squeezed under his armpit. So he released the latter and made a pact of friendship with him. Angad, the emissary of Lord Ram, refers to that incident when Ravana had tried his best to escape from Vaali but could not do so, and remained clamped and squeezed under his armpit for a long time in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 24. This story is narrated in Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga 34; Veda Vyas’ Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 58-59; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101.

There is another legend associated with Ravana. Once, he had asked Lord Shiva to come and stay at Lanka, the demon capital. But the Lord refused. So, determined to fulfill his wish, Ravana had scooped up the entire mountain Kailash where Shiva lives in the upper reaches of the Himalayas in his bid to plant the whole mountain at Lanka. The Gods were flabbergasted and shocked at this, so they devised a device whereby the Wind God and the Water God entered Ravana’s abdomen, which resulted in a strong urge in him to urinate somewhere between the original location of Kailash and Lanka.

Now it so happened that at the time of lifting the mountain, Ravana had pledged that he will not place Mt. Kailash on the ground before reaching Lanka, and should he do so then he would not be able to lift it again. Taking advantage of this pre-condition, the two Gods, the Wind and Water Gods, created a situation whereby Ravana could no longer hold his urine, and putting Kailash at a secure place he went to relieve himself. But when he came back, the great mountain refused to budge. This immensely annoyed Ravana and in disgust he pushed the Shiva’s Lingam with his big toe so hard that it sunk into the ground. It is believed that this insult that Ravana did to Shiva was the root cause of his fall and final death—because Shiva’s eleventh form known as ‘Rudra’, the God of wrath and annihilation, assumed the form of Hanuman, the monkey warrior who led the charge of Lord Ram's army on Lanka that culminated in Ravana's death and defeat of the entire demon army.]

भूप अनुज अरिमर्दन नामा । भयउ सो कुंभकरन बलधामा ॥ ३ ॥
 सचिव जो रहा धरमरुचि जासू । भयउ बिमात्र बंधु लघु तासू ॥ ४ ॥
 नाम बिभीषन जेहि जग जाना । बिष्नुभगत बिग्यान निधाना ॥ ५ ॥ bhūpa anuja arimardana nāmā. bhaya'u sō kumbhakarana baladhāmā. 3.

 saciva jō rahā dharamaruci jāsū. bhaya'u bimātra bandhu laghu tāsū. 4.
 nāma bibhīṣana jēhi jaga jānā. biṣṇubhagata bigyāna nidhānā. 5.

The king's younger brother named Arimardan became a demon named Kumbhakaran in the new birth. He was a virtual treasury of strength and valour.

[To wit, Kumbhakaran became Ravana's younger brother, and he was exceptionally strong, possessing immense strength and valour.] (3)

The king's chief minister who took interest in the principles of 'Dharma' (righteousness, probity, propriety, nobility in thought and conduct) became his younger step-brother¹. (4)

His name was Vibhishan. The world knows him as one who was a devotee of Lord Vishnu, and as one who was well endowed with the virtues of wisdom, sagacity, prudence and intelligence². (5)

[Note—¹King Pratapbhanu must have had many ministers like other great kings. But one of them was very close to him and the chief amongst all the ministers. He was the king's main advisor. This chief minister became Ravana's step-brother named Vibhishan.

This minister was not directly related to the king by blood, but since he was so nice and sagacious the king treated him like his own brother. So in the next birth too they were brothers but separated by blood—Vibhishan became Ravana's step-brother instead of being his direct blood-related sibling like Kumbhakaran who was Pratapbhanu's direct younger brother in the previous life.

According to Mahabharat, Vanparva, Chapter 275, Vibhishan is said to be a step-brother of Ravana. Briefly this story is as follows:-

Kuber, the treasurer of Gods, had appointed three young maidens of the demon race to serve sage Visrawa who happened also to be Kuber's father. Their names were Pushpotkataa, Raakaa and Maalini. They were experts in music and dance, and they used to keep the sage entertained. The sage was eventually pleased by their service and blessed them with boons that they would have three sons who would be as powerful and glorious as the three Lokpals, the three custodians of the three divisions of the world. By-and-by, Pushpotkataa gave birth to two sons—Ravana and Kumbhakaran, and Malini gave birth to a son named Vibhishan. The third woman named Raakaa gave birth to a daughter named Supernakha. Refer: Mahabharat, Vanparva, Chapter 275, verse nos. 7-8.

²It was expected of Vibhishan because in his previous life also he was a noble chief minister of king Pratapbhanu, and had always taken interest in following the principles of Dharma. That is why he was honoured with the name of 'Dharmaruchi'—one who takes interest in matters related to Dharma.]

रहे जे सुत सेवक नृप केरे । भए निसाचर घोर घनेरे ॥ ६ ॥
 कामरूप खल जिनस अनेका । कुटिल भयंकर बिगत बिबेका ॥ ७ ॥ कृपा रहित हिंसक सब पापी । बरनि न जाहिं बिस्व परितापी ॥ ८ ॥ rahē jē suta sēvaka nṛpa kērē. bha'e nisācara ghōra ghanērē. 6.

 kāmarūpa khala jinasa anēkā. kuṭila bhayaṅkara bigata bibēkā.
 kṛpā rahita hiṁsaka saba pāpī. barani na jāhiṁ bisva paritāpī. 4.

All the sons of the king (Pratapbhanu) as well as those who were serving him, along with their own kith and kin, became demons in their next birth. These demons were extremely ferocious and vicious, and countless in numbers. (6)

All of them were personified forms of passion and lust, and they had magical powers by which they could assume any form they wished¹. They were of many classes and orders. All were however highly wicked and deceitful, were fierce and terrible by all means, had no wisdom worth the name, and lacked all sense of propriety and probity. (7)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 181 where also this unique quality of the demon race has been reiterated.]

They had no trace of mercy or compassion in them. They were all sinful, cruel, vicious and ferocious to the extreme. It is not possible to narrate the way they ruthlessly tormented the whole world with virtual impunity. (8)

दो०. उपजे जदपि पुलस्त्यकुल पावन अमल अनूप । तदपि महीसुर श्राप बस भए सकल अघरूप ॥ १७६ ॥

dōhā.

upajā jādapi pulastyakula pāvana amala anūpa.
 tadapi mahīsura śrāpa basa bha'e sakala agharūpa. 176.

Though the demons were born in the worthy and honourable clan of sage Pulsatya which was held in great esteem, a family that was revered, free from taints, and deemed to be pious and holy, yet by the virtue of the curse of Brahmins the monstrous off-springs of the same clan became loathsome and degraded to the extreme, reaching the nadir of spiritual depravation and sinfulness, and transformed into embodiments of every sort of vice, evil, cruelty and wickedness that can be thought of. (Doha no. 176)

[Note—So far we have read about the life of Ravana in his previous birth. Now in the next Chapter no. 2 we shall read about his and his sibling's birth in the clan of sage

Pulastya, and the establishment of the demon kingdom with its capital in the island of Lanka.]

-----**-----

Part 1

Chapter 2: The Birth of Ravana And the Establishment of the Demon Kingdom

As a result of the Brahmins' curse all the members of king Pratapbhanu's family, either close or distant, as well as all his ministers, courtiers, servitors, commanders of the army, and all others who directly or indirectly served him or were related to him, became demons in their next birth.

In this Chapter no. 2 we will read the part of the story of Ravana which narrates his and his sibling's birth, their attainment of supernatural powers that made them so feared and invincible, and the establishment of the Demon Kingdom with its capital at Lanka, a golden city situated on an island in the middle of the ocean.

For this narration we be reading from two celebrated classics, viz. (i) Anand Ramayan said to have been written by sage Valmiki, and (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan that was penned by sage Veda Vyas.

This Chapter is divided into 3 sections: the 1st section (no. 2.1) quotes the story from Anand Ramayan, the 2nd section (2.2) from Adhyatma Ramayan, and the 3rd section (2.3) from Ram Charit Manas.

Section 2.1:

Anand Ramayan

Anand Ramayan narrates the story of the birth of Ravana and his siblings, the early period of his life when he and his other two brothers acquired their boons, how he gradually became so evil, the manner of his reckless and extremely pervert behaviour, his repeated defeats in battle and severe humiliation inspite of his claim to invincibility and suzerainty over the whole world, how inspite of these setbacks and insults he was never ashamed of himself, and how this behaviour caused him to be repeatedly cursed, a development that virtually neutralized the benefits of his boons, and which ultimately resulted in his death at the hands of Lord Ram.

This fascinating story is told in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 1-139. It was narrated by Lord Shiva, the third of the Trinity Gods, to his divine consort Parvati.

Now, let us proceed with the narration.

vkulñjkek; .ks

I kj dk.Me-

ānandarāmāyaṇ, sārkaṇḍ, canto 13, verse nos. 1-139.

, dñk jk?koa æ"Vq eñufñk% dñkñl ñko% A

; ; ks jkes k l ækuekfur% l mi kfo'kr~AA1AA mi fo"Vk% çâ"VkÛp eñ; ks jkei ñtrk%A l ñ "Vdñ kyk% l oñ jkea dñ kyecñpu~AA2AA

ānandarāmāyaṇe

sārkaṇḍam

ekadā rāghavaṁ draṣṭuṁ munibhiḥ kuṁbhasaṁbhavaḥ / yayau rāmeṇa saṁmānamāniṭaḥ sa upāviṣat // 1 // upaviṣṭāḥ prahrṣṭāśca munayo rāmapūjitaḥ / saṁprṣṭakuṣalāḥ sarve rāmaṁ kuṣalamabruvan // 2 //

Lord Shiva said (to his divine consort Parvati), ‘Listen dear. One day a large group of sages led by sage Agastya came to see (“draṣṭuṁ”; meaning to visit; to meet) Lord Ram (at Ayodhya). After being warmly welcomed and shown due respect by the Lord, he was given an honourable seat to sit down. (1)

All other sages who accompanied him were similarly worshipped by Lord Ram and given seats upon which all of them cheerfully sat down. When the Lord enquired about their well-being as a gesture of courtesy, they replied that everything was fine with them. (2)

dñkya rs egkekcks l oñ j?kññuA

ññ"VÓñkuha çñ ' ; keks gr'k=ñññe AA3AA ññ"VÓk Ro; k grk% l oñ eñkukñkñ; ks l jñk%A

gRok j {kksx.kkñl okñ~—r—R; ks | thofñ AA4AA

kuṣalaṁ te mahāmābo sarvatra raghunāndana / diṣṭyedānīm prapaṣyāmo hataṣatrumarīmdama // 3 // diṣṭyā tvayā hatāḥ sarve meghanādādayo'surāḥ / hatvā rakṣogaṅānsarvān kṛtakṛtyo'dya jīvasi // 4 //

Then they told Lord Ram, ‘Oh Raghunandan (literally one who was born as a son in the race of the great legendary king of Ayodhya who was called Raghu; i.e. Lord Ram) who are renowned the world over for valour, courage and strength of arms (mahāmābo sarvatra raghunāndana).

We are indeed very glad to see you seated on the throne as a victor after your successful campaign against a formidable enemy whom you had vanquished and crushed. You are surely and without gainsay the one who always trounces his enemies (arīmdama)! (3)

It is a matter of great fortune and good luck for you that you had been able to slay the demon Meghanad¹ along with all other demons.

As a result of this stupendous feat here you are present with all your majesty and glories at their zenith, and are being honoured for having eliminated all of them and accomplishing your mission successfully. [So we congratulate you for this extraordinary victory, and wish you all the best.]’ (4)

[Note—¹Meghanad was the son of the demon king Ravana.]

bfr r'skka op% Jk ok jkeLrkUçkg I fLer%A fdeFkzknks ; ðekfHkeðkuknks | dhfrz% AA5AA bfr jkeop% Jk ok· xflLrLrj oykfdR%A dkk; kfuLrnk jkea çhR; k opuecðhr~AA6AA iti teṣāṁ vacaḥ śrutvā rāmastānprāha susmitaḥ / kimarthamādao yuṣmābhirmeghanādo'dya kīrtitaḥ // 5 // iti rāmavacaḥ śrutvā'gastistairavalokitaḥ / kumbhayonistadā rāmaṁ prītyā vacanamabravīt // 6 //

Hearing these words laced with some sort of mystery, Lord Ram smiled with amusement and asked the sages, ‘Oh sages, out of all the demons who were killed in the war why did you single out Meghanad to imply that his killing was the most difficult part in the campaign for me, and so his slaying was a real rare achievement and a stupendous feat that has given me immense glory that I am being honoured for, and which has undisputedly established my fame as an unmatched warrior in the world?’ (5)

When the sages heard these words of Lord Ram, all of them turned to sage Agastya looking for an answer.

Observing that everyone was amazed at this suggestion and an answer was necessary, sage Agastya replied to Lord Ram in affectionate words—(6)

Ük. kq jke ; Fkk oÜka eṣkuknL; pŕ"Vre~A tUedeḅjçkflra l ḁkṣi knḁnrks ee AA7AA i ġk -r; ḁs jke i ḡyLR; ks cā. k% l ḁ% A
 r. kfcnd ḁk; ka l i ḁa =ṣykD; kfoJḁe~AA8AA śṛṇu rāma yathā vṛttam meghanādasya ceṣṭitam / janmakarmavaraprāptim saṁkṣepādgadato mama // 7 // purā kṛtayuge rāma pulastyo brahmaṇaḥ sutaḥ / tṛṇabimḍusutāyām sa putram trailokyāvīśrutam // 8 //

‘Oh Ram, listen. I shall tell you the story of Meghanad in brief, about his birth, deeds, and the way he had acquired some rare magical boons. (7)

Oh Ram, in the ancient age known as Satya-yuga¹, one sage named Pulastya, who was the son of the creator Brahma, married the daughter of Trinbindu. From her he begot a son who would be an expert in all the Vedas (‘Srutis’), and hence he was called ‘Visrawa’, literally one who was to become famous in the Triloki², the three divisions of the world. (8)

[Note—¹Sata-yuga is the first age of the four-yuga one cycle of creation and destruction. The other three Yugas are Treta, Dwapar and Kali. The present era in which we live is the Kali-yuga.

²The three divisions of the world are the heaven, the earth and the nether world.]

fueḅs foJok uke/ks a onfuf/ka ' kḁke~A Hkj }kt l ḁk; ka p foJok fueḅs l ḁe~AA9AA JṣBa oṣJo. ka rLeṣ çl éks Hkḁ }f/kfÜpjkr~A fof/koṣJo. kk; kFk rḁVLRÜki l k nnkS AA10AA euks fhkyf"kra ; kua /kus kRoe [kḁMre~A i ḁi da pkl; ḁnk. l ks æ"Vq foJol a ; ; ks AA11AA i ḁi ds k /kuk/; {kks cānÜksu HkkLork A uRok rkra rnk çkg u LFkua cā. kk ee AA12AA nirmame viśravā nāmadheyam vedanidhim śubham / bharadvājasutāyām ca viśravā nirmame sutam // 9 // śreṣṭham vaiśravaṇam tasmā prasanno'bhūdvihīśirāt / vidhirvaiśravaṇāyātha tuṣṭastattapasā dadau // 10 // mano'bhilaṣitam yānam dhaneṣatvamakhaṁḍitam / puṣpakam cāpyekadā'sau draṣṭum viśravasam yayau // 11 //

 puṣpakeṇa dhanādhyakṣo brahmadattena bhāsvatā /
 natvā tātam tadā prāha na sthānam brahmaṇā mama // 12 //

Befitting his auspicious name, this son, in due course of time, became famous in the world as one who was skilled in all the Vedas (primary ancient scriptures).

Visrawa begot an excellent son by marrying the daughter of sage Bharadwaj. His name was Vaisrawan. (9)

After some time, the creator Brahma became pleased with Vaisrawan's Tapa (austerity and penances) and granted him his desired boons, viz. the airplane called 'Pushpak', everlasting lordship over unmatched treasury of wealth, and the title of 'Kuber', the treasurer of the Gods.

After getting these boons from Brahma, Kuber (which was the newly acquired title and name of Visrawan) was very elated. Once he rode his magnificent plane, and adorned with the title of being the Lord of Wealth, he went to his father Visrawa to give the good tidings to him. However, when he reached his father, who was obviously extremely glad at the good fortune that his son had achieved, Kuber expressed his dissatisfaction at his acquisitions.

He complained to his father, 'Oh dear father! Brahma has not granted me an independent place to live. (10-12) nŪka LFk; a e; k dē rf}pk; / onLo eke~ A foJok áfi raçkg foŪodefofufek AA13AA yadkukEuh i ġh J$Bk I kxjs fLr I efMrk A R; DRok fo". kŪk; kÍ R; k fofo' kŪ.ra jI krye~ AA14AA dattam stheyam mayā kutra tadvicārya vadasva mām / viśravā hyapi tam prāha viśvakarmavinirmitā // 13 // laṁkānāmnī purī śreṣṭhā sāgare'sti sumamḍitā / tyaktvā viṣṇubhayāddaityā viviṣustam rasātalam // 14 //

So please think the matter over and tell me a place befitting my stature where I can go and live.'

Visrawa replied, 'A very beautiful and most excellent city called Lanka had been constructed by Vishwakarma (the Gods' architect). It is situated in the middle of the ocean. The demons who used to dwell there had abandoned it out of fear of Lord Vishnu (and hence it is lying vacant). (13-14)

I ūka Roa ol rL; ka fg rFkR; DRok /kuŪoj% A xRok rL; ka fpja dkyepkl fi rI er% AA15AA dLefŪpŪofk dkys fg I ekyhuke jk{kl % A nfg=k 0; opj ~eks i ġi dŕq nn' kZ I % AA16AA sukhaṁ tvaṁ vasa tasyāṁ hi tathetyuktvā dhaneśvaraḥ / gatvā tasyāṁ ciraṁ kālamuvāsa pitṛsaṁmataḥ // 15 // kaśimmiūcittvatha kāle hi sumālīnāma rākṣasaḥ / duhitrā vyavacaradbhūmau puṣpaketuṁ dadarṣa saḥ // 16 //

You go there and live comfortably.'

Thanking his father and saying 'so shall it be', Kuber went there (Lanka) and lived there for a long time. (15)

Some time passed without any development. Once a time a demon named Sumali came to the surface of the earth with his daughter to roam around (and show her the sights of the new world)¹.

During the course of their wanderings he sighted the wonderful plane called Pushpak in the sky. (16)

[Note—¹When the demons had abandoned Lanka because they had feared Lord Vishnu, the third of the Trinity Gods and the protector of the world, they went to the nether world and started living there. Once upon a time one of these demons decided to take his daughter to the surface of the earth for sight-seeing and to show her the 'other side of the world' where their erstwhile kingdom of Lanka was situated.]

fgrk; fpr; kekl j k{k l kuka egkeuk% A dŕd l ha ru; kekg xPN foJol a efue~ AA17AA oj; Lo equLrst%çrki kŪks I qk% 'kpk% A Hkfo"; flŕ /kuk/; {krŕ; k uks fgrdkfj .k% AA18AA hitāya ciṁtayāmāsa rākṣasānāṁ mahāmanāḥ / kaikasīṁ tanayāmāha gaccha viśravasaṁ munim // 17 // varayasva munestejaḥpratāpātte sutāḥ śumāḥ / bhaviṣyanti dhanādhyakṣatulyā no hitakāriṇaḥ // 18 //

[When Sumali saw the plane he became pensive as recollected the good old days when the demons had inhabited it and were enjoying the good things of life.]

As he was worried about the future of the demon race and seeking some way to ensure their welfare (as well as to take revenge upon the Gods, especially Vishnu who had forced the demons out of Lanka), he prevailed upon his daughter named Kaikasi to go to sage Visrawa and please him. When successful in doing so she should ask the sage to bless her with sons befitting the greatness and the mystical powers that the sage possessed. 'These sons of yours would be as majestic, powerful and strong as Kuber (because they too would have the sage's genes in them). If this succeeds then it would auger well for all of us as a race of demons.' (17-18)

I k I d; k; ka ; ; kS 'kh?ka equj xS 0; ofLFkrk A fy [kŪrh Hkfo i knkæqBu pk/kkæqkh fLFkrk AA19AA rkei PNŪeŷu% dk Roa I k·g Roa oŷkegfl A rrrks /; kRok eŷu% I oā KkRok rka çR; Hkk"kr AA20AA sā samdhyāyām yayau śighraṁ muneragre vyavasthitā / likhantī bhuvī pādāṁguṣṭhena cādhomukhī sthitā // 19 // tāmapr̥cchanmuniḥ kā tvaṁ sā"ha tvaṁ vettamarhasi /

 tato dhyātvā muniḥ sarvaṁ jñātvā tāṁ pratyabhāṣata // 20 //

In accordance with this plan, she (Kaikasi) went to the sage (Visrawa) in the evening hours. She started scrapping the earth shyly with the big toe of her leg, digging a shallow furrow in the earth, and stood before the sage. [Her demeanours and gestures clearly hinted that she wished to have some passionate moments in private with the sage.] (19)

The sage glanced at her and asked who she was. She replied (in a lust-full tone) that (being a great sage who possesses transcendental powers) he could know the answer himself if he so desired.

The sage meditated for some time and became aware of everything. (20)

Kkra rokfhkyf"kra eŷk% i ekuHkhll fl A nk#.kk; ka rŷ osyk; kekxrk· fl I e/; es AA21AA vrLrs nk#.kks i eKS jk{kl kS I alkfo"; r% A I k· cōhŪeŷu' kknīya Roŷkks I; oŷo/kks I qks AA22AA

jñātaṁ tavābhilaṣitaṁ mattaḥ putrānabhīpsasi /
 dāruṇāyām tu velāyāmāgatā'si sumadhyame // 21 //
 ataste dāruṇau putrau rāksasau sambhaviṣyataḥ / sā'bravīnmuniṣārdūlaṁ tvatto'pyevaṁvidhau sutau // 22 //

The sage replied, 'I have become aware of your wishes. You want to have sons from me. But oh the lady with a narrow waist (sumadhyame)¹, you have come here at a most inappropriate time (because these are twilight hours and not the proper time for conceiving good and noble sons). This is why you shall give birth to two monstrous who would become terrible demons.'

Taken aback, she pleaded with the sage, 'Oh great sage! Is it ever remotely possible that I shall get sons like the monsters you have just said they would be even from such a great and blessed sage like you are, one who is regarded as being a lion (king) amongst sages (muniṣārdūlaṁ)? (21-22)

[Note--¹In ancient classical literature of India, the beauty of a woman is usually described by citing one or more of her physical features that stand out as being the most remarkable. In the case of Kaikasi, she being the daughter of a monster named

Sumali, the only physical feature that could be described as ‘beautiful and attractive’ in her was her slim waist.]

rkekgkfUretks ; Lrs Hkfo"; fr egkefr% A rr% I k I qkps i e-ku- ; Fkkdkys I e/; ek AA23AA jko. ka dFkd. kã p Øksha 'kuç. k [kka 'kqkke~ A dkkhul ha duh; ka a r'rh; a ra foHkh" k. ke~ AA24AA jko. k% dkkd. kÛp =; ks ngrj LrFkk A nqÛkk% çkf. kHk{kkÛp chkwepufga dk% AA25AA tāmāhāntimajo yaste bhaviṣyati mahāmatih / tataḥ sā suṣuve putrān yathākāle sumadhyamā // 23 // rāvaṇam kumbhakarṇam ca krauñcīm sūpraṇakhām śubhām / kubhīnasīm kanīyāmsam trīyaṁ tam vibhīṣaṇam // 24 // rāvaṇaḥ kumbhakarṇasca trayo duhitarastathā / durvṛttāḥ prāṇibhakṣāśca babhūvurmunihiṁsakāḥ // 25 //

Then the great sage blessed her, saying, ‘Alright; your last son would be very wise and noble.’

After some time, three sons were born from the lady who had a beautiful waist (i.e. from Kaikasi). (23)

Ravana, Kumbhakaran, Kraunchi, Supernakha, Kumbhinasi, and the youngest of the siblings who was called Vibhishan (were the names of her six children)¹. (24)

Out of the six children, the first two sons Ravana and Kumbhakaran, as well as the three daughters (Kraunchi, Supernakha, Kumbhinasi) became very immoral monsters who were cruel flesh eaters, devouring all living beings (ogres) and killing sages and ascetics. (25)

[Note—¹There were six children of Kaikasi. Her three sons were Ravana, Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan, and three daughters were Kraunchi, Supernakha and Kumbhinasi. Ravana was the eldest, and Vibhishan the youngest.]

, dnk jko. kks ek=k fyækfka çf"kr% f' koe- A drq çl éedjkr~ dÿkl s deZ nq'dje~ AA26AA fdçpRL=h; a f' kj f' NÜok oh. kka "kM-tLoj sçp% A —Rok i hBa fg ngL; rUeyaf' kj I LrFkk AA27AA rnxa i kn; k% —Rok 'kaçuaçfyfHkLrFkk A ra=h% —Rok· U=ekykfHk% 'krks kks Fk I gL=' k% AA28AA

, oa —Rok LongL; oh. kka "kM-tLoj 30% A pdkj Loed[kuš xka/koā xk; ua 'kllke~AA29AA ekadā rāvaṇo mātrā liṅgārthaṃ preṣitaḥ śivam / kartuṃ prasannamakaroṭ kailāse karma duṣkaram // 26 // kimcitstrīyaṃ śiraṣchittvā vīṇāṃ ṣaḍjasvarairmuhuḥ / kṛtvā pīṭhaṃ hi dehasya tanmūlaṃ śirasastathā // 27 // tadagram pādayoḥ kṛtvā śamkūnaṅgulibhistathā / tamtrīḥ kṛtvā'ntramālābhiḥ śatoṣo'tha sahastraṣaḥ // 28 // evaṃ kṛtvā svadehasya vīṇāṃ ṣaḍjasvarairmuhuḥ / cakāra svamukhenaiva gāṃdharvaṃ gāyanaṃ śubham // 29 //

One day Ravana's mother Kaikasi sent him to Lord Shiva to bring the Lord's symbol known as the Shiva-Lingam.

Obeying his mother, Ravana went to Mt. Kailash (where Lord Shiva is believed to dwell) and did a most astonishing thing that defies imagination to please Lord Shiva. (26)

[What did he do?] He made an Indian lute out of his own body (so that he could use this musical instrument to play a sweet tune to accompany the prayers that he would offer to Shiva to please him)!

He crafted the upper part of this lute from a part of his own skull that he cut-off. Then he used his body to mould the rest of the lute. He used his legs to make the lower part of the lute, his fingers as the knobs and the pegs, and pulled out his own intestines to make countless fine wires that were tautly tied around these pegs and knobs so that they would produce musical notes when pulled or struck. In this wondrous way he made a unique and magnificent lute.

After that he began singing beautifully like the Gandharvas (the singers of heaven), using the lute so crafted from his own body to produce all the six categories of tunes and notes that are deemed to be alluring, sweet and charming in classical Indian music. (27-29) rnk uanhiŮoj a kg 'kadjks ykcd' kadj% A f'kj% l 7kk; gLrsu Ro; k okP; ks | jko. k% AA30AA vkRefyax jk{kl a Roka 'kadjks u nkL; fr A ânra fg e; k Kkra 'kllkL.Roa ; kfg LoLFkye~AA31AA tadā naṃdīśvaraṃ prāha śamkaro lokaśamkaraḥ / śiraḥ samdhāya hastena tvayā vācyo'dya rāvaṇaḥ // 30 // ātmaliṅga rākṣasaṃ tvāṃ śamkaro na pradāsyati / hr̥dgataṃ hi mayā jñātaṃ śambhostvaṃ yāhi svasthalam // 31 //

Then Lord Shiva, who does good for the whole world, asked his close attendant Nandi, the Bull, to go to Ravana and fix his head (put it back on his body) with his own hands. Then Nandi was asked to tell Ravana, 'Lord Shiva will never give the Lingam, which he holds very dear to his heart, to a demon like you, for I (Nandi) know the inner thoughts of Shiva (as I am very close to the Lord and his confidante). So therefore you should go back to your place. (30-31)

bR; ØRok çš'k. kh; % I jko. k% L=LFky Ro; k A bfr 'kålkkoj% JØok ; ; kS unñ I jko. ke~ AA32AA f' kj% I a kšT; gLru f' oksäa ra U; on; r~ A rPNØok jko. kÜpkfi I efrØE; rka fu' kke~ AA33AA ityuktvā preṣaṇīyaḥ sa rāvaṇaḥ strasthala tvayā / iti śambhorvacaḥ śrutvā yayau naṁdī sa rāvaṇam // 32 // śiraḥ samyojya hastena śviktaṁ taṁ nyavedayat / tacchru tvā rāvaṇaścāpi samatikramya tāṁ niṣāṁ // 33 //

Shiva instructed Nandi that after telling Ravana this, he must send him back home.
 Hearing these words of Lord Shiva, Nandi went to Ravana. (32)

He stitched Ravana's head back on his body and told him what Lord Shiva had said.
 But even after hearing Shiva's words (instructions), Ravana did not return home but stayed there during the night. (33) pdkj i wbnxkua f}rh; fnol s i q% A uflnuk 'kæj Üpkfi i wbnka U; on; r~ AA34AA bRFka n' k fnukU; ø xrkfu jko. kL; p A vFk rRdeZ kk rŧV% 'kæjks xk; usu p AA35AA cakāra pūrvavadgānaṁ dvitīya divase punaḥ / nandinā śamkaraścāpi pūrvavattaṁ nyavedayat // 34 // itthaṁ daṣa dinānyeva gatāni rāvaṇasya ca /

 atha tatkarmaṇā tuṣṭaḥ śamkaro gāyanena ca // 35 //

The next day Ravana once again began singing praises for Lord Shiva in the same way as he had done on the first day. Once again Lord Shiva sent Nandi with the same message as was done the earlier day (asking Ravana to go back home). (34)

In this way, Ravana continued for ten days with his songs using the lute (made daily from his own body after it was restored by Nandi the previous evening) and the prayers that he offered to please Lord Shiva. (35)

HkØok çl éLra çkg oj øj; pfr oS A –"Vøk 'kålk jko. kks fi f' kjI k ru I f/kr% AA36AA oj; kekl e lek=s ákRefyaxa rFkk ee A i RU; Fkã i koṛha nfg rFkR; ØRok nnks f' ko% AA37AA bhūtvā prasannastaṁ prāha vara mvaraya ceti vai / drṣṭvā śambhuṁ rāvaṇo'pi śirasā tena saṁdhitah // 36 // varayāmāsa manmātre hyātmaliṅgaṁ tathā mama / patnyarthaṁ pārvatīm dehi tathetyuktā dadau śivaḥ // 37 //

Finally Lord Shiva was pleased with Ravana's perseverance and tenacity of purpose with which he had been performing such a difficult penance (as making a lute out of his own body) and singing such sweet songs to pray fervently to the Lord.

So the Lord appeared before Ravana, and stitching his head back to his body with his own hands. (36)

Then he asked Ravana to seek a boon. Ravana asked Shiva, 'If you are indeed pleased with me, then give your Lingam which is so dear to your heart so that I can give it as a gift to my mother, and also give Parvati¹ to me so I can make her my wife!'

Saying 'so shall it be', Lord Shiva granted the two boons. (37)

[Note—¹Parvati is Shiva's divine consort! It's so incredulous to believe that Shiva would give away his own consort to another person, demon or not, to make it possible for him to wed her. This instance shows that Lord Shiva is indeed a true ascetic from his inner-core because he is attached to none, not even his own wife, as well as a matchless and selfless giver of gifts and desired grants like none other in this creation, because when he is pleased with someone he does not blink in fulfilling his desires, no matter how absolutely absurd, unbelievable and horrible such desires are.]

x'ghRok xrpkea ra i u% çkg gjLrnk A eÜkks'kkFkã Ro; k ohj n' kokja fu ta f' kj% AA38AA
 [k³xu Nfnra; LekÜkLekÜks | f' kjkfi fg A n'k foãk~qtKÜpkfi Hkfo"; flur fxjk ee AA39AA grhītvā gaṁtukāmaṁ taṁ punaḥ prāha harastadā / mattoṣārthaṁ tvayā vira daṣavāraṁ nijam śiraḥ // 38 // khaṅgena cheditaṁ yasmāttasmātte'dya śirāmsi hi / daṣa viṁṣadbhujāścāpi bhaviṣyanti girā mama // 39 //

When he (Ravana) took possession of them (i.e. the Shiva Lingam and Parvati) by the virtue of the boon granted by Lord Shiva and was on his way back home, the Lord blessed him further, saying, 'Since you had cut your head ten times with a sword to please me, so I bless you that you will have ten heads and twenty arms¹'. (38-39)

[Note—¹An ordinary individual has two arms and a head. Hence the arithmetic of this boon is simple—viz. if Ravana should have ten heads because he had chopped-off his heads ten times to offer them to Lord Shiva, then he must also have a proportionate number of arms to go with each of these heads, i.e. each head must have two accompanying arms, which means ten heads would have twenty arms.]

rr% I jko.kLrđVks fxfj tkfyæI a r% A foā k~qtks n' kxho% LoLFkya xUrēq| r% AA40AA dYi HkṛkPNrf' kj k% 'krokj a ç [kṛMr% A I çksä% Lof' kj kṛHkfgZ 'kr } ; Hkqt% ôfpr~ AA41AA tataḥ sa rāvaṇastuṣṭo girijālimgasam̐yutaḥ / viṃṣadbhujo daṣagrīvaḥ svasthalaṃ gantumudyataḥ // 40 // kalpabhedācchataṣirāḥ śatavāraṃ prakhaṃḍitaiḥ / sa proktaḥ svaṣirobhirhi śatadvayabhujāḥ kkacit // 41 //

Thus becoming ten-headed and twenty-armed, Ravana joyously started on his journey back to his place with Parvati and the Shiva Lingam that he had got by Shiva's boon. (40)

In some other ancient versions of this story which date back to some different Kalpas (eras or epochs that relate to different frames of time in the cycle of creation—“kalpabhedā”) than to the one which is being narrated presently, Ravana has been described as having a hundred heads and two hundred arms. (41) rLekf} âroku~fo". kṛRoā ra ekxī çrk; l p A rFkṛkC/kLrVs fyæa xksd. kâ jko. kkUo; k AA42AA x'ghRok LFkṛfi ra i wā jko. kks fi x'ga ; ; kS A eanknj ha gjokD; kYyC/ok e; l r'ka 'kṛkṛke~ AA43AA tasmādvī hr̥tavān viṣṇustvaṃ taṃ mārge pratārya ca / tathaiṅbdheṣṭaṭe liṅgaṃ gokarṇaṃ rāvaṇāttvayā // 42 //

gr̥h̥itvā sthāpitaṃ pūrvam̐ rāvaṇo'pi gr̥ham̐ yayau / maṃdodarīm̐ harervākyāllabdhvā mayasutām̐ śubhām̐ // 43 //

[Lord Shiva continued his narration to Parvati and said—] Then Lord Vishnu intervened on the way and snatched you from Ravana's custody and took you away. Eventually you too managed to dodge Vishnu and free yourself.

But when you were taken away by Lord Vishnu, you took along the Shiva Lingam with you. Later on when you had freed yourself from Vishnu's custody, you had established that Lingam on the shore of the ocean, and this consecrated Lingam came to be known by the name of 'Gokarna'.

Though peeved and frustrated, but unable to do anything about the matter of either retrieving you or the Lingam, Ravana returned empty-handed.

In due course of time, however, in accordance to the words of Vishnu (that he had given Ravana when the latter vehemently opposed Vishnu taking away Parvati from his possession), a beautiful daughter of the demon named Maya (mayasutām) was made available to him. She was called Mandodari. [She was to replace Parvati and become Ravana's wife. Refer verse no. 44 herein below.]¹ (42-43)

[Note—¹One can guess what must have probably happened. When Lord Vishnu came to know of the developments, he was shocked. It would be extremely outrageous and ridiculous if Shiva's consort was married to a demon! So it had to be stopped. Vishnu went and by some clever maneuvering and intelligent trick managed to convince Ravana that Parvati would not suit him as his wife, and there were far more beautiful, charming and sweet virgins available to him in marriage. After all, Parvati was already a married woman, and therefore she would not be as satisfying to him as a virgin maiden. Besides this, since Ravana has got Parvati against her wishes, it is absolutely possible that she would some day betray him in favour of her husband, Shiva, and might do something to escape from his clutches, even if it involves killing him or poisoning him. Further, her loyalty will be always doubtful. Say then, who in his right senses would like to marry such a woman whose very integrity is questionable, who may even spy against him in favour of the Gods who were his arch enemy?

Ravana's mind and resolve were distracted by Lord Vishnu's mystical powers and the logics he presented. Ravana thought that the arguments of Vishnu were strong, and he may have to lament later on if he did not pay heed. So he agreed, but on the condition that a virgin lady better in all ways than his present possession would be made available to him. In due course of time therefore, as Lord Vishnu had promised him, the demon Maya's daughter Mandodari was provided to him in marriage.

As to the question of Lingam being taken away by Parvati when she was rescued by Vishnu, it could have been that at the time of her leaving Lord Shiva to go with Ravana she had asked the Lord to grant her the permission to keep the Lingam with her as a token of remembrance of the him in a far-away and alien land. Ravana agreed as he did not see any harm in this arrangement as Parvati was to become his wife and live right under his watchful eyes inside the secure four walls of his home. He did not think it wise and prudent to make this an issue and create a new hurdle when his plans were almost on the verge of being successful and he was about to return home triumphantly with the desired trophies.

So he allowed Parvati to keep the Lingam with her on the way back home. Enroute he was intercepted by Vishnu who managed to prevail upon him to let Parvati go. Vishnu's magical charm managed to delude Ravana so much that the Lingam skipped his attention. It also may be that he was more concerned about getting a beautiful virgin as his wife, and his mind was so passionately preoccupied with this opportunity which virtually mesmerized him that the lifeless Lingam did not matter to him much, more so because it was his mother's desire and not his. Of course he would conjure up some convincing excuse for his mother for not bringing the Lingam for her, and surely his mother loved him so much that aside some tantrums and angry words from her side nothing more would happen.]

ekr% dk; Æl ã k | rW.kheokfryfTtr% A

eWnkñ; kZ djk&Loh; a fookg rks'ki Wj r% AA44AA

€"Vøðnk /kuk/; {ka i ði dLFka rç d&DI h A i ɸku- f/kōkj ; kekl ; ɸ a "k<k e'rksi ek% AA45AA mātuḥ kāryamasāmpādyā tūṣṇīmevātilajjitāḥ / māṁdodaryā'karotsvīyāṁ vivāha toṣapūritaḥ // 44 // ḍḍaṣṭvaikadā dhanādhyakṣāṁ puṣpakasthāṁ tu kaikasī / putrān dhikkārayāmāsa yūyāṁ ṣaḍhā mṛtopamāḥ // 45 //

Unable to fulfill his mother's wishes he felt very ashamed of himself as he could not reply her for his failure, and therefore he was very unhappy and discontented.

But when in due course of time he married Mandodari he once again began to feel contented and cheerful. (44)

One day when his mother Kaikasi watched Kuber, the lord of wealth, wondering in the sky seated in the majestic plane called Pushpak, she was overwhelmed with jealousy, and sternly rebuking her own sons she vehemently admonished them, saying sarcastically, 'You are all impotent and inept, and worthless as someone who is dead. (45)

I ki RU; cā/kq ; s ɛ"Vøk tk; ɾs uk= yfT trk% A rs ekropua J Rok ; ; ɸkɔd .kɛree- AA46AA n' ko"kl gL=kf.k dɸkɔd .kkɛ dj kɔki % A foHkh" k. kks fi /kekRk I R; /keɪ jk; .k% AA47AA

i ɸo"kl gL=kf.k i knkɔɔɔBu rLFkoku- A fn0; o"kl gL=a rɸ /kɛkgkj ks n' kkuu% AA48AA sāpatnyabarṁdhum̄ ye ḍḍaṣṭvā jāyāṁte nātra lajjitāḥ / te mātr̄vacanaṁ śrutvā yayurgokarṇamutamam // 46 // daṣavarṣasahastrāṇi kumbhakarṇo'karottapaḥ / vibhīṣaṇo'pi dharmātmā satyadharmaparāyaṇaḥ // 47 //

 paṁcavarṣasahastrāṇi pādāṁguṣṭhena tasthivān / divyavarṣasahastraṁ tu dhūmāhāro daṣānanaḥ // 48 //

Aren't all of you ashamed of yourselves when you see the excellence and the glory of your step-brother (Kuber)?' [Remember: Kuber was also the son of Visrava like Ravana etc.]

Stung by this bitter taunt of their mother, the three brothers (decided to acquire immense powers that would surpass those of Kuber, and to achieve this they) went to where Lord Gokarna was. [Gokarna, as we have read earlier, was the site where Lord Shiva's Lingam had been established by Parvati.] (46)

At that holy place, Kumbhakran did Tapa (penance) for ten thousand years.

Vibhishan, who was by nature a pious person and one who willingly followed Dharma (religious principles, and obeying their good and righteous teachings— "dharmātmā) as well as one who was a strict adherent to the principles of Satya (satyadharmaparāyaṇaḥ”), did Tapa for five hundred years by standing on the toe of his foot.

The ten-headed Ravana too did severe Tapa for ten thousand years, subsisting only by drinking (i.e. inhaling; gulping down) air. (47-48)

i w kī o "kī gL=a Loa 'kh"keXukS t gko I % A
 , oa o "kī gL=kf.k uo rL; kfrpØe% AA49AA vFk o "kī gL=s r q n' kes n' kea f' kj % A Nūkkel; /kekRek çI éks HkRç tki fr% AA50AA pūrṇe varṣasahastraṁ svarṁ śīrṣamagnau juhāva saḥ / evaṁ varṣasahastrāṇi nava tasyāticakramuḥ //49 // atha varṣasahastre tu daṣame daṣamaṁ śiraḥ / chettukāmasya dharmātmā prasanno'bhūtprajāpatiḥ // 50 //

At the end of one thousand years, Ravana used to offer one of his ten heads to the sacred fire as an offering to Lord Gokarna (i.e. Lord Shiva symbolized by the Lingam). In this way nine thousand years passed during which he continued to offer one head into the sacred fire. (49)

When ten thousand years passed and he was about to offer his last and tenth head to the sacred fire, the Prajapati Brahma (i.e. the Creator) became pleased with his Tapa and his firm resolution to achieve his objective. (50)

mokp opua cāik oja oj; dkf{kre~A rnkokp n' kkl; Lreo/; Roa o. kke; ge- AA51AA
 I q . kukx; {kkt; ks nōst; Üpkl g j fi A RoÜk% ' khkke gkfo". kke kLükk r'. kksi ek% AA52AA uvāca vacanaṁ brahmā varam varaya kāmṁṣitam / tadovāca daṣāsyastamavadhyatvaṁ vrṇomyaham // 51 // supaṇanāgayakṣebhyo devebhyaścāsuraairapi / tvattaḥ śabhormahāviṣṇormānuṣā trṇopamāḥ // 52 //

Brahma said, ‘Oh son! Ask what you desire.’

Then Ravana prayed, ‘I ask from you immunity from death, that I may not be killed by any of the following: Garuda (the celestial vehicle of Lord Vishnu, the Eagle; i.e. from all birds), Serpents (from all reptiles and subterranean creatures), Yakshas (a sort of half-gods who have great mystical powers and invincible strength, and can assume any form), Gods, Asurs (non-Gods; the ogres, demons, monsters and other members of this class), you yourself (i.e. the creator Brahma), Shambhu (Lord Shiva) and Vishnu. I don’t care about human beings for they are no better than a twig for me¹.’ (51-52)

[Note—¹Ravana thought that he was being smart by seeking immunity from death from all possible quarters that were strong and powerful enough to cause him harm. So if the three mighty Gods of the Trinity, such as Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva, along with all other Gods and semi-Gods, his peers such as the other demons who may challenge his authority, all other creatures who either lived in the sky (such creatures being represented by Garud) or could pose danger to him on the surface of the earth or even below it (such as the poisonous serpents)—if none of these powerful forces of the world would be able to harm him, then what do the humble human beings count?

This overconfidence of Ravana that no human being would be able to confront or kill him led him to leave a loophole through which death would finally strike him when the time came—for one day a human being known as Lord Ram would be slaying him in the battle-field of Lanka! This is the reason why Lord Vishnu had come down on earth as a ‘human being’ in the body of Lord Ram on the prayers of the Gods and Mother Earth when the horrors, the miseries and the torments unleashed by Ravana became intolerable, and the need arose to put an end of this scourge. We shall read about it a little later.]

rFkR; QRok fof/kLrLeS n'k 'kh"kkf.k I nnkS A foHkh"kk. kk; I ne(f) eejRoA nnkS epk AA53AA foekfgra I jLoR; k noæi ndkf{k.ke-A dHkd.kā fof/k% çkg oja oj; okfNre-AA54AA
I ks fi ra oj; kekl fuææ"kk.kfI dā 'kHkke-A
"kk.ekl h; s pSdfnus 'kua czāk- fi nUkoku-AA55AA tathetyuktvā vidhistasmai daṣa śirṣāṇi saṁdadau / vibhīṣaṇāya sadbuddhimamaratvaṁ dadau mudā // 53 // vimohitaṁ sarasvatyā deveṁdrapadakāṁkṣiṇam / kumbhakaraṇaṁ vidhiḥ prāha varam varam varaya vāṁchitam // 54 // so'pi taṁ varayāṁśa nidrāṁmaṣāṇasikim śubhāṁ / ṣāṇmāsiye caikadine'ṣanaṁ brahmā'pidattavān // 55 //

Saying ‘so be it’, the Creator blessed Ravana further by granting him ten heads (because he had offered his heads to the sacred fire for nine times and was ready to offer it for the tenth time as well), and granted Vibhishan with wisdom and an eternal life¹. (53)

Then the Creator asked Kumbhakaran, who was eager to acquire the exalted stature of Indra, the title and honour that the king of Gods possesses, to seek what he wanted. (54)

At this, Kumbhakaran, whose mind was deluded by goddess Saraswati², asked that he wanted to enjoy the pleasure of sleeping for six continuous months, so he should be granted the boon of uninterrupted sleep for six months at a time.

Hence, in accordance to his wishes, the Creator granted him sleep for six continuous months, after which he would wake up to feed himself and once again enjoy the luxury of sleeping fast for another six uninterrupted months, and this cycle would continue forever. (55)

[Note—¹Ravana had revealed the evil side of his nature by not only showing his greed for unhindered power but also his bad intentions of using this power to crush everyone, even Death, and thereby overturn the Laws of Nature, by asking that he may not be killed by anyone, something that is too far-fetched and impossible in this mortal world to implement. The Creator immediately sensed trouble, but he could not deny these asked boons to him as he was obliged to recompense Ravana for his Tapa. Ravana was uneasy at the prospect of dying, and so being deprived of the pleasures and comforts of this physical world and enjoyment of its material objects.

In the case of Vibhishan, however, the situation was quite the opposite. He was a follower of Dharma and Truth, and wise also. So he knew very well that the physical gross body of all living beings is perishable, and so it has to die one or the other day. He also knew that the world and its material charms are illusionary as they don't actually give lasting and any true pleasure or comfort to the creature; whatever joy one seems to get in this world are as transient as a bubble of water, here now and gone the next moment. So what is the use of having something that has no pith and substance in it, but is only a castle in the air? The only thing that is eternal, even without specifically asking for it, is the 'soul' or the Atma of all living beings. That is why Vibhishan did not ask for eternity as a boon, but the Creator knew that Vibhishan was a good demon and a noble soul, and so when he would be granted eternity he would understand the true and subtle meaning of this boon, i.e. that his soul would find eternal freedom from the cycle of birth and death in this mortal world, as well as the countless miseries and pains that accompany it. So even if he has to shed his physical body in order to obey the Laws of Nature he still would consider himself as being eternal at a subtle and sublime level because his Atma would never die or perish.

Besides this, by being naturally of a spiritual bent of mind and a pious soul, Vibhishan was not attached to any of the things of this material world. So therefore, when he would become eternal Vibhishan would use this opportunity to spread holiness and godly virtues in this world, instead of evil and vices as Ravana was expected to do, by all chances, should he be allowed to become eternal.

²Kumbhakaran wanted to become an 'Indra', or a de-facto King of Gods. He was a 'demon' by his birth, so how can he become even a 'god' what to speak of being a 'king of gods'? The 'gods' and the 'demons' represented two opposite forces of creation—the former stood for goodness and the latter for evilness. Besides this, the Creator, who knows the inner thoughts of all living beings, knew for certain that Ravana and Kumbhakaran were merely acting as fronts for the huge race of cruel, blood-thirsty demons, ogres and monsters; so their wishes were not their individual wishes that can be dealt with at the appropriate time in the appropriate manner even if they are accepted for now with the hope that any damage caused by them to the fabric of creation would be limited only to these two individuals who could be tackled by some method in the future, but it would open a Pandora's Box from which would spill out an endlessly enormous volume of poisonous vermins that would be impossible to control once they are unleashed. That situation, if it all comes to happen, would be disastrous for the welfare of this creation of which the Creator is the guardian. So he cannot allow it to happen.

Imagine what would happen to the well-being of this creation and its humble creatures if one demon brother, i.e. Ravana, cannot be killed by anyone, and the second demon brother, i.e. Kumbhakaran, becomes the ruler of the world by becoming Indra! It would be akin to having the blazing sun pouring its heat in the day and also in the night, with not a breather in between when the scorched and thirsty creature could find some rest.

Hence, the simple way out of this log-jam was to make one of them, in this case it was Kumbhakaran, sleep even while the other, in this case Ravana, ran wild and amok in the world. At least the unleashed horrors would thereby be halved if Kumbhakaran is intoxicated into a deep stupor by making him go to sleep.

So the goddess of wisdom got into the act and influenced Kumbhakaran's mind which made him ask for this ridiculous boon of being able to enjoy sleep for six months at a stretch. Just look at the laughable side of this boon—a person does severe Tapa for ten thousand years asks as a boon that he could sleep for six months at a stretch! Who would have prevented Kumbhakaran from sleeping as much and as long as he wanted to even without the boon? But the Creator did not wish to take any risk—so he ensured that at least one half of the torment of this world was avoided by making one of the tormentors keep quiet and knocked out by way of sleeping when he sealed and delivered this insurance in the form of a 'granted boon'.]

rrks Ur) kUexef}f/kLrs fi x'ga ; ; % A I ekyh c j y C/kkLrku~KkRok nkfg=I Ukeku~AA56AA
 i krkykfluHkz ; % çk ; kRçgLrk | $kpa I q ke~A ef=okD ; kÍ'kkL ; ks fi fu"dkL ; /kun cykr~AA57AA tato'ntarddhānamagamadvidhiste'pi gr̥haṁ yayuḥ / sumālī baralabdhāmstān jñātvā dauhitrasattamān // 56 // pātālānnirbhayaḥ prāyātprahastādyairbhuvan̄ sukham / maṁtrivākyaḍḍaśasyo'pi niṣkāsyā dhanada balāt // 57 //

After that (i.e. after granting the desired boons to the three demon brothers), Brahma disappeared from sight, and they too went back home.

When Sumali learnt that his grandsons had gained the desired boons, he felt very glad and emboldened by this development (as now the demons had almost nothing to fear from the Gods, their arch enemies). So he took along other demons such as Prahasta etc. with him and came (out of his hiding place in the nether world) to the surface of the earth, and began roaming fearlessly as pleased him.

On the advice of his minister (Prahasta), Ravana forced Kuber out of Lanka (where he had been living since he a very long time). [Refer: verse nos. 12-14.] (56-57)

ydk i q kã j k {kl $rq ydkj kT ; a pdkj I % A /kun% fi rja i "Vøk R ; DRok y³çk egk ; 'kk% AA58AA xRok dšykl f'k[kja ri l k. rkšk; fPNoe~A ru l [; euçkl; ruš i fjufnr% AA59AA vydk uxjha r= fuešes foÜodeZ kk A fnDi kyRoeuçkl; f'kol; ojnkur% AA60AA laṁkāpuryāṁ rākṣasaistu laṁkārājyaṁ cakāra saḥ / dhanadaḥ pitaraṁ prṣṭvā tyaktvā laṁkā mahāyaśāḥ // 58 // gatvā kailāsaṣikharaṁ tapasā'toṣayacchivam / tena sakhyamanuprāpya tenaiva parinaṁditaḥ // 59 //

 alakā nagarīm tatra nirmame viśvakarmaṇā / dikpālatvamanuprāpya śivasya varadānataḥ // 60 //

Thereafter, Ravana established his own sovereignty over Lanka and began to rule over the demon race as its king from this place.

Kuber went to consult his father (Visrawa), and on his advice he left Lanka. [To wit, instead of confronting Ravana, Kuber decided to leave the city on the advice of his father, and maintain peace. It was a wise decision as it would have been almost impossible to defeat Ravana after the boons of invincibility that he had got from the Creator. Any attempt to retake Lanka would have resulted in a horrible blood-bath.] (58)

Kuber then went to the summit of Mt. Kailash and pleased Lord Shiva with his Tapa. Kuber befriended Shiva, and on his advice he engaged Vishwakarma (the architect of the Gods) to develop a new city called Alka-puri which was to become Kuber's own dwelling place and also serve as the capital of the Gods.

Shiva also blessed Kuber with the honourable title of a 'Digpal' (one of the chief and senior custodians of this world). (59-60)

jko. kks fo | ūT tāk; nnkS 'kuç. k[kka rnk A i kfjogā nnkS rLeš nMdkj .; eŋkee~ AA61AA ekrRoI ŋ | rku~ l a'ka fof' kj % [kj nWk. kku~ A l kgk, ; kFkā nnkS rLeš rRdkars rŋ e'rs fpjkr~ AA62AA rāvaṇo vidyujjihnāya dadau śūpraṇakhāṁ tadā / pārivarhaṁ dadau tasmairṁ daṁḍakāraṇyamuttamam // 61 // mātrṭvasuḥ sutān saṁdhūṁ striṣiraḥkharadūṣaṇān / sāhāyyārtham dadau tasmai tatkāṁte tu mrṭe'cirāt // 62 //

After some time, Ravana got his sister Supernakha married to Vidyujjivna, and gave the great forest called Dandakaranya to her as a marriage gift. (61)

In due course of time when her husband died, Ravana sent Khar and Dushan, the two sons of his maternal aunt, and others to help her and look after her security. (62)

dḥkhuḥ ha nnkS g"kkUe/kpR; k; j ko. k% A nnkS e/kpua rLeS i kfj ogēuḥkee~ AA63AA [k³xftk; rka Økpha nnkS çE. kk n' kkuu% A i jy³ɔka i kfj ogā nnkS rL; S eukj ee~ AA64AA kumbhīnasīm dadau harṣānmadhudaityāya rāvaṇaḥ / dadau madhuvanaṁ tasmai pāriverhamanuttamam // 63 // khangajihnāya tām kraumcīm dadau premṇā daṣānanah / paralaṅkāṁ pāriverhaṁ dadau tasyai manoramam // 64 //

Ravana betrothed his sister named Kumbhinasī to a demon named Madhu, and as a marriage gift gave an excellent forest called Madhu-Van to the couple. [This forest was so-called as it was full of bee hives that dripped honey. “Madhu” means honey or something that is very sweet, and “Vana” means a forest.] (63)

Ravana’s third sister Krounchi was married off to the demon named Khangajivha, and he gave them a most magnificent city called Para-Lanka. [This name suggests that it was at least as wonderful, if not more, as the city of Lanka itself.] (64)

oḥkpul; nkSg=ha o=Tokyfr foJrke~ A Lo; nūka epkōkg dḥHkd. kkz; j ko. k% AA65AA xU/koj ktL; I rka 'kSyWkL; egkReu% A foHkh" k. kL; Hkk; kFkz I jeka I epk. ogr~ AA66AA vairocanasya dauhitrīm vr̥trajvāleti viśrutām / svayam̐dattām mudovāha kumbhakarnāya rāvaṇaḥ // 65 // gandharvarājasya sutām śailūṣasya mahātmanah / vibhīṣaṇasya bhāryārthe saramām sa mudā'vahat // 66 //

A beautiful demon maiden named Vritrajwala, the famous grand daughter of the demon Virochan, was offered by her father (the son of Virochan) to Ravana so that she could be married to his brother Kumbhakaran. (65)

Ravana brought a fine lady named Sarama, who was the daughter of Shailusha, the great king of Gandharvas (the musicians of heaven), and betrothed her to his younger brother Vibhishan. (66) rrks eUnhjh i q= a eḥkuknethitur~ A tkrek=Lrq; ks ukna eḥkoRçpdkj g AA67AA rr% I oī cōle?kuknks ; fefr oS tuk% A xgk; k% dkkd.kkī fi fuæk0; klrks fofufær% AA68AA tato mandīdarī putram meghanādamajījanat / jātamāstrastu yo nādam meghavatpracakāra ha // 67 // tataḥ sarve'bruvanmeghanādo'yamiti vai janāḥ / guhāyāḥ kubhakarṇo'pi nidrāvyāpto vinidritaḥ // 68 //

In due course of time, Mandodari¹ (the wife of Ravana) gave birth to a son named Meghanad² who began to make a loud noise like the thunder of clouds as soon as he was born. (67)

That is why everyone began calling him by the nickname of 'Meghanad'.
 Meanwhile, Kumbhakaran went to a cave and fell asleep. (68)

[Note—¹Mandadori was the daughter of the demon called Maya. He was the architect of the demon race just as Vishwakarma was the architect of the Gods. Refer: (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto13, verse nos. 43-44 herein above; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 178; and (c) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 39-40.

²The word "Megha" means a cloud; and "Naad" means a loud, thunderous noise that appears to be like the clap of thunder as the storm approaches. Hence the son was called 'Meghanad' because as soon as he was born he began crying exceptionally loudly, and made so great a deafening noise that it was like the burst of thunder.]

rr% I jko.kūpkfi nōxU/koīdUjuku-A gRok __"khūoj kUukxku-fó; Lr's'kkei kgj r-AA69AA /kunks fi p rPNRok jko.kL; kØea rnk A v/keā ek d# "ofr nīrokD; ſ; bkj ; r-AA70AA tataḥ sa rāvaṇaścāpi devagandharvakinnarān / hatvā rṣīśvarānnāgān striyasteṣāmapāharat // 69 // dhanado'pi ca tacchrutvā rāvaṇasyākramaṁ tadā / adharmam mā kuruṣveti dūtavākyairnyavārayat // 70 //

In the meanwhile, Ravana went on the rampage, thrashing the Gods, the Gandharvas (musicians in heaven), Kinnars (male dancers in heaven), the Rishishwars (great sages who maintained hermitages but were married and had a family), and the Naagas (inhabitants of the subterranean world), and abducting their women by force. (69)

Kuber, when he heard of this nasty deed, felt very indignant, and he sent a message to Ravana through his messengers advising and entreating with him to abstain from perpetrating such horribly sinful deeds. (70)

rr% Øñ ks n' kxhoks txke /kunky; e~A fofuftR; /kuk/; {ka tɟkj rL; i ɟi de-AA71AA vydk; ka ; nk· · I hRI I u; k jko.Lrnk A fu' kk; kesdnk Hkkr% dɟjL; I ru fg AA72AA tataḥ kruddho daṣagrīvo jagāma dhanadālayam / viniḥimtya dhanādhyakṣaṃ jahāra tasya puṣpakam // 71 // alakāyām yadā"sītsa senayā rāvaṇstadā / niṣyāmekadā bhrātuḥ kuberasya sutena hi // 72 //

When Ravana heard this good and sane advice, he got all the more infuriated as he took it as an affront to his authority and an attempt by his step-brother to raise fingers at him. So he angrily went to attack Kuber, and after vanquishing him he snatched the air plane called Pushpak from him and brought it back with him as a trophy¹. (71)

At the time Ravana was at Alkapuri with his army of demons to conquer Kuber, a celestial damsel or nymph (an Apsara) named Rambha, who was one of the most beautiful maidens in heaven, was on her way to Alkapuri at the invitation of Nalkuber, the son of Kuber, to meet him. As was the fiat of fate, she arrived at Alkapuri at an inappropriate time when the war was raging in the city (between Kuber and Ravana), because she was unaware of the developments. She was finely decorated, and had magnificent anklets on her legs from which a pleasant jingling and bristling sound emanated as she walked. (72)

[Note—¹It was this very plane that had aroused jealousy in the heart of his demoness mother Kaikasi: refer verse nos. 44-46 herein above.]

çkfFkZrk I k i ɟk jEHkk pdkj fu; ra fnue~A vKkroUkk osxu ; ; kS [kkUuw i ɟLouk AA73AA jko.kks fi p rka €"Vøk cykno çHkçäoku-A fpjkleçäk· Fk oUka I k dksçja I U; on; r-AA74AA Øñ % I ks fi nnkS ' kki a jko. kk; egkReus A v | kjH; n' kkL; Üpf}j äka fó; eUkeke-AA75AA

prārthitā sā purā rambhā cakāra niyataṃ dinam / ajñātavr̥ttā vegena yayau khānñū purasvanā // 73 // rāvaṇo'pi ca tāṃ dḍaṣtvā balādeva prabhuktavān / cirānmuktā'tha vr̥ttam sā kauberam sanyavedayat // 74 // krūddhaḥ so'pi dadau śāpaṃ rāvaṇāya mahātmane / adyārabhya daṣāsyascedviraktāṃ striyamuttamām // 75 //

When Ravana's eyes fell on her he grabbed her and forced himself upon her (raped her).

Rambha managed to free herself after a long time from his clutches, and then she went to Nalkuber and narrated the incident to him. (73)

The angry Nalkuber cursed Ravana vehemently and said, 'Oh you ten-headed wretched fellow. From today onwards if you sexually assault any woman without her consent then you will die the same instant.'

One of the messengers of Ravana heard this curse and conveyed the news to his master. (74-75)

[Note—Obviously Ravana was not present at the place where Rambha told Nalkuber about her experience. On learning the evil deed Nalkuber lost his patience and immediately cursed Ravana. One of the spies who must have been following Rambha on the instructions of Ravana, or even out of curiosity of his own, heard it, and he, being loyal to his master Ravana, immediately reported the matter to him in order to alert him.]

gBk~kç; fr pçkfga {k.kek=kUefj"; fr A bfr 'kki a jko.kks fi 'kçko pjokD; r% AA76AA rnkjH; fÓ; a dkeefuPNUrha u /k"ç; u~ A rrrks ; ea p o#. ka fufftR; I ejs I ç% AA77AA LoxçykdexkUkw kâ nojktft?kkd ; k A rrrks jko.keH; R; ccaçk f=n' kçoj% AA78AA haṭhādbhoksyati cettahiṃ kṣaṇamātrānmarīṣyati / iti śāpaṃ rāvaṇo'pi śuśrāva caravākyataḥ // 76 // tadārabhya striyaṃ kāmamanicchantīṃ na dharsayan / tato yamaṃ ca varuṇaṃ nirjitya samare'suraḥ // 77 // svargalokamagāttūrṇaṃ devarājajighāṃsayā / tato rāvaṇamabhyetya babarṇdha tridaśeśvaraḥ // 78 //

From that day Ravana stopped assaulting and insulting women who were not interested in his overtures or who did not like him to disturb them.

Meanwhile, after vanquishing Kuber, Ravana conquered Yamraj (the God of death) and Varun (the God of water) in battle, and then immediately went to heaven to launch a campaign with an intention to kill Indra, the king of Gods.

The 'lord of the three worlds' (tridaśeśvara—i.e. Indra) boldly went to face Ravana, and captured him. (76-78) rPNçRok I gl k.· xR; eçkukn% çrki oku~ A —Rok ; ç) egk?kkçj ftRok f=n' ki ççxoe~ AA79AA blæa ?kRok —<a cn/ok eçkuknks egkcy% A ekp; Rok Lofi rja x'ghRotlæa ; ; kS i g he- AA80AA cāk ra ekp; kekl nōtlæa eškuknr% A nūok ojké{kl k; cāk LoHkoua ; ; kS AA81AA tacchrutvā sahasā"gatya meghanādaḥ pratāpavān / kṛtvā yuddha mahāghora jtvā tridaṣapuṅgavam // 79 // indram ghrtvā drdham baddhvā meghanādo mahābalaḥ / mocayitvā svapitaram grhītvendram yayau purīm // 80 // brahmā taṁ mocayāmāsa devendram meghanādataḥ / dattvā varānnākṣasāya brahmā svabhavanam yayau // 81 //

When the most valiant Meghanad heard that his father (Ravana) has been imprisoned by Indra, he immediately responded by attacking his father's captor, and after a fierce battle he succeeded in vanquishing Indra. (79)

Then he freed his father (Ravana), and in order to punish Indra for his audacity of capturing Ravana, so that Indra dare not repeat it in the future, Meghanad tied him up and brought him to his capital (Lanka) as a prisoner. (80)

Following this incident, the creator Brahma went to Meghanad to intercede on behalf of Indra, and managed to prevail upon the former to release the latter. As a bargain, Brahma blessed the demons with some boons. (81) blæftæke rL; kHkūknkjH; j?kūke A jko.kknfi ; Ūpkl hncfy"B% I ejfç; % AA82AA eškuknkn; Ūpfr rLekRçksāa rokxr% A

, rēhūoj% i wā rféfeŪka e; fj re- AA83AA indrajrinnāma tasyābhūttadārabhya raghūttama / rāvaṇādapi yaścāsīdbaliṣṭhaḥ samarapriyaḥ // 82 // meghanādādayāsceti tasmātproktaṁ tavāgrataḥ / etairmunīśvaraiḥ pūrvam tannimittam mayeritam // 83 //

[Sage Agastya said to Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord Ram, the most excellent king in the race of king Raghu of Ayodhya (raghūttama)! It is from then that Meghanad has been honoured with title of ‘Indrajeet’ (one who had conquered Indra, the king of Gods).

Indeed, he was stronger and more valiant than his father Ravana, and was ever eager to engage his enemy or opponent in a battle (for he enjoyed trouncing them, and got sadistic pleasure by tying them up like a slave and seeing their despaired faces). (82)

That is why I had mentioned Meghanad before all other demons slayed by you¹, because as far as strength, valour, invincibility and battle-abilities go there was no match for him. The sages have reiterated the reason (why Meghanad was superior to all other demons) that I given you now. (83)

[Note—¹Refer verse nos. 4-5 herein above.]

jko.kks fot ; h ykcdkUl okL~ftRok Øes k r q A ftRok ofàa fu__fra p ok; øh' ka ; ; kS epnk AA84AA dšykl a rksy; kekl ckgfHk% i fj?kks e% A rnk Hkhrk f' koa nsh nkt; kã l k i fj"kLo ts AA85AA rāvaṇo vijayī lokānsarvān jivā krameṇa tu / jivā vahnīm nirṛtīm ca vāyumīṣaṁ yayau mudā // 84 // kailāsaṁ tolayāmāsa bāhubhiḥ parighopamaiḥ / tadā bhītā śivaṁ devī dorbhyām sā pariśasvaje // 85 //

[Undeterred by his humiliation on being defeated by Indra, but rather becoming more and more aggressive as a means to take revenge, and especially emboldened by the proven valour and strength of his son Meghanad as narrated in the previous verses, Ravana went on relentlessly with his spree of conquests, vanquishing and bringing to heel different gods and custodians of the world.]

Ravana was triumphant in all his campaigns, and after vanquishing the whole world he was so elated that he cheerfully went on a spree of conquest of some of the other important gods such as ‘vahnīm, nirṛtīm, vāyum and īṣaṁ’ (the Fire God, the God of Death, the Nether World and the south-west direction, the Wind God, and Lord Shiva as well as the God of the north-east direction respectively)¹. (84)

After that, he went to lift Mt. Kailash (the abode of Lord Shiva) with his long muscular arms. Terrified of him goddess Parvati panicked, and she tightly clung to her husband Lord Shiva (to seek protection)². (85)

[Note—¹By subduing the two gods of the south-west and the north-east directions, Ravana managed to have his sovereignty established over the whole globe, from one end to the other, because if we draw a straight line between these two points (south-west and north-east) it would be measuring the actual diameter of the earth as it rotates on its axis which is tilted at an angle from the perpendicular.

²We have read earlier how Ravana had managed to trick Shiva in giving away Parvati to him through the granting of a boon, and how she had managed to escape with the help of Lord Vishnu—refer: verse nos. 37-42. At that point of time Ravana was still a green-horn and he hadn't gone on a rampage as he did later on, defeating gods and abducting their women folk.

But this time Ravana was very powerful, vigorous and ferocious, and not even Lord Vishnu, who had come to her rescue the last time, would dare to challenge him this time. Hence, when Parvati observed Ravana coming menacingly to tear off Mt. Kailash and take it away, she indeed was really and truly terrified out of her wits as she feared for the worse; she was sore affright that Ravana would wreak vengeance upon her for escaping from his clutches the last time. So she panicked and clung to her husband for protection.]

f'koks fi okei knk³ xq(Bu dSykl e) fu A Hkkja nUok fxfja [koā pdkj kFk 'ku% 'ku% AA86AA rnk rfnxfj l EHkr ofYy l f/k" kq nkSy r k% A foā kPpkfi jko.kL; rk vkl Uefi r k% {k.kkr~ AA87AA l rukØUn; kekl LrEHkl Ec) pkj or~ A rnk ullnhUoj s kkfi 'klrks ; a jko.kUoj% AA88AA p' pya del ; LekUks dfi r q; erks l j A okuj sekU d kU p s uk' ka xPNfi dkfi r% AA89AA śivo'pi vāmapādāṅguṣṭhena kailāsamūrdhani / bhāraṁ dattvā giriṁ kharvaṁ cakārātha śanaiḥ śanaiḥ // 86 // tadā tadgirisambhṛtavallisamndhiṣu daurlatāḥ / viṁṣaccāpi rāvaṇasya tā āsanmardditāḥ kṣaṇāt // 87 // sa tenākrandayāmāsa stambhasambaddhacoravat / tadā nandīśvareṇāpi śapto'yaṁ rāvaṇeśvaraḥ // 88 //

 ca 'calaṁ karma yasmātte kapitulyamato'sura / vānarairmānuṣaiścaiva nāṣaṁ gacchasi kopitaiḥ // 89 //

When Lord Shiva discovered Ravana's evil intentions, he pressed the mountain with the big toe of his left foot. As a result the great mountain began sinking into the earth. (86)

As the great mountain gradually sank, it pressed under its weight and squeezed all the twenty arms of Ravana which he had inserted underneath it to scoop it up from its mooring in the earth. Writhing in pain and suffering abjectly, Ravana began yelling and wailing in utter despair like a thief who is tied tightly on a pillar and the cord is being pulled tighter and tighter every moment.

At that time Nandi (one of the chief attendants of Lord Shiva; the sacred Bull) also cursed Ravana [87-88], saying—'Oh you wicked demon, you are fickle, restless and ever-so fidgety like a monkey (because you neither live in peace yourself nor let others live their lives in peace, always doing something mischievous that causes endless harassment and nuisance for everyone). So therefore I curse you that your death would be at the hands of monkeys and humans.'¹ [89] (87-89)

[Note—¹This curse of Nandi bore fruit when ultimately Ravana was defeated and killed in the epic war of Lanka by an army of monkeys led by Lord Ram, who was actually Lord Vishnu in a human form, and his brother Laxman, who was Lord Seshnath, the legendary celestial Serpent who is said to hold the earth on his thousand hoods.]

rr% dkykUrj s kk; a 'kEHkqub foekfpr% A 'klrks l; x. k; UokD; a ; ; kS gŋ; i Ūkue~ AA90AA cfgxtra ui a Jŋok l gL=ktŋukede~ A e/; kàs j ko. kŪpØs j ŋok; ka f' koi wt ue~ AA91AA tataḥ kālāntareṇāyaṁ śambhunaiva vimocitaḥ / śapto'pyagaṇayanvākyam yayau haihayapattanam // 90 // bahirgataṁ nrpaṁ śrutvā sahastrārjunanāmakam / madhyāhne rāvaṇaścakre revāyāṁ śivapūjanam // 91 //

After some time, Lord Shiva took pity on him (Ravana) and released him (from under the mountain which had crushed him under its weight when the Lord had pressed it down with the toe of his left foot).

Ravana forgot all about his humiliation and curse soon after his release, and reverted back to his reckless old ways. Ignoring Lord Shiva's warning to behave himself, he went to the city (capital) of Haihairaj to fight with him. (90)

When he reached there he found that the king of the place, who was called Sahastrarjun¹ (sahastrārjunanāmakam), was not present on the occasion. So Ravana went to the banks of river Narmada, and observing that there was an island in the middle of the river, he went there and began to offer worship to Lord Shiva when it was noon time.

[To wit, Ravana went to the city of king Sahastrarjun in the morning, discovered that the king was not there, and so decided to offer worship to Lord Shiva. With this purpose he went to river Narmada, crossed to an island in the middle of the river, and started offering worship to Lord Shiva at noon.] (91)

[Note—¹Sahastrarjun, pronounced as 'Sahastraarjuna', was so-called because he had a thousand arms; "Sahatra" = a thousand. Hence his name means 'a king named Arjun who had a thousand arms'.]

v/kLrLekéeṅk; k Hkqt i k' kŪp l sŋpr~ A LrEHk; kekl uhjkŋk tyØhMka xrks tŋ% AA92AA of"Vrks ; ŋukj hfHLrŪkks; a j ko. ka rnk A lyko; kekl /; kuLFka KkrLrRdeZ kk. tŋ% AA93AA eŋRok /; kukfnda l oā ; ŋ a pØs tŋsu l % A ru c) ks n' kxho% d. Bs j Ūrŋ l ŋrk; re~ AA94AA nnkS n' kkuua çhR; k dk" BfufeŋrgfLror~ A fd; RdkykUrj s kb i ŋyLR; su l ekfpr% AA95AA adhastasmānnarmadāyā bhujapāṣaiśca setuvat / stambhayāmāsa nīraugha jalakrīḍāṃ gato'rjunah // 92 // veṣṭito'yutanārībhīstattoyaṃ rāvaṇaṃ tadā / plāvayāmāsa dhyānasthaṃ jñātastatkarmaṇā'rjunah // 93 // muktvā dhyānādikaṃ sarvaṃ yuddhaṃ cakre'rjunena saḥ / tena baddho daṣagrīvaḥ kaṇṭhe rantuṃ sutāya tam // 94 // dadau daṣānaṃ prītyā kāṣṭhanirmitahastivat / kiyatkālāntareṇaiva pulastyena sa mocitaḥ // 95 //

While Ravana was thus engaged in worshipping Lord Shiva on the island, king Sahastrarjun in the meantime was enjoying water-sport in the river. While frolicking around in the water he conjured up a wondrous sight using his thousand arms by using them to make an artificial dam that stopped the flow of the water of the river. (92)

At that time, thousands of women, who were his mistresses and courtesans, were accompanying him. [Perhaps this is the reason why he blocked the river in order to impress them.]

When the river was blocked, the water began to rise and soon inundated the island on which Ravana was offering worship to Lord Shiva. As a result, Ravana was submerged in the water and began to float in it. (93)

This disturbed his meditative posture, and applying common sense he realized that it surely must be Sahastrarjun who had blocked the flow of water.

[Ravana guessed that surely it must be no one else but Sahastrarjun who is doing this mischief to tease him and to create hurdles in his worship. He must have also heard the loud laughing and jesting of the thousands of women who accompanied Sahastrarjun even as the latter himself was splashing around boisterously in the water, showing off his strength and prowess to impress the gleeful ladies.]

Peeved and provoked thus, Ravana left his worship and immediately went to challenge Sahastrarjun for a duel. Sahastrarjun, however, easily caught hold of Ravana, and tied a rope around his neck (like one ties a pet animal)! Then Sahastrarjun gave Ravana with this rope tied around his neck to his son to play with like a child plays with a wooden toy elephant.

[What a supreme form of humiliation it must have been for the mighty king of the demon race to be tied like a pet animal, and pulled here and there by a boy who treated him like a wooden toy elephant, laughing, jesting, teasing and punching Ravana in gleeful abandon!]

After some time however, sage Pulastya went and managed to get Ravana released from this captivity¹. (94-95)

[Note—¹The reader will note that this is the second time Ravana was tied and held captive. The first occasion was when he was captured by Indra, the king of Gods—refer: 78.

But in spite of repeated humiliation Ravana never learnt a lesson as we shall read below in verse nos. 96-101 when he was captured and held under armpit by Vaali, the king of the monkeys, and then tied under the bed of Angad, Vaali's son, where Ravana lay with his face down, and Angad used to urinate upon him!]

rrks frcyekl k | ft?kkd qj i q³ xoe~ A

I kxjs /; kuekl hu- i Üpk~kxs 'kuš ž; kS AA96AA /krlruš d{ks k okfyuk n'kdU/kj% A Hkkef; Rok rŋ prj% I epeku~j ko. ka gfj% AA97AA fdf'da'kka Loka ; ; kS osxknxs ε'Vokaxna f'k'ke- A çhR; k ra pçua nkrŋ nktl; kã dVÓka U; os k; r~ AA98AA rnk ckgkÛppyRokRd{kkRI i frrkS Hkfo A ra ε'Vok Lotuku- ÓhÜp n'kz; kekl oš epk AA99AA tato'tibalamāsādyā jighāmsurharipuṅgavam / sāgare dhyānamāsīn paścādbhāge śanairyayau // 96 // dhṛṣṭastenaiva kakṣeṇa vālinā daśakandharaḥ / bhrāmayitvā tu caturaḥ samudrān rāvaṇam hariḥ // 97 //

 kiṣkimdhām svām yayau vegādagre dḍaṣṭvāmgaḍam ṣiṣum / prītyā taṁ cubanaṁ dātum dorbhyām kaṭyām nyaveṣayat // 98 // tadā bāhoścamcalatvātkakṣātsa patito bhuvi /
 taṁ dḍaṣṭvā svajanān strīśca darṣayāmāsa vai mudā // 99 //

After some time had passed and Ravana had recovered his strength, he wanted to kill Vaali, the king of the monkey race. So he went to Vaali who was sitting silently with closed eyes and meditating on the shore of the ocean. Ravana wanted to surprise Vaali, and so he went stealthily and stood behind him even as Vaali was deeply immersed in his meditation.

[Ravana never mended his wanton, reckless and evil ways; he never learnt a lesson from his experiences. So after a while he decided to confront Vaali without the least provocation. But he dared not face Vaali from the front, in an open duel, so he went from the behind while Vaali was unarmed and meditating, in the hope that he would suddenly lunge at his victim and strangulate him to death. This very fact—Ravana trying to kill Vaali from the back rather than challenging him for a face-to-face battle—showed that at least by now he had realized his limits. But he was so ambitious and a wicked fellow to the core that would adopt any way, crooked or straight, to fulfill his ambitions to become an unchallenged ruler of the world by eliminating all those who may pose a challenge to his authority.] (96)

However, Vaali got the wind of his presence, so he caught hold of Ravana by one sweeping back movement of his mighty arms, lifted him and tucked him under his armpit so casually that Ravana dangled there with his face pointing backwards. Then Vaali went on a pilgrimage of all the four corners of the world, around the four oceans so to say, while Ravana lay pressed in the cavity of his armpit all the while.

[It is like one carelessly picking up a small pet animal, such as a cat or a puppy, if the animal disturbs one while one is engaged in some important work. Vaali absent-mindedly just picked up Ravana and pressed him under his arms, in the cavity of his armpit. When his meditation was complete, Vaali went on a pilgrimage, but he forgot that Ravana was pressed in his armpit. It shows how inconsequential Ravana was for Vaali. And it also shows how terrified Ravana must have been that he did not dare to stir at all as that would draw Vaali's attention to him, and may be Vaali would be so irked that he may simply crush Ravana to death or at least break some of his bones by pressing him harder under his arms!] (97)

By-and-by, Vaali went to his capital called Kishkindha. There he saw his young son Angad. As soon as Vaali lifted his son affectionately to kiss him make him sit astride his hips [98], for which of course he had to lift his arms, Ravana fell down on the ground from under his armpit where he had been lying pressed hitherto. Seeing him fall and writhing like an animal who has developed cramps (because Ravana had been lying in a single pose for a long time), the women folk laughed heartily in merriment, and drew each other's attention to this jovial sight [99]. (98-99)

çā[kL; ki fj i ɸ=L; ccU/kk/kkeq[ka fpje~A vkl hRI ks ³xnew=L; /kkj k/kk$-kuuks I g% AA100AA Lo; eð rrrks okyh cgdkys xrs I fr A nnkokKka n'kkL; k; ru I [; a pdkj I % AA101AA premkhasyopari putrasya babandhādhomukhaṃ ciraṃ / āsitso'ṅgadamūtrasya dhārādhautānāno'suraḥ // 100 // svayameva tato vālī bahukāle gate sati / dadāvājñāṃ daṣāsyāya tena sakhyaṃ cakāra saḥ // 101 //

Vaali put his son's cradle over Ravana, and tied the latter face down to the legs of the stand that held the cradle. He kept Ravana so tied for a long time.

Meanwhile (to add further humiliation to Ravana's already severely compromised self-respect that was like rubbing salt on his sore wounds), Angad used to urinate while lying on his cradle, and this stinking liquid flowed freely on Ravana's face as he lay tied under the foot of the cradle, drenching him all over and forcing his face to be washed by Angad's urine. (100)

In due course of time, Vaali took pity on him voluntarily, and after making a treaty of friendship with him he set Ravana and allowed him to go (back to his city Lanka)¹. (101)

[Note—¹We shall read later on in this wonderful story that when Lord Ram had sent Angad as his emissary to Ravana in an attempt to persuade the latter to return Sita, the Lord's wife who Ravana had abducted and which was the single cause for the ruinous war of Lanka, so as to avoid a blood-bath, and Ravana, not realizing who Angad was, had boasted of the immensity of his strength and how he had subdued all the Gods and other powerful forces in this creation, was chided by Angad and reminded of this incident when he was held a helpless captive under the armpit of Vaali, Angad's father. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede Doha no. 21 where this event is sarcastically mentioned by Angad, though he did not divulge the details in order to spare extreme embarrassment to Ravana.

The reader can well imagine how humiliated and insulted Ravana must have felt when this long-ago secret event known only to him at that time was made public in full court where all the ministers of the demon kingdom were in attendance.

But Providence is such a powerful force to reckon with that it successfully deluded Ravana's mind so much that he still believed himself as being invincible and unconquerable in this creation. 'Death' was snarling at him with bared teeth like a hungry wolf, but he felt assured there was no danger to him!]

jko.k% I i q% fLFkRok i qi ds 0; pjRI q[ke~ A i ' ; ékukfo/kkUohjku~ ; ; kS i krkye[ke~ AA102AA r= "Vøk i g a jE; a cy% dkfVj foçHke~ A rUkstkgrrstLrRi qi da u ppky oS AA103AA rāvaṇaḥ sa punaḥ sthitvā puṣpake vyacaratsukham / paṣyannānāvidhānvīrān yayau pātālamuttamam // 102 // tatra dḍaṣṭvā puraṁ ramaṁ baleḥ koṭiraviprabham / tattejohatatejastatpuspakam na cacāla vai // 103 //

Once again (forgetting all about his bad past experiences and not at all ashamed of any of the earlier events that would have been extremely demeaning for any other person of dignity and self-respect), Ravana boarded his Pushpak plane (that he had snatched from Kuber) and joyfully roamed around freely all over the world, observing its wonderful sights and surreptitiously spying on other warriors and kings who may pose any challenge to him.

By-and-by, he reached the Nether World called 'Patal' (pātāla) which was a wonderful and quite extraordinary world. (102)

Its capital city was as splendidous as thousands of suns. Its attractive forces (which we can liken with the earth's gravitational and magnetic forces) were so strong and powerful that they hindered the path of the Pushpak plane, causing it to slow down and stop¹. (103)

[Note—¹This wonderful and marvelous phenomenon is not quite impossible to imagine as modern science has made it quite feasible to actually happen in our day. Refer a note appended to verse no. 131 herein below which explains it.]

rr% Lo; a ; ; kS rW. khesd , o n' kkuu% A i g a çfo' ; rn-}kfj Roka nn' kZ p okeue~ AA104AA dkfVI w çrhd' ka i hrckS kS okl I e~ A pr[kt I i Ruhda }kj j {k. krRi je~ AA105AA tataḥ svayaṁ yayau tūṣṇīmeka eva daṣānanaḥ / puraṁ praviṣya taddvāri tvāṁ dadarṣa ca vāmanam // 104 // koṭisūryapratikāṣaṁ pītakaūṣeyavāsasam / caturbhujā sapatnikāṁ dvārarakṣaṇatatparam // 105 //

The ten-headed Ravana stepped down quietly from his plane and went to see the city. There at its gate he found you (Lord Ram) in the form of Lord Vaaman (the dwarf incarnation of Lord Vishnu)¹ standing majestically in all his radiant splendour. (104)

The Lord had the radiance of a million suns, and was wearing the unique yellow garment known as Pitambar that is Lord Vishnu's characteristic feature. [This is a body-wrapping silken garment worn by Lord Vishnu, and it is his trademark.]

Vaaman had the four arms so characteristic of and unique to Lord Vishnu, and had goddess Laxmi by his side. He was there to guard the gate of king Bali. (105)

[Note—¹It is to be noted here that while narrating the incident related to king Bali and Lord Vaaman in these verses, the narrator, sage Agastya, uses the pronoun 'you' because he has been speaking with Lord Ram, and both Lord Ram and Lord Vaaman are manifestations of the same Lord Vishnu. Hence, for all practical purposes, they are the one and the same Lord God existing in different forms and having different names in different eras or periods of time.

The story of king Bali and Lord Vaaman appears in Srimad Bhagwat, 8/15-23. It relates to the Vaaman (dwarf mendicant) incarnation of Lord Vishnu. This is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu. Bali was a grandson of Prahalad for whom Vishnu had incarnated as Nrisingh (half man and half lion) earlier.

King Bali was very righteous and powerful; he chased away Indra, the promiscuous and lustful king of Gods, from the throne of heaven, and conquered it. He performed a thousand Ashwamedha Yagya (horse sacrifice) during the course of which he had conquered the entire world and deprived Indra, the king of Gods who ruled over the heavens, of his heavenly powers. Aditi, the mother of Gods, was peeved, and she requested her husband, sage Kashyap, to find a way out. Kashyap advised her to pray to Lord Vishnu. Aditi did severe penance for twelve days at the end of which Vishnu appeared before her and asked how he could help her. When Aditi told him the problem, Vishnu promised that he will take birth as her son in the form of a 'Vaaman' (a dwarf Brahmin) and retrieve the earth and the kingdom of heaven from Bali's dominion.

Once he heard that king Bali was performing a great fire sacrifice, something Bali used to do routinely, and during which he had declared that he will give anything asked for, again something for which he was renowned. This religious sacrifice was being conducted on the banks of river Narmada. Seizing this opportunity, Vishnu in the form of a Vaaman approached Bali who welcomed him and paid his due respects. Then Bali asked Vaaman to ask for some gift or donation as this was the traditional practice during such great religious sacrifices. Vaaman was waiting for this chance. First he made Bali repeat his vows in public, and then asked for land measuring his three steps.

Bali was dumbfounded—he wondered at the inconsequential dimension of the land covered by three tiny steps of this dwarf! Bali requested Vishnu to ask for something more, but Vishnu was adamant. Bali's priest, sage Shukracharya, knew that this dwarf was no one else but Vishnu, and so he tried to persuade Bali to abstain from making such commitment off-hand, because he will lose his entire kingdom. But Bali refused, saying that being the grandson of Prahalad, he cannot rescind on his words that he will give this Brahmin dwarf whatever he asks, even if it means sufferance.

Shukracharya was annoyed at this disobedience, but Vishnu was extremely pleased, and the Lord decided that after fulfilling the promise made to the Gods he will instantly reward Bali in ample terms, and will himself serve him! What a wonderful grace Vishnu shows.

So it happened that Vishnu, in the form of Vaaman, assumed a colossal form of cosmic proportions. The Lord measured the entire earth that Bali ruled in his first step. In the second step Vishnu measured the whole heaven. Nothing was left for the third step—so Bali offered his head! Vishnu was extremely pleased, and being the Lord of the world, he decided that since Bali has offered his own self to him like a faithful devotee, he will fully reward him. Hence, Vishnu blessed Bali that he will go down in history as the greatest donor and righteous of all times, that he will become Indra, the king of Gods, and rule over the heavens during the celestial era known as Saawarni Manvantar, that till that time he shall become the king of the nether world where demons would live, and to add icing to the cake the Lord declared that he himself will become his gatekeeper, and anybody who dared oppose him would be punished by the Lord himself!]

Roka çkg | n'kxho% dks = jktk-flr eka on A
 rW. kha fLFkrks okeuLRoefçra ukkja fj i k% AA106AA rnk Roka cf/kja eRok | foos k oysçge- A r= "Vøk i RU; k | kfjØhMurRi je- AA107AA tvām prāha sa daṣagrīvaḥ ko'tra rājā'sti mām vada / tūṣṇīm sthito vāmanastvamapritaṁ nottaraṁ ripoḥ // 106 // tadā tvām badhiraṁ matvā sa viveṣa valergrḥam / tatra dḍaṣṭvā patnyā sārīkrīḍanatatparam // 107 //

The ten-headed Ravana enquired of you¹, 'Tell me, who is the king of this city?'

But knowing that he (Ravana) was to become your enemy, you neglected him and did not reply. Ravana kept on standing silently for some time, expecting to hear an answer from you. (107)

[¹See note of verse no. 104 herein above.]

Thinking that you were deaf, he entered the city nevertheless and went to the palace of king Bali. There he found Bali playing the game of dice with his queen. (107) rLFkkS r= {k. ka rW. kha cysyçeha 0; ykcd; r- A rkonñjs cygLRkrØhMki kl ks i r~fo AA108AA rekurq jko. kk; cfyjkkki ; Üknk A jko.kks fi rekura ; ; ks ikl kfrd tokr-AA109AA tasthau tatra kṣaṇaṁ tūṣṇīm balerlakṣmīm vyalokayat / tāvaddüre balerhastātkriḍāpāso'patadbhuvi // 108 // tamānetuṁ rāvaṇāya balirājñāpayattadā / rāvaṇo'pi tamānetuṁ yayau pāsāmtika javāt // 109 //

He kept on standing quietly as the couple continued to play the game, but his gaze was fixed for some moments on the queen.

[We know that Ravana was a lustful demon whose promiscuity had proven to be one of his biggest banes. It is this sexual perversity that was inherent in his nature that had led Nalkuber to curse him, and it was the same perversity that led to his final death when he had dared to abduct Sita, the wife of Lord Ram.]

In the meantime, the dice slipped from the hands of Bali and fell down a little away from him. (108)

Bali asked Ravana to pick up and bring the dice to him. Ravana immediately went to pick up the dice.

[We will note here that Bali was so engaged in his game that he hadn't noticed that Ravana was standing nearby. When the dice got flipped and Bali raised his head to see where it lay, he observed Ravana standing close to him. Bali paid no special attention to him, and treating him just like he would have treated one of his many servants who attended him, he casually asked Ravana to fetch the dice.] (109) çkPppky Hkø% i kl a djs k u ppky l % A foa kī kfhk% Øes kkl ks ; koRi kl a çpky; r-AA110AA rkonax; % l ok% i kl Hkkj s k i hfMrk% A u fu"Øeø% i kl rykPpif. kzk #f/kj klyrk% AA111AA rnk pøks k nh?kz l fpj dky a n' kkuu% A rrks fogL; nkL; k ra i kl ekuh; oš cfy% AA112AA proccacāla bhuvah pāsaraṁ kareṇa na cacāla saḥ / viṁṣaddorbhiḥ krameṇāsau yāvatpāsaraṁ pracālayat // 110 // tāvadaṁgulayaḥ sarvāḥ pāsabhāreṇa piḍitāḥ / na niṣkramuḥ pāsatalāccūrṇitā rudhirāplutāḥ // 111 // tadā cukroṣa dīrghaṁ sa cirakālaṁ daṣānanaḥ / tato vihasya dāsyā taṁ pāsamāniya vai baliḥ // 112 //

He tried to pick up the dice with one hand, but it did not move at all. Then Ravana tried to lift the dice using one after another all his twenty arms, but still the dice did not budge from its position. (110)

But since he had tried to pull up the dice by inserting his fingers underneath it and using them as a lever to move the dice upwards, all his fingers got crushed under the weight of the dice when it fell back so much so that they started bleeding profusely. (111)

Seriously injured, the ten-headed Ravana began yelling aloud in agony due to the severity of the pain caused by his bleeding fingers that were crushed under the dice and still held there.

At that moment, one of Bali's maids picked up the dice very easily and gave it back to him. (112)

f/kfX/kd- —Rok j ko. ka ra x'gkflU"dkl ; nefg% A rrrks /krks jkt nrLrnqPN"Vsrq i kf"kr% AA113AA v'Uokuka 'k—ra uhRok çkf{ki RçR; ga cfg% A
 , dnk }ki js xRok çkFkz; kekl Roka eg% AA114AA Ro; k Loi knyXu% Loi nkaxqBu [ks fçr% A rnk· frefnrks ydka fpj dkyu j ko. k% AA115AA dhigdhiḥ kṛtvā rāvaṇam taṁ grhāniṣkāsayadbahiḥ / tato dhr̥to rājadūtaistaducchiṣṭaistu poṣitaḥ // 113 // aśvānām śakṛtaṁ nītvā prākṣipatpratyahaṁ bahiḥ / ekadā dvāpare gatvā prārthayāmāsa tvām muhuḥ // 114 // tvayā svapādalagnaḥ svapadāṁguṣṭhena khe'pitaḥ / tadā'timudito laṁkāṁ cirakālena rāvaṇaḥ // 115 //

Bali severely admonished Ravana, and rebuking him sharply he ordered him unceremoniously out of the palace.

Outside the palace, Bali's messengers and other attendants once again caught hold of Ravana, and kept him a prisoner. They fed him with their left-over food. (114)

Ravana was assigned the task of collecting the dung of horses from the stable and throwing it outside.

After sometime, Ravana saw you (i.e. Lord Vaaman) standing at the gate, and so he came to you begging for mercy, falling at your feet and pleading with you to show him the way out of the city so that he can escape from his captivity and find freedom.

Taking pity on him, you had flicked him into the sky with the tip of one of your big toes. Ravana thus managed to escape from the walls of the Nether World and regained his freedom once more.

Having thus found his freedom, he returned to his capital at Lanka after the lapse of a long time. (115)

; ; kS eus fu ta tUe f}rh; a tkre | oS A
 jko. k% i jeçhr , oa ykdkUegkcy% AA116AA dr̥rkULoo' kkfÉR; a çHkke i q̇i dFLFr% A –"Vṣḍnk· = I kdr̥s i w̄t̄a ro nhf{kre~AA117AA

 vuj. ; a l æj s k pdkj i fr̄ra j . ks A rnk 'klrks uj. ; u e }ā ks j ?kqUUnu% AA118AA HkRok Roka l æj s kṣ I dṣ/Ēca of/k"; fr A bR; DRok l xrks ukda j ko. kks fi i g ha ; ; kS AA119AA yayau mene nijam̄ janma dviṭiyam̄ jātamadya vai / rāvaṇaḥ paramaprīta evam̄ lokānmahābalaḥ // 116 // kartum̄ tānsvavaṣānnityam̄ babhrāma puṣpakasthitāḥ / dr̥ṣṭāvakadā'tra sākete pūrvajam̄ tava dikṣitam // 117 // anaraṇyam̄ saṁgareṇa cakāra patitam̄ raṇe / tadā śapto'naraṇyena madvam̄ṣe raghunandanāḥ // 118 // bhūtvā tvām̄ saṁgareṇaiva sakuṭumbam̄ vadhiṣyati / ityuktvā sa gato nākaṁ rāvaṇo'pi purīm̄ yayau // 119 //

Once free from the captivity of Bali, Ravana thought to himself that it was like taking a new birth (because he had lost all hopes of escape).

Once again however, after recuperating and recovering his vigour that made him a great warrior all over again, he reverted back to his bad old ways. (116)

He strode his plane and went around the world daily with a desire to discover a place which he could conquer (after of course exempting the places where he had been forced to bite the dust and suffer extraordinary humiliation and defeat in his previous endeavours, and where he dare not go again).

One day, during his routine wanderings, he saw one of your ancestors who had engaged himself in doing a fire sacrifice (the Soma Yagya) as its chief patron, and was thus initiated into the religious vows accompanying such rituals. (117)

His name was king 'Anaranya'. Ravana challenged him for a duel in which he succeeded in defeating the honourable king (who could not give a befitting reply to Ravana as he was restrained by his religious vows taken to complete the pending fire sacrifice).

Though defeated under the force of circumstances¹, the king cursed Ravana that one of his own descendents who would be known as 'Raghunandan' (i.e. Lord Ram, the son of the illustrious family of the great king Raghu of Ayodhya) would kill Ravana along with all his kith and kin some time in the future. (118)

After that, Anaranya went to the heaven (i.e. he died)², and Ravana went back to his own capital (of Lanka). (119)

[Note—¹Ravana knew fully well that a king who is under a religious vow during the course of performing a fire sacrifice is not supposed to pick up arms and kill anyone. So he decided to attack king Anaranya at the time when the king was under a religious vow during the course of the fire sacrifice he was undertaking at that time. Anaranya had but little choice; he could either break his vows which would be tantamount to sacrilege of the fire sacrifice and a grave sin, or accept defeat which would lead to dishonour. The righteous king chose the latter option. This helped him retain the merit accrued by the performance of the fire sacrifice, and it enabled him to curse Ravana effectively.

²It was too much of a dishonour for the family of the great king Anaranya that he be defeated in battle, and it was a humiliation that he couldn't cope with. So he decided to end his life to keep his family's honour, rather than to live with this ignominy of defeat for the rest of his life.]

I uRdekjedkars I féjh{; Sdnk- I g% A uRok i çPN nðskq dks ojÜpfr I knj e- AA120AA efu% çkg egkfo".kq rPNRok çkg ra i u% A fo".kqk ; s grk ; q) s jk{kl k | k yHkfr dke- AA121AA

sanatkumāramekānte sannirīkṣyaikadā'suraḥ / natvā papraccha deveṣu ko varaśceti sādaram // 120 // muniḥ prāha mahāviṣṇuṁ tacchrutvā prāha taṁ punaḥ / viṣṇunā ye hatā yuddhe rākṣasādya labhamti kām // 121 //

One day the demon (Ravana) met the celestial sage known as Sanatkumar. He bowed before the sage and asked him in private, 'Oh sage, please tell me who is the best amongst the Gods.' (120)

Sage Sanatkumar replied that Lord Vishnu was the best amongst the Gods and the most superior of them.

Hearing this Ravana further enquired about the fate of all the demons who had been slayed by Vishnu till date. (121) xfra pfr efu% çkg rs efäa ; kfr ngyHkke- A i u% i çPN ra uRok duki k; u oS gj% AA122AA Hkfo"; R; = es eR; qrnk ra efujcöhr- A =rk; ka uj : i s k jkeks fo".kqkfo"; fr AA123AA v; k'; k; ka rnk rsu —Rok oja I qk#. ke- A rLek}?ka d#o RoekReu% i jekReu% AA124AA rsu xPNfl efäa Roa rPNRok I n' kkuu% A fojkskkFkã tudtkegj n xkš'ehrVkr- AA125AA gatim ceti muniḥ prāha te muktim yānti durlabhām / punaḥ papraccha taṁ natvā kenopāyena vai hareḥ // 122 // bhaviṣyatyaatra me mr̥tyustadā taṁ munirabravīt / tretāyām nararūpeṇa rāmo viṣṇurbhaviṣyati // 123 //

ayodhyāyām tadā tena kṛtvā vairam sudāruṇam / tasmādvaghaṁ kuruṣva tvamātmanaḥ paramātmanaḥ // 124 // tena gacchasi muktīm tvam tacchrutvā sa daṣānanaḥ / virodhārtham janakajāmaharadgautamītaṭāt // 125 //

The sage replied, ‘All the demons who were killed by Lord Vishnu on different occasions had attained an excellent destiny for themselves, a fate that is very rare to achieve. [To wit, all those who were killed by Lord Vishnu had attained deliverance, emancipation and salvation of their souls; all had obtained freedom from the cycle of birth and death.]’

The demon (Ravana) asked once again, ‘Say then, oh sage, by what means my death can happen at the hands of Lord Hari (Vishnu).¹’

The sage replied, ‘In the age of Treta, Lord Vishnu would assume the form of a human prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya. (122-123)

At that time you can create a situation that would appear to make you an arch enemy of Lord Ram, who in reality would be Lord Vishnu. And using this ploy you can then manoeuvre things in such a way that you could get killed at the hands of Vishnu in the guise of Lord Ram. (124)

If you succeed in this enterprise then you would easily be able to attain a destiny which is very rare for any creature to achieve, the destiny that is called ‘Mukti’, literally meaning freedom and deliverance of the soul, liberation of the soul from the cage of this evil body, and the subsequent attainment of emancipation and salvation for the creature.’

Ravana heard this advice with rapt attention and firmly ensconced it in his heart. [To wit, he decided firmly then and there that it was what he will do no matter what happens, because in it lay his own good and welfare.]

It is for this express reason why Ravana had willfully and willingly created animosity with Lord Ram by abducting his wife Sita, the daughter of Janak, from the banks of river Gautami (where the Lord was living at the time during the course of his fourteen years of forest sojourn). [Ravana took away Sita because he knew that this action of his would certainly provoke Lord Ram to come to Lanka and kill him if he refused to give her back. And it would ensure his deliverance, emancipation and salvation as prophesied by sage Sannatkumar.]² (125)

[Note—¹Ravana was anxious for the redemption of his soul, and he knew very well that his sinful deeds and evil life would never allow him to find deliverance and salvation. Since now it was virtually impossible for him to mend his ways because he would be laughed at and ridiculed by his own demon race who would brand him as a traitor and a coward, he was on the look out of some other means by which he can attain emancipation of his soul and an end to the horrifying life that he was habituated to living.

The very fact that he consulted Sanatkumar about the matter showed his anxiety about his fate, as well as his realization that his destiny was doomed if continued to lead a sinful life as he was leading at the present time and if he did not endeavour to somehow devise a device to seek redemption and deliverance from the grip of the vicious cycle of sins and evils he found himself in at present.

As we will read below, it was this decision on Ravana’s part that he must find out a way by which Lord Vishnu would somehow kill him so that he can find deliverance, emancipation and salvation for his otherwise doomed soul that led him to kidnap Sita and force Lord Ram to come all the way to Lanka to kill him in the battle that followed.

And of course it goes to Ravana's credit that inspite of being an epitome of sin and evil he did manage to compel the Supreme Being to walk barefoot right up to his own doorstep to grant him salvation and emancipation for his asking, a feat that not even the greatest of sages, hermits, ascetics and other holy men could achieve inspite of their best of spiritual efforts and undertaking of the strictest of religious practices.

²Refer also to: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 23, and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59; and Canto 4, verse no. 11.]

v' kksds jf{krk ru ekroRLo0?kPN; k A
 , dnk ukj na €"Vøk uRok i çPN jko.k% AA126AA Hkxou- cñg es ; ks) q dñ= I flur egkcyk% A ; ks) ðePNkfe cfyfHkLRoa tkukfl t xR=; e~ AA127AA aṣoke rakṣitā tena mātr̥yatsvavaghecchayā / ekadā nāradaṁ ḍḍaṣṭvā natvā papraccha rāvaṇaḥ // 126 //

 bhagavan brūhi me yoddhum̥ kutra santi mahābalāḥ /
 yoddhumicchāmi balibhistvaṁ jānāsi jagattrayam // 127 //

That is why in order to get himself killed (at the hands of Lord Vishnu, who had manifested as Lord Ram, and thereby find deliverance for his soul) he (Ravana) had kept Sita in the garden called 'Ashoka'¹ with proper care and protection that he would have shown to his own mother (mātr̥yatsvavaghecchayā).

One day Ravana saw sage Narad (the celestial sage), paid his obeisance to the him, and asked (126), ---

'Oh Lord, please be kind to tell me who are those warriors who can fight with me, and where do they live. I have a desire to fight with those warriors who are brave, strong and valiant. I ask you because you know all about everyone wherever they live in the three Lokas².' (127)

[Note—¹Ravana's favourite garden was called 'Ashoka' because of two probable reasons: one is that it was a tranquil garden that provides solace to the soul, being exceptionally magnificent and charming so much so that it removed all senses of weariness and sorrow as soon as one entered it; and the other reason perhaps is that it was full of the wonderful Ashoka trees (Sarica Indica or Jonesia Ashoka trees).

It was a very pleasant place to dwell in. Since Ravana had no real intention to actually torment or harass Sita in the least, for he had brought her only because he saw that it was the only means by which he would compel Lord Ram, an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, to come and slay him in the apparent campaign to liberate Sita from his captivity, and he would thereby attain liberation from his demon body, he took great care to make her as comfortable as was practical and feasible without arousing suspicion in anybody's mind about his real intentions. So not only did he place her under the shade of a large and leafy Ashoka tree whose shade extended over a wide area, and which provided her a cool place to spend her days under its shadow, he also appointed an old demoness named Trijata at her service, to look after her needs and protect her from other cruel demons and demonesses who may attempt to tease Sita as none of the demons was privy to Ravana's secret mission of using Sita as a bait to call Lord Ram to kill him and grant him deliverance.

It will be noted here that prior to abducting Sita, Ravana had become very anxious about his fate and the destiny of his soul, for he had realized by that time that the sinful life he had led cannot ever give his soul any peace on its own account, and so it would be wise for him to find a way out of his predicaments, and sooner the better. That is why he had consulted Sanatkumar earlier on this matter—how and by what means he can find deliverance, emancipation and salvation. And both had advised him that his only chance lay in being killed at the hands of Lord Vishnu.

So therefore it is clear as crystal that his abduction of Sita was not done as a sinful deed to impulsively satisfy his carnal instincts, but as a holy mission to ensure deliverance of his soul from the cage of a vile body of a demon in which it had got unfortunately trapped, and to add a better jewel in this symbolic crown of his emancipation and salvation was the opportunity to see the Supreme Lord right before his own eyes, not for a fleeting moment as usually is the case when the Lord happens to reveal himself before some great sage or hermit who had done severe penances to have a glimpse of the Lord, but to see the Lord with an eye-full and to his heart's content for as long as he would live after the Lord first came to grant him the opportunity to see his divine form—because the war of Lanka lasted for quite a many days, and not for a fleeting moment, giving Ravana ample time and enough good luck to have his fill of the divine view of the Supreme Being!

It is indeed true that in this aspect Ravana was the luckiest soul who ever lived, for while throughout his life he enjoyed everything it had to offer and ruled over the world without any challenge, and in death he attained the rarest of rare fate of being killed by the Supreme Lord himself, which not only ensured his deliverance, salvation and emancipation but also gave him the chance to drink the symbolic nectar through the medium of his eyes when he could behold the Lord and his divine form to his heart's content.

The Lord duly acknowledged Ravana's sincere desire to atone for his sins as he allowed the latter to suffer gravely in the war before his death. The Lord also acknowledged Ravana's desire to attain deliverance and emancipation for his soul as well as its inherent piety and holiness because it is recorded in the story of the Ramayan that when Ravana died a splendourous ray of light representing his soul emerged from his body and went directly to enter the body of Lord Ram—signifying the merger of the individual soul of the creature with the Supreme Soul of this creation represented by Lord Ram. It was a remarkable and a rare feat for a demon so much hated and reviled by the world that his 'true self' represented by his Atma, the soul, would merge with the Soul of the Lord with whom Ravana was outwardly an enemy. Fantastic and awe-inspiring indeed!

It also shows how merciful the Lord is—that he had no hesitation in accepting Ravana's soul in spite of the latter's well-known external behaviour that was despicable to the extreme, because the Lord realized that internally Ravana had great respect for Sita even though he had brought her to Lanka apparently in a way that was his natural habit, of abducting other person's women, but he had done so, and had also created a bitter environment of animosity and hate with the Lord just to ensure his salvation and emancipation, and nothing more. The all-knowing Lord was fully aware that sage Sanatkumar had already advised Ravana that his only redemption lay in being killed by Lord Vishnu, and so everything that followed to attain this objective would be in order.

²The ‘three Lokas’ refer to the three divisions of the world, such as the heaven, the earth and the nether world. Sage Narad had access to all these worlds, and he was so nice and polite that he was welcomed everywhere. Everyone knew that Narad was a selfless saint, and that whatever advice he would give would be for their welfare, so everyone respected his views and kept them in mind when planning for the future. So therefore, no one knew the world and its inhabitants much better than Narad. This is why Ravana asked him the question regarding any warrior who was strong enough to be challenged and vanquished—as this feat would give him great fame and honour for which he always longed.]

efu/; kRok fpj kRçkg Ūor }hi fuokfI u% A egkcyk egkdk; kLr= ; kfg egkers AA128AA fo".kq wt kj rk ; s oS fo".kqk fugrkÜp ; s A r , o r= l atkrk á tš kÜp l jkl j% AA129AA munirdhyātvā cirātprāha śvetadvīpanivāsinaḥ / mahābalā mahākāyāstatra yāhi mahāmate // 128 //

 viṣṇupūjāratā ye vai viṣṇunā nihatāśca ye / ta eva tatra samjātā hyajeyāśca surāsuraiḥ // 129 //

Sage Narad contemplated for some time and replied, ‘The inhabitants of a continent called ‘Shwet Dwip’ have well-built muscular bodies and are exceptionally strong. They are always involved in worshipping the Lord God. Those creatures who are killed at the hands of Lord Vishnu are born there. These inhabitants have no fear from the Gods as well as the Demons.’

[Since the inhabitants of the Shwet Dwip had obtained Lord Vishnu’s indirect blessing by way of getting killed by the Lord, and they also worship the Lord in their new birth, they attain a sort of special status which protects them and grants them immunity from any kind of fear from any quarter, be it a God or a Demon.] (128-129)

rPNRok jko. kks oskUef=fhk% i qi ds k r% A
 ; kS) pkeks ; ; kS xokPNR }hi kfrda epk AA130AA rRçHkkgrrstLda i qi da ukpyRi j% A R; DRok foekua ç; ; kS Lo; eD n' kkuu% AA131AA tacchrutvā rāvaṇo vegānamātribhiḥ puṣpakeṇa taiḥ / yoddhukāmo yayau garvācchrutadvīpāntikam mudā // 130 // tatprabhāhatatejaskam puṣpakam nācalatpuraḥ / tyaktvā vimānaṁ prayayau svayameva daṣānanaḥ // 131 //

Glad to hear it, Ravana summoned his ministers, and together with them he boarded the Pushpak plane, embarking in all haste on a campaign to wage war against the residents of the Shwet Dwip. (130)

But as soon as the plane reached that place it got stuck as its movement stopped by the rays of dazzling splendour that emanated from the continent's surface¹.

Amazed, Ravana and his entourage of ministers got down from the plane, and leaving it behind Ravana went on foot towards the (center of the) continent (or towards the capital or citadel of the place)². (131)

[Note—¹A similar event occurred when Ravana had gone to the nether world where king Bali lived—see verse nos. 103-104.

It appears to be scene right from modern science fiction movies, and more importantly the way modern nations are building self-defense missile shields. The rays could have been jets of magnetic, electric, laser, nuclear or some other form of powerful form of energy shot from the surface into the sky that would obstruct any object that tried to cross its field, and perhaps even bring it down by shooting it if it did try to fly past the shield. In all probability these rays appear to be powerful jets of magnetic energy that could pull down any object from the sky.

²Since these powerful jets of energy were meant to protect the city below, they were arranged in such a way as to encircle the capital from its periphery, from the very outskirts in a great circle. In ancient times great capitals were built on elevated land and were citadels of power around which the rest of the city spread. So therefore, Ravana's plane came down in an open ground much outside the central part of the city, and beyond protective circle of rays that girdled the city from all its sides.]

çfo' kluuð rn-}hi a ?k'irks gLru ; kf"krk A xPN& ; k dL; fpíKL; k i ði k. ; kuf; nq oue~AA132AA r; k i ðV% dç% dks fl çf"kr% du ok on A bR; ØRok yhy; k ÓhfHkgz rhfHkeðpçç% AA133AA ed[k'skq rkfMrks gLrSkkzferks /kkeç[ka fpje~ A /kRoSda rRi na rkfhk% f{klr% dnçdoleçç% AA134AA ijLi ja fg ØhMf~% d; k R; äLrq yhy; k A i i kr ijyçk; ka Økçk; k% 'kkçodii ds AA135AA praviṣanneva taddvīpaṁ ghr̥to hastena yoṣitā / gacchar̥ntyā kasyaciddāsyā puṣpāṇyānayitum vanam // 132 // tayā puṣṭaḥ kutaḥ ko'si preṣitaḥ kena vā vada / ityuktvā līlayā strībhirhasantībhirmuhurmuhuḥ // 133 // mukheṣu tāḍīto hastairbhrāmito'dhomukhaṁ ciram / dhṛṭvaikaṁ tatpadarṁ tābhiḥ kṣiptaḥ kaṁdukavanmuhuh // 134 // parasparam hi krīḍadbhiḥ kayā tyaktastu līlayā / papāta paralamkāyāṁ krauṁcāyāḥ śaucakūpake // 135 //

As soon as he (Ravana) entered the city, one woman caught hold of him with one of her hands. She was someone's maid and was on her way to the forest to fetch flowers (for worship). (132)

That lady asked him who he was, who had sent him there, whence he had come, and wherefore. Many other ladies joined her, and gleefully laughing and teasing him they started smacking and pinching him on the face in jest. Then they caught his leg, slung him round and round like a ball tied at the end of a string, and flung him away¹. (133-134)

The women folk were playing around cheerfully with Ravana, tossing and flicking him around (just like a group of naughty and rowdy children play around merrily with a petty insect or animal they manage to lay their hands upon).

Finally one of them flicked Ravana high into the sky, and he flew like a missile and landed far away in the toilet of Kraunchi in the city of Para-Lanka². (135)

[Note—¹One can imagine Ravana's utter despair, and the state of abject humiliation and ridicule in which he found himself. But the great irony with him was that he never seemed to learn anything from his mistakes; he never gained anything from experience. We have already read how he had faced almost a similar situation when he went to confront Sahastrabahu, then the monkey king Vaali, and once again in nether world in the palace of king Bali.

The lesson one draws from these events is that if one allows one's unbridled ambitions to have the better of him, if he allows the false sense of self-grandioseness and ego to cast a dark shadow of delusions on one's wisdom and prudence, if one is so arrogant and haughty that he throws all caution to the wind and refuses to learn from experience, then one should be ready to face the fate faced by Ravana.

²Kraunchi was Ravana's elder sister. See verse no. 64.

This landing in the toilet of his own sister was an extremity of insult for Ravana. Earlier he had been tied under the cradle-stand of Angad, and when the latter urinated, the foul liquid drenched Ravana all over, and flowed over his face: refer verse no. 100.]

—PNk) Lrkf}fueġäLrkl ka Óh. kka n' kkuu% A vküp; ġerya yC/ok fpġr; kekl neġr% AA136AA fo". kġk ; s grk ; q) s r's'kkerke' ka cye~ A ráġ= fugrLru Ūor}hi a ortkE; ge~ AA137AA

kr̥cchrāddhastādvīnirmuktastāsām strīṇām daṣānaḥ / āścaryamatulam labdhvā cintayāmāsa durmatih // 136 // viṣṇunā ye hatā yuddhe teṣāmetāḍḍaṣarṁ balam /

tarhyatra nihatastena śvetadvīpaṁ vrajāmyaham // 137 //

In this way, Ravana somehow managed to escape from the clutches of those women. That wicked fellow was still not ashamed though he was totally amazed by the developments. He thought to himself (136), ---

---‘Why, it is so wondrous and amazing that those who die at the hands of Lord Vishnu acquire such fantastic powers and miraculous strength as these ladies have proved that they do possess! Well then, I will also get myself killed by Vishnu so that I am born in the Shwet Dwip and acquire such astounding strength and miraculous powers that are got by the residents of this continent who come to live here after being killed by Lord Vishnu¹. (137)

[Note—¹These were merely women who were not supposed to be as strong physically as the men are. But astonishingly they had such stupendous strength that they could toss around Ravana like he was a ball, and then they lifted him by his leg and spun him round like children spin a ball tied to a sling. This feat left Ravana swooning in astonishment. He was greedy for power and strength, so he decided that he will now get himself killed by Vishnu just because that way he would be born again in the Shwet Dwip and acquire such supernatural powers as those that were possessed by the inhabitants of this place and were show-cased by these women.

As has been observed earlier, we will also note here that greed and unbridled ambition had had the better of Ravana’s wisdom and prudence. Whereas some time previously he had sought salvation by being killed at the hands of Lord Vishnu (refer: verse nos. 120-126), yet now he changed his mind and wanted to die at the hands of Vishnu just for the sake of becoming extremely strong and powerful! This is one of the primary reasons why a great sage’s son became fallen and was dishonoured by the epithet of ‘demon’ that was attached to his name for ever.]

ef; fo".kq Fkk dq; ūkFkk dk; ā dj kē; ge~A bfr fufŪpR; oŋgha tgkj jko.kks oukr~AA138AA tkuépa egky{eha l tgkj kouhl rke~A ekrōRi ky; kekl RoŪk% dka{kŪo/ka fu te~AA139AA

mayi viṣṇuryathā kupyettathā kāryaṁ karomyaham /

iti niścīya vaidehīm jahāra rāvaṇo vanāt // 138 //

jānannevaṁ mahālakṣmīm sa jahārāvanīsutām /

māṭṛvatpālayāmāsa tvattaḥ kāmkaṣanvadhaṁ nijam // 139 //

Now therefore I will strive to do something that would make Vishnu angry with me.’ It was this thinking that made Ravana abduct Sita from the forest. (138)

He had full become aware that Sita, who was born from earth (jahārāvanīsutām)¹, was actually goddess Laxmi (the divine consort of Lord Vishnu).

That is why, in order to make Vishnu angry and kill him, he had brought Sita, and he kept her safely while treating her like his own mother. [Refer. verse nos. 125-126.] (139)

[Note—¹Sita was found by king Janak, her worldly father, in a pitcher buried in the field while he was preparing it to perform a fire sacrifice. This story has been narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 58-60.]

-----**-----

Section 2.2:

Adhyatma Ramayan

The Story of Ravana, right from his birth, his acquisition of boons, the establishment of the Demon Kingdom of Lanka, and the reason why he abducted Sita, the wife of Lord Ram, that led to the destructive war of Lanka and Ravana's ultimate slaying, has been described in detail in Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, (i) Canto 1, verse nos. 18-61; (ii) Canto 2, verse nos. 1-62; (iii) Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59; (iv) Canto 4, verse nos. 1-11.

However, for the express purpose of this present Section where we narrate the birth of Ravana and his siblings, his boons and the establishment of the kingdom of demons, we shall limit our reading to (i) Canto 1, verse nos. 18-61; and (ii) Canto 2, verse nos. 1-62. The rest part of Ravana's story from the Adhyatma Ramayan will be cited in the other Chapters where the relevant narrative so demands.

Adhyatma Ramayan was penned by the legendary sage Veda Vyas, and is a part of one of the great Purans he composed, known as the 'Brahmaand Puran'. The Adhyatma Ramayan appears in the Uttar Khanda (later half) of this aforesaid Puran.

This Ramayan is so-called because it has spiritual, theological and metaphysical philosophy as its main theme, drawing prominently and conspicuously from the philosophy of the Upanishads in its narrative while building it around the great story of Lord Ram, who was a human incarnation of the Supreme Being.

Veda Vyas is credited as being the great editor of the corpus of the huge text of the holy 'Vedas', dividing them into their present form consisting of four parts known as the Riga, the Sama, the Yajur and the Atharva Vedas. He also separated the philosophical part of these Vedic texts from their ritualistic parts to form the excellent treatises on spiritual, theological and metaphysical philosophy that are collectively known as the famed 'Upanishads' of which there are one-hundred-and-eight in numbers. Besides this stupendous work, he also compiled mythological narratives of the Hindus into what is known as the 'Purans', literally the ancient histories according to mythology typical to the Hindus, of which there are eighteen in numbers, and to this voluminous work on the Purans he added as many subsidiary volumes which are called the 'Up-Purans'.

A full-fledged English version of the Adhyatma Ramayan, as well as of all the 108 Upanishads, with their original Sanskrit Texts followed by Roman Transliteration and English renderings, have been published by this author separately, and all of them are always available to all interested readers.

Now, for the express purpose of this Chapter which describes the birth of Ravana, his obtaining boons and powers, and the establishment of the Demon Kingdom by him in particular, and for the broad purpose of our present book titled 'The Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka', we shall presently concentrate only on that part of the Adhyatma Ramayan which narrates this aspect of the story exclusively.

That said, let us start reading this most fascinating and wondrous story from the classic 'Adhyatma Ramayan' as follows:-

(i) Canto 1, verse nos. 18-61:

सह्यमेतन्महाबाहो रावणस्य निबर्हणम् ।
 असह्यमेतत्सम्प्राप्तं रावणेर्यन्निषूदनम् ॥ १८॥
 अन्तकप्रतिमाः सर्वे कुम्भकर्णादयो मृधे ।
 अन्तकप्रतिमैर्बाणैर्हतास्ते रघुसत्तम ॥ १९॥
 दत्ता चेयं त्वयास्माकं पुरा ह्यभयदक्षिणा ।
 हत्वा रक्षोगणान् सङ्ख्ये कृतकृत्योऽद्य जीवसि ॥ २०॥

॥ adhyātmārāmāyaṇe uttarakāṇḍam ॥ sahyametanmahābāho rāvaṇasya nibarhaṇam । asahyametatsamprāptaṁ rāvaṇeryanniṣūdanam ॥ 18॥ antakapratimāḥ sarve kumbhakarṇādayo mṛdhe । antakapratimairbāṇairhatāste raghusattama ॥ 19॥ dattā ceyam tvayāsmākaṁ purā hyabhayadakṣiṇā । hatvā rakṣogaṇān saṅkhye kṛtakṛtyo'dya jīvasi ॥ 20॥

[Once upon a time, the illustrious sage Agastya, accompanied by many other great sages, went to meet Lord Ram in his royal court where all other ministers and courtiers were present. After preliminaries and pleasantries were exchanged, sage Agastya praised Lord Ram and lauded him for his victory over Ravana and others of the demon clan. While doing so the sage said that defeating Ravana was not as great a feat that was accompanied on the battle-field of Lanka as was the vanquishing Meghanad, the son of Ravana.

This assertion by the sage astonished everyone present. Lord Ram too was quite a bit surprised as the sage cannot speak a lie. So what was the reason for this declaration, the Lord enquired of the sage. To answer this question the sage narrated the whole story pertaining to the birth of Ravana and his siblings, his acquiring fantastic boons, the establishment of the Demon Kingdom by him, and the growth of his clout and powers that made him conquer the whole world and establish an unchallenged suzerainty over it.

Sage Agastya told Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord who is brave, is courageous and has great strength of arms (sahyametanmahābāho)! It was comparatively easy for you to kill Ravana than to get rid of his son (Meghnad) which was a very difficult task indeed. (18)

These demons, including the formidable Kumbhakarn, were indeed like ‘Death’ itself personified. Oh truly the best amongst the kings of Raghu-race (raghusattama)! All of them were killed by your arrows which were also as fierce, potent and irrevocable as ‘Death’ itself¹ (19).

You had already blessed us (all the sages) with the boon of fearlessness. Now you have killed these savage demons yourself and consequentially feel fully satisfied, pleased and thankful in this life². (20)’

[Note—¹The sage says that to counter the formidable foes represented by the demons, and especially Kumbhakran, who were personifications of ‘death’ itself, a force was needed that would not only neutralize but even supersede them. This punch was provided by Lord Ram.

The ‘arrows’ symbolize the Lord’s stupendous powers; these arrows zapped at the demons like powerful and dynamic pulses of high energy beams that neutralize and destroy enemy targets which they strike with intensive force and strength of energy that much surpass that of the opponent, virtually short-circuiting their own devices and burning them to cinders.

²The sage thanks Lord Ram for fulfilling his vows made to all the sages and to other ordinary creatures of this world as well as to Mother Earth that he will free them all from the horrors and torments that they face interminably from the demons. Now the Lord has been able to fulfill his promises made to them as he has successfully eliminated the scourge of the demons. So it is a matter for the Lord to feel satisfied and happy. The Lord’s contentment is all the more marked because in this process he not only provided succour to the world but also aided in the liberation and deliverance of the souls of the demons—because all the demons who were killed at the hands of Lord Ram found immediate emancipation and salvation. So it was clearly a win-win situation for all! This entitled Lord Ram to have double-praise.]

श्रुत्वा तु भाषितं तेषां मुनीनां भावितात्मनाम् ।
विस्मयं परमं गत्वा रामः पूज्जलिब्रवीत् ॥ २१॥
रवणादीनतिक्रम्य कुम्भकर्णादिशक्षसान् । त्रिलोकजयिनो हित्वा किं प्रशंसथ रवणिम् ॥ २२॥ śrutvā tu bhāṣitaṁ teṣāṁ munīnāṁ bhāvitātmanām । vismayaṁ paramaṁ gatvā rāmaḥ prāñjalirabravīt ॥ 21 ॥

rāvaṇādīnatikramya kumbhakarṇādirākṣasān |
trilokajayino hitvā kiṃ praśaṃsatha rāvaṇim || 22 ||

Hearing these words of the wise and enlightened sage, Lord Ram was astonished. He asked him with the palms of his two hands touching each other (i.e. by folding his hands) as a mark of respect [21], ‘Oh sage! Why do you praise Ravana's son (Meghnad) so much instead of praising other demons, especially his father Ravana, who had conquered the three worlds, or Kumbhakarna (his uncle), or any of the other demons? [What is the reason and the mystery behind it, that you have particularly selected Meghnad for lavishing such praise upon him? What was so special with him? Prey, please tell me more about it.] [22] (21-22).

ततस्तद्वचनं श्रुत्वा राघवस्य महात्मनः ।
कुम्भयोनिर्महातेजा रामं प्रीत्या वचोऽब्रवीत् ॥ २३॥
शृणु राम यथा वृत्तं रावणे रावणस्य च ।
जन्म कर्म वरादानं सङ्क्षेपाद्ददतो मम ॥ २४॥
पुरा कृतयुगे राम पुलस्त्यो ब्रह्मणः सुतः । तपस्तप्तुं गतो विद्वान् मेरोः पार्श्वं महामतिः ॥ २५॥

tatastadvacanaṃ śrutvā rāghavasya mahātmanah |
kumbhayonirmahātejā rāmaṃ prītyā vaco'bravīt || 23 ||
śrṇu rāma yathā vṛttam rāvaṇe rāvaṇasya ca |
janma karma varādānaṃ saṅkṣepādvadato mama || 24 ||
purā kṛtayuge rāma pulastyo brahmaṇah sutaḥ |
tapastaptuṃ gato vidvān meroḥ pārśvam mahāmatih || 25 ||

Hearing these words of enquiry from the great Raghav (Lord Ram), sage Agastya, who was radiant and glorious by the virtue of his knowledge and spiritual attainments, replied most affectionately (23)—

[He said—] ‘Oh Lord Ram! Listen to the story of Ravana and his son's birth, their deeds, boons etc. I shall describe them to you in brief (24).

Oh Lord, in some previous era called Kritiyug or Satyug, a Brahmin's son named Pulastya, who was a wise person, an expert in the scriptures and religion, and very learned and illustrious, went to the Sumeru mountain to do severe Tapa (austerities, penances) (25).

तृणबिन्दोराश्रुमेऽसौ न्यवसन्मुनिपुङ्गवः ।
तपस्तेपे महातेजाः स्वाध्यायनिरतः सदा ॥ २६॥
तत्राश्रमे महारम्ये देवगन्धर्वकन्यकाः ।
गायन्त्यो ननृतुस्तत्र हसन्त्यो वादयन्ति च ॥ २७॥

पुलस्त्यस्य तपोविघ्नं चक्रुः सर्वा अनिन्दिताः । ततः क्रुद्धो महातेजा व्याजहार वचो महत् ॥ २८॥

tr̥ṇabindorāśrame'sau nyavasanmunipuṅgavaḥ । tapastepe mahātejāḥ svādhyāyanirataḥ sadā ॥ 26 ॥ tatrāśrame mahāramye devagandharvakanyakāḥ । gāyantyo nanṛtustatra hasantyo vādayanti ca ॥ 27 ॥ pulastyasya tapovighnaṁ cakruḥ sarvā aninditāḥ । tataḥ kruddho mahātejā vyājahāra vaco mahat ॥ 28 ॥

That most exalted and glorious sage took up residence in a humble thatched hut of sage Trinabindu, and constantly involved himself in 'self study' (i.e. he devoted his time and attention in contemplating about the pure consciousness or the 'pure self', and always thought of it; it also implies self study of the scriptures and experimenting with their pronouncements to arrive at the Absolute Truth). He also did severe penances and observed strict austerities (i.e. he did strict Tapa) (26).

In that most attractive and pleasant hermitage, the nymphs, maidens and damsels of the Gods and Gandharvas (celestial musicians) used to frolic around, singing, playing, prancing, dancing, laughing, playing musical instruments, and generally having merry of a time (27).

This created grave disturbance in the serenity of the atmosphere, and it created a hindrance in the austere life of sage Pulastya and the penances that he did so much so that by-and-by he lost his patience and became very annoyed, angry and peeved at their deeds. So ultimately, unable to cope with this nuisance any longer, he indignantly said to them wrathfully (28)—

या मे दृष्टिपथं गच्छेत्सा गर्भं धारयिष्यति ।
ताः सर्वाः शापसंविग्ना न तं देशं प्रचक्रुः ॥ २९॥
तृणबिन्दोस्तु राजर्षेः कन्या तन्नाशृणोद्वचः । विचचार मुनेरग्रे निर्भया तं प्रपश्यती ॥ ३०॥

yā me dr̥ṣṭipatham̄ gacchetsā garbham̄ dhārayiṣyati । tāḥ sarvāḥ śāpasam̄vignā na tam̄ deśam̄ pracakramuḥ ॥ 29 ॥
tr̥ṇabindostu rājarṣeḥ kanyā tannāśṛṇodvacaḥ । vicacāra muneragre nirbhayā tam̄ prapaśyati ॥ 30 ॥

'If my sight falls on anyone of you girls, whosoever she might be, she shall become pregnant.'

Becoming scared at this blanket curse, none of them dared again to go near that hermitage.

[The learned sage surely did not mean any improper and immoral act, and this threat of the girls becoming pregnant if they did not leave him alone was meant to scare them away. But after all, a sage's words do not go in vain, and this would be evident with what happened with the daughter of his host Trinbindu.] (29)

But as it so happened because it was the fiat of fate, the daughter of sage Trinbindu, a sage who was most exalted and was literally like a king among sages, unfortunately did not hear it. As a result, she roamed around and frolicked fearlessly in the vicinity of sage Pulastya, glancing at him off and on in a playful manner (which the sage took as an open affront to him and a gesture of impertinence and disobedience, which of course infuriated him no end) (30).

बभूव पाण्डुरतनुर्व्यञ्जितान्तःशरीरजा ।
दृष्ट्वा सा देहवैवर्ण्यं भीता पितरमन्वगात् ॥ ३१॥
तृणबिन्दुश्च तां दृष्ट्वा राजर्षिरमितद्युतिः ।
ध्यात्वा मुनिकृतं सर्वमवैद्विज्ञानचक्षुषा ॥ ३२॥ babhūva pāṇḍuratanurvyañjitāntaḥśarīrajā । dr̥ṣṭvā sā dehavaivarṇyaṁ bhītā pitaramanvagāt ॥ 31 ॥ tṛṇabinduśca tāṁ dr̥ṣṭvā rājarṣiramitadyutiḥ । dhyātvā munikṛtaṁ sarvamavidvijñānacakṣuṣā ॥ 32 ॥

Because of the curse, she soon became pregnant and turned yellowish (pale), and her breasts developed into prominence.

Seeing her body acquiring unconventional shape and colour, she was terrified of the consequences, and went to her father most hesitantly, being overcome with fear and uncertainty (31).

When Trinbindu, who was most radiant and like a wise king amongst sages (rājarṣiramitadyutiḥ), saw her, he was aghast, and he soon realized, through his enlightened and penetrating sight of wisdom and insight, all that has happened (i.e. he meditated and contemplated for a while, and soon became aware of all the events, including the actions of Pulastya) (32).

तां कन्यां मुनिवर्याय पुलस्त्याय ददौ पिता ।
तां प्रगृह्याब्रवीत्कन्यां बाढमित्येव स द्विजः ॥ ३३॥
शुश्रूषणपरां दृष्ट्वा मुनिः प्रीतोऽब्रवीद्धचः । दास्यामि पुत्रमेकं ते उभयोर्वैश्वर्धनम् ॥ ३४॥ tāṁ kanyāṁ munivaryāya pulastyāya dadau pitā । tāṁ pragṛhyābravītkanyāṁ bāḍhamityeva sa dvijaḥ ॥ 33 ॥ śuśrūṣaṇaparāṁ dr̥ṣṭvā muniḥ prīto'bravidvacaḥ ।

dāsyāmi putramekaṁ te ubhayorvaṁśavardhanam ॥ 34॥

Father Trinbindu gave that girl (in marriage) to sage Pulastya, and the latter accepted her¹ (33).

[¹Well, that was surely the only wise thing left for Trinbindu to do, to give his daughter to Pulastya in marriage, and equally enough it was the only wise thing for Pulastya to do to accept her as his betrothed.]

Seeing that she diligently, sincerely and devotedly served him, the sage (Pulastya) was very pleased with her, and told her, ‘I shall bless you with a son who shall enhance the glory and fame of both the clans (i.e. the clan of your father Trinbindu, as well as that of your husband, Pulastya)²’ (34).

[²This verse clearly shows that at the time Trinbindu’s daughter appeared to develop all signs of pregnancy, it was merely as a result of sage Pulastya’s curse; no physical relationship existed at that point of time. It was only after their formal marriage that Pulastya had any physical relationship with her as is obvious in this verse where he says that ‘now he would bless her with a son’. Hence, no unwarranted aspersions should be cast on the integrity and character of the illustrious sage Pulastya due to this unfortunate event.]

ततः प्रसूत सा पुत्रं पुलस्त्याल्लोकविश्रुतम् ।
विश्रवा इति विख्यातः पौलस्त्यो ब्रह्मविन्मुनिः ॥ ३५॥
तस्य शीलादिकं दृष्ट्वा भरद्वाजो महामुनिः ।
भार्यार्थं स्वां दुहितरं ददौ विश्रवसे मुदा ॥ ३६॥

tataḥ prāsūta sā putraṁ pulastyāllokaviśrutam । viśravā iti vikhyātaḥ paulastyo brahmavinmuniḥ ॥ 35॥ tasya śīlādikaṁ dr̥ṣṭvā bharadvājo mahāmuniḥ । bhāryārthaṁ svāṁ duhitaraṁ dadau viśravase mudā ॥ 36॥

In due course, that girl brought forth (gave birth to) a son who became famous in the three worlds as “Visrawa, the son of Pulastya”, and he grew up to become an expert in the wisdom and the knowledge pertaining to ‘Brahm’, the all-pervading and all-encompassing cosmic form of the Supreme Soul of creation, the Supreme Being and the Cosmic Consciousness (35).

Seeing the most courteous temperament, the civilised manners, the wisdom and intellect as well as the wholly righteous and upright character of Visrawa, sage Bharadvaj was highly impressed, and so he happily gave his daughter to Visrawa in marriage (36).

तस्यां तु पुत्रः सञ्जज्ञे पौलस्त्याल्लोकसम्मतः ।
पितृतुल्यो वैश्रवणो ब्रह्मणा चानुमोदितः ॥ ३७॥
ददौ ततपसा तुष्टो ब्रह्मा तस्मै वरं शुभम् ।

मनोऽभिलाषितं तस्य धनेशत्वमखण्डितम् ॥ ३८॥

tasyāṁ tu putraḥ sañjajñe paulastyālokaśammataḥ । pitṛtulyo vaiśravaṇo brahmaṇā cānumoditaḥ ॥ 37॥ dadau tattapasā tuṣṭo brahmā tasmai varam śubham । mano'bhilaṣitaṁ tasya dhaneśatvamakhaṇḍitam ॥ 38॥

The 'son of Pulastya' (i.e. Visrawa) produced a son from her, and this son became famed in the three worlds. [His name was 'Kuber', and he later on became a treasurer of the Gods.]

That son (Kuber) was famous, renowned and wise like his father Visrawa, and was even praised by Lord Brahma (the creator) (37).

The latter (Brahma) was much pleased by his severe penances and austerities (Tapa), and as a boon bestowed upon him imperishable, unchallenged, continuous and endless Lordship over prosperity, wealth, pomp, grandeur and majesty (of the whole world) (38).

ततो लब्धवरः सोऽपि पितरं द्रष्टुमागतः ।
पुष्पकेण धनाध्यक्षो ब्रह्मदत्तेन भास्वता ॥ ३९॥
नमस्कृत्याथ पितरं निवेद्य तपसः फलम् ।
प्राह मे भगवान् ब्रह्मा दत्त्वा वरमनिन्दितम् ॥ ४०॥ tato labdhavaraḥ so'pi pitaraṁ draṣṭumāgataḥ ।

puṣpakeṇa dhanādhyakṣo brahmadattena bhāsvatā ॥ 39॥
namaskṛtyātha pitaraṁ nivedya tapasaḥ phalam । prāha me bhagavān brahmā dattvā varamaninditam ॥ 40॥

Having acquired the Lordship over wealth and prosperity due to Brahma's boons, he (Kuber) boarded the most fantastic, magnificent and splendorous plane called Pushpak, that was also given to him by Brahma, and came to visit his father (39).

He bowed before his father and told him about the reward that he had got for his doing severe penances. He told his father (Visrawa), 'Lord Brahma (the creator) has blessed me with this excellent boon (40).

निवासाय न मे स्थानं दत्तवान् परमेश्वरः ।
बूहि मे नियतं स्थानं हिंसा यत् न कस्यचित् ॥ ४१॥
विश्रुत्वा अपि तं प्राह लङ्कानाम् पुरी शुभा । राक्षसानां निवासाय निर्मिता विश्वकर्मणा ॥ ४२॥ nivāsāya na me sthānaṁ dattavān parameśvaraḥ । brūhi me niyataṁ sthānaṁ hiṁsā yatra na kasyacit ॥ 41 ॥ viśravā api taṁ prāha laṅkānāma purī śubhā । rākṣasānāṁ nivāsāya nirmītā viśvakarmaṇā ॥ 42 ॥

But (the problem is that) the Lord (i.e. Brahma) has not given me a place to live. So please do tell me a place where I can stay without causing any sort of harm to anybody.' (41).

Visrava replied, 'Vishwakarma (the celestial architect of the heaven) has established (i.e. created; conceived, planned and developed) a city called Lanka for the residence of demons (42).

त्यक्त्वा विष्णुभयाद्वैत्या विविशुस्ते रसातलम् ।
सा पुरी दुष्प्रधर्षान्यैर्मध्येसागरमास्थिता ॥ ४३॥
तत्र वासाय गच्छ त्वं नान्यैः साधिष्ठिता पुरा । पित्रादिष्टस्त्वसौ गत्वा तां पुरीं धनदोऽविशत् ॥ ४४॥

tyaktvā viṣṇubhayāddaityā vivīśuste rasātalam । sā purī duṣṭpradharṣānyairmadhyesāgaramāsthitā ॥ 43 ॥ tatra vāsāya gaccha tvarṁ nānyaiḥ sādhiṣṭhitā purā । pitrādiṣṭastvasau gatvā tāṁ purīm dhanado'viśat ॥ 44 ॥

But the demons have abandoned it due to the fear of Lord Vishnu's wrath, and have shifted to the nether world. That city cannot be easily attacked by any enemy because it is situated in the middle of the ocean. [To wit, Lanka is a very secure city as it is located in the middle of the ocean which forms a natural moat of fathomless depth around its fortified walls, making it an impregnable citadel.] (43).

You go and live there. No one has previously occupied it and has had Lordship over it (except for the demons, but they have already abandoned it long ago out of fear of Lord Vishnu, and so it is lying vacant and uninhabited since long).'

Then, on the orders of his father, the Lord of wealth (i.e. Kuber) went to that city (of Lanka) (44).

स तत्र सुचिरं कालमुवास पितृसम्मतः ।
कस्यचित्त्वथ कालस्य सुमाली नाम राक्षसः ॥ ४५॥
रसातलान्मर्त्यलोकं चचार पिशिताशनः ।
गृहीत्वा तनयां कन्यां साक्षादेवीमिव श्रियम् ॥ ४६॥ sa tatra suciram kālamuvāsa pitṛsammataḥ । kasyacittvatha kālasya sumālī nāma rākṣasaḥ ॥ 45 ॥

rasātalānmartyalokaṃ cacāra piśitāśanaḥ । grhītvā tanayāṃ kanyāṃ sākṣāddevīmiva śriyam ॥ 46 ॥

There, with the consent and approval of his father, he (Kuber) lived for a long time.

Once it so happened that a flesh-eating demon (an ogre) named Sumali came out from the nether world to the surface of the earth. He was accompanied by his youthful, virgin and beautiful daughter who was as charming as goddess Laxmi (the patron goddess of wealth and the divine consort of Lord Vishnu). Sumali wished to roam around on the surface of the earth and show his daughter the sights of the world (45-46).

अपश्यद्भनदं देवं चरन्तं पुष्पकेण सः ।
हिताय चिन्तयामास रक्षसानां महामनाः ॥ ४७॥
उवाच तनयां तत्र कैकसीं नाम नामतः । वत्से विवाहकालस्ते यौवनं चातिवर्तते ॥ ४८॥ apaśyaddhanadaṃ devaṃ carantaṃ puṣpakeṇa saḥ । hitāya cintayāmāsa rākṣasānāṃ mahāmanāḥ ॥ 47 ॥ uvāca tanayāṃ tatra kaikasīm nāma nāmataḥ । vatse vivāhakālaste yauvanaṃ cātivartate ॥ 48 ॥

He saw Lord Kuber roaming here and there aboard his plane called Pushpak. The great demon Sumali began to ponder about the future good and welfare of the demon race (47).

He said to his daughter named Kaikasi, ‘Oh daughter! The time for your marriage and the days of your youth are passing away in futility (48).

प्रत्याख्यानाच्च भीतैस्त्वं न वरैर्गृह्यसे शुभे ।
सा त्वं वस्य भद्रं ते मुनिं ब्रह्मकुलोद्भवम् ॥ ४९॥
स्वयमेव ततः पुत्रा भविष्यन्ति महाबलाः । ईदृशाः सर्वशोभाद्या धनदेन समाः शुभे ॥ ५०॥ pratyākhyānācca bhītaistvaṃ na varairgr̥hyase śubhe । sā tvaṃ varaya bhadraṃ te munim brahmakulodbhavam ॥ 49 ॥ svayameva tataḥ putrā bhaviṣyanti mahābalāḥ । īdr̥śāḥ sarvaśobhādyā dhanadena samāḥ śubhe ॥ 50 ॥

But, oh my good daughter (śubhe), no one accepts you because of the fear that you will abandon him (as this is the natural habit of the demon race that their women are most unfaithful and disloyal towards their companions).

Hence, oh you gentle lady (bhadraṁ), you should take the initiative and go and get yourself betrothed to sage Visrawa who is born in the clan of Brahma (i.e. he is born as a Brahmin) (49).

Oh the good lady, let you be blessed (śubhe)! If you do so then you shall give birth to sons who shall be as majestic, excellent and famous besides being brave, valiant and renowned the world over as the Lord of wealth (Kuber) is himself (because they will have the genes similar to Kuber running in their veins).¹ (50).

[¹The demon Sumali reasoned with his daughter that if she somehow she manages to induce sage Visrawa to marry her and beget children from him, then her off-springs will be like Kuber as they will have the same father. If this thing materializes then the lost glory of the demon race could be retrieved. It was too tempting an offer for Kaikasi to refuse, and especially when her father himself endorsed it she was sure it will be for her great good.]

तथेति साऽऽश्रुमं गत्वा मुनेरग्रे व्यवस्थिता । लिखन्ती भ्रुवमग्रेण पादेनाधोमुखी स्थिता ॥ ५१॥
तामपृच्छन्मुनिः का त्वं कन्याऽसि वरवर्णिनि ।
साब्रवीत्प्राञ्जलिर्ब्रह्मन् ध्यानेन ज्ञातुमर्हसि ॥ ५२॥

tatheti sā"śramam gatvā muneragre vyavasthitā । likhantī bhuvamagreṇa pādenādhomukhī sthitā ॥ 51॥ tāmapṛcchanmuniḥ kā tvam kanyā'si varavarṇini । sābravītprāñjalirbrahman dhyānena jñātumarhasi ॥ 52॥

Saying 'all right', she went and stood shyly in the hermitage of the sage (Visrawa) with her eyes lowered, her demeanours suggestive of passion, and began scratching at the earth nervously with her toe nails (51).

The sage asked her, 'Oh the one with beautiful features (varavarṇini)! Who are you, and whose daughter are you?'

Kaikasi joined the palms of her hands as a gesture of supplication and replied, 'Oh Brahmin! You can know everything by your transcendental powers of meditation. [To wit, you can learn about me and my intent in coming here to you without asking me, as you are a great sage who has the transcendental powers to know even the most secret of things.]' (52).

ततो ध्यात्वा मुनिः सर्वं ज्ञात्वा तां प्रत्यभाषत ।
ज्ञातं तवाभिलषितं मतः पुत्रानभीप्ससि ॥ ५३॥
दारुणायां तु वेलायामागतासि सुमध्यमे । अतस्ते दारुणौ पुत्रौ रक्षसौ सम्भविष्यतः ॥ ५४॥

tato dhyātvā muniḥ sarvaṁ jñātvā tāṁ pratyabhāṣata ।
 jñātaṁ tavābhilaṣitaṁ mattaḥ putrānabhīpsasi ॥ 53 ॥
 dāruṇāyām tu velāyāmāgatāsi sumadhyame ।
 ataste dāruṇau putrau rākṣasau sambhaviṣyataḥ ॥ 54 ॥

Then the sage meditated and came to know everything about the reason for her visit, and said to her, ‘I have understood the purpose of your visit. You desire sons from me (53).

But, oh the beautiful one (literally, one with a beautiful waist—“sumadhyame”), you have come at an inappropriate time¹, as a result of which your sons would be two fierce demons. [So, is it okay with you?’ (54).

[¹It was evening hours, around twilight, when the sage was engaged in his evening worship routine. This time of the day when the daylight gradually merges into the darkness of the night is not regarded as an auspicious time for conception of a child as it is believed that unholy spirits roam around the world during these hours. So the sage warned Kaikasi that the time was very unsuitable for what she desires of him, even if it is merely in the form of a ‘boon’ that the sage may grant her to please her.]

सब्रवीन्मुनिशार्दूल त्वतोऽप्येवंविधौ सुतौ ।
 तामाह पश्चिमो यस्ते भविष्यति महामतिः ॥ ५३ ॥
 महाभागवतः श्रीमान् रामभवत्येकतत्परः ।
 इत्युक्त्वा सा तथा काले सुषुवे दशकन्धरम् ॥ ५४ ॥
 रावणं विंशतिभुजं दशशीर्षं सुदारुणम् । तद्रक्षोजातमात्रेण चचाल च वसुन्धरा ॥ ५५ ॥

sābravīnmuniśārdūla tvatto'pyevaṁvidhau sutau । tāmāha paścimo yaste bhaviṣyati mahāmatih ॥ 55 ॥ mahābhāgavataḥ śrīmān rāmabhaktyekatatparaḥ । ityuktā sā tathā kāle suṣuve daśakandharam ॥ 56 ॥ rāvaṇaṁ viṁśatibhujāṁ daśāśīrṣaṁ sudāruṇam । tadrakṣojātamātreṇa cacāla ca vasundharā ॥ 57 ॥

She was perplexed, aghast and astonished. She asked the sage, ‘Oh the most exalted sage! Should you also bring forth such sons (i.e. is it ever possible that demons are born out as blessing from an exalted hermit or a sage like you)?’

Then the sage replied to her, ‘After the first born sons (i.e. after the first two sons), the next (i.e. the third) son produced by you shall be most wise, God fearing, pious and a great devotee of the Lord; he would be famous as an honourable and virtuous one, and shall be an ardent follower and devotee of Lord Ram (who would be the supreme Lord himself in a human form).¹’

So in due course of time, she gave birth to the 10-headed and 20-armed son who was exceedingly ferocious as well as vicious; his name was Ravana. As soon as he was born, the earth began to tremble and shake out of fear (56-57).

[Note—¹The sage was in a fix; he realized that Kaikasi was correct in wondering how demonic sons can be produced by the blessing of a great sage. But his words could not go in vain; so he decided to add a sweetener to the bitter pill by tampering his curse to say that the last son would be like a saint by nature though the earlier sons would be like what the sage has already prophesized.]

बभ्रुवूर्नाशहेतूनि निमित्तान्यखिलान्यपि । कुम्भकर्णस्ततो जातो महापर्वतसन्निभः ॥ ५८॥
ततः शूर्पणखा नाम जाता रावणसोदरी । ततो विभीषणो जातः शान्तात्मा सौम्यदर्शनः ॥ ५९॥ babhūvurnāśahetūni nimittānyakhilānyapi । kumbhakarnaṣtato jāto mahāparvatasannibhaḥ ॥ 58॥ tataḥ śūrpaṇakhā nāma jātā rāvaṇasodarī । tato vibhīṣaṇo jātaḥ śāntātmā saumyadarśanaḥ ॥ 59॥

All the reasons for the torment and destruction of the world appeared to present themselves at that time (i.e. all evil signs became apparent).

After that (i.e. after Ravana) was born Kumbhakarna who had a colossal body that resembled a huge mountain (58).

Thereafter was born Ravana's sister Supernakha, and after her followed Vibhishan (the third son) who was of a calm and peaceful temperament, and his behaviour and demeanours were very pleasant and amiable (59).

[Note—The eldest of the siblings was Ravana; Kumbhakarna was the second brother, and Vibhishan was the third and the youngest. Their sister was Supernakha, the one with gigantic fan-like ears and long knife-like nails.]

स्वाध्यायी नियताहारो नित्यकर्मपरायणः ।
कुम्भकर्णस्तु दुष्टात्मा द्विजान् सन्तुष्टचेतसः ॥ ६०॥
भक्षयन्नृषिसङ्घांश्च विचारातिदारुणः ।
रावणोऽपि महासत्त्वो लोकानां भयदायकः । ववृधे लोकनाशाय ह्यामयो देहिनामिव ॥ ६१॥ svādhyāyī niyatāhāro nityakarmaparāyaṇaḥ । kumbhakarnaṣtu duṣṭātmā dvijān santuṣṭacetasaḥ ॥ 60॥ bhakṣayanrṣisaṅghāṁśca vicacārātidāruṇaḥ । rāvaṇo'pi mahāsattvo lokānāṁ bhayadāyakaḥ ।

vavrdhe lokanāsāya hyāmayo dehināmiva ॥ 61 ॥

He (Vibhishan) was a righteous person. He was contemplative by nature, was always engrossed in self-study, ate little food, and even that with restraint (i.e. he ate with moderation, just enough to survive; he had control over his tongue and never lusted to gratify his sense of taste); he diligently followed the duties assigned to him (i.e. was self-restrained, non-indulgent, diligent, scrupulous, religious and dutiful).

Compared to him, Kumbhakarna was highly evil, wicked and cruel; he roamed around in this world mercilessly killing and devouring pious Brahmins, sages, hermits and mendicants in large numbers, even without any provocation.

In the meanwhile, the eldest of the sons, the fear-inspiring and horribly terrifying Ravana, who was most valiant, strong and brave, began to rise like a killer disease that kills all and spares none, like a contagious epidemic that spreads quickly in the whole worlds (consisting of the celestial, the terrestrial and the subterranean worlds) (60-61).

(ii) Canto 2, verse nos. 1-62:-

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

श्रीरामवचनं श्रुत्वा परमानन्दनिर्भरः ।
 मुनिः प्रोवाच सदसि सर्वेषां तत् शृण्वताम् ॥ १ ॥
 अथ वितेश्वरो देवस्तत् कालेन केनचित् ।
 आययौ पुष्पकारूढः पितरं द्रष्टुमञ्जसा ॥ २ ॥
 दृष्ट्वा तं कैकसी तत् भ्रजमानं महौजसम् । राक्षसी पुत्रसामीप्यं गत्वा रावणमब्रवीत् ॥ ३ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

śrīrāmavacanam śrutvā paramānandanirbharaḥ । muniḥ provāca sadasi sarveṣāṃ tatra śṛṇvatām ॥ 1 ॥
 atha vitesvaro devastatra kālena kenacit । āyayau puṣpakārūḍhaḥ pitaram draṣṭumañjasā ॥ 2 ॥ drṣṭvā taṃ kaikasī tatra bhrājamānam mahaujasam । rākṣasī putrasāmīpyam gatvā rāvaṇamabravīt ॥ 3 ॥

[The primary narrator of the story of Lord Ram, known as the epic ‘Ramayana’ from which we have drawn our own narrative of Ravana’s story and the War of Lanka, was Lord Shiva. So, Canto 2 starts with quoting Shiva, who after a brief pause marking the end of Canto 1, has resumed his narration. Shiva was narrating the story of the Ramayana to his consort Parvati.]

Lord Shiva said to Parvati, “Oh Parvati! When Lord Ram wished to hear more of this fantastic story, sage Agastya felt very glad to resume his narration (from where he had stopped in Canto 1), while all those assembled there listened attentively (1).

Agastya said, ‘Once, the Lord of wealth (Kuber) came on his air-plane (called Pushpak) to meet his father (Visrawa) (2).

When the demoness Kaikasi (wife of Visrawa and step-mother of Kuber) saw the most glorious one (Kuber) sitting beside his father, she became jealous, and full of envy she went to her son Ravana and said (3)—

पुत्रं पश्य धनाध्यक्षं ज्वलन्तं स्वेन तेजसा ।
 त्वमप्येवं यथा भूयास्तथा यत्नं कुरु प्रभो ॥ ४॥
 तच्छ्रुत्वा रावणो रोषात् प्रतिज्ञामकरोद्भुतम् ।
 धनदेन समो वापि ह्यधिको वाचिरेण तु ॥ ५॥
 भविष्याम्यम्ब मां पश्य सन्तापं त्यज सुव्रते ।
 इत्युक्त्वा दुष्करं कर्तुं तपः स दशकन्धरः ॥ ६॥
 अगमत्फलसिद्ध्यर्थं गोकर्णं तु सहानुजः ।
 स्वं स्वं नियममास्थाय भ्रातरस्ते तपो महत् ॥ ७॥
 आस्थिता दुष्करं घोरं सर्वलोकैकतापनम् । दशवर्षसहस्राणि कुम्भकर्णोऽकरोत्तपः ॥ ८॥ putra paśya dhanādhyakṣaṁ jvalantaṁ svena tejasā । tvamapyevaṁ yathā bhūyāstathā yatnaṁ kuru prabho ॥ 4॥ tacchrutvā rāvaṇo roṣāt pratijñāmakaroddrutam । dhanadena samo vāpi hyadhiko vācireṇa tu ॥ 5॥ bhaviṣyāmyamba mām paśya santāpaṁ tyaja suvrate । ityuktvā duṣkaraṁ kartuṁ tapaḥ sa daśakandharaḥ ॥ 6॥ agamatphalasiddhyartham gokarṇam tu sahanujah । svaṁ svaṁ niyamamāsthāya bhrātaraste tapo mahat ॥ 7॥ āsthitā duṣkaraṁ ghoram sarvalokaikatāpanam । daśavarṣasahasrāṇi kumbhakarṇo'karottapaḥ ॥ 8॥

Kaikasi provoked her son Ravana by instigating him against Kuber, saying, ‘Look son; look at this Lord of Wealth (Kuber) who is all aglow with his own radiance and glory. So, oh the great one, you must also attempt to do similar things as he has done so as to become similarly glorious and famous.’ (4).

Hearing this, Ravana became offended, irritated and jealous as his mother’s taunting words hurt his ego and self-respect. Thus provoked, he immediately made a stern vow in a haughty manner; addressing his mother he declared, ‘Oh the one with auspicious aspirations and good intentions! Do not have any regrets and do not lament; just wait and watch. Oh mother! I shall soon, in the very near future, become equal to or even more famous, majestic and powerful than what Kuber is.’

Reassuring his mother, Ravana along with his younger brothers (Kumbhakarna and Vibhishan) went to a place called ‘Gaukarna¹’ to do severe penances and austerities (Tapa) to acquire the desired boons. Once there, the three brothers became involved in doing severe, determined and unwavering individual penances, making and living their separate vows very stoutly.

Their ‘Tapa’ was so severe that it could virtually roast the whole world by its severity. Out of the three, Kumbhakarna did Tapa for 10 thousand years (4-8).

[Note—¹Gaukarna: This was the place where on some previous occasion Parvati had deposited the ‘Shiva Lingam’, Lord Shiva’s symbol, that Ravana had brought from Mt. Kailash along with her as a boon that he obtained from Lord Shiva. Parvati managed to escape from Ravana’s clutches with the help of Lord Vishnu, and she also managed to snatch the Shiva Lingam from him while escaping. This story is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 26-43. It has already been narrated in our Book earlier in Section 2.1 of this Chapter no. 2.]

विभीषणोऽपि धर्मात्मा सत्यधर्मपरायणः ।
 पञ्चवर्षसहस्राणि पादेनैकेन तस्थिवान् ॥ ९॥
 दिव्यवर्षसहस्रं तु निराहारो दशाननः ।
 पूर्णे वर्षसहस्रे तु शीर्षमग्नौ जुहाव सः । एवं वर्षसहस्राणि नव तस्यातिचक्रमुः ॥ १०॥

vibhīṣaṇo'pi dharmātmā satyadharmaparāyaṇaḥ ।
 pañcavarṣasahasrāṇi pādenaikena tasthivān ॥ 9॥ divyavarṣasahasraṁ tu nirāhāro daśānanaḥ । pūrṇe varṣasahasre tu śīrṣamagnau juhāva saḥ । evaṁ varṣasahasrāṇi nava tasyāticakramuḥ ॥ 10॥

Vibhishan—who was most righteous, pious and a follower of the noble path of truth and virtuousness amongst the three brothers—did Tapa for 5 thousand years by standing on one foot (9).

Ravana, the 10-headed one, fasted for 1 thousand glorious years. Then, on the completion of the thousand years, he offered his own head as offering to the sacred fire. In a similar manner, he repeated the exercise nine more times and, as a result, 9 thousand years passed by (10).

अथ वर्षसहस्रं तु दशमे दशमं शिरः ।
 छेतुकामस्य धर्मात्मा प्राप्तश्चाथ पूजापतिः ।
 वत्स वत्स दशग्रीव प्रीतोऽस्मीत्यभ्यभाषत ॥ ११॥
 वरं वरं दास्यामि यत्ते मनसि काङ्क्षितम् ।
 दशग्रीवोऽपि तच्छ्रुत्वा प्रहृष्टेनान्तरात्मना ॥ १२॥ atha varṣasahasraṁ tu daśame daśamaṁ śiraḥ । chettukāmasya dharmātmā prāptaścātha prajāpatiḥ । vatsa vatsa daśagrīva prīto'smītyabhyabhāṣata ॥ 11 ॥ varam varaya dāsyāmi yatte manasi kāṅkṣitam । daśagrīvo'pi tacchrutvā prahrṣṭenāntarātmanā ॥ 12 ॥

When the 10th thousand year was about to end and Ravana was ready to offer his last head, the noble guardian of the world, Prajapati Brahma (the Creator who cares for the world and its inhabitants) revealed himself before him and said benevolently, 'Oh son; I am pleased with you (11).

Ask for a boon that you desire! I shall give you whatever you wish.' Hearing this, the 10-headed Ravana said most delightfully (12)—

अमरत्वं वृणोमीश वरदो यदि मे भवान् ।
 सुपर्णनागयक्षाणां देवतानां तथासुरैः ।
 अवध्यत्वं तु मे देहि तृणभूता हि मानुषाः ॥ १३॥ तथास्त्विति प्रजाध्यक्षः पुनराह दशाननम् ।
 अग्नौ हुतानि शीर्षाणि यानि तेऽसुरपुङ्गव ॥ १४॥ भविष्यन्ति यथापूर्वमक्षयाणि च सत्तम ॥ १५॥ amaratvaṁ vṛṇomīśa varado yadi me bhavān । suparṇanāgayakṣāṅṇām devatānām tathāsuraiḥ । avadhyatvaṁ tu me dehi tṛṇabhūtā hi mānuṣāḥ ॥ 13 ॥ tathāstviti prajādhyakṣaḥ punarāha daśānanam । agnau hutāni śīrṣāṇi yāni te'surapuṅgava ॥ 14 ॥ bhaviṣyanti yathāpūrvamakṣayāṇi ca sattama ॥ 15 ॥

'Oh Lord! If you indeed wish to give me the desired boon, then I want immortality. I must not die at the hands of Garuda (the mount of Vishnu; the legendary Eagle representing all sky-borne creatures), serpents (the legendary Sheshnath representing all subterranean creatures), Yaksha (demi-Gods employed by Kuber as his guards representing all spirits and semi-gods), the Gods and the Demons (i.e. all the other inhabitants of the heaven as well as the nether world from where his mother Kaikasi had come; here, referring to other demons who might claim their share in the plunder). The poor humans are matter of no concern for me as they are no better than the humble reed or a blade of grass against my might¹ (i.e. I have no fear from them, and therefore I do not ask protection against them).' (13).

Then the 'lord of his subjects' ("prajādhyakṣaḥ", i.e. Brahma) said 'so shall it be'. He continued to talk with the 10-headed one and said, 'Oh the best among the demons! All the 9 heads that you had offered to the sacred fire shall grow once again, and oh the honourable one, they can never be destroyed again.’ (14-15).

[Note to verse no. 13:- This over-confidence of Ravana in his might and powers, that he has nothing to fear from humans, proved to be his undoing. There is a lesson to be learnt here—that over enthusiasm, over-confidence, over-belligerence, over-haughtiness and unbridled-arrogance is more often than not the so-called “weak link” in the chain, for it is at this weak point where the chain will snap when it is most unexpected or undesired of. Please see verse no. 56 of this Canto also.]

एवमुक्त्वा ततो राम दशग्रीवं प्रजापतिः ।
विभीषणमुवाचेदं पूणतं भक्तवत्सलः ॥ १६॥
विभीषण त्वया वत्स कृतं धर्मार्थमुत्तमम् । तपस्ततो वरं वत्स वृणीष्वभिमतं हितम् ॥ १७॥ evamuktvā tato rāma daśagrīvaṃ prajāpatiḥ । vibhīṣaṇamuvācedaṃ pūṇataṃ bhaktavatsalaḥ ॥ 16॥ vibhīṣaṇa tvayā vatsa kṛtaṃ dharmārthamuttamam । tapastato varaṃ vatsa vṛṇīṣvābhimataṃ hitam ॥ 17॥

Oh Lord Ram! Saying this to Ravana, Prajapati (Brahma)—who is most munificent and benevolent towards his devotees—turned to Vibhishan who was most polite and humble (16).

Brahma said, ‘Oh son Vibhishan! You have done this Tapa to uphold the laws of Dharma, to carry out your duties in accordance with the laws of probity, propriety and righteousness, and to maintain some semblance of law and order in the demon race against all odds that you may have to face (dharmārthamuttamam). Hence, oh son, you may ask for whatever boon you desire.’¹

[¹To wit, Brahma told Vibhishan: “The demon race is known for its evil, sinful and degrading ways, and you are the only one who can keep the flame of Dharma, the virtues of righteousness, probity, propriety, morality and nobility in thought and conduct, alight against the storm of overbearing spiritual bankruptcy and moral decadence that looms over the horizon of the demon race like a thick bank of dark foreboding clouds that portend doom and destruction. Son, I have great hopes from you. I am aware of your inherent good nature and spiritual inclinations. If ever the demon race is annihilated, you are the only one who will survive to carry forward the illustrious line of your father, the great sage Visrawa, and prevent the line from complete obliteration. So I am pleased with you. Hence, go on and ask whatever you wish from me, for I am sure that you are not going to seek any nonsensical thing like your brother has done.”] (17).

विभीषणोऽपि तं नत्वा पूज्यलिर्वाक्यमब्रवीत् ।
देव मे सर्वदा बुद्धिर्धर्मं तिष्ठतु शाश्वती ।
मा रोचयत्वधर्मं मे बुद्धिः सर्वत्र सर्वदा ॥ १८॥

ततः पूजापतिः प्रीतो विभीषणमथाब्रवीत् ।
 वत्स त्वं धर्मशीलोऽसि तथैव च भविष्यसि ॥ १९॥
 अयाचितोऽपि ते दास्ये ह्यमरत्वं विभीषण ।
 कुम्भकर्णमथोवाच वरं वस्य सुव्रत ॥ २०॥
 वाण्या व्याप्तोऽथ तं प्राह कुम्भकर्णः पितामहम् ।
 स्वप्स्यामि देव षण्मासान् दिनमेकं तु भोजनम् ॥ २१॥ vibhīṣaṇo'pi taṁ natvā prāñjalirvākyaṁabravīt । deva me sarvadā buddhirdharme tiṣṭhatu śāśvatī । mā rocayatvadharmam me buddhiḥ sarvatra sarvadā ॥ 18॥ tataḥ prajāpatiḥ prīto vibhīṣaṇamathābravīt । vatsa tvam dharmāśīlo'si tathaiva ca bhaviṣyasi ॥ 19॥ ayācito'pi te dāsye hyamaratvaṁ vibhīṣaṇa । kumbhakarnaṁmathovāca varam varaya suvrata ॥ 20॥ vāṅyā vyāpto'tha taṁ prāha kumbhakarnaḥ pitāmaham । svapsyāmi deva ṣaṇmāsān dinamekaṁ tu bhojanam ॥ 21॥

Vibhishan bowed humbly before the Creator and said with the palms of his hands touching each other as a sign of prayerful submission, ‘Oh Lord! Let all the faculties of intellect and discrimination of my mind steadfastly follow the path of Dharma, of auspiciousness, righteousness, probity and propriety without deviating from it even for a fleeting moment. Let nothing corrupt my mind and heart and influence them so much that they abandon virtuousness and goodness.’ (18).

At this prayer, the guardian of his subjects (Brahma) became extremely pleased, and he said most affectionately to Vibhishan, ‘Oh dear son! You are exemplary in your righteousness, in your noble views, and are no doubt very virtuous. It shall be as you please (19).

Oh Vibhishan! Though you have not asked for it, I nevertheless give you an additional boon of immortality!’

After that, he (Brahma) said to Kumbhakarna, ‘Oh the one who is steadfast in his vows and noble of disposition (suvrata)! Ask for a boon.’ (20).

Then Kumbhakarna, who was under the deluding spell of goddess Saraswati, the goddess of speech, wisdom and intellect, was misled to for an absurd boon which defied all credulity. He said, ‘Oh my Great Grandfather (pitāmaham)¹! I want to sleep for a continuous period of six months without interruption, and eat only once². [To wit, I wish to enjoy the pleasure of sleep continuously for six months, and then eat my full for one whole day, before going once again to sleep for another six months. And let this cycle go on endlessly.] (21).

[Note—¹Brahma is the ‘Great Grandfather’ of creation as it is from him that the entire creation is born.

²When Brahma learnt about Ravana's wishes as narrated in the previous verses, he felt very alarmed about the future of his creation, even though he could not refuse him the desired boons. He thought that it is better to keep the horrors that were about to come at least reduced by half by limiting them to Ravana alone, instead of doubling the problems by allowing Kumbhakarna too to have a free will to seek anything he wanted. Who knows he may ask for something more horrible than Ravana. So the wise Brahma signalled the Gods to quietly ask Saraswati to cast her magic spell upon Kumbhakarna's mind and intellect by inspiring him to ask for 'sleep'! It was obviously a most absurd boon to ask for after having done so severe Tapa; it wasted all the hardships that Kumbhakarna may have endured during Tapa. This ridiculous and laughable request was like someone wanting a piece of stone when given a chance to get a house full of priceless diamonds for the asking. Brahma of course hastened to grant it without giving a chance for Kumbhakarna to realize his mistake and change his mind.

'Kumbhakarna' is also spelt as 'Kumbhakaran' or 'Kumbhakarana'.]

एवमस्त्विति तं प्राह ब्रह्मा दृष्ट्वा दिवौकसः ।
 सरस्वती च तद्वक्त्रान्निर्गता प्रययौ दिवम् ॥ २२॥ कुम्भकर्णस्तु दुष्टात्मा चिन्तयामास दुःखितः । अनभिप्रेतमेवास्यात्किं निर्गतमहो विधिः ॥ २३॥ evamastviti taṁ prāha brahmā dr̥ṣṭvā divaukaṣaḥ । sarasvatī ca tadvaktrānnirgatā prayayau divam ॥ 22॥ kumbhakarnaṣtu duṣṭātmā cintayāmāsa duḥkhitaḥ । anabhipretamevāsyaṭkiṁ nirgatamaho vidhiḥ ॥ 23॥

Brahma said to him while glancing surreptitiously sideways at the Gods (who were closely watching the proceedings, and at whose behest Saraswati had misled Kumbhakarna in asking for the above ridiculous boon), 'So shall it be'.

As soon as Brahma said so, goddess Saraswati left Kumbhakarna's mouth (i.e. his tongue) and went to the heavens.

[To wit, Brahma looked sideways at the Gods whom he had signaled to ask Saraswati to act swiftly before it was too late. So as soon as Kumbhakarna finished asking for the boon of continuous sleep, Brahma left not time to grant it for he did not wish to give a moment to Kumbhakarna to recover and change his mind. So Brahma immediately said 'okay'. Seeing her job done well, Saraswati immediately withdrew from the scene and went to stand along with the other Gods in the heaven.] (22).

The wicked and evil Kumbhakarna (kumbhakarnaṣtu duṣṭātmā) realised his mistake (that he has been taken for a ride by the Gods, and he hadn't asked for any worthwhile boon), and so he became extremely worried and remorseful. He regretted and lamented gravely—'Alack! Look at the misfortune that has befallen me! How did these words (as asked by him in verse 21) come out from my mouth though I had never desired for such a funny, incredulous and absurd boon?' (23).

सुमाली वरलब्धांस्तान् ज्ञात्वा पौत्रान् निशाचरान् ।
पातालाग्निर्भयः प्रायात् प्रहस्तादिभिरन्वितः ॥ २४॥
दशग्रीवं परिष्वज्य वचनं चेदमब्रवीत् ।
दिष्ट्या ते पुत्र संवृतो वाञ्छितो मे मनोरथः ॥ २५॥ sumālī varalabdhāṁstān jñātvā pauṭrān niśācarān । pātālāgnirbhayaḥ prāyāt prahastādibhiranvitaḥ ॥ 24॥ daśagrīvaṁ pariṣvajya vacanaṁ cedamabravīt । diṣṭyā te putra saṁvṛtto vāñchito me manorathaḥ ॥ 25॥

Hearing that his three grandsons have received boons, the demon Sumali came out of the nether world fearlessly, accompanied by Prahasht and other demons (24).

He embraced the 10-headed one (Ravana) and said, ‘Oh son! It is very fortunate and a moment of great joy and an occasion for celebration that your desires have been fulfilled in accordance with my wishes (25).

यद्भयाच्च वयं लङ्कां त्यक्त्वा याता रसातलम् ।
तद्रतं नो महाबाहो महद्विष्णुकृतं भयम् ॥ २६॥
अस्माभिः पूर्वमुषिता लङ्केयं धनदेन ते ।
भ्रात्राकृन्तामिदानीं त्वं प्रत्यानेतुमिहार्हसि ॥ २७॥
साम्ना वाथ बलेनापि राज्ञां बन्धुः कुतः सुहृत् । इत्युक्तो रावणः प्राह नार्हस्येवं प्रभाषितुम् ॥ २८॥

yadbhayaṁcca vayaṁ laṅkāṁ tyaktvā yātā rasātalam । tadgataṁ no mahābāho mahadvīṣṇukṛtaṁ bhayam ॥ 26॥ asmābhiḥ pūrvamuṣitā laṅkeyaṁ dhanadena te । bhrātrākṛntāmidānīm tvaṁ pratyānetumihārhasi ॥ 27॥ sāmnā vātha balenāpi rājñāṁ bandhuḥ kutaḥ suhṛt । ityukto rāvaṇaḥ prāha nārhasyevaṁ prabhāṣitum ॥ 28॥

By the fear of whom we had abandoned (deserted and escaped from) Lanka and had gone to the nether world to hide ourselves, oh the brave, strong and courageous one (mahābāho), that fear of Vishnu no longer exists for us (26).

This city of Lanka, which is presently under the control of your step-brother Kuber, was previously inhabited by us. Now you should take it back from him either by mutual understanding (compromise) or by force. [To wit, you should not allow the relationship of a brother come in the way of establishing yourself as a sovereign Lord of the city. If Kuber agrees to hand over the city to you peacefully, so far so good; if he does not, then take it from by force.] (27)

Remember oh son, family members and relatives (the kith and kin) of kings have never been their well-wishers. [To wit, the greatest fear the king faces is jealousy and envy from his next of kin who are, more often than not, scheming and plotting against the king to grab the crown and the powers that come with it, and enjoy the spoils come with kingship. Remember: a king faces the gravest danger from his close relatives; they are like serpents in his own backyard. The king is more often than not betrayed by his own family members who are looking for an opportunity to usurp the crown and grab his authority.]’

When Sumali had said so, Ravana replied, ‘You must not say so (28).

वितेशो गुरुरस्माकमेवं श्रुत्वा तमब्रवीत् ।
 प्रहस्तः प्रश्रितं वाक्यं रावणं दशकन्धरम् ॥ २९॥
 शृणु रावण यत्नेन नैवं त्वं वक्तुमर्हसि । नाधीता राजधर्मास्ते नीतिशास्त्रं तथैव च ॥ ३०॥ vitteśo gururasmākamevaṁ śrutvā tamabravīt । prahastaḥ praśritaṁ vākyaṁ rāvaṇaṁ daśakandharam ॥ 29 ॥ śṛṇu rāvaṇa yatnena naivaṁ tvaṁ vaktumarhasi । nādhītā rājadharmāste nītisāstraṁ tathaiva ca ॥ 30 ॥

The Lord of wealth (Kuber) is our elder brother. [And it would be highly improper to insult him and throw him out of his kingdom for no fault of his. Say father, he has not done any harm to us; it is true as you say that the demons were chased away from Lanka by Lord Vishnu in the past, but what is the crime of Kuber in it; how is he to be blamed for what Vishnu had done to our race? After all, Kuber and myself have the same father, sage Visrawa. My conscience does not fully agree with your suggestions.]’

Hearing this, Prahasht (the crafty demon who had accompanied Sumali from the nether world, see verse no. 24, and who was his chief advisor, and who would later on become the chief advisor and ideologue of Ravana) chided Ravana most politely, and said [29], ‘Listen carefully oh Ravana; listen to what I have to say. You must not say such a thing. You have not studied the science of politics, nor do you have proper understanding of the ways of kingship [30]. (29-30)

शूराणां न हि सौभ्रातृ शृणु मे वदतः प्रभो ।
 कश्यपस्य सुता देवा राक्षसाश्च महाबलाः ॥ ३१॥
 परस्परमयुध्यन्त त्यक्त्वा सौहृदमायुधैः । नैवेदानीन्तनं राजन् वैरं देवैरनुष्ठितम् ॥ ३२॥

śūrāṇāṁ na hi saubhrātraṁ śṛṇu me vadataḥ prabho । kaśyapasya sutā devā rākṣasāśca mahābalāḥ ॥ 31 ॥ parasparamayudhyanta tyaktvā sauhṛdamāyudhaiḥ ।

naivedānīntanaṁ rājan vairam devairanuṣṭhitam || 32 ||

There is no sense of brotherhood (or any affectionate emotion) between brave warriors (who are contenders seeking superiority). Oh Lord! Listen to what I have to submit on this subject. The exalted sage Kashyap's sons, the Gods and the Demons, were equally very brave, strong and courageous (31).

But (inspite of their being brothers), they viciously fought each other, having abandoned their affection and fraternity and casting it to the wind. [To wit, though the Gods and the Demons were related by blood as they had a common parent, but when it came to self interest, they were baying for each other's blood, and each demanding the other's skull.]

Oh king! The animosity and hatred that we (the demons) have with the Gods is not something new (for it is old as this creation, well entrenched and in existence from an ancient time).

[To wit, you should not be complacent with regards to Kuber who is a member of the race of Gods. Remember: an underlying feeling of suspicion and lack of faith leading to an inveterate sense of animosity and hatred is inherently present between the Gods and the Demon races; it cannot be erased by merely wishing it away. So be careful: a time may come when Kuber would come to know about your newly acquired boons that make you virtually invincible in this world, and surely he would be jealous of you, and then he would go to Vishnu and team up with all other Gods who will together create a lot of trouble for you. They will not bother whether or not you had wished to maintain peace with Kuber and give him due regard as your step-brother, or that you were so nice that you wished to leave the kingdom of Lanka alone because it belonged to him. It may come to pass that by the time you realize that Gods have no sympathy for you it would be too late. So you must take the initiative now when Kuber and the other Gods are not prepared for defense, and launch your attack to catch the enemy unawares. Well, be wise and learn the trick of the trade of kingdom and how to establish and expand your authority and domain. Say, what was the use of seeking the boons that you asked Brahma to grant you if you still have to run for shelter when the Gods assault you and threaten us demons? Wouldn't it be a shameful act on your part that inspite of having the backing of these marvelous boons we still have to beg for mercy from the Gods?] (32)

[Note—Verse nos. 28-29 clearly indicate that Ravana was not inherently wicked and unscrupulous, nor did he wish to usurp power and right of others. On the contrary he was basically a good and righteous soul who did not want to do anything that was wrong and improper. After all he was a son of a sage, and traits of basic goodness flowed subtly in his blood. But the effect of circumstances, the dictates of providence, and the influence of evil company joined hands to ruin his destiny. Even though initially he was very reluctant to commit an atrocious deed against his step-brother Kuber, but egged on by his own family members, including earlier his mother Kaikasi, and now his maternal grandfather Sumali and his close companion and advisor Prahast, Ravana deviated from goodness to dig his own grave of ruin and destruction. It was their selfish advice given in such a way that made Ravana think that they are his best friends that led him astray.

The lesson here is that all creatures are inherently good and noble. It is their advisors who pretend to be their well-wishers, such as their teachers, parents, guides, elders, compatriots and peers etc., who can make a devil, a Satan, or a holy spirit and a noble creature out of them.]

पूहस्तस्य वचः श्रुत्वा दशग्रीवो दुरात्मनः ।
तथेति क्रोधताम्राक्षस्त्रिकूटाचलमन्वगात् ॥ ३३॥
दूतं पूहस्तं सम्प्रेष्य निष्कास्य धनदेश्वरम् । लङ्कामाक्रम्य सचिवै राक्षसैः सुखमास्थितः ॥ ३४॥ prahastasya vacaḥ śrutvā daśagrīvo durātmanaḥ । tatheti krodhatāmṛākṣastrikūṭācalamanvagāt ॥ 33॥ dūtaṁ prahastaṁ sampreṣya niškāsyā dhanadeśvaram । laṅkāmakramya sacivai rākṣasaiḥ sukhamāsthitaḥ ॥ 34॥

Hearing these (instigating and ill-advised) words of the wicked, scheming and pervert (durātmanaḥ) Prahast, the 10-headed Ravana said (angrily and haughtily), 'It's alright then. [I will do as you say.]'

His eyes became red with anger, and he immediately reached the Trikuta mountain (on which Lanka was established) (33).

He sent Prahast as his messenger, ejected the Lord of wealth (Kuber) from Lanka, and having snatched the city from him, he established his control over it. He lived happily and in comfort there with his demon ministers and others of the demon race (34).

धनदः पितृवाक्येन त्यक्त्वा लङ्कां महायशाः ।
गत्वा कैलासशिखरं तपसातोषयच्छिवम् ॥ ३५॥
तेन सख्यमनुप्राप्य तेनैव परिपालितः । अलकां नगरीं तत् निर्ममे विश्वकर्मणा ॥ ३६॥

dhanadaḥ pitṛvākyaena tyaktvā laṅkāṁ mahāyaśāḥ । gatvā kailāsaśikharaṁ tapasātoṣayacchivam ॥ 35॥ tena sakhyamanuprāpya tenaiva paripālitaḥ । alakāṁ nagarīṁ tatra nirmame viśvakarmaṇā ॥ 36॥

The most virtuous Lord of wealth (Kuber) abandoned Lanka, and on the advice of his father (Visrawa), he went to Kailash (the mountainous abode of Lord Shiva) and pleased the Lord (Shiva) by doing severe penances (35).

He established cordial relationship with Lord Shiva, and protected by the latter, he got established for himself a new city called 'Alkapuri' with the help of the celestial architect Vishwakarma (36).

[Note—After leaving Lanka to Ravana, Kuber established another great city called 'Alkapuri'. It was to become a new capital for the Gods.]

दिवपालत्वं चकारात् शिवेन परिपालितः ।
 रावणो राक्षसैः सार्धमभिषिक्तः सहानुजैः ॥ ३७॥
 राज्यं चकारासुराणां त्रिलोकीं बाधयन् खलः ।
 भगिनीं कालखञ्जाय ददौ विकटरूपिणीम् ॥ ३८॥
 विद्युज्जिह्वाय नाम्नासौ महामायी निशाचरः ।
 ततो मयो विश्वकर्मा राक्षसानां दितेः सुतः ॥ ३९॥
 सुतां मन्दोदरीं नाम्ना ददौ लोकैकसुन्दरीम् । रावणाय पुनः शक्तिममोघां प्रीतमानसः ॥ ४०॥ dikpālatvaṁ cakārātra śivena paripālitaḥ । rāvaṇo rākṣasaiḥ sārdhamabhiṣiktaḥ sahānujaiḥ ॥ 37॥ rājyaṁ cakārāsuraṇām trilokīm bādhayan khalaḥ । bhaginīm kālakhañjāya dadau vikatarūpiṇīm ॥ 38॥ vidyujjihvāya nāmnāsau mahāmāyī niśācaraḥ । tato mayo viśvakarmā rākṣasānām diteḥ sutaḥ ॥ 39॥ sutām mandodarīm nāmnā dadau lokaikasundarīm । rāvaṇāya punaḥ śaktimamoghām prītamānasaḥ ॥ 40॥

There, under the protection of Lord Shiva, Kuber became a ‘Dikpal’ (i.e. one who gets guardianship or lordship over one of the four main directions of the celestial compass).

Meanwhile here at Lanka, Ravana got himself anointed as the king of demons, and lived there along with his younger brothers (37).

The evil rascal began to rule over the demons, and started to unleash his rein of terror in the three worlds (the heaven, the earth and the nether worlds).

He betrothed his sister (Supernakha), who was of a very fearful and fierce countenances and sinful demeanours, to a great trickster, a cunning and most illusive demon named Vidyujiwaha (vidyujjihvāya) belonging to the demon family of Kaalkhanjaay (kālakhañjāya).

At that time, a demon named Maye, who was the son of Diti and the architect and builder for the demons, gave his daughter named Mandodari—who was the most beautiful maiden in the whole world consisting of three divisions (heaven, earth and nether world)—in marriage to Ravana.

After that, Maye gave Ravana an invincible and infallible weapon called ‘Shakti’ as a marriage gift. [This ‘Shakti’ was a special weapon devised by Maye, and it matched the Shakti of Indra, the king of Gods, that was designed by Vishwakarma, the designer of the Gods.] (38-40).

वैशेचनस्य दौहित्रीं वृत्रज्वालेति विश्रुताम् ।
 स्वयन्दत्तामुदवहत्कुम्भकर्णाय रावणः ॥ ४१॥

गन्धर्वराजस्य सुतां शैलूषस्य महात्मनः ।
 विभीषणस्य भार्यार्थे धर्मज्ञां समुदावहत् ॥ ४२॥
 सरमां नाम सुभगां सर्वलक्षणसंयुताम् । ततो मन्दोदरी पुत्रं मेघनादमजीजनत् ॥ ४३॥ vairocanasya dauhitrīm vṛtrajvāleti viśrutām । svayandattāmudavahatkumbhakarnāya rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 41॥ gandharvarājasya sutām śailūṣasya mahātmanaḥ । vibhīṣaṇasya bhāryārthe dharmajñām samudāvahat ॥ 42॥ saramām nāma subhagām sarvalakṣaṇasaṁyutām । tato mandodarī putraṁ meghanādamajījanat ॥ 43॥

Thereafter, Ravana married off Kumbhakarna with Vritajwala (vṛtrajvāleti), who was the daughter of the son of demon Vairochan (vairocanasya) and was brought to him (Ravana) by the latter himself (41).

Likewise, Sarma (saramām)—who was the daughter of great king of Gandharvas (celestial musicians) named Sailush (gandharvarājasya sutām śailūṣasya), and was a very righteous and noble lady, most beautiful, and who possessed all the good virtues and characters one can expect to have (subhagām sarvalakṣaṇasaṁyutām)—was betrothed to Vibhishan.

In due course of time, Mandodari gave birth to a son called Meghnad (42-43).

जातमातृस्तु यो नादं मेघवत्प्रमुमोच ह ।
 ततः सर्वेऽब्रुवन्मेघनादोऽयमिति चासकृत् ॥ ४४॥ कुम्भकर्णस्ततः प्राह निद्रा मां बाधते प्रभो । ततश्च कारयामास गुहां दीर्घां सुविस्तराम् ॥ ४५॥ jātamātrastu yo nādaṁ meghavatpramumoca ha । tataḥ sarve'bruvanmeghanādo'yamiti cāsakṛt ॥ 44॥ kumbhakarnastataḥ prāha nidrā mām bādhatē prabho । tataśca kārayāmāsa guhām dīrghām suvistarām ॥ 45॥

As soon as he (Meghnad) was born, he made a loud noise resembling the rumbling and thunder of clouds. That is why every one said he is 'Meghnad' (which literally means one who makes a noise resembling the thunder of clouds) (44).

Then Kumbhakarna told Ravana, 'Oh Lord! I am feeling sleepy.' He got a large cave constructed for himself (so that he can sleep undisturbed) (45).

तत्र सुष्वाप मूढात्मा कुम्भकर्णो विघूर्णितः ।

निद्रिते कुम्भकर्णे तु रावणो लोकरावणः ॥ ४६॥
 ब्राह्मणान् ऋषिमुख्यांश्च देवदानवकिन्नरान् । देवश्रियो मनुष्यांश्च निजघ्ने समहोरगान् ॥ ४७॥

tatra suṣvāpa mūḍhātmā kumbhakarṇo vighūrṇitaḥ । nidrite kumbhakarṇe tu rāvaṇo lokarāvaṇaḥ ॥ 46॥ brāhmaṇān ṛṣimukhyāṁśca devadānavakinnarān । devaśriyo manuṣyāṁśca nijaghne samahoragān ॥ 47॥

There (in the cave), the ill-witted, dud and foolish (mūḍhātmā) Kumbhakarna slept with a thunderous snore that resonated in all the directions (vighūrṇitaḥ).

When Kumbhakarna fell asleep, Ravana—who literally means one who makes the whole world weep in anguish and feel miserable and distressed (lokarāvaṇaḥ)—unleashed his tyrannical reign by going on a rampage of wanton killing of whosoever he managed to lay his hands upon, such as Brahmins, chief sages, hermits and ascetics, the Gods and the demons (who dared to oppose him), the Kinnars (celestial demi-Gods who are dancers and singers in heaven), the serpents (i.e. reptiles and subterranean creatures) as well as the humans, by searching them out in every nook and corner of the world. He also destroyed the assets of the Gods in heaven. [To wit, Ravana spared none. He ran amok and went berserk with his atrocious deeds.] (46-47).

धनदोऽपि ततः श्रुत्वा रावणस्याकृमं प्रभुः ।
 अधर्मं मा कुरुष्वेति दूतवाक्यैर्न्यावस्यत् ॥ ४८॥
 ततः क्रुद्धो दशग्रीवो जगाम धनदालयम् । विनिर्जित्य धनाध्यक्षं जहरोत्तमपुष्पकम् ॥ ४९॥ dhanado'pi tataḥ śrutvā rāvaṇasyākramam prabhuḥ । adharmaṁ mā kuruṣveti dūtavākyaairnyavārayat ॥ 48॥ tataḥ kruddho daśagrīvo jagāma dhanadālayam । vinirjitya dhanādhyakṣam jahārottamapuṣpakam ॥ 49॥

When the Lord of wealth (Kuber—who was the step-brother of Ravana) heard about Ravana's rash, despotic and tyrannical behaviour, about his misdeeds and misdemeanours, he was extremely aghast and felt very sorry. He therefore sent a messenger (to Ravana) with the sane advice that he should not commit sin and desist from unrighteousness. (48).

This suggestion however annoyed Ravana further; he attacked Kuber's capital (Alkapuri—see verse no. 36) in retaliation, and defeated him. As a booty he snatched the latter's plane called Pushpak (and took it away as a trophy of war) (49).

[Note—Kuber tried to remind Ravana about his family's reputation, that it belongs to the line of great and honourable sages (Pulstya and Visrava) who have an immaculate reputation, and are known for their righteousness and goodness. Hence it does not behove of him to act in the most despicable and degrading way that he does as it would sully the name of his father and grandfather. But instead of feeling any sense of guilt, instead of showing any sign of remorse or repentance, Ravana took Kuber's advice as an affront to his ego and authority, angrily muttering that Kuber will do better if he would mind his own business.

So Kuber's missive, sent through a messenger, infuriated Ravana no end, and he decided to first teach Kuber a bitter lesson of his life—to leave Ravana alone and mind his own affairs, and never again try to act smart with him, behaving as he was the torch-bearer of Dharma if he wishes to be left in reasonable peace even if it because he happened to be Ravana's brother—before he would launch his cruel campaign against the other Gods to conquer and subdue them most mercilessly.

So Kuber became Ravana's first target. By vanquishing him and snatching the Puspak plane as a trophy of conquest, Ravana sent a strong and resolute signal to the rest of the Gods, that they should either surrender or face the music.]

ततो यमं च वरुणं निर्जित्य समरेऽसुरः ।
स्वर्गलोकमगातुर्णं देवराजजिघांसया ॥ ५०॥
ततोऽभवन्महद्युद्धमिन्द्रेण सह दैवतैः । ततो रावणमभ्येत्य बबन्ध त्रिदशेश्वरः ॥ ५१॥ tato yamaṁ ca varuṇaṁ nirjitya samare'suraḥ । svargalokamagāturnaṁ devarājajighāṁsayā ॥ 50॥ tato'bhavanmahadyuddhamindreṇa saha daivataiḥ । tato rāvaṇamabhyetya babandha tridaśeśvaraḥ ॥ 51॥

Soon, that demon (Ravana) conquered Yam (the Lord of death) and Varun (the God of water), and then made an assault on the heavens with the intention to kill the king of Gods, Indra, himself (50).

There, he fought a very fierce and pitched battle with Indra and other Gods. The lord of the three worlds (i.e. Indra) was able to out-manuever Ravana; he captured the demon and put him in shackles (51).

तच्छ्रुत्वा सहसागत्य मेघनादः प्रतापवन् ।
कृत्वा घोरं महद्युद्धं जित्वा त्रिदशपुङ्गवान् ॥ ५२॥
इन्द्रं गृहीत्वा बध्वासौ मेघनादो महाबलः ।
मोचयित्वा तु पितरं गृहीत्वेन्द्रं ययौ पुरम् ॥ ५३॥ tacchrutvā sahasāgatya meghanādaḥ pratāpavan । kṛtvā ghoram mahadyuddham jitvā tridaśapuṅgavān ॥ 52॥ indram grhītvā badhvāsau meghanādo mahābalaḥ ।

mocayitvā tu pitaram gr̥hītvendram yayau puram ॥ 53 ॥

When the news reached Meghnad, the most famous, powerful, strong and valiant son of Ravana, he came to help his father, and there was a very pitched and fierce battle between the two sides (i.e. between Indra and Meghnad). He (Meghnad) conquered the Gods [52], captured Indra and tied him up. Thus, Meghnad, the most strong and valorous one, got his father freed, and brought Indra as a captive to his own capital (at Lanka) [53]. (52-53)

ब्रह्मा तु मोचयामास देवेन्द्रं मेघनादतः ।
दत्त्वा वरान् बहून्स्तस्मै ब्रह्मा स्वभवनं ययौ ॥ ५४ ॥
रावणो विजयी लोकान् सर्वान् जित्वा क्रमेण तु । कैलासं तोलयामास बाहुभिः परिघोपमैः ॥ ५५ ॥ brahmā tu mocayāmāsa devendram meghanādataḥ । dattvā varān bahūnstasmai brahmā svabhavanam yayau ॥ 54 ॥ rāvaṇo vijayī lokān sarvān jitvā krameṇa tu । kailāsam tolayāmāsa bāhubhiḥ parighopamaiḥ ॥ 55 ॥

Brahma (the creator) went and bargained for the freedom of Indra from the clutches of Meghnad by giving the latter a number of boons¹. Having obtained Indra's freedom, Brahma went back to his abode (and Indra went to his kingdom in the heaven) (54).

The victorious Ravana progressively, one after another, conquered all the different Lokas. [To wit, Ravana vanquished all the parts of the world, and subjugated all its inhabitants consisting of all the different species and classes of living beings, the mortal creatures as well as gods, demigods etc.).

Having done so, he had become so confident of and arrogant about his invincibility, might, prowess, potent, valour and punch that he haughtily lifted Mt. Kailash (the abode of Lord Shiva) with his huge, strong and robust arms which were like giant forks² (55).

[Note—¹It was a sort of ransom paid by the grandfather Brahma to liberate Indra from the clutches of his vanquisher, Meghnad. This sort of blackmail was one way in which the demons were able to acquire numerous boons, and then use these boons to further blackmail the Gods and extend their sphere of influence, till it was possible for the complete subjugation and rout of all the Gods.

Refer also to Anand Ramaya, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 78-82.

²Ravana's arms resembled huge forks; their palms and fingers were like the end of a fork with which one scoops up something, while the forearm and biceps were like the handle or the shaft of this gigantic fork. He scooped up the mighty Mt. Kailash with his fork-like hands, using his fingers to dig below the base of the mountain and ease it up from its foundation, and then hold it aloft by balancing it on his spread-out palms that acted like a huge platter or a pedestal on which the mountain rested.]

तत्र नन्दीश्वरेणैवं शप्तोऽयं राक्षसेश्वरः ।
 वानरैर्मानुषैश्चैव नाशं गच्छेति कोपिना ॥ ५६॥ शप्तोऽप्यगणयन् वाक्यं ययौ हैहयपत्तनम् । तेन बद्धो दशग्रीवः पुलस्त्येन विमोचितः ॥ ५७॥

tatra nandīśvareṇaivam śapto'yaṁ rākṣaseśvaraḥ । vānarairmānuṣaiścaiva nāśaṁ gaccheti kopinā ॥ 56॥ śapto'pyagaṇayan vākyaṁ yayau haihayapattanam ।
 tena baddho daśagrīvaḥ pulastyena vimocitaḥ ॥ 57॥

There, the sacred bull called Nandi (which is the mount of Shiva) angrily cursed the king of demons (Ravana) in indignation, prophesizing that he would die at the hands of a human and monkeys¹ (56).

But Ravana was so overcome with arrogance, haughtiness and over-confidence in his invincibility (because of the boons which he had received by Brahma in verse no. 13 and his subsequent successes) that he paid no attention to that curse.

Instead of hesitating and trying to find a way out of this hang-man's noose that hung perpetually around his neck, he became more aggressive and belligerent, moving to the capital of Haihairaj (i.e. Sahastrarjun) to subdue him. There Ravana was captured by the latter and kept in captivity. Sage Pulastya (grandfather of Ravana) came to his aid and got him released at that time² (57).

[Note—¹Refer also to Anand Ramaya, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 84-89.

This was the second major setback for Ravana after his first defeat at the hands of Indra as in verse nos. 50-51. His hitherto reckless, aggressive, belligerent and unhindered journey of relentless conquest now left the demon in self-doubt and tenterhooks of suspicion because of the Nandi's curse—from now onwards he became wary and sore affright of humans and monkeys, the humble and apparently inconsequential creatures whom he had hitherto regarded with utter disdain, and whom he treated them as being mere dust which could be trampled underfoot at will, without the guts and the wherewithal to offer even a semblance of resistance to him and his powerful might.

But as providence ordained, this over-confidence on the part of Ravana which made him exempt humans and monkeys while seeking a blanket protection against all his enemies at the time of seeking boons from Brahma proved to be his undoing; it was like the proverbial last straw on the camel's back that made him collapse, for it was this loophole, or a lapse if we shall like to call it so, that Nandi exploited when he cursed Ravana that he will die at the hands of humans and monkeys. Perhaps he regretted now as to why he had haughtily and over confidently overlooked them while he was asking for boons from Brahma in verse no. 13, Canto 2.

Now, who were these 'humans and the monkeys' who would kill Ravana? The story of the Ramayana tells us that the humans were Lord Ram and his brother Laxman, while the monkeys were the residents of the kingdom of Kishkindha of which Sugriv was the king, and they formed the army that the Lord used in the War of Lanka to defeat and slay all the cruel demons, including Ravana, Kumbhakarna and Meghnad.

²Refer also to Anand Ramaya, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 90-95.]

ततोऽतिबलमासाद्य जिघांसुर्हरिपुङ्गवम् ।
 धृतस्तेनैव कक्षेण वालिना दशकन्धरः ॥ ५८॥
 भ्रामयित्वा तु चतुरः समुद्रान् रावणं हरिः ।
 विसर्जयामास ततस्तेन सख्यं चकार सः ॥ ५९॥
 रावणः परमप्रीत एवं लोकान् महाबलः । चकार स्ववशे राम बुभुजे स्वयमेव तान् ॥ ६०॥ tato'tibalamāsādya jighāmsurharipuṅgavam । dhṛtastenaiva kakṣeṇa vālinā daśakandharaḥ ॥ 58 ॥

 bhrāmayitvā tu caturaḥ samudrān rāvaṇam hariḥ । visarjayāmāsa tatastena sakhyam cakāra saḥ ॥ 59 ॥ rāvaṇaḥ paramapṛīta evam lokān mahābalaḥ । cakāra svavaśe rāma bubhuje svayameva tān ॥ 60 ॥

Then he (Ravana) determined to kill the king of monkeys (named Vaali) who was immensely strong and powerful, but the tables were turned on him, and he was captured by Vaali and kept pressed or squeezed under his arm-pit (58).

He (Vaali) took Ravana around the four great oceans, and then released him. Then Ravana made friends with him (i.e. Ravana made a treaty of friendship with Vaali)¹(59).

Oh Lord Sri Ram! In this manner, Ravana could subdue and ruthlessly conquer the whole world by the strength of his arms¹ and began enjoying it himself most delightedly as if it were his unquestioned fiefdom (because he had no opposition of any kind left around from whom to fear) (60).

[Note—¹Refer also to Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101.]

-----**-----

Section 2.3:

Ram Charit Manas

Earlier in Chapter no. 1 we have read about the previous life of Ravana when he was known as the famous king named Pratapbhanu. The Chapter concluded with Doha no. 176 of Ram Charit Manas which observed that though Ravana and his siblings were born in the glorious family of an illustrious sage named Pulastya, but because of the curse of the Brahmins they, however, became epitomes of vices, sinfulness and evil.

Now we shall pick up the thread from where we had left it in that Chapter, and read on with how things developed further for Ravana and others, about their acquiring various boons and then establishing the great Kingdom of Demon race as narrated in the famed epic 'Ram Charit Manas'. The following verses, from Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 177—to Doha no. 180 describe these events.

चौ०. कीन्ह बिबिध तप तीनिहुँ भाई । परम उग्र नहिं बरनि सो जाई ॥ १ ॥
 गयउ निकट तप देखि बिधाता । मागहु बर प्रसन्न मैं ताता ॥ २ ॥
 करि बिनती पद गहि दससीसा । बोलेउ बचन सुनहु जगदीसा ॥ ३ ॥
 हम काहू के मरहिं न मारें । बानर मनुज जाति दुइ बारें ॥ ४ ॥
 एवमस्तु तुम्ह बड़ तप कीन्हा । मैं ब्रह्माँ मिलि तेहि बर दीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

kīnha bibidha tapa tīnihum̐ bhāī. parama ugra nahim̐ barani sō jāī. 1.
 gaya'u nikaṭa tapa dēkhi bidhātā. māgahu bara prasanna maim̐ tātā. 2.
 kari binatī pada gahi dasasīsā. bōlē'u bacana sunahu jagadīsā. 3.
 hama kāhū kē marahim̐ na mārēm̐. bānara manuja jāti du'i bārēm̐. 4.
 ēvamastu tumha baṛa tapa kīnhā. maim̐ brahmām̐ mili tēhi bara dīnhā. 5.

All the three brothers (Ravana, Kumbhakarna and Vibhishan) did severe Tapa (penance) with all sincerity and diligence, employing all means within their reach to attain success in it. Their Tapa was so harsh, strict and intense that it is beyond words to describe it¹. (1)

The Creator (Brahma) was pleased when he observed their Tapa, and he went to them and said, 'Dear, I am very pleased with you. Ask any boon that you desire from me.' (2)

[The Creator had first approached the eldest of the three brothers, Ravana.] The 10-headed one (Ravana) bowed to the Creator most reverentially and caught hold of his feet. Then he said prayerfully, 'Listen, oh the lord of the world. (3) ----

I must not be killed by anyone, except monkeys and human beings².' (4)

Brahma replied, 'So shall it be. You have done severe Tapa by the virtue of it you have met me, Brahma the Creator. So I bless you with this boon that you desire.' (5)

[Note—¹In Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2 we read about the severity of their Tapa. Ravana fasted for one thousand years, at the end of which he offered one of his heads to the sacrificial fire. Then he fasted for another thousand years, offering his second head at the end of this period. He continued with this practice for ten thousand years, and when he was ready to offer his last head, Brahma appeared before him. (Refer: verse nos. 10-11.)

Kumbhakarna did Tapa for ten thousand years, and Vibhishan for five thousand years while standing on the toe of one foot. (Refer: verse nos. 8-9.)

A similar version is found in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 47-50.

²In Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse no. 13, Ravana has been specific in seeking immunity from Garuda (the mount of Lord Vishnu, representing all sky-borne creatures), Serpents (representing all subterranean creatures and reptiles), Yaksha (demi-gods and spirits), Gods (residents of heaven), Demons (residents of nether world as well as members of his own race who may oppose and challenge his authority).

He thought that if he is granted fearlessness from such powerful forces, then humble monkeys and humans would be like dust for him, for they would never dare to stand before him. This loophole was later used to derive the maximum benefit by the Gods and Lord Vishnu when Ravana went berserk, killing, plundering and ravaging the creation merciless, because the Gods assumed the form of monkeys and Lord Vishnu of a human prince called Lord Ram to finally slay Ravana and eliminate the scourge of the cruel demons.]

पुनि प्रभु कुंभकरन पहिं गयऊ । तेहि बिलोकि मन बिसमय भयऊ ॥ ६ ॥
 जौं एहिं खल नित करब अहारू । होइहि सब उजारि संसारू ॥ ७ ॥
 सारद प्रेरि तासु मति फेरी । मागेसि नीद मास षट केरी ॥ ८ ॥

puni prabhu kumbhakarana pahim gaya'ū. tēhi bilōki mana bisamaya bhaya'ū.
 6.

jauṁ ēhim khala nita karaba ahārū. hō'ihī saba ujāri sansārū. 7.
 sārada prēri tāsu mati phērī. māgēsī nīda māsa ṣaṭa kērī. 8.

[Then the Lord (Brahma) went to Kumbhakarna. As he saw his colossal form he was confounded and alarmed, wondering what would happen to this creation if all these wicked demons got absolute immunity from punishment and death, because then they will unleash a horrible torrent of torments with impunity, causing untold misery, grief and pain to all the creatures of the creation. This was not acceptable to the Creator, as it was his moral duty to protect the creation and its inhabitants he had himself created; being the great forefather of this creation he was also its patron caretaker and protector, responsible for its security and well-being. He cannot allow his discretionary powers to grant boons to come in the way of fulfilling his larger duties and responsibilities in this creation. So he was alarmed when he saw Kumbhakarna.

He thought for a while and decided that since he has already granted boons to Ravana and it cannot be reverted, the best he can do now was to limit the damage already done by stopping it from getting doubled by granting unbridled powers to Kumbhakarna. To wit, if he manages Kumbhakarna into asking some inconsequential boon, something nonsense and idiotic, then at least the horrors that the world would face would be reduced by half, as it then would only be limited to Ravana's whims.

Therefore, Brahma signaled Saraswati, the goddess of speech and wisdom, to act swiftly and delude Kumbhakarna's mind so that he asks something foolish and harmless.]

The Lord then went to Kumbhakarna, and seeing him he was filled with dismay. (6)

He thought to himself, "If this colossus fellow eats to his fill every day, the world would starve and there would be famine all around; the earth would become barren and ravished. [To wit, he will eat everything, and there would be nothing left for the rest of the creatures to survive on.]" (7)

So the wise and prudent Creator signaled Saraswati to delude Kumbhakarna's mind, as a result of which he asked for a stupid and ridiculous boon of 'sleeping uninterrupted for a period of six months at a time'¹. (8)

[Note—¹On the single day when he woke up and ate, there was a virtual famine in the whole world, for he ate up everything that was available that day. Refer also: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 180.

What did Kumbhakarna eat? Well, a glimpse is available in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 64 which says he gobbled up entire buffalos and drank huge cans of wine. The demons in general feasted on all living beings, such as humans, including sages, animals of all denominations, such as the cows and the buffaloes to mention only a few—refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chanda line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 3; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 45.

And how huge was he? He was like a living God of Death, and colossus as a mountain. (Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 62; and Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 65 respectively.)

It was not only 'food' that Brahma had in mind when he inspired Saraswati to prevail upon Kumbhakarna to ask for this absurd boon. As has been noted in the introductory paragraphs, Brahma reasoned that if Kumbhakarna was knocked out into deep slumber, then Ravana would be left alone. He won't be able to cause much nuisance single-handed as he would be able to do if he had an active support of his equally wicked brother Kumbhakarna. So the expected horrors would at least be reduced by half. The physical dimensions of Kumbhakarna's body were exceptionally huge, for he was as colossal as a great mountain. This meant that his physical strength and powers much surpassed that of Ravana.

So therefore, if the two, Ravana and Kumbhakarna, had joined hands in running around berserk, recklessly killing and spreading mayhem in this world, then whatever managed to survive from Ravana's cruelty would also have perished. To wit, Brahma's clever wit in provoking Kumbhakarna into asking a stupid boon of 'sleep' helped the world to survive for a longer period of time than it would have if both the brothers were actively involved in spreading the horrifying reign of the demons marked by cruelty, terror and dread in this world.]

दो०. गए बिभीषन पास पुनि कहेउ पुत्र बर मागु । तेहिं मागेउ भगवंत पद कमल अमल अनुरागु ॥ १७७ ॥

dōhā.

ga'ē bibhīṣana pāsa puni kahē'u putra bara māgu.
tēhiṁ māgē'u bhagavanta pada kamala amala anurāgu. 177.

After that, Brahma went to Vibhishan, and said, 'Son, ask for your desired boon.'

He (Vibhishan) asked for a boon that he should have unwavering, undiluted, unhindered and eternal devotion and affection for the lotus-like holy feet of the Lord God¹ (Doha no. 177)

[Note—¹In his previous life, Vibhishan was the chief minister of king Pratapbhanu. His name was 'Dharmaruchi', one who took great interest in the virtues of goodness and righteousness. He was a pious soul, and this great trait in his character came down to him in his current birth as Vibhishan. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 176.]

चौ०. तिन्हहि देइ बर ब्रह्म सिधाए । हरषित ते अपने गृह आए ॥ १ ॥
मय तनुजा मंदोदरि नामा । परम सुंदरी नारि ललामा ॥ २ ॥
सोइ मयँ दीन्हि रावनहि आनी । होइहि जातुधानपति जानी ॥ ३ ॥ हरषित भयउ नारि भलि पाई । पुनि दोउ बंधु बिआहेसि जाई ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

tinahi dē'i bara brahma sidhā'ē. haraṣita tē apanē gṛha ā'ē. 1.
maya tanujā mandōdari nāmā. parama sundarī nāri lalāmā. 2.
sō'i mayam' dīnhi rāvanahi ānī. hō'ihī jātudhānapati jānī. 3.
haraṣita bhaya'u nāri bhali pāī. puni dō'u bandhu bi'āhēsi jāī. 4.

Brahma went to his abode after granting them their desired boons. Then they (the three brothers) came back home elated and happy. (1)

A demon named 'Maye' (who was the architect of the demon race) had a most beautiful and charming daughter named Mandodari. (2)

He brought her and gave her in marriage to Ravana as he realized that soon the latter would be the ruler of the demon race (and the most powerful one in the whole world). (3)

Ravana was very pleased to get a nice wife for himself. By-and-by he also got his other two brothers married. (4)

[Note—Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 39-43. It says Kumbhararna was married to Vrittajwala, the daughter of demon Virochan, and Vibishan to Sarma, the daughter of Sailush who was a king of the Gandharvas (celestial musicians).

Similar thing has been said in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 44, and 65-66.]

गिरि त्रिकूट एक सिंधु मझारी । बिधि निर्मित दुर्गम अति भारी ॥ ५ ॥
 सोइ मय दानवँ बहुरि सँवारा । कनक रचित मनिभवन अपारा ॥ ६ ॥
 भोगावति जसि अहिकुल बासा । अमरावति जसि सक्रनिवासा ॥ ७ ॥ तिन्ह तें अधिक रज्ज अति बंका । जग बिख्यात नाम तेहि लंका ॥ ८ ॥ giri trikūṭa ēka sindhu majhārī. bidhi nirmita durgama ati bhārī. 5.

 sō'i maya dānavam̃ bahuri sam̃vārā. kanaka racita manibhavana apārā. 6.
 bhōgāvati jasi ahikula bāsā. amarāvati jasi sakranivāsā. 7 tinha tēm̃ adhika ramya ati baṅkā. jaga bikhyāta nāma tēhi laṅkā. 8.

In the middle of the ocean was a wonderful mountain with three lofty summits. It was called 'Trikut'; it was extensive in dimensions and most difficult to access. (5)

The demon Maye (who was the architect of the demon race) re-constructed and renovated it wonderfully, with full majesty, splendour and glamour. The newly refurbished city had countless majestic gilded palaces that were decorated with priceless gems. (6)

This city was as wondrous and beautiful as the legendary city of the serpents in the subterranean world, known as Bhogawati, as well as the city of Indra, the king of gods, that is known as Amravati. (7)

Nay, this newly founded city of the demons actually much surpassed these two legendary capitals (of the serpents and the demons) in its majesty, splendour and glamour; it was more charming, wondrous, beautiful and glamorous than the two of them. It was impenetrable and most awe-inspiring. Its name was 'Lanka'¹. (8)

[Note—¹This city was earlier the residents of the demons, but they had abandoned it out of fear of Lord Vishnu. They went and started living in the nether world. For some time it was left in ruins, but it was re-build by Kuber, the treasurer of gods, with the help of Vishwakarma. When Ravana assaulted and sacked it, it was once again reduced to rubble. Then Maye re-constructed it much better than what it previously was to convert it into a permanent dwelling place and the capital of the demon race after Ravana ascended to power. Refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 179 herein below.

Refer also to (i) Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 42-44; and (ii) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 13-15.]

दो०. खाई सिंधु गभीर अति चारिहुँ दिसि फिरि आव ।

कनक कोट मनि खचित दृढ़ बरनि न जाइ बनाव ॥ १७८ (क) ॥
हरि प्रेरित जेहिं कलप जोइ जातुधानपति होइ । सूर प्रतापी अतुलबल दल समेत बस सोइ ॥ १७८ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

khā'īm sindhu gabhīra ati cārihum̃ disi phiri āva.
kanaka kōṭa mani khacita dṛṛha barani na jā'i banāva. 178 (a).
hari prērita jēhim kalapa jō'i jātudhānapati hō'i.
sūra pratāpī atulabala dala samēta basa sō'i. 178 (b).

The mighty ocean, which is most formidable and deep, forms an un-crossable moat all around this city of Lanka, making it inaccessible and unapproachable.

It had a fort with strong fortified walls and ramparts, decorated with gold and gems. It was so wonderful to behold that its beauty cannot be sufficiently described in words. (Doha no. 178-a)

Whoever is preordained by the will of Lord Hari (the Supreme Being) to become an exceptionally brave, courageous and valiant king of the world, in any of the many eras of creation, lives in this city with his army and subjects. (Doha no. 178-b)

चौ०. रहे तहाँ निसिचर भट भारे । ते सब सुरन्ह समर संघारे ॥ १ ॥
अब तहाँ रहहिं सक्र के प्रेरे । रच्छक कोटि जच्छपति केरे ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

rahē tahām̃ nisicara bhaṭa bhārē. tē saba suranha samara saṅghārē. 1.
aba tahām̃ rahahim̃ sakra kē prērē. racchaka kōṭi jacchapati kērē. 2.

In an earlier time there lived in that city (of Lanka) great demon warriors who were brave and valiant. All of them were defeated or killed in battle by the Gods. (1)

At the behest of Indra (the king of Gods—“sakra”), who had conquered the city, many thousand warriors of Kuber (the Gods’ treasurer—“jacchapati”) lived in that place at the moment. (2)

दसमुख कतहुँ खबरि असि पाई । सेन साजि गढ़ घेरेसि जाई ॥ ३ ॥ देखि बिकट भट बड़ि कटकाई । जच्छ जीव लै गए पराई ॥ ४ ॥ dasamukha katahum̃ khabari asi pā'ī. sēna sāji gaṛha ghērēsi jā'ī. 3.

dēkhi bikṭa bhaṭa baḍi kaṭakā'ī. jaccha jīva lai ga'ē parā'ī. 4.

Ravana heard of it somehow. So he gathered an army of his demon warriors and launched an assault, besieging the city. (3)

A no-holds fierce battle ensued. When Yaksha, the commander of the garrison appointed by Kuber to protect Lanka, saw the formidable demon army of a ferocious and vicious disposition, he was sore affright, and abandoning the city he fled for his life. (4)

फिरि सब नगर दसानन देखा । गयउ सोच सुख भयउ बिसेषा ॥ ५ ॥
सुंदर सहज अगम अनुमानी । कीन्हि तहाँ रावन रजधानी ॥ ६ ॥

phiri saba nagara dasānana dēkhā. gaya'u sōca sukha bhaya'u bisēṣā. 5.
sundara sahaja agama anumānī. kīnhi tahāṁ rāvana rajadhānī. 6.

The victorious Ravana entered the city in triumph. He went around it to inspect it. Observing its magnificence, splendour and majesty, he felt extremely glad. (5)

Realising that it was not only beautiful and pleasant but very secure and safe from intrusion as it was inaccessible from any side (being surrounded by the ocean which formed a deep and huge moat around it), Ravana decided to establish his capital there. (6)

जेहि जस जोग बाँटि गृह दीन्हे । सुखी सकल रजनीचर कीन्हे ॥ ७ ॥
एक बार कुबेर पर धावा । पुष्पक जान जीति लै आवा ॥ ८ ॥ jēhi jasa jōga bāmṭi gr̥ha dīnhē. sukhī sakala rajanīcara kīnhē. 7.

ēka bāra kubēra para dhāvā. puṣpaka jāna jīti lai āvā. 8.

He distributed the buildings of the city amongst his demon warriors in accordance to their rank and status, and their eligibility. This was welcomed by one and all, making all the demons feel happy and contented.

[To wit, the demons felt obliged to Ravana as he liberally shared the spoils of war with them, like an adroit conqueror who knows how to keep his army in good humour and loyal.] (7)

Once upon a time he launched an attack on Kuber, and snatched his air-plane called Pushpak. He then brought it to Lanka as another trophy of his conquest¹. (8)

[Note—¹Refer: (i) Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 48-49; and (ii) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 69-71.]

दो०. कौतुकीं कैलास पुनि लीन्हेसि जाइ उठाइ । मनहुँ तौलि निज बाहुबल चला बहुत सुख पाइ ॥ १७९ ॥

dōhā.

kautukahīm kailāsa puni līnhēsi jā'i uṭhā'i.
manahum̃ tauli nija bāhubala calā bahuta sukha pā'i. 179.

Emboldened by his successive successes, Ravana attacked Mt. Kailash (the abode of Lord Shiva), and lifted it in his arms as if trying to judge for himself as well as to show others how strong he was. Being successful in it, he felt extremely elated. Then he went away. (Doha no. 179)

[Note—Ravana only lifted Mt. Kailash, but he soon placed it back. With this single feat he sent a signal to the Gods and to everyone else in this creation to be careful with him—for he is extremely strong and powerful inasmuch as he could easily lift Mt. Kailash, and so no one stands any chance against him if they dared to challenge his might.

Ravana was so proud of this singular feat that he boasted of it repeatedly whenever he found a chance to do so. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 22-b; Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 25; and Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 28.]

चौ०. सुख संपत्ति सुत सेन सहाई । जय प्रताप बल बुद्धि बड़ाई ॥ १ ॥
नित नूतन सब बाढ़त जाई । जिमि प्रतिलाभ लोभ अधिकाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sukha sampati suta sēna sahā'ī. jaya pratāpa bala bud'dhi baṛā'ī. 1.
nita nūтана saba bāṛhata jā'ī. jimi pratilābha lōbha adhikā'ī. 2.

Ravana's fortunes were on the ascendance, as his happiness, joy and pleasures, his wealth and prosperity, his sons, army and close attendants, his fame, glory, strength and majesty, his mind and its various faculties, as well as the praise and honour heaped upon him for his exploits—everything kept on increasing with the passage of time. It was like the case of greed and yearnings increasing exponentially with each gain or success that one attains. (1-2)

अतिबल कुंभकरन अस भ्राता । जेहि कहूँ नहिं प्रतिभट जग जाता ॥ ३ ॥
करइ पान सोवइ षट मासा । जागत होइ तिहूँ पुर त्रासा ॥ ४ ॥
जौं दिन प्रति अहार कर सोई । बिस्व बेगि सब चौपट होई ॥ ५ ॥ समर धीर नहिं जाइ बखाना । तेहि सम अमित बीर बलवाना ॥ ६ ॥ atibala kumbhakarana asa bhrātā. jēhi kahum̃ nahim̃ pratibhaṭa jaga jātā. 3.

kara'i pāna sōva'i ṣaṭa māsā. jāgata hō'i tihūm̃ pura trāsā. 4.
jauṃ dina prati ahāra kara sō'ī. bisva bēgi saba caupaṭa hō'ī. 5.
samara dhīra nahim̃ jā'i bakhānā. tēhi sama amita bīra balavānā. 6.

His brother was Kumbhakarna; he was so strong, powerful and valiant that no one was ever born in this world to match him in these glorious virtues. (3)

He used to drink a lot of wine and slept for six months at a stretch. (4)

The day he would wake up to eat, it would be a calamitous day for the world as everything would be completely ruined. [To wit, he wiped out everything worth eating, and so the world was left high and dry as if there was a great famine on the day Kumbhakarna ate.]¹ (5)

His valour, courage and steadfastness in the battle-field was so laudable and great that it cannot be described so much so there was not a single warrior in the whole of Lanka (and by implication in the whole of the demon race) who could ever match him in these qualities. (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 177.]

बारिदनाद जेठ सुत तासू । भट महुँ प्रथम लीक जग जासू ॥ ७ ॥
जेहि न होइ रन सनमुख कोई । सुरपुर नितहिं परावन होई ॥ ८ ॥ bāridanāda jēṭha suta tāsū. bhaṭa mahum̐ prathama līka jaga jāśū. 7.

jēhi na hō'i rana sanamukha kō'i. surapura nitahim̐ parāvana hō'i. 8.

Baridnatha (another name for Meghanad, also spelled as Meghnaad) was Ravana's elder son. He was counted as being the first in the rank of great warriors. (7)

No one dared to face him in the battle-field. His name created a virtual stampede in the heaven as every one of the gods ran helter-skelter and scampered for cover by the mere mention of his name. (8)

दो०. कुमुख अकंपन कुलिसरद धूमकेतु अतिकाय । एक एक जग जीति सक ऐसे सुभट निकाय ॥ १८० ॥

dōhā.

kumukha akampana kulisarada dhūmakētu atikāya.
ēka ēka jaga jīti saka aisē subhaṭa nikāya. 180.

There were excellent valiant warriors there (in Lanka); some of the names of such great warriors were Durmukha (literally meaning one with an ugly face), Akampan (literally meaning one who never shook in fear), Vajradanta (literally meaning one with teeth that were as strong as Vajra, the strong weapon of Indra, the king of gods), Dhumketu (literally meaning who was like a comet), Atikaye (literally meaning one with a colossus body), etc.

These are but only a few names, for there were countless other matchless warriors like them in Lanka. Every one of them was competent to win the world single-handedly, without assistance. (Doha no. 180)

-----**-----

Part 1

Chapter 3: The Reign of Dread and Terror Unleashed by Ravana and the Demons

In the previous Chapter no. 2, we have read how the demons, led by their king Ravana, established their kingdom with its capital at Lanka, a magnificent city situated on an island in the middle of the ocean. Initial resounding successes that were compounded by the boons Ravana had received from the Creator made him excessively arrogant and haughty beyond reason. He thought that the time of the demons had arrived, and fate was in their favour after a long time. Confident of his own strength and powers and invincibility, he became belligerent and determined to settle old scores with the Gods and also with the Brahmins due to whose curse he had to become a demon in the first place.

He also decided to go after the blood of sages and all other holy men as he feared that they have such great mystical powers that if he left them alone unharmed then they would team with the Brahmins and Gods, the deemed arch enemies of the demons, and the result would be a formidable force that may obstruct his plans to become the sole sovereign of the world and restore the lost glory of the demon race. A prudent king does not allow even a single seed of dissent or discontent or opposition to remain uncrushed, because a single, seemingly harmless seed might produce a thorny, poisonous plant that would one day prick and kill the same person who had had mercy on it and had spared it from being smothered earlier.

So therefore, Ravana decided to vanquish all Brahmins and Gods, as well as all sages and saintly persons, instilling such fear in their mind and heart that they would dare not raise their heads against him. The demons had always thought that the Brahmins, the Gods and the sages were their greatest enemies, so now that they had a powerful king in the person of Ravana it was the right time for them to assert their authority and reclaim their lost glory and powers.

Like a person who is long deprived of food and longs for even a morsel suddenly gets free access to a larder full of delectable delicacies, at which he lunges greedily and with full force, the demons, who were emboldened by Ravana's extraordinary prowess and powers that were bolstered by the boons of Brahma, and who felt that for far too long they had been subjected to harsh treatment, injustice and unfair deal at the hands of Gods and Brahmins, went amok with full vigour, going on a recklessly spree spreading dread, terror and havoc on all the corners of the earth, killing, plundering and tormenting all and sundry without exception. They wanted to wreak vengeance with full punch and force upon those whom they perceived as their hereditary arch enemies.

In the larger scheme of things, however, the demons' unbridled reign of terror and endless cycle of crimes and vices, excessive sinfulness, decadence and turpitude et al, suited well the Creator, because only when the balloon is full of gas, and when more and more of it is pumped into the balloon till it can't hold any more of this gas that it would finally burst, the Creator waited patiently and bid for time till all the limits of tolerance and forbearance and forgiveness were crossed by the demons, which was when the Creator would have an excuse to find a way to neutralize or rescind on his own boons without anyone accusing him of any wrong-doing. And so, in due course of time, it did happen that way, because the demons, finding no opposition to them and having acquired immense powers and strength, virtually sledgehammered and bludgeoned their way through this world, reducing Dharma (religion and noble principles) to rubble, and making all the horrified creatures wail and grieve in excess of pain and misery.

In this Chapter no. 3 we shall read all about the way the demons, led by their invincible and haughty king Ravana, had spread terror and dread throughout the creation. Ravana had become a big Hector and Achilles of his time; a big bully and tormentor, a merciless brute, a ruthless and unbridled warrior, a haughty, arrogant and egoist ruler of the world, but at the same time matchlessly brave, bold, valorous, courageous, strong, fearless and mighty, someone invincible and immune to death except for one weakness in his body which made him vulnerable, his Navel, for if someone hit him here with a sharp weapon, such as an arrow, it was destined that Ravana would die, very much like Achilles' Heels.

We will read these developments as narrated in the epic Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas as follows:

Ram Charit Manas

The narration of the demons' reign of terror, and the dread and havoc they created in this world has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 181—to Doha no. 183.

चौ०. कामरूप जानहिं सब माया । सपनेहुँ जिन्ह कें धरम न दाया ॥ १ ॥
 दसमुख बैठ सभाँ एक बारा । देखि अमित आपन परिवारा ॥ २ ॥
 सुत समूह जन परिजन नाती । गनै को पार निसाचर जाती ॥ ३ ॥
 सेन बिलोकि सहज अभिमानी । बोला बचन क्रोध मद सानी ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

kāmarūpa jānahim̐ saba māyā. sapanēhum̐ jinha kēm̐ dharama na dāyā. 1.
 dasamukha baiṭha sabhām̐ ēka bārā. dēkhi amita āpana parivārā. 2.
 suta samūha jana parijana nātī. ganai kō pāra nisācara jātī. 3.
 sēna bilōki sahaja abhimānī. bōlā bacana krōdha mada sānī. 4.

All the demons were personified forms of worldly passion and lust; they also had the magical ability to assume any form they wished (kāmarūpa)¹.

Besides this, they knew all sorts of wicked tricks, and were experts in the art of creating delusions and hallucinations (jānahim̐ saba māyā).

They never ever dreamt of Dharma (religion, righteousness, probity, propriety and nobility)—“sapanēhum̐ jinha kēm̐ dharama”), nor of mercy and kindness (na dāyā). (1)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 176 where also this unique quality of the demon race has been reiterated.]

One day, while sitting in his royal court, the 10-headed Ravana looked around proudly and saw his huge family consisting of a countless number of demons. (2)

His extensive family consisted of his sons, attendants, kith and kin, and other relatives that were close to him, as well as the innumerable subjects of the demon kingdom that were divided into many other clans, sects and denominations having countless members. (3)

When he observed his huge army, he felt a natural sense of pride. Emboldened by this sight, his ego was stoked; he said very angrily and haughtily, ---- (4)

सुनुहु सकल रजनीचर जूथा । हमरे बैरी बिबुध बरूथा ॥ ५ ॥
 ते सनमुख नहिं करहिं लराई । देखि सबल रिपु जाहिं पराई ॥ ६ ॥
 तेन्ह कर मरन एक बिधि होई । कहउँ बुझाइ सुनुहु अब सोई ॥ ७ ॥
 द्विजभोजन मख होम सराधा । सब कै जाइ करहु तुम्ह बाधा ॥ ८ ॥ sunahu sakala rajanīcara jūthā. hamarē bairī bibudha barūthā. 5.

 tē sanamukha nahim karahim larāī. dēkhi sabala ripu jāhim parāī. 6.
 tēnha kara marana ēka bidhi hōī. kaha'um' bujhā'i sunahu aba sōī. 7.
 dvijabhōjana makha hōma sarādā. saba kai jā'i karahu tumha bādā. 8.

[Ravana addressed his generals and courtiers, speaking with a strong hint of vengeance in his voice. He instructed his army, saying in an angry tone marked with vengeance—] ‘Listen all of you demon warriors. The Gods and their followers are our natural enemies¹. (5)

They are so cowardly that they don't fight face to face with their enemies, and as soon as they discover that their adversary is strong, they flee from the place. (6)

There is one way by which they can be annihilated. I shall now tell all of you how to go about it. Listen carefully. (7)

Go and prevent the Brahmins from feeding themselves and making offerings to these Gods through fire sacrifices. Stop them from doing religious practices and performing rituals such as offering oblations, doing ablutions and performing fire sacrifices, as well as other ceremonies such as offering food and water to the spirits of dead ancestors.

[To wit, force the Brahmins and the Gods and the Spirits to starve. These Brahmins are deemed to be representatives of the Gods on earth, so if they starve they will become weak and ultimately die. The offering that these Brahmins make to the fire during the sacrifice provide nourishment to the Gods in heaven; so if you stop these religious practices the Gods too will die of hunger. Just like the Gods, the Spirits too will die of hunger and thirst if no one offers them food and water during ceremonies to mark the dead. So therefore, if we, the demons, wish to eliminate all opposition to our rule and well-being then it is absolutely essential to weaken the Gods and the Brahmins by making them starve.] (8)

[Note—¹The Gods and the Demons had been natural enemies from the very beginning. The simple reason, without going into the mythological history, is that they represent two absolutely opposite and inimical aspects and virtues in this creation. It is just like the case of day and night; though both form an integral part of life on earth but they can't exist simultaneously—for if it is day then there cannot be night, and if it is night then daylight is out of the picture. It's a natural phenomenon. So, while the Gods represent all that is good, righteous, noble, holy and auspicious in this world, the Demons symbolize just the opposite—i.e. everything that stands for evil, sin and wickedness.

Coming specifically to the case of Ravana and his clan of demons, the special reason for his aggravated hate and spiked antagonism for the Gods, the Brahmins and the holy people attired like the hermits, the sages and the ascetics lie in the history of his previous life when he was king Pratapbhanu, the story which we have already read earlier in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 153—to Doha no. 176.

It was a person disguised as a 'hermit' who had cheated him and maneuvered things in such a wicked way that Pratapbhanu, who was otherwise a noble and righteous king, was cursed to become a demon with his entire family and subjects of his kingdom. Who cursed him? It were the 'Brahmins' who had cursed him, without verifying facts and without determining if he was actually at fault or not. Further, when these proud Brahmins learnt a little while later that the king had no role to play in the circumstances that led them to curse him, they did not make any effort to amend their curse or reduce its intensity so that some soothing balm could be applied over the severe harm that was caused to Pratapbhanu due to the unjust curse that they had so hastily cast upon him. Say, if they could be in such a hurry to give a curse of condemnation on an innocent person, albeit out of misunderstanding or misinformation, why couldn't they ameliorate the suffering of the accursed by giving him a boon to counter the pain and injury caused by the unmerited curse?

Then come the role of the 'Gods'. Though it is true that they had informed the Brahmins that the curse which they had cast on king Pratapbhanu was unjust and unwarranted as the king was at no fault, but the Gods could have told this fact to the Brahmins earlier also—at the time when there was an invisible voice from the sky warning the Brahmins that meat had been mixed in their food, that had made them so angry that they cursed the king to become a mean-eating demon—so that the Brahmins would not have become angry at the king, but instead would have cursed the wicked hermit and his equally wicked friend, the demon, who actually were behind the whole conspiracy.

These developments had an immense psychological impact on Pratapbhanu which shook him to the core, and he determined to teach, when the proper time comes, all these three categories—the Brahmins, the Gods, and all those who were attired as hermits, ascetics and sages—a bitter lesson which they will remember for countless generations to come!

So once Pratapbhanu's soul entered the body of a demon to become Ravana, and Ravana acquired boons of invincibility and unparalleled strength from the creator Brahma, he went ahead with his 'teaching' project with unbridled vehemence and excessive wrath known only to a person who seeks retribution with a vengeance as he feels that some great injustice had suddenly been heaped upon him at a time when he had no wherewithal to protect himself, nor had he been given a chance to stand trial and explain himself.

Ravana's actions and deeds are reminiscent of a volcano suppressed over a long period of time, and then it suddenly bursts forth with a force of intense fury when it finds a crevice or a vent on the surface of the earth to pour out scorching lava that can wipe out entire civilisations, reduce earth to a barren landscape of lifeless rocks, and also boil the cold water of the ocean to where it flows in streams that are bubbling hot like oil spluttering on a pan over the fire place. Like this lava, there was no stopping of Ravana!]

दो०. छुधा छीन बलहीन सुर सहजेहिं मिलिहहिं आइ । तब मारिहउँ कि छाड़िहउँ भली भाँति अपनाइ ॥ १८१ ॥

dōhā.

chudhā chīna balahīna sura sahajēhim milihahim ā'i.
taba māriha'um' ki chāḍiha'um' bhalī bhāmṭi apanā'i. 181.

When the Gods would have sufficiently starved, they will become weak and famished. So sooner or later they will come to us (to surrender and beg for mercy); at that time I will either slay them or spare them after fully subjugating them and ensuring their loyalty and allegiance to me. (Doha no. 181)

चौ०. मेघनाद कहँ पुनि हँकरावा । दीन्ही सिख बलु बयरु बड़ावा ॥ १ ॥
जे सुर समर धीर बलवाना । जिन्ह कें लरिबे कर अभिमाना ॥ २ ॥
तिन्हहि जीति रन आनेसु बाँधी । उठि सुत पितु अनुसासन काँधी ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

mēghanāda kahum' puni ham'karāvā. dīnhī sikha balu bayaru barhāvā. 1.
jē sura samara dhīra balavānā. jinha kēm laribē kara abhimānā. 2.
tinhabi jīti rana ānēsu bām'dhī. uṭhi suta pitu anusāsana kām'dhī. 3.

He (Ravana) summoned Meghnad (his son), encouraging and motivating him by praising his abilities, valour and strength. Then Ravana advised his son [1], 'All those Gods who pride themselves as being steady and invincible in battle, who are proud of their strength and courage and privileges [2], you must go and defeat them in the battle-field, and then having conquered them and crushed their pride, you must tie them up and bring them here in captivity as trophies of war.'

When his son heard these instructions of his father, he got up immediately to carry them out outright with diligence and vehemence [3]. (1-3)

एहि बिधि सबही अग्या दीन्ही । आपुनु चलेउ गदा कर लीन्ही ॥ ४ ॥ चलत दसानन डोलति अवनी । गर्जत गर्भ स्रवहिं सुर रवनी ॥ ५ ॥ ēhi bidhi sabahī agyā dīnhī. āpunu calē'u gadā kara līnhī. 4.

calata dasānana ḍōlati avanī. garjata garbha sravahim sura ravanī. 5.

In this way, after having given appropriate instructions to everyone (i.e. to all his family members, all his commanders, as well as the countless other chiefs of the demon race), Ravana himself got up with a formidable mace in his hand. (4)

When the ten-headed Ravana stoutly set out on his mission of conquest of the world, the whole earth shook under his commanding feet (even as he stomped and stamped angrily on the earth while moving ahead briskly to seek and destroy any opposition that he may encounter on the way).

When he roared, yelled and thundered, those spouses of the Gods in the heaven who happened to be pregnant at the time, they miscarried¹. (5)

[Note—¹A similar thing is reported when Hanuman launched himself, with a great sound of thunder and blast in the skies of Lanka, when he was on his way back to the other side of the ocean where his companions were waiting for his arrival. At that time also, the pregnant women folks of the demons had aborted out of terror. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 28.]

रावन आवत सुनेउ सकोहा । देवन्ह तके मेरु गिरि खोहा ॥ ६ ॥
दिगपालन्ह के लोक सुहाए । सूने सकल दसानन पाए ॥ ७ ॥ पुनि पुनि सिंघनाद करि भारी । देइ देवतन्ह गारि पचारी ॥ ८ ॥ rāvana āvata sunē'u sakōhā. dēvanha takē mēru giri khōhā. 6.

digapālanha kē lōka suhā'ē. sūnē sakala dasānana pā'ē. 7.
puni puni singhanāda kari bhārī. dē'i dēvatanha gāri pacārī. 8.

When the Gods heard that Ravana is coming their way angrily, they were terrified out of their wits and scampered for cover, quickly hiding themselves in the many grottos (caves and catacombs) in Mt. Meru (the great mountain in the heaven on the summit of which the Gods had their capital). (6)

When the ten-headed Ravana reached the wonderfully charming and exceedingly pleasant capital city of the 'custodians of the world' (i.e. the God; "digapāla"), he found it abandoned. (7)

He repeatedly roared victoriously like a lion, profusely and vehemently abusing the Gods again and again, shaming them contemptuously, and challenging them for a duel.

[To wit, when Ravana found that the Gods had already run away before his arrival in the heaven, he felt very proud of his own strength and powers as now he was certain that none of them had the stomach to face him. To further humiliate the Gods, who were eternal enemies of the demons, and to demoralize them, to crush their self-respect, and to smother their dignity further, he abused them and taunted them in the most insinuating way he could devise.] (8)

रन मद मत फिरड़ जग धावा । प्रतिभट खोजत कतहुँ न पावा ॥ ९ ॥
 रबि ससि पवन बरुन धनधारी । अगिनि काल जम सब अधिकारी ॥ १० ॥ किंनर सिद्ध मनुज सुर नागा । हठि सबही के पंथहिं लागा ॥ ११ ॥ rana mada matta phira'i jaga dhāvā. pratibhaṭa khōjata katahum'na pāvā. 9.

 rabi sasi pavana baruna dhanadhārī. agini kāla jama saba adhikārī. 10.
 kinnara sid'dha manuja sura nāgā. haṭhi sabahī kē panthahim lāgā. 11.

He ran amok and went wild in this world, running briskly from one of its three corners to the other (i.e. to all the parts of the heaven, the earth and the nether world) to find anyone who would dare challenge him, as he was intensely itching for a fight and was maddened with a burning desire for a duel that would spill blood.

But to his dismay, and satisfaction at the same time¹, he did not find one single challenger to his might, anywhere.

[¹He was dismayed because his itch for a battle was irritating him, and he could not find someone against whom he could rub himself to ease this annoying irritation. At the same time he was immensely satisfied to discover that he was the mightiest and the strongest one in the whole creation, someone who has sent even the Gods, who otherwise are very proud of their own powers, authority and strength, shivering for cover out of fear of him, with their wives aborting their embryos! It surely must have granted sadistic comfort to Ravana.] (9)

All the prominent Gods such as the Sun, the Moon, Pawan (Wind-God), Varun (Water-God), Kuber (the treasurer of Gods), Agni (Fire-God), Kaal (God of Death and Time), Yamraj (the God of Hell)—all these higher authorities and senior custodians of their respective realms [10], as well as the Kinnars (heavenly dancers), the Siddhas (mystics), human beings, and all the other remaining junior or demi-gods, as well as the Nagas (serpents; the custodians of the nether and subterranean worlds)—Ravana pursued them all relentlessly, without exception [11]. (10-11)

ब्रह्मसृष्टि जहँ लगि तनुधारी । दसमुख बसबर्ती नर नारी ॥ १२ ॥
 आयसु करहिं सकल भयभीता । नवहिं आइ नित चरन बिनीता ॥ १३ ॥ brahmasṛṣṭi jaham'lagi tanudhārī. dasamukha basabartī nara nārī. 12.

 āyasu karahim sakala bhayabhītā. navahim ā'i nita carana binītā. 13.

In every corner of the Creator's creation, wherever there lived any living being, verily, every one of them was subjugated by Ravana, and all of them became obedient to him (for fear of their lives). (12)

All the living beings professed their allegiance to him; they obeyed him and came to pay their respects to him by bowing at his feet virtually on a daily basis (i.e. regularly and without fail). (13)

दो०. भुजबल बिस्व बस्य करि राखेसि कोउ न सुतंत्र । मंडलीक मनि रावन राज करइ निज मंत्र ॥ १८२ (क) ॥

dōhā.

bhujabala bisva basya kari rākhēsi kō'u na sutantra.
maṇḍalīka mani rāvana rāja kara'i nija mantra. 182 (a).

He (Ravana) conquered the whole creation, subjugating everyone and keeping them loyal under the might of his arms; none was left independent as everyone was bound in bonds of allegiance to him.

In this way, there was only one sovereign in the whole of the Creator's realm, and he was the ten-headed Ravana. He ruled with an iron hand; his word was the final law, and whatever he pronounced became the inviolable mandate for one and all. (Doha no. 182-a)

देव जच्छ गंधर्ब नर किंनर नाग कुमारि ।
जीति बरीं निज बाहुबल बहु सुंदर बर नारि ॥ १८२ (ख) ॥ dēva jaccha gandharba nara kinnara nāga kumāri.

jīti barīm nija bāhubala bahu sundara bara nāri. 182 (b).

He forcefully conquered, by the strength of his arms, and then married countless maidens belonging to the a wide genres of gods and humans, such as the many senior Gods, their junior counterparts such as the Yakshas (spirits), Gandharvas (musicians of heaven), humans (of all categories, from the humble man to the mighty kings), Kinnars (dancers of heaven), and Naagas (serpents and rulers of the subterranean and nether worlds).

Not only limiting himself to the maidens of the categories listed above, he forced his marriage upon countless other beautiful girls and virgins wherever he took fancy upon them. (Doha no. 182-b)

चौ०. इंद्रजीत सन जो कछु कहेऊ । सो सब जनु पहिलेहिं करि रहेऊ ॥ १ ॥
प्रथमहिं जिन्ह कहुँ आयसु दीन्हा । तिन्ह कर चरित सुनहु जो कीन्हा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

indrajīta sana jō kachu kahē'ū. sō saba janu pahilēhim kari rahē'ū. 1.
prathamahim jinha kahum'āyasu dīnhā. tinha kara carita sunahu jō kīnhā. 2.

Whatever he (Ravana) had instructed his son Indrajeet (Meghnad) to do¹, the latter had done it so quickly that it appeared that he had accomplished his mission even before his father had finished his own campaign. (1)

Now listen to the deeds done by those other demons who were also instructed alongside Meghnad in the beginning². (2)

[Note—¹Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 182.

²Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no.182.]

देखत भीमरूप सब पापी । निसिचर निकर देव परितापी ॥ ३ ॥
 करहिं उपद्रव असुर निकाया । नाना रूप धरहिं करि माया ॥ ४ ॥
 जेहि बिधि होइ धर्म निर्मूला । सो सब करहिं बेद प्रतिकूला ॥ ५ ॥
 जेहिं जेहिं देस धेनु द्विज पावहिं । नगर गाउँ पुर आगि लगावहिं ॥ ६ ॥ dēkhata bhīmarūpa saba pāpī. nisicara nikara dēva paritāpī. 3.

 karahim upadrava asura nikāyā. nānā rūpa dharahim kari māyā. 4.
 jēhi bidhi hō'i dharmā nirmūlā. sō saba karahim bēda pratikūlā. 5.
 jēhim jēhim dēsa dhēnu dvija pāvahim. nagara gā'um' pura āgi lagāvahim. 6.

All the demons, individually as well as in groups, were of colossus sizes, very sinful and exceedingly evil, and were inveterate tormentors of the Gods. (3)

Huge hordes of demons unleashed an uncontrolled reign of terror and mayhem all around. They were able to assume magical forms in the way they liked (to carry out their schemes). (4)

They did everything that was against the principles of Dharma (probity, propriety, righteousness and noble thought and conduct) and the Vedas (ancient scriptures) to ensure that they were completely ruined and utterly defiled. (5)

In whichever city, town or village they found Brahmins and cows (symbolizing domesticated animals), they relentlessly set the whole habitations on fire to burn everything down. [To wit, they behaved like an invading army of savages and fiends who kill and plunder and burn just for the sadistic pleasure of it.] (6)

सुभ आचरन कतहुँ नहिं होई । देव बिप्र गुरु मान न कोई ॥ ७ ॥ नहिं हरिभगति जग्य तप ग्याना । सपनेहुँ सुनिअ न बेद पुराना ॥ ८ ॥ subha ācarana katahum' nahim hō'i. dēva bipra guru māna na kō'i. 7.

 nahim haribhagati jagya tapa gyānā. sapanēhum' suni'a na bēda purānā. 8.

As a consequence, there was no morality, righteousness, propriety and probity left anywhere in the world; no one behaved rightly and all traces of goodness vanished.

No one paid heed to or respected the Gods, the Brahmins or their Guru (teachers; preceptors; guides), treating them with utter disrespect and neglect. (7)

There was no devotion for Lord Hari (the Supreme Being; the Lord God), and neither were there any Yagyas (fire sacrifices), Tapa (penance and austerity) or Gyan (spiritual wisdom and gnosis; learning and knowledge of the scriptures and other metaphysical branches of knowledge).

No one even dreamt of hearing any of the scriptures such as the Vedas and the Purans. (8)

[Note—There was a complete breakdown of law and order; goodness, righteousness and all other virtues evaporated, and these were replaced by sins, vices, evil and perversion that metaphorically turned the green earth into a barren desert.

There were two obvious reasons for this sorry state of affairs to come about. One of course was the direct action of the demons, and the other was an indirect affect. The people realized that if they had to survive and live in reasonable peace then they ought to do the demons' bidding, for otherwise these cruel and remorseless demons would not only kill them but also burn everything down. Hence, as a measure of survival the general populace did what pleased the demons, as in the present frame of time they were the realm's rulers. To do anything that Ravana and his followers did not want was inviting death and destruction voluntarily. Who in his right mind would want it?]

छं०. जप जोग बिरागा तप मख भागा श्रवन सुनइ दससीसा । १ ।
 आपुनु उठि धावइ रहै न पावइ धरि सब घालइ खीसा ॥ २ ॥
 अस भ्रष्ट अचारा भा संसारा धर्म सुनिअ नहिं काना । ३ । तेहि बहुबिधि त्रासइ देस निकासइ जो कह बेद पुराना ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

japa jōga birāgā tapa makha bhāgā śravana suna'i dasasisā. 1.
 āpunu uṭhi dhāva'i rahai na pāva'i dhari saba ghāla'i khīsā. 2.
 asa bhraṣṭa acārā bhā sansārā dharma suni'a nahim kānā. 3.
 tēhi bahubidhi trāsa'i dēsa nikāsa'i jō kaha bēda purānā. 4.

If the ten-headed Ravana happened to hear that someone was engaged in doing Japa (repetition of Mantras and Lord God's holy name), Yoga (meditation, contemplation), Vairagya (renunciation), Tapa (penance and austerity), or Yagya (fire sacrifice) and offering oblations to the Gods during the process—he would get up instantly himself, rush to that place, and lay to waste everything around, killing or arresting all those who were engaged in these religious activities, and generally plundering the place. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

In this way, the whole world was rife with widespread evil and sinful deeds; no one bothered to hear anything pertaining to Dharma (righteousness, goodness, probity and propriety).

If anyone said or heard the scriptures, such as the Vedas and the Purans, he (Ravana) would terrorize him in many ways, and forced him out of his country (i.e. snatched his home and sent him to the wilderness to suffer and die). (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

सो०. बरनि न जाइ अनीति घोर निसाचर जो करहिं ।

हिंसा पर अति प्रीति तिन्ह के पापहि कवनि मिति ॥ १८३ ॥

sōraṭhā.

barani na jā'i anīti ghōra nisācara jō karahim.
hinsā para ati prīti tinha kē pāpahi kavani miti. 183.

Indeed, it is not possible to describe the extent and intensity of sins and evil deeds that the demons were recklessly perpetrating in this world.

Verily, those who have no morality and sense of propriety worth the name left in them, those who have no conscience left in them at all, say what is the use of talking about the extent of decadence and degradation to which they can fall, and the nadir of evilness and sinfulness to which they could stoop? [To wit, there is no limit or end to it.] (Sortha no. 183)

-----**-----

Part 1

Chapter 4: Gods and Mother Earth pray to Lord Vishnu to Save them from Ravana's Tyranny; And the Lord's Promise to them

In the previous Chapter no. 3 we have read how the demons led by their invincible king Ravana had spread a ferocious and vicious reign of excessive of terror and mayhem, horrifying the entire creation and causing havoc and torment all around. All good virtues were trampled underfoot, and everything that stood for evil, sin, vice, perversion, decadence and outright immorality took the front stage.

Beyond a certain limit everything is bad. When a certain threshold was crossed, when the things reached a nadir and became simply and absolutely intolerable, when the very existence was in question, then the Gods and Mother Earth decided to approach the Supreme Being to do something to save them from further horrors, grief, torments and humiliation, and to protect this creation from complete annihilation.

So the Lord promised them that he will come down to earth himself in the form of Lord Ram, and do what is necessary to eliminate the scourge of the evil Ravana and his clan of cruel, vicious and ferocious demons. On their part the Gods decided to help the Lord by coming down to the earth by assuming the forms of monkeys and bears, and then join the Lord in his campaign to eliminate the demons and free everyone of their fear.

In this Chapter no. 4 we shall read all about it from (i) Ram Charit Manas (section 4.1), and (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan (section 4.2).

Section 4.1:

Ram Charit Manas

When suffering became impossible to bear, and there was the fear of complete breakdown of law and order and annihilation of creation, the Gods, including Brahma the creator, and Mother Earth, all got together and contemplated upon the means by which they could approach Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord who is the protector of this creation. The Gods and Mother Earth sought Lord Vishnu, one of the Gods of the Trinity, as he is the Lord God who is responsible for taking care of the world and ensure its protection and welfare.

While they were huddled together and wondering what next to do and where to go to find Lord Vishnu, Lord Shiva came there, and he advised them to pray fervently and with full faith and sincerity right then and there, for they need not go anywhere at all in the search of the Lord because he, being omnipresent and immanent, is present even amongst their midst, and the only thing that would make him reveal himself to them in a visible form is their faith and prayer.

So the Gods and Mother Earth prayed to the Lord fervently, with the utmost sincerity and the greatest supplication that they could command. Lord Vishnu appeared and promised them all help; saying that he would personally come down to earth to tackle Ravana's problem. Then Brahma advised the Gods to help and serve the Lord by assuming the forms of monkeys and bears, with Brahma himself becoming the aged king of bears known by the name of Jamvant. And Lord Shiva did not wish to be left behind in this service, so he became Hanuman. Similarly, all other Gods assumed different forms as monkeys and bears, depending on their position in the hierarchy in the heaven, to serve and help Lord Vishnu.

This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

चौ०. बाढ़े खल बहु चोर जुआरा । जे लंपट परधन परदारा ॥ १ ॥
 मानहिं मातु पिता नहिं देवा । साधुन्ह सन करवावहिं सेवा ॥ २ ॥
 जिन्ह के यह आचरन भवानी । ते जानेहु निसिचर सब प्रानी ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

bāṛhē khala bahu cōra ju'ārā. jē lampāṭa paradhana paradārā. 1.
 mānahim mātu pitā nahim dēvā. sādhunha sana karavāvahim sēvā. 2.
 jinha kē yaha ācarana bhavānī. tē jānēhu nisicara saba prānī. 3.

During the period when the demons' had established sovereignty over the world and their power and authority were in the ascendance, there was an exponential increase in the number of villains and scoundrels who were unabashedly wicked, thieves and gamblers, and who greedily coveted the wealth and women of others. (1)

They paid no heed or showed respect to either their own parents or to the Gods; they made saintly people serve them like slaves or servants.

[To wit, these demons had no scruples or morality. They feared none, and treated all with utter disdain.] (2)

[Lord Shiva said to Parvati to whom he is narrating this story—] Oh Bhavani! All those who exhibit the traits briefly outlined in the foregoing verses¹ should be regarded as ‘demons’.

[To wit, even if the concerned creature is not in the physical form that is usually identified with an ugly, hideous, fearsome and horrifying form of a demon, even if the creature has a pleasant countenance and a attractive visage that seems sweet to the eye, but if that creature’s acts and deeds are anywhere close to the way demons have been described in these verses, then let it be known for sure that that particular creature is a demon in disguise.] (3)

[Note—¹The notorious character of demons, their despicable nature and the evil deeds that define them have been outlined briefly in the verses of Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1, 8 that precede Doha no. 181; (ii) from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 183—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 184.]

अतिसय देखि धर्म कै ग्लानी । परम सभित धरा अकुलानी ॥ ४ ॥

गिरि सरि सिंधु भार नहिं मोही । जस मोहि गरुअ एक परद्रोही ॥ ५ ॥

सकल धर्म देखइ बिपरीता । कहि न सकइ रावन भय भीता ॥ ६ ॥

atisaya dēkhi dharma kai glānī. parama sabhīta dharā akulānī. 4.
giri sari sindhu bhāra nahim mōhī. jasa mōhi garu'a ēka paradrōhī. 5.
sakala dharma dēkha'i biparītā. kahi na saka'i rāvana bhaya bhītā. 6.

When Mother Earth observed that there was an extreme decline of morality, ethics and righteousness, when she was alarmed at the level of decadence to which the society had stooped, and when all the parameters of Dharma (principles of righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety, nobility and goodness) were violated and trampled upon (by the demons and their followers), she felt sore affright and became extremely restless¹.

[¹The Earth was terrified as she did not know what to do and how to get rid of the scourge symbolized by the demons. She was agitated because she is like a ‘mother’ for this creation; for it is in the symbolic womb of the Earth that all living beings have their origin, and it is Earth that nourishes and sustains them all from their cradle to their grave. Even for the trees and the organisms low down in the hierarchy of creation, Earth is not only their dwelling place but also their sustainer and nourisher. So therefore, even as a mother feels extremely annoyed, sorry and agitated if her children go out of her hands to cause unwarranted and intolerable nuisance and mischief everywhere, when Mother Earth saw the kind of mayhem and chaos that the demons unleashed in this world, and utter disregard for any principles and scruples that they exhibited, creating extreme torment, suffering and hardship for the rest of the inhabitants of the Earth, she was gravely hurt and remorseful. Mother Earth could not cope with this sort of suffering any longer; the sinfulness and evilness and cruelty and horror that prevailed on her surface was unbearable for her. The demons were like a poisonous thorn stuck deep into her bosom, bleeding her, tormenting her and constantly rubbing salt over her sore wounds, day in and day out.] (4)

Mother Earth thought to herself, ‘I do not regard the mighty mountains, the great rivers and the endless ocean as any kind of weight on my self, and I do not feel inconvenienced or oppressed by them, but someone who is malevolent towards others, someone who torments and causes suffering and pain to others, is a weight that I can’t bear, for I feel suffocated by such creatures’ presence.’ (5)

Earth observed that all the principles of Dharma had been corrupted so much so that not even a trace of any of the principles of goodness, righteousness and probity remained in their primal form.

[The situation had become so serious and alarming that—] Everyone (i.e. even the sages and seers, the mystics and the gods et al) was so terrified of Ravana that no one dared speak a word (against him, nor raise any objection or opposition to his misdeeds). [To wit, the whole world was so terrified of Ravana’s wrath that they thought it better to keep quiet. Even the so-called keepers of Dharma, such as the sages, seers and the gods, too preferred to keep mum.] (6)

धेनु रूप धरि हृदयं बिचारी । गई तहाँ जहँ सुर मुनि झारी ॥ ७ ॥
निज संताप सुनाएसि रोई । काहू तें कछु काज न होई ॥ ८ ॥

dhēnu rūpa dhari hṛdayam̐ bicārī. gaī tahām̐ jaham̐ sura muni jhārī. 7.
nija santāpa sunā’ēsi rōī. kāhū tēm̐ kachu kāja na hōī. 8.

After contemplating over the matter a lot, Earth decided to assume the form of a cow. Then she went to a place where other great sages and the gods had already assembled¹. (7)

She wept bitterly and narrated her tale of woes. But no one had any solution or and answer for her predicaments; everyone, the great sages as well as the mighty gods, listened to Earth helplessly, and none could or would offer a solution to her (because they were in the same state of confusion and consternation as the Earth)². (8)

[Note—¹When Earth saw that she had no hope from anyone else because no one would stand up against Ravana and the demons to invite their cruel wrath, she decided to do something herself. So she assumed the form of a ‘cow’ and went to place where all the great sages and gods had got together in a huddle. They too were worried, and so they secretly assembled at some out-of-sight place at which the demons had yet not paid any attention. These sages and gods were discussing the same matter that had created so much consternation for the Earth, and it was of finding a way to get rid of this problem of the demons led by Ravana.

²Earth did not know that these powerful sages, seers and gods were as helpless as her. In fact, they had assembled at a place precisely for discussing this problem of Ravana, and how to find a way out it. So when she wept and sought their help, they kept quiet and pleaded helplessness. It has already been said that Ravana had forcefully subjugated sages and gods after getting boons from Brahma. Refer: (i) Doha no. 181 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it; (ii) Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-3, 6-13 that precede it; and (iii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 183.]

छं०. सुर मुनि गंधर्वा मिलि करि सर्वा गे बिरंचि के लोका । १ ।
 सँग गोतनुधारी भूमि बिचारी परम बिकल भय सोका ॥ २ ॥
 ब्रह्माँ सब जाना मन अनुमाना मोर कछू न बसाई । ३ ।
 जा करि तैं दासी सो अबिनासी हमरेउ तोर सहाई ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

sura muni gandharbā mili kari sarbā gē birañci kē lōkā. 1.
 samṅa gōtanudhārī bhūmi bicārī parama bikala bhaya sōkā. 2.
 brahmām̃ saba jānā mana anumānā mōra kachū na basā'ī. 3.
 jā kari taim̃ dāsī sō abināsī hamarē'u tōra sahā'ī. 4.

All those who had assembled to discuss the matter—such as the Gods, the learned Munis (sages) and the Gandharvas (demi-gods)—went together to the abode of Brahma, the creator. [The immediate matter that concerned them all was Ravana and his army of demons who had spread their atrocious rule of horror and grief which had made life hell for all living beings. The gods were representatives for all those who were suffering at the hands of the cruel and wicked demons, and they went to the Creator to seek his help and advice to find out a way of their predicament.] (Chanda line no. 1)

They were accompanied by earth which was extremely terrified, worried and sad; she was in the form of a 'cow'. (Chanda line no. 2)

When Brahma learnt everything about the gravity of the matter, he felt that the situation was beyond his ability and power to either mend or control; he was dismayed that he has to concede his helplessness in being able to render any help in this matter. (Chanda line no. 3)

[Brahma's attention was drawn specially to the pitiable condition of earth who was in the form of a cow. He felt extremely sorry and worried for her, but though he had great sympathy and empathy he was distressed that he could not help her in the least. However, being wise and elderly in creation, Brahma had great experience of similar situations from the past. Upon deep contemplation he felt that inspite of all odds there was still a ray of hope left. So he turned to earth and advised her as follows—]

Brahma advised earth, which was in the form of a cow, 'He who is immortal and eternal, and whom you serve as a maid (i.e. the Supreme Lord whose command you obey most faithfully)—well, that (merciful and gracious) Lord will surely be of help to you, as well as for us. [To wit therefore, let us all join hands to pray to that Lord and seek his blessing and intervention. I tell you all truly that it is the only feasible solution for our predicament.]' (Chanda line no. 4)

सो०. धरनि धरहि मन धीर कह बिरंचि हरिपद सुमिरु ।
 जानत जन की पीर प्रभु भंजिहि दारुन बिपति ॥ १८४ ॥
 sōraṭhā.

dharani dharahi mana dhīra kaha birañci haripada sumiru.
 jānata jana kī pīra prabhu bhanjīhi dārūna bipati. 184.

Brahma the creator (birañci) told earth, ‘Oh Earth! Have patience and courage; contemplate upon and remember the holy feet of Lord Hari (the Supreme Being; Lord Vishnu).

The gracious and merciful Lord understands the pain and grief in the heart of his devotees. So he will immediately take cognizance of your prayers and initiate steps to eliminate the very cause that is tormenting you so much and giving you such extreme misery.’ (Sortha no. 184)

[Note—It ought to be noted here that Brahma has addressed Mother Earth specifically, and makes no mention of others who were with her, such as the Gods, the sages and the Gandharvas. It clearly means that he was much moved by her pitiful condition. Since earth is the dwelling place of all living beings in this world, her miserable condition represented the horrors and torments faced by every single creature of Brahma’s creation.

Brahma is the ‘creator’ and the ‘grandfather’ of this creation, and he had himself assigned Mother Earth the duty to take care of the day-to-day sustenance of his creation. So it is but natural that when he saw Mother Earth, who is his own representative, coming to him in utter distress with her grievances and complain to him that his creation is being subjected to immense torture, he will be duty-bound to give her a special audience.

This episode also shows that the Creator is more concerned about the welfare and well-being of the humble subjects of his creation than he is for those who highly placed in the hierarchy of creation. To wit, Brahma is very worried about the suffering of ordinary creatures who live an ordinary life on earth, creatures who have no high contacts and who are not high-profile individuals like the gods, the sages and the gandharvas who had accompanied mother earth. Brahma knew very well that these gods, sages and gandharvas etc. are capable of taking care of themselves, but the poor creatures whom earth represents are absolutely helpless and hapless, and therefore they need special attention.

That is why Brahma paid special attention to the complaint of Mother Earth, and addressed her personally. Obviously all the Gods, Munis and Ghandharvas who were with Earth too heard what Brahma said, and everyone decided to jointly pray to the Supreme Being to intervene and save them from more horrors and sufferings.]

चौ०. बैठे सुर सब करहिं बिचारा । कहँ पाइअ प्रभु करिअ पुकारा ॥ १ ॥
 पुर बैकुंठ जान कह कोई । कोउ कह पयनिधि बस प्रभु सोई ॥ २ ॥
 जाके हृदयँ भगति जसि प्रीती । प्रभु तहँ प्रगट सदा तेहिं रीती ॥ ३ ॥

तेहिं समाज गिरिजा मैं रहेऊँ । अवसर पाइ बचन एक कहेऊँ ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

baiṭhē sura saba karahim bicārā. kaham̐ pā'i'a prabhu kari'a pukārā. 1.
pura baikunṭha jāna kaha kō'ī. kō'u kaha payanidhi basa prabhu sō'ī. 2.
jākē hṛdayam̐ bhagati jasi prīti. prabhu taham̐ pragaṭa sadā tēhim rīti. 3.
tēhim samāja girijā maim̐ rahē'ūm̐. avasara pā'i bacana ēka kahē'ūm̐. 4.

[Now the crucial thing was to find out where the Supreme Lord was, how to find him, so that a request can be made to him to save the world from the horrors of Ravana and his race of demons.]

All the Gods and others who were with them (i.e. the sages, the Gandharvas, Brahma the creator, Shiva the concluder etc.) sat down to ponder over the matter of how and where to find the Supreme Lord so that they can plead before him and request him for help. (1)

Someone in the assembly advised that the Lord resides in the heaven known as Vaikuntha so they must make haste to go there, while someone else said that the Lord lives in the middle of the celestial Ocean (called the “payanidhi”, literally the endless treasury of water, where Lord Vishnu reclines on the coiled body of Seshnath, the celestial serpent, as the latter floats on the surface of this vast ocean). (2)

The fact is that it is an established principle that the Lord always reveals himself in response to devotion and the extent of affection and faith that a devotee has in his heart.

[To wit, there is no need to go anywhere in search of the Supreme Being, for he is omnipresent and all-pervading. The only single requirement to make the Lord reveal himself is to have high level of devotion, affection and faith in him. The term ‘extent’ indicates that the greater is the intensity of devotion, affection and faith that the devotee has in his heart, the easier it is for him to make the Lord manifest himself.] (3)

[Lord Shiva, who was also present during the confabulation, told Parvati to whom he is narrating this episode—] “Listen Girija (Shiva’s consort)! I was also present in that assembly. When I found an opportunity, I spoke up and gave them an advice. (4)

हरि व्यापक सर्वत्र समाना । प्रेम तें प्रगट होहिं मैं जाना ॥ ५ ॥

देस काल दिसि बिदिसिहु माहीं । कहहु सो कहाँ जहाँ प्रभु नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥

अग जगमय सब रहित बिरागी । प्रेम तें प्रभु प्रगटइ जिमि आगी ॥ ७ ॥

मोर बचन सब के मन माना । साधु साधु करि ब्रह्म बखाना ॥ ८ ॥ hari byāpaka sarbatra samānā. prēma tēm pragaṭa hōhim maim̐ jānā. 5.

dēsa kāla disi bidisihu māhīm. kahahu sō kahām̐ jahām̐ prabhu nāhīm. 6.
aga jagamaya saba rahita birāgi. prēma tēm prabhu pragaṭa'i jimi āgi. 7.

mōra bacana saba kē mana mānā. sādhu sādhu kari brahma bakhānā. 8.

[Lord Shiva said—] I told them that Lord Hari (Vishnu) is omnipresent, immanent and all-pervading in this creation; he is present everywhere in an even manner. I (Shiva) know for certain (by my personal experience) that he reveals himself in response of the affection of his devotees. (5)

Tell me if there is a single place, time, direction and quarter of this creation where the Lord is not present. In all sooth and without gainsay, the Lord is present everywhere, at all times, and in every imaginable situation in this creation. (6)

The Lord pervades this creation from the within and the without, for he is revealed in the form of the animate as well as the inanimate components of this creation. In spite of this, he is separate and detached from this creation¹.

[¹This is the great paradox with the Supreme Being—that though on the one hand it is said that every single entity in this creation is a revelation of the Lord in its individual form, that the creation itself is an image of the Supreme Being who is also known as ‘Brahm’, yet on the other hand the Lord himself is distinct and different from any one or all the entities of creation taken together.]

The Lord manifests himself everywhere as if by magic if there is devotion and affection for him just fire that can be ignited with the firewood anywhere if the conditions are right².

[²The ‘fire element’ is inherently present in the firewood in a latent form, for it ordinarily remains invisible and dormant. When the right conditions prevail, such as when the firewood is vigorously rubbed and a little air is available, this hidden fire suddenly emerges in a visible form. Likewise, the Supreme Being is present in an invisible form everywhere in this creation. It simply requires devotion, faith and affection for the Lord to make him reveal himself instantly.]’ (7)

These words (advice) of mine were well-received by one and all. Brahma praised me and welcomed this advice by an applause, saying ‘well said, well said indeed’.” (8)

दो०. सुनि बिरंछि मन हरष तन पुलकि नयन बह नीर । अस्तुति करत जोरि कर सावधान मतिधीर ॥ १८५ ॥

dōhā.

suni birañci mana haraṣa tana pulaki nayana baha nīra.
astuti karata jōri kara sāvadhāna matidhīra. 185.

When Brahma the creator heard these words (of Lord Shiva), he felt exhilarated in his heart; his body was thrilled and tears began to roll down from his eyes.

Then he joined his hands in a prayerful mode, stabilized his mind, and began to offer his sincere prayers to the Lord carefully.

छं०. जय जय सुरनायक जन सुखदायक प्रनतपाल भगवंता । १ ।
गो द्विज हितकारी जय असुरारी सिंधुसुता प्रिय कंता ॥ २ ॥

पालन सुर धरनी अद्भुत करनी मरम न जानइ कोई । ३ । जो सहज कृपाला दीनदयाला करउ अनुग्रह सोई ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jaya jaya suranāyaka jana sukhadāyaka pranatapāla bhagavantā. 1.
gō dvija hitakārī jaya asurārī sindhusutā priya kantā. 2.
pālana sura dharanī adbhuta karanī marama na jāna'i kō'i. 3.
jō sahaja kṛpālā dīnadayālā kara'u anugraha sō'i. 4.

[Brahma offered his prayers to the Supreme Being with these words—]

‘Glory to the Supreme Lord¹ who is the Lord of all the Gods, who gives joy and comfort to his devotees, and who grants unquestioned protection to all those who come to him to surrender and seek refuge! Glory to him; glory to such a Supreme Being! (Chanda line no. 1)

[¹In the next stanza we will read that the Supreme Being to whom this prayer is being offered is Lord Vishnu, the husband of Laxmi—“sindhusutā priya kantā”.]

You are a benevolent benefactor of the cows (representing all humble and harmless creatures), the Brahmins (representing the elderly, learned and wise ones in the society).

Glory to the Lord who is an enemy of the demons (representing the evil, sinful, cruel and dark forces of creation), and who is the dear husband of the daughter-of-the-ocean (i.e. goddess Laxmi)! [This last statement means that the ‘Lord’ and the ‘Supreme Being’ to whom Brahma and the other Gods are offering their prayers is Lord Vishnu as he is the consort of Laxmi, the goddess of wealth and prosperity. She is called the ‘daughter-of-the-ocean’ because she had her origin in the ocean when it was being churned by the Gods and the Demons in search of Amrit, the ambrosia of immortality.] (Chanda line no. 2)

You are the sustainer and the protector of the gods and the earth. No one can know your mysteries or the secret behind your wonderful maverick deeds. [To wit, the ways of the Lord are beyond the understanding of ordinary mortals. Nay, even the gods fail to understand them.] (Chanda line no. 3)

Oh Lord, who by his very nature and habit most gracious, compassionate and benevolent, please be kind upon us (the gods and the earth with all its inhabitants). [Oh Lord, we are suffering horribly under the atrocities unleashed by Ravana and his army of demons. So we most humbly plead with you to save us and grant us your protection.] (Chanda line no. 4)

जय जय अबिनासी सब घट बासी व्यापक परमानंदा । ५ ।
अबिगत गोतीतं चरित पुनीतं मायारहित मुकुंदा ॥ ६ ॥
जेहि लागि बिरागी अति अनुरागी बिगतमोह मुनिबृंदा । ७ । निसि बासर ध्यावहिं गुन गन गावहिं जयति सच्चिदानंदा ॥ ८ ॥ jaya jaya abināsī saba ghaṭa bāsī byāpaka paramānandā. 5.

 abigata gōtītaṁ carita punītaṁ māyārahita mukundā. 6.
 jēhi lāgi birāgī ati anurāgī bigatamōha munibrndā. 7.
 nisi bāsara dhyāvahim̐ guna gana gāvahim̐ jayati saccidānandā. 8.

Glory to the Lord who is imperishable and eternal, who dwells in the inner-self of all living beings in the form of their Atma (which is pure consciousness), who is all-pervading, omnipresent and immanent, and who is an embodiment of supreme bliss, felicity and beatitude. (Chanda line no. 5)

The Lord is beyond comprehension; no one knows or understands either who he is or his mysterious ways. He is beyond the perception or reach of the sense organs¹ (and none of these sense organs of perception are able to perceive anything about the Lord).

The deeds and actions as well as the stories that are related to his different manifestations—all of them are holy and divine.

The Lord is free from all Maya (delusions and its affect), and so he is the one who grants the nectar of immortal bliss and happiness².

[¹There are five gross organs of perception in the body: ears that hear, eyes that see, tongue that tastes, skin that feels, and nose that smells. A person knows anything about the world with the help of one or more of these organs. This stanza affirms that the Supreme Being cannot be understood by employing any of these gross instruments. Besides these five gross organs of perception, there is the mind and the intellect which also act as organs of perception, but at a subtler level. The Lord is beyond their reach too.

²This stanza clearly means that ‘Maya’, or the different kinds of worldly delusions and infatuations, is the root cause of all sorts of unhappiness and sorrow that torment a living being. Since the Lord is unaffected by Maya, he is therefore an eternal source of happiness and bliss.] (Chanda line no. 6)

It is for the love of the Lord and his sake that those who wise and enlightened renounce the gross world and its material temptations, and then they sincerely strive to develop deep and unwavering devotion and affection for him within their heart. (Chanda line no. 7)

Such wise and enlightened sages, hermits and ascetics pursue the Lord; they always think of him, remember him, constantly contemplate and meditate upon him, and sing his glories and invoke his divine name, day and night.

Glory to this honourable and great Lord who is Truth and eternal Consciousness personified, and who is truly an embodiment of infinite bliss, felicity and beatitude. (Chanda line no. 8)

जेहिं सृष्टि उपाई त्रिबिध बनाई संग सहाय न दूजा । ९ ।
 सो करउ अघारी चित हमारी जानिअ भगति न पूजा ॥ १० ॥
 जो भव भय भंजन मुनि मन रंजन गंजन बिपति बरूथा । ११ ।
 मन बच क्रम बानी छाड़ि सयानी सरन सकल सुर जूथा ॥ १२ ॥

jēhiṃ sṛṣṭi upā'ī tribidha banā'ī saṅga sahāya na dūjā. 9.
 sō kara'u aghārī cinta hamārī jāni'a bhagati na pūjā. 10.
 jō bhava bhaya bhañjana muni mana rañjana gañjana bipati barūthā. 11.
 mana baca krama bānī chāḍi sayānī sarana sakala sura jūthā. 12.

The Supreme Lord who created this three dimensional world¹ all by himself, without anyone to help him at all [line no. 9] ---

---Let this Lord, who is a destroyer of sins and evil forces of creation, also listen to our humble prayers offered with the greatest supplication by us, and relieve us of all our worries and fears (for we are humble and we do not even know how to offer worship or prayers to him in the proper way; so let the Lord forgive us for our incompetence in the manner in which we offer this prayer to him) [line no. 10]². (Chanda line nos. 9-10)

[¹This creation is said to be of 'three dimensions' because it has three basic types of Gunas or qualities in it: viz. the Sata Guna, the Raja Guna and the Tama Guna. The 'Sata Guna' represents the positive qualities of virtuousness, righteousness and goodness in their best forms; the 'Tama Guna' is the opposite of the Sata Guna and represents everything that is dark, negative, evil and sinful; the 'Raja Guna' stands for those qualities that are combinations of these two, and therefore the median quality that acts as a balancing force. In some way or the other, these three qualities are represented by the three basic types of inhabitants of this world—the 'gods' and the 'demons' at the two extremities, and the 'humans' somewhere in the middle.

²Brahma wishes to request the Supreme Lord that he should not pay any attention to the words which are being used in the prayer that the former is saying, for no one is so skilled that he can boast of saying a prayer that is perfect and of the highest mark. It pleases the Lord to be humble and unpretentious before him, and so even Brahma—who had created the Vedas, the primary scriptures, and as such cannot be regarded as unlettered or unskilled—decided to become humble and unpretentious before the Supreme Being.]

The Supreme Lord who destroys the fetters represented by this gross mortal world and its many delusions and miseries, the Lord who provides joy and bliss to the Mana (mind and heart) of sages, seers and hermits, the Lord who destroys troubles and ill-fortunes [line no. 11]---

---We the Gods have come to take shelter in the holy feet of such a Lord with all humility in our command, without any pretension or right to privileges of any kind in any of our thoughts, words and deeds (i.e. we are extremely honest in our prayers of supplication and in our request for protection from the Lord) [line no. 12]. (Chanda line nos. 11-12)'

सारद श्रुति सेषा रिषय असेषा जा कहुँ कोड नहिं जाना । १३ ।
 जेहि दीन पिआरे बेद पुकारे द्रवड सो श्रीभगवाना ॥ १४ ॥
 भव बारिधि मंदर सब बिधि सुंदर गुनमंदिर सुखपुंजा । १५ ।
 मुनि सिद्ध सकल सुर परम भयातुर नमत नाथ पद कंजा ॥ १६ ॥ sārada śruti sēṣā riṣaya asēṣā jā kahum'kō'u nahim jānā. 13.

 jēhi dīna pi'ārē bēda pukārē drava'u sō śrībhagavānā. 14.

bhava bāridhi mandara saba bidhi sundara gunamandira sukhapunjā. 15.
muni sid'dha sakala sura parama bhayātura namata nātha pada kanjā. 16.

No one has ever known or understood the mysteries of the Lord—not even Sarada (goddess Saraswati who is the patron of knowledge, wisdom and intelligence), the Srutis (Vedas, the most ancient scriptures that are repositories of knowledge), Seshnath (the legendary serpent-god who is said to be very close to Lord Vishnu, and who has thousand hoods symbolizing someone who has a thousand-fold knowledge of any thing), the Rishsis (great sages and seers) and the Ashesas (the remaining sages such as the mystics, hermits, ascetics etc.) are able to know the Lord. (Chanda line no. 13)

Oh the Supreme God whom the Vedas proclaim as the one who loves all those who are humble, distressed, downtrodden and lowly—please be kind to have pity on us and take merciful cognizance of our precarious situation. (Chanda line no. 14)

You are metaphorically like the great Mt. Mandrachal¹ for the purpose of overcoming the fear arising out of this vast ocean-like mortal world of transmigration; you are charming and appealing in all possible ways; you are a treasure-trove of all the excellent virtues and the best of qualities; and you are a fountain-head of eternal bliss, joy and peace.

[¹Mt. Mandrachal was used as a churning rod by the Gods and the Demons to churn the celestial ocean in the beginning of creation to produce the ambrosia of immortality. This ambrosia was called 'Amrit', and it removed the fear of death. This metaphor is used to imply that the Lord can remove all sorts of fears that the creature has in this mortal world.] (Chanda line no. 15)

All of us—all the sages and seers and hermits, all the mystics as well as the gods who are extremely terrified and sore with fright—bow and surrender ourselves at your holy lotus-like feet².

[²Though the gods and the sages have not expressly said that they are terrified of Ravana and are being tormented by the demons for which purpose they have come to the Supreme Being to ask him to protect them from this scourge and eliminate the demons, but it is understood and expected from the Lord that he knows everything even without telling him clearly. So the gods and sages thought it wiser and more prudent to limit themselves to just offering their obeisance and prayers, and leave the rest of the things to the Supreme Being himself.

Another reason for not specifically mentioning Ravana and the demons was to avoid provoking them openly because there were chances that some spy might be watching them and he would go and report everything to Ravana. If that happens then Ravana would either kill all of them outright for complaining against him, or at least make life a burning hell for them by hounding them and subjecting them to endless tortures even before the Supreme Being can find time to put into effect his promises. So the gods and sages decided to maintain secrecy and show discretion while offering their prayers.] (Chanda line no. 16)

दो०. जानि सभय सुरभूमि सुनि बचन समेत सनेह । गगनगिरा गंभीर भङ्ग हरनि सोक संदेह ॥ १८६ ॥

dōhā.

jāni sabhaya surabhūmi suni bacana samēta sanēha.
gaganagirā gambhīra bha'i harani sōka sandēha. 186.

Realising that the Gods and the Earth were sore affright, terrorized and extremely distressed, and hearing their prayerful entreaties made with the greatest of affection and reverence, an invisible Being spoke from the sky (heaven) in a deep-sounding and resonating voice that removed their grief, worries and doubts. (Doha no. 186)

[Note—This was the Supreme Being known as ‘Brahm’ speaking himself—refer Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 187 herein below.

The Lord’s voice was grave, deep and resounding like the distant rumble of thunder, and as it reverberated all over the place it sent cheers in the rank of the gods and made earth smile in joy. It is because when the gods and the earth heard this voice they felt reassured as it clearly indicated that their prayers have been answered by the Supreme Lord, and the Lord wants to be responsive to their pleas. This was half battle won for the gods and the earth, for they were sure that if the Lord has chosen to respond to them and reply to their prayers then he will also make sure that their prayers are answered in an adequate way, that their requests are satisfactorily attended to, and they don’t have to go empty-handed and rejected from his doorstep.]

चौ०. जनि डरपहु मुनि सिद्ध सुरेसा । तुम्हहि लागि धरिहउँ नर बेसा ॥ १ ॥
अंसन्ह सहित मनुज अवतारा । लेहउँ दिनकर बंस उदारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jani ḍarapahu muni sid'dha surēsā. tumhahi lāgi dhariha'um̃ nara bēsā. 1.
ansanha sahita manuja avatārā. lēha'um̃ dinakara bansa udārā. 2.

[The unknown voice of in the sky, which was actually the Supreme Lord speaking, said in reassuring words—] ‘Oh sages, mystics and gods¹, don’t be afraid at all. I shall assume a human form for your sake. (1)

I shall take birth myself as a human being, along with my fractions that would also manifest themselves alongside me (ansanha sahita)², in the glorious Solar Race (of Ayodhya) that is renowned for its liberal ways in magnanimity, benevolence, charity and graciousness (dinakara bansa udārā)³. (2)

[Note—¹The Lord has addressed the sages, the mystics and the then the gods in that order. It is because this is the order in which these exalted ones had mentioned themselves to the Supreme Lord while concluding their prayers—refer: Chanda line no. 16 herein above.

²When the Lord says that he will come down to earth accompanied by his fractional parts it simply means that he will be accompanied by his assistants or close associates to help him fulfill the promises he has made to the gods, sages and earth.

Had the Lord so wished he could have come alone and slay the demons and their leader Ravana by his mere wish, for there is nothing in this creation which is impossible for him or beyond his abilities, but that would have gone against the boons granted to Ravana by Brahma—that he would only be killed at the hands of a human being. In deference to this boon the Lord was obliged to act like an ordinary human being in order to keep the sanctity of Brahma’s words, and so he needed assistance. He could not act like some super-man having some super-natural power to slay Ravana.

It is the way of the world that even the mightiest and ablest of kings need assistance of many ministers and administrators to run his kingdom, as well as commanders and a huge garrison of soldiers to maintain peace and order in his kingdom; the king is not a magician who can do things by swinging a magic wand! So therefore, if the Lord were to act like a human being in order to slay Ravana and keep his words to the gods etc. then he had to refrain from doing anything that is beyond any man to do.

Besides this, it was imperative for the Supreme Being to maintain top secrecy in putting his plans into practice lest Ravana would get a hint and quickly undo everything before the Lord can even initiate any action. Hence, the Lord had to act perfectly like an ordinary human being, not giving any single hint about who he actually was. When we read the story of the Ramayana we will realize that the Lord had taken strict precautions in this matter—never for even once did he let anyone know that he was the Supreme Being and possesses supernatural powers.

That said, the Supreme Being had to consciously delegate some of his own powers and authority to entities that appeared to be separate and distinct from him, but were actually the Lord’s own fractional forms that were his own image, in order to play his role as a human to perfection. It was done with the express purpose to maintain utmost secrecy of the project. It was done so as to make it appear, at least on the surface that the Lord’s powers and abilities were limited like an ordinary man, and that his ultimate slaying of Ravana and elimination of the cruel demons were the natural culmination of a long sequence of events that started when Lord Ram was sent to the forest due to family intrigue over the crown of the kingdom, and which went on to the point when Sita, Ram’s wife, was kidnapped by Ravana, compelling Lord Ram to go to Lanka in an effort to free his wife, which is something any other honourable man would have done himself, and which led to the fierce war of Lanka and the slaying of Ravana and other cruel demons who had been tormenting the gods, sages and earth.

So now, the question arises ‘who were these fractional forms of the Supreme Being who had accompanied him when he manifested himself as a human being’?

This question can be answered at two levels, viz. the metaphysical and the mythological. We shall briefly glance at both of them.

At the time creation, when Brahm, the personified form of the cosmic super Consciousness, decided to initiate the process of creation, it metamorphosed into three cosmic forms to carry out this gigantic task smoothly. It was the first instance of the principle of ‘delegation of authority’ when some Superior Authority decides to do something great and extraordinary, and in order to attain success in this enterprise this Authority divides the main task into its smaller components, assigning one component to one of the many junior authorities that are appointed by it to specifically carry out a specific job.

This mechanism helped Brahm to regulate the entire process and also maintain self-discipline because though the three forms into which Brahm transformed itself were in fact the same Brahm operating at different levels and carrying out different tasks. It helped Brahm to easily maintain control over the developments, as for all practical purposes these three forms were distinct from Brahm and independent Authorities in their own right, and so a close watch could be kept on their functioning. In case one of these forms failed to function properly then remedial methods could be initiated, leaving the others to carry out their duties in the normal way.

Since the three primary forms into which the supreme Brahm metamorphosed himself, albeit different and distinct from Brahm, were however the same Supreme Being operating through these forms, and so therefore it is said that these three forms or Authorities of creation were the ‘fractional parts’ of Brahm.

And who were these three Authorities? The stupendous task of ‘creation of this world’ had three basic steps—viz. first was creation, then came its sustenance and protection, and finally its conclusion. The form of Brahm responsible for the first step, i.e. ‘creation’, was called Brahma, the creator. The form of Brahm responsible for the second step, i.e. ‘sustenance and protection of the creation’, was called Vishnu, the sustainer and protector. And finally, the form of Brahm responsible for the third step, i.e. ‘conclusion of creation’, was called Shiva, the concluder. Thus came into being the ‘Trinity of Gods’.

The Supreme Being now wished to devise a device by which this creation could be created from nothing, because in the beginning there was nothing but pure cosmic Consciousness. Brahm had to ‘imagine’ in his mind that there is something called ‘creation’, because actually there was nothing. Hence the Upanishads say that ‘this world is merely an image, that it is an imagination of the mind’.

To wit, the supreme Brahm employed his ‘Shakti’, or his dynamic power, to create an imaginary thing in order to give shape to this world. This Shakti was called ‘Maya’, meaning delusion, as it created an illusion of reality when there was none!

The supreme Brahm used this Maya for another reason too. He wished his creation to be self-sustaining and keep on rolling on its own account, without his day-to-day role. So he created ‘Maya’ and its associated components. What then do stand for? They represent worldly delusions, ignorance, temptations, infatuations, desires, greed, and all other such negativities that are associated with this gross mundane world. This ensured that the creatures that would be produced in the course of evolvment of creation would be able to keep themselves so engrossed in a make-belief world in which that they would procreate themselves in the erroneous belief that they are masters of their own destiny and are the ones who can create, sustain and destroy at their own free will—till of course the time comes when the Supreme Authority decides that his creation has become a monster, a Frankenstein, at which time he assumes the role of the ‘concluder’ to bring an end to the grand drama.

So the fourth component that was also a fraction of Brahm was ‘Maya Shakti’, the dynamic power to create delusions at the cosmic level, because without this Shakti nothing could be achieved.

With this primary background understanding we conclude that when Brahm, the Supreme Being, assured the gods, the sages and the earth that he would come to help them with his fractions to assist him, he meant that he himself would assume the form of Lord Ram, the one who would play the main role in the elimination of Ravana and the demons, and his other subtle forms such as Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva along with Maya too would come in different forms to assist him.

So therefore it was the Supreme Being known as Brahm who became Lord Ram. He had three brothers—Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan. ‘Bharat’ was the one who took care of the welfare of the world, and therefore he stood for Lord Vishnu; ‘Laxman’ was the one who was an embodiment of all excellent virtues, and so he stood for Lord Shiva, and like Shiva, Laxman was also very dear to Lord Ram; and ‘Shatrughan’ was a destroyer of enemies symbolizing ignorance and delusions, and since knowledge helps to eliminate these negative factors, he stood for Brahma, the creator of the Vedas. {Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 193, and (ii) Doha no. 197 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 40-41.

Then there was Sita, the wife of Lord Ram. She was the other assistant of the Lord and who played a pivotal role in helping the Lord fulfill his divine mission. It was Sita’s abduction by Ravana which became the excuse for Lord Ram to eliminate Ravana. Who then was she? From the metaphysical perspective she represented Maya, the cosmic Shakti that enabled Brahm to carry out his wishes as outlined herein above.

The supreme Brahm succeeded in his mission of creation with the help of his Maya Shakti, and in a similar way his human incarnation Lord Ram succeeded in his mission of eliminating Ravana by employing the services of Sita—because Sita had played a dynamic and central role in the fulfillment of this mission, as it was Sita’s abduction by Ravana that set in motion a chain of events that ended with his slaying by Lord Ram.

There is another view about the form in which the Supreme Being revealed himself along with his fractional parts as indicated in this verse. According to Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 55-58, (a) Lord Vishnu, the sustainer and protector of this creation, became Lord Ram; (b) the Seshnath, who is the celestial serpent on whose coiled body Vishnu reclines on the surface of the primordial ocean and who supports the earth on his thousand hoods, became Laxman; (c) Vishnu’s weapon called Chakra, the serrated discus he hold, became Bharat; and (d) Vishnu’s conch became Shatrughan. Meanwhile, ‘earth’ herself became Sita—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, (a) Baal Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 58-72; and (b) Uttar Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 41-44.

³The Solar Race of Ayodhya is honoured as being very charitable and liberal because it had countless kings who became famous for their graciousness and merciful disposition as well as for liberal attitude towards charity, magnanimity and benevolence.

Lord Ram taking birth in the ‘Sun’ race is a metaphoric way of saying that the Lord’s glories and virtues were as splendid and radiant as the sun itself. It also means that even as the sun removes all darkness by its mere presence, the advent of Lord Ram removed all darkness symbolized by the wicked, evil and sinful forces in this creation that the demons represented. Even as sunrise immediately dispels fear of ghosts and phantoms that lurk in the darkness of the night, the presence of Lord Ram in this world eliminated all the fear from the dark forces that create delusions, ignorance and all other such negative factors that cause immense horror, grief, misery and consternation in the mind and heart of creatures of this world.]

कस्यप अदिति महातप कीन्हा । तिन्ह कहँ मैं पूरब बर दीन्हा ॥ ३ ॥

ते दसरथ कौसल्या रूपा । कोसलपुरीं प्रगट नरभूपा ॥ ४ ॥

तिन्ह कें गृह अवतरिहउँ जाई । रघुकुल तिलक सो चारिउ भाई ॥ ५ ॥ kasyapa aditi mahātapa kīnhā. tinha kahum̃ mair̃m pūraba bara dīnhā. 3.

 tē dasaratha kausalyā rūpā. kōsalapurim̃ pragāṭa narabhūpā. 4.
 tinha kēm̃ gr̃ha avatariha'um̃ jā'ī. raghukula tilaka sō cāri'u bhā'ī. 5.

Sage Kashyap and his wife Aditi had done severe Tapa (penance and austerity) in some ancient time, and at that time I had already given them a word to become their son¹. (3)

They (Kashyap and Aditi) have appeared as king Dasrath and his queen Kaushalya in the kingdom of 'Kaushal Puri' (Ayodhya). (4)

I shall go and take birth in their royal household in the form of his four sons who would be the glory of the race of king Raghu² (5)

[Note—¹It ought to be remembered here that the wheel of creation continues to rotate in a cyclic form and in a rhythmic manner. The measurement of time at the cosmic scale is mind-boggling. It would suffice for our purpose here to say that in every cycle of creation there is a manifestation of Lord Ram, and in each generation there is a unique reason for it. This fact is reiterated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 122.

It is believed that in three of these cycles—each being called a 'Kalpa' and each divided into four divisions known as Yugas, viz. the Sata (which was the first era), the Treta (in which Lord Ram was born), the Dwapar (in which Kishna was born) and Kali Yugas (the present era)—Lord Vishnu had blessed sage Kashyap and his wife Aditi that he would assume the form of their sons, while in the fourth Kalpa he blessed Manu and Satrupa.

The Lord here refers to that Kalpa in which sage Kashyap lived (as clearly indicated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 123), while in another Kalpa he manifested due to the boon he had given to Manu and Satrupa (as narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 142—to Doha no. 152).

²Earlier it was said that the Lord took birth in the Solar Race, and now it is said that he took birth in the Raghu Race. The idea is that originally this race descended from the Sun God, and hence got its name. But in due course and with the passage of time a great king by the name of Raghu was born in it; this particular king was so great and glorious and his rule so magnificent that the world henceforth began to identify the Solar Race after the name of this king in order to honour his memory and name. So it came to be that the Solar Race became the Race of king Raghu, or the 'Raghu-Race'.

The four sons of king Dasrath were Lord Ram, and his three brothers Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan.]

नारद बचन सत्य सब करिहउँ । परम सक्ति समेत अवतरिहउँ ॥ ६ ॥
 हरिहउँ सकल भूमि गरुआई । निर्भय होहु देव समुदाई ॥ ७ ॥ nārada bacana satya saba kariha'um̃. parama sakti samēta avatariha'um̃. 6.

 hariha'um̃ sakala bhūmi garu'ā'ī. nirbhaya hōhu dēva samudā'ī. 7.

I shall also be able to prove true the words of sage Narad¹. I shall manifest myself with my cosmic powers (so that I can successfully eliminate the powerful demons led by Ravana). (6)

Oh Gods, be reassured and feel freed from fear, for I shall surely eliminate all that is burdensome for earth and free her from this encumbrance. (7)

[Note—¹‘Narad’s words’: Once sage Narad had cursed Lord Vishnu to become a human being. The Lord now wishes to fulfill that curse so that the sanctity of Narad’s words is upheld. This story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 124—to Doha no. 139.]

गगन ब्रह्मबानी सुनि काना । तुरत फिरे सुर हृदय जुड़ाना ॥ ८ ॥ तब ब्रह्माँ धरनिहि समुझावा । अभय भई भरोस जियँ आवा ॥ ९ ॥ gagana brahmabānī suni kānā. turata phirē sura hr̥daya jur̥ānā. 8.

taba brahmām̐ dharanihi samujhāvā. abhaya bhaī bharōsa jiyam̐ āvā. 9.

When the gods thus heard Brahm’s words of reassurance thus spoken from the sky (heaven), they were immensely relieved in their hearts, and being now confident of salvation and protection from their horrors, they immediately turned back. (8)

Then the creator Brahma addressed earth and explained to her the ramifications and implications of words of Brahm, advising her to feel fearless from now onwards. At this assurance from Brahma the earth felt free from the burden of fear and terror that had made her suffer her till now. (9)

दो०. निज लोकहि बिरंचि गे देवन्ह इहइ सिखाइ । बानर तनु धरि धरि महि हरि पद सेवहु जाइ ॥ १८७ ॥

dōhā.

nija lōkahi biran̄ci gē dēvanha iha'i sikhā'i.
bānara tanu dhari dhari mahi hari pada sēvahu jā'i. 187.

Then Brahma went back to his abode after advising all the Gods that they should all assume the forms of monkeys and go down to live on earth so that they can serve the holy feet of Lord Hari (Vishnu) when he manifests himself there. (Doha no. 187)

[Note—This Doha clearly establishes that the ‘monkeys’ who formed the formidable army that helped Lord Ram in his campaign of Lanka in which the Lord eliminated Ravana and the rest of the cruel demons were none others than these Gods themselves.]

चौ०. गए देव सब निज निज धामा । भूमि सहित मन कहँ बिश्रामा ॥ १ ॥
जो कछु आयसु ब्रह्माँ दीन्हा । हरषे देव बिलंब न कीन्हा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ga'e dēva saba nija nija dhāmā. bhūmi sahita mana kahum' biśrāmā. 1.
jō kachu āyasu brahmām' dīnhā. haraṣē dēva bilamba na kīnhā. 2.

After being assured by Brahm that the Lord would come down personally to eliminate the cause of their sufferings, all the Gods went back to their respective abodes. Together with Mother Earth, all the Gods found peace in their hearts, and their minds became calm. (1)

The Gods were very happy to implement the advice given to them by Brahma, and they did not waste time in doing what they were told to do. [And what did Brahma advice them? In Doha no. 187 we read that Brahma had advised the Gods to assume the form of monkeys and go down to earth to help the Supreme Lord when he goes there in the form of a human being to eliminate the demons.] (2)

बनचर देह धरी छिति माहीं । अतुलित बल प्रताप तिन्ह पाहीं ॥ ३ ॥
गिरि तरु नख आयुध सब बीरा । हरि मारग चितवहिं मतिधीरा ॥ ४ ॥
गिरि कानन जहँ तहँ भरि पूरी । रहे निज निज अनीक रचि रूरी ॥ ५ ॥ banacara dēha dharī chiti māhīm. atulita bala pratāpa tinha pāhīm. 3.

giri taru nakha āyudha saba bīrā. hari māraga citavahim matidhīrā. 4.
giri kānana jaham' taham' bhari pūrī. rahē nija nija anīka raci rūrī. 5.

The Gods assumed the forms of countless 'forest dwellers'¹ (monkeys, bears) and came to live on earth. These creatures had stupendous strength and astounding valour. (3)

All of them were brave warriors. Their weapons consisted of mountains (huge rocks and boulders), trees, and their own nails (that were long and sharp).

After descending upon earth they waited patiently, keeping an eager watch the path and bidding for the time when Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu in the form of Lord Ram) would come that way. (4)

All of them spread over the earth, living on mountains and in forests, wherever they liked and in whatever way they fancied. (5)

[Note—¹It is very interesting to note here that the actual word used in the text is "banacara". This word clearly means 'those who move around in the forest', 'the forest dwellers'. It is not said at all that the gods became 'monkeys or bears'. The word "banacara" could also mean forest dwelling tribes who were expected to be naturally fierce, ruthless and brave because of the harsh and tough environ of the wilds in which they lived all their lives.

But the convention is that the forest dwellers, the "banacaras", who helped Lord Ram and formed his army were 'monkeys and bears', i.e. that they 'were not humans'. Why is it so; what led our ancient chroniclers to decide that the gods had assumed the form of 'monkeys and bears'?

Well, the simple and straightforward answer is this: Ravana had been granted a boon that he can be killed only by a human being and monkeys, and no one else would ever be able to cause his death. So it was determined that besides Lord Ram, who was in the physical form of a human being, all the others who played a pivotal role in causing Ravana's death must have been monkeys, and their close companions the bears, and no one else. Hence, it was concluded by ancient narrators that the word 'banacara' indeed referred to the forest dwelling creatures such as monkeys and bears alone, and not to any others.

But in reality these 'banacaras' were forest tribes. Their physical features, body-hair, countenance, manners, language, habits, dwelling places, custom and culture were so strikingly different from those who lived in the north of the Vindya mountains that when the latter came in contact with the former they called them monkeys and bears because of their unconventional life-style and visage. But I doubt very much that they were actually animals called monkeys and bears.]

-----**-----

Section 4.2:

Adhyatma Ramayan

Now we shall read this episode from Veda Vyas' epic 'Adhyatma Ramayan'. It is narrated in its Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 6-32.

भूमिभरिण मग्ना दशवदनमुखाशेषरक्षोगणानां
धृत्वा गोरूपमादौ दिविजमुनिजनैः साकमब्जासनस्य ।
गत्वा लोकं रुदन्ती व्यसनमुपगतं ब्रह्मणे प्राह सर्वं
ब्रह्मा ध्यात्वा मुहूर्तं सकलमपि हृदावेदशेषात्मकत्वात् ॥ ६॥ bhūmirbhāreṇa magnā daśavadanamukhāśeṣarakṣogaṇānām dhṛtvā gorūpamādaū divijamunijanaiḥ sākamabjāsanasya । gatvā lokam rudantī vyasanamupagataṁ brahmaṇe prāha sarvaṁ brahmā dhyātvā muhūrtaṁ sakalamapi hṛdāvedaśeṣātmakatvāt ॥ 6॥

Once upon a time, mother earth, who was weary and tormented by the burden of Ravana and other demons, took the form of a cow, and accompanied by the gods and the exalted sages went to the abode of Lord Brahma (the creator). There, she wept and narrated her tales of woes to Brahma.

Then Brahma sat in meditation for one 'Muhurta' (i.e. a period of time equivalent to < 1 hour; or 48 minutes; literally meaning for a short while) and knew by inspiration the way and means by which earth's torments and worries could be ended because he is all knowing and omniscient (6).

तस्मात्क्षीरसमुद्रतीरमगमद् ब्रह्माथ देवैर्वृतो
 देव्या चाखिललोकहृत्स्थमजरं सर्वज्ञमीशं हरिम् ।
 अस्तौषीच्छ्रुतिसिद्धनिर्मलपदैः स्तोत्रैः पुराणोद्भवैः
 भक्त्या गद्गदया गिरातिविमलैरानन्दबाष्पैर्वृतः ॥ ७॥ tasmātkṣīrasamudratīramagamad brahmātha devairvṛto devyā cākhilalokahr̥tsthama-jaram sarvajñamiśam harim । astauṣicchrutisiddhanirmalapadaiḥ stotraih purāṇodbhavaiḥ bhaktyā gadgadayā girātivimalairānandabāṣpairvṛtaḥ ॥ 7॥

Thereafter, accompanied by all the gods, Brahma took the earth with him and went to the shore of the ‘ocean of milk’ (Kshirsagar, the abode of Lord Vishnu). There he worshipped and praised Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu)—who pervades the whole world, is all-knowing, omniscient and wise, and is free from all delusions—with a humble voice that was suffused with devotion and sweet to hear, with the eyes filled with tears of joy and bliss, and a body that was thrilled.

Brahma prayed to the Lord in accordance with the sanctions of the Vedas as his submission was in the form of hymns called Stotras that were like the verses used to praise and honour the Lord in the Purans (ancient mythological books that describe the stories associated with the various manifestations of the Supreme Being). (7).

ततः स्फुरत्सहस्रांशुसहस्रसदृशप्रभः ।
 आविरासीद्गिरिः प्राच्यां दिशां व्यपनयन्स्तमः ॥ ८॥
 कथञ्चिद्दृष्टवान् ब्रह्मा दुर्दर्शमकृतात्मनाम् ।
 इन्द्रनीलप्रीतीकाशं सिमतास्यं पद्मलोचनम् ॥ ९॥
 किरीटहारकेयूरकुण्डलैः कटकादिभिः । विभ्राजमानं श्रीवत्सकौस्तुभप्रभयान्वितम् ॥ १०॥ tataḥ sphuratsahasrāṁśusahasrasadr̥śaprabhaḥ । āvirāsiddhariḥ prācyāṁ diśāṁ vyapanayanstamaḥ ॥ 8॥ kathañcidr̥ṣṭavān brahmā durdarśamakṛtātmanām । indranīlapratikāśam smitāsyam padmalocanam ॥ 9॥ kirīṭahārakeyūrakuṇḍalaiḥ kaṭakādibhiḥ । vibhrājamānaṁ śrīvatsakaustubhaprabhayānvitam ॥ 10॥

Then Sri Hari (Vishnu)—who was as splendid and radiant as thousands of luminescent suns shining together—manifested himself in the eastern horizon, removing or dispelling the darkness of all the directions of the world as he revealed himself (8).

Sri Hari—who is most difficult to behold by sinners and those who lack any goodness and auspiciousness in them (because the Lord’s form is so holy and divine that evil ones can’t perceive it)—was seen by Brahma with the greatest of difficulties. [It does not mean that Brahma was not holy himself, but it is merely a figure of speech to emphasise how brilliant the form of the Lord was that it even blinded Brahma, the creator of this mortal world.]

His glowing and radiant complexion was dark like the sapphire worn by Indra (the king of Gods). His face had a sweet and pleasant smile, and his eyes were large and attractive like a lotus flower in full bloom (9).

He (Lord Hari or Vishnu) was adorned by a crown, a tiara, a necklace or a garland, armlets and bracelets, ear-rings, large finger-rings, and other magnificent ornaments. The Lord's majesty was enhanced by the presence of the foot-prints of sage Bhrigu that are marked on his chest, as well as by the unique gem known as the 'Kaustav Mani' that too adorned his chest (in the form of a pendant that the Lord wears). [The Kaustav Mani is a rare gem that is worn exclusively by Lord Vishnu.] (10).

स्तुवद्भिः सनकाद्यैश्च पार्षदैः परिवेष्टितम् ।
 शङ्खचक्रगदापद्मवनमालाविराजितम् ॥ ११॥
 स्वर्णयज्ञोपवीतेन स्वर्णवर्णाम्बरेण च ।
 श्रिया भूम्या च सहितं गरुडोपरि संस्थितम् ॥ १२॥ हर्षगद्गदया वाचा स्तोतुं समुपचक्रमे ॥ १३॥

stuvadbhiḥ sanakādyaiśca pārṣadaiḥ pariveṣṭitam । śaṅkhacakraḡadāpadmavanamālāvirājitam ॥ 11॥ svarṇayajñōpavītena svarṇavarṇāmbareṇa ca । śriyā bhūmyā ca sahitaṃ garuḡopari saṃsthitam ॥ 12॥ harṣagaḡadaya vācā stotuṃ samupacakrame ॥ 13॥

Sankadi and other sages were singing the eulogies of the Lord and had surrounded him from all the sides. He was looking most glorious and resplendent with a conch, a discus, a mace and a lotus (one each in his four hands respectively) as well as the garland of flowers around his neck (11).

He was adorned by a golden sacred thread, and a Pitambar (a silken yellow body wrapping seamless garment worn by Vishnu). He was accompanied by Laxmi and mother earth, was astride Garud (the legendary eagle which is his mount). Seeing his stupendously beautiful image, Brahma began to sing his praises and glories with a throat choked with extreme delight and overcome with emotions (12-13).

ब्रह्मोवाच
 नतोऽस्मि ते पदं देव पूणबुद्धीन्द्रियात्मभिः ।
 यत्त्विन्त्यते कर्मपाशाद्भृदि नित्यं मुमुक्षुभिः ॥ १४॥
 मायया गुणमस्या त्वं सृजस्यवसि लुम्पसि ।
 जगतेन न ते लेप आनन्दानुभवात्मनः ॥ १५॥
 तथा शुद्धिर्न दुष्टानां दानाध्ययनकर्मभिः । शुद्धात्मता ते यशसि सदा भक्तिमतां यथा ॥ १६॥

brahmovāca
 nato'smi te padaṃ deva prāṇabuddhīndriyātmabhiḥ । yaccintyate karmapāśāddhṛdi nityaṃ mumukṣubhiḥ ॥ 14॥ māyayā guṇamayyā tvam sṛjasyavasi lumpasi । jagattena na te lepa ānandānubhavātmanaḥ ॥ 15॥ tathā śuddhirna duṣṭānāṃ dānādhyayanakarmabhiḥ । śuddhātmatā te yaśasi sadā bhaktimatāṃ yathā ॥ 16॥

Brahma said, 'Oh Lord! I bow my head at your holy feet which are remembered and concentrated upon regularly by the seekers of emancipation and salvation who wish to free themselves from the shackles of their deeds both past and present, and which they do sincerely with their whole being, intellect and mind, heart and sense organs (14).

You create, sustain and annihilate this world through the medium of your dynamic powers that create delusions (known as Maya), and these powers are aided by the three Gunas¹ (specialties, qualities—Satvic, Rajsic and Tamsic) that are so characteristic of this creation—but, being an embodiment of supreme bliss and contentment, you do not yourself get attached, involved, effected or engrossed in any of the things that either the Maya or the Gunas produce (15).

[¹The three Gunas are the primary qualities that are inherently present in all living beings. A combination of them in different permutations and ratios decide the basic nature, temperament, attitude and character of an individual. The various delusions created by this world affect the individual alongside the affect of these Gunas. But inspite of the fact that all these things are created by Brahm, and also that this creation is an image of Brahm, but the great mystery and wonder of Brahm that makes him so unique is that he remains detached from everything.]

Oh Lord! The purity of heart and inner-self that is achieved by the devotees who are devoted and dedicated to you and have constant and unwavering love (respect) for your pure and holy fame and glories, are not achieved (or received) by those persons who are darkened, pervert, wicked and of a malignant and tarnished heart and inner-self inspite of their doing charities, studying (the scriptures) and other auspicious and noble deeds (16).

अतस्तवाङ्घ्रिर्मै दृष्टश्चित्तदोषापनुत्तये ।
 सद्योऽन्तर्हृदये नित्यं मुनिभिः सात्वतैर्वृतः ॥ १७॥
 ब्रह्माद्यैः स्वार्थसिद्ध्यर्थमस्माभिः पूर्वसेवितः । अपरोक्षानुभूत्यर्थं ज्ञानिभिर्हृदि भावितः ॥ १८॥ atastavāṅghrime drṣṭaścittadoṣāpanuttaye । sadyo'ntarhṛdaye nityaṃ munibhiḥ sātvatāirvṛtaḥ ॥ 17॥ brahmādyaiḥ svārthasiddhyarthamasmābhiḥ pūrvasevitaḥ । aparokṣānubhūtyarthaṃ jñānibhirhṛdi bhāvitaḥ ॥ 18॥

Hence, those lotus-like feet of yours which are regularly concentrated upon (i.e. remembered) by devoted sages and seers in their hearts—I have had a divine view (Darshan) of them so as to enable me to destroy the faults and malignant tendencies of my heart and inner-self instantaneously (17).

Earlier too we Brahma and other Gods had served these lotus-like (holy and divine) feet of yours in order to fulfill (or serve) our self interests while wise sages and hermits had constantly concentrated upon it in their hearts with the avowed aim of experiencing you first hand (i.e. directly and presently) (18).

तवाङ्घ्रिपूजानिर्माल्यतुलसीमालया विभो ।
 स्पर्धते वक्षसि पदं लब्ध्वापि श्रीः सपत्निवत् ॥ १९॥
 अतस्त्वत्पादभक्तेषु तव भक्तिः श्रियोऽधिका ।
 भक्तिमेवाभिवाञ्छन्ति त्वद्भक्ताः सारवेदिनः ॥ २०॥
 अतस्त्वत्पादकमले भक्तिरेव सदास्तु मे । संसाराऽऽमयतप्तानां भेषजं भक्तिरेव ते ॥ २१॥ tavāṅghripūjānirmālyatulasīmālayā vibho । spardhate vakṣasi padaṃ labdhvāpi śrīḥ sapatnivat ॥ 19॥ atastvatpādabhakteṣu tava bhaktiḥ śriyo'dhikā । bhaktimevābhivāñchanti tvadbhaktāḥ sāravedinaḥ ॥ 20॥ atastvatpādakamale bhaktireva sadāstu me । saṃsārā"mayataptānāṃ bheṣajaṃ bhaktireva te ॥ 21॥

Oh Vibho (omnipresent, all-pervading, all-powerful, huge, magnanimous, glorious) Lord! Though Laxmi has found a place in your heart, she nevertheless feels jealous and envious of a garland of Tulsi leaves which is offered at your feet as if the latter was her competitor (or, a co-wife)¹ (19).

You have greater affection for the devotees who have devotion and respect towards your lotus-like feet than you have for Laxmi. That is why those devotees who have realised your essence and true nature have desire (or ask) for your Bhakti (pure devotion, dedication, worship, affection, surrender and refuge with you, your blessings etc.) only to the exclusion of all other boons (20).

Therefore, Oh Lord, let me have eternal, unwavering devotion and dedication in your lotus-like holy feet because for those diseased persons afflicted by the disease of this mundane existence (such as spiritual, moral, physical, ethical and attitudinal depravation, corrupted thoughts, intellect and discrimination, perverse and pervert mind etc.), your devotion and worship is the only remedy (21).⁷

[Note—¹Lord Vishnu is very fond of the leaves of the Tulsi plant (Basil plant; its botanical name is ocymum sanctum). This fondness of the Lord causes heartburn to Laxmi though she is so much loved by the Lord. The story of how Tulsi became so much favourite of Lord Vishnu in brief is as follows:

It is said to have been born out of the tears of bliss and happiness of Lord Vishnu at the time when the pitcher containing the Amrit, the ambrosia of bliss and eternity, had emerged from the ocean when the latter was churned by the gods and the demons. The leaves of this plant are used to sanctify food offered to Lord Vishnu, and the dried wood of the tree is used for fire sacrifices, during cremation rites and also for making beads of the prayer rosary. In a personified form, Tulsi is regarded as a goddess very dear to Vishnu.

According to another legend, there was a demon named Jaalandhar who had a chaste wife named Brinda (pronounced as 'Brindaa'). Lord Shiva had tried his best to kill him but failed due to the spiritual powers and the strength of chastity vow of his wife Brinda. At that time Lord Vishnu had broken her vows of chastity and loyalty towards her demon husband by stratagem, and when Brinda came to know about it she cursed Vishnu that he would become a stone. Vishnu accepted the curse with respect because he knew that Brinda was immaculate and was not at fault, but it was necessary to violate her vows so that her cruel demon husband could be killed. So instead of counter-cursing or showing his wrath, Vishnu blessed her and said that even in his form as a stone he would still have the greatest of respect for her and keep her over his head as a token of this. Vishnu thus became a stone known as 'Shaligraam' and Brinda became the Tulsi plant whose leaves are always placed on the top of the Shaligraam to worship the Lord.

There was no way to kill this cruel demon except to violate the chastity vow of Brinda. In order to take care of peace and welfare of the rest of the world, and to maintain law and order in creation for which he was duty-bound, Lord Vishnu had no choice but to disguise himself as the demon to violate the honourable lady's chastity. But having done this and allowing Lord Shiva to kill the demon, Vishnu had blessed her with a boon that in the form of 'Tulsi' (the holy Basil plant) she would be absolutely necessary to sanctify all food offered to the Lord, and he would wear her on top of his Shaligram-form. This Shaligram form of the Lord is the curse that Brinda cast upon the Lord when she realised what had happened. She cursed him to become a stone.

The Shaligram is a rounded piece of smooth stone, generally black in colour that is found on the banks of the holy river Narmada. Shaligram has a great symbolic value—it denotes the formless shape of the Supreme Being, a form that has no specific features as a hand or a head. It is more like an egg in its shape, symbolizing the cosmic egg from which the rest of the creation has emerged.

Worship of Lord Vishnu as the cosmic Lord who is without attributes and forms is done in the Shaligram in a symbolic manner. But for this worship, leaves of the Tulsi plant (Basil plant) are an absolute necessity to mark this event and the fact that the magnanimous Lord had to do something that was wrong but necessary for the larger welfare and interest of his creation because that was also his duty and responsibility. The Lord was ready to suffer ignominy and the curse of becoming a stone that rolls and tosses about in the current of the river, literally condemned to lead a life that is virtually as gross and inane as a worthless stone, just in order to uphold the requirements of Dharma that the wrongdoer must be punished even if it means one has to suffer himself in the process. But the Lord knew that Brinda was immaculate and irreproachable, so he blessed her that since she had accepted him as her husband, the Lord is ready to accept her as his eternally beloved one.

For the Lord, accepting and elevating Brinda to the same pedestal as his celestial divine consort Laxmi, the goddess of wealth and prosperity, was a kind and loving gesture towards Brinda that she is not only pardoned for cursing the Lord to become a stone but also accepted by him as his most beloved one who is deemed to be so close and essential for the Lord that his worship would never be completed with her symbolic presence in the form of the Tulsi leaves.

The story is referred to in Doha no. 395 and 188 in the book Dohawali written by saint-poet Goswami Tulsidas.

According to the Shiv Puran, Rudra Sanhita, Khanda 5 (Uddha Khanda), Cantos 36-40, there was a demon named Shankha-chud, and his chaste wife was called Tulsi. Lord Shiva as well as the great goddess of death Mahakaali had tried their best to slay this demon, but were unsuccessful. It was then that Lord Vishnu had made Tulsi fall from grace by some trick so that ultimately Shiva, as Rudra, was able to kill him. When Tulsi came to know about the trick played upon her by Vishnu, she cursed him to become a stone. Lord Shiva counter-cursed her that she would become a river known as 'Gandaki'. But Lord Vishnu intervened and forgave her, and said that he willingly accepts her curse as well as her as his symbolic consort. So it happened that Vishnu became a stone known as 'Shaaligram' that is found in this river, and Tulsi became a tree that grew on its bank. The leaves of this 'Tulsi' tree is regarded as the only thing that is acceptable to Lord Shaaligram—a metaphoric way of saying that Lord Vishnu can only be pleased by the touch of Tulsi.]

इति ब्रुवन्तं ब्रह्माणं बभाषे भगवान् हरिः ।
 किं करोमीति तं वेधाः प्रत्युवाचातिहर्षितः ॥ २२॥ भगवन् रावणो नाम पौलस्त्यतनयो महान् ।
 राक्षसानामधिपतिर्मदतवरदर्पितः ॥ २३॥
 त्रिलोकीं लोकपालान्श्च बाधते विश्वबाधकः । मानुषेण मृतिस्तस्य मया कल्याण कल्पिता ॥ २४॥

iti bruvantaṃ brahmāṇaṃ babhāṣe bhagavān hariḥ । kiṃ karomīti taṃ vedhāḥ pratyuvācātiharṣitaḥ ॥ 22॥ bhagavan rāvaṇo nāma paulastyatanayo mahān । rākṣasānāmadhipatirmaddattavaradarpiṭaḥ ॥ 23॥ trilokīṃ lokapālānśca bādhatē viśvabādhakaḥ । mānuṣeṇa mṛtistasya mayā kalyāṇa kalpitā ॥ 24॥

Brahma, who had been singing the glories and praises of Lord Hari as above, was asked by him—'What shall I do for you?' Then Brahma replied to him most delightedly (22)—

'Oh Lord God! Ravana, the grand son of Pulastya and son of Visrawa, is the king of demons. On the strength of my blessings (or boons), he has become extremely haughty and arrogant (as well as tyrannical and invincible) (23).

He has created hurdles (problems) for the whole universe, and has tormented the three Lokas (terrestrial, subterranean and celestial worlds) and the three Lokpals (patron Gods of these three divisions of the world). Oh Lord who is an embodiment of all forms of auspiciousness and goodness in this creation! I have destined (determined) his (Ravana's) death in the hands of a human. Therefore, oh Lord, you should assume a human form and slay that creature who has become an enemy of Gods (24).'

अतस्त्वं मानुषो भूत्वा जहि देवरिपुं प्रभो ॥ २५॥

श्रीभगवानुवाच

कश्यपस्य वरो दत्तस्तपसा तोषितेन मे ।
याचितः पुत्रभावाय तथेत्यङ्गीकृतं मया । स इदानीं दशरथो भूत्वा तिष्ठति भूतले ॥ २६॥ atastvam mānuṣo bhūtvā jahi devaripuṃ prabho ॥ 25॥

śrībhagavānuvāca

kaśyapasya varo dattastapasā toṣitena me । yācitaḥ putrabhāvāya tathetyaṅgīkṛtaṃ mayā । sa idāniṃ daśaratho bhūtvā tiṣṭhati bhūtale ॥ 26॥

The Lord God (Vishnu) said, ‘Being pleased by the severe austerities and penances (Tapa) done by Kashyap, I had given him a boon. He had desired me to manifest myself as his son; then I had said ‘all-right’, and had accepted his proposal. Presently, he is present in the form of king Dasrath on this earth (in the city of Ayodhya) (25-26).

तस्याहं पुत्रतामेत्य कौसल्यायां शुभे दिने ।
चतुर्धाऽऽत्मानमेवाहं सृजामीतरयोः पृथक् ॥ २७॥
योगमायापि सीतेति जनकस्य गृहे तदा ।
उत्पत्स्यते तया सार्धं सर्वं सम्पादयाम्यहम् ।
इत्युक्त्वान्तर्दधे विष्णुर्ब्रह्मा देवानथाब्रवीत् ॥ २८॥ tasyāhaṃ putratāmetya kausalyāyāṃ śubhe dine । caturdhā"tmānamevāhaṃ sṛjāmītarayoḥ pṛthak ॥ 27॥ yogamāyāpi sīteti janakasya gṛhe tadā । utpatsyate tayā sārdhaṃ sarvaṃ sampādayāmyaham । ityuktvāntardadhe viṣṇurbrahmā devānathābravīt ॥ 28॥

I shall manifest myself (i.e. be born) in his household in four distinct forms as his four sons in an auspicious and proper time from the womb of Kaushalya and other two mothers (27).

At the same time, my ‘Yogmaya’ (my delusion-creating cosmic dynamic powers that originate from me) will take birth in the form of Sita in the household of king Janak. I shall take her with me and finish off all your works (or fulfill all your desires and needs).’

Saying this, Lord Vishnu vanished from sight. Thereafter, Brahma said to the other Gods (28)—

ब्रह्मोवाच

विष्णुर्मानुषरूपेण भविष्यति रघोः कुले ॥ २९॥
 यूयं सृजध्वं सर्वेऽपि वानरेष्वंशसम्भवान् ।
 विष्णोः सहायं कुरुत यावत्स्थास्यति भूतले ॥ ३०॥
 इति देवान् समादिश्य समाश्वास्य च मेदिनीम् । ययौ ब्रह्मा स्वभवनं विज्वरः सुखमास्थितः ॥ ३१॥

brahmovāca

viṣṇurmānuṣarūpeṇa bhaviṣyati raghoḥ kule ॥ 29॥ yūyaṃ sṛjadhvaṃ sarve'pi vānareṣvaṃśasambhavān । viṣṇoḥ sahāyaṃ kuruta yāvatsthāsyati bhūtale ॥ 30॥ iti devān samādiśya samāśvāsyā ca medinīm । yayau brahmā svabhavanaṃ vijvaraḥ sukhamāsthitaḥ ॥ 31॥

Brahma said, ‘Lord Vishnu shall manifest himself as a human in Raghu’s clan. All of you should also reproduce yourselves as sons in the form of monkeys (in the monkey race) and till the time Vishnu remains on the earth, you should continue to serve him (29-30).’

Having thus ordered (advised) the Gods and consoling the earth, Brahma went back to his own abode and lived happily without any further worries (31).

देवाश्च सर्वे हरिरूपधारिणः स्थिताः सहायार्थमितस्ततो हरेः ।
 महाबलाः पर्वतवृक्षयोधिनः प्रतीक्षमाणा भगवन्तमीश्वरम् ॥ ३२॥ devāśca sarve harirūpadhāriṇaḥ sthitāḥ sahāyārthamitastato hareḥ । mahābalāḥ parvatavṛkṣayodhinaḥ pratikṣamāṇā bhagavantamīśvaram ॥ 32॥

Here, all the Gods assumed the form of most valorous and strong monkeys who were adept (proficient) at fighting, using mountains (i.e. large boulders, rocks) and trees as their weapons. They lived and roamed about here and there on this earth waiting for the time when they would be needed to help and serve the Lord God (32).

-----**-----

Part 2

Abduction of Sita by Ravana, Her Discovery by Hanuman, And the Burning of Lanka.

(With Roman Transliteration of Verses, English Exposition and Notes)

Part 2 of this Book has the following Chapters:

Chapter 5: The Story of Sita's abduction by Ravana. This Chapter is divided into the following Sections:

- Section 5.1.1 {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Adhyatma Ramayan;
- Section 5.1.2 {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Anand Ramayan;
- Section 5.1. {Why Ravana Stole Sita} Ram Charit Manas;
- Section 5.2.1 {The story of Sita's abduction} Ram Charit Manas;
- Section 5.2.2 {The story of Sita's abduction} Adhyatma Ramayan.
- Section 5.2.3 {The story of Sita's abduction} Geetawali Ramayan

Chapter 6: The Search for Sita, and her Discovery as a Captive of Ravana in Lanka.

Chapter 7: The Burning of Lanka by Hanuman.

Up till now, in Part 1, we have read the story of Ravana's previous birth when he was the great king Pratapbhanu, how unfortunately he was cursed to become a demon, his birth and the various boons he and his siblings acquired, the way he established the kingdom of the demon race with its capital at Lanka, how he conquered the whole world, subjugating everyone from the mighty gods and the great hermits and sages to the humblest of creatures on earth, unleashing a cruel reign of terror, misery and pain with such impunity and recklessness that there seemed to be no one strong enough to oppose him and challenge his authority. The situation became so frighteningly alarming and precarious that when Mother Earth, the Gods and the Sages could no longer cope with it they decided to jointly approach Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, with a prayer to protect them and all other creatures of the world who were horribly suffering under the cruelty, mayhem and terror spread by the demons.

On this prayer, the Lord promised them that he will come down personally to put things in order, and that for this purpose he will become a human being in the form of Lord Ram. He will be accompanied by his cosmic powers in its various forms to enable him to carry out the job successfully. On their part, the Gods decided to help the Lord by coming down to earth in the form of monkeys and bears on the advice of Brahma, the patriarch of creation.

In due course of time, Lord Vishnu manifested himself as Lord Ram as the prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya. Close associates of Lord Vishnu accompanied him in the form of his brothers (Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan), and the Lord's cosmic dynamic power that is known as Shakti too accompanied him in the form of his wife Sita.

The Lord took every possible precaution to ensure that this secret is not leaked and a hindrance is created in the main objective of the Lord's coming to earth in the form of a human being—which was to eliminate Ravana and the cruel demons who had been causing immense suffering, misery and torment to the gods, earth, sages and other creatures of this world. The secrecy had to be maintained so that Ravana is not warned that the Supreme Lord has finally decided to bring him to notice and get rid of him. There were chances that if this secret was leaked then Ravana would go hide somewhere where it is not possible for a human to go, and then the whole enterprise would be defeated.

It goes to the credit of Ravana however, that inspite of all the precautions everyone took—right from Lord Vishnu to the gods, the earth and the sages—he did become aware that Lord Vishnu has come down to slay him. But instead of fleeing he decided that it was a sort of a boon for him—because by this time he had realized that his soul is trapped in a body that is gravely sinful, and it is impossible for him to ensure deliverance, salvation and emancipation of his soul unless he manages somehow to free the soul from the cage in which it is trapped, i.e. to bring about the death of his body that has become hugely evil and sinful, and thus release the soul from its captivity.

The wise, intelligent and clever Ravana pondered over the matter seriously, and he concluded that there is no better way to make this happen than to get himself slayed at the hands of the Supreme Lord himself. This will be good for him from all accounts—because he was sure that anyone who dies at the hands of the Lord is sure and certain to find deliverance, salvation and emancipation because the Lord is so merciful, kind and compassionate that he cannot let the soul of anyone whom he touches perish. Ravana knew that with his sinful body it is not possible for him to pursue any spiritual path as prescribed in the scriptures, and so this path of voluntarily getting killed by the Supreme Lord is the best and the easiest way for him to free his soul from the fetters of his gross, mortal and sinful body, and allow it to attain eternal bliss, felicity and beatitude when it attains oneness with the Supreme Soul.

Getting killed by the Lord will not only ensure deliverance of his own soul but it will also result in the liberation of the souls of countless other demons who are also unfortunately trapped in their sinful bodies like him due to the curse to which his entire family as well as the subjects of his kingdom were subjected to in some ancient time.

Ravana determined that this was his chance to get Mukti and Moksha (liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation), and since it has come knocking at his door he must not let it pass even by mistake. So he grasped it, and he even did so eagerly! That is why, no matter who or in what ever way anyone tried to persuade him not to provoke Lord Ram and engage in a war with him, he wouldn't listen to anybody but stuck stubbornly to his decision. On the face it appeared a reckless and arrogant act, but on close examination it was a well-thought out plan for attaining liberation and deliverance of the souls of all the demons en-masse.

So in due course of time, Lord Vishnu manifested himself as Lord Ram in the household of king Dasrath of Ayodhya, a famous kingdom of that time. Lord Ram had three brothers, Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan. The Lord was married to Sita, the daughter of king Janka of Janakpur.

The Lord had to devise an excuse by which he could not only fulfill the words given by him to the earth, the gods and the sages but also carry out his duty, as the supreme Lord-Protector of the world, to liberate the world from the tyranny and cruelty of the demons. In order to give effect to this plan it was necessary for the Lord to move out of the comfort of a royal palace at Ayodhya and go to the forest and then onwards to the heart of the 'land of the demons'. Once in the demon heartland, the Lord had to devise a means by which a situation is created that gives the Lord an excuse to eliminate the demons.

So it was planned that the Lord's cosmic Shakti, i.e. the Lord's cosmic dynamic powers that had accompanied the Lord in the form of his wife Sita, would now play a pivotal role. Hence, Sita concealed her original form and left behind an image, an apparition that was exactly like hers. The Lord who controls the entire creation and the thoughts and actions of all living beings now maneuvered the things in such a way that Sita was abducted by Ravana and kept captive at Lanka. This gave Lord Ram the much-needed break to launch a campaign that ultimately led to the elimination of Ravana and his cruel demon companions at the end of the fierce epic War of Lanka.

Though on the face of it Ravana appeared to be a lustful demon who was so pervert, immoral and unscrupulous that he would kidnap another person's wife and hold her a prisoner in his capital, but the fact is that he saw in this enterprise his only means of finding liberation and deliverance from the evil body of a demon in which his soul was unfortunately trapped. Ravana determined that by getting killed at the hands of Lord Ram, who was a manifestation of the Supreme Being, he would surely find emancipation and salvation for himself. Ravana was aware that his whole life had been spent in doing evil things and he was so accustomed to it that it was well-nigh impossible for him to pursue any of the spiritual means by which a creature's soul can find eternal peace, beatitude, felicity and bliss. He knew that if he missed this golden opportunity then his soul would be condemned for ever.

So therefore, Ravana established animosity with Lord Ram with a determined purpose in mind. How was he to be sure that Lord Ram would actually slay him, thereby helping him get rid of his evil body and provide his soul eternal liberation and emancipation? Well, Ravana, being wise, clever and sagacious, decided that if he managed to bring Sita to Lanka, albeit on the pretext of abducting her but actually with an intent to use this apparently an evil deed as a means to seek his own spiritual welfare and deliverance of his soul, then Lord Ram would be compelled to come to Lanka to fight with him in an attempt to free her. That is why Ravana showed Sita the same respect and kept her with full honours that he would have shown to his own mother if he was to bring her to his palace from somewhere outside. To wit, Ravana had treated Sita with great respect internally, though from the outside he had behaved like an evil demon who found pleasure in stealing other person's wife.

Ravana must have felt overjoyed at the prospect of having the great privilege of seeing the Lord of the World right in front of his eyes, engage with him in a duel for days together on an equal footing like two warriors making a stiff bargain for superiority, minutely observing all the facial expressions of the Lord and feeling blissful at the rare opportunity of observing the Lord up so close, a privilege that even great sages, seers, hermits and ascetics are denied, and though fighting with him on the outside yet being constantly able to pray and bow to him internally, spending each moment of his residual existence in this mortal world in the thought of the Lord.

Indeed and without gainsay, it was surely a sort of meditation for Ravana—as all throughout the war his entire mind was completely engaged in the thoughts of Lord Ram just like an ascetic does while doing Yoga (meditation). And what a fortunate death would it be when he would breathe his last with the divine sight of the Lord before his eyes. And as it turned out eventually, at the time of death Ravana's soul emerged from his body in the form of a brilliant shaft of light and entered into the body of Lord Ram—signifying the merger of Ravana’s soul with the Supreme Soul of creation represented by Lord Ram, a rare achievement that gave Ravana eternal rest and peace.

Since our Book is themed on the epic ‘Story of Ravana and the War of Lanka’, we shall skip all the developments after Lord Vishnu manifested as Lord Ram in Ayodhya, the Lord’s childhood and adulthood days, his marriage with Sita, the plans by his father to appoint him as the Regent of the kingdom, and everything turning sour due to some family intrigue which led to Lord Ram being exiled to the forest for fourteen years. Lord Ram was accompanied by Sita, his wife, and Laxman, his younger brother. By-and-by they came to a place known as Panchavati, a part of the dense forest near the banks of the river Godavari that was uninhabited but where stood a cluster of five tall trees that provided adequate shelter. Lord Ram chose this place for its solitude and natural beauty to spend some time with Sita and Laxman.

One day Supernakha, the sister of Ravana, came that way while wondering in the forest. She was smitten by Lord Ram’s charm, and wished to marry him. So she disguised herself as a beautiful lady and tried to tempt the Lord. In order to punish her, and also to give effect of the Grand Plan by which Ravana and others were to be got rid of, Lord Ram had her nose and ears chopped off. Infuriated, she first sought help from the demons Khar and Dushan, but these two demons were killed with their armies in the ensuing battle. Then Supernakha went to complain to Ravana and asked him to seek revenge. This set the ball rolling, for the chain of developments that unfolded now went on and on in an irretrievably manner.

Ravana sought the help of Marich and forced him to become a deer with a golden hide so that he could kidnap Sita as a retribution for his sister Supernakha’s deformation by Lord Ram. He brought her and kept her captive in his royal garden at Lanka.

Lord Ram was first heart-broken, absolutely dejected and so despaired that he lost all hopes of ever seeing Sita again. But soon the Lord recovered himself and got his acts together, and in this his brother Laxman acted as his best friend and finest companion as he gave moral support to the Lord and encouraged him not to lose hope, for losing hope would give them nothing but keeping it alive may still pave the way for success in getting back Sita sometime in the future.

So the two brothers started on the long-drawn search for Sita through a wild and intractable forest. They came to the ‘country of the monkeys’ known as Kishkindha. Here Lord Ram befriended Sugriv, the prince of the monkey kingdom, and he also met some of the best comrades he had, such as Hanuman, Angad, Jamvant etc. Sugriv promised Lord Ram all help in finding Sita. A huge mission was launched with this aim, with different teams sent to different directions to search for Sita. One such team had Hanuman, Angad and Jamvant as its members. This party went in the south direction and reached the shore of the mighty ocean which stopped their progress and stood as a formidable barrier before them. The party met one vulture named Sampati who told them that he could see that Sita was kept captive under a tree in the garden of Lanka, because vultures have great sights and can see small things from great distances.

So the location of Sita was finally decided, but it had to be verified and a personal meeting with her must be arranged so that the next phase of operation to free her could be launched. So then there arose the question of going across the ocean and meeting her. Hanuman was assigned this task. He leapt from this side of the ocean, cruised over its surface and landed at Lanka. There he met Sita and conveyed Lord Ram's message to her, promising to her that her freedom was just a matter of time now as he would go back to the Lord and arrange for his coming to her rescue. In the meantime she must show resilience, courage and patience. Then, to set the stage for the spectacular events that were to unfold soon, as well as to punish Ravana and provoke him into a direct conflict with Lord Ram, Hanuman burnt Lanka to ashes.

This singular event of the Burning of Lanka has been magnificently and dramatically narrated in Tulsidas' classics (Ram Charit Manas and Kavitawali) and also by Veda Vyas (in Adhyatma Ramayan).

We will be reading all about these events in this Part 2 of our Book.

Chapter 5: The Story of Sita's abduction by Ravana

Section 5.1.1:

Adhyatma Ramayan

{Why Ravana Stole Sita}

In Veda Vyas' epic 'Adhyatma Ramyan', we read about the reason why Ravana abducted Sita in its (a) Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 57-61; (b) Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65; (c) Uttar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59; (d) Uttar Kand, Canto 4, verse no. 11.

Now let us read the text as follows:

(a) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 57-61:-

Once it so happened in the forest that Ravana's sister, whose name was Supernakha, tried to trap Lord Ram with her lustful gestures of passion and lust, telling him that she wanted to marry the Lord. Obviously Lord Ram rebuked and rebuffed her. Supernakha, being a wicked demoness, then attacked Sita, Lord Ram's wife, and tried to kill her. At this point Lord Ram had to intervene as he had no choice left. He was so annoyed at her indiscretion and wild nature that he advised his younger brother Laxman to cut off her ears and nose as a punishment, so that wherever this wicked demoness would go everyone would come to know about her wicked deeds, shameless nature and evil character.

Having been thus deformed, Supernakha became very furious, and she first tried to avenge her insult by asking the demons Khar and Dushan to kill Lord Ram. The two attacked the Lord with a huge army of ferocious and vicious demons, were Lord Ram wiped out all of them single-handedly. Supernakha was astonished and extremely peeved; seething with revenge she then went angrily to Ravana, her brother and the mighty king of the demon race, to ask him to seek retribution against the Lord for the grave humiliation that the whole demon race has been subjected to. Supernakha told Ravana that this was not merely her personal injury but it was an open insult of the entire demon race as well as a challenge to them, and if he neglected it then his own reputation would be at stake.

When Ravana heard everything, he became pensive. Upon deep contemplation he veered round to the view that only the Supreme Being would be bold, strong and courageous enough to challenge him by deforming his sister. He had already subjugated all the gods and semi-gods, and they were so terrified of him that surely none of them can have the guts to do what was done to Supernakha.

Ravana concluded that in all probability Lord Ram was a human manifestation of the Supreme Lord, and if that is the lucky case then finally the chance of his redemption has arrived. He must not miss this golden opportunity to get liberation and deliverance for his soul; so he must do something so that his body of a demon is killed by the Lord, which will set his soul free from this evil cage and ensure it gets eternal emancipation and salvation. He was so anxious to see this noble enterprise reach its final conclusion that he kept this intuitive feeling a top secret in his heart.

To give effect to his grand plan, Ravana decided to bring Sita to Lanka so that Lord Ram would have to come over and fulfill his wishes to get killed by the Lord.

Since he had an inner feeling that Lord Ram was no ordinary human prince who had to spend his days in the forest with his wife and brother due to some reason, but was actually the Supreme Being himself in this form, so when he brought Sita to Lanka he did so with great caution, showing her great respect mentally and treating her like he would have treated his own mother.

श्रुत्वा तत्सूक्तवाक्यैश्च दानमानादिभिस्तथा ।
आश्वास्य भगिनीं राजा प्रविवेश स्वकं गृहम् ।
तत्र चिन्तापरो भूत्वा निद्रां रात्रौ न लब्धवान् ॥ ५७॥

śrutvā tatsūktavākyaīśca dānamānādibhistathā ।
āśvāsya bhaginīm rājā praviveśa svakaṃ gṛham ।
tatra cintāparo bhūtvā nidrāṃ rātrau na labdhavān ॥ 57॥

Hearing what Supernakha had to narrate, the demon king Ravana consoled his sister in many ways, assuaging her feeling of grave humiliation and injury, and assuring her of swift retribution with words that were sweet and pleasant to hear. He also gave her many gifts in order to calm her down and show that she was welcomed.

After reassuring her, Ravana retired to his own palace, but he was so extremely perturbed and full of worry and consternation that he could not sleep at all that night. (57)

एकेन रामेण कथं मनुष्यमात्रेण नष्टः सबलः खरो मे ।
भ्राता कथं मे बलवीर्यदर्पं युतो विनष्टो बत राघवेण ॥ ५८॥

ekena rāmeṇa katham manuṣyamātreṇa naṣṭaḥ sabalaḥ kharo me ।
bhrātā katham me balavīryadarpayuto vinaṣṭo bata rāghaveṇa ॥ 58॥

During the night he pondered over the matter deeply and debated over it to himself, thinking thus—‘It is very surprising and a strange occurrence, and a matter of great concern and wonder, that a lonely and ordinary-looking human being who is born in king Raghu's family of Ayodhya, a prince who is known by the name of Sri Ram, would be able to slay my brother Khar, who was endowed with immense strength, valour and bravery, along with his ace army of demons¹. (58)

[Note—¹It so happened that Supernakha had first approached the demons Khar and Dushan, and asked them to attack and kill Lord Ram in order to avenge for her insult. The two demons led a huge army of ferocious and vicious demons who attacked the Lord at once with vengeance. In the battle that ensued, the entire army, along with both Khar and Dushan, were eliminated. It was then that Supernakha had fled to Lanka to appeal to Ravana. When Ravana heard the details he was utterly bewildered as he knew how strong and powerful these demons were, and it was definitely not within the means of any human being to kill the entire demon army even during a full-fledged battle with the help of a well trained and armed army. But Lord Ram had achieved this spectacular success single-handedly, and it was no short of a miracle to actually have done so. This event is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos.18-35

This made Ravana feel extremely uneasy and worried. He wondered whether it was true that the prophesy made earlier that his end would be at the hands of a human being is finally coming to fruition. So he tossed and turned in his bed, unable to rest that night.]

यद्वा न रामो मनुजः परेशो मां हन्तुकामः सबलं बलौघैः ।
सम्प्रार्थितोऽयं द्रुहिणेन पूर्वं मनुष्यरूपोऽद्य रघोः कुलेऽभूत् ॥ ५९॥

yadvā na rāmo manujahḥ pareśo māṃ hantukāmaḥ sabalaṃ balaughaiḥ । samprārthito'yaṃ druhiṇena pūrvam manuṣyarūpo'dya raghoḥ kule'bhūt ॥ 59॥

In all probabilities it appears that Sri Ram is a personification of Supreme Being himself, who has, on the prayers (request) of Brahma, the creator, in some previous time, manifested himself in a human form in king Raghu's dynasty of Ayodhya, to kill me along with my army of demons by employing an army of monkeys specifically arranged for the purpose. (59)

वध्यो यदि स्यां परमात्मनाहं वैकुण्ठराज्यं परिपालयेऽहम् ।
नो वेदिदं राक्षसराज्यमेव भोक्ष्ये चिरं राममतो व्रजामि ॥ ६०॥

vadhyo yadi syāṃ paramātmanāhaṃ vaikunṭharājyaṃ paripālaye'ham ।
no ceditaṃ rākṣasarājyameva bhokṣye ciraṃ rāmamato vrajāmi ॥ 60॥

If I am indeed killed by the Parmatma (the Supreme Lord) himself, then surely enough I shall enjoy the kingdom of heaven (i.e. I will find deliverance from this gross mundane world and go to heaven).

On the other hand, if Ram is not the Supreme Being as I doubt but an ordinary human prince, then I will be easily able to overcome him and take revenge for my sister's insult as well as the killing of Khar and Dushan and their demon army. If this turns out to be the case then I will continue to enjoy the kingdom of the demons and be their unchallenged sovereign for a long time to come. [I will also be able to retrieve the lost honour of the demons which has now been put under severe test after my sister's public humiliation and the killing of the demon army led by Khar and Dushan.]

Therefore I stand to gain both the ways. Hence, I will certainly go to Sri Ram and have a face-off with the Lord (to decide this matter once and for all).' (60)

इत्थं विचिन्त्याखिलराक्षसेन्द्रो रामं विदित्वा परमेश्वरं हरिम् ।
विरोधबुद्ध्यैव हरिं प्रयामि द्रुतं न भक्त्या भगवान् प्रसीदेत् ॥ ६१॥

ittham vicintyākhilarākṣasendro rāmaṃ viditvā parameśvaraṃ harim । virodhabuddhyaiva hariṃ prayāmi drutaṃ na bhaktyā bhagavān prasīdet ॥
61॥

Ravana, who was a king of the whole of the demon race, deeply contemplated over the matter thus, and coming to the conclusion that Lord Sri Ram was none other than true a personification of the Parmatma, known by the name of Hari (Lord Vishnu), himself, he decided that he will go near the Lord even with a pretension of enmity, ill-will and maliciousness, because for him to do it (i.e. approach Lord Ram) with Bhakti (spiritual devotion) or with any other noble qualities such as righteousness and spiritualism, is very difficult.

Ravana also felt that his life had been so sinful and vile that the Lord cannot be easily pleased with him by the method of Bhakti or good virtues.

[In the first place, he will not be able to practice these eclectic spiritual paths as he is not at all accustomed to leading a spiritual life of goodness and righteousness, and in the second place, it is too late for him even if he decides to do it now. By any measure, if he is able to maneuver things now in such a way that he comes close to the Supreme Being in a way best known to him and to which he is well accustomed, i.e. by creating animosity and ill-will and hatred, then the same objective of his spiritual welfare would be easily and comfortably achieved when the Lord slays his evil body to set his soul free. It was therefore easy and practical for Ravana to fight with Lord Ram in order to attain his liberation and deliverance rather than attempting to pursue any other spiritual methods towards this end.] (61)

[Note—In Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65 we read that Ravana had kept Sita with great respect. We will read it herein below.

This proves that though outwardly Ravana had played his role as a truly vicious, ferocious and ruthless tyrant who was demon, both cruel and belligerent, yet internally he was at peace with himself, sure in the conviction that finally, his redemption, emancipation and salvation was at hand, and that too in a manner that suited his mental temperament and tendencies of a demon. The deliverance for which mystics, ascetics, sages, hermits, seers, saints had to do so much austerities and penances was available to him virtually on a platter without the incumbent sufferings and hardships. Further, the Lord is attainable by honest and sincere confession, and not by deception, and Ravana wins the game hands down on this count.]

(b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65:-

ततः समुद्रमुल्लङ्घ्य लङ्कां गत्वा स रावणः ।
 स्वान्तःपुरे रहस्ये तामशोकविपिनेऽक्षिपत् ।
 राक्षसीभिः परिवृतां मातृबुद्ध्यान्वपालयत् ॥ ६५॥

tataḥ samudramullaṅghya laṅkāṃ gatvā sa rāvaṇaḥ ।
 svāntaḥpure rahasye tāmaśokavipine'kṣipat ।
 rākṣasībhiḥ parivr̥tāṃ mātṛbuddhyānvapālayat ॥ 65॥

Eventually (after abducting Sita), Ravana crossed the ocean and reached Lanka. There in his palace, he placed her (Sita) in a secluded place called ‘Ashok Van (a garden of Ashoka trees; or a garden which was so beautiful and comfortable that it removed all the sorrows)’.

He appointed demonesses to guard Sita; and he protected her and kept a strict vigil on her as if she was his own mother (mātṛbuddhyānvapālayat)¹.

[To wit, Ravana made sure that Sita was made as comfortable in the given situation as it was practically feasible.] (65).

[Note—¹The fact that Ravana had shown the same respect to Sita as he would have shown his own mother in case he was forced by circumstances to keep her in confinement in his garden has also been narrated in almost a similar language in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, stanza no. 1 of verse no. 126, and verse no. 139. We have already read this version of the story in Part 1, Chapter 2, Section 2.1 of our Book where the story of Ravana from the Anand Ramayan has been narrated in its entirety.]

(c) Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 29-42, 54-59:-

अथान्यां सम्प्रवक्ष्यामि कथां राम त्वदाश्रयाम् ।
 सीता हता यदर्थं सा रावणेन दुरात्मना ॥ २९॥
 पुरा कृतयुगे राम प्रजापतिसुतं विभुम् ।
 सनत्कुमारमेकान्ते समासीनं दशाननः । विनयावनतो भूत्वा ह्यभिवाद्येदमब्रवीत् ॥ ३०॥

athānyāṃ sampravakṣyāmi kathāṃ rāma tvadāśrayām । sītā hr̥tā yadarthaṃ sā rāvaṇena durātmanā ॥ 29॥ purā kṛtayuge rāma prajāpatisutaṃ vibhum । sanatkumāramekānte samāsīnaṃ daśānanaḥ । vinayāvanato bhūtvā hyabhivādyedamabravit ॥ 30॥

[Sage Agastya said to Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord Ram, now I shall narrate to you one more story that concerns you, and it will enlighten you about the reason why the wicked demon Ravana had abducted Sita. (29)

Once upon a time, during the Satyug (the first of the 4-Yuga celestial cycle of creation and destruction), Ravana, the 10-headed one, approached Brahma's son Sanatkumar who was sitting alone, and said to him most politely¹ (30)—

[Note—¹Refer also to Part 1, Chapter 2, Section no. 2.1 of our Book where this episode of Ravana meeting sage Sanatkumar has been narrated in full in verse nos. 120-126 (stanza no. 1).]

को न्वस्मिन् प्रवरो लोके देवानां बलवत्तरः ।
 देवाश्च यं समाश्रित्य युद्धे शत्रुं जयन्ति हि ॥ ३१॥
 कं यजन्ति द्विजा नित्यं कं ध्यायन्ति च योगिनः । एतन्मे शंस भगवन् प्रश्नं प्रश्नविदांवर ॥ ३२॥ ko nvasmin pravaro loke devānām balavattaraḥ । devāśca yaṁ samāśritya yuddhe śatruṁ jayanti hi ॥ 31॥ kaṁ yajanti dvijā nityaṁ kaṁ dhyāyanti ca yoginaḥ । etanme śaṁsa bhagavan praśnaṁ praśnavidāmvara ॥ 32॥

‘Who is that God who is deemed to be the best amongst all the Gods; who is that God who is the bravest, the strongest and the most valiant amongst them all, and by seeking whose protection (or shelter) all the other Gods are able to vanquish all their enemies and opponents in a battle? (31)

Whom do the Brahmins adore, worship and pay their homage to, and who is the Great One who is the subject of meditation that is done by Yogis (ascetics)?

Oh Lord! You are the best amongst those who know the answers to all possible questions (i.e. you are an expert in general knowledge and possess extraordinary wisdom, and I think that you are the best person who can answer my questions). Hence, please answer my query (to remove my confusions in the matter).’ (32)

ज्ञात्वा तस्य हृदिस्थं यत्तदशेषेण योगदृक् । दशाननमुवाचेदं शृणु वक्ष्यामि पुत्रक ॥ ३३॥

jñātvā tasya hr̥disthaṁ yattadaśeṣeṇa yogadr̥k । daśānanamuvācedaṁ śṛṇu vakṣyāmi putraka ॥ 33॥

Sage Sanatkumar thought over the matter, and by the intuitive feeling that this wise and sagacious sage inherently possessed, which was aided by the mystical power of being able to have a deep insight into things and be able to read the mind of the other person that he had acquired by the virtue of doing Yoga (meditation), he immediately realized the intention of Ravana in asking these questions¹.

He said to Ravana, ‘Listen son. I am answering your questions. (33)

[Note—¹Sage Sanatkumar realized that the secret intention of Ravana in asking these questions was quite different from what it appears to be on the face of it. Apparently Ravana seems to have asked this question to determine which senior God he must now vanquish in order to establish his unchallenged and unquestioned sovereignty over the whole of heaven and the rest of the creation; if he succeeds in subjugating the Supreme God who is the Lord of this creation, then surely and certainly there would be no one to challenge his authority any longer. He has been doing it for a long time—picking one God after another and vanquishing them one by one. Yet the secret intention of Ravana was quite different.

But his real motivation was different, and it was noble. By now Ravana had understood that the evil life he has been living will condemn his soul forever, for he was learned and wise enough to realize that no matter what boon he had got or may get in the future yet it is an irrevocable law of creation that whosoever has taken a birth must die, and when this happens the destiny of that creature depends upon the deeds done by him during his lifetime; no one is immortal and no one can escape the result of his deeds.

Though he had enjoyed all the worldly privileges and material gains that a creature can possibly have in this mortal world, and more so because he had the backing of the boons granted to him which made him a de-facto sovereign Authority in the world whom not even the Gods could challenge, but internally he had, of late, begun to harbour a secret fear for the doomed destiny of his soul. When he was alone he would think over the matter and become pensive and worried. He decided that he must do something if he wished that his soul could rest in peace in his final days.

He had also realized that it is not possible for him to pursue any of the paths enumerated in the scriptures by which the soul attains liberation and deliverance, and all possible means of emancipation and salvation seemed to be blocked for him. Therefore, he must now adopt a path which best suits him—pursue his spiritual objectives not by any of the holy and righteous means designated by the scriptures, such as Yoga (meditation), Yagya (sacrifices), Tapa (austerity and penance), Dhyan (contemplation), Bhakti (devotion for Lord God), Puja (worship), Vairagya (renunciation), Gyan (gnosis, acquiring spiritual wisdom and enlightenment), and etc., but by following the path that seems to be his natural habit, the path of wickedness and evil done to such an extreme extent that it would force the Supreme Lord to come to him to provide him with deliverance from his sinful body of a demon, and thereby liberate his soul. Further, since he would die at the hands of the Supreme Being who is most gracious, merciful, kind, compassionate and benevolent, it is absolutely certain that the Lord would take care of the welfare of his soul—i.e. he would be granted emancipation and salvation, even if it is done by default, because no one can go to hell in the presence of the Lord, and no one's soul is ever condemned by the Lord, for it the Lord himself had declared and solemnly affirmed that he is responsible for the spiritual welfare of all those who come to him in any way and under any condition!

To wit, sage Sanatkumar could read the thoughts of Ravana when he asked these questions. The sage felt glad that Ravana wished to meet the Supreme Being with the noble intention, albeit a secret one, of silent self-surrender before the Lord and seeking the blessing of liberation and deliverance for his soul. The sage took pity on Ravana, and was happy that he would be able to play the vital role of a spiritual guide to help a fallen creature (in this case Ravana) to discover the path of redemption in a way that suits his inclinations and temperament the best.]

भर्ता यो जगतां नित्यं यस्य जन्मादिकं न हि ।
 सुरासुरैर्नुतो नित्यं हरिर्नारायणोऽव्ययः ॥ ३४॥
 यन्नाभिपङ्कजाज्जातो ब्रह्मा विश्वसृजां पतिः ।
 सृष्टं येनैव सकलं जगत्स्थावरजङ्गमम् ॥ ३५॥
 तं समाश्रित्य विबुधा जयन्ति समरे रिपून् । योगिनो ध्यानयोगेन तमेवानुजपन्ति हि ॥ ३६॥

bhartā yo jagatām nityam yasya janmādikam na hi । surāsuirnuto nityam harirnārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ ॥ 34॥ yannābhīpaṅkajājjāto brahmā viśvasrjām patiḥ । sṛṣṭam yenaiva sakalam jagatsthāvarajaṅgamam ॥ 35॥ tam samāśritya vibudhā jayanti samare ripūn । yogino dhyānayogena tamevānujapanti hi ॥ 36॥

He who always sustains and nourishes the whole creation, he who neither takes birth nor dies, he who is eternally adored, worshipped and honoured by the Gods as well as the demons alike, he who is imperishable, eternal, never-changing and stable—the name of this Supreme Lord of the world is Sri Narayan Hari (i.e. Lord Vishnu). (34)

Even Brahma, the creator of this whole creation, had been born out of the divine lotus that had emerged out of his (Lord Vishnu's) navel¹.

It is this Lord Hari (Vishnu) who has created this whole world consisting of animate as well as inanimate things, i.e. a world so varied and diverse in its constituents that on the one hand it has entities that show apparent signs of vibrant life by the virtue of their movement, such as the animals and birds, and on the other hand it has such entities as trees and mountains that are immobile and show no apparent signs of any life in them but are nevertheless components of equal importance in this creation. (35)

It is 'his' strength relying upon which the Gods conquer all their enemies in any battle; it is 'his' holy name that the Yogis (ascetics) repeat during their religious practices such as meditation and contemplation; and it is 'he' who is worshipped, glorified and honoured by them.' (36).

[Note—¹It has been said in the Purans, the ancient mythological narratives of the Hindu religion, that a lotus emerged from the navel of Lord Vishnu as he was reclining on the coiled body of Seshnath, the celestial serpent who floated on the surface of the Kshirsagar, the ocean of milk that existed at the beginning of creation. This lotus had a long stem, and atop it sat Brahma who would become the 'creator of the physical world'. That implies that Lord Vishnu existed prior to Brahma, and he was the primary Being, or the Supreme Being, from whom everything else was born.

From the metaphysical perspective as elucidated in the Upanishads, this Supreme Being is called 'Brahm', and he is nothing but pure cosmic supreme Consciousness in a personified form. It is this 'Consciousness' that metamorphosed into three primary forms known as Brahma the creator, Vishnu the sustainer and protector, and Shiva the concluder—who form the three Gods of the Trinity. Actually it is the same supreme Brahm, or the same cosmic Consciousness, that is playing three different roles—of creation, its sustenance, and its conclusion in three distinct forms of Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva. To wit, these three Gods were the first revelation of Brahm. Since Brahma was born first, he assumed the name of his own parent, i.e. ‘Brahm’ became ‘Brahma’. Vishnu is placed in the center of the Trinity Gods—to imply that he is ‘central’ to the entire spectrum of Gods and creation. Shiva is placed last, i.e. he is the third God of the Trinity, to indicate that he stands for the ‘end’ of this vast creation.]

महर्षेर्वचनं श्रुत्वा प्रत्युवाच दशाननः ।
 दैत्यदानवरक्षांसि विष्णुना निहतानि च ॥ ३७॥
 कां वा गतिं प्रपद्यन्ते प्रेत्य ते मुनिपुङ्गव । तमुवाच मुनिश्रेष्ठो रावणं राक्षसाधिपम् ॥ ३८॥ maharṣervacanam śrutvā pratyuvāca daśānanaḥ । daityadānavarakṣāṁsi viṣṇunā nihatāni ca ॥ 37॥ kāṁ vā gatiṁ prapadyante pretya te munipuṅgava । tamuvāca munisreṣṭho rāvaṇam rākṣasāधिपam ॥ 38॥

Hearing these words of the great sage Sanatkumar, the 10-headed Ravana asked once again, ‘Oh exalted sage! What is the fate of those demons, devils, ogres and all others who are like Satan, if they are killed by Vishnu?’¹

[¹Ravana wanted to be certain of his destiny by asking this question. This question itself proves that before he decided to create animosity with Lord Vishnu, who had manifested in the form of Lord Ram, he wished to be certain about the fate of those who were killed by the Lord.]

Then the sage, who was the best amongst the sages (i.e. Sanatkumar), replied to Ravana, the king of demons (37-38)—

दैवतैर्निहता नित्यं गत्वा स्वर्गमनुत्तमम् ।
 भोगक्षये पुनस्तस्माद्भ्रष्टा भूमौ भवन्ति ते ॥ ३९॥
 पूर्वार्जितैः पुण्यपापैर्म्रियन्ते चोद्भवन्ति च ।
 विष्णुना ये हतास्ते तु प्राप्नुवन्ति हरेर्गतिम् ॥ ४०॥ daivatairnihatā nityaṁ gatvā svargamanuttamam । bhogakṣaye punastasmādbhraṣṭā bhūmau bhavanti te ॥ 39॥ pūrvārjitaiḥ puṇyapāpaimriyante codbhavanti ca । viṣṇunā ye hatāste tu prāpnuvanti harergatim ॥ 40॥

‘When they (the demons etc.) are killed by other Gods (i.e. when they are slayed by any other God except Lord Vishnu), they go to a heaven which is the best amongst all the places to go after death. There, they live for as long as their destiny determines for their heavenly abode. After this period, they revert back (or fall back) to the terrestrial world (the earth) where they had lived prior to their death. (39)

As a result, they fall back and get sucked into the cycle of birth and death like any other creature who takes birth and die repeatedly in a virtually endless cycle that makes them oscillate between this world and the next depending upon the deeds, whether evil or good, done by them in a particular life.

On the contrary, those who die at the hands of Lord Vishnu do not enter this cycle, and instead, they attain liberation and deliverance from the grip of this vicious cycle; they get emancipation and salvation, and find eternal happiness by residing in the supreme abode of the Lord himself—i.e. they find eternity for their soul by merging it with the supreme Soul represented by the Lord himself.¹ (40)

[Note—¹To wit, when any creature, no matter how evil or sinful it may have been, dies at the hands of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, then such fortunate creatures do indeed attain the exalted abode of the Lord himself, because when the Lord frees the soul of such creatures from the cage of their sinful bodies he also makes sure that the soul would never have to suffer again by getting trapped into another sinful body.

The Lord feels obliged to grant emancipation and salvation to the creature whom he kills because he feels that in spite of the creature being sinful and evil he has after all come to him in order to fight with him, and how can anyone who gets so close to the Lord as to fight with him at close quarters not be rewarded for this rare privilege of being so close to the Supreme Being? Say, how can something remain dark in the light of the sun; how can a caring father turn away his face away when he sees his son in great misery, irrespective of the fact that this son had been creating a lot of mischief for him throughout his life?

Verily indeed, the Supreme Being, when he sees the lamentable state of the evil creature at the time of its death, is so much moved that he forgets about the creature's follies and mischief, and instead shows his basic nature of being a forgiving and benevolent Lord who overlooks all the shortcomings of everyone and is always willing to grant them pardon.

The Lord takes pity on this dying creature whom he was forced to kill because this individual had become a scourge for the whole world and was tormenting all other creatures of this creation. Since all the creatures are the subjects of the Lord's kingdom, he was forced to intervene to eliminate one individual in order to ensure peace and safety for all others. And therefore, though this sinful creature does not deserve any consideration or mercy, yet the Lord is so benevolent, forgiving, kind and merciful that he can't but desist from overlooking all the follies and sins of the creature at least for once, and grant the latter's soul the benefit of the Lord's divine grace and the largesse of the Lord's blessings at the time of death.]

श्रुत्वा मुनिमुखात्सर्वं शवणो हृष्टमानसः ।
 योत्स्येऽहं हरिणा सार्धमिति चिन्तापरोऽभवत् ॥ ४१॥ मनःस्थितं परिज्ञाय शवणस्य महामुनिः । उवाच वत्स तेऽभीष्टं भविष्यति न संशयः ॥ ४२॥

śrutvā munimukhātsarvaṃ rāvaṇo hr̥ṣṭamānasah |
 yotsye'haṃ hariṇā sārddhamiti cintāparo'bhavat || 41 ||
 manaḥsthitam̄ parijñāya rāvaṇasya mahāmuniḥ |
 uvāca vatsa te'bhīṣṭam̄ bhaviṣyati na samśayaḥ || 42 ||

Hearing these words from the mouth of the sage (śrutvā munimukhātsarvaṃ), Ravana was very pleased and he felt glad internally.

After contemplating for some time and debating upon the matter in his mind he decided that he will certainly fight with Sri Hari¹.

[¹To wit, Ravana took a firm decision in his mind that he will purposely create ill-will, hatred and enmity with Lord Vishnu which would definitely lead to a confrontation with the Lord, and ultimate death at his hands. Say, how fortunate would he be, thought Ravana, to get killed by the Lord, as this would ensure liberation and deliverance of his soul without any effort on his part and without any question about his past deeds asked.] (41)

The great sage had an insight into the thought processes of Ravana, and so he said, 'Oh son! There is no doubt that your wishes shall be fulfilled!'²

[²Refer: Verse no. 33 herein above.] (42)

अथवा द्रष्टुमिच्छा ते शृणु त्वं परमेश्वरम् । त्रेतायुगे स देवेशो भविता नृपविग्रहः ॥ ५४ ॥
 हितार्थं देवमर्त्यानामिक्ष्वाकूणां कुले हरिः । रामो दाशरथिर्भूत्वा महासत्त्वपराक्रमः ॥ ५५ ॥

athavā draṣṭumicchā te śrṇu tvaṃ parameśvaram |
 tretāyuge sa deveśo bhavitā nṛpavigrahaḥ || 54 ||
 hitārtham̄ devamartyānāmikṣvākūṇām̄ kule hariḥ |
 rāmo dāśarathirbhūtvā mahāsattvaparākramaḥ || 55 ||

Sage Sanatkumar further advised Ravana as follows: 'Now, listen—if you indeed have a sincere desire to have a holy vision of the Supreme Lord, then that Lord of Gods shall manifest (or take birth) in the body (or in the form) of a king [54] for the benefit and welfare of both the Gods as well as the humans. The Lord shall be born as a son of king Dasrath who is a descendent in the family of the great king Ikshwaku of Ayodhya.

Then (i.e. when this happens in the near future) Sri Hari (Lord Vishnu) shall be called by the name of Lord Sri Ram, who shall be most truthful, righteous, noble, mighty, powerful, valiant, famous and glorious in all respects [55]. (54-55)

पितुर्नियोगात्स भ्रात्रा भार्यया दण्डके वने ।
 विचरिष्यति धर्मात्मा जगन्माता स्वमायया ॥ ५६ ॥
 एवं ते सर्वमाख्यातं मया रावण विस्तरात् ।

भजस्व भक्तिभावेन सदा रामं श्रिया युतम् ॥ ५७॥ piturniyogātsa bhrātrā bhāryayā daṇḍake vane । vicariṣyati dharmātmā jaganmātrā svamāyayā ॥ 56॥ evaṁ te sarvamākhyātaṁ mayā rāvaṇa vistarāt । bhajasva bhaktibhāvena sadā rāmaṁ śriyā yutam ॥ 57॥

That righteous and noble Lord shall, on the instructions of his father, wander in the forest called Dandakaranya along with his brother (Laxman) and consort (Sita) who is, in reality, the Mother of the entire creation as well as a manifested form of the Lord's Maya (i.e. the Lord's cosmic powers of creating delusions). (56)

Oh Ravana! In this way, I have briefly told you the essential facts of the matter. Now you should constantly worship and adore (i.e. remember and have faith in) Lord Sri Ram along with his divine consort Laxmi (in the form of Sita); you must do so with sincerity of devotion, and you must have full conviction, faith and belief in this matter¹. (57)

[Note—¹Sage Sanatkumar, as has been previously noted in verse nos. 33 and 42, had already been aware of Ravana's hidden desires—that he wanted to ensure liberation and deliverance of his soul by some mean. When Ravana learnt that those who are killed by Lord Vishnu find eternal liberation as stated by Sanatkumar in verse no. 40, he decided that it is the best option for him as it suits his temperament and way of life, for he loves fighting and action as opposed to peaceful means of obtaining salvation and emancipation. The all-knowing sage could read his inner thoughts, so he now tells Ravana how to go about his mission and attain success in it.

It is clear by now that Ravana was fully aware who Lord Ram and Sita were when he decided to abduct the latter and fight with the former in due course of time. He knew that Lord Ram was in fact Lord Vishnu, and Sita was the Lord's Maya or goddess Laxmi personified. So though outwardly Ravana acted like a highly pervert, immoral, sinful and wicked demon during the entire episode starting with the abduction of Sita and leading up to the fierce war of Lanka which ultimately ended in his death at the hands of Lord Ram, internally he was very glad that it is happening the way he had planned already—as he had voluntarily selected this means of attaining liberation and deliverance for himself as well as for all other demons who stood by him and were faithful to him.

Remember: Not all demons died during the war, even Ravana's own brother Vibhishan lived. Ravana ensured that all those who were extremely sinful like him should free their souls first, as those who had some goodness left in them would be able to attain emancipation on their own accord when their time comes, so they can wait.]

अगस्त्य उवाच ।
 एवं श्रुत्वासुराध्यक्षो ध्यात्वा किञ्चिद्विचार्य च ।
 त्वया सह विरोधेऽसुर्मुमुदे रावणो महान् ॥ ५८॥
 युद्धार्थं सर्वतो लोकान् पर्यटन् समवस्थितः ।

एतदर्थं महाराज रावणोऽतीव बुद्धिमान् ।
हृत्वान् जानकीं देवीं त्वयात्मवधकाङ्क्षया ॥ ५९॥ agastya uvāca ।

evam śrutvāsuraḍhyakṣo dhyātvā kiñcidvicārya ca । tvayā saha virodhepsurmumude rāvaṇo mahān ॥ 58॥ yuddhārthī sarvato lokān paryaṭan samavasthitaḥ । etadarthaṁ mahārāja rāvaṇo'tīva buddhimān । hr̥tavān jānakīm devīm tvayātmavadhakāṅkṣayā ॥ 59॥

Sage Agastya (who was the primary narrator of these events) said to Lord Ram, ‘Oh Ram! After hearing what Sanatkumar had told him, the king of demons, the great Ravana, pondered over it for some time, and finally decided that he would pretend to have enmity with you.

Having decided thus (to be your enemy), he felt extremely glad and delighted in his heart¹. (58)

He (Ravana) roamed about in this whole world waiting eagerly for the time when he can fight a battle with you. So therefore, oh Great King (Lord Ram), Ravana, who was very wise, had abducted goddess Sita purposely with the express desire to get killed at your hands.’ (59)

[Note—¹Ravana was extremely glad and delighted because it was an easy way for him to achieve emancipation and salvation with a body of a demon destined to do evil deeds and follow unrighteous path. By opposing Sri Ram, he will have cleverly played his part of the drama to perfection even as Sri Ram had played his own part as a human. Ravana was spared the trouble of severe hardships undergone by sages and hermits when they did Yoga, Dhyan, Tapa, Yagya, etc.

All spiritual paths that provide liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the creature and grant eternal peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity to his soul were almost closed for Ravana. His life and deeds were so sinful and fallen that he had no chance ever of redemption. He was so much accustomed to doing wrong and wicked deeds that stealing a person’s wife and fighting with him if he seeks her back were something that suited him well. So he chose this easy path for his redemption, instead of trying other paths in which he was bound to fail. This easy path would be in accordance to his nature and temperament as it would allow him to enjoy the comforts of the material world and the sensual pleasures of the body while at the same time ensuring his salvation by getting killed by Lord Ram.

His determination to get killed by Lord Ram as a means of obtaining liberation and deliverance for his soul is clearly evident on numerous occasions when he refused the advice given by those very close to him, such as Vibhishan and Kumbhakarna (his brothers), Mandodari (his wife), and some of the other elderly demons such as Kalnemi, Malyawan, Marich etc., to return Sita to Lord Ram to avoid the ruinous war. This is also why he was so reckless, brazen and stubborn in his approach.

In this context one can refer to the following verses of Adhyatma Ramayan: (i) Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61, (ii) Aranya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 30-32,

(iii) Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65, (iv) Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 55-61.]

(d) Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 1-11.

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

एकदा ब्रह्मणो लोकादायान्तं नारदं मुनिम् ।
पर्यटन् रावणो लोकान् दृष्ट्वा नत्वाब्रवीद्वचः ॥ १॥
भगवन् ब्रूहि मे योद्धुं कुत्र सन्ति महाबलाः ।
योद्धुमिच्छामि बलिभिस्त्वं ज्ञातासि जगत्त्रयम् ॥ २॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

ekadā brahmaṇo lokādāyāntaṁ nāradaṁ munim । paryaṭan rāvaṇo lokān dr̥ṣṭvā natvābravidvacaḥ ॥ 1॥
bhagavan brūhi me yoddhum̐ kutra santi mahābalāḥ ।
yoddhumicchāmi balibhistvaṁ jñātāsi jagattrayam ॥ 2॥

Lord Shiva said to his consort—‘Oh Parvati! While wandering in the different worlds, one day Ravana saw the celestial sage Narad coming from the Brahma Loka (the abode of Brahma, the creator of this gross physical world). He bowed before the sage and politely said to him¹ (1), ---

---‘Oh Lord! I wish to fight a duel with those who are very brave, strong and courageous. You are well acquainted with the three worlds (the celestial, terrestrial and subterranean worlds). So please tell me who is fit and strong enough to fight with me.’ (2)

[Note—¹Ravana’s meeting with sage Narad has also been narrated in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 126 (stanza no. 2)—139. This is included in our Book in Part 1, Chapter 2, Section 2.1.]

मुनिर्ध्याऽऽत्वाह सुचिरं श्वेतद्वीपनिवासिनः ।
महाबला महाकायास्तत्र याहि महामते ॥ ३॥
विष्णुपूजाराता ये वै विष्णुना निहताश्च ये । त एव तत्र सञ्जाता अजेयाश्च सुरासुरैः ॥ ४॥ munirdhyā"tvāha suciraṁ śvetadvīpanivāsinaḥ ।

mahābalā mahākāyāstatra yāhi mahāmate ॥ 3॥
viṣṇupūjāratā ye vai viṣṇunā nihatāśca ye ।

ta eva tatra sañjātā ajeyāśca surāsuraiḥ ॥ 4॥

The sage thought for a while and replied, ‘Oh the wise one (mahāmate)! Inhabitants of an island called ‘Shweta-Dwip’ (literally, the island inhabited by fair-skinned people) are very strong and brave; they are robust, and possess huge and powerful bodies. You should go there (3).

Those who constantly (regularly and consistently) worship and adore Lord Vishnu, or those who had been killed by him earlier with his own hands—they are the only ones who have taken birth there.

They cannot be won or subdued by anyone, neither by the Gods, nor by the demons.’ (4)

श्रुत्वा तद्रावणो वेगान्मन्त्रिभिः पुष्पकेण तान् ।
योद्धुकामः समागत्य श्वेतद्वीपसमीपतः ॥ ५॥
तत्प्रभाहततेजस्कं पुष्पकं नाचलततः ।
त्यक्त्वा विमानं प्रययौ मन्त्रिणश्च दशाननः ॥ ६॥ śrutvā tadrāvaṇo vegānmantribhiḥ puṣpakeṇa tān । yoddhukāmaḥ samāgatya śvetadvīpasamīpataḥ ॥ 5॥ tatprabhāhatatejaskaṁ puṣpakaṁ nācalattataḥ । tyaktvā vimānaṁ prayayau mantriṇaśca daśānanaḥ ॥ 6॥

Hearing this, Ravana, along with his ministers, immediately boarded the plane called Pushpak and went near the island called Shweta-Dwip¹. (5)

The plane lost its flying powers in the face of a brilliant radiation emanating from that island. So, Ravana left the plane and the ministers behind, and went ahead on his own (alone, on foot). (6)

[Note—¹This episode of Ravana going to the Shweta-Dwip when told about it by sage Narad, and the developments that occurred there have also been narrated in exactly the same way as is being narrated here in Adhyatma Ramayan, in the ‘Anand Ramayan’, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 127-139.

For reference, the reader should see Part 1, Chapter 2, Section 2.1 of this Book.]

प्रविशन्नेव तद् द्वीपं धृतो हस्तेन योषिता ।
पृष्टश्च त्वं कुतः कोऽसि प्रेषितः केन वा वद ॥ ७॥
इत्युक्तो लीलया स्त्रीभिर्हसन्तीभिः पुनः पुनः ।
कृच्छ्राद्धस्तादृनिर्मुक्तस्तासां स्त्रीणां दशाननः ॥ ८॥ praviśanneva tad dvīpaṁ dhr̥ṭo hastena yoṣitā । pr̥ṣṭaśca tvaṁ kutaḥ ko'si preṣitaḥ kena vā vada ॥ 7॥ ityukto līlayā strībhirhasantībhiḥ punaḥ punaḥ । krcchrāddhastādvinirmuktastāsām strīṇām daśānanaḥ ॥ 8॥

Scarcely had he entered the island when a woman caught hold of his hands and asked, 'Tell me who are you? Where have you come from? Who has sent you here?' (7)

In this manner, many women joked, teased, and poked fun at him, and he managed to free himself from them with great difficulty. [Surely, Ravana must have felt extremely embarrassed, exasperated and humiliated at this treatment. All his self-pride, ego and dignity bit dust.] (8)

आश्चर्यमतुलं लब्ध्वा चिन्तयामास दुर्मतिः ।
 विष्णुना निहतो यामि वैकुण्ठमिति निश्चितः ॥ ९॥ मयि विष्णुर्यथा कुप्येतथा कार्यं करोम्यहम् ।
 इति निश्चित्य वैदेहीं जहार विपिनेऽसुरः ॥ १०॥
 जानन्नेव परात्मानं स जहारावनीसुताम् ।
 मातृवत्पालयामास त्वत्तः काङ्क्षन् वधं स्वकम् ॥ ११॥ āścaryamatulam labdhvā cintayāmāsa durmatīḥ । viṣṇunā nihato yāmi vaikunṭhamiti niścitaḥ ॥ 9॥

 mayi viṣṇuryathā kupyettathā kāryaṁ karomyaham ।
 iti niścitya vaidehīm jahāra vipine'suraḥ ॥ 10॥ jānanneva parātmānaṁ sa jahārāvanīsutām । mātrvatpālayāmāsa tvattaḥ kāṅkṣan vadhaṁ svakam ॥ 11॥

He was extremely perturbed and astonished at seeing all this, and that wicked fellow thought to himself, 'I shall die at the hands of Vishnu and be sure to go to Vaikunth (the abode of Lord Vishnu)¹.

[¹Why? Because then, when time comes, I shall also take birth in this magnificent place, and become as strong and invincible as the inhabitants living here. Sage Narad has told me that those who are killed by Lord Vishnu reside here, so therefore I too must get myself killed by Vishnu so that I too would come to live here. Indeed, the people of this extraordinarily wonderful land are more powerful than me as is evident from the courage and fearlessness shown by their ordinary women folk. Why, no other living creature in this world would have ever dreamt of treating me with such causal approach and with lack of any fear as these ladies have done just now. Surely they are more powerful and strong than what we demons are. They have treated me with complete disdain, and they I felt helpless when they grasped my hands in a vice-like grip. Oh my; how much insulted do I feel. Shame to me and to the demon race that I could not take revenge for the humiliation I was subjected to for the first time in my life by these ordinary women. Woe to me, and shame to my claim to being the mighty king of the demon race since I could not protect even my own self-respect!] (9)

So I must do something which will enrage Lord Vishnu and incite him against me.’

That demon had stolen Vaidehi (Sita) from the forest because of this decision (that he would do things that would make Lord Vishnu so angry that the Lord would come and kill him). (10)

Oh Lord Sri Ram! Desirous of getting himself killed at your hands (because you are an incarnation of Lord Vishnu), he had purposely abducted Sita.

[Being fully aware that he is bringing the cosmic Mother of this creation, who was the divine consort of Lord Vishnu who himself is the Supreme Being, and not an ordinary princess of a human prince when he abducted Sita, Ravana took all precautions to ensure that she is shown all due regard and honour that befits her exalted stature as Mother Goddess.]

So therefore, when he brought her to Lanka he took great care to look after her as if she was his own mother while she was in his captivity even as he knew, while taking her away, that you are not an ordinary human but the Parmatma, the Supreme Being known as Lord Vishnu who is the Supreme Soul and cosmic Consciousness personified. [This being the case, he was sure that Sita was none other than goddess Laxmi, the divine consort of Lord Vishnu.]² (11)

[Note—² (i) The fact that he kept Sita with due regard to her as his own mother and divine goddess is also clear earlier in Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse 65. Please also refer to my note in verse no. 58, Canto 3 of Uttar Kand. (ii) Verse no. 9-11 describe the first-hand experience of Ravana as to what sort of place he expects to live in if he dies at the hands of Vishnu; see verse nos. 3-4.

So, he became all the more determined to brazenly follow his chosen path of confrontation with Vishnu, because he thought that even if emancipation, deliverance and salvation was not possible for him in spite of dying at the hands of Vishnu due to the treasury of sins and misdeeds that he has accumulated, then at least he will enjoy life ‘King-size’ in this Shweta-Dwip!]

-----**-----

Section 5.1.2:

Anand Ramayan

The Anand Ramayan gives a version of the reason why Ravana stole Sita that is exactly like the one we have read herein above in Adhyatma Ramayan in the previous Section 5.1.1.

The reader must have already read Anand Ramayan’s version in detail in this Book, in Part 1, Chapter 2, Section 2.1 where the full story of Ravana from Anand Ramayan has been narrated. To be specific, this subject is described in Anand Ramayan’s Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 120-139 where we read about Ravana’s meeting with the two great sages Sanatkumar and Narad.

Since Anand Ramayan's version has already been narrated earlier as stated herein above, we will skip it here in order to avoid repetition, and move on to the next Section 5.1.3 which describes why Ravana stole Sita as explained in another classic version of the story, i.e. in Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas.

-----**-----

Section 5.1.3:

Ram Charit Manas

Goswami Tulsidas' great classic story of Lord Ram's life and time, called the epic Ram Charit Manas, gives the reason why Ravana decided to abduct Sita in its Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.

The reason given in Ram Charit Manas is the same as the one given in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 57-61. We have already read about Adhyatma Ramayan in the previous Section 5.1.1, and so now we shall read the version from Ram Charit Manas herein below. The reader should note that the context is also the same in both these Ramayans, viz. Supernakha's entreaty with Ravana to take revenge upon Lord Ram who had deformed and gravely insulted her by cutting off her nose and ears, something that had resulted in humiliation of the entire demon race, and if Ravana neglects it for any reason whatsoever then it would certainly adversely affect his reputation and dignity.

Ravana became excessively alarmed, and intuitively he realized that there is much more than what meets the eye. After all it was not a joke for someone to openly challenge his authority by insulting his own sister Supernakha, and then when the demons Khar and Dushan, who were Ravana's maternal aunt's sons whom he had assigned the task to protect the outer borders of his vast demon kingdom from intrusion by outsiders, went to intercede on behalf of Supernakha with an army of the choicest demons who were known for their ferocity and mercilessness, they too were killed with the whole of the demon army. So therefore, Lord Ram, who had done all this single-handed, is surely and certainly not an ordinary human being.

That means, thought the pensive Ravana, is it true that the Supreme Being has finally decided to come down to earth to kill him and uphold the sanctity of the prophesy of Brahma that had ensured that some human being would one day kill him in spite of his otherwise being immune to death from any other source (refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 51-53/1), or that of Nandi, the mount of Shiva, who had also cursed him that one day he would be killed by a human being (refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 84-89), or of king Anaranya of Ayodhya who had cursed Ravana that one of his descendants would crush his pride and kill him (refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 226-118).

The past came to haunt Ravana like a ghost baring its teeth and tongue dripping blood in the frightening dark of the dooms-day night.

Now let us see what Ram Charit Manas says:-

चौ०. सुर नर असुर नाग खग माहीं । मोरे अनुचर कहँ कोउ नाही ॥ १ ॥
 खर दूषन मोहि सम बलवंता । तिन्हहि को मारइ बिनु भगवंता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sura nara asura nāga khaga māhīm. mōrē anucara kaham̃ kō'u nāhīm. 1.
 khara dūṣana mōhi sama balavantā. tinhahi kō māra'i binu bhagavantā. 2.

[When Supernakha told Ravana everything that had happened and how Lord Ram had rebuked and insulted her by chopping-off her ears and nose, and after that how he had slayed the entire demon army led by her cousin brothers Khar and Dushan, Ravana became very worried and thoughtful.

He could not sleep that night (Doha no. 22) and had a hunch that his days are finally numbered as the Supreme Being appears to have come personally to kill him. So he wondered—]

‘Verily indeed, amongst the gods, the humans, the demons, the serpents (representing all the terrestrial creatures) and the birds (representing all those who live in the sky, such as the demi-gods, spirits etc.)—none of them, not a single living being for that matter, have the power and the ability to stand against any of my followers (i.e. any of the demons who serve me). No one can face any one of my followers; that is for sure. (1)

Khar and Dushan¹ were as strong and valiant as I am; say who can kill them except the Lord God himself. (2)

[Note—¹Khar and Dushan were the sons of Ravana’s maternal aunt—refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse no. 62. They were assigned the task of protecting the outer borders of the demon kingdom, and were stationed in the formidable forest known as Dandakaranya from where Lord Ram stayed with his wife Sita and brother Laxman at the time of Supernakha’s deformation and the subsequent abduction of Sita by Ravana.

Khar and Dushan had sought revenge for the insult of their sister Supernakha by attacking Lord Ram with a huge army of ferocious, vicious and battle-hardened demons. The Lord had easily and quickly eliminated all of them. This story is narrated in full in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20; and in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 19-35.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 180 that also reiterates this fact that all the members of the demon race of which Ravana was the king were stunningly strong and invincible in their own rights, and every single demon was so powerful and valiant that he could virtually conquer the whole world single-handedly.]

सुर रंजन भंजन महि भारा । जौं भगवंत लीन्ह अवतारा ॥ ३ ॥
 तौ मैं जाइ बैरु हठि करऊँ । प्रभु सर प्रान तजें भव तरऊँ ॥ ४ ॥ sura ranjana bhanjana mahi bhārā. jaum bhagavanta linha avatārā. 3.

tau maim jā'i bairu haṭhi kara'um. prabhu sara prāna tajem bhava tara'um. 4.

This being the case, and if my suspicions are not without foundation that it is indeed true that the Supreme Being who is the provider of happiness to the Gods and the Lord who removes the fear of the burden of the mundane world and its associated miseries and torments from the heart and the mind of all living being—if that Lord God has actually manifested himself (in the human form of Lord Ram), (3) ---

---Then I will surely go and establish animosity with him willingly, and without a second thought about it, so that I would be killed by the Lord's arrows, and thereby attain deliverance from this mundane gross world of transmigration. (4)

होइहि भजनु न तामस देहा । मन क्रम बचन मंत्र दृढ़ एहा ॥ ५ ॥
जौं नररूप भूपसुत कोऊ । हरिहउं नारि जीति रन दोऊ ॥ ६ ॥

hō'ihī bhajanu na tāmasa dēhā. mana krama bacana mantra dr̥ḥha ēhā. 5.
jaum nararūpa bhūpasuta kō'ū. hariha'um nāri jīti rana dō'ū. 6.

My body is so sinful and vile that I neither can I worship the Lord with it nor can I have devotion for him through its medium. I am very certain about it, and I am convinced of this fact in my mind and heart. So therefore, I will resolutely carry out my decision honestly, and I will do anything needed to be done by my words and deeds that my objective is achieved.

[To wit, now that I am convinced that the Supreme Lord has come personally to kill me, an event that is sure to liberate my soul that is trapped in this vile body of mine and provide it with deliverance, no matter what happens I will stick to my decision and do everything within my means that the Lord does kill me. I will go to any extent, even if it is an action that is most contemptible like stealing Sita, but I will go about it nevertheless with a greater good of my soul in view.] (5)

On the other hand, if Ram is not what I think him to be, i.e. if he is an ordinary human prince instead of being a personified form of the Supreme Being, then I will keep his wife after abducting her and vanquishing the two (Lord Ram and his brother Laxman) in the battle-field.¹ (6)

[Note—¹These two verses, verse nos. 5 and 6, lay the ground for the rest of the story. Ravana had two things in his mind—one was to find deliverance if Lord Ram happened to be the Supreme Being, and the other was to usurp another woman as was his habit if the husband turns out to be an ordinary human being. This doubt in the mind of Ravana proved to be a virtual boon for the rest of the world as well as for the soul of the huge demon race.

For had Ravana had alone fought with Lord Ram in his hermitage at Dankakarnya itself before trying to take away Sita, then surely the Lord would have killed him as he did Khar and Dushan. In this case the rest of the demons would have escaped death, and that would have meant two things—one, the scourge of the demons would have remained intact because other close kins of Ravana, such as his fierce son Meghanad, and his brother Kumbhakrana would have survived to lead the demon race, and they would have continued unabated the reign of terror started by Ravana. And secondly, none of their souls would have had the golden opportunity to find liberation and deliverance from the cage of the demon body in which all of them were trapped.

But as it fortunately turned out, Ravana took away Sita to Lanka, and this forced Lord Ram to go to Lanka to launch a fierce war to rescue her. An in this war almost the entire demon race was eliminated. This ensured that the burden the earth faced from the cruelty and horrors spread by the demons under the command of Ravana ended once and for all in its entirety. But as it happens in all wars, not all demons died, for some who did not side with Ravana and did not participate in the war managed to live. The chief amongst such demons who survived the war was Vibhishan, Ravana's own younger brother who had sided with Lord Ram at the beginning of the war. This ensured that only the good demons survived to carry on the lineage of the great sages Pulastya and Visrawa to which Ravana and his line of demons belonged, instead of complete annihilation.

There is another way of looking at the decision which Ravana took—to take away Sita to Lanka instead of fighting Lord Ram in the forest itself. He had learnt of the fate of Khar and Dushan, and he was also aware that they had a huge army to support them. All of them were killed by Lord Ram. This scared the wits out of Ravana, and he could not muster sufficient courage to face Lord Ram alone in the battle-field. Besides this, he thought that if indeed Lord Ram is the Supreme Being as he was almost sure the Lord was, then why not let the other demons too have the benefit of liberation and deliverance at no extra effort by forcing them all to die in the battle fighting the Lord. For Ravana was sure that the Supreme Lord is so merciful and compassionate that he cannot allow any single demon to go to hell if the latter is killed in a battle in which the Lord himself is a participant.

Ravana correctly deduced that the nearness with the Lord itself is a blessing par-excellence in itself, and no soul can ever remain condemned if it happens to have the shadow of the Lord fall upon it. So in this aspect Ravana proved himself to be selfless and gracious king of the demon race in as much as he ensured the spiritual welfare of all the demons instead of thinking of the deliverance of his soul alone.]

-----**-----

Section 5.2.1:

Ram Charit Manas

{The story of Sita's abduction by Ravana}

In the previous section we have read why Ravana had actually abducted Sita, the wife of Lord Ram. Now we shall commence a detailed narration of all the developments that are related to Sita's abduction, and the subsequent events that culminated finally in the epic War of Lanka that led to the killing of Ravana along with his close associates and the demon army which he commanded.

For the purpose of narration of the events linked to the abduction of Sita by Ravana we shall read from two well-known classical narration of the story of Lord Ram, viz. Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas which we shall read here in Section 5.2.1, and Adhyatma Ramayan of sage Veda Vyas which will follow in the next Section 5.2.2.

In ‘Ram Charit Manas’ this story is detailed in Aranya Kand (or Canto 3), from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 22; and from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23—to Doha no. 29.

Now, let start reading this fascinating part of our Story:-

सूपनखा रावन कै बहिनी । दुष्ट हृदय दारुन जस अहिनी ॥ ३ ॥
 पंचबटी सो गइ एक बारा । देखि बिकल भइ जुगल कुमारा ॥ ४ ॥
 भ्राता पिता पुत्र उरगारी । पुरुष मनोहर निरखत नारी ॥ ५ ॥
 होइ बिकल सक मनहि न रोकी । जिमि रबिमनि द्रव रबिहि बिलोकी ॥ ६ ॥ sūpanakhā rāvana kai bahinī. duṣṭa hṛdaya dārūna jasa ahinī. 3.

 pañcabaṭī sō ga'i ēka bārā. dēkhi bikala bha'i jugala kumārā. 4.
 bhrātā pitā putra uragārī. puruṣa manōhara nirakhata nārī. 5.
 hō'i bikala saka manahi na rōkī. jimi rabimani drava rabihi bilōkī. 6.

There was a female demon named Supnakha¹ (or ‘Supernakha’) who was a sister of Ravana (the notorious king of the demons with his capital at Lanka). She was very wicked and foul in her heart, and was extremely cruel like a poisonous snake. (3)

One day she went to Panchavati² where Lord Ram dwelled with his wife Sita and brother Laxman (during the days of his forest sojourn). When she saw the two handsome princes (Lord Ram and Laxman) she was overcome with lust and passion (as is the wont of demons who have neither any self-control over their carnal desires, nor any trace of morality and scruples worth the name). (4)

[The crow-sage Kaagbhusund told Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, who had come to the former to listen to the divine story of Lord Ram as follows—] Oh Urgari (literally the one who is an enemy of serpents)³! It is said that a woman (who is wanton and lacking in morals and scruples) is liable to get easily sexually aroused at the sight of a man who is handsome and charming, irrespective of who he is, whether he be her brother, father or even a son. [This applied specially to Supernakha as she was a ‘demoness’ by birth, and so was inherently inclined to be exceedingly promiscuous, immodest and sexually pervert.] (5)

So, enchanted by the bewitching beauty of Lord Ram, Supernakha lost control over herself; she became very uneasy as she was unable to restrain the overbearing desire of lust and passion that overwhelmed her mind and heart. It is like the case of the gem known as ‘Suryakantamani (or the “rabimani”)⁴’ which starts glowing automatically and radiating brilliant light in the presence of sun though the sun is not at all aware that the gem even exists. (6)

[Note—¹This demoness got her name ‘Supernakha’ because she had large nails which were as wide as a winnow-fan. It also may mean one who has broad ears and long nails like that of a winnowing fan. ‘Supa’ = the winnowing fan or a winnow-basket; ‘Nakha’ = nails. Supernakha lived in the Dandakarnya forest, a dense, wild and intractable forest that was infested with ferocious animals and demons, and it separated the continent of ancient India into the Northern part that was civilized and the Southern territories that were mostly wild and inhabited by tribals and aboriginal people.

According to Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse no. 61, Ravana, her brother, got her married to a demon named Vidyujjihva and gifted the Dandakaranya forest to her as a marriage gift. (Refer: Part 1, Chapter 2, Section 2.1 of this Book.) In due course of time she became a widow, and then Ravana sent the demons Khar, Dushan and Trishira to protect her as she was now alone in a dense forest.

Being a demon by birth, Supernakha had a natural tendency to be immoral, wanton and promiscuous in her behaviour; she would roam around the world seeking sexual gratification. For this she would assume any form that suited her, and as soon as her lust was satisfied she moved on to hunt for a new prey in fresher grounds. It was during one of her such wanderings that she sighted Lord Ram and Laxman and fell for their exceptional charms and heavenly beauty.

Ravana had sent Khar and Dushan to this forest with another aim too—it was to guard the frontiers of his demon kingdom in the north which lay just south of the Vindhya Mountain range and north of the kingdom of Kishkindha, the kingdom of the monkey race. Khar and Dushan were sons of Ravana’s maternal aunt. A huge army of demons were in their command.

Lord Ram, along with his wife Sita and brother Laxman, had come to reside at a place called Panchavati deep inside this forest. It is here that one day Supernakha saw the Lord, and was so extremely enthralled by the Lord’s charm and beauty that, being a pervert demoness who had no moral scruples worth the name, ventured to propose marriage to him.

²Panchavati—This was like an oasis, with a lot of greenery and vibrant bird and insect life, in the middle of the otherwise desolate and barren tract of land consisting of a formidably horrifying forest that had no life except thorny plants and poisonous trees and creepers extending to the horizon in dense clusters. Panchavati was situated near the banks of the river Godavari which flowed through the forest, and was around 24-25 miles from the hermitage of sage Agastya. This place is located near the modern city of Nasik in Maharashtra state of India.

It was so named as it had five (“Pancha” = five) huge banyan trees (“Vat” = banyan tree) that grew almost in a circle so as to provide shade over a large area that they covered. This made the place very welcoming as it was cool, comfortable and relaxing as well as congenial for a long stay. Its proximity with the river Godavari was an added bonus. So Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman decided to spend some time here. Actually this spot was advised to them by Sage Agastya—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 15-18 that precede Doha no. 18.

Refer to Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 2-3 that describes how she discovered that Lord Ram lived in Panchavati. It so happened that one day while wondering in the forest she saw the marks of Lord Ram’s feet on the ground. These marks were like the lotus flowers and had signs of a goad and mace inside them; such marks are unique to the sole of the feet of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being. They are so attractive and divine by their nature that anyone who sees them even once is pulled towards them automatically as iron is to a magnet. Actually this is the mystical way of the Lord by which his devotees are attracted naturally towards him even without their conscious knowledge, and by this means the merciful and kind Lord finds an excuse to ultimately grant liberation and deliverance to his devotees from this mundane gross world of transmigration.

³This episode is being narrated by the crow-sage Kagbhusund to Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, who had come to the former to hear the divine story of Lord Ram. Hence, the narrator address the listener as “uragārī”—i.e. an enemy of serpents, because Garud, the celestial Eagle and the mount of Lord Vishnu, is a sworn enemy of poisonous serpents and gobbles them all up very easily.

⁴The word “rabimani” has two parts—viz. ‘rabi’ meaning the sun, and ‘mani’ meaning a gem; it is also called ‘Suryakantamani’ because it emanates rays of light in the presence of the sun. It is often called a ‘sun-stone’ too, and is probably a sort of crystal of the size of a small pebble that glows brilliantly in sunlight.

This metaphor is used here to imply that just like a sun-stone begins to automatically emanate light on its exposure to the sun, a woman’s natural passion and desire for love arises instinctively when she is exposed to a man whom she regards as being handsome and charming. She would then find it quite difficult to restrain her mind and heart from developing some sort of longing for this man she takes fancy to.]

रुचिर रूप धरि प्रभु पहिं जाई । बोली बचन बहुत मुसुकाई ॥ ७ ॥
 तुम्ह सम पुरुष न मो सम नारी । यह सँजोग बिधि रचा बिचारी ॥ ८ ॥
 मम अनुरूप पुरुष जग माहीं । देखेउँ खोजि लोक तिहु नाहीं ॥ ९ ॥
 तातेँ अब लगि रहिउँ कुमारी । मनु माना कछु तुम्हहि निहारी ॥ १० ॥ rucira rūpa dhari prabhu pahim jā’ī. bōlī bacana bahuta musukā’ī. 7.

 tumha sama puruṣa na mō sama nārī. yaha samjōga bidhi racā bicārī. 8.
 mama anurūpa puruṣa jaga māhīm. dēkhē’um’ khōji lōka tihu nāhīm. 9.
 tātēṁ aba lagi rahi’um’ kumārī. manu mānā kachu tumhahi nihārī. 10.

Hence, she assumed a charming form of a beautiful young lady¹ and went to the Lord (Sri Ram). Once there, she spoke very sweetly, with a broad and enticing smile on her face. (7)

She told Lord Ram thus: ‘Indeed there is no man (as handsome and charming) as you are, and neither is there any other woman who is as alluring as me (in beauty and charm). It looks that the creator had made great deliberations before he made the two of us, for it is obvious that he made us for each other, and then devised this opportunity for our meeting. (8)

I had been searching in the three worlds (heaven, earth and nether worlds) for a man befitting me, and for whom I may develop a liking, but to no avail; for in all sooth I could not find a single individual who would suit me². (9)

This is the reason I have remained a virgin till now. However, after seeing you I feel enchanted. I seem to have developed a natural sense of attraction and longing for you, for I have begin to love you, which makes my mind and heart convinced, to some extent, that at last I have found someone who is suitable to become my companion as he seems compatible to me and suitable to my tastes³. (10)

[Note—¹Supernakha knew that she was an ugly demoness, and so therefore if she goes and proposes to Lord Ram in her original form it is sure that he will reject her. So she assumed the form of a beautiful lady.

²This acknowledgement by Supernakha—that she had been roaming freely in the world searching for a man to marry, which implies that she gazes intently at all the men she meets, looking him up and down like a customer examines a cattle for sale in the cattle-market, and even testing them by brief flings of pretended romance—shows that she was a lady with an extremely loose character and low morals. To wit, she has revealed her bad and immoral character unwittingly herself, for no lady of good birth and family would roam around alone looking for a mate like the way Supernakha had done; it's vulgar and promiscuous.

³By saying that she is satisfied by Lord Ram's personality 'to some extent' shows that she has kept the option open—because as soon as her lusts would be satisfied she would make an exit from the relationship citing the reason that her partner did not suit her 'completely'. So she has warned Lord Ram to be careful of her intentions by saying that she has found some comfort in him only to some degree; not fully, but partially.]

सीतहि चितइ कही प्रभु बाता । अहइ कुआर मोर लघु भ्राता ॥ ११ ॥
 गइ लछिमन रिपु भगिनी जानी । प्रभु बिलोकि बोले मृदु बानी ॥ १२ ॥
 सुंदरि सुनु मैं उन्ह कर दासा । पराधीन नहिं तोर सुपासा ॥ १३ ॥
 प्रभु समर्थ कोसलपुर राजा । जो कछु करहिं उनहि सब छाजा ॥ १४ ॥ sītaḥi cita'i kaḥī prabhu bātā. aha'i ku'āra mōra laghu bhrātā. 11.

 ga'i lachimana ripu bhaginī jānī. prabhu bilōki bōlē mṛdu bānī. 12.
 sundari sunu mair̥ unha kara dāsā. parādhīna nahim̥ tōra supāsā. 13.
 prabhu samartha kōsalapura rājā. jō kachu karahim̥ unahi saba chājā. 14.

Lord Ram glanced towards Sita (to indicate to Supernakha that he had a wife, and so could not accept her proposals). Then he answered her, saying, 'My younger brother (Laxman) is a bachelor yet (as he has no wife who accompanies him in the forest; so if you do wish to marry, go and propose to him)¹.

[Oh enchantress, listen. I am a married man, and have a loyal wife with me. How is it possible, then, that I can become your companion. No, it isn't possible under any condition; it would be totally unrighteous and unethical to even imagine of this evil thought. Look, you will never succeed in seducing me, take it for granted. However, if you still persist, I give you an option—my younger brother has not brought his wife along, and you can try your seductive tricks on him if you manage to succeed. So go to him.]' (11)

Then she went to Laxman, who recognized her to be the sister of their enemy (Ravana). He glanced at Lord Ram (to get a hint of what the Lord wants), and then said to her sweetly, (12) ---

---‘Oh beautiful and enchanting lady! Look, I am a mere servant or an attendant of him (i.e. of Lord Ram)². Since I am not independent, you will not feel comfort that you expect from my company (as a servant or an attendant has to do what his Lord wills, and his time and energy is occupied in serving his Lord). (13)

Lord Ram is the king of Ayodhya and is all-able. Whatever he does is well suited to him. [So you would do well to become the Lord’s companion as he is a king, and you will have greater pleasures and comforts like a queen enjoys if you keep his company as compared to me who is not free but bound by my Lord’s commands.] (14)

[Note—¹The word Lord Ram used for his younger brother Laxman is “ku’āra”; it means a boy, a young man, a prince; it also means one who is unmarried.

It is remarkable that Lord Ram has called Laxman a ‘Kumar (ku’āra)’. Of course he was a young prince and was like the Lord’s son*, and of course he was indeed a young boy. But was he ‘unmarried’? Yes of course; from the practical point of view Laxman was indeed leading a life of a bachelor, the life of a ‘Kumar (ku’āra)’, during the fourteen years that he spent with Lord Ram in the forest, though he was married and a wife named Urmila that he left behind at Ayodhya at the time of accompanying Lord Ram and Sita to the forest. By leading a life of strict celibacy for fourteen long years Laxman had made a great personal sacrifice to serve his beloved Lord Ram and look after the Lord’s personal safety, needs and comforts in the forest like a faithful follower and a loyal servant is expected to do; it was also the advice given by Laxman’s mother to him#. It was a sort of severe Tapa (penance and austerity) that Laxman did, and this Tapa bestowed upon him the natural powers that come to a person who does Tapa. To wit, by the virtue of this ‘Tapa’, i.e. observance of strict vows of celibacy, both physical and mental, Laxman acquired special mystical powers of stupendous proportions that enabled him to easily overcome all the formidable hurdles and the fiercest of enemies that he and Lord Ram had to face in the forest.

In all sooth therefore, Lord Ram wasn’t wrong when he called his younger brother a ‘Kumar (ku’āra)’. It was in fact an honour that the Lord granted to his younger brother; it was an acknowledgement on the part of the Lord of the sacrifices that Laxman had made for his sake, and for the cause of the gods.

*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 75.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 75 along with Chaupai line no. 8 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.]

The situation is simple and uncomplicated. There are two princes and one lady in that lonely place in the depth of the forest, and no other soul is seen anywhere around. When Supernakha approached Lord Ram disguised as a young virgin, it is but common sense that Lord Ram immediately knew that there was something wrong and suspicious as no ordinary woman would be found in the middle of an un-inhabited forest which was infested with fierce demons and wild animals. Hence, the presence of a lonely woman, who could move freely and fearlessly in a horrifying forest merely in search of a mate, itself was something exceptionally impossible to believe and incongruous enough to raise a grave suspicion about her true identity and real intentions.

Another reason why Lord Ram could instantly realize that there was something gravely wrong with this lady is that Sita was with him, and still Supernakha proposed to him—something that no sensible woman, who is a stranger, would do in the presence of another woman of the household. Besides this, no formal introductions were made by Supernakha and no time was given by her for some kind of close acquaintance to develop with the inhabitants of the hermitage before she could have gathered courage to propose; she just came in uninvited and bluntly said ‘I want to make love to you’. It is absolute nonsense and uncivilized to do so. So surely Lord Ram knew that this lady was great imposter out to cheat and trap him.

So the Lord looked towards Sita to indicate to Supernakha that he is ‘not available as he has a wife with him’. But obviously Laxman had no companion—so she was free to propose to him.

Does this mean that Lord Ram was testing his brother’s character? No, no; it is not that at all. The Lord knew that Laxman had an immaculate character; the Lord was only trying to tease Supernakha and make her get angry so that the Lord’s divine mission of eliminating the cruel demons could be started. And as the things developed, everything went according to the Lord’s planning, for soon Supernakha became furious and the Lord asked Laxman to cut off her nose and ears to punish her for her impertinent behaviour when she threatened to kill and eat Sita. This was the spark that ignited the fire that reduced to ashes the scourge of the demon race.

²In verse no. 11 Lord Ram has glanced at Sita to convey a silent message that he has a wife with him. Now, in verse no. 12 Laxman glanced at Lord Ram with the same intent to tell Supernakha in verse no. 13 that he is not a free man himself as he is a servant of the Lord. If Lord Ram is engaged to Sita and therefore cannot entertain Supernakha, Laxman says that he too is engaged as an attendant to serve his Lord Ram, and hence he too is not free to entertain her.]

सेवक सुख चह मान भिखारी । व्यसनी धन सुभ गति बिभिचारी ॥ १५ ॥
लोभी जसु चह चार गुमानी । नभ दुहि दूध चहत ए प्रानी ॥ १६ ॥ sēvaka sukha caha māna bhikhārī. byasanī dhana subha gati bibhicārī. 15.

lōbhī jasu caha cāra gumānī. nabha duhi dūdha cahata ē prānī. 16.

[Laxman supported his contention that he is not a free man to do whatever he wishes to do because he is like a servant of Lord Ram, and a servant is never free, by citing some examples of how certain things are impossible under certain situations. He cited the following examples to dissuade Supernakha from her pursuit—]

A servant who desires comfort and happiness, or a beggar who expects honour and respect, or a person addicted to some sort of vice (such as gambling, drugs, wine, women etc.) wishing to accumulate wealth, or a promiscuous and lascivious man wanting a good fate for himself (i.e. a good name and honour after death) [15], or a greedy man hoping to have a good name and fame, or a messenger who is egoist and haughty wishing to be successful in his mission, or a doubtful man who is uncertain of what he does and aims for hoping to achieve any of the four celebrated fruits in life¹—well, all such persons are so utterly stupid that they expect to get milk by milking the sky [16]²! [Therefore, you, Supernakha, should abandon any hope of getting a positive response from me.]’ (15-16)

[Note—¹The four best fruits or rewards that one gets for success in life are the following: (i) Artha = financial well-being; (ii) Dharma = fame got by being righteous and noble; (iii) Kaam = fulfillment of all worldly desires; and (iv) Moksha = spiritual welfare by way of salvation and emancipation of the soul.

²Laxman tries to convince Supernakha that she should not expect any happiness even if he accepts her proposal because he is servant of Lord Ram, and anyone who serves another should not expect the joy and pleasures that comes with freedom. If a person who is under an obligation to serve someone expects joy and happiness that comes to a free man then he is an outright fool like the case of the persons listed in these two verses.

To wit, it is impossible for a diligent servant to have personal comfort and pleasure as he is always on his toes to carry out the orders of his master. He does not know when the master would summon him and order him with a task to be done.

Similarly, a man who has stretched out his hand before someone to beg for something should never expect to have any respect for himself; by begging he is deemed to have forfeited his dignity and self-respect.

A man addicted to some bad habit such as gambling, betting, drugs, wine and women would spend all his money in the pursuit of his vices; he would even pawn his family heirlooms to satisfy his addiction. This makes it impossible for him to accumulate any wealth.

A man coveting other persons’ wives and women can never hope to live in peace in this world, and when he dies his soul never rests in peace either; his conscience pricks him all through his life; he is reviled while alive, and he is condemned even after death.

A greedy and covetous person is never at peace, and this nature of his makes him impulsively do things that bring ill-fame and dishonour to him.

A messenger must be calm and poised and cool-headed, for if he is haughty and arrogant and loses his self-restraint he is certain to ruin the chances of attaining success in the mission for which he has been sent by his lord as an emissary.

A person who is not resolute and determined and focused on the task at hand, a person who is not certain of the correctness of the path he has chosen for himself, a person who does not even know the goal he is expected to reach, and a person who is not confident in his steps, and dithers and demurs every now and then—such persons never attain success in any enterprise.

Verily indeed, they are vainly trying to draw milk from the sky. To wit, they are merely day-dreaming and building castles in the sky, hoping for things that can never materialize.]

पुनि फिरि राम निकट सो आई । प्रभु लछिमन पहिं बहुरि पठाई ॥ १७.
लछिमन कहा तोहि सो बरई । जो तून तोरि लाज परिहरई ॥ १८ ॥ puni phiri rāma nikāṭa sō ā'ī. prabhu lachimana pahim bahuri paṭhā'ī. 17.

lachimana kahā tōhi sō bara'ī. jō ṭṛna tōri lāja parihara'ī. 18.

At being thus rebuffed by Laxman, she (Supernakha) came back to Lord Ram. The Lord sent her to Laxman once again¹. (17)

Laxman then sternly rebuked her, saying that only a person who has no shame, dignity and self-respect worth the name in him would ever think of marrying her. (18)

[Note—¹Supernakha was so maddened by passions that she lost all sense of self-respect and modesty. She ran to and fro between the two brothers like a shuttle-cock. She was rebuked by Lord Ram as well as by Laxman.]

तब खिसिआनि राम पहिं गई । रूप भयंकर प्रगटत भई ॥ १९ ॥
सीतहि सभय देखि रघुराई । कहा अनुज सन सयन बुझाई ॥ २० ॥

taba khisi'āni rāma pahim ga'ī. rūpa bhayaṅkara pragatata bha'ī. 19.
sītahi sabhaya dēkhi raghurā'ī. kahā anuja sana sayana bujhā'ī. 20.

Then (when Laxman finally rebuked and insulted her by saying that only a shameless man would think of marrying her), she became extremely peeved and frustrated. Fretting and fuming in anger, she resumed her original fearful form of an abhorable demoness and went once again to Lord Ram. (19)

As Supernakha approached the Lord of Raghus (Lord Ram; raghurā'ī) menacingly, the Lord observed that Sita was very terrified. So he made a sign to his younger brother (Laxman) with a subtle movement of his eyes¹. (20)

[Note—¹By now Supernakha has shown her true form—a fierce demoness with a huge body and sharp pointed nails. She lunged fearfully at Lord Ram and Sita in order to attack them. This scared Sita out of her wits. Then Lord Ram glanced at Laxman and winked at him to signal to him to punish the demoness. And how did Laxman punish Supernakha? This is narrated in Doha no. 17 herein below.

The Lord had to first prove to Sita and the world that the fine lady whom the Lord would punish is not an ordinary woman but a demoness. So he made her go to and fro between himself and Laxman so she gets mad with anger, and this would help reveal her true identity—that of a fierce and cruel demoness. Now when the punishment would be carried out, no one would raise a finger against Lord Ram or Laxman for having harmed an ordinary human lady.

Supernakha was now attacking Lord Ram and Sita with a vengeance, and surely in this situation it became necessary for Lord Ram to act in self defense. If he did not do anything, Supernakha would have certainly injured Sita with her dagger-like nails.]

दो०. लछिमन अति लाघवँ सो नाक कान बिनु कीन्हि । ताके कर रावन कहँ मनौ चुनौती दीन्हि ॥ १७ ॥

dōhā.

lachimana ati lāghavam̃ sō nāka kāna binu kīnhi.
tākē kara rāvana kham̃ manau cunautī dīnhi. 17.

Laxman, on getting a hint from Lord Ram, swiftly cut-off the ears and nose of Supernakha, and by this singular act he (as well as Lord Ram) had virtually challenged Ravana¹. (Doha no. 17)

[Note—¹Supernakha's deformation was an open challenge thrown to the demon king Ravana, who also happened to be her brother, to come and settle scores with Lord Ram and Laxman if he dares to do so. This event of cutting of Supernakha's nose and ears laid the foundation of the war that would ultimately lead to the slaying of Ravana and elimination of the cruel demons for which Lord Vishnu had to come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram to fulfill his promise made to the Gods and Mother Earth.

The Lord had to find an excuse using which he would be able to complete his mission on earth, and Supernakha unwittingly provided this excuse to the Lord.

Every action of the Lord God is for the long-term good of a living being though in the beginning it looks very bad for him. Lord Ram wished to pull Supernakha back from her evil ways of being excessively promiscuous and highly morally degraded as she has accepted herself that she went around the world searching and testing for men who would fit to be her husband. It goes without saying it in clear terms that she must have established conjugal relationships with countless males in order to ascertain whether they suited her or not. It is obviously highly immoral and shameful to do so, but she did it. So the Lord got her deformed so that now onwards no male would be attracted to her, and she would be forced to abandon her immoral life, and instead, lead a life of restraint and abstinence.

There is an ancient text called 'Garga Sanhita' in which a detailed story of Supernakha is narrated. It is said here that since Lord Ram cannot refuse to fulfill the desire of anyone who comes to him seeking anything, he was obliged to live up to his own vows and reputation on this count. Though the Lord had to refuse Supernakha's proposals during this particular point of time, but he had to recompense her for it. So the Lord blessed her that in his next incarnation as Lord Krishna during the next Yuga (era) known as Dwapar, he would oblige her. It is believed that Supernakha became the celebrated Kubja, the old hunchback, whom Lord Krishna blessed during his manifestation.]

चौ०. नाक कान बिनु भइ बिकरारा । जनु स्रव सैल गेरु कै धारा ॥ १ ॥
खर दूषन पहिं गइ बिलपाता । धिग धिग तव पौरुष बल भ्राता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

nāka kāna binu bha'i bikarārā. janu srava saila gēru kai dhārā. 1.
khara dūṣana pahim̃ ga'i bilapātā. dhiga dhiga tava pauruṣa bala bhrātā. 2.

With her nose and ears chopped-off, she looked most fearsome and horrifying, and blood poured out from her gashed body like thick streams of deep ochre colour gushing out from the crevices of a huge mountain. (1)

Weeping and lamenting woefully, she rushed to Khar and Dushan (her protectors and cousin brothers), cursing and swearing at them, ‘Woe to you both the brothers; shame betide to your manhood and valour; fie upon you.’ (2)

तेहिं पूछा सब कहेसि बुझाई । जातुधान सुनि सेन बनाई ॥ ३ ॥
 धाए निसिचर निकर बरूथा । जनु सपच्छ कज्जल गिरि जूथा ॥ ४ ॥
 नाना बाहन नानाकारा । नानायुध धर घोर अपारा ॥ ५ ॥
 सूपनखा आगें करि लीनी । असुभ रूप श्रुति नासा हीनी ॥ ६ ॥ tēhim pūchā saba kahēsi bujhāī. jātudhāna suni sēna banāī. 3.

 dhā'ē nīsicara nikara barūthā. janu sapaccha kajjala giri jūthā. 4.
 nānā bāhana nānākārā. nānāyudha dhara ghōra apārā. 5.
 sūpanakhā āgērṁ kari līnī. asubha rūpa śruti nāsā hīnī. 6.

They were stunned when they saw the horrible condition of their sister. Upon enquiry she narrated the whole episode to them and explained the cause of her misery.

When they (Khar and Dushan) heard everything, they immediately summoned an army (of demons, to seek revenge). (3)

A huge army of fierce demons swarmed around in multiple groups and launched a ferocious and vicious attack. They appeared like huge winged mountains of dark soot covering the entire length and breadth of the sky, from one end to the other of the horizon. [The demon army covered the whole sky and moved forth rapidly like foreboding dark clouds that appear before a severe thunder-storm.] (4)

The demons rode different types of vehicles, and they had various shapes and sizes. They held multiple types of weapons, were countless in numbers, and were exceedingly fierce and horrifying. (5)

They kept Supernakha in the vanguard of the attacking force, and this portended an evil omen for them as she had an inauspicious form without a nose and ears¹. (6)

[Note—¹Supernakha was in the front of the attacking demon forces as she wanted to tell Lord Ram and Laxman that she has now come to settle a score with them quickly. She was extremely angry and burning with rage; she wished to lead from the front to show the two brothers who she actually was, to show them that they had played with fire while rebuking and deforming her, and that now they would have to pay a heavy price for their act. By being in the front she wished to signal that it was she who has come to seek revenge for her insult and deformation, and that she was a powerful lady who had a mighty army at her command.

But in the process something else was not taken into account by the mad demons who were destined to doom by providence—and it was that Supernakha’s deformed body was an evil sign before the commencement of battle. Everyone looks for a good omen before starting on a mission, and in this case unfortunately the sign was bad. Had the demons been wise and left with any common sense they would have not allowed her to be in the front of the army as she had had an evil and ominous form with blood gushing out of her wounds and with her ears and nose cut-off. This form is never considered auspicious and good omen for any enterprise, let alone a decisive battle where death and destruction stares in the face.

In the final analysis, perhaps this evil form of Supernakha decided the course of the battle between the demons and Lord Ram which was soon to follow—as this evil omen had already decided the fate, which was defeat and complete extermination of those who willingly and voluntarily invited death by foolishly holding this evil sign of Supernakha's inauspicious form as an insignia, a mascot or a coat-of-arm of the army.

Indeed, Supernakha played a pivotal role in the destruction of the demon race as it was she whose lustful actions had sowed the seed that culminated in the epic War of Lanka that led to the killing of Ravana.

One cannot fail to observe here that after all it was a woman's secret and suppressed desire for sensual gratification that had burst out into the open in the form of a volcanic eruption symbolized by the battle that would ensue now between Lord Ram and the demons Khar and Dushan, and later on transform into a no-holds barred war that resulted in the annihilation of her own family.]

असगुन अमित होहिं भयकारी । गनहिं न मृत्यु बिबस सब झारी ॥ ७ ॥
 गर्जहिं तर्जहिं गगन उड़ाहीं । देखि कटकु भट अति हरषाहीं ॥ ८ ॥ कोउ कह जिअत धरहु द्वौ भाई । धरि मारहु तिय लेहु छड़ाई ॥ ९ ॥ asaguna amita hōhim bhayakārī. ganahim na mṛtyu bibasa saba jhārī. 7.

 garjahim tarjahim gagana urāhim. dēkhi kaṭaku bhaṭa ati haraṣāhim. 8.
 kō'u kaha ji'ata dharahu dvau bhāī. dhari mārahu tiya lēhu chaṛāī. 9.

Manifold bad omens appeared then, and they were horrifying and pretenders of doom. But the demon hordes were so overwhelmed by the call of destiny that destined their death that they paid no heed to any sign that should normally have warned them of their impending doom. (7)

They yelled and jumped madly as they moved swiftly across the sky (to attack Lord Ram). When one group of demons saw the others groups of demons in an excited mood, they too became exhilarated (as if they were going on a picnic to celebrate some great event)¹. (8)

Some of them instigated others by commanding that they must catch the two brothers (Ram and Laxman) alive, and then snatch their lady (Sita) after killing them both². (9)

[Note—¹The demons were so confident of themselves and their might that they had no fear of anything. They thought that it would be literally a cake-walk for them to vanquish Lord Ram and Laxman and snatch Sita from them. They did not realize that they were walking into their own graves!

²They wanted to kill their enemies, which in this case were Lord Ram and Laxman, as a prudent military strategy because if an enemy is allowed to escape or is spared death then there were great possibilities that he would create some sort of mischief for the conqueror at a later date.

We have proof of this in the story of the Ramayan itself. Lord Ram had spared Marich from death at the time of protection of the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra. The Lord had used a headless arrow to hit Marich, and this arrow flung him to a remote island near Lanka where Marich lived in fear of the Lord. Later on Marich was forced by Ravana to become a deer with a golden hide in order to abduct Sita. Had Lord Ram slayed Marich at that time then perhaps the event that led to the abduction of Sita by Ravana would have been avoided.]

धूरि पूरि नभ मंडल रहा । राम बोलाइ अनुज सन कहा ॥ १० ॥
 लै जानकिहि जाहु गिरि कंदर । आवा निसिचर कटकु भयंकर ॥ ११ ॥ रहेहु सजग सुनि प्रभु कै बानी । चले सहित श्री सर धनु पानी ॥ १२ ॥ dhūri pūri nabha maṇḍala rahā. rāma bōlā'i anuja sana kahā. 10.

 lai jānakihi jāhu giri kandara. āvā nisicara kaṭaku bhayaṅkara. 11.
 rahēhu sajaga suni prabhu kai bānī. calē sahita śrī sara dhanu pānī. 12.

The whole firmament was filled with dust due to the advancing demon army. [It was like the case of a severe thunder-storm that is usually preceded by a blinding dust-storm in the dry plains that see the first rain of the season.]

Lord Ram called his brother (Laxman) and said to him—(10)

‘Brother, take Janki (Sita) along and go inside the cave of the mountain. Look, a fierce demon army is approaching rapidly¹. (11)

Be alert and careful.’

Hearing the words (instructions) of the Lord, he (Laxman) went away with Sita as directed; he held his bow and arrow at the ready (to meet any eventuality)². (12)

[Note—¹Lord Ram knew that the battle that was to happen now would be spine-chilling, and it would be so horrifying and bloody that Sita would die of terror if she had to witness it. Besides this, it would be an added burden upon him during the thick of battle if his attention was diverted for the safety of Sita; he would not be able to focus entirely on the enemy if Sita was around. Further, seeing her, the demons would create more problems for him than imagined. So the Lord decided that it was prudent to keep Sita out of sight. And there was no safer place to hide than a cave.

²Lord Ram had sent Laxman with Sita in order to give her protection in case some demon got the wind where she is kept. Secondly, since Laxman was the one who had cut-off the nose and ears of Supernakha, the Lord wished to remove him from sight so as to avoid the chances of his being singled out by the vicious and ferocious demons for direct attack. In his absence the chances were that the demons would be confused as to who was the real culprit who had deformed Supernakha, and the confusion and disorder in their ranks about the proper target to attack would give Lord Ram the much needed time to finish them off before they gather their wits together.]

देखि राम रिपुदल चलि आवा । बिहसि कठिन कोदंड चढ़ावा ॥ १३ ॥

dēkhi rāma ripudala cali āvā. bihasi kaṭhina kōdaṇḍa caṛhāvā. 13.

Now, when Lord Ram observed that the demon horde has finally arrived, the Lord smiled¹ and raised his most formidable and powerful bow, stringing it to make it ready for attack (i.e. to shoot arrows at the attacking enemy). (13)

[Note—¹Why did Lord Ram smile? He wondered as to how the luck has favoured him, and how Providence plays its game. The Lord's mission was to eliminate the cruel demons, and he had come all the way from heaven for this purpose. He had traveled barefoot from his capital at Ayodhya to the distant lands of the Dandakarnya forest. It would have been very cumbersome and difficult and impractical to find the demons who were either scattered around the vast realm of the earth or lived in their fortified city of Lanka across the ocean. Luck so favoured the Lord that now he would not have to take the trouble of going to them to kill them, for they have come on their own to jump into the pit of a raging fire which destiny had lit for them in the form of battles with the Lord.

Providence is indeed so powerful a force that it can bring together at the same spot elements that under ordinary circumstances are poles apart, elements that can never ever be expected to interact begin to have a close encounter under the compelling influences of Providence.

Another reason for the Lord smiling is that he was amused as to how a single woman could be the cause of a huge calamity.]

छं०. कोदंड कठिन चढ़ाइ सिर जट जूट बाँधत सोह य्यों । १ ।
मरकत सयल पर लरत दामिनि कोटि सों जुग भुजग ज्यों ॥ २ ॥
कटि कसि निषंग बिसाल भुज गहि चाप बिसिख सुधारि कै । ३ ।
चितवत मनहुँ मृगराज प्रभु गजराज घटा निहारि कै ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kōdaṇḍa kaṭhina caṛhā'i sira jaṭa jūṭa bāmdhata sōha kyōm̃. 1.
marakata sayala para larata dāmini kōṭi sōm̃ juga bhujaga jyōm̃. 2.
kaṭi kasi niṣaṅga bisāla bhujā gahi cāpa bisikha sudhāri kai. 3.
citavata manahum̃ mṛgarāja prabhu gajarāja ghaṭā nihāri kai. 4.

When Lord Ram stringed his bow to make it ready and lifted his arms to tie his long matted hairs into a tight tuft on his head, it seemed that two serpents are engaged in a duel with countless streaks of lightening emanating from the top of a mountain of emerald¹. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

The Lord girded up his quiver at his waist, held his formidable bow in his long arms, and sharpened his arrows as he gazed steadily at his enemy (the attacking army of the demons) as if a lion (“mṛgarāja”; the lord of the animals) watches at a huge horde of wild elephants (gajarāja) advancing towards it like a bank of dark clouds (ghaṭā)². (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹In this metaphor, the ‘two serpents’ are represented by the Lord’s two arms; the ‘mountain of emerald’ is the Lord’s dark-complexioned radiant body; the ‘summit’ is his head; and the ‘countless streaks of lightening’ represent the dazzle of the stringed bow and the sharpened arrows that reflected sunlight. As the Lord’s arms are lifted to tackle the strands of hairs and tie them tightly on the head into a tuft, the bow and the arrow in the Lord’s hands swung and swayed in all directions, producing streaks of light that gave an impression that two serpents were combating with each other even as streaks of lightening strike at them atop a mountain of emerald.

²The lion is not afraid of the elephant; when an elephant approaches a lion menacingly, the latter never runs away out of fear, but cleverly maneuvers its moves so as to overcome even a wild and mad elephant. The lion would swiftly jump on the back of its victim and dig its sharp teeth and claws into the head and the back of the neck of the victim, without giving the elephant a chance to understand what is happening, then gnawing and biting at its flesh and tearing out its nerves till it is dead.

In this metaphor, Lord Ram is compared to the fearless lion that is ready to pounce upon his enemy, the elephant; and the demon army is compared to the huge horde of wild elephants that is running wildly towards the lion in order to crush it to death.

Since the demons are approaching the Lord via the path of the sky they are compared to the dark clouds rolling up the horizon in a menacing manner.]

सो०. आइ गए बगमेल धरहु धरहु धावत सुभट ।

जथा बिलोकि अकेल बाल रबिहि घेरत दनुज ॥ १८ ॥

sōraṭhā.

ā'i ga'ē bagamēla dharahu dharahu dhāvata subhaṭa.
jathā bilōki akēla bāla rabihi ghērata danuja. 18.

Demon warriors who were colossal in size and most terrifying in their demeanours came rushing at the Lord, shouting ‘catch him; catch him’. The sight resembled the event when fierce demons close in on the rising sun to grab it, finding it alone and still of a tender age (a young sun which is yet not powerful or hot enough to burn the demons by its sheering heat)¹. (Sortha no. 18)

[Note—¹The demons, who are called ‘Nishachar’, meaning nocturnal creatures, for they love darkness as well as evil that it symbolizes, have a natural aversion to sunlight. So as soon as they see the sun rising in the horizon they try to grab it, but they can’t go too close to the sun because though it is still young and cool it is still hot enough to scorch them as soon as they come too close to it. So though the demons lunge at the rising sun to destroy it in its nascent stage but they fail in their attempt and recoil when they face the sun’s heat.

In the present case as applied to Lord Ram and the attacking army of demons, Lord Ram is the ‘young sun’ as he is alone and young in age, while the enemy is like the ‘demons who try to destroy the rising sun’ but recoil in horror as soon as they come too close to it due to the sun’s natural heat that goes on increasing with the passage of every moment.

According to ancient mythological accounts, there is a story attached to this metaphor. It is narrated in an ancient text called 'Hemadri' as well as in the 'Vishnu Puran', Part 2, Section 8, verse nos. 50-57. Briefly it is as follows:-

A great demon race is called 'Mandeha'; they are supposed to be twenty-thousand in numbers. These demons had a curse-cum-blessing from the creator Brahma that they would have to die everyday though their bodies would remain imperishable. It's such a paradoxical curse indeed, resulting in a situation whereby these demons die and take birth daily, and in an attempt to escape death they try to kill the sun so that they won't have to die.

Therefore the story goes that these demons called Mandeha attacked the sun when it rose in the morning so that they won't have to die at the end of the day and suffer the agony of death and taking a birth again the next day. Now it so happened that Brahmins used to offer oblations to the rising sun in the morning while chanting the famed Gayatri Mantra, which is a spiritual formula specially formulated for worshipping the sun, and it is one of the most powerful Mantras with intense cosmic energy encrypted in its words. When water was sprinkled at the sun while muttering this Mantra, its drops became so highly charged with energy that they became like hot arrows, and when they fell on the attacking demons who surrounded the infant sun it resulted in these demons getting scorched and scalded as if boiling water was poured on them. The rising sun thus remained unharmed. But due to Brahma's blessing that their bodies won't die, these demons were revived once again before the end of the day. So in the evening they attacked the sun once again to ensure that it does not rise in the next morning.

This mythological story is cited here to describe the scene when Lord Ram stood surrounded by fierce demons who wanted to kill him but could not venture close enough due to the Lord's inherent dynamism and spiritual energy which repelled them like the heat of the sun and the spiritual powers of the Gayatri Mantra.]

चौ०. प्रभु बिलोकि सर सकहिं न डारी । थकित भई रजनीचर धारी ॥ १ ॥
 सचिव बोलि बोले खर दूषन । यह कोउ नृपबालक नर भूषन ॥ २ ॥
 नाग असुर सुर नर मुनि जेते । देखे जिते हते हम केते ॥ ३ ॥
 हम भरि जन्म सुनहु सब भाई । देखी नहिं असि सुंदरताई ॥ ४ ॥
 जद्यपि भगिनी कीन्हि कुरूपा । बध लायक नहिं पुरुष अनूपा ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu bilōki sara sakahim na ḍārī. thakita bhaī rajanīcara dhārī. 1.
 saciva bōli bōlē khara dūṣana. yaha kō'u nṛpabālaka nara bhūṣana. 2.
 nāga asura sura nara muni jētē. dēkhē jitē hatē hama kētē. 3.
 hama bhari janma sunahu saba bhāī. dēkhī nahim asi sundaratāī. 4.
 jadyapi bhaginī kīnhi kurūpā. badha lāyaka nahim puruṣa anūpā. 5.

When the demon army saw the Lord (Ram) they were so much stunned (by the Lord's majesty, charm, beauty and the aura of divinity that emanated from him) that they could not shoot even a single arrow at him, and they developed a cold feet as soon as they came near the Lord.

[To wit, Khar and Dushan, the commanders of the demon army, as well as their demon soldiers were absolutely stumped and awe-struck at the magnificent sight of the Lord that charmed them to such an extent that they stood as if paralysed on their path, and gazed at the Lord in stunned amazement.] (1)

Khar and Dushan summoned their chief minister and confided in him about their amazement, ‘He (Lord Ram) appears to be a princely jewel in the entire human race.

[To wit, our opponent, i.e. Lord Ram, does not seem to be an ordinary person; we are of the view that this gentleman is the best human we have ever seen or met in our whole lives. Surely he is some exceptional person, for just look at his magnetic personality and divine aura the like of which we have never ever encountered in our lives. He is surely someone who not deserve the rough treatment we are about to hand out to him. We have developed a tender feeling for him.] (2)

We have seen, we have vanquished and we have killed countless creatures till now, such as the Naags (serpents who rule the subterranean world), the Asurs (demons who dared to oppose us), the Surs (the gods), the Nars (human beings), and Munis (sages and hermits), --- (3)

---But oh brothers, listen. We must admit that we have never ever seen such grandness of majesty and such astounding beauty throughout our lives; never indeed since our births have we ever seen such a magnificent sight as we behold now! (4)

We are of the view that though it is true that he (Lord Ram) has deformed our sister (Supernakha) but he is surely not worthy of dying as he is indeed peerless.

[To wit, we are not able to suppress the tender feeling that has aroused in our hearts for this prince and become so heartless as to kill him cruelly. Though it is true that we are demons yet we too have at least some rudimentary form of sentimental feeling of tenderness present in our hearts. We feel hesitant to be rough and cruel towards this prince. One thing more—now we see why our sister fell for this prince! When he has charmed us so much then it is but natural that he must have enthralled our sister and captivated her imagination manifold times more as she is a woman after all. After all, it was our sister who had approached this prince and tried to impose her will on him, which may have annoyed him so much that he was provoked to deform her as punishment. We know that our sister has an immoral and promiscuous nature, and so the blame for this sorry affair also has to be shared by her. We are of the view that this prince could be excused if he agrees to pay some form of compensation to us for disfiguring our sister. So let us see what happens before deciding further what has to be done.] (5)

देहु तुरत निज नारि दुराई । जीअत भवन जाहु द्वौ भाई ॥ ६ ॥

मोर कहा तुम्ह ताहि सुनावहु । तासु बचन सुनि आतुर आवहु ॥ ७ ॥ dēhu turata nija nāri durā'ī. jī'ata bhavana jāhu dvau bhā'ī. 6.

mōra kahā tumha tāhi sunāvahu. tāsu bacana suni ātura āvahu. 7.

So therefore, if he gives us his woman (i.e. Sita, Lord Ram's wife), whom he has hidden from us somewhere, then we shall let the two brothers go back alive to their place (from where they came to this forest).

[To wit, if this prince, i.e. Lord Ram, is ready to pay the penalty for disfiguring our sister then we can let the two brothers off without any harm. And this penalty is this: they have to surrender the lady who accompanies them, and whom they have hidden somewhere from us because they feared that we would immediately grab her even before they could try to protect her. This shows that they are sore affright of our might, for as soon as they harmed our sister they realized their mistake and guessed rightly that she would go back and call for revenge, in which case her companions are sure to attack with full force those who had harmed her. So the elder prince, i.e. Lord Ram, was clever enough to decide to send the main culprit, his younger brother Laxman who had actually cut-off our sister's nose and ears, and the lady, i.e. Sita, into hiding so as to get them out of harm's way and protect them from immediate retribution should we arrive to seek revenge. Well, well; it is now clear that they are on the defensive and on the back-foot, for otherwise they wouldn't have hidden their woman, and neither would have the main culprit who had deformed our sister, i.e. the younger prince (Laxman) gone into hiding. Hence, if the two brothers agree to our condition then we shall not harm them and let them go back to their homes. And what is deal: They must give us the lady who accompanies them to settle this matter amicably.] (6)

[Khar and Dushan instructed their ministers as follows—] So therefore, go to him (Lord Ram) and convey our message. Then listen to what he has to say, and come back to us quickly. (7)

दूतन्ह कहा राम सन जाई । सुनत राम बोले मुसुकाई ॥ ८ ॥
 हम छत्री मृगया बन करहीं । तुम्ह से खल मृग खोजत फिरहीं ॥ ९ ॥
 रिपु बलवंत देखि नहिं डरहीं । एक बार कालहु सन लरहीं ॥ १० ॥
 जद्यपि मनुज दनुज कुल घालक । मुनि पालक खल सालक बालक ॥ ११ ॥ dūtanha kahā rāma sana jā'ī. sunata rāma bōlē musukā'ī. 8.

 hama chatrī mrgayā bana karahīm. tumha sē khala mrga khōjata phirahīm. 9.
 ripu balavanta dēkhi nahim ḍarahīm. ēka bāra kālahu sana larahīm. 10.
 jadyapi manuja danuja kula ghālaka. muni pālaka khala sālaka bālaka. 11.

The messengers immediately went to Lord Ram and conveyed the message of the demons to him. When the Lord heard it he smiled¹, and replied, --- (8)

[¹Why did the Lord 'smile'? Lord Ram 'smiled' because the demons' proposal was so absurd that no man of self-respect would ever agree to it. Besides that, the Lord 'smiled' that he would soon fulfill the wish of the demons, which was that they wanted to have Sita, because in a little while Ravana would come to abduct Sita and take her away to Lanka, and the Lord would allow him to do so; for the Lord fulfills the wishes of all, even his enemies! Further, there is one more reason for the Lord 'smiling': he was amused that these demons have themselves shown him the way by which the Lord could easily eliminate them and fulfill the promise he had made earlier to the Gods and Mother Earth. And this 'way' was to use Sita as a medium by which the Lord's mission could be successfully accomplished. Perhaps this is why after this incident the Lord thought over the matter and decided to let Sita go with Ravana voluntarily—so that he could go to the citadel of the demons at Lanka and finish them off there itself before they find time and are able to gather their wits to spread all over the earth and escape him.]

--- 'We are Kshatriyas (warriors) who roam in the forest to hunt wicked and cruel animals (or creatures) like you (the demons). (9)

We are not afraid at all that the enemy is mighty strong and powerful. In fact if Kaal (death itself personified) itself comes to us to challenge us we would gladly accept it and boldly face it in a battle. (10)

Though we are humans but you must note it that we are reputed to be destroyers of cruel and wicked creatures represented by the demon race; we are also protectors of hermits, sages and seers, and we find pleasure in tormenting and teasing wicked fellows like those children who would playfully puncture and cut small insects and worms to derive enjoyment from such acts.

[To wit, though we are young and tender to look at, but we are made of a sterner stuff than what you think of. We are not going to be so easily brow-beaten by you and your boastful bluster that you will kill us by the mere force of your numbers. Come, we accept your challenge for a duel.] (11)

जौं न होइ बल घर फिरि जाहू । समर बिमुख मैं हतउँ न काहू ॥ १२ ॥
रन चढ़ि करिअ कपट चतुराई । रिपु पर कृपा परम कदराई ॥ १३ ॥ दूतन्ह जाइ तुरत सब कहेऊ । सुनि खर दूषन उर अति दहेऊ ॥ १४ ॥

jauṁ na hō'i bala ghara phiri jāhū. samara bimukha maiṁ hata'um'na kāhū.
12.

rana caḍhi kari'a kapaṭa caturāī. ripu para kṛpā parama kadarāī. 13.
dūtanha jā'i turata saba kahē'ū. suni khara dūṣana ura ati dahē'ū. 14.

Look; if you do not have the courage (to fight with me) then go back home. I do not attack anyone who turns around and shows his back in the battle-field.

[To wit, I don't harm a coward. So if your lords, Khar and Dushan, are trying to make peace with me because they are afraid of dying in a battle with me, and to hide their fear they are pretending to be reasonable and avoid a confrontation by offering to strike a ridiculous bargain, that we give away our lady to our enemies if we wish to go back alive, then listen—I don't harm cowards. If you can't face me then go back peacefully and without fear, for I am not going to shoot you in your back.] (12)

After launching an open war and challenging one's opponent for a duel, then trying wicked means to avoid confrontation and playing smart by pretending to be merciful on one's enemy or opponent, is nothing but high degree of cowardice and fearfulness.

[To wit, once your lords Khar and Dushan, who are known demons who lack any mercy and compassion in their hearts, launched an attack on us, why are they now worried about our going back home alive? Why can't they kill us if they can and then take our lady as a trophy of battle if they have the guts to do so instead of offering to make a deal with us that we voluntarily submit our lady to them for the fear of our own lives? Say, which warrior worth his salt and name would agree to such a funny and outright ridiculous proposal? So go to your lords and tell them to go back instead of their telling us to go back!'] (13)'

The messengers went back immediately and conveyed Lord Ram's message to the demons Khar and Dushan. The Lord's answer burnt their heart and set it afire.

[To wit, there was nothing more humiliating for the demons than the Lord's answer that implied that they were cowards and afraid to fight with him. This rebuke infuriated them no end, and it was like pouring oil in the fire of hate that was already smouldering in their hearts.] (14)

छं०. उर दहेउ कहेउ कि धरहु धाए बिकट भट रजनीचरा । १ ।
सर चाप तोमर सक्ति सूल कृपान परिघ परसु धरा ॥ २ ॥
प्रभु कीन्हि धनुष टकोर प्रथम कठोर घोर भयावहा । ३ ।
भए बधिर ब्याकुल जातुधान न ग्यान तेहि अवसर रहा ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ura dahē'u kahē'u ki dharahu dhā'ē bikaṭa bhaṭa rajanīcarā. 1.
sara cāpa tōmara sakti sūla kṛpāna pariḡha parasu dharā. 2.
prabhu kīnhi dhanuṣa ṭakōra prathama kaṭhōra ghōra bhayāvahā. 3.
bha'ē badhira byākula jātudhāna na gyāna tēhi avasara rahā. 4.

[When the emissaries came back and conveyed to the demons Khar and Dushan the stern reply that Lord Ram had given to their message, they were extremely infuriated as never in their lives had they ever been subjected to such a scalding rebuke.]

Their (Khar-and-Dushan's) hearts burnt in the fire of revenge, and they ordered their demon soldiers 'go and catch him forthwith'. At this order, fierce demon warriors lunged forward at the Lord (Sri Ram) [1]; they were armed to the teeth with formidable weapons such as arrows, bows, iron clubs, lancets, spears, scimitars and double-edged swords, maces and heavy battle-axes [2]. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

The Lord (Sri Ram) wished to first issue a warning signal to these mad demons (before actually launching his counter-attack)¹, and so he twanged his stringed bow loudly, with a reverberating sound that was terrifying and deafening. (Chanda line no. 3)

This twang of the bow sent shivers through the spine of the attacking demon warriors who became deaf by its shrill sound that stunned them out of their wits and made them so sore agitated with fright that they virtually lost consciousness of themselves, and so dazed that they lost bearing of their surroundings². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram wished to warn his attackers first of the fate that stares them on their face should they continue with their misadventure under the influence of death

so that later on no one would raise a finger at the Lord that he should have given his enemy a chance to escape death.

²The twang of the Lord's bow was so loud and shrill that for some time the demons became stupefied and deaf in their ears; and this terrified them a lot as never in their lives had they ever had the chance to face an enemy who would fearlessly stand his ground against their onslaught. These demons were accustomed to seeing their enemies fleeing from them in terror as soon as they heard of their arrival, and not even the mighty gods had the guts to face them. So they did not expect such a welcome at the hands of a human being, Lord Ram, as they had faced now. This situation in itself was sufficient to cause enough consternation and heart-burn for the demons, and when the Lord pulled the strings of his bow to release it with a mighty twang, the shock waves struck the demons like a sledge-hammer. They were taken aback, and swooned and stumbled in their path.]

दो०. सावधान होइ धाए जानि सबल आराति ।
लागे बरषन राम पर अज सज बहु भाँति ॥ १९ (क) ॥ तिन्ह के आयुध तिल सम करि काटे रघुबीर ।
तानि सरासन श्रवन लागि पुनि छाँड़े निज तीर ॥ १९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

sāvadhāna hō'i dhā'ē jāni sabala ārāti.
lāgē baraṣana rāma para astra sastra bahu bhām̃ti. 19 (a).
tinha kē āyudha tila sama kari kāṭē raghubīra.
tāni sarāsana śravana lagi puni chām̃ṛē nija tīra. 19 (b).

The attacking demons realized that their opponent was not an easy target who could be rushed over and crushed so effortlessly, and that the enemy was strong, formidable and powerful. So these demons gathered their wits together and became alert while resuming their attack with renewed vigour.

They began showering countless types of missiles and weapons of all sorts upon Lord Ram with a vengeance. (Doha no. 19-a)

The brave Lord of the Raghus ("raghubīra"; Lord Ram) neutralized and destroyed all the weapons and missiles of the demons by cutting them into small splinters as small as sesame seeds. [To wit, Lord Ram rapidly shot arrows so powerful and effective that almost immediately fragmented the missiles etc. shot by the demons at the Lord.]

After having effectively neutralized the arms of the demon forces, the Lord went into an offensive mode, pulling the string of his bow back to his ears (to make it as taut as possible) and then shooting his own volley of arrows at the virtually disarmed (and demoralised) demon army. (Doha no. 19-b)

छं०. तब चले बान कराल । फुंकरत जनु बहु ब्याल ॥ १ ॥
कोपेउ समर श्रीराम । चले बिसिख निसित निकाम ॥ २ ॥ अवलोकि खरतर तीर । मुरि चले निसिचर बीर ॥ ३ ॥

भए क्रुद्ध तीनिउ भाइ । जो भागि रन ते जाइ ॥ ४ ॥
 तेहि बधब हम निज पानि । फिरे मरन मन महुँ ठानि ॥ ५ ॥ आयुध अनेक प्रकार । सनमुख ते करहिं प्रहार ॥ ६ ॥

chanda.

taba calē bāna karāla. phuṅkarata janu bahu. 1.
 kōpē'u samara śrīrāma. calē bisikha nisita nikāma. 2.
 avalōki kharatara tīra. muri calē niscara bīra. 3.
 bha'e krud'dha tīni'u bhā'i. jō bhāgi rana tē jā'i. 4.
 tēhi badhaba hama nija pāni. phirē marana mana mahum̃ ṭhāni. 5.
 āyudha anēka prakāra. sanamukha tē karahim̃ prahāra. 6.

The terrible arrows shot by the Lord sped forth like so many hissing serpents flying through the air. (Chanda line no. 1)

When Lord Ram became infuriated in battle, countless formidable arrows of immensely terrifying nature shot forth in rapid volleys. (Chanda line no. 2)

Seeing the sharp arrows coming directly at them with terrifying speed, the horrified demon warriors turned their backs and ran for their lives, scattering like nine pins here and there. (Chanda line no. 3)

The three demon brothers (Khar, Dushan and Trishira) became extremely exasperated and angry when they saw their army running away from the battle-field; they shouted at the retreating demon warriors, warning warned them of dire consequences if they ran away, saying 'mind everyone of you; if anyone runs away from the battle-field, we will kill him ourselves'¹.

At this stern warning and realizing that their death was certain if they tried to escape from the battle, the retreating demons turned once again towards the battle-field (to launch a fresh attack on the Lord in a last-ditch attempt in a do-or-die situation)². (Chanda line nos. 4-5)

They attacked the Lord from the front with renewed vigour, shooting many types of weapons and missiles at him. (Chanda line no. 6)

[Note—¹The three demon brothers had stationed themselves strategically on the three sides of the battle-field to monitor the developments on the ground. They had sent their advance troops for the first wave of attack, holding back reserves for the second assault should the first fail. When they saw that their warriors were turning on their heels to escape death, they were angry and dumb-founded as never before had they ever faced such a situation in the battle-field, especially more remarkable and astonishing because in this case their opponent was a single person and not an army. They must have rubbed their eyes to make sure that what they were wide awake and not seeing dream, but the stark reality of the battle-field!

²The poor demon soldiers had no choice: death was certain for them, either as brave warriors who die fighting, or as cowards who would be put to death by their commanders Khar, Dushan and Trishira if they tried to flee. So they wisely chose to die at the hands of Lord Ram, embracing death like true warriors. This decision had its own rewards—for when the Lord slayed them he also ensured the deliverance of their souls, a benefit these demon warriors would have been denied had they died at the hands of their vile and fallen masters Khar, Dushan and Trishira. This fact is expressly endorsed in Doha no. 20-a herein below.]

रिपु परम कोपे जानि । प्रभु धनुष सर संधानि ॥ ७ ॥ छाँड़े बिपुल नाराच । लगे कटन बिकट पिसाच ॥ ८ ॥
उर सीस भुज कर चरन । जहँ तहँ लगे महि परन ॥ ९ ॥
चिक्करत लागत बान । धर परत कुधर समान ॥ १० ॥ भट कटत तन सत खंड । पुनि उठत करि पाषंड ॥ ११ ॥
नभ उड़त बहु भुज मुंड । बिनु मौलि धावत रुंड ॥ १२ ॥ खग कंक काक सृगाल । कटकटहिँ कठिन कराल ॥ १३ ॥

ripu parama kōpē jāni. prabhu dhanuṣa sara sandhāni. 7.
chāmṛē bipula nārāca. lagē kaṭana bikaṭa pisāca. 8.
ura sīsa bhuja kara carana. jaham̃ taham̃ lagē mahi parana. 9.
cikkarata lāgata bāna. dhara parata kudhara samāna. 10.
bhaṭa kaṭata tana sata khaṇḍa. puni uṭhata kari pāṣaṇḍa. 11.
nabha uṛata bahu bhuja muṇḍa. binu mauli dhāvata ruṇḍa. 12.
khaga kaṅka kāka sṛgāla. kaṭakaṭahim̃ kaṭhina karāla. 13.

Observing that the enemy has become excessively aggressive and furious, daring to die in a no-holds barred conflict, Lord Ram mounted his specially empowered arrows known as ‘Narach (nārāca)’ and shot multitudes of them at the infuriated enemy. The result was that the evil demons began to be cut into pieces. (Chanda line nos. 7-8)

Torn and sliced pieces of their chests, heads, shoulders, arms and legs flew everywhere and landed on the ground (like so many meteors striking the earth). (Chanda line no. 9)

The demon warriors yelled horrifyingly when they were hit by the sharp arrows that pierced their bodies and cut-off their heads even as their dismembered torsos fell on the ground with a heavy resounding thud like so many mountains collapsing (into rubble, after an explosion). (Chanda line no. 10)

The bodies of the demon warriors were chopped into hundreds of pieces, but still they got up again to fight by the power of deception (pāṣaṇḍa) that they possessed. (Chanda line no. 11)

Many arms and heads were flying through the sky (like so many meteors and unknown flying objects); and countless headless trunks were running helter-skelter on the ground in the battle-field (like so many phantoms). (Chanda line no. 12)

Flesh eating birds such as vultures, kites and crows, as well as animals such as jackals and hyenas wrangled for their share of flesh in a blood-curdling and cruel manner. (Chanda line no. 13)

[Note—The spine-chilling and gut-churning scene of death, destruction and horror that is usually observed in any battle-field has been brought alive here. Later on when we read the war at Lanka such horrifying scenes would once again be described with exceptional clarity.

More of it follows in the verses herein below.

This Chanda is called a 'Tomar Chanda'. It is unique form of poetic composition that suits narration of battle scenes as 'Tomar' is also the name of a weapon. It is an iron club that is employed to bludgeon the enemy to death; it is also the name of the battle-ram used to break through the gate and walls of enemy forts. A 'Tomar Chanda' has four lines in each stanza, and each line has 12 Matras or syllables of the Hindi language. However, the last stanza is odd. In our present Chanda it will be noted that the last stanza consists of only one line, i.e. Chanda line no. 13.

When this Chanda is recited it resembles the fast paced, staccato rhythm like that of the beating of war drums.]

छं०. कटकटहिं जंबुक भूत प्रेत पिसाच खर्पर संचहीं । १ ।
 बेताल बीर कपाल ताल बजाइ जोगिनि नंचहीं ॥ २ ॥
 रघुबीर बान प्रचंड खंडहिं भटन्ह के उर भुज सिरा । ३ । जहँ तहँ परहिं उठि लरहिं धर धरु धरु करहिं भयकर गिरा ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kaṭakaṭahim jambuka bhūta prēta pisāca kharpara sancahim. 1.
 bētāla bīra kapāla tāla bajā'i jōgini nancahim. 2.
 raghubīra bāna pracaṇḍa khaṇḍahim bhaṭanha kē ura bhuja sirā. 3.
 jaham̐ taham̐ parahim̐ uṭhi lahim̐ dhara dharu dharu karahim̐ bhayakara girā. 4.

Jackals and hyenas howled and wrangled with each other¹; ghosts, devils and other forms of spirits and fiends (bhūta prēta pisāca) collected blood and flesh in hollowed-out skulls of fallen warriors.

[¹Refer: Chanda line no. 13 of the previous group of Chandas herein above.]
 (Chanda line no. 1)

Phantoms² (bētāla) picked up skulls of dead warriors in their hands and struck them like one strikes cymbals; and female phantoms called Yoginis³ (jōgini) danced merrily around.

[²According to the Purans, the 'Vetals', or phantoms, are a sort of ghosts who are believed to be superior to ordinary ghosts. They usually live in the cremation grounds. They are also said to be attendants of Lord Shiva, the third God of the Trinity who is responsible for the conclusion of creation, and therefore, symbolically of death.

³Yoginis are a sort of female phantoms who reside in cremation grounds and rush to battle-fields where they dance merrily at the spectacle of death and destruction; according to legend they are a form of goddess Kali, the goddess of death, as well as of Durga, the goddess of war.] (Chanda line no. 2)

Lord Raghubir's (i.e. Lord Ram's) fierce and potent arrows are striking hard at their targets, cutting into pieces the chests, shoulders and heads of the demon warriors⁴.

[⁴Refer: Chanda line no. 8 of the previous group of Chandas herein above.] (Chanda line no. 3)

These dismembered parts of the warriors fall here and there on the ground in the battle-field; then they rise once again, stumbling and tottering, to fight; shouting and yelling terribly: 'catch them; grab them'⁵.

[⁵Refer: Chanda line nos. 9-11 of the previous group of Chandas herein above.] (Chanda line no. 4)

अंतावरीं गहि उड़त गीध पिसाच कर गहि धावहीं । ५ ।
 संग्राम पुर बासी मनहुँ बहु बाल गुड़ी उड़ावहीं ॥ ६ ॥
 मारे पछारे उर बिदारे बिपुल भट कहँरत परे । ७ ।
 अवलोकि निज दल बिकल भट तिसिरादि खर दूषन फिरे ॥ ८ ॥ antāvarīm gahi uṛata gīdha pisāca kara gahi dhāvahīm. 5.

 saṅgrāma pura bāsī manahum̐ bahu bāla guṛī uṛāvahīm. 6.
 mārē pachārē ura bidārē bipula bhaṭa kahamṛata parē. 7.
 avalōki nija dala bikala bhaṭa tisirādi khara dūṣana phirē. 8.

Vultures catch hold of one end of the dead warriors' intestines and fly away with it, while devilish spirits and fiends hold the other end of the intestines and try to drag them away. (Chanda line no. 5)

This sight gives the impression that so many children of a town symbolized by the battle-field are flying kites and vying with each other to gain an upper hand in their competitive bid¹.

[¹In this imagery, the vultures are the 'kites' because they are air-borne, the phantoms are the 'children' who are running on the ground trying to fly their kites, and the intestines are the 'strings' of these kites, one end of which is attached to the kite symbolized the vultures and the other end is in the hand of the phantoms who symbolize children.] (Chanda line no. 6)

Countless demon warriors were killed, had their hearts torn out and chests sheared, and were bludgeoned to the ground; so many of them are yet not dead, for they lie in the battle-field wailing, groaning and moaning half-alive. (Chanda line no. 7)

Observing the distressful condition of their forces, the three demon commanders Khar, Dushan and Trishira turned their attention to Lord Ram. (Chanda line no. 8)

सर सक्ति तोमर परसु सूल कृपान एकहि बारहीं । ९ ।
 करि कोप श्रीरघुबीर पर अगनित निसाचर डारहीं ॥ १० ॥
 प्रभु निमिष महँ रिपु सर निवारि पचारि डारे सायका । ११ । दस दस बिसिख उर माझ मारे सकल निसिचर नायका ॥ १२ ॥ sara sakti tōmara parasu sūla kṛpāna ēkahi bārahīm. 9.

 kari kōpa śrīraghubīra para aganita nisācara ḍārahīm. 10.
 prabhu nimiṣa mahum̐ ripu sara nivāri pacāri ḍārē sāyakā. 11.
 dasa dasa bisikha ura mājha mārē sakala nisicara nāyakā. 12.

Countless demons started raining various types of fierce weapons, such as powerful arrows, clubs, spears, spikes, battle-axes, tridents and swords (sara sakti tōmara parasu sūla kṛpāna) angrily on Lord Ram all at once (ēkahi bārahīm)¹.

[¹Refer: Doha no. 19, along with Chanda line no. 2 that precede it, and Chanda line no. 6 that follow it.] (Chanda line nos. 9-10)

The Lord (Sri Ram) neutralized all the missiles (sara nivāri) of the enemy very swiftly in a few moments (or seconds; “nimiṣa mahum̐”); and then he retaliated with his own volley of powerfully potent arrows (pacāri ḍārē sāyakā)².

[²Refer: Doha no. 19 herein above.] (Chanda line no. 11)

He (Lord Ram) shot ten arrows at the heart of each of the demon commanders, and all these arrows slammed home with precision. (Chanda line no. 12)

महि परत उठि भट भिरत मरत न करत माया अति घनी । १३ ।
 सुर डरत चौदह सहस प्रेत बिलोकि एक अवध धनी ॥ १४ ॥
 सुर मुनि सभय प्रभु देखि मायानाथ अति कौतुक कश्यो । १५ । देखहिं परसपर राम करि संग्राम रिपुदल लरि मर्यो ॥ १६ ॥ mahi parata uṭhi bhaṭa bhirata marata na karata māyā ati ghanī. 13.

 sura ḍarata caudaha sahasa prēta bilōki ēka avadha dhanī. 14.
 sura muni sabhaya prabhu dēkhi māyānātha ati kautuka karyō. 15.
 dēkham̐ parasapara rāma kari saṅgrāma ripudala lari maryō. 16.

The demon warriors fall to the ground, but get up mysteriously to fight once again. They were employing deceptive techniques of which they were masters¹.

[¹Refer: Chanda line nos. 10-11 that precede this present group of Chandas, and follow Doha no. 19 herein above.] (Chanda line no. 13)

The gods (who were watching the proceedings from the heaven) became worried and sore affright as they saw that these wicked spirits (“prēta”; the fiendish spirits of dead demons) who knew countless tricks were fourteen thousand in number, while the Lord of Ayodhya (“avadha dhanī”; Lord Ram) was alone and fighting these multitudes single-handedly. (Chanda line no. 14)

When the Lord (Sri Ram) realized that the gods and sages had got terrified, he revealed his own masterly skill at creating deceptions [15] by which all the demons were misled to think that their companions were Lord Ram, and therefore they fought with each other and killed one another without the Lord's slightest intervention [16]!

[To wit, the demon warriors saw Lord Ram everywhere around them. So they killed their own friends and other demon warriors in the belief that they were killing their enemy Lord Ram. By employing this maverick trick the Lord was able to get rid of the demon army quickly without any further effort.] (Chanda line nos. 15-16)

[Note—This Chanda is called a 'Geetika Chanda'. It is so called as it can be sung melodiously with a sonorous voice, like a 'song', a 'Geet'. This sort of composition is soothing for the nerves as compared to the previous style called Tomar Chanda which is a war song that excites and arouses the nerves.]

दो०. राम राम कहि तनु तजहिं पावहिं पद निर्बान ।
करि उपाय रिपु मारे छन महुँ कृपानिधान ॥ २० (क) ॥ हरषित बरषहिं सुमन सुर बाजहिं गगन निसान ।
अस्तुति करि करि सब चले सोभित बिबिध बिमान ॥ २० (ख) ॥

dōhā.

rāma rāma kahi tanu tajahim pāvahim pada nirbāna.
kari upāya ripu mārē chana mahum' kṛpānidhāna. 20 (a).
haraṣita baraṣahim sumana sura bājahim gagana nisāna.
astuti kari kari saba calē sōbhita bibidha bimāna. 20 (b).

All the demons died while pronouncing the (holy) name of Lord Ram repeatedly (rāma rāma kahi tanu tajahim), which granted their souls instant liberation and deliverance (pāvahim pada nirbāna)¹.

By this means the Lord who is a treasury of mercy and compassion (kṛpānidhāna) was quickly able to slay all the enemies. (Doha no. 20-a)

When the demons were eliminated, the gods showered flowers over the victorious Lord from the sky (heaven), and played their trumpets to celebrate the happy occasion.

All the gods offered their prayers and sung eulogies lauding the glories of the Lord; then they went back to their respective abodes aboard different types of wonderful air-planes. (Doha no. 20-b)

[Note—¹When the demons began to hallucinate and each one of them saw that he was surrounded by multiple forms of Lord Ram, their enemy, all of them were astonished and terrorized beyond measure. Out of fear and astonishment they began to shout 'Ram, Ram'. But this proved a boon for them and their souls, as this word 'Ram' is not merely an ordinary name but a divine Mantra, which is a mystical formula used during spiritual practices to attain emancipation and salvation of the soul. Thus, even unwittingly, the soul of these demons got liberation from their evil bodies, and they found deliverance from the cycle of birth and death in this gross world of transmigration.

This is why Lord Ram is called ‘krpānidhāna’; the Lord ensured that even his enemies, though they were evil and sinful, should get the reward of coming close to him and saying his holy name ‘Ram’. And the best blessing that a creature can be granted is liberation from the horrors of life with its endless miseries and pains in this world of transmigration. Deliverance of the creature’s soul is the best spiritual reward that one can ever have, and the merciful Lord Ram granted this rare privilege to these demons.

The gracious Lord had no personal enmity with any one of these demons for he knew that their souls were inherently pure, and it was their bodies that were sinful. And when the body was slain and the soul liberated from its captivity, it regained its holiness and purity once again by uttering the holy Mantra ‘Ram, Ram’ which is all-purifying and the most holy of all the holy Mantras. Incidentally, it ought to be noted that according to the Upanishads, especially the ‘Ram Tapini Upanishad’ and the ‘Ram Rahasya Upanishad’ of the Atharva Veda tradition, this word ‘Ram’ is also called a ‘Tarak Mantra’, i.e. a spiritual formula that grants liberation, deliverance, salvation and emancipation to the creature. So when the demons uttered “Ram” while dying, they got a reward that is inherent in and integral to this holy Mantra—and it was deliverance of their soul.]

चौ०. जब रघुनाथ समर रिपु जीते । सुर नर मुनि सब के भय बीते ॥ १ ॥
तब लछिमन सीतहि लै आए । प्रभु पद परत हरषि उर लाए ॥ २ ॥
सीता चितव स्याम मृदु गाता । परम प्रेम लोचन न अघाता ॥ ३ ॥
पंचबटीं बसि श्रीरघुनायक । करत चरित सुर मुनि सुखदायक ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jaba raghunātha samara ripu jītē. sura nara muni saba kē bhaya bītē. 1.
taba lachimana sītahi lai ā'e. prabhu pada parata haraṣi ura lā'e. 2.
sītā citava syāma mṛdu gātā. parama prēma lōcana na aghātā. 3.
pañcabaṭīṁ basi śrīraghunāyaka. karata carita sura muni sukhadāyaka. 4.

When Lord Ram, the Lord of the line of kings descending from the ancient king Raghu of Ayodhya (raghunātha), vanquished the enemy (i.e. the demons) in the battle, all the gods, the humans and the sages (who lived in terror of these demons) became fearless¹. (1)

When the battle was over, Laxman brought Sita to where the Lord was. He fell at the feet of the Lord who cheerfully raised him and embraced him². (2)

Sita affectionately looked at the dark-complexioned and delicate form (syāma mṛdu gātā) of Lord Ram, feeling exhilarated and full of joy so much that tears of affection welled up in her eyes that were unable to satisfy her as she gazed at her beloved Lord intently (nor were they able to restrain these tears from coming out and sliding down her cheeks)³. (3)

In this way, Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram) lived in Panchavati and did many deeds that gave a lot of joy and happiness to the gods and the sages. (4)

{Thus ends the episode that describes the slaying of the demons Khar, Dushan etc. as well as the deformation of Supernakha that sowed the seed and prepared the ground for the ultimate elimination of Ravana and the rest of the evil, sinful and cruel demons.}

[Note—¹The word for Lord Ram used here is “raghunātha”, i.e. the ‘Lord of the Raghu line of kings’. This word signifies the importance of Lord Ram slaying the cruel demons who had been endlessly tormenting humble creatures, because it indicates that though there had been otherwise great and excellent kings in this dynasty but no one had been able to free their subjects from the horror of the demons till now; it was Lord Ram who was the first to do so.

Another important point to note is that this incident took place deep inside a dense and uninhabited forest called Dandakaranya; only sages, hermits and ascetics lived in such secluded places in order to pursue their religious objectives without disturbance from the hustle and bustle of life in this world. The news of the arrival of Lord Ram had already spread like wildfire in the forest, and all the hermitages around the place had become aware of the Lord’s presence. Prior to coming to the Panchavati area where this battle with the demon army took place, the Lord had visited the hermitage of sage Agastya, and it was the sage who had himself advised the Lord to spend time here. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 15-18 that precede Doha no. 13.}

So therefore everyone was alert; all important developments related to the Lord was eagerly heard and shared; and all the news spread quickly through the different hermitages by the word-of-mouth means. Hence, Supernakha’s deformation and the subsequent elimination of a major part of the demon forces led by well-known commanders Khar, Dushan and Trishira who were deputed by the king of the demon race, i.e. Ravana, to guard the outer fringes of the demons’ extended kingdom, was something so significant and epochal that it could not be kept secret for long. Whenever a fierce battle is fought, there is so much noise and clamour caused by the clash of energetic enemies as well as arms and armaments of all sorts and varieties, and so huge an amount of dust is raised up into the sky, that those living miles away become aware of this calamitous event, and it cannot pass unnoticed.

So, the news of this first-of-its kind and rarest-of-rare development when a single prince would eliminate an entire army consisting of blood-thirsty, ferocious and vicious demons of countless numbers who were armed to the teeth, and who yelled at the top of their lung-power and raised hell by their spine-chilling war-cries, could not have remained unknown amongst the sages, seers, hermits and ascetics, and their disciples, who lived in hermitages far and near. As for the gods, they had personally witnessed the battle from the sky. {Refer: Doha no. 20-b herein above.}

²Laxman had been instructed by Lord Ram to take Sita and hide inside a cave for the purpose of their safety. {Refer: Chaupai line nos. 10-13 that precede Doha no. 18 herein above.}

Once the battle ended and the din-and-dust subsided, Laxman came out of the cave with Sita, and returned happily to Lord Ram. He fell at the Lord’s feet in joy even as the Lord picked him up and embraced him affectionately.

³To wit, Sita felt so extremely fortunate and happy that Lord Ram was not harmed by the onslaught of the fierce demons who had attacked him from all the sides. While inside the cave she must have heard the deafening clatter of the battle-field, and would have peeped out a little to actually see and imagined much more of what may have been actually happening on the ground. She was extremely nervous and sore affright, fearing of the worst. So it is natural that when she saw her beloved Lord Ram virtually unscathed she felt very fortunate and filled with joy.

She closely observed the body of Lord Ram to see if there were any wounds. It is such a remarkable thing and a miraculous one at that, that though a torrent of sharp weapons had been raining on the Lord mercilessly, no serious sign of a wound was to be observed. Sita was overwhelmed with emotions; she could not stop gazing at the Lord both in love as well as in admiration. Tears moistened her eyes, and no matter how hard she would try to restrain them some drops must have involuntarily slid down her cheeks.

The fact that Lord Ram's delicate body was not wounded in the fierce attack of the demons itself proved that the Lord was no ordinary human being, but that he was a Divine Being, the Supreme Lord of the world himself in a human form.

The Lord pulled off this miracle without anyone being suspicious of his true form because there was no one present to observe the battle that took place in the deep forest; the demons who were witnesses had all died, and the gods of course knew who the Lord actually was, so there was no chance of this secret leaking to alert the demon king Ravana that the prince whom he will face in the future and who will eventually kill him is not a human being but the Supreme Being himself.

We will read soon, however, that Ravana did become suspicious of the Lord's true identity for he knew that it is impossible for anyone to kill Khar, Dushan and Trishira along with their huge army, but he was still in doubt. Had he known that Lord Ram's body did not suffer any wounds, he would have been certain of the Lord's Divinity and in all probability he would either had run away to hide somewhere or surrendered without resistance. In both the cases, the main objective of the Lord for which he had come down to earth from heaven, which was to eliminate the demons and save the earth and its creatures from their horrors and torments would not have been fulfilled, for the merciful Lord would not kill anyone who has either surrendered or has cowardly run away from the battle-field. In this eventuality, the mission would have remained unaccomplished.]

धुआँ देखि खर दूषन केरा । जाइ सुपनखाँ रावन प्रेरा ॥ ५ ॥
 बोली बचन क्रोध करि भारी । देस कोस कै सुरति बिसारी ॥ ६ ॥ करसि पान सोवसि दिनु राती । सुधि नहिं तव सिर पर आराती ॥ ७ ॥ dhu'ām' dēkhi khara dūṣana kērā. jā'i supanakhā' rāvana prērā. 5.

 bōlī bacana krōdha kari bhārī. dēsa kōsa kai surati bisārī. 6.
 karasi pāna sōvasi dinu rātī. sudhi nahim tava sira para ārātī. 7.

{Now starts the second phase of the story—when Supernakha went to instigate Ravana against Lord Ram, pleading with him to take revenge for her deformation and the killing of her cousin brothers Khar and Dushan along with their army.}

When Supernakha observed the dust that was raised when Khar and Dushan fell dead on the ground, she slithered away from there surreptitiously, and went straight to Ravana to incite him¹. (5)

Once there, she spoke to him angrily with a shrill voice and a provocative tone, admonishing him sternly: ‘Woe to you as you have forgotten about and have neglected the condition of your realm and wealth. (6)

You drink and get intoxicated enough to sleep day and night; for you are unaware that a formidable enemy is right up at your head (“tava sira para”; knocking at your doorstep)². (7)

[Note—¹Where did Supernakha meet Ravana? Well, it was in his court, in full view of the demon courtiers who were in attendance, and not privately inside his palace. This will be clear shortly below in Doha no. 21-b.

²To wit, you are so stupid that you think that you have no enemy as you have conquered the gods and their king Indra. In your over-confidence of invincibility and deluded to think that there is no one powerful enough to challenge your might, you drink and sleep all day and night so much so that you have neglected the demon kingdom and do not take regular report of what is happening in your realm. Look—a formidable enemy is right up knocking at your very gate, ready to usurp your kingdom and push you out into oblivion, and yet you sleep soundly as if everything was fine. Aren’t for example you aware that the mighty Khar and Dushan are dead in battle, and their entire army is finished? How stupid you are!]

राज नीति बिनु धन बिनु धर्मा । हरिहि समर्पे बिनु सतकर्मा ॥ ८ ॥
 बिद्या बिनु बिबेक उपजाएँ । श्रम फल पढ़ें किएँ अरु पाएँ ॥ ९ ॥
 संग तें जती कुमंत्र ते राजा । मान ते ग्यान पान तें लाजा ॥ १० ॥
 प्रीति प्रनय बिनु मद ते गुनी । नासहिं बेगि नीति अस सुनी ॥ ११ ॥ rāja nīti binu dhana binu dharmā. harihi samarpē binu satakarmā. 8.

 bidyā binu bibēka upajā'ēm̃. śrama phala paṛhēm̃ ki'ēm̃ aru pā'ēm̃. 9.
 saṅga tēm̃ jati kumantra tē rājā. māna tē gyāna pāna tēm̃ lājā. 10.
 prīti pranaya binu mada tē gunī. nāsaḥiṃ bēgi nīti asa sunī. 11.

[Supernakha gave some instances of well known and time-tested maxims to impress upon Ravana that importance and urgency of being vigilant.]

Kinghood without knowledge of politics, accumulation of wealth without virtues, doing good deeds without offering them to Lord Hari (the Lord God) [8], acquiring knowledge without having the wisdom and the ability to judiciously employ this knowledge—are all in vain. To wit, all these activities fail to produce the desired result if not done properly and in accordance to these axioms. [9] (8-9)

Further, it is also heard (i.e. it is a well-known proverb) that all the following persons come to ruin: viz. (a) a person who has renounced the world but keeps company of some sort, (b) a king who is given bad advice, (c) a person who has knowledge and enlightenment but also has pride, ego and haughtiness (as these negative traits dilute and corrupt as well as neutralize the gain obtained by the former), (d) a person who drinks wine and hopes to maintain dignity, decorum and self-respect [10], (e) a person who claims to be friendly but lacks sincerity and affection for his companion, and (f) a person who has expertise or skill but at the same time is haughty and arrogant—all such persons unwittingly negate whatever positive value that might be attached to their good virtues [11]. (10-11)

[Note—Supernakha was Ravana's sister, so she was within her rights to preach him on these principles, though this glorious lecture was more to instigate him and provoke him to take revenge on Lord Ram than to actually wish for his good.]

सो०. रिपु रुज पावक पाप प्रभु अहि गनिअ न छोट करि ।
अस कहि बिबिध बिलाप करि लागी रोदन करन ॥ २१ (क) ॥

sōraṭhā.

ripu ruja pāvaka pāpa prabhu ahi gani'a na chōṭa kari.
asa kahi bibidha bilāpa kari lāgī rōdana karana. 21 (a).

One must never underestimate the danger arising from an enemy, a disease, fire, sins, an able lord or master, and serpent in the erroneous belief that they are small and trifling (and can be easily handled). [For no one can know or predict what great danger and inconvenience any of these aforesaid entities can cause to a person who is not sufficiently alert about them.]

Saying this, she (Supernakha) wailed, lamented and wept inconsolably in a variety of ways. (Sortha no. 21-a)

दो०. सभा माझ परि ब्याकुल बहु प्रकार कह रोइ ।
तोहि जिअत दसकंधर मोरि कि असि गति होइ ॥ २१ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

sabhā mājha pari byākula bahu prakāra kaha rō'i.
tōhi ji'ata dasakandhara mōri ki asi gati hō'i. 21 (b).

She fell on the ground in the middle of the court (of Ravana), extremely agitated and crying woefully. Lamenting and grieving, she asked Ravana scornfully, 'Say, oh the ten-headed one (Ravana), should I be subjected to this pitiful and miserable condition while you are alive?'¹

[¹“To wit, aren't you ashamed of yourself, tell me, that your sister has been deformed and her ears and nose cut off by a stranger who has openly insulted you by humiliating your sister? Is he not challenging your majesty by killing your demon cousins Khar and Dushan, and annihilating their army single-handedly? And you drink and sleep as if nothing has happened. Wake up before it's too late.”] (Doha no. 21-b)

चौ०. सुनत सभासद उठे अकुलाई । समुझाई गहि बाँह उठाई ॥ १ ॥
कह लंकेस कहसि निज बाता । केइँ तव नासा कान निपाता ॥ २ ॥

caupāṭī.

sunata sabhāsada uṭhē akulāṭī. samujhāṭī gahi bām̐ha uṭhāṭī. 1.
kaha laṅkēsa kahasi nija bātā. kē'im̐ tava nāsā kāna nipātā. 2.

When the courtiers of Ravana heard about the most unfortunate development that arising out of Supernakha's deformation and the subsequent decimation of the demon army led by Khar, Dushan and Trishira, an event that pointed to some grave danger of a calamitous nature that stared the demon race on its face, they were all dumbstruck and perplexed; they got up with a start, and were sore agitated (because they could not believe what they heard).

Ravana, meanwhile, tried to politely reassure his sister, and lifted her from the ground by holding her arms. (1)

The king of Lanka ("laṅkēsa"; Ravana) asked her, 'Tell me what actually happened; who has cut off your nose and ears?'¹ (2)

[Note—¹In the previous verses Supernakha has not told Ravana what had actually happened that led to her disfiguring and the subsequent death of the demon warriors led by Khar, Dushan and Trishira. She was so much agitated and extremely angry when she arrived in a great huff and burst into the court of Ravana breathlessly, panting and puffing and cursing and wailing in grief as if some great calamity has befallen the demons, and though she was its first victim yet she managed to survive the ordeal to come to report to Ravana even as other warrior demons who dared challenge the enemy had perished. This was meant to drive home the urgency of the situation and set alarm bells ringing.

Ravana and his courtiers were so much taken aback at this sudden and unexpected turn of events that they were left speechless. It was beyond their remotest imagination that the ferocious sister of their powerful Lord Ravana, the invincible king of the demon race, and who herself was strong enough to fend for herself and destroy her tormentor, if there was any, who would be stupid enough to challenge her, would one day be reduced to such a pitiful and helpless condition that she would have her body disfigured by having her nose and ears chopped off, with deep wounds from which flowed thick hot blood that had yet not dried to form crusts. This singular unbelievable sight was enough to chill the atmosphere into a death-like graveyard, and paralyse every demon courtier present at the moment in the court of Ravana.

No one dared to move; Ravana stepped forward from his throne and politely lifted up his sister from the ground where she lay prostrate writhing in agony and anger, showing empathy for her and soothing her nerves with kind words, hinting to her that he will surely take revenge on her behalf, but first she must tell him what had actually happened.]

अवध नृपति दसरथ के जाए । पुरुष सिंघ बन खेलन आए ॥ ३ ॥
समुझि परी मोहि उन्ह कै करनी । रहित निसाचर करिहहिं धरनी ॥ ४ ॥
जिन्ह कर भुजबल पाइ दसानन । अभय भए बिचरत मुनि कानन ॥ ५ ॥
देखत बालक काल समाना । परम धीर धन्वी गुन नाना ॥ ६ ॥ अतुलित बल प्रताप द्वौ भ्राता । खल बध रत सुर मुनि सुखदाता ॥ ७ ॥ avadha nṛpati dasaratha kē jā'ē. puruṣa siṅgha bana khēlana ā'ē. 3.

 samujhi parī mōhi unha kai karanī. rahita nisācara karihahiṁ dharanī. 4.
 jinha kara bhujabala pā'i dasānana. abhaya bha'ē bicarata muni kānana. 5.
 dēkhata bālaka kāla samānā. parama dhīra dhanvī guna nānā. 6.
 atulita bala pratāpa dvau bhrātā. khala badha rata sura muni sukhadātā. 7.

[Supernakha replied—] ‘They (i.e. those who have caused so much horror for me and killed my cousins and their army) are the sons of the king of Ayodhya¹. They are like lions amongst the human beings, and it appears that they have come to the forest to hunt. (3)

I have observed their attitude, and from their behaviour and actions I have a firm conviction that they are out to destroy the demon race and eliminate all of them from the surface of the earth². (4)

Oh the ten-headed One (i.e. Ravana). Sages, seers and hermits (who are so afraid of you that they remain away from view and live a subdued life of subjugation) have recently become fearless on account of their support and strength of arm³. (5)

On the face of it they look like young adolescent boys, but this is a mirage as in reality they are extremely courageous and valiant, experts in archery as they are skilled in the use of the bow and arrow, and are endowed with countless other excellent qualities⁴. (6)

In all sooth and without gainsay, these two brothers indeed have no match for their strength, glory, gallantry and valour. It is certain that they are determinedly engaged in the slaying of the demons, and granting joy and happiness to the sages, seers and hermits (and I have no doubt about it)⁵. (7)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 14 that precedes Doha no. 17 earlier in this narration. In this verse Laxman has told Supernakha who Lord Ram was—i.e. he was the prince of Ayodhya, and since he was the Lord’s brother (Chaupai line no. 11), it also identified him as another prince of Ayodhya.

²⁺⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precede Doha no. 19. Here, Lord Ram has told the messenger of Khar and Dushan this thing—that they are born as Kshatriyas, the warrior race, and roam around in the forest looking for devils like these demons whom they are willing to engage and kill, like children who playfully kill insects by pricking them to death, in order to maintain peace and tranquility on earth as well as to give relief to holy men such as sages and hermits.

Supernakha had been by the side of Khar and Dushan when they had attacked Lord Ram with the demon army. So when their messenger came back to report to them the answer given by Lord Ram, it is sure she had heard it. This is how she came to know about the determination of the two brothers.

³To wit, Supernakha tried her best to provoke Ravana by throwing an open challenge to him when she said: “The sages, seers and hermits whom you had subjugated by the might of your arms have now lost all fear; they roam around boldly in the forest defying your authority, as if sneering at you and challenging you to come and try harming them if you dare. Say, is this defiance acceptable to you? Your power structure and authority are crumbling, and if everyone starts losing fear of you like these sages are currently doing, then say what majesty will be left for you to boast of like the way you presently do so often?”

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 19. Even the otherwise emotionless and cruel demons Khar and Dushan were struck by the ethereal charm of Lord Ram and Laxman; they had for a moment all but forgotten about the humiliation their sister Supernakha had undergone at the first divine sight of the two brothers.]

सोभा धाम राम अस नामा । तिन्ह के संग नारि एक स्यामा ॥ ८ ॥
 रूप रासि बिधि नारि संवारी । रति सत कोटि तासु बलिहारी ॥ ९ ॥
 तासु अनुज काटे श्रुति नासा । सुनि तव भगिनि करहिं परिहासा ॥ १० ॥
 खर दूषन सुनि लगे पुकारा । छन महुँ सकल कटक उन्ह मारा ॥ ११ ॥
 खर दूषन तिसिरा कर घाता । सुनि दससीस जरे सब गाता ॥ १२ ॥

sōbhā dhāma rāma asa nāmā. tinha kē saṅga nāri ēka syāmā. 8.
 rūpa rāsi bidhi nāri samvārī. rati sata kōṭi tāsū balihārī. 9.
 tāsū anuja kāṭē śruti nāsā. suni tava bhagini karahim parihāsā. 10.
 khara dūṣana suni lagē pukārā. chana mahum sakala kaṭaka unha mārā. 11.
 khara dūṣana tisirā kara ghātā. suni dasasīsa jarē saba gātā. 12.

His name is ‘Ram’, and very handsome, being an epitome of beauty and charm¹. With him is a lady with a dark-complexion (saṅga nāri ēka syāmā). (8)

This particular lady is a virtual treasury of beauty and charm; indeed the Creator (‘Vidhi’) had painstakingly endowed her with these glorious and excellent physical qualities, for a hundred-thousand ‘Ratis²’ appear to have been sacrificed in order to create her². (9)

His (i.e. Lord Ram’s) younger brother (Laxman) has cut my nose and ears; when they heard that I am your sister they laughed at me (to tease me with excessive sarcasm in their voice and expression)³. (10)

When I rushed to Khar and Dushan to call them to my rescue, and they immediately responded by scurrying to take revenge with the full might of their army, he (Lord Ram) had killed the entire demon force quickly in a few moments.’ (11)

When the ten-headed Ravana heard that Khar-Dushan and Trishira had been killed, he was so extremely indignant, peeved and angry that his body literally burnt as if on fire. [To wit, this was a personal affront on his self-respect and dignity that was too much for him to cope with silently. He wringed his hands and cursed under his breath, resolving to seek retribution.] (12)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 19 where we read Khar and Dushan too had made a similar observation.

²'Rati' is the patron goddess of physical beauty and charm; she is the consort of Kaamdeo, the god of love and beauty.

³Now we see that Supernakha has started telling lies. Lord Ram and Laxman had never laughed at her, irrespective of whose sister she was. She was hell-bent on instigating Ravana, and so would use all tricks she could think of to accomplish her objective. By telling Ravana that her tormentors had teased her more because she happened to be his sister she touched a raw nerve; it had now turned into a matter of ego, of self-respect and dignity of the king of the demons, when such an insinuation is made against him in full public court as was the case presently.

Ravana had never in his imagination thought that one fine day he would be forced to hear such indignities being heaped on his name, with such bold impunity! So it is but natural that he was filled with an extreme feeling of indignation and hate.]

दो०. सूपनखहि समुझाइ करि बल बोलेसि बहु भाँति । गयउ भवन अति सोचबस नीद परइ नहिं राति ॥ २२ ॥

dōhā.

sūpanakhahi samujhā'i kari bala bōlēsi bahu bhāmṭi.
gaya'u bhavana ati sōcabasa nīda para'i nahim rāti. 22.

He (Ravana) comforted Supernakha in various ways, telling her about his strength and powers to reassure her that she would be fully revenged¹.

Then he went to his palace, lost in deep thought and pondering gravely on the implication of what he had heard. He was so overcome with worry that he could not sleep that night². (Doha no. 22)

[Note—¹Refer Doha no. 21-b herein above where Supernakha has asked Ravana if it was ever possible that she would suffer this kind of extreme misery while he was alive. So here Ravana answers that doubt of hers by telling her not to worry as he is strong and powerful enough to teach her tormentors a bitter lesson while avenging for the humiliation to which she has been subjected.

²Ravana lay wide awake in the night, wondering if it is ever possible for a human being to kill such formidable demon warriors as Khar, Dushan and Trishira. He concluded that since this is not feasible under any circumstance, it is sure and certain that the Supreme Being has finally arrived to eliminate the demons and free the earth from their ruthless cruelty.

This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23. For details see Section 5.1.3 herein above in this Chapter no. 5.]

चला अकेल जान चढ़ि तहवाँ । बस मारीच सिंधु तट जहवाँ ॥ ७ ॥ इहाँ राम जसि जुगुति बनाई । सुनहु उमा सो कथा सुहाई ॥ ८ ॥ calā akēla jāna caḍhi tahavām̃. basa mārīca sindhu taṭa jahavām̃. 7.

ihām̃ rāma jasi juguti banāṭī. sunahu umā sō kathā suhāṭī. 8.

[After long contemplation and deep thought, Ravana decided to act proactively. He had no choice left: If he demurred and let this event go unchallenged, it would clearly mean submission and defeat even without a fight, which would make him a coward and show him in utterly poor light. For any brave warrior worth his name and salt, this eventuality is equivalent to death, if not worse. And on the other hand, if he went on the offensive there were two options that could happen—one was that he would die at the hands of the Supreme Being, for no one except the Supreme Lord could kill him, and so find emancipation and salvation for himself; and the other option was that he would conquer his opponent, the two human princes who have dared to challenge him, and restore the dignity and honour of his name and glory. So both ways he had nothing to lose, thought he wisely indeed. So therefore—]

He (Ravana) boarded his air-plane all alone and went to the place near the shore of the ocean where Marich lived¹. (7)

Lord Shiva (who is the primary narrator of this wonderful story of Lord Ram) told his consort Uma (or Parvati), ‘Listen Uma. Now I shall tell you about the most interesting but mysterious device that Lord Ram devised (to carry forward his mission of eliminating the demons) back here in his hermitage (where Supernakha was deformed by Laxman and the demon army was killed by the Lord). (8)

[Note—¹Marich and other demons had come to defile the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra. Lord Ram had killed all of them, but he had shot Marich with a headless arrow; so he escaped death but was flung afar to an island in the middle of the ocean where he lived in fear of the Lord. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210.

It was here that Ravana had gone to engage Marich to give shape to his plans to kidnap Sita.

Why did Ravana, who was reputed to fear none, not even the powerful gods, choose to go alone? This is clear in the previous Chaupai line no. 1-3 where we read his extreme sense of bewilderment when he learnt that the mighty demons Khar and Dushan, who were comparable to him in gallantry, valour, strength and power, would be killed by a single human being; and so he deduced that their killer is not an ordinary human as he apparently appears to be, but the almighty Supreme Being who has finally come to remove the suffering of the earth caused by the demons by eliminating them.

Since he was a king of the demon race he kept a close watch over all the developments on earth, to ensure that no one would dare to raise a challenge to him and his writ remained steady in all the corners of the earth. So his messengers must have surely briefed him about the slaying of Tadka, Subahu and other demons earlier, at the time Lord Ram had gone to protect the sacred fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra; but Ravana did not give their killing any great importance as he thought that the sage must have become exceedingly angry at them for defiling his fire sacrifice and may have taken the help of some warrior king to get rid of the offenders. Besides this, that area where Tadka etc. were killed was far away from Lanka and beyond the outer boundaries of the realm over which Ravana had the unquestioned sway of his authority. So he chose to look the other way.

But Khar, Dushan and Trishira were demons of a different mould, for they equaled Ravana in all respects of strength, power and abilities. More than that, the geographical area where they were killed was closer home, raising the dangerous spectre of an enemy in the back-yard who could attack any time. So when Ravana heard from Supernakha of their killing, along with their formidable army of able and most ferocious and vicious demon warriors, by a single person (Lord Ram), he was absolutely stunned and caught by a fierce grip of fear.

To wit, he became exceedingly alarmed. He prudently thought that if he takes his huge army when he goes to retaliate it would not be a wise thing as this is sure to raise a mighty din because the demons won't go quietly, they would yell and shriek even as they leave Lanka, which would let everyone in the city know where they are headed to, and in case they meet the same fate as the army of Khar and Dushan, what face would Ravana then have to show his citizens. Should this happen, it would be like being buried alive for him for he had never known defeat, and he had always returned from his campaigns a victor.

This unseemly event would have left him defenseless and most highly embarrassed in front of his own subjects; he would become an object of ridicule and laugh, and aside of losing self-respect and dignity he will have to face prospect of losing confidence of his subjects. The demons obeyed Ravana more out of fear of punishment for disobedience than out of any sense of respect for him; so once they find that their king has become vulnerable there were chances of revolt or mutiny.

Therefore he thought that it would be wise and prudent to avoid an immediate direct confrontation with Lord Ram in a remote area which is far away from his fortified fort at Lanka, and it would be wiser and militarily far-sighted to manipulate things to his advantage by compelling his enemy to come to his fort at Lanka, as then he would have all the strategic advantages of being on his own turf rather than far away in an alien land.

There were other reasons also for Ravana choosing to go alone to kidnap Sita. He was aware that many in his own family as well as in the city of Lanka were antagonized against him and internally hoped for his doom. One was his own brother Vibhishan whose devotion for Lord Vishnu, whom Ravana treated as his arch enemy, was well known; and later on Vibhishan did join Lord Ram when he was publicly rebuked by Ravana. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 8 where we read that it was Vibhishan who had disclosed to Hanuman the place where Sita was kept at Lanka; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Doha no. 41 where Ravana insulted Vibhishan and the latter decided to join Lord Ram's camp in disgust.}

His other brother Kumbhakarna was also not one of his admirers, for during the battle when Ravana asked him to pick up arms and go fight Lord Ram, Kumbhakarna had strongly admonished Ravana for his evil intentions which are sure to bring destruction upon him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Doha no. 64 where Kumbhakarna has not only chided Ravana for his madness but has also praised Vibhishan for joining Lord Ram.}

Amongst his citizens also there were many who did not like his unwarranted confrontation with Lord Ram for the sake of a woman. Once sterling example is that of the old demoness Trijata who had openly predicted Ravana's death and victory for Lord Ram. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 12; and (ii)

Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 100.}

Ravana was aware of this situation; so he feared that if it was disclosed that he is going on a mission to abduct Sita and fight her husband Lord Ram if he obstructs, then there were fair chances that one of his brothers would make a coup-d-etat and usurp his crown while he was away, and he would be joined by those demons who were quietly against his rule but kept quiet out of fear till the opportune time came. This would have been catastrophic for Ravana. So he decided to keep his plans strictly confidential.]

दो०. लछिमन गए बनहिं जब लेन मूल फल कंद । जनकसुता सन बोले बिहसि कृपा सुख बृंद ॥ २३ ॥

dōhā.

lachimana ga'e banahim jaba lēna mūla phala kanda.
janakasutā sana bōlē bihasi kṛpā sukha bṛnda. 23.

When Laxman had gone to the forest to collect firewood and edible roots and fruits, Lord Ram, who is a treasury of mercy, grace and compassion, smilingly told Sita, the daughter of Janak, as follows --- (Doha no. 23)

[Note—It is clear from this Doha that whatever Lord Ram confided with Sita was not known to Laxman. And what was this secret? It is narrated in the verses that follow herein below.

Two things are to be noted here: viz. (i) Lord Ram kept his plan for the future secret from Laxman, as he spoke about it to Sita when Laxman had gone away to the forest to collect firewood and eatables, and (ii) the Lord smiled while speaking to Sita.

The answer to the first question, 'why did Lord Ram kept the plan secret from Laxman', is that the Lord wanted Laxman to behave in an absolutely normal way as if the developments that would soon take place were great misfortunes that have suddenly come to haunt the two brothers. This would serve two purposes: one, the demons won't get any hint that everything is stage-managed with the sole aim of eliminating them because Laxman's reactions and attitude would be genuinely like a person going through the throes of a horrifying experience while already enduring the painful destiny devised for him by the cruel Creator; and second, it would help Laxman's excellent character and wonderful virtues such as courage, resilience, loyalty, faith, devotion, gallantry, valour and glory to shine through.

The second question is: 'why did the Lord smile'? The Lord smiled because what was to follow was though very unusual and unconventional but willingly undertaken by the Lord in order to carry out his duty as the Supreme Lord of the world to eliminate the cruel demons so that the reign of terror they had spread all over could be ended, and the subjects of his kingdom could live in peace. Lord Ram smiled because he would now need Sita's active cooperation in the events that would soon unfold, events that ordinarily would be too repulsive and abhorable for Sita even to think of let alone her actively participating in them, such as her allowing herself to be abducted by Ravana and being held captive by him in his palace at Lanka, but it was absolutely essential to do it so that the Lord could carry out his master-plan of eliminating the scourge of the demons and protect the future of this world from their continuing reign of horrors and torments.

The Lord smiled so as to assure Sita that though the events that will unfold now onwards would make it necessary for both the Lord and Sita to behave like ordinary human beings who are in deep distress, but she must rest in peace that all of it is pre-planned by the Lord, and therefore there is no need for her to worry for her safety or get unduly alarmed mentally. It's a thing to be enjoyed by her like one enjoys a sport.]

चौ०. सुनहु प्रिया ब्रत रुचिर सुसीला । मैं कछु करबि ललित नरलीला ॥ १ ॥

तुम्ह पावक महुँ करहु निवासा । जौ लगि करौं निसाचर नासा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunahu priyā brata rucira susilā. mair̥m kachu karabi lalita naralīlā. 1.

tumha pāvaka mahum̥ karahu nivāsā. jau lagi karaum̥ nisācara nāsā. 2.

Lord Ram told Sita, ‘My dear, listen. You have been steadfastly loyal to me and strict in your vows of fidelity, and you have indeed been most courteous and virtuous (and there is no doubt about it)¹.

However, I (who am the Supreme Lord of this world) have to perform certain fascinating acts like an ordinary human being (in order to fulfill my divine mandate due to which I had been constrained to come down to earth in the form of a human)².
(1)

During the time I am engaged in eliminating the demons, you must dwell in the ‘fire element’ (tumha pāvaka mahum̥ karahu nivāsā)³.’ (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram wished to reassure Sita, his chaste and loyal wife, that the drama which is to play out soon—during which the Lord would maneuver things in such a mysterious way that when the demon king Ravana would abduct her the Lord would not be able to save her—will never mean at all that he doubts her integrity and devotion to him. His leaving her for sometime and allowing her to be taken away by the demon king Ravana is part of the grand plan by which the Lord wished to eliminate the evil demons; so it has to be acted out to perfection because greater issues are at stake, and personal emotions should not be allowed to ruin the grand plan.

²The divine mandate of Lord Ram was to free the earth from the horrors and cruelty unleashed by the evil demons. It was a promise Lord Vishnu had made to the Gods and Mother Earth. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 186 to Doha no. 187.}

Since the demon king Ravana had obtained a boon from Brahma, the creator, that he would not be killed by anyone except a human being, it was imperative for Lord Ram to act perfectly like a human being in order to uphold the sanctity of Brahma’s words. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 177.}

This is the primary reason why all the acts and deeds of Lord Ram were like those of an ordinary person.

This is also one of the reasons why he kept Laxman out of the game-plan, so that Laxman may never act in a supernatural way in a huff when faced with some anxious moments, and give a hint about the Lord's true identity, no matter how grave and distressful the situation may be, for it would have surely alerted the demons who would have then escaped forthwith and go into hiding. If that happened, the Lord's strategy would have collapsed, and he would have failed to eliminate all of them in one go.

Lord Ram's doubts about Laxman disclosing the reality of who Sita and Ram were was not totally unfounded as Laxman was known to be of a short-temper, and when he got angry he did not bother about the consequences of what he said. There are earlier evidences for it when Laxman lost his patience when he thought some harm would come to his beloved Lord. We have instances to prove this point. For example, during the 'bow breaking ceremony' at Janakpur when no body had been able to lift and break the bow that would have entitled him to marry Sita, and so it appeared that she would have to remain unmarried, king Janak was extremely distressed and he had expressed his anguish by lamenting that the earth has become devoid of a true warrior. At that time Laxman rose up angrily to counter Janak and sternly rebuke him publicly for making this disparaging remark when Lord Ram was present in the assembly and had yet not been given a chance to try his hand at the bow. It was an august assembly and a solemn occasion, when all the great kings and princes of the time had assembled, and Janak was himself a wise king of great repute who was old enough to be shown due respect that Laxman would have shown to his own father king Dasrath. So to rebuke king Janak publicly was not something that can be regarded as being polite and good mannered by any account on the part of Laxman; yet he vented his anger without bothering about decorum and niceties of behaviour. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 252—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 254.}

Immediately after this incident came another occasion when Laxman's short-temper was revealed. It so happened that no sooner had Lord Ram broken the bow than sage Parashuram arrived angrily to punish him who has dared to break Lord Shiva's bow, because the sage regarded Shiva as his revered deity. At that time also Laxman fearlessly faced Parashuram and boldly answered him back, going to the extent of teasing and rebuking him with impunity so much so that the whole assembly trembled in fear for it was something most unexpected as one is not supposed to stand up and answer a great sage on his face. By-and-by, Lord Ram intervened and sorted out the matter, calming the sage and preventing any further damage. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 271—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.}

A third occasion for such exhibition of anger by Laxman was at the time when Bharat, the younger brother of Lord Ram, had come to the forest to meet the Lord and try persuading him to go back to his capital. Bharat was accompanied by a huge entourage, and Laxman thought that he was coming to fight and get rid of them, i.e. Lord Ram, Laxman and Sita, in the forest while they were alone and without the support of any army, after which Bharat would be able to rule, unopposed, over the kingdom. So he got up and vehemently criticized Bharat without waiting to ascertain the facts, and declared that he would kill all of them single-handedly if Lord Ram would give him the signal. In this instance also Lord Ram intervened to calm him down, telling him that his fears were totally unfounded and uncalled for as Bharat was not the type of brother Laxman thinks him to be. Even the gods advised Laxman to act with wisdom. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 233.}

To wit, Lord Ram thought it prudent to keep his plan secret from Laxman so as to avoid it being leaked by him if he gets annoyed and frustrated at the demons.

See also note appended to Doha no. 23 herein above; and Chaupai line no. 5 herein below.

³The advice of Lord Ram for Sita to dwell in the ‘fire element’ is very interesting and has great significance; it is more than what meets the eye.

The Beej Mantra (the essential spiritual formula by which any deity is known and worshipped, and which represents that particular deity’s cosmic energy and powers) for Lord Ram is the Sanskrit word ‘Rām’ (pronounced as Raang). Now, this is also the Beej Mantra for the Fire God, or the ‘fire element’ at the subtle level. So by advising Sita to abide in the ‘fire’, Lord Ram has ensured that she lives safely in the protection of the Fire God. The ‘fire’ is the most potent force in creation; it can reduce anything to ashes if it goes wild. So when Sita is protected by this cosmic fire, no harm would ever come to her.

There are other reasons as well for Lord Ram asking Sita to live in the protection of the ‘fire’. Soon Ravana would abduct her, and if she lives surrounded by the fire element it would ensure that her purity and holiness would not at all be compromised when Ravana takes her away and holds her captive in Lanka.

The all-knowing Lord Ram knew that soon Hanuman would burn Lanka, and so it was necessary to give Sita the shield of the fire element so that she does not get scorched in the searing heat at that time.

This very incident, of Sita entering the ‘fire’ to live there till the demons were eliminated, proves that she was not an ordinary human being, for no living human can ever hope to survive after entering fire. Though Sita had a visible body that resembled a woman, but her true form was ethereal and subtle, and it coincided with the form of the ‘fire element’ in its energy and dynamism.

So the merger, Sita and Fire, was as natural and seamless as two separate samples of burning fire coming close to coalesce with each other. When two candles are held so close that their wicks touch each other, we see only one flame; and when these two candles are separated again their flames too light up and burn independently. Likewise, when the demons were all finally killed and the Lord’s mission was accomplished, Sita remerged from the ‘fire element’ to have an independent existence.

And for how long did Sita live inside the fire element? It was for ‘one year’—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 3.]

जबहिं राम सब कहा बखानी । प्रभु पद धरि हियँ अनल समानी ॥ ३ ॥

निज प्रतिबिंब राखि तहँ सीता । तैसइ सील रूप सुबिनीता ॥ ४ ॥

लछिमनहूँ यह मरमु न जाना । जो कछु चरित रचा भगवाना ॥ ५ ॥

jabahim rāma saba kahā bakhānī. prabhu pada dhari hiyam̐ anala samānī. 3.

nija pratibimba rākhi taham̐ sītā. taisa’i sīla rūpa subinītā. 4.

lachimanahūm̐ yaha maramu na jānā. jō kachu carita racā bhagavānā. 5.

When Lord Ram had clearly explained everything to her, Sita enshrined the Lord in her heart and entered the fire¹. [Later on when the mission of elimination of the evil demons has been successfully accomplished, she would remerge from the fire to regain her original physical form.] (3)

Sita left behind an ‘image’ (or a reflection, a shadow, an apparition; “nija pratibimba”) that completely resembled her in form, manners, politeness and other characters. (4)

Even Laxman did not know anything about this mysterious event as devised by the Lord (Sri Ram)². (5)

[Note—¹An interesting episode regarding this ‘image or apparition of Sita’ is narrated in Skanda Puran, Vaishnav Khand (part), Bhumi-Varaaha (section). This story is that there was a Rishi Kanya (the daughter of an illustrious sage) named Veda-vati. She was meditating upon Lord Vishnu when Ravana saw her; he forcefully tried to take her away but she burnt herself in the sacrificial fire to save her honour. The Fire God became very angry and decided to use her to destroy Ravana. So at the time Sita voluntarily entered the fire, the Fire God brought Veda-vati, who was disguised to resemble Sita in all possible ways, and kept her in Sita’s place to fulfill his vows of using her to kill Ravana. At the end of the War of Lanka, Sita was brought by the Fire God and handed over to Lord Ram, and at that time he prayed to Lord Ram to bless Veda-vati as she had not only played a crucial role in helping the Lord accomplish his mission but had also assumed the form of Sita for a while which entitles her to be accepted by the Lord. Then the Lord blessed her that during Kali-yuga (the fourth era of the 4-era cycle of creation and destruction) she would become a non-placental daughter of Akash (the ‘sky’), and at that time she would be accepted by him in his cosmic form. ‘Non-placental’ implies that she won’t have a gross physical form like ordinary creatures, and would have an ethereal form that coincides with the subtle form of her parent, i.e. the ‘sky as an element’.

²See notes appended to Doha no. 23 and Chaupai line no. 1 herein above. When even Laxman was unaware of these developments, there is no question that any of the gods knew it, except of course the Fire God in whose custody Sita was kept.]

दसमुख गयउ जहाँ मारीचा । नाइ माथ स्वारथ रत नीचा ॥ ६ ॥
 नवनि नीच कै अति दुखदाई । जिमि अंकुस धनु उरग बिलाई ॥ ७ ॥
 भयदायक खल कै प्रिय बानी । जिमि अकाल के कुसुम भवानी ॥ ८ ॥ dasamukha gaya'u jahām̃ māricā. nā'i mātha svāratha rata nīcā. 6.

 navani nīca kai ati dukhadāī. jimi aṅkusa dhanu uraga bilāī. 7.
 bhayadāyaka khala kai priya bānī. jimi akāla kē kusuma bhavānī. 8.

Meanwhile, Ravana went to Marich’s place and bowed his head before the latter, as he was very selfish and most wicked¹. (6)

There is an axiom that when an evil and wicked person bows and shows undue respect to someone it portends great sorrows and misfortunes for the latter just like the cases when the goad is held at an angle (just before it is struck viciously at the enemy), the bow is bent (i.e. its string is pulled tight before an arrow is shot at the enemy), the serpent twists its body and stoops with its head low (just before it flings itself on the enemy and bites him viciously with its fangs), or the cat crouches (just before lunging forward and grabbing its victim, such as a rat, firmly between its sharp teeth). (7)

The seemingly friendly words of a person who is inherently wicked, vile and pervert are as dangerous and fearful as the blooming of flowers without the proper season². (8)

[Note—¹Ravana never bowed before anyone, let alone another demon, all of whom he regarded as his subjects, for he was known to be exceedingly haughty and rough in his interaction with one and all. So when he acted most politely and in a friendly manner at the time of meeting Marich, the latter became alarmed as this was not in Ravana's nature, and he guessed rightly that there was something serious that is yet hidden from view, and a very grave development is in the offing. Ravana acted meekly because he was driven by selfish needs, which was to take the help of Marich to kidnap Sita. We will soon read that this show of politeness was short-lived because when Marich tried to dissuade Ravana from the misadventure he had planned, the latter threatened to kill him if he did not comply.

²When some natural calamity is about to occur, unusual things begin to happen. And one such thing is blooming of un-seasonal flowers. For example, if flowers that are usually seen during the winter months grow during the summer, it indicates that the earth is cooling faster than expected, and with an early onset of winter, the cycle of seasons would be disrupted. This is definitely not a good sign by any account.

So when Ravana acted humbly by speaking sweetly to Marich, it signaled to the latter that things are very bad, and some ominous news waits to be told.]

दो०. करि पूजा मारीच तब सादर पूछी बात । कवन हेतु मन व्यग्र अति अकसर आयहु तात ॥ २४ ॥

dōhā.

kari pūjā mārīca taba sādara pūchī bāta.
kavana hētu mana byagra ati akasara āyahu tāta. 24.

Marich welcomed his guest (Ravana) by worshipping him (to show his respect). Then he said respectfully, 'My dear (tāta). Tell me, what is the reason you have come here alone so urgently (without even announcing yourself); you look extremely agitated and very distressed.' (Doha no. 24)

चौ०. दसमुख सकल कथा तेहि आगें । कही सहित अभिमान अभागें ॥ १ ॥
होहु कपट मृग तुम्ह छलकारी । जेहि बिधि हरि आनौं नृपनारी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dasamukha sakala kathā tēhi āgēm. kahī sahita abhimāna abhāgēm. 1.
hōhu kapaṭa mṛga tumha chalakārī. jēhi bidhi hari ānaum nṛpanārī. 2.

Ravana, the ten-faced one (dasamukha), who was shameless and was driven by ill-fate, haughtily narrated all the developments to him (Marich). (1)

Then he came straight away to the point, commanding Marich: ‘You must assume the form of a deer so that I can take away the wife of the king¹ (“nṛpanārī”; Sita, the wife of Lord Ram).’ (2)

[Note—¹Supernakha had already told Ravana that the two brothers were the sons of the king of Ayodhya—refer: Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 22.

So Ravana now refers to Lord Ram as a ‘king’ because he would ascend the throne of the kingdom of Ayodhya when he returned home.

Why did Ravana plan to take away Sita instead of fighting the two brothers in the forest itself if his only aim was to take revenge for his sister’s humiliation and the killing of the demon army led by Khar, Dushan and Trishira? The probable reasons are the following:

It is said in Valmiki’s Ramayana that when the demon named Akampan reported to Ravana about the killing of Khar, Dushan etc., he wished to go immediately to fight with and punish Lord Ram and Laxman for it. But Akampan warned him that the two brothers were not like others whom Ravana had so easily subdued in the past, and it is for certain that he will himself be defeated if he fought alone with the two brothers. So it would be wiser for him to steal their woman and force them to come to his fort at Lanka where he would have the support of his extensive army of most powerful demons as well as his own family members such as his invincible son Meghnad who had defeated Indra, the king of gods, and his brother Kumbhakarna who had the strength of thousands of wild elephants. Ravana therefore decided to play safely and avoid a direct confrontation with Lord Ram in the forest; so he instead brought Sita to Lanka to force his enemy to come to his own battle-field where he would have an upper hand by all means.

Akampan reasoned that since Lord Ram loved his wife Sita exceedingly, so when he discovers that she has gone away, and chances of him ever recovering her was extremely remote, he would die of grief; and Laxman would follow suit because he was too devoted to his loving brother to survive the agony of separation from him. The added bonus of this scheme was that Ravana would have a lady (Sita) who was peerless in beauty and charm. This strategy suited Ravana very well, so he decided to abduct Sita instead of fighting with the two brothers. {Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 31, verse nos. 21-33.}

We have read earlier in our present narrative that Supernakha had told Ravana about the fate of Khar and Dushan etc., as well as about the exceptional valour of Lord Ram and Laxman, and about the beauty of Sita. When Ravana heard what happened to Khar, Dushan etc. he became hesitant because he knew that it was not an easy thing to kill them. He therefore could not gather enough courage to confront someone who had killed Khar-Dushan etc. And upon hearing of the beauty of Sita his old habit of being lustful and promiscuous resurfaced once again, motivating him to surreptitiously bring Sita to his palace. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand,

Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 22—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 23.}]

तेहिं पुनि कहा सुनहु दससीसा । ते नररूप चराचर ईसा ॥ ३ ॥
तासों तात बयरु नहिं कीजै । मारें मरिअ जिआएँ जीजै ॥ ४ ॥ tēhim puni kahā sunahu dasasīsā. tē nararūpa carācara īsā. 3.

tāsōm tāta bayaru nahim kījai. mārēm mari'a ji'ā'ēm' jījai. 4.

Then Marich spoke once again, 'Listen oh ten-headed Ravana! He (Lord Ram) is actually the Lord of the whole world that consists of animate beings as well as inanimate entities, who has revealed himself in a human form¹. (3)

Oh my dear (tāta). You must not create enmity with someone who is so powerful that death and life occur by his mere wish. (4)

[Note—¹This is exactly what Ravana had himself deduced; and now Marich has endorsed it. So Ravana became all the more convinced of the Lord's divinity, and hence all the more determined to get himself killed by the Lord so that he can attain deliverance and emancipation for his soul. Refer: Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 23 herein above.]

मुनि मख राखन गयउ कुमारा । बिनु फर सर रघुपति मोहि मारा ॥ ५ ॥
सत जोजन आयउँ छन माहीं । तिन्ह सन बयरु किँ भल नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥

muni makha rākhana gaya'u kumārā. binu phara sara raghupati mōhi mārā.
5.
sata jōjana āya'um' chana māhīm. tinha sana bayaru ki'ēm' bhala nāhīm. 6.

These two young princes had gone to protect the fire sacrifice of the sage (Vishwamitra). When I went to defile it, Lord Ram had shot a headless arrow at me¹. (5)

I was immediately flung for a hundred Yojans² by its force and landed on this remote island. I tell you in good faith that it is not a good idea at all to become an enemy of such a person. (6)

[Note—¹This incident is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 210.

² 1 Yojan = approx. 8 miles. This figure is a median one because according to some scales 1 Yojan is either 4 miles or 16 miles. 4 multiplied by 2 = 8; and 16 divided by 2 = 8.]

भइ मम कीट भृंग की नाई । जहँ तहँ मैं देखउँ दोउ भाई ॥ ७ ॥
जौं नर तात तदपि अति सूरा । तिन्हहि बिरोधि न आइहि पूरा ॥ ८ ॥ bha'i mama kīṭa bhṛṅga kī nā'ī. jaham̃ taham̃ maim̃ dēkha'um̃ dō'u bhā'ī. 7.

jauṁ nara tāta tadapi ati sūrā. tinhahi birōdhi na ā'ihī pūrā. 8.

I was so stunned and struck with fear that ever since that time I see the two brothers all around me wherever I look. It is like the case of an insect that is captured by a wasp and held captive by it¹. (7)

Even in the rare chance of them being human beings, it is sure and certain that they are invincible, being extremely valiant, strong and powerful. In all sooth and without gainsay therefore, it is not sensible and practical to create enmity with them as it is impossible to conquer them. (8)

[Note—¹The wasp catches hold of an insect and keeps it in its nest. Then the wasp hovers over the prey and hums around it constantly so much so that in due course of time the insect too turns into a wasp at the mental level and begins to hum in way that synchronizes with the humming of the wasp.

Likewise, Marich was so terrified of Lord Ram and Laxman that he feared them every moment of his life. This means that he remembered them every second so much so that every now and then he would think that either Lord Ram or Laxman have arrived to kill him. Even a slight movement of the leaf of a tree, or a bird flying overhead, or the rustling of the wind would send shivers down his spine. To wit, Marich's life was overwhelmed by the thoughts of Lord Ram and Laxman. This situation granted an unexpected advantage to Marich—for it transformed fear into a sort of constant remembrance of the Lord, which, to wit, was like his doing meditation constantly.

So Marich unwittingly got transmewed into a devotee of Lord Ram from being a vile demon that he had earlier been, just like the insect that becomes one in likeness of the wasp in due course of time.]

दो०. जेहिं ताड़का सुबाहु हति खंडेउ हर कोदंड । खर दूषन तिसिरा बधेउ मनुज कि अस बरिबंड ॥ २५ ॥

dōhā.

jēhim tāṛakā subāhu hati khaṇḍē'u hara kōdaṇḍa.
khara dūṣana tisirā badhē'u manuja ki asa baribaṇḍa. 25.

There is no gainsay in the fact that the he who had slayed the ferocious demoness Tadka and the equally ferocious demons Subhau etc.¹, and had broken the sturdy bow of Lord Shiva, which no one amongst the strong warrior of the world, who had always prided themselves about the might of their arms, could as much as even shift an inch, forget about lifting and breaking it², and had then proved his valour and strength beyond a trace of doubt by slaying the mighty demons Khar-Dushan³, can never be an ordinary human being, for no human has ever had the guts or the wherewithal to even confront these worthy demons let alone kill them single-handed. (2)

[To wit, a gentleman who has accomplished such remarkable feat is surely endowed with supernatural; whatever be the case he is certainly not an ordinary prince as you may be inclined to think.] (Doha no. 25).

[Note—¹Tadka was the mother of Marich; she had attacked Lord Ram and Laxman when they had accompanied sage Vishwamitra to his hermitage to protect his fire sacrifice. Lord Ram had accomplished the stunning feat of killing her with a single arrow. This story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 209.

²This event is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 250—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 262.

³A little later, when Subahu and Marich etc. had attacked the Lord, he had shot a ‘fire-arrow’ that burnt Subahu, and then he shot Marich with a headless arrow that flung him to the center of the ocean where Ravana visited him presently. This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 210.]

चौ०. जाहु भवन कुल कुसल बिचारी । सुनत जरा दीन्हिसि बहु गारी ॥ १ ॥
गुरु जिमि मूढ़ करसि मम बोधा । कहु जग मोहि समान को जोधा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

jāhu bhavana kula kusala bicārī. sunata jarā dīnhisi bahu gārī. 1.
guru jimī mūr̥ḥa karasi mama bōdhā. kahu jaga mōhi samāna kō jōdhā. 2.

So it would be wise for you to go back home if you are concerned about the welfare of your race.’

Upon hearing these words (of Marich), he (Ravana) was scorched by the fire of anger and hate, and he strongly rebuked the advisor by abusing him for showing the impertinence that he had just dared to exhibit.

[To wit, this good and prudent advice by Marich, vouchsafed with all sincerity and integrity, was however taken as a personal insult by Ravana who treated it as a direct affront to his authority, strength and powers by one of his own race, whom he had trusted all along as being one of his loyal soldiers. Now this fellow Marich appears to be an advocate of the enemy; he was deriding his own king, Ravana, and praising his enemy, Lord Ram. Obviously this was an intolerable a proposition, and it poured oil in the already fire of revenge burning inside the demon king. He anger was further stoked and he sternly warned Marich by using abusive language.] (1)

‘Oh you stupid devil of a fellow; you preach me as if you are my Guru (teacher). Tell me, if you dare, who in this world is as strong and valiant a warrior as me?

[To wit, you are not a novice, nor an ordinary demon. You are well acquainted with my matchless powers which have made even the gods bow and surrender before me. How dare you then say such things to me to scare me off my projected plans? I am not accustomed to hear lectures, nor am I habituated to imagine fear when none exists. Mind you; you will pay a heavy price if you refuse to heed to my commands, which I had been polite enough, in deference to your age and seniority, to wrap in words that sounded like I was making a request, for I could have ordered you straight away without giving you a chance to give a long lecture to me, something I have always detested.] (2)

तब मारीच हृदयँ अनुमाना । नवहि बिरोधें नहिं कल्याणा ॥ ३ ॥ सज़ी मर्मी प्रभु सठ धनी । बैद बंदि कबि भानस गुनी ॥ ४ ॥ taba mārīca hr̥dayam̃ anumānā. navahi birōdhēm̃ nahim̃ kalyānā. 3.

sastrī marmī prabhu saṭha dhanī. baida bandi kabi bhānasa gunī. 4.

Then Marich thought to himself about an axiom that says that it is to no one's welfare to create enmity with the following nine persons [3]: --- an armed opponent who is skilled in the use of the weapon (sastrī), he who knows one's closely held secret (marmī), an able and powerful lord or master (prabhu), a utterly foolish person who lacks even basic scruples and has no knowledge of the affairs (saṭha), a rich person of influence (dhanī), a medicine man (baida), a slave, who is also a flatterer, who would willingly betray one before his lord if it suits him (bandi), a expert poet and singer (kabi --- gunī), and a cook who is an expert in his art (bhānasa gunī) [4]. (3-4)

[Note—These nine persons are not to be relied upon; one should not confide too much in them for if due to some reason, howsoever inconsequential it may be, they become hostile, or they decide that they have something to gain by betraying even their best of friends, then they will have no regret in back-stabbing anyone, though on the face they would continue to maintain a fictitious show of friendship and warmth as previously.

For instance, if a person picks up an argument with a man who is armed and whom he had known for a long time, and this argument becomes nasty due to some reason so much to make his armed acquaintance lose his control, there are fare chances that he would draw his weapon to settle scores, though he would later repent for it throughout his life.

A rich person of influence and a powerful lord too are very dangerous, for no one knows when they would decide to get someone out of the way.

It is wisely said that “an intelligent man, or a man of scruples, is a better enemy than a hundred fools as friends”; because it is possible to reason with the former but impossible to do so with the latter who would cause more problems than solving any.

A poet or a singer, if he is offended by someone, may spring a surprise by reciting a taunting couplet or singing some lines of a song that are loaded with sarcasm at a gathering that would be directly aimed at the person who has offended them; it may cause a laugh and jeering in the audience which would be extremely humiliating for the person concerned; rather it would bury him in shame, and if he is a man of any worth it would be like actually injuring him with a mortal wound.

A person who knows someone else's secret would blackmail him if it serves his vested interests at some point of time, without regret that such behaviour is an outright violation of the strict vows of confidentiality that were vouchsafed earlier.

Similarly, if one angers a personal cook or a personal physician, and by some misadventure they decide to take revenge, they would poison that person so secretly that no one would know what had actually happened that led to this catastrophe, as that person would be already dead by the time investigation starts, if any at all, for an expert cook or a doctor would know the method of administering a poison that takes effect slowly, bringing about the person's death a long time from the moment the poison was actually used on him.]

उभय भ्रँति देखा निज मरना । तब ताकिसि रघुनायक सरना ॥ ५ ॥ उतरु देत मोहि बधब अभागें । कस न मरौं रघुपति सर लागें ॥ ६ ॥ ubhaya bhām̐ti dēkhā nija maranā. taba tākisi raghunāyaka saranā. 5.

utaru dēta mōhi badhaba abhāgēm̐. kasa na maraum̐ raghupati sara lāgēm̐.
6.

When Marich saw that either way his death was certain, he decided to seek refuge in the holy feet of Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram). (5)

He thought to himself, 'If I answer him (Ravana) back, he is sure to kill me. Then if my death has finally arrived, why should I not die at the hands of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) by being shot with his arrows?'¹ (6)

[Note—¹To wit, Marich became certain that if he refused to cooperate with Ravana, he is sure to kill him; and if he followed his orders and became a deer then Lord Ram would go after him and shoot him down. In this scenario it would be wiser for him to die at the hands of Lord Ram as this death would ensure that his soul finds liberation and deliverance from the cycle of birth and death, and he would attain eternal beatitude and peace; for it is evident from what Marich has advised Ravana that he was sure that Lord Ram was not an ordinary human being but the promised manifestation of the Supreme Being that would bring an end to the evil demon race.

How was Marich so certain of Lord Ram's reality? Well, when his mother Tadka was killed by the Lord by a single arrow, sage Vishwamitra had offered his worship to him and taught him some esoteric knowledge that only the sage was acquainted with. Vishwamitra was no ordinary sage; he was a 'great sage' who had a transcendental reach and could know the developments taking place in all the three dimensions of time, the past, the present and the future. He had known that the Supreme Being has manifested in the form of Lord Ram from the very beginning, and the killing of Tadka confirmed his beliefs. After death, Tadka was granted liberation and deliverance by Lord Ram. Marich had observed all these developments first hand as he was also one of the demons who had been living in the same forest as Tadka and was constantly defiling the fire sacrifice of the sage; he had also seen his mother's fate, and the sage worshipping the Lord. So nothing was hidden from him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 206; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 209.}

So what Ravana only guessed about Lord Ram (refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23 earlier), Marich was convinced of it.]

अस जियँ जानि दसानन संग्गा । चला राम पद प्रेम अभंग्गा ॥ ७ ॥ मन अति हरष जनाव न तेही । आजु देखिहउँ परम सनेही ॥ ८ ॥

asa jiyam̐ jāni dasānana saṅgā. calā rāma pada prēma abhaṅgā. 7.
mana ati haraṣa janāva na tēhī. āju dēkhiha'um̐ parama sanēhī. 8.

Realising this truth in his heart, he accompanied the ten-headed Ravana to where Lord Ram was; he had developed a steady affection for the holy feet of the Lord deep inside himself. (7)

He was exceedingly joyous and exhilarated in his mind and heart (Mana) but he managed not to reveal his excitement; he was lost in a reverie, thinking thus: 'Today I am going to see him whom I love so much indeed'¹. (8)

[Note—¹When finally Marich decided that that opportunity has come which would give him a chance to go where his mother had gone and be united with her, and in the process also ensure his own salvation and emancipation, his steps were quick and resolute; his legs seems to have developed wings. He was happy that he has been selected by providence to play a crucial role in the fulfillment of the Supreme Being's mandate; it was an honour and not a curse. After all, all living beings have to die one day; then why not die for the Lord, serving him and his noble cause?

So therefore, Marich was very cheerful and willing; he was not like someone going to the guillotine, but like someone going to accept a prize.

But he knew that Ravana's intention was different; so he played wisely by keeping his joy to himself.]

छं०. निज परम प्रीतम देखि लोचन सुफल करि सुख पाइहौं । १ ।
श्री सहित अनुज समेत कृपानिकेत पद मन लाइहौं ॥ २ ॥
निर्बान दायक क्रोध जा कर भगति अबसहि बसकरी । ३ ।
निज पानि सर संधानि सो मोहि बधिहि सुखसागर हरी ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

nija parama prītama dēkhi lōcana suphala kari sukha pā'ihaur̐. 1.
śrī sahita anuja samēta kṛpānikēta pada mana lā'ihaur̐. 2.
nirbāna dāyaka krōdha jā kara bhagati abasahi basakarī. 3.
nija pāni sara sandhāni sō mōhi badhihi sukhasāgara harī. 4.

[Marich had, by this time, realized that his salvation lay only in surrendering before Lord Ram, who was a human manifestation of the Supreme Being himself. He developed affection for Lord Ram and began treating the Lord as his dearest friend. These verses show that a natural and inalienable bond of affection and endearment exist between a creature's individual soul and the universal Soul of this creation; it's a natural bond that ties the creature, the off-spring, to the Supreme Being who is the Father of all who have come into being in this family called 'creation' that He heads.

So therefore, when he agreed to accompany Ravana to where Lord Ram was, he was overwhelmed with the loving idea of meeting Lord Ram, the beloved of his soul; and like a beloved lost in the thoughts of the lover while on the way to meet the latter, Marich too was lost in a reverie of ecstasy and sweetness of imagination of what was to come soon. It ought to be noted here that the element of fear and the prospect of getting injured by an arrow was not at all in the mental radar of Marich; on the contrary it was a moment of celebration for him; it was a final journey leading to his deliverance and emancipation from this mortal life of a demon for which he had been waiting all through his life. Hence there was nothing to regret or fear; rather it was a momentous journey that ought to be celebrated and cherished.]

Marich was lost in a reverie of ecstasy, thinking sweetly of the moments when— ‘I shall make myself fortunate and feel exceedingly exhilarated by seeing my beloved (Lord Ram) till my eyes are filled with this pleasant sight. (Chanda line no. 1)

Indeed, I shall fix my attention on the holy feet of the Lord who is an abode of mercy and compassion, the Lord who is accompanied by Sita and his younger brother (Laxman)¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

Oh my good fortune; I am so lucky even to think that I shall go and seek refuge with the Lord who is so merciful and kind that even his apparent anger provides liberation and deliverance to the soul of the creature, and whose Bhakti (devotion) is so exceptionally graceful that it even goes to the extend of making the Lord willfully submit himself to the command of his devotees²! (Chanda line no. 3)

It is this same Lord who is an ocean of bliss and beatitude, who will aim an arrow at me and shoot me with his own hands (to ensure that I don't miss the chance of discarding this vile body of mine as a demon, and find liberation from it; the Lord would make sure that my soul gets instant deliverance; that I am provided emancipation and salvation at the first opportunity). (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Marich's soul desired to pay its homage to the Supreme Lord in all the forms in which the Lord has manifested; he wanted his worship to be complete in all respects. So therefore, instead of fixing his mind only on Lord Ram, he remembered even Laxman and Sita who are fractional parts of the Supreme Being, for Sita represented the Lord's 'Shakti', or the Lord's dynamic cosmic energy, and Laxman represented 'Seshnath', the Lord's that form that supports the world from below. In the story of the Ramayan, Laxman had played a pivotal role as Lord Ram's closest aide and comrade-in-arm; so without him the Lord was half. Marich was indeed very wise as he left nothing to chance.

²When the Lord becomes angry he will shoot an arrow to kill; but in this apparent show of anger there is hidden mercy for the creature as this killing frees the soul from the cage of the gross body which had become so sinful and evil. The merciful Lord's anger is also a blessing in disguise; it is not like the anger of ordinary masters or lords who punish their servants or subordinates only physically, without bothering about their long-term good.

Bhakti or devotion is an excellent medium by which the Lord can be attained by a devotee. It is a tool that is very dear to the Lord himself. The spiritual value of Bhakti has been sung at many places in Ram Charit Manas. A glimpse of its importance and glory can be had in Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 35—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 36; and (ii) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 45—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 46.]

दो०. मम पाछें धर धावत धरें सरासन बान ।
फिरि फिरि प्रभुहि बिलोकिहउँ धन्य न मो सम आन ॥ २६ ॥

dōhā.

mama pāchēm dhara dhāvata dharēm sarāsana bāna.
phiri phiri prabhuhi bilōkiha'um' dhan'ya na mō sama āna. 26.

Indeed without gainsay, there is no one as lucky as myself—because I shall turn back repeatedly and see the Lord pursuing me with an arrow in his hands to shoot me (but he would hesitate to do so even as he keeps playing hide and seek with me so as to allow me the beautiful chance of enjoying that wonderful sight for a long time).¹ (Doha no. 26)

[Note—¹In his ecstatic state of the mind, Marich imagines how he will run ahead of the Lord who will follow him from behind with an arrow in hand. The Lord would not shoot him down instantly, for he would have done so if he had so wished. But why would the Lord take his time in shooting down Marich? It would be in deference to Marich's own wish—that he would like to enjoy the divine sight of the Lord pursuing him, a sight that would fill him with immense joy and beatitude. So therefore, the Lord allowed time for Marich to have his heart-full viewing of the Lord's divine form pursuing him with a bow and an arrow in hand, and of course with a smile on his face and compassion in his eyes, for that is what Marich had longed for, and the merciful Lord wished to fulfill the last wishes of Marich as it is the natural wont of the Lord to fulfill all desires of his devotees.]

चौ०. तेहि बन निकट दसानन गयऊ । तब मारीच कपटमृग भयऊ ॥ १ ॥
अति बिचित्र कछु बरनि न जाई । कनक देह मनि रचित बनाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tēhi bana nikaṭa dasānana gaya'ū. taba mārīca kapaṭamṛga bhaya'ū. 1.
ati bicitra kachu barani na jāī. kanaka dēha mani racita banāī. 2.

When the ten-headed Ravana went near that forest (where Lord Ram dwelt at Panchavati, and where Supernakha was deformed), Marich immediately assumed the false form of a deer (mārīca kapaṭamṛga bhaya'ū)¹. (1)

That deer had a strange but marvelously wonderful form that defies description. It had a golden hide that was dotted with sparkling spots as if it was studded with priceless gems². (2)

[Note—¹Marich created a delusion that gave the impression that he was a deer. Demons had that power by which they could assume any form they wished. Supernakha had, as we have already seen, employed this magical power to become a beautiful lady in order to deceive Lord Ram. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 176; and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 181 which reiterate this fact about the demons.

²It is observed even today that in the geographical area where Lord Ram had his hermitage at that time, a place known as Panchavati that falls in the present-day state of Maharashtra in western India, a special type of deer is found; it has a yellow skin that is richly dotted with silvery white spots; its face differs from other deer, and its underbelly is coloured light blue. Locally it is called a ‘Chital’. This animal is exclusive to this region. So perhaps it was one of such rare species of deer that Marich transformed himself into.

It is also possible that Lord Ram, being so merciful and considerate, had granted this boon to the dying Marich that the form which he had assumed will be immortalized in a new species of deer that would now onwards become common to that particular region.]

सीता परम रुचिर मृग देखा । अंग अंग सुमनोहर बेषा ॥ ३ ॥

सुनहु देव रघुबीर कृपाला । एहि मृग कर अति सुंदर छाला ॥ ४ ॥

सत्यसंध प्रभु बधि करि एही । आनहु चर्म कहति बैदेही ॥ ५ ॥ sītā parama rucira mṛga dēkhā. aṅga aṅga sumanōhara bēṣā. 3.

sunahu dēva raghubīra kṛpālā. ēhi mṛga kara ati sundara chālā. 4.
satyasandha prabhu badhi kari ēhī. ānahu carma kahati baidēhī. 5.

Sita saw this most fascinating deer whose body was extremely beautiful to look at; this sight charmed her a lot and it caught her fancy. (3)

She called out to Lord Ram and said, ‘Oh Lord (dēva); oh the merciful and kind Lord of the Raghus (raghubīra kṛpālā); listen! This deer has a very beautiful hide. (4)

Oh Lord, you are true to your words (satyasandha prabhu)¹; so kill this deer and bring its hide for me. (5)

[Note—¹Sita’s observation is quite significant here. Earlier, in Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 24 we read that Lord Ram had shared with Sita the secret plan by which he wished to eliminate the sinful demons, and now the time appears to have come to give effect to that master-plan. Sita wished to indicate to Lord Ram that she is willing to cooperate with the Lord, and though the events that would now unfold will force her to be separated from her beloved Lord and get kidnapped by the demon Ravana, but she wishes to cheerfully undergo this test as it would help Lord Ram to successfully accomplish his divine mandate.

She thought that perhaps the Lord would hesitate to go after the deer as he knew the consequences of this action, but since the suffering and difficulties that would follow need to be endured for larger good of the world it was necessary for the Lord to shed his reluctance and go ahead with the plan.

So in order to pre-empt chances of Lord Ram’s hesitating in taking proactive action on this crucial matter, Sita reminded him that “he must live up to his reputation of being true to his words”. And what was that word? It was the word that the Lord Vishnu had given to the Gods and Mother Earth that he would come down to this mortal world to eliminate the scourge of the evil demons—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 187.

The Lord had reiterated his resolve to eliminate the demons once again before the many forest dwelling sages and hermits who had accompanied him during his passage through the forest—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 9 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.

The next verse no. 6 explicitly says so, and Sita's request to the Lord removed all hesitation that he may have had.]

तब रघुपति जानत सब कारन । उठे हरषि सुर काजु सँवारन ॥ ६ ॥
 मृग बिलोकि कटि परिकर बाँधा । करतल चाप रुचिर सर साँधा ॥ ७ ॥
 प्रभु लछिमनहि कहा समुझाई । फिरत बिपिन निसिचर बहु भाई ॥ ८ ॥
 सीता केरि करेहु रखवारी । बुधि बिबेक बल समय बिचारी ॥ ९ ॥

taba raghupati jānata saba kārana. uṭhē haraṣi sura kāju samvārana. 6.
 mṛga bilōki kaṭi parikara bāmdhā. karatala cāpa rucira sara sāmḍhā. 7.
 prabhu lachimanahi kahā samujhāī. phirata bipina nisicara bahu bhāī. 8.
 sītā kēri karēhu rakhavārī. budhi bibēka bala samaya bicārī. 9.

Then Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram), who was aware of all the reasons behind this development¹, cheerfully got up to fulfill the objective of the gods that. [And this objective was to eliminate the problem created by the cruel and sinful demon race. The time has come to act upon the word that Lord Vishnu had given to the gods earlier, and so Lord Ram gladly got up to fulfill his mission on earth.] (6)

Looking at the deer, the Lord tied his garments tightly around his hips to prepare for the job at hand, and lifting his beautiful bow in his hands he strung it and mounted the arrow on it². (7)

Then the Lord summoned Laxman and explained to him: ‘Oh brother. A lot of demons roam around in the forest unchecked (and so you ought to be careful and on the full alert to avoid any misadventure). (8)

Take care of Sita's safety in accordance with your wisdom and circumstance; employ your strength and discretion while doing so.³ (9)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23 where the same mystical virtue of the Lord has been affirmed.

²Lord Ram could have easily aimed and shot the arrow from where he stood instead of going behind Marich for quite some distance from his hermitage. So why was it done this way? It was necessary to go far away from the hermitage so that ample time and opportunity was given to Ravana to abduct Sita. After all, it was a part of the grand plan of Lord Ram. This is the reason why Lord Ram went on pursuing Marich for a long distance till it was safe for Ravana to take Sita away. And this is also the reason why the Lord maneuvered things in such a way that Laxman, who was deputed to protect Sita, would also be summoned away from the hermitage as we shall read below.

³Lord Ram advised Laxman to use his strength, discretion, wisdom and intelligence to protect Sita according to the circumstance that may arise. Since it was impossible to predict as to what may happen, the Lord left it to Laxman to decide the course of action in accordance to the demands of the situation.

These instructions of the Lord are very important, for it gives Laxman a lot of discretion powers. As the events would unfold and a situation would arise soon when Sita forced him to leave her alone and go to where Lord Ram was near Marich, Laxman's wisdom told him to follow Sita's orders so that no unsavory development can take place that would cast aspersions on his integrity and loyalty to the Lord. Had Lord Ram been specific in his instructions to Laxman—that he must not leave Sita alone under any circumstance whatsoever, Laxman would have had a solid excuse to refuse Sita's orders and continue to remain in the hermitage.

But had this happened, had Laxman not left Sita alone, the long-term planning of the Lord would have gone hay-wire; for then Ravana would not have been able to kidnap her, and so the whole lot of things that followed this singular event that will ultimately result in the elimination of the demons would not have taken place. This would have undermined the Lord's mission. Hence, the wise Lord left a lot of open space to help things fall into their own right position.]

प्रभुहि बिलोकि चला मृग भाजी । धाए रामु सरासन साजी ॥ १० ॥
 निगम नेति सिव ध्यान न पावा । मायामृग पाछें सो धावा ॥ ११ ॥
 कबहुँ निकट पुनि दूरि पराई । कबहुँक प्रगटइ कबहुँ छपाई ॥ १२ ॥
 प्रगटत दुरत करत छल भूरी । एहि बिधि प्रभुहि गयउ लै दूरी ॥ १३ ॥ prabhuhi bilōki calā mṛga bhājī. dhā'ē rāmu sarāsana sājī. 10.

 nigama nēti siva dhyāna na pāvā. māyāmṛga pāchēm sō dhāvā. 11.
 kabahum' nikaṭa puni dūri parā'ī. kabahum'ka pragaṭa'i kabahum' chapā'ī. 12.
 pragaṭata durata karata chala bhūrī. ēhi bidhi prabhuhi gaya'u lai dūrī. 13.

No sooner did the deer saw Lord Ram than he ran away from the place even as the Lord followed it in hot pursuit with his bow and arrow at the ready. (10)

It is such a wonder that the Lord—who is inaccessible even for the Vedas (i.e. even the scriptures are unable to know him in full) that assert that none of what they know defines the Lord in entirety, and who also remains beyond the reach of Lord Shiva inspite of the latter constantly remaining submerged in meditating upon him¹—would pursue a false deer and run behind it (like an ordinary man). (11)

At one instant the deer appeared to be near, and in the other moment it fled to a distant point; at one moment it was visible and at the next moment it disappeared from sight². (12)

In this way, employing tricks that made it play hide and seek with the Lord, revealing and concealing itself in quick succession, the deer took Lord Ram far away (from the hermitage). (13)

[Note—¹A similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i); Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 51; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 341.

The Lord who is all-knowing would run behind a false deer without knowing who it actually was is something that is very astounding and beyond comprehension; but it is the mysterious way of the Lord by which he does many things that no one can understand.

²When we read the story of how king Pratapbhanu was misled by the wild boar during the hunt, a similar situation is seen. It has been described in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 157. So it is easy to conclude that these demons were skilled in employing tricks that made them appear and disappear from sight as they pleased; this was in addition to their ability to change forms quickly. These tricks helped them to trap their victims as well as to avoid being captured.]

तब तकि राम कठिन सर मारा । धरनि परेउ करि घोर पुकारा ॥ १४ ॥
लछिमन कर प्रथमहिं लै नामा । पाछें सुमिरेसि मन महुँ रामा ॥ १५ ॥
प्राण तजत प्रगटेसि निज देहा । सुमिरेसि रामु समेत सनेहा ॥ १६ ॥
अंतर प्रेम तासु पहिचाना । मुनि दुर्लभ गति दीन्हि सुजाना ॥ १७ ॥ taba taki rāma kaṭhina sara mārā. dharani parē'u kari ghōra pukārā. 14.

lachimana kara prathamahim lai nāmā. pāchēm sumirēsi mana mahum' rāmā.
15.
prāna tajata pragatēsi nija dēhā. sumirēsi rāmu samēta sanēhā. 16.
antara prēma tāsū pahicānā. muni durlabha gati dīnhi sujānā. 17.

Finally, when they had gone far away, Lord Ram aimed an arrow and shot the deer. It fell down on the earth with a thunderous roar and yelling aloud in a terrifying manner. (14)

While falling down on the ground, the deer first called out loudly the name of Laxman, and then silently remembered the name of Lord Ram in his Mana (heart and mind)¹. (15)

At the instant of his death, Marich resumed his original form of a demon, and remembered Lord Ram with a lot of affection and love. (16)

The omniscient Lord, who knows the inner thoughts of all, saw that Marich had immense love for him in his heart, so the good Lord rewarded him in his death by granting him that spiritual stature that is rare even for great sages to attain.

[To wit, Lord Ram granted deliverance to the soul of Marich; he gave Marich emancipation and salvation, and abiding bliss, felicity and beatitude that great sages and hermits long for. The next Doha explicitly tells us what special grace Lord Ram had bestowed upon Marich; it tells us that the Lord granted him a transcendental state that was equivalent to the Lord himself in divinity and holiness.]² (17)

[Note—¹This sound indicated to Laxman the direction where Lord Ram was present. Marich could have died quietly but even during his last moments he wished to be loyal to his master, Ravana. It made it necessary for him to call out for Laxman so that he leaves the hermitage to enable Ravana to take away Sita.

Marich remembered Lord Ram's holy name 'silently' because it is the way the Lord is remembered during meditation; no hue and cry is made. Marich mentally bowed before Lord Ram, invoked his holy name quietly and discretely, and sought the Lord's intervention in order to attain salvation and emancipation of his soul.

²It is a stated position of Lord Ram that no matter how sinful a creature is, if he comes to take shelter with him then the Lord would not only forgive him but even grant his soul liberation and deliverance. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 44.]

दो०. बिपुल सुमन सुर बरषहिं गावहिं प्रभु गुन गाथ । निज पद दीन्ह असुर कहँ दीनबंधु रघुनाथ ॥ २७ ॥

dōhā.

bipula sumana sura baraṣahim gāvahim prabhu guna gātha.
nija pada dīnha asura kahum' dīnabandhu raghunātha. 27.

The Gods showered an abundance of flowers upon Lord Ram to celebrate this marvelous occasion; they sang laurels of the Lord and cheered at his wonderful nature of providing a glorious destiny to even a demon that made the latter equivalent in divinity to the Lord himself¹. (Doha no. 27)

[Note—¹In Chaupai line no. 17 that immediately precedes this Doha we have read that the Lord "granted to Marich a stature that was even difficult for great sages and seers to attain". This Doha answers what that stature was. To wit, Marich, who was condemned to become a demon at the time of birth, found an exalted state for his soul at the time of death, a transcendental state that was divine, sublime, holy and pious in nature, a stature quite the opposite of what he was till this point in his life. This was made possible due to the grace of Lord Ram and the chance of having a contact with him, no matter how and for what reason this chance meeting had happened.]

चौ०. खल बधि तुरत फिरे रघुबीरा । सोह चाप कर कटि तूनीरा ॥ १ ॥
आरत गिरा सुनी जब सीता । कह लछिमन सन परम सभीता ॥ २ ॥
जाहु बेगि संकट अति भ्राता । लछिमन बिहसि कहा सुनु माता ॥ ३ ॥
भृकुटि बिलास सृष्टि लय होई । सपनेहुँ संकट परइ कि सोई ॥ ४ ॥ मरम बचन जब सीता बोला । हरि प्रेरित लछिमन मन डोला ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

khala badhi turata phirē raghubīrā. sōha cāpa kara kaṭi tūnīrā. 1.
ārata girā sunī jaba sītā. kaha lachimana sana parama sabhītā. 2.

jāhu bēgi saṅkaṭa ati bhrātā. lachimana bihasi kahā sunu mātā. 3.
 bhṛkuṭi bilāsa sṛṣṭi laya hōī. sapanēhum^o saṅkaṭa para'i ki sōī. 4.
 marama bacana jaba sītā bōlā. hari prērita lachimana mana ḍōlā. 5.

No sooner had Lord Ram slayed the wicked fellow (Marich) than he turned back to go to his hermitage. The bow in his hand and the quiver tied to his waist give the Lord a magnificent form (that was captivating for the beholder). (1)

Meanwhile, Sita had heard the loud and distressful cry of Marich calling out the name of Laxman¹. This sound filled her with a lot of apprehension, and she felt sore affright (about the safety of her husband, Lord Ram). (2)

She urgently instructed Laxman, ‘Go immediately, for it looks some danger had befallen upon your brother.’

Laxman laughed at this unfounded fear of Sita, and tried to reassure her by saying, ‘Mother, listen. (3)

He whose turn of an eye and raising of the eyebrow can lead to the destruction of the entire creation—say, can such an almighty Lord ever have the fear of any danger upon him; can such a mighty and all-powerful Lord ever come to any harm under any situation?² (4)

However, Sita began wailing and grieving gravely; her heart-touching words of pity and lamentation moved Laxman as his mind wavered. Though initially he had a lot of self-confidence and would have ordinarily stood firm on his ground, but it was the wish of Lord Hari that it ought to be otherwise (hari prērita); for soon Laxman’s mind became indecisive and he yielded to doubts (lachimana mana ḍōlā), his resolve faltered and he felt inclined to obey Sita’s commands and go out to help Lord Ram³. (5)

[Note—¹When Marich died, he had yelled aloud the name of Laxman before silently invoking the holy name of his beloved Lord Ram. Refer: Chaupai line no. 15 that precedes Doha no. 27 herein above. From a distance, where Sita was, it appeared that Lord Ram is calling out for Laxman to help; it appeared that the Lord was in some sort of danger and needed Laxman’s help.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 66, and Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 35 where the same fact is stated.

³Sita lost her patience and began lamenting; she forced Laxman to go after the sound, in the direction from where it came and see what the matter was. So though Laxman was unwilling to leave her alone in the dangerous forest as he was expressly commanded by the Lord himself not to do so, yet he had no choice, because Sita threw such a tantrum that he thought it wise and prudent to do as she wished lest she would complain to the Lord, when he comes back, of Laxman’s stubborn and irreverent behaviour, which would, in this unfortunate background of her feeling worried about her husband’s safety and asking his brother to go and help him, would create unnecessary misunderstanding between the two brothers who otherwise had perfect bond of love and loyalty between them.]

बन दिसि देव सौंपि सब काहू । चले जहाँ रावन ससि राहू ॥ ६ ॥
 सून बीच दसकंधर देखा । आवा निकट जती कें बेषा ॥ ७ ॥
 जाकें डर सुर असुर डेराहीं । निसि न नीद दिन अन्न न खाहीं ॥ ८ ॥
 सो दससीस स्वान की नाई । इत उत चितइ चला भड़िहाई ॥ ९ ॥ इमि कुपंथ पग देत खगेसा । रह न तेज तन बुधि बल लेसा ॥ १० ॥

bana disi dēva saumpi saba kāhū. calē jahām̃ rāvana sasi rāhū. 6.
 sūna bīca dasakandhara dēkhā. āvā nikaṭa jatī kēm bēṣā. 7.
 jākēm ḍara sura asura ḍērāhīm̃. nisi na nīda dina anna na khāhīm̃. 8.
 sō dasasīsa svāna kī nā'īm̃. ita uta cita'i calā bhaḍihā'īm̃. 9.
 imi kupantha paga dēta khagēsā. raha na tēja tana budhi bala lēsā. 10.

Laxman entrusted Sita's safety to all the patron deities of the different directions as well as the presiding deities of the forest, and then he headed towards the direction where Lord Ram, who was like Rahu for the symbolic Moon represented by Ravana, was¹⁺². (6)

When Ravana found that Sita was alone (and the hermitage was left unprotected after Laxman went away), he approached disguised as a mendicant. (7)

It is a wondrous thing that he whose fear caused the gods and the demons alike to be so sore affright and tremble that they weren't able to sleep in the night and eat food during the daytime, --- (8)

---That same ten-headed Ravana should be so scared out of his wits that he would approach the hermitage with unsure steps out of fear, surreptitiously like a terrified dog, glancing to the right and to the left, as he neared the place. (9)

Oh the lord of birds (khagēsā)³! It is like the case of one stepping on a wrong and immoral path, because no sooner one does so when one loses self-confidence, for one's body fails in its natural vigour, one's intellect fails him, and one's inherent strength too leaves him (even as he staggers and struts and stumbles to move forward in an awkward way).

[To wit, as soon as one tries to do anything unrighteous and inauspicious, his inner-self will revolt instantly; his inner-voice of conscience tells him that he is about to do something that is wrong. It is another matter that more often than not a man tends to overlook this natural warning of his inner-consciousness, and goes ahead with his evil designs, only to land himself in a grave peril.] (10)

[Note—¹Rahu was a demon whose head was severed from his trunk by Lord Vishnu during an ancient event that occurred at the time when the celestial ocean was being churned by the gods and the demons in search of Amrit, the elixir of immortality. Since Rahu was betrayed by the Moon and the Sun Gods, and since he had already drunk some Amrit which prevented his death, he was given a boon by the creator Brahma that he would periodically devour Moon and Sun to satisfy his hunger as well as to take revenge upon these two Gods for betraying him.

So, Rahu devours the disc of the full moon and the sun from time to time, and this, according to mythology, is the cause of the lunar and the solar eclipses respectively. But since his neck was cut off, the moon and the sun gradually emerge from this severed end of the head; this ends the eclipse.

In this metaphor, Ravana is the moon, and Lord Ram is the Rahu who would soon overcome Ravana's might and virtually eclipse him. But even as the glory of the Moon and the Sun are restored soon after the eclipse, Lord Ram would restore the glory of Ravana by granting him an exalted state of bliss and beatitude by liberating his soul from the sinful body of a demon and gracing it with deliverance, emancipation and salvation.

In this story of Rahu and the Moon, it was the Moon who had caused offense to Rahu by betraying him; Rahu was simply squaring up the account. So also in this case, it is Ravana who will cause offense to Lord Ram by stealing his wife Sita, and Lord Ram will simply teach him a lesson.

Another similarity is this: Rahu devours a full Moon; so Lord Ram will now slay Ravana when the vessel of his sins and cruelty has become full to the brim.

²Though it is not mentioned here but at the time of leaving Sita, Laxman had drawn a circle around the hermitage and invoked some powerful Mantras to make the area within this circle absolutely safe. When Ravana, who was disguised as a mendicant, could not enter this firewall of security around the hermitage, he had prevailed upon Sita to step out of it in order to give him alms; since Sita could not break tradition by refusing a mendicant alms, she stepped out of this circle, and scarcely had she done so then Ravana grabbed her.

We learn about Laxman drawing this circle of firewall of security when Mandodari, the wife of Ravana, talks about it when she sternly admonishes her husband for not having the guts to cross even a circle marked on the ground by Laxman while he bragged of bringing Sita and now is daring to take the two brothers head-on in a fight to the finish. Why did he not dare to cross Laxman's circle if he had all the might and powers he boasts of so much? Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 36; and Geetawali, Lanka Kand, stanza no. 6 of verse no. 1.

³It ought to be noted here that the story of Ram Charit Manas has a number of narrators. One such narrator was the crow-saint Kaagbhusund who was approached by the "lord of the birds", i.e. Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, for he wanted to hear the divine story of Lord Ram.

This narration forms the major part of the second half of the seventh Canto called Uttar Kand. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 125. This story has been published by this author in English as an independent book titled "Kaagbhusund Ramayan".]

नाना बिधि करि कथा सुहाई । राजनीति भय प्रीति देखाई ॥ ११ ॥

कह सीता सुनु जती गोसाई । बोलेहु बचन दुष्ट की नाई ॥ १२ ॥

तब रावन निज रूप देखावा । भई सभय जब नाम सुनावा ॥ १३ ॥

nānā bidhi kari kathā suhā'ī. rājanīti bhaya prīti dēkhā'ī. 11.

kaha sītā sunu jatī gōsā'īm. bōlēhu bacana duṣṭa kī nā'īm. 12.

taba rāvana nija rūpa dēkhāvā. bha'ī sabhaya jaba nāma sunāvā. 13.

The fake mendicant (i.e. Ravana in disguise) told her (Sita) many fascinating tales which he weaved on the spur of the moment; he tried to influence her by invoking a variety of means using the principles of politics, fear and affection. (11)

Sita became alarmed at the indiscretion of the mendicant¹; she chided him, saying, 'Listen oh mendicant! You talk like a wicked fellow.' (12)

At that instant, Ravana showed his true form. When he told her his real name, she became sore frightened². (13)

[Note—¹Ravana went on talking and talking endlessly without invitation. His behaviour was quite unbecoming of a true mendicant who would talk not more than what is absolutely essential. Besides this, no mendicant would approach a lonely lady and indulge in unwanted story telling; it does not behoove of a mendicant to talk sweetly to a lady while she is alone, showing undue interest in her and trying to arouse her interest in himself. This highly odd behaviour aroused Sita's suspicion. But she should have used more discretion; she should not have rebuked him so openly but should have waited quietly to give time to Lord Ram and Laxman to come back.

But it was not to be so; it was destined that she would be stolen by Ravana as it would become the cause for the elimination of the demons. This was the reason why Sita lost her patience and failed to exercise self-restraint.

²Sita had not seen Ravana earlier, but she had heard of his name. So when Ravana revealed his true form of a demon, Sita had little fear of him as she had seen demons earlier during her journey through the forest and was acquainted with such terrible forms. She had no fear of ordinary demons as she had seen many being killed by Lord Ram single-handedly. But of course the name 'Ravana' was something different, for he was no ordinary demon. She had heard of his immense strength, ferocity and pervert nature; so as soon as he uttered his name it sent a chill down the spine of Sita.]

कह सीता धरि धीरजु गाढ़ा । आइ गयउ प्रभु रहु खल ठाढ़ा ॥ १४ ॥

जिमि हरिबधुहि छुद्र सस चाहा । भएसि कालबस निसिचर नाहा ॥ १५ ॥

सुनत बचन दससीस रिसाना । मन महुँ चरन बंदि सुख माना ॥ १६ ॥

kaha sītā dhari dhīrajū gāṛhā. ā'i gaya'u prabhu rahu khala ṭhāṛhā. 14.

jimi haribadhūhi chudra sasa cāhā. bha'ēsi kālabasa nisicara nāhā. 15.

sunata bacana dasāsīsa risānā. mana mahum' carana bandi sukha mānā. 16.

Sita mustered a lot of courage and boldly told Ravana, 'Wait a little you wicked fellow, for the Lord is just about to come back. (14)

Oh the king of demons; just like a vile rabbit covets the lioness which surely invites its death, so are you impaled by your own death. [To wit, by eying me with ill intentions, you are surely inviting your own death just like the wretched rabbit who is sure to die if it tries dirty tricks with a lioness. Wait till my Lord Ram comes back to teach you a good lesson.]’ (15)

Hearing these words of stern rebuke, the ten-headed Ravana became very angry. But internally he bowed at the feet of Sita and felt very glad (that finally the opportunity has arrived for which he had been waiting for so long—which is to get himself killed by Lord Ram and free his soul from the cage of his evil demon body, enabling it to find deliverance, emancipation and salvation)¹. (16)

[Note—¹It ought to be noted here that Ravana had bowed to Sita mentally, but externally he maintained the show of anger and vengeance. Even Marich had adopted this attitude. And we will read later on that like Marich, Lord Ram had granted the soul of Ravana the ultimate destination by accepting it as a part of his own Self; this happened when the soul of Ravana emerged in the form of a brilliant shaft of light at the time of his death to enter the body of Lord Ram. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

Not only Ravana, all the demon warriors who were killed in the war too found salvation—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.

The question arises: Why did Ravana maintain the external façade of hostility with Lord Ram? Well, he had to pay attention to his domestic constituency consisting of the demon race, which was very irrational and haughty in its behaviour, and had never learnt to have mercy and reasoning in its dealing with other creatures. If he was to remain in charge of the demons and force them to owe their allegiance to him, which he had managed more by fear than having actual loyalty, it was imperative that he himself act fiercely and without compromise.

Say, what huge gossip would do the rounds if he does not take revenge for his sister’s deformation; what face would he show the demons if he shies from punishing a human being for the audacity of challenging his might? Any overt sign of surrender or fear of impending death by him will send a wrong signal to the rest of the demons, and as these fellows feared Ravana only because he was merciless and unforgiving and will do them to death if they refuse to toe his line, once they learn that he has been frightened by someone then all the demons warriors will lose the fear of him, and consequently it would be impossible for him to maintain his grip upon the demon race.]

दो०. क्रोधवंत तब रावन लीन्हिसि रथ बैठाइ ।

चला गगनपथ आतुर भयँ रथ हाँकि न जाइ ॥ २८ ॥

dōhā.

krōdhavanta taba rāvana līnhisi ratha baiṭhā'i.

calā gaganapatha ātura bhayam̐ ratha hām̐ki na jā'i. 28.

Then, seething with anger and profoundly vexed, Ravana hastily seated Sita on his chariot. Then he took to the path of the sky as he scrambled to muster strength to go away from that place as fast as he could because he was so scared stiff with fear that he was scarcely able to control his chariot during its flight¹. (Doha no. 28)

[Note—¹It is not clear here as to how Ravana had Sita board the chariot. It is not mentioned that “he grabbed her by the hand”. So how did he manage to put Sita on the chariot? The answer is found in Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas—where it is said that “Ravana used his long nails to scoop up the earth from below Sita’s feet and then placed her on the chariot like one transfers a plant from one place to another”. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 51-52.

And why was he angry? It is because Sita had called him a “wretched rabbit eying a lioness”, and “to wait till Lord Ram comes back to teach him a lesson in propriety”. This was an affront on his ego and self-respect, something that would be too much for any man worth his salt to tolerate.

Why was he so utterly vexed and confounded that he could not even drive his chariot properly? It is because he was unsure of his fate; he did not know if his actions were right or wrong, and what the consequences of his deeds would be. This doubt lingered in his mind and perplexed him from the beginning when Supernakha had asked him to revenge her humiliation. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.

Ravana was in such a hurry to get out from the place that his chariot swung madly to the right and the left as he kept pressing forward at full tilt. He had come quietly, but now he was roaring and yelling as he fled in terror, as fast as the unhindered path of the sky would allow him to move ahead.]

चौ०. हा जग एक बीर रघुराया । केहिं अपराध बिसारेहु दाया ॥ १ ॥
 आरति हरन सरन सुखदायक । हा रघुकुल सरोज दिननायक ॥ २ ॥
 हा लछिमन तुम्हार नहिं दोसा । सो फलु पायउँ कीन्हेउँ रोसा ॥ ३ ॥
 बिबिध बिलाप करति बैदेही । भूरि कृपा प्रभु दूरि सनेही ॥ ४ ॥
 बिपति मोरि को प्रभुहि सुनावा । पुरोडास चह रासभ खावा ॥ ५ ॥
 सीता कै बिलाप सुनि भारी । भए चराचर जीव दुखारी ॥ ६ ॥

caupāī.

hā jaga ēka bīra raghurāyā. kēhim aparādha bisārēhu dāyā. 1.
 āraṭi harana sarana sukhadāyaka. hā raghukula sarōja dinanāyaka. 2.
 hā lachimana tumhāra nahim dōsā. sō phalu pāya'um' kīnhē'um' rōsā. 3.
 bibidha bilāpa karati baidēhī. bhūri kṛpā prabhu dūri sanēhī. 4.
 bipati mōri kō prabhuhi sunāvā. purōḍāsa caha rāsabha khāvā. 5.
 sītā kai bilāpa suni bhārī. bha'ē carācara jīva dukhārī. 6.

Sita wailed and grieved woefully as Ravana was taking her away forcibly on his chariot. She lamented thus: ‘Oh the brave Lord of the Raghu family (bīra raghurāyā) who has no match anywhere in this world (jaga ēka). What is my mistake for which you have overlooked your merciful nature by abandoning me? Why have you become so stone-hearted? (1)

You are renowned as the one who eliminates the troubles of those who are tormented; you remove the cause of distress of all who take shelter in your holy feet, making them happy and contented.

Oh Lord who is like the sun for the lotus flower symbolizing the race of king Raghu¹!

[¹To wit, just as the sun makes the lotus open its petals and bloom, Lord Ram lends glory and fame to the entire family descending from the ancient king Raghu of Ayodhya. Lord Ram is like the sun with respect to the family of king Raghu as his mere presence makes the whole family happy and proud at having such an excellent Lord as one of its illustrious members.] (2)

Alas Laxman; it is not your fault at all, for I have got the bitter fruit of becoming angry at you for no rhyme or reason².

[²Laxman; please forgive me that I spoke to you in a harsh tone when you were reluctant to leave me alone in the forest, especially when Lord Ram had himself given specific instructions to this effect. Now I am being punished for my indiscretion; why and how could you be blamed for my misfortunes when you had but little choice against my impertinence? So forgive me.] (3)

In this way, Vaidehi* (the daughter of Vaideha, the king of Janakpur; i.e. Sita) lamented and grieved gravely at her misfortunes. She talked to herself, 'The dear Lord (prabhu -- sanēhī), who is full of mercy (bhūri kṛpā), has gone far away (chasing the decoy deer)³.

[³Once again, how can I blame the Lord also, for it was on my insistence that he had gone behind the deer to bring it to me. Alack; Alack! It is me who am to be squarely blamed for whatever ill has befallen me, for it was I who had sent Lord Ram away from the hermitage, and once again it was I who had forced Laxman also to leave me alone at the hermitage.

*It is important to note why the word "Vaidehi" has been used for Sita; its remarkable. This word literally means 'one who has no body; or one who is not aware of the existence of his or her physical body'. So this word implies that Sita was so overcome with grief that she virtually lost consciousness of her own body as well as her surroundings. It also implies that the Sita we are talking about is only a 'shadowy figure', that she does not actually have any physical presence, as the original lady had already been entrusted to the care of the Fire God by Lord Ram earlier. Refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 24 herein above.] (4)

Will, by any good chance, anyone tell the Lord about my condition; has anyone done so yet⁴?

Look how an ass is trying to surreptitiously eat (caha rāsabha khāvā) the offerings meant for the sacred fire sacrifice (purōḍāsa)⁵.

[⁴Sita was so upset that the little time that elapsed seemed like too long for her, for she wondered if some good soul who had witnessed her being taken away by Ravana would have met Lord Ram and Laxman and told them about the misfortune that had suddenly befallen her. Or that soon someone will do so if yet not done already. This will help the Lord to come to her aid forthwith, and perchance he may reach her in time it is possible that he would kill her tormentor and liberate her from his clutches. But who knows what has happened?

Laxman had entrusted Sita's safety in the hands of the various patron deities of the forest and the directions at the time of leaving her. Refer: Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 28 herein above. So Sita hopes that someone amongst them would tell Lord Ram and Laxman what had happened to her.

She was wailing loudly; so it was her intention that in case no one near the hermitage tells Lord Ram about her abduction perhaps out of their fear of Ravana, then at least some amongst them would now take pity on her when they hear her wailings, and gather enough courage to at least quietly tell the Lord what had happened in his absence.

⁵We shall read below in Chaupai line no. 8 that Sita uses another deprecating metaphor to snub Ravana; it is as follows: “Alas; a barbarian is trying to eat the offerings meant for the sacred fire of the sacrifice, thereby attempting to defile it.”

Here, Ravana is the ‘ass’ or the ‘barbarian’, and Sita is like the ‘offering made for the sacred cause’ of the gods, which was to ensure elimination of the demons and provide security to mother earth and its inhabitants.

A similar idea is also expressed in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 55.] (5)

Hearing the loud wailing and woeful cries of Sita, all the creatures, both animate as well as inanimate (carācara jīva)⁶, felt saddened and distressed, for they all empathized with her sorrows.

[⁶‘Animate’ creatures hear and talk, but who were the ‘inanimate’ ones being referred to here? The ‘animate’ beings were the many living beings living in the vicinity of the hermitage, such as forest-dwelling sages and hermits as well as the birds, animals and other creatures. The ‘inanimate’ beings were the invisible deities of the forest and the realm in whose custody Laxman had left Sita, as well as trees and creepers who are all deemed to have life in them. Here, all entities in the Lord’s creation are being addressed. Some were living beings in traditional sense, and others were personified forms of non-living beings such as trees and water bodies, as well as the invisible deities.] (6)

गीधराज सुनि आरत बानी । रघुकुलतिलक नारि पहिचानी ॥ ७ ॥
 अधम निसाचर लीन्हें जाई । जिमि मलेछ बस कपिला गाई ॥ ८ ॥
 सीते पुत्रि करसि जनि त्रासा । करिहउँ जातुधान कर नासा ॥ ९ ॥
 धावा क्रोधवंत खग कैसें । छूटइ पबि परबत कहूँ जैसें ॥ १० ॥
 रे रे दुष्ट ठाढ़ किन होही । निर्भय चलेसि न जानेहि मोही ॥ ११ ॥ gīdharāja suni ārata bānī. raghukulatilaka nāri pahicānī. 7.

adhama nisācara līnhēm jā'ī. jimi malēcha basa kapilā gā'ī. 8.
sītē putri karasi jani trāsā. kariha'um' jātudhāna kara nāsā. 9.
dhāvā krōdhavanta khaga kaisēm. chūṭa'i pabi parabata kahum' jaisēm. 10.
rē rē duṣṭa ṭhāṛha kina hōhī. nirbhaya calēsi na jānēhi mōhī. 11.

[Now it so happened that Ravana went by the path in the sky that crossed a place where lived an old vulture named Jatau. He had been befriended by Lord Ram earlier when the Lord was entering into the deep recesses of the forest of Dandak. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 13.

When Jatau heard and saw Ravana scrambling away fast with a wailing Sita aboard his chariot, the old vulture could immediately understand that there was something seriously amiss. So he decided to intervene and set Sita free.]

The lord of the vultures (gīdharāja; Jatau) heard the wailings of Sita, and as he looked out to investigate he could perceive immediately that she was indeed the honourable wife of the Lord who was the glory of king Raghu's line (raghukulatilaka nāri; "the wife of Lord Ram"). (7)

He realized that the contemptible demon was taking her forcibly away like a cow known as Kapila that has fallen into the hands of a cruel barbarian (malēcha) who is forcibly taking her away (to be sacrificed)¹.

[¹The 'Kapila' cow is regarded as a holy animal; she has dark skin of grayish-brown hue, and is considered as auspicious. The cruel barbarian takes her away to kill her. Here, Sita is like this 'cow', and Ravana is the 'barbarian'.] (8)

Jatau leapt to defend Sita; he called out aloud to her: 'Listen daughter Sita; don't worry and do not be afraid. I shall kill this demon straightaway.' (9)

The mighty bird lunged forward angrily and with the greatest of agility as if the thunderbolt is shot at a huge mountain to break it down. (10)

He yelled and challenged Ravana, 'Oh you rascal; oh you wicked fellow (rē rē duṣṭa). Why don't you stop? You are going away without any fear whatsoever; don't you know me and who I am, and that it is my area of influence that you seem to violate with impunity; how dare you do so?'²

[²Say, how dare you cross my path so boldly without regard to my presence; how dare you take Sita, whom I regard as my deemed daughter, away so fearlessly, with impunity? Hold it; I have decided to teach you a lesson in propriety and good manners!

Don't you know that my name is Jatau, that I am an upholder of Dharma (propriety and probity), that I am very strong and able, and that I am a son of the legendary sage Kashyap? And that in the absence of the two brothers Ram and Laxman, I am the guardian of Sita? Refer: Valmiki's Ramayan, Aranya Kand, (i) Canto 50, verse nos. 3-4; and (ii) Canto 14, verse no. 34 respectively.

I shall immediately fell you from your chariot and slay you like your brother Khar had been. Though I am old but don't be misled by it—for I am able enough to trounce you in a fraction of a moment in a duel; don't have delusions about it. Refer: Valmiki's Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 50, verse nos. 23 and 28; and Canto 51, verse no. 30.] (11)

आवत देखि कृतांत समाना । फिरि दसकंधर कर अनुमाना ॥ १२ ॥
की मैनाक कि खगपति होई । मम बल जान सहित पति सोई ॥ १३ ॥
जाना जरठ जटायू एहा । मम कर तीरथ छाँड़िहि देहा ॥ १४ ॥ āvata dēkhi kṛtānta samānā. phiri dasakandhara kara anumānā. 12.

kī maināka ki khagapati hōī. mama bala jāna sahita pati sōī. 13.
jānā jarathā jaṭāyū ēhā. mama kara tīratha chāmḍīhi dēhā. 14.

When the ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara) observed the mighty bird dashing towards him like the death-god himself personified, he faltered in his flight, wondering as to who he might be. He turned back to see who his attacker was, and began to make guesses. (12)

‘Who is this? Is he Mt. Mainak in a personified form¹; or is he the Lord of the Birds (known as ‘Garud’, the mount of Lord Vishnu)? Now, perchance he is the latter, then he must be aware of my stupendous strength as much as his own Lord (Vishnu) knows about it².

[¹Mount Mainak is a huge mountain. When Indra, the king of gods, ran to hide from Ravana, he had taken shelter in this mountain. Besides this, Mainak was once attacked by Indra who shot his Vajra (thunderbolt) at it; at that time Mainak had hidden under the surface of the ocean to escape the strike of the thunderbolt and get reduced to rubble. So by invoking Mainak, Ravana implies that this legendary Mountain is well aware of his might; so there is no chance of Mainak (i.e. personified form of Mt. Mainak or its patron deity) risking his own safety by showing the audacity to confront Ravana of whom even Indra is scared stiff.

²To wit, Ravana thought to himself thus: “If my detractor is Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, then he also surely knows how strong and invincible I am, for his own master, Lord Vishnu, knows everything about me. He is therefore expected to avoid me as he knows that I have subdued all the gods, and none amongst them ever dare to confront me. In this case this fellow is inviting calamity upon himself by confronting me; he and his lord Vishnu would together regret for this misconceived sense of dare-devilry that by some misadventure Garud seems eager to show.”] (13)

When Ravana discovered upon close observation that his attacker was the old vulture Jatau³, he sneered sarcastically and joked, ‘This poor fellow seems to be in the throes of death for he has decided to die at my hands like a person willingly submits to die in a pilgrim place.’

[³The age of Jatau was approximately sixty-thousand years at that time. Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 50, verse no. 20.] (14)

सुनत गीध क्रोधधतुर धावा । कह सुनु रावन मोर सिखावा ॥ १५ ॥
तजि जानकिहि कुसल गृह जाहू । नाहिं त अस होइहि बहुबाहू ॥ १६ ॥
राम रोष पावक अति घोरा । होइहि सकल सलभ कुल तोरा ॥ १७ ॥ sunata gīdha krōdhātura dhāvā. kaha sunu rāvana mōra sikhāvā. 15.

taji jānakihi kusala gr̥ha jāhū. nāhiṁ ta asa hō'ihī bahubāhū. 16.
rāma rōṣa pāvaka ati ghōrā. hō'ihī sakala salabha kula tōrā. 17.

When the vulture heard the insinuating words of Ravana (Chaupai line no. 14 herein above) that were insulting to the extreme, his fury knew no bounds; he dashed forward with full ferocity ignited by anger, exclaiming with vehement indignation, ‘Oh Ravana, pay attention to my sane advice. (15)

Leave Janak’s daughter (Sita; “jānaki”) alone and go back home safely. [It is for your own good.] For otherwise, oh the one with multiple arms (“bahubāhū”; so-called as Ravana had twenty arms, ten on each side of the body)¹, it would happen that --- (16)

--- In the fierce fire ignited by Lord Ram's anger symbolized by the powerful arrows shot by him, your entire family and the race over which you rule would burn to ashes like insects that get roasted in the scorching flame of a lighted lamp; so beware!² (17)

[Note—¹Ravana was very proud of his twenty arms, and on different occasions he had boasted of their might and invincibility. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 10; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 28; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 25; Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 41.

So this is why Jatau chose to tease him by citing his multiple arms, in effect telling him that the part of his body of which he has been so proud of would afford him no protection against Lord Ram's wrath.

²Insects get attracted to the flame of a lighted oil lamp or a candle. They dance around the flame only to get burnt to death. Here, Jatau warns Ravana that instead of the him (Jatau) courting death by interfering with Ravana and trying to stop him from whisking Sita away, it is he (Ravana) who willfully lights the flame that would burn not only him alone but his entire clan to death. He would be well advised to pay heed and leave Sita alone here and now; for otherwise he is embracing sure and certain death even as insects that gather around a flame of a lighted lamp soon burn to death. In this metaphor, Lord Ram's anger represented by the arrows shot by him during the war to free Sita would be like the 'flame of the lighted lamp', and Ravana and the rest of the demons would be like the 'horde of insects that get pulled towards this flame only to get scorched to death'.

Similar allusion to the demons dying in hordes like insects burning to death around a flame has been cited elsewhere also in Ram Charit Manas. For instance, in Sundar Kand, Doha no. 15, Hanuman cites the same metaphor to assure Sita that soon the demons would burn to death by the fire symbolized by the arrows shot angrily by Lord Ram like so many insects who jump to their death by dancing near the flame.

In Valmiki's Ramayan, an identical assertion is made by Jatau: refer—Valmiki Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 50, verse no. 16.]

उतरु न देत दसानन जोधा । तबहिं गीध धावा करि क्रोधा ॥ १८ ॥
धरि कच बिरथ कीन्ह महि गिरा । सीतहि राखि गीध पुनि फिरा ॥ १९ ॥
चोचन्ह मारि बिदारेसि देही । दंड एक भइ मुरुछा तेही ॥ २० ॥
तब सक्रोध निसिचर खिसिआना । काढ़ेसि परम कराल कृपाना ॥ २१ ॥ काटेसि पंख परा खग धरनी । सुमिरि राम करि अदभुत करनी ॥ २२ ॥

utaru na dēta dasānana jōdhā. tabahim gīdha dhāvā kari krōdhā. 18.
dhari kaca biratha kīnha mahi girā. sītahi rākhi gīdha puni phirā. 19.
cōcanha māri bidārēsi dēhī. daṇḍa ēka bha'i muruchā tēhī. 20.
taba sakrōdha nīsacara khisi'ānā. kāṛhēsi parama karāla kṛpānā. 21.
kāṭēsi paṅkha parā khaga dharanī. sumiri rāma kari adabhuta karanī. 22.

When the ten-headed warrior (Ravana; "dasānana jōdhā") did not reply or pay any heed to the vulture ("gīdha"; Jatau), the latter angrily rushed towards him. (18)

He (Jatau) caught hold of Ravana by his hair, and pulled him off the chariot; Ravana fell on the ground. Then the vulture Jatau took Sita away to keep her safely (at his own place), and returned swiftly to face Ravana. (19)

He (Jatau) began tearing at Ravana's body fiercely and rapidly with his sharp pointed beaks, resulting in the demon getting so seriously wounded that for about an hour (daṇḍa ēka) he lost his consciousness and fainted on the ground¹. (20)

When by-and-by the demon Ravana regained his consciousness, he was seething in anger; he vehemently drew out his terrible sword. (21)

And with that horrifying sword he cut-off the poor vulture's wings so that the latter fell down on the ground. The Bird invoked Lord Ram and his mysterious and strange ways (that had prevented Jatau from saving Sita)². (22)

[Note—¹We note that Jatau had not attacked Ravana directly on the first occasion itself, for first he tried to stop him, then he tried to reason with him, explaining the grave danger Ravana is inviting upon his entire race by kidnapping Sita and attempting to persuade him to leave her alone, and finally Jatau attacked only when Ravana neglected him completely, paying no heed to him, and instead sneered at him saying that the bird wished to die at his hands.

Jatau could have hit Ravana in his eyes to make him blind, but the demon had ten heads and therefore twenty eyes; so it was impossible to blind him completely. The easiest way to make him fall from the chariot was to hover over his head and catch hold of his hairs and pull him off the vehicle like a folk-lift truck picks up a car, and then dash him on the ground.

²Jatau was crest-fallen and dismayed at the turn of events. He wondered at the mysterious ways of the Supreme Lord and marveled at the way Providence determines a creature's destiny; for though he had almost been successful in rescuing Sita yet destiny wanted something different as it prevailed by forcing him to become helpless by cutting his wings so that Ravana would manage to take Sita away. Jatau realized that perhaps, and in all likelihood, this was the wish of the Supreme Lord as it may have something to do with his divine play and the fulfillment of the Lord's divine mission of which he wasn't aware of. Now nothing more could be done; with his wings cut, the poor Jatau was completely helpless to help Sita.

Jatau also marveled at the fact that Ravana had not cut-off his head to kill him on the spot, but only left him immobile by chopping-off his wings. Surely this was also due for some great cause that is yet to be fulfilled. Slowly and steadily Jatau pondered over the whole affair and came to the conclusion that since nothing happens in this world without the Lord's wishes, it surely means that he was left wounded to live till Lord Ram comes his way searching for Sita. At that time it will be his honour and privilege to tell the Lord about Sita's abductor and of the direction she has been taken away. Besides it, Jatau thought that it would grant him a last chance of meeting and paying his respects to the Supreme Lord before his death, and surely this would not have been possible had Ravana killed him by cutting his head. So his wounds were indeed a blessing in disguise; the sufferings he would have to endure till the Lord comes there would be like a Tapa (penance) for him; it would entitle him to attain final emancipation and salvation that generally Tapa rewards its practitioner with.

When Jatau understood the significance of his not instantly being killed but getting only wounded, he began, without wasting time, meditating upon the holy name of Lord Ram, which he knew was a great spiritual formula that helps the soul of a creature to find deliverance and emancipation. This is clearly hinted in the wording of this stanza as it says: “sumiri rāma”; i.e. ‘remembering Lord Ram’. So in these final moments, Jatau stopped regretting his failure in stopping Ravana from taking Sita away as it was the wish of the Lord himself, but instead he concentrated his mind to remember the divine form and holy name of Lord Ram to ensure for himself spiritual welfare and a glorious destiny.]

सीतहि जान चढ़ाइ बहोरी । चला उताइल त्रास न थोरी ॥ २३ ॥
 करति बिलाप जाति नभ सीता । ब्याध बिबस जनु मृगी सभिता ॥ २४ ॥
 गिरि पर बैठे कपिन्ह निहारी । कहि हरि नाम दीन्ह पट डारी ॥ २५ ॥ एहि बिधि सीतहि सो लै गयऊ । बन असोक महँ राखत भयऊ ॥ २६ ॥ sītahi jāna caṛḥā'i bahōrī. calā utā'ila trāsa na thōrī. 23.

karati bilāpa jāti nabha sītā. byādha bibasa janu mṛgī sabhītā. 24.

giri para baiṭhē kapinha nihārī. kahi hari nāma dīnha paṭa ḍārī. 25 ēhi bidhi sītahi sō lai गया'ū. bana asōka maham' rākhata bhaya'ū. 26.

Ravana lifted Sita once again on the chariot and ran away from there as fast as he could, as he was very agitated and terrified with fear¹.

[¹Ravana feared for the worst; he feared that by some signal Jatau may call his peers and friends to come immediately to his aid and attack the demon; he also feared that if he wasted more time then it may be possible that even Lord Ram and Laxman would come there hurrying after him in hot pursuit as soon as they would discover that Sita has been abducted.] (23)

Sita lamented and grieved very sorely as she was being taken through the path of the sky; her condition was as pitiful and helpless as a terrified deer that is being taken away by a lion. (24)

On the way she saw some monkeys sitting on the top of a mountain, whereupon she uttered loud the name of Lord Hari (i.e. Lord Ram) and dropped some pieces of her garment².

[²These monkeys were Sugriv and his companions such as Hanuman, Jamvant etc. They lived atop a mountain on the outskirts of Kishkindha, the monkey kingdom. Later on, when Lord Ram was wandering in the forest searching for Sita, he would come to this place. Then the Lord would befriend Sugriv and others; at that time these monkey warriors would tell the Lord of what they had seen about Sita being taken away through the sky by a miscreant. The Lord would be shown these pieces of clothes as identification tokens, and he would be convinced of the authenticity of the story narrated by the monkeys and also of Sita's identity. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 5.] (25)

In this way, he (Ravana) took Sita away and held her captive in his royal garden called ‘Ashok Van’ (bana asōka maham³ rākhata bhaya'ū)³.

[³This garden was so called for two reasons. One is that it was so pleasant that it removed the sorrows of all those who came to visit it. And the second reason is that it had large Ashoka trees that gave ample shade; it was under one such leafy tree where Sita was seated.

Ravana was so much agitated that he did not pay attention to the tell-tale signs that Sita left on the way. He couldn't realize that these tokens that she is felling would lead Lord Ram hot on his trail.] (26)

दो०. हारि परा खल बहु बिधि भय अरु प्रीति देखाइ । तब असोक पादप तर राखिसि जतन कराइ ॥ २९ (क) ॥
जेहि बिधि कपट कुरंग सँग धाइ चले श्रीराम ।
सो छबि सीता राखि उर रटति रहति हरिनाम ॥ २९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

hāri parā khala bahu bidhi bhaya aru prīti dēkhā'i.
taba asōka pādapa tara rākhisi jatana karā'i. 29 (a).
jēhi bidhi kapaṭa kuraṅga samṅa dhā'i calē śrīrāma.
sō chabi sītā rākhi ura raṭati rahati harināma. 29 (b).

That wicked fellow (Ravana) tried all his best tricks employing fear and affection in an attempt to make Sita yield to him, but he failed miserably. So ultimately he left her to be seated under the shade of a great Ashoka tree, and made adequate arrangement for her security¹. (Doha no. 29-a)

Meanwhile, Sita remembered the last vision she saw of Lord Ram—the fascinating view of the Lord going behind the decoy deer—and enshrined it inside her heart, meditating on it and repeating the name of Lord Ram (as a means of survival). (Doha no. 29-b)

[Note—¹Ravana made proper arrangement for Sita and her security. He appointed an old demoness named Trijata to look after her. In due course of time, Trijata became Sita's confidante and close companion. When other demoness tried to tease Sita, Trijata would warn them to leave her alone. She was also the medium by which Sita would come to learn of the developments once the war to free her broke out. These facts have been narrated in Lanka Kand.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 12; and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 100.]

-----**-----

Section 5.2.2:

Adhyatma Ramayan

{The Story of Abduction of Sita by Ravana}

Now we shall read this episode from Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas.

In their principle narration, the versions of Ram Charit Manas and Adhyatma Ramayan are almost alike, though they vary in finer details.

In Adhyatma Ramayan the narration of this particular episode, i.e. of Supernakha's misadventure that resulted in her deformation, and the subsequent events that culminated in Ravana abducting Sita, is found in Canto nos. 5-7 of Aranya Kand. This version is quite frank in its presentation as compared to the version in Ram Charit Manas which observes decorum to quite an extent. So now we shall have another flavour of this fascinating story by reading it word-by-word from Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Cantos 5-7 as follows:

(a) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5 (Supernakha's misadventure and her punishment; the slaying of the demons Khar and Dushan etc. by Lord Ram; Supernakha approaches Ravana to seek retribution):-

॥ पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥

श्री महादेव उवाच

तस्मिन् काले महारण्ये राक्षसी कामरूपिणी ।
विचचार महासत्त्वा जनस्थाननिवासिनी ॥ १॥
एकदा गौतमीतीरे पञ्चवट्यां समीपतः ।
पद्मवज्राङ्कुशाङ्कानि पदानि जगतीपतेः ॥ २॥
दृष्ट्वा कामपरीतात्मा पादसौन्दर्यमोहिता ।
पश्यन्ती सा शनैरायाद्राघवस्य निवेशनम् ॥ ३॥

॥ pañcamah sargaḥ ॥

śrī mahādeva uvāca

tasmin kāle mahāraṇye rākṣasī kāmarūpiṇī । vicāra mahāsattvā janasthānanivāsini ॥ 1॥ ekadā gautamītire pañcavaṭyāṃ samīpataḥ । padmavajrāṅkuśāṅkāni padāni jagatīpateḥ ॥ 2॥ dṛṣṭvā kāmaparītātmā pādasaundaryamohitā । paśyantī sā śanairāyādrāghavasya niveśanam ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—‘Oh Parvati! At that time, there used to roam about freely in that dense forest a demoness who was very strong and could assume any form she wished (1).

Once, near the banks of the Gomti river near Panchvati she saw the marks of the feet of Sri Ram on the ground having the signs (linings) of lotus, Bajra and goad on them. She was enchanted by them and overcome by lust and passion; she followed those pug-marks and slowly, surreptitiously reached his hermitage (2-3).

तत्र सा तं रमानाथं सीतया सह संस्थितम् ।
कन्दर्पसदृशं रामं दृष्ट्वा कामविमोहिता ॥ ४॥
राक्षसी राघवं पूह कस्य त्वं कः किमाश्रमे ।
युक्तो जटावल्कलाद्यैः साध्यं किं तेऽतु मे वद ॥ ५॥ tatra sā taṃ ramānāthaṃ sītayā saha saṁsthitam । kandarpasadr̥śaṃ rāmaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā kāmavimohitā ॥ 4॥ rākṣasī rāghavaṃ prāha kasya tvam kaḥ kimāśrame । yukto jaṭāvalkalādyaiḥ sādhyam kiṃ te'tra me vada ॥ 5॥

4-5. Reaching there, she saw Ramanath (Lord Ram) who looked as beautiful as Kamdeo-cupid as he sat alongside Sita. Being overcome by passion (4), Supernakha said to the Lord: ‘Whose (son or husband) are you? What is your name? Why do you stay in this forest attired in clothes made of birch (bark of tree) and matted hairs etc.? What do you wish to receive, gain or achieve by staying here? Tell me that (5).

अहं शूर्पणखा नाम राक्षसी कामरूपिणी ।
भगिनी राक्षसेन्द्रस्य रावणस्य महात्मनः ॥ ६॥
खरेण सहिता भ्रात्रा वसाम्यत्रैव कानने ।
राजा दत्तं च मे सर्वं मुनिभक्षा वसाम्यहम् ॥ ७॥
त्वां तु वेदितुमिच्छामि वद मे वदतां वर । तामाह रामनामाहमयोध्याधिपतेः सुतः ॥ ८॥ ahaṃ śūrpaṇakhā nāma rākṣasī kāmārūpiṇī । bhaginī rākṣasendrasya rāvaṇasya mahātmanaḥ ॥ 6॥ khareṇa sahitā bhrātrā vasāmyatraiva kānane । rājñā dattaṃ ca me sarvaṃ munibhakṣā vasāmyaham ॥ 7॥ tvāṃ tu veditumicchāmi vada me vadatāṃ vara । tāmāha rāmanāmāhamayodhyādhipateḥ sutaḥ ॥ 8॥

6-8. I am Supernakha, the sister of king of demons, Ravana. I can assume any beautiful form (or can become as beautiful as Kamdeo-cupid himself) (6).

I stay with my brother Khar in this forest. The king (Ravana) has granted me the right over this whole forest. (Hence, as is my wont as a demoness) I eat hermits who live here (7).

Oh the one who appears to be an excellent speaker (vadatām vara)! I want to know about you, so do tell me about yourself.’

Then the Lord replied to her, ‘I am the son of the king of Ayodhya; his name is Dasrath, and my name is Ram (8).

एषा मे सुन्दरी भार्या सीता जनकनन्दिनी ।
 स तु भ्राता कनीयान् मे लक्ष्मणोऽतीवसुन्दरः ॥ ९॥ किं कृत्यं ते मया ब्रूहि कार्यं भुवनसुन्दरि ।
 इति रामवचः श्रुत्वा कामार्ता साब्रवीदिदम् ॥ १०॥
 एहि राम मया सार्धं रमस्व गिरिकानने ।
 कामार्ताहं न शक्नोमि त्यक्तुं त्वां कमलेक्षणम् ॥ ११॥ eṣā me sundarī bhāryā sītā janakanandinī । sa tu bhrātā kaniyān me lakṣmaṇo'tīvasundaraḥ ॥ 9॥ kiṃ kṛtyaṃ te mayā brūhi kāryaṃ bhuvanasundari । iti rāma vacaḥ śrutvā kāmārtā sābravīdidam ॥ 10॥ ehi rāma mayā sārḍhaṃ ramaṣva girikānane । kāmārtāhaṃ na śaknōmi tyaktuṃ tvāṃ kamalekṣaṇam ॥ 11॥

9-11. This beautiful lady is my wife, her name is Sita, while that most handsome and charming youth is my younger brother Laxman (9).

Oh Tribhuvan Sundari (i.e. one who is the most beautiful in all the three sections of the world, the heaven, the earth and the nether world). Tell me what I can do for you?’

Hearing these words of Sri Ram, Supernakha who was bitten by the lust-bug, wistfully said (10): ‘Oh Sri Ram! Come to a mountain cave and enjoy yourself with me. At this time I am lustful, passionate and sexually excited, so I cannot leave (spare) you who are lotus-eyed.’ (11).

रामः सीतां कटाक्षेण पश्यन् सस्मितमब्रवीत् ।
 भार्या ममैषा कल्याणी विद्यते ह्यनपायिनी ॥ १२॥
 त्वं तु सापत्न्यदुःखेन कथं स्थास्यसि सुन्दरि ।
 बहिरास्ते मम भ्राता लक्ष्मणोऽतीव सुन्दरः ॥ १३॥ तवानुरूपो भविता पतिस्तेनैव सञ्चर ।
 इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणं प्रह पतिर्मे भव सुन्दर ॥ १४॥
 भ्रातुराज्ञां पुरस्कृत्य सङ्गच्छावोऽद्य मा चिरम् । इत्याह राक्षसी घोरा लक्ष्मणं काममोहिता ॥ १५॥ rāmaḥ sītāṃ kaṭākṣeṇa paśyan sasmitamabravīt । bhāryā mamaīṣā kalyāṇī vidyate hyanapāyinī ॥ 12॥ tvaṃ tu sāpatnyaduḥkhena kathaṃ sthāsyasi sundari । bahirāste mama bhrātā lakṣmaṇo'tīva sundaraḥ ॥ 13॥

tavānurūpo bhavitā patistenaiva sañcara । ityuktā lakṣmaṇaṃ prāha patirme bhava sundara ॥ 14॥ bhrāturājñāṃ puraskṛtya saṅgacchāvo'dya mā ciram । ityāha rākṣasī ghorā lakṣmaṇaṃ kāmamohitā ॥ 15॥

12-15. Then Sri Ram indicated towards Sita with a sideways glance and said, 'Oh the beautiful one! My wife is present; abandoning her is impossible (12). While she is alive, how can you live your life burning in the jealousy of having a competitor (or a co-wife)? My most handsome younger brother Laxman is present outside the hermitage (13). He can be your worthy husband. You should roam and enjoy yourself with him (in the forests and mountains).'

When Sri Ram had said this, the fierce demoness Supernakha, who was overcome by passion and excited by libido, approached Laxman and tried to cajole him, saying, 'Oh the beautiful one! Obey your brother and become my husband. Let you and me move around together; don't delay in this.' (14-15).

तामाह लक्ष्मणः साध्वि दासोऽहं तस्य धीमतः ।
 दासी भविष्यसि त्वं तु ततो दुःखतरं नु किम् ॥ १६॥
 तमेव गच्छ भद्रं ते स तु राजाखिलेश्वरः ।
 तच्छ्रुत्वा पुनरप्यागाद्राघवं दुष्टमानसा ॥ १७॥
 क्रोधाद्राम किमर्थं मां भ्रामयस्यनवस्थितः । इदानीमेव तां सीतां भक्षयामि तवाग्रतः ॥ १८॥

tāmāha lakṣmaṇaḥ sādhi dāso'haṃ tasya dhīmataḥ । dāsī bhaviṣyasi tvaṃ tu tato duḥkhataraṃ nu kim ॥ 16॥ tameva gaccha bhadraṃ te sa tu rājākhileśvaraḥ । tacchrutvā punarapyāgādrāghavaṃ duṣṭamānasā ॥ 17॥ krodhādrāma kimarthaṃ māṃ bhrāmayasyanavasthitaḥ । idānīmeva tāṃ sītāṃ bhakṣayāmi tavāgrataḥ ॥ 18॥

16-18. He (Laxman) replied to her, 'Oh seeker of love! I am but a humble servant of wise Sri Ram. By making me your husband, you too shall have to become his maid servant. What more sorrowful, humiliating and insulting can anything else be for you? (16). You be blessed! You should go to him for he is our Lord.'

Hearing this, that wicked demoness became peeved and came back to Raghav (Sri Ram) (17), and said menacingly, 'Oh Sri Ram! You are fickle minded. Why do you make me run here and there? If Sita is a hurdle (and you are reluctant to accept my proposal because of her, then I shall eat her instantly, right here in front of you (so as to remove her from the path of our matrimony).'

इत्युक्त्वा विकटाकारा जानकीमनुधावति ।
 ततो यमाज्ञया खड्गमादाय परिगृह्य ताम् ॥ १९॥
 विच्छेद नासां कर्णौ च लक्ष्मणो लघुविक्रमः ।

ततो घोरध्वनिं कृत्वा रुधिराक्तवपुर्द्रुतम् ॥ २०॥
 कृन्दमाना पपाताग्रे खरस्य परुषाक्षरा ।
 किमेतदिति तामाह खरः खरतराक्षरः ॥ २१॥
 केनैवं कारितासि त्वं मृत्योर्वत्प्रानुवर्तिना ।
 वद मे तं वधिष्यामि कालकल्पमपि क्षणात् ॥ २२॥ ityuktvā vikaṭākārā jānakīmanudhāvati । tato rāmājñāyā khaḍgamādāya pariḡṛhya tām ॥ 19॥ ciccheda nāsāṃ karnaṃ ca lakṣmaṇo laghuvikramaḥ । tato ghoradhvaniṃ kṛtvā rudhirāktavapurdrutam ॥ 20॥ krandaṃnā papātāgre kharasya paruṣākṣarā । kimetaditi tāmāha kharaḥ kharatarākṣaraḥ ॥ 21॥ kenaivaṃ kāritāsi tvam mṛtyorvaktrānuvartinā । vada me taṃ vadhiṣyāmi kālakalpamapi kṣaṇāt ॥ 22॥

19-22. Saying this, Supernakha assumed a ferocious form and lunged towards Sita. Then on the instructions of Sri Ram, Laxman swiftly caught her and using a sword (19), chopped-off her nose and ears. Then, making a terrible noise and drenched in blood (20), she hurriedly went and fell down in front of Khar (her brother), shrieking horribly as she fell. Seeing her distressed condition, Khar was taken aback; he said with an astonished voice that was shrill to reveal his emotions of utter dismay, ‘What is the matter? (21). Oh, which rascal has dared to do this to you and wish to go in the mouth (jaws) of death? Just tell me—even if he is as strong as Kaal (death), I shall kill him in a moment (to avenge for what he has done to you).’ (22).

तमाह राक्षसी रामः सीतालक्ष्मणसंयुतः ।
 दण्डकं निर्भयं कुर्वन्नास्ते गोदावरीतटे ॥ २३॥
 मामेवं कृतवान्स्तस्य भ्राता तेनैव चोदितः ।
 यदि त्वं कुलजातोऽसि वीरोऽसि जहि तौ रिपू ॥ २४॥
 तयोस्तु रुधिरं पास्ये भक्षयैतौ सुदुर्मदौ ।
 नो वेत्प्रानान् परित्यज्य यास्यामि यमसादनम् ॥ २५॥ tamāha rākṣasī rāmaḥ sītālakṣmaṇasaṃyutaḥ । daṇḍakaṃ nirbhayaṃ kurvannāste godāvarītaṭe ॥ 23॥ māmevaṃ kṛtavānstasya bhrātā tenaiva coditaḥ । yadi tvam kulajāto'si viro'si jahi tau ripū ॥ 24॥ tayostu rudhiraṃ pāsye bhakṣayaitau sudurmadau । no cetprāṇān parityajya yāsyāmi yamasādanam ॥ 25॥

23-25. Then the demoness Supernakha said to him, ‘Sri Ram along with Sita and Laxman stays on the banks of river Godawari in order to make the Dandak forest fearless (23).

At his instigation (or instance), his brother Laxman has made me in this horrible condition. If you have honour and dignity of your clan and if you are brave, then you should kill those two enemies (24).

You must eat those two who are wild and intoxicated (i.e. are arrogant with their pride, strength and valour) while I shall drink their blood. Otherwise, I shall die (of shame) and go to hell.' (25).

तच्छ्रुत्वा त्वरितं प्रागात्खरः क्रोधेन मूर्च्छितः । चतुर्दश सहस्राणि रक्षसां भीमकर्मणाम् ॥ २६॥
चोदयामास रामस्य समीपं वधकाङ्क्षया ।
खरश्च त्रिशिरश्चैव दूषणश्चैव रक्षसः ॥ २७॥
सर्वे रामं ययुः शीघ्रं नानापूहरणोद्यताः ।
श्रुत्वा कोलाहलं तेषां रामः सौमित्रिमब्रवीत् ॥ २८॥

tacchrutvā tvaritaṃ prāgātkharaḥ krodhena mūrcchitaḥ । caturdaśa sahasrāṇi rakṣasāṃ bhīmakarmaṇām ॥ 26॥ codayāmāsa rāmasya samīpaṃ vadhakāṅkṣayā । kharaśca trīśirāścaiva dūṣaṇaścaiva rākṣasaḥ ॥ 27॥ sarve rāmaṃ yayuḥ śīghraṃ nānāpraharaṇodyatāḥ । śrutvā kolāhalaṃ teṣāṃ rāmaḥ saumitrimabravīt ॥ 28॥

26-28. Hearing these words of Supernakha, Khar was furious with anger and proceeded from there in haste. He sent a ferocious, most vicious and terrible army of fourteen thousand demons (26) to kill Sri Ram. Khar, Dushan and Trishira (27) armed themselves with different weapons and reached the spot where Sri Ram was. Hearing the tumult caused by their arrival, Sri Ram said to Laxman (28)—

श्रूयते विपुलः शब्दो नूनमायान्ति रक्षसाः ।
भविष्यति महद्युद्धं नूनमद्य मया सह ॥ २९॥
सीतां नीत्वा गुहां गत्वा तत्र तिष्ठ महाबल ।
हन्तुमिच्छाम्यहं सर्वान् रक्षसान् घोररूपिणः ॥ ३०॥
अत्र किञ्चिन्न वक्तव्यं शापितोऽसि ममोपरि । तथेति सीतामादाय लक्ष्मणो गह्वरं ययौ ॥ ३१॥ śrūyate vipulaḥ śabda nūnamāyānti rākṣasāḥ । bhaviṣyati mahadyuddhaṃ nūnamadya mayā saha ॥ 29॥ sītāṃ nītvā guhāṃ gatvā tatra tiṣṭha mahābala । hantumicchāmyahaṃ sarvān rākṣasān ghorarūpiṇaḥ ॥ 30॥ atra kiñcinna vaktavyaṃ śāpito'si mamopari । tatheti sītāmādāya lakṣmaṇo gahvaraṃ yayau ॥ 31॥

29-31. 'There is a great noise. It appears that the demons are positively coming. It is certain that there will be a fierce battle between them and me today (29). So, oh the most strong, valorous one, you should take Sita with you and go secure her inside some mountain cave (so that the demons don't see her and she is not terrified at the spectacle which is about to unfold here shortly). I wish to slay all these ferocious and vicious demons today (30). I tell you on oath, don't tell her anything on this subject.'

Laxman obediently replied, 'As you please', and took Sita to a mountain cave (31).

रामः परिकरं बद्ध्वा धनुरादाय निष्ठुरम् ।
 तूणीरावक्षयशरौ बद्ध्वायतोऽभवत्प्रभुः ॥ ३२॥
 तत आगत्य रक्षांसि रामस्योपरि चिक्षिपुः ।
 आयुधानि विचित्राणि पाषाणान् पादपानपि ॥ ३३॥
 तानि चिच्छेद रामोऽपि लीलया तिलाशः क्षणात् । ततो बाणसहस्रेण हत्वा तान् सर्वराक्षसान् ॥ ३४॥
 खरं त्रिशिरसं चैव दूषणं चैव राक्षसम् । जघान प्रहरार्धेन सर्वानेव रघूत्तमः ॥ ३५॥

rāmaḥ parikaraṃ baddhvā dhanurādāya niṣṭhuraṃ । tūṇīrāvakṣayaśarau baddhvāyatto'bhavatprabhuḥ ॥ 32॥
 tata āgatya rakṣāṃsi rāmasypari cikṣipuḥ । āyudhāni vicitrāṇi pāṣāṇān pādapānapi ॥ 33॥ tāni ciccheda rāmo'pi līlayā tilāśaḥ kṣaṇāt । tato bāṇasahasreṇa hatvā tān sarvarākṣasān ॥ 34॥ kharaṃ trīśirasam caiva dūṣaṇam caiva rākṣasam । jaghāna praharārdhena sarvāneva raghūttamaḥ ॥ 35॥

32-35. Then Sri Ram tied his waist-cloth (i.e. readied himself to face his enemies, the attacking demons), took the stern, merciless and formidable hard bow and two quivers full of arrows that never ended in their numbers (because once shot they would come back to the shooter as they were magically charged for such occasions), and became ready for battle. [This bow and quivers were given to him by sage Agastya. Refer: Adhyatma Ramyan, Aranya Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 45-46.] (32).

Then the demons came there and began to shower various weapons and armaments, stones, boulders and trees on Sri Ram (33).

Sri Ram sliced and battered those weapons into minute pieces in a moment as if by magic (or by using a mysterious power). After that, having killed those demons by shooting thousands of arrows (34), the Lord also slayed Khar, Dushan and Trishira. In this manner, the most exalted Raghu (Sri Ram) slayed all those demons in 'half a Prahar' (or 1½ hours). [1 Prahar = 3 hours.] (35).

लक्ष्मणोऽपि गुहामध्यात्सीतामादाय राघवे ।
 समर्प्य राक्षसान् दृष्ट्वा हतान् विस्मयमाययौ ॥ ३६॥
 सीता रामं समातिङ्ग्य प्रसन्नमुखपङ्कजा ।

शस्त्रवृणानि चाङ्गेषु ममार्जं जनकात्मजा ॥ ३७॥ lakṣmaṇo'pi guhāmadhyātsītāmādāya rāghave । samarpya rākṣasān dr̥ṣṭvā hatān vismayamāyayau ॥ 36॥ sītā rāmaṃ samāliṅgya prasannamukhapaṅkajā । śastravraṇāni cāṅgeṣu mamārja janakātmajā ॥ 37॥

36-37. Then Laxman brought Sita out of the cave and handed her over to Sri Ram. At that time, he (Laxman) was very astonished on seeing all the dead demons (36).

Janak's daughter Sita embraced her husband with a most delighted face and moved her hands (affectionately and with divine healing powers) on the wounds inflicted on his body by the arms used by the demons to attack him (37).

सापि दुद्राव दृष्ट्वा तान् हतान् राक्षसपुङ्गवान् ।
लङ्कां गत्वा सभामध्ये क्रोशन्ती पादसन्निधौ ॥ ३८॥
रावणस्य पपातोर्व्या भगिनी तस्य राक्षसः ।
दृष्ट्वा तां रावणः प्रह भगिनीं भयविह्वलाम् ॥ ३९॥

sāpi dudrāva dr̥ṣṭvā tān hatān rākṣasapuṅgavān । laṅkāṃ gatvā sabhāmadhye krośantī pādasannidhau ॥ 38॥ rāvaṇasya papātorvyāṃ bhaginī tasya rakṣasaḥ ।
dr̥ṣṭvā tāṃ rāvaṇaḥ prāha bhaginīm bhayavihvalām ॥ 39॥

38-39. Seeing all those demons, who were among the best in their clan, dead, Supernakha, the sister of demon king Ravana, rushed to Lanka and fell on the ground at his feet, weeping and wailing miserably. Seeing his sister so terrified and utterly in a state of extreme distress, Ravana was perplexed; he enquired of her (38-39)—

उत्तिष्ठोत्तिष्ठ वत्से त्वं विरूपकरणं तव ।
कृतं शक्रेण वा भद्रे यमेन वरुणेन वा ॥ ४०॥
कुबेरेणाथवा ब्रूहि भस्मीकुर्या क्षणेन तम् । राक्षसी तमुवाचेदं त्वं प्रमत्तो विमूढधीः ॥ ४१॥

uttiṣṭhottiṣṭha vatse tvam virūpakaraṇam tava । kṛtam śakreṇa vā bhadre yamena varuṇena vā ॥ 40॥ kubereṇāthavā brūhi bhasmīkuryāṃ kṣaṇena tam । rākṣasī tamuvācedam tvam pramatto vimūḍhadhīḥ ॥ 41॥

40-41. 'Oh daughter, get up (uttiṣṭhottiṣṭha vatse). Do tell me who has dared to deform you? Oh gentle and honourable lady! Is this the work of Indra (king of Gods), or who among Yam (God of death), Varun (God of water) (40), or Kuber (God's treasurer) has done it? Tell me, I shall reduce him to ashes in a moment.'

Then the demoness replied (strongly admonishing Ravana and rebuking him), ‘You are very indulgent, haughty and a foolish block-head (41).

पानासक्तः स्त्रीविजितः षण्ढः सर्वत्र लक्ष्यसे ।
 चारचक्षुर्विहीनस्त्वं कथं राजा भविष्यसि ॥ ४२॥
 खरश्च निहतः सङ्ख्ये दूषणस्त्रिशिरस्तथा । चतुर्दश सहस्राणि राक्षसानां महात्मनाम् ॥ ४३॥
 निहतानि क्षणेनैव रामेणासुरशत्रुणा ।
 जनस्थानमशेषेण मुनीनां निर्भयं कृतम् । न जानासि विमूढस्त्वमत एव मयोव्यते ॥ ४४॥ pānāsaktaḥ strīvijitaḥ ṣaṇḍhaḥ sarvatra lakṣyase । cāracakṣurvihīnastvaṃ kathaṃ rājā bhaviṣyasi ॥ 42॥ kharaśca nihataḥ saṅkhye dūṣaṇastriśirāstathā । caturdaśa sahasrāṇi rākṣasānāṃ mahātmanām ॥ 43॥ nihatāni kṣaṇenaiva rāmeṇāsuraśatruṇā । janasthānamaśeṣeṇa munīnāṃ nirbhayaṃ kṛtam । na jānāsi vimūḍhastvamata eva mayocyate ॥ 44॥

42-44. You are a drunkard; you are infatuated with and dominated by women (you are a womaniser), and you appear impotent in all matters. You do not have the so-called four eyes that a prudent king must possess (in the form of spies and informers, as well as good and fearless advisors, besides having personal sense of wisdom and prudence)—then, how (i.e. for how long) can you remain a king? (42).

Khar has been killed in the battle while Dushan and Trishira along with fourteen thousand of the best of the demon army (43) have been killed by the one who is an enemy of demons, that is Sri Ram, in an instant. The whole inhabited area (of the forest) has been liberated from demons and made freely accessible and habitable for the hermits and sages by him. In spite of such a havoc taking place in your realm, you are still unaware of it. That is why I say you are a total blockhead and a complete idiot.’ (44).

रावण उवाच
 को वा रामः किमर्थं वा कथं तेनासुरा हताः । सम्यक्कथय मे तेषां मूलघातं करोम्यहम् ॥ ४५॥

rāvaṇa uvāca
 ko vā rāmaḥ kimarthaṃ vā kathaṃ tenāsura hatāḥ । samyakkathaya me teṣāṃ mūlaghātaṃ karomyaham ॥ 45॥

45. Ravana retorted, ‘Oh, tell me who that Ram is? Why and how has he killed those demons? Tell me everything in detail; I will pierce (spike, chop off, eliminate) the root cause of it all.’ (45).

शूर्पणखोवाच

जनस्थानादहं याता कदाचित् गौतमीतटे ।
तत्र पञ्चवटी नाम पुरा मुनिजनाश्रया ॥ ४६॥
तत्राश्रमे मया दृष्टो रामो राजीवलोचनः ।
धनुर्बाणधरः श्रीमान् जटावल्कलमण्डितः ॥ ४७॥
कनीयाननुजस्तस्य लक्ष्मणोऽपि तथाविधः ।
तस्य भार्या विशालाक्षी रूपिणी श्रीरिवापरा ॥ ४८॥

śūrpaṅakhovāca

janasthānādahaṃ yātā kadācit gautamītaṭe । tatra pañcavaṭī nāma purā munijanāśrayā ॥ 46॥ tatrāśrame mayā dr̥ṣṭo rāmo rājīvalocanaḥ । dhanurbāṇadharaḥ śrīmān jaṭāvālkalamaṇḍitaḥ ॥ 47॥ kanīyānanujastasya lakṣmaṇo'pi tathāvidhaḥ । tasya bhāryā viśālākṣī rūpiṇī śrīrivāparā ॥ 48॥

46-48. Supernakha said indignantly, 'One day I was going from my usual habitat to the banks of river Gomti where there is an ancient hermitage inhabited by hermits, ascetics and sages. The place is called Panchvati (46).

In that hermitage I saw Sri Ram the lotus-eyed one, who was attired in matted hairs and clothes made from bark of trees (birch), holding a bow and arrow, and who is a treasury of beauty (47).

His younger brother is as beautiful, handsome, charming and attractive as Sri Ram, and his broad-eyed wife is also comparable to goddess Laxmi herself in beauty and charm (48).

देवगन्धर्वनागानां मनुष्याणां तथाविधा ।

न दृष्टा न श्रुता राजन् द्योतयन्ती वनं शुभा ॥ ४९॥
आनेतुमहमुद्युक्ता तां भार्यार्थं तवानघ ।
लक्ष्मणो नाम तद्भ्राता चिच्छेद मम नासिकाम् ॥ ५०॥
कर्णो च नोदितस्तेन रामेण स महाबलः । ततोऽहमतिदुःखेन रुदती खरमन्वगाम् ॥ ५१॥ devagandharvanāgānāṃ manuṣyāṅāṃ tathāvidhā । na dr̥ṣṭā na śrutā rājan dyotayantī vanaṃ śubhā ॥ 49॥ ānetumahamudyuktā tāṃ bhāryārthaṃ tavānagha । lakṣmaṇo nāma tadbhrātā ciccheda mama nāsikām ॥ 50॥ karṇau ca noditastena rāmeṇa sa mahābalaḥ । tato'hamatidukhena rudatī kharamanvagām ॥ 51॥

49-51. Oh king! Among the Gods, Gandharvas (celestial musicians), Naags (legendary serpents who rule the subterranean world and have near-human forms) and humans etc.—a woman as beautiful and enchanting as that lady has never been ever heard of or seen anywhere among them. That auspicious and virtuous lady illuminates the whole forest by her beauty, radiance and glow (49).

Oh Anagh (one who is sinless, faultless and immaculate; one who is honourable and respectable)¹! I had tried to bring her here to make her your wife, at which attempt of mine, Sri Ram's brother Laxman had chopped off my nose (50).

And then (not satisfied by that, and to add insult to injury), at the behest of Sri Ram, the most strong Laxman disfigured me by cutting off my ears too. Then I went away, gravely lamenting and weeping distressfully to report the developments to Khar (my brother) (51).²

[Note—¹It is easy to see how cunning and deceitful Supernakha was. Earlier she had heaped all sorts of insults on her brother Ravana (verse 42-44), and now she flatters him by calling him “Anagh”, i.e. one who is excellent and without faults.

²It should be noted how falsehood has been used by Supernakha to instigate and incite Ravana. This, along with Manthar's instigation of Kaikeyi at Ayodhya that resulted in Lord Ram being sent to fourteen years in exile in the forest, are but two outstanding examples of how misinformation or distortion of facts can subvert the mind of even the most wise persons and cause horrible consequences. The moral is to verify the facts first hand before jumping to conclusions, and more dangerously, to act upon these twisted, self-serving, spiced-up bits of information without due application of mind.]

सोऽपि रामं समासाद्य युद्धं राक्षसयूथपैः ।
 अतः क्षणेन रामेण तेनैव बलशालिना ॥ ५२॥
 सर्वे तेन विनष्टा वै राक्षसा भीमविक्रमाः ।
 यदि रामो मनः कुर्यात्त्रैलोक्यं निमिषार्धतः ॥ ५३॥
 भस्मीकुर्यान्न सन्देह इति भाति मम प्रभो । यदि सा तव भार्या स्यात्सफलं तव जीवितम् ॥ ५४॥

so'pi rāmaṃ samāsādya yuddhaṃ rākṣasayūthapaiḥ । ataḥ kṣaṇena rāmeṇa tenaiva balaśālinā ॥ 52॥ sarve tena vinaṣṭā vai rākṣasā bhīmavikramāḥ । yadi rāmo manaḥ kuryātrailokyaṃ nimiṣārdhataḥ ॥ 53॥ bhasmīkuryānna sandeha iti bhāti mama prabho । yadi sā tava bhāryā syātsaphalaṃ tava jīvitam ॥ 54॥

52-54. He (Khar) immediately went with his demon commanders (Dushan and Trishira) and took up battle with Sri Ram but that valourous one (52) destroyed the huge, invincible and always victorious demons in a flash (i.e. in a short while). It appears to me that if Sri Ram firmly decides, he can turn the Triloki (the three worlds) (53) into ashes in a second. But, by the way, if his woman (Sita) becomes your wife, then your life will be deemed to be rewarded and fortunate (i.e. you will be very lucky to have Sita as your wife) (54).

अतो यतस्व राजेन्द्र यथा ते वल्लभा भवेत् ।
सीता राजीवपत्राक्षी सर्वलोकैकसुन्दरी ॥ ५५॥
साक्षाद्रामस्य पुरतः स्थातुं त्वं न क्षमः प्रभो ।
मायया मोहयित्वा तु प्राप्स्यसे तां स्यूतमम् ॥ ५६॥

ato yatasva rājendra yathā te vallabhā bhavet । sītā rājīvapatrākṣī sarvalokaikasundarī ॥ 55॥ sākṣādrāmasya purataḥ sthātum tvam na kṣamaḥ prabho । māyayā mohayitvā tu prāpsyase tāṃ raghūttamam ॥ 56॥

55-56. Hence, oh King of kings (Rajendra)! Make an effort so that Sita, who is lotus-eyed and the only beauty in the whole world, becomes dearest to your heart (i.e. your dear wife) (55).

Oh Lord! You cannot stand physically in front of him (i.e. you are no match to Sri Ram's strength). So, in order to accomplish this task, you will have to adopt some clever means tactfully to divert his attention in order to get her (Sita).' (56).

श्रुत्वा तत्सूक्तवाक्यैश्च दानमानादिभिस्तथा ।
आश्वस्य भगिनीं राजा प्रविवेश स्वकं गृहम् ।
तत्र चिन्तापरो भूत्वा निद्रां रात्रौ न लब्धवान् ॥ ५७॥

śrutvā tatsūktavākyaīśca dānamānādibhistathā ।
āśvāsya bhaginīm rājā praviveśa svakaṃ gṛham ।
tatra cintāparo bhūtvā nidrāṃ rātrau na labdhavān ॥ 57॥

57. Hearing all this, the demon king Ravana honoured his sister (Supernakha) with pleasant and sweet words, and tried to console her by giving gifts. After reassuring her of his full support and sympathy, he went to his royal palace. But he was so confounded and perturbed by the developments that he could not sleep even for a moment that night; the flow of worrying ideas and the spectre of ghosts of ruin and calamity caused immense mental disturbance to him (57).

एकेन रामेण कथं मनुष्यमात्रेण नष्टः सबलः खरो मे ।
भ्राता कथं मे बलवीर्यदर्पयुतो विनष्टो बत राघवेण ॥ ५८॥

ekena rāmeṇa katham manuṣyamātreṇa naṣṭaḥ sabalaḥ kharo me ।
bhrātā katham me balavīryadarpayuto vinaṣṭo bata rāghaveṇa ॥ 58॥

58. During the night he pondered over the matter and debated to himself, 'It is very surprising and strange occurrence that a lonely, ordinary human born in Raghu's clan, Sri Ram, can ever slay my brother Khar, who was endowed with immense strength, valour and bravery, along with his ace army (58).

यद्वा न रामो मनुजः परेशो मां हन्तुकामः सबलं बलौघैः ।
सम्प्रार्थितोऽयं द्रुहिणेन पूर्वं मनुष्यरूपोऽद्य रघोः कुलेऽभूत् ॥ ५९॥

yadvā na rāmo manujaḥ pareśo māṃ hantukāmaḥ sabalaṃ balaughaiḥ । samprārthito'yaṃ druhiṇena pūrvaṃ manuṣyarūpo'dya raghoḥ kule'bhūt ॥ 59॥

59. Or else it appears that he is the personification of Parmatma (the Supreme Soul) himself who has, on the prayers of Brahma in some previous time, has incarnated (manifested) himself in a human form in king Raghu's clan of Ayodhya (as Sri Ram) to kill me, along with my army and kinsmen, by employing an army of monkeys for the purpose (59).

वध्यो यदि स्यां परमात्मनाहं वैकुण्ठराज्यं परिपालयेऽहम् ।
नो चेदिदं राक्षसराज्यमेव भोक्ष्ये चिरं राममतो व्रजामि ॥ ६०॥

vadhyo yadi syāṃ paramātmanāhaṃ vaikunṭharājyaṃ paripālaye'ham ।
no cediḍaṃ rākṣasarājyameva bhokṣye ciraṃ rāmamato vrajāmi ॥ 60॥

60. If I am indeed killed by Parmatma (supreme Lord) himself than surely enough I shall enjoy the kingdom of heaven, otherwise I will be enjoying the kingdom (or kingdom) of the demons for a long time to come. I stand to gain both the ways. Therefore, I will certainly go to (i.e. have a face-off with) Sri Ram.' (60).

इत्थं विचिन्त्याखिलराक्षसेन्द्रो रामं विदित्वा परमेश्वरं हरिम् ।
विरोधबुद्ध्यैव हरिं प्रयामि द्रुतं न भक्त्या भगवान् प्रसीदेत् ॥ ६१॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामयणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे अरण्यकाण्डे पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥ ५॥ itthaṃ vicintyākṣhilarākṣasendro rāmaṃ viditvā parameśvaraṃ harim । virodhabuddhyaiva hariṃ prayāmi drutaṃ na bhaktyā bhagavān prasīdet ॥ 61॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmayaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde
araṇyakāṇḍe pañcamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 5॥

61. Ravana, who was a king of the whole demon race, contemplated over the matter thus and realising (coming to the conclusion) that Sri Ram was the real, true personification of Parmatma Sri Hari (Vishnu) himself, he decided that he will attain (go near) the Lord even with enmity, ill-will and maliciousness because for him to do it (i.e. approach Sri Ram) with Bhakti and other noble pursuits such as righteousness and spiritualism, is very difficult and the Lord cannot be easily pleased with him by the latter method of Bhakti (because he is so sinful that he is not fit to do it properly, it is not his cup of tea) (61)¹.

[Note—¹In Canto 7, verse no. 65 herein below we will read that Ravana had showed great respect to Sita in the way he kept her safely in his garden. This proves that though outwardly Ravana had played his role as a ferocious and vicious tyrant, a demon who was ruthless, cruel and belligerent, but internally he was at peace with himself, sure in the conviction that finally, his redemption, emancipation and salvation was at hand, and that too in a manner befitting his mental temperament and tendencies of a demon who loves to fight and show no mercy on anyone, who is overtly sinful and pervert, and who knows not how to worship God in the proper manner in which the Lord ought to be worshipped in accordance with the sanction of the scriptures.

To wit, the deliverance for which mystics, ascetics, sages, hermits, seers, saints had to do so much austerities and penances was available to him virtually on a platter without the incumbent sufferings and hardships. Further, the Lord is attainable by honest and sincere confession, and not by deception, and Ravana wins the game hands down on this count—for he was very sincere in his heart when he decided to take away Sita and directly confront Lord Ram as he was sure that it was the only means left to him by which he can finally attain redemption for his tormented soul which was crying for deliverance from the evil body of a demon in which it was unfortunately trapped due to some misadventure of the past, which was now history and could not be changed, but what could be changed was the future course that the soul was free to decide for itself as its preferred destiny.]

Thus ends Canto 5 of Adhyatma Ramayan narrating the conversation between Lord Mahesh (Shiva) and Uma (his consort Parvati).

(b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 6 (Ravana approaches the demon Marich to ask him to become a decoy deer so that Sita can be abducted):-

॥ षष्ठः सर्गः ॥

विचिन्त्यैवं निशायां स प्रभाते रथमास्थितः ।

शवणो मनसा कार्यमेकं निश्चित्य बुद्धिमान् ॥ १॥

ययौ मारीचसदनं परं पारमुदन्वतः ।

मारीचस्तत्र मुनिवज्जटावल्कलधारकः ॥ २॥

ध्यायन् हृदि परात्मानं निर्गुणं गुणभासकम् ।

समाधिविरमेऽपश्यद्रावणं गृहमागतम् ॥ ३॥

॥ ṣaṣṭhaḥ sargaḥ ॥

vicintyaivaṃ niśāyāṃ sa prabhāte rathamāsthitaḥ ।

rāvaṇo manasā kāryamekaṃ niścītya buddhimān ॥ 1॥

yayau māricasadanam param pāramudanvataḥ । māricastatra munivajjaṭāvālkaladhāraḥ ॥ 2॥ dhyāyan hṛdi parātmānaṃ nirguṇaṃ guṇabhāsakam ।

samādhivirame'paśyadrāvaṇaṃ gṛhamāgatam ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva continued with his narration and said—‘Oh Parvati! Making up his mind during the night, when the day broke, the wise Ravana boarded a chariot and having decided on a course of action (1), he went to the residence of Marich on the other shore of the ocean. There, Marich, attired like a hermit with matted lock of hairs and clothes made of birch (2), was contemplating on the Nirgun God (i.e. the Lord who is without attributes, is formless and all-pervading) who illuminates (i.e. pervades uniformly in the whole of) Nature. When he woke up from his contemplative, meditative posture, he found Ravana standing in front of him in his dwelling (3).

द्रुतमुत्थाय चालिङ्ग्य पूजयित्वा यथाविधि ।
 कृतातिथ्यं सुखासीनं मारीचो वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ४॥
 समागमनमेतते रथेनैकेन रावण ।
 चिन्तापर इवाभासि हृदि कार्यं विचिन्तयन् ॥ ५॥
 ब्रूहि मे न हि गोप्यं चेत्करवाणि तव प्रियम् ।
 न्यास्यं चेद्ब्रूहि राजेन्द्र वृजिनं मां स्पृशेन्न हि ॥ ६॥ drutamutthāya cālīṅgya pūjayitvā yathāvidhi । kṛtātithyaṃ sukhāsīnaṃ mārīco vākyaṃ abravīt ॥ 4॥ samāgamanametatte rathenaikena rāvaṇa । cintāpara ivābhāsi hṛdi kāryaṃ vicintayan ॥ 5॥ brūhi me na hi gopyaṃ cetkaravāṇi tava priyam । nyāyāyaṃ cedbrūhi rājendra vṛjinaṃ māṃ spṛṣenna hi ॥ 6॥

4-6. When Marich saw Ravana, he hastily stood up, embraced him, duly welcomed and worshipped him in the traditional way as a honoured guest (by offering oblations, refreshments etc.), and when Ravana was comfortably seated, Marich asked (4), ‘Oh Ravana! You have come with a single chariot (alone) and your mind appears to be deeply disturbed and worried on some subject (5). If it is not a secret (which you do not want to divulge to me, then) do tell me about it. Oh King of kings! If I do not have to commit a sin and if it is righteous, proper and in accordance with the law, then tell me, I shall surely do that work for you which is dear to you (i.e., the work which you want me to do, and for which purpose you have come here).’ (6).

रावण उवाच
 अस्ति राजा दशरथः साकेताधिपतिः किल ।
 रामनामा सुतस्तस्य ज्येष्ठः सत्यपराक्रमः ॥ ७॥
 विवासयामास सुतं वनं वनजनप्रियम् ।
 भार्यया सहितं भ्रात्रा लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितम् ॥ ८॥
 स आस्ते विपिने घोरे पञ्चवट्याश्रमे शुभे । तस्य भार्या विशालाक्षी सीता लोकविमोहिनी ॥ ९॥

rāvaṇa uvāca

asti rājā daśarathaḥ sāketādhipatiḥ kila । rāmanāmā sutastasya jyeṣṭhaḥ satyaparākramaḥ ॥ 7॥ vivāsayāmāsa sutaṃ vanaṃ vanajanapriyam । bhāryayā sahitaṃ bhrātrā lakṣmaṇena samanvitam ॥ 8॥ sa āste vipine ghore pañcavaṭyāśrame śubhe । tasya bhāryā viśālākṣī sītā lokavimohinī ॥ 9॥

7-9. Ravana replied, 'It is said that king Dasrath is the ruler of Ayodhya, and his eldest son is the right-earnest and victorious one called Ram (7).

Dasrath has sent that son, who is dear to the hermit and sages, to the forest along with his wife and younger brother Laxman (8).

Presently, he stays in the Panchvati hermitage in the dense, wild forest called Dandkaranya. I've heard that his wife, the broad-eyed Sita, is able to charm and enchant the whole of the three worlds (i.e. the three divisions of the world) by her bewitching beauty (9).

रामो निरपराधान्मे राक्षसान् भीमविक्रमान् ।
 खरं च हत्वा विपिने सुखमास्तेऽतिनिर्भयः ॥ १०॥
 भगिन्याः शूर्पणखाया निर्दोषायाश्च नासिकाम् । कर्णो चिच्छेद दुष्टात्मा वने तिष्ठति निर्भयः ॥ ११॥ rāmo niraparādhānme rākṣasān bhīmavikramān । kharaṃ ca hatvā vipine sukhamāste'tinirbhayaḥ ॥ 10॥ bhaginyāḥ śūrpaṇakhāyā nirdoṣāyāśca nāsikām । karṇau ciccheda duṣṭātmā vane tiṣṭhati nirbhayaḥ ॥ 11॥

10-11. That Ram has killed my demon warriors who were brave, valiant, mighty and innocent, and unfortunately that includes my brother Khar. He (Sri Ram) stays in that forest happily and fearlessly (as if he has no fear of me and my demon warriors, and this sort of encourages others who live there, such as the sages and hermits whom I have till now managed to subdue, to show their disrespect to me and my forces, something intolerable for me, as this undermines my authority and makes me look ridiculous) (10).

My sister Supernakha had also not committed any misconduct and was innocent. She had not done any harm or caused any offence to him, but that rascal cut-off her nose and ears, and now fearlessly lives in that forest unchallenged (11)¹.

[Note—¹The reader must note how facts have been distorted. Ravana claims that Supernakha was not guilty of any misconduct—which is contrary to facts.]

अतस्त्वया सहायेन गत्वा तत्प्राणवत्लभाम् । आनयिष्यामि विपिने रहिते राघवेण ताम् ॥ १२॥
 त्वं तु मायामृगो भूत्वा ह्याश्रमादपनेष्यसि । रामं च लक्ष्मणं चैव तदा सीतां हराम्यहम् ॥ १३॥ atastvayā sahāyena gatvā tatprāṇavallabhām । ānayaṣyāmi vipine rahite rāghaveṇa tām ॥ 12॥ tvaṃ tu māyāmr̥go bhūtvā hyāsramādapanesyasi । rāmaṃ ca lakṣmaṇaṃ caiva tadā sītāṃ harāmyaham ॥ 13॥

12-13. Hence, by your help, I intend to bring his dearest wife Sita when Sri Ram is not in that forest (12).

You should become a decoy deer and take Sri Ram and Laxman far away from the hermitage on some pretext. Just at that opportune time, I shall steal (kidnap) Sita (sītāṃ harāmyaham) (13).

त्वं तु तावत्सहायं मे कृत्वा स्थास्यसि पूर्ववत् ।
 इत्येवं भाषमाणं तं रावणं वीक्ष्य विस्मितः ॥ १४॥
 केनेदमुपदिष्टं ते मूलघातकरं वचः ।
 स एव शत्रुर्वध्यश्च यस्त्वन्नाशं प्रतीक्षते ॥ १५॥

tvaṃ tu tāvatsahāyaṃ me kṛtvā sthāsyasi pūrvavat । ityevaṃ bhāṣamaṇaṃ taṃ rāvaṇaṃ vīkṣya vismitaḥ ॥ 14॥ kenedamupadiṣṭaṃ te mūlaghātakaraṃ vacaḥ । sa eva śatrurvadyaśca yastvannāśaṃ pratīkṣate ॥ 15॥

14-15. In this manner, after helping me in my job, you can come back to your residence here as before.'

Hearing Ravana make this preposterous proposal, Marich was stunned with astonishment. He said (14), 'Oh Ravana! Who has told (advised) you this thing which is completely devastating and ruinous for you? Anyone who wants to destroy you in this manner (using this plan as a bait to lure you in the trap of self destruction), surely he is your enemy and worthy of being killed (i.e. punished by you). [To wit, anyone, whosoever he or she may be, who has given you this mad idea is without doubt your greatest enemy; beware. You are inviting your own ruin by lending your mind to such mischievous and ridiculous thoughts that pretend nothing but destruction.] (15).

रामस्य पौरुषं स्मृत्वा चित्तमद्यापि रावण ।
 बालोऽपि मां कौशिकस्य यज्ञसंरक्षणाय सः ॥ १६॥
 आगतस्त्विषुणैकेन पातयामास सागरे ।
 योजनानां शतं रामस्तदादि भयविह्वलः ॥ १७॥
 स्मृत्वा स्मृत्वा तदेवाहं रामं पश्यामि सर्वतः ॥ १८॥ rāmasya pauruṣaṃ smṛtvā cittamadyāpi rāvaṇa । bālo'pi māṃ kauśikasya yajñasaṃrakṣaṇāya saḥ ॥ 16॥ āgatastviṣuṇaikena pātayāmāsa sāgare । yojanānāṃ śataṃ rāmastadādi bhayavihvalaḥ ॥ 17॥

smṛtvā smṛtvā tadevāhaṃ rāmaṃ paśyāmi sarvataḥ ॥ 18॥

16-18. Oh Ravana when I remember the valour of Sri Ram's adolescent days—when he had come to protect the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra (16), and (when I had tried to interfere) he had thrown me (i.e. flung me) by a single arrow to a distance of 100 Yojans (appx. 800 miles) on the shore of an ocean—ever since that time, I remain terrified (17).

That incident keeps on recurring in my memory, and I imagine (visualise) Sri Ram everywhere¹.

[¹It appears to be a case of traumatic hallucination from which Marich suffered. He was so traumatized by the shock of the arrow striking him so hard that it flung him for 800 miles that ever since that moment he lived in constant fear of those horrifying moments. Whenever he recalled those turbulent moments, he had goosebumps and shivered as if a fever was coming up. His psyche was so much affected by this singular event that he found it hard to forget Lord Ram; but at the same time he thanked the Lord also for sparing his life by shooting him with a harmless arrow that instead of snuffing life out of him merely flung him away from the battle-field.] (18)

दण्डकेऽपि पुनरप्यहं वने पूर्ववैरमनुचिन्तयन् हृदि ।
तीक्ष्णशृङ्गमृगरूपमेकदा मादृशैर्बहुभिरावृतोऽभययाम् ॥ १९॥
राघवं जनकजासमन्वितं लक्ष्मणेन सहितं त्वरान्वितः । आगतोऽहमथ हन्तुमुद्यतो मां विलोक्य शरमेकमक्षिपत् ॥ २०॥ daṇḍake'pi punarapyahaṃ vane pūrvavairamanucintayan hṛdi । tīkṣṇaśṛṅgarūpamekadā mādr̥śairbahubhirāvṛto'bhyayām ॥ 19॥ rāghavaṃ janakajāsamānvitaṃ lakṣmaṇena sahitaṃ tvarānvitaḥ । āgato'hamatha hantumudyato māṃ vilokya śaramekamakṣipat ॥ 20॥

19-20. One day, remembering my old enmity with him, I went to the Dandkaranya forest disguised as a deer with sharp horns and mixed myself with other such deer (to conceal my true identity) (19).

When I hastily moved forward with the intention to kill Raghav (Sri Ram), along with the daughter of Janak (Sita) and Laxman, he had shot a single arrow at me when he saw me (20).

तेन विद्धहृदयोऽहमुद्भ्रमन् राक्षसेन्द्र पतितोऽस्मि सागरे ।
तत्प्रभृत्यहमिदं समाश्रितः स्थानमूर्जितमिदं भयार्दितः ॥ २१॥ tena viddhahṛdayo'hamudbhraman rākṣasendra patito'smi sāgare । tatprabhṛtyahamidaṃ samāśritaḥ sthānamūrjitamidaṃ bhayārditaḥ ॥ 21॥

21. Oh king of demons! I was pierced by it and I spun in the sky before falling in the ocean. I am so scared and terrified since then that I live in this place which makes me feel fearless and comfortable (because it is secluded and far away from Sri Ram) (21).

राममेव सततं विभावये भीतभीत इव भोगराशितः । राजरत्नरमणीरथादिकं श्रोत्रयोर्यदि गतं भयं भवेत् ॥ २२॥

rāmameva satataṃ vibhāvaye bhītabhīta iva bhogarāśitaḥ । rājaratnaramaṇīrathādikaṃ śrotrayoryadi gataṃ bhayaṃ bhavet ॥ 22॥

22. When any word starting with the letter ‘Ra’, such as Raj—kingdom, Ratna—gems and jewels, Ramani—a lustful woman, and Rath—a chariot, fall in my ears, I get terribly scared (remembering ‘Ram’ whose name also starts with this letter “Ra”) so much so that I remain sore terrified of even thinking of anything of comfort and pleasure (represented by the above four entities). The effect on my psyche is so profound that I always keep on remembering ‘Ram’, though it is out of fear more than out of any endearment for the Lord (22).

राम आगत इहेतिशङ्कया बाह्यकार्यमपि सर्वमत्यजम् ।
निद्रया परिवृतो यदा स्वपे राममेव मनसानुचिन्तयन् ॥ २३॥

rāma āgata ihetiśaṅkayā bāhyakāryamapi sarvamatyajam । nidrayā parivṛto yadā svape rāmameva manasānucintayan ॥ 23॥

23. Scared stiff by the apprehension that Sri Ram might come here also, I have forsaken all outside work (and remain holed up inside my safe haven). When I sleep during the night, I keep on remembering Sri Ram (even in my dreams) (23).

स्वप्नदृष्टिगतराघवं तदा बोधितो विगतनिद्र आस्थितः । तद्भवानपि विमुच्य चाग्रहं राघवं प्रति गृहं प्रयाहि भोः ॥ २४॥ svapnadṛṣṭigatarāghavaṃ tadā bodhito vigatanidra āsthitaḥ । tadbhavānapi vimucya cāgrhaṃ rāghavaṃ prati gṛhaṃ prayāhi bhoḥ ॥ 24॥

24. In this manner while seeing Raghav (Sri Ram) in my dreams, when I wake up from my sleep, I am unable to forget him. Hence, oh Ravana, you too should abandon your stubbornness with respect to Sri Ram, and dropping the matter here you would do good to go back home (24).

रक्ष राक्षसकुलं चिरागतं तत्स्मृतौ सकलमेव नश्यति ।
तव हितं वदतो मम भाषितं परिगृहाण परात्मनि राघवे ।
त्यज विशेषमतिं भज भक्तितः परमकारुणिको रघुनन्दनः ॥ २५॥

अहमशेषमिदं मुनिवाक्यतः अशृणवमादियुगे परमेश्वरः ।
 ब्रह्मणार्थित उवाच तं हरिः किं तवेप्सितमहं करवाणि तत् ॥ २६॥
 ब्रह्मणोक्तमरविन्दलोचन त्वं प्रयाहि भुवि मानुषं वपुः । दशरथात्मजभावमञ्जसा जहि रिपुं दशकन्धरं हरे ॥ २७॥ rakṣa rākṣasakulaṃ cirāgataṃ tatsmṛtau sakalameva naśyati । tava hitaṃ vadato mama bhāṣitaṃ parigrhāṇa parātmani rāghave । tyaja virodhamatiṃ bhaja bhaktitaḥ paramakāruṇiko raghunandanaḥ ॥ 25॥ ahamaśeṣamidaṃ munivākyataḥ aśṛṇavamādiyuge parameśvaraḥ । brahmaṇārthita uvāca taṃ hariḥ kiṃ tavepsitamahaṃ karavāṇi tat ॥ 26॥ brahmaṇoktamaravindalocana tvam prayāhi bhuvi mānuṣaṃ vapuḥ । daśarathātmajabhāvamañjasā jahi ripuṃ daśakandharaṃ hare ॥ 27॥

25-27. In this way you will be able to protect your ancient demon race from total destruction. Everything is ruined if one remembers him (Lord Ram) with enmity and malice. Pay heed to what I say, for it is for your own welfare's sake and meant for your well-being. You must abandon your animosity (inimical and confrontational predisposition) with Raghav (Sri Ram) (25), and worship and adore him with devotion and dedication because Raghunandan (Sri Ram) is very merciful and compassionate. I have heard all these things from the mouth of sages and hermits that during the Satyug (the 1st of the four era celestial cycle) the Parmeshwar (the supreme Lord) (26) Sri Hari (Vishnu) had asked Brahma, when the latter had prayed to the former, to tell him what his desire was and it shall be fulfilled. Then Brahma had replied, 'Oh the lotus-eyed one! Manifest yourself soon on the earth as a human being in the form of Dasrath's son Ram and slay Ravana who has become inimical to the Gods.' (27).

अतो न मानुषो रामः साक्षान्नारायणोऽव्ययः ।
 मायामानुषवेषेण वनं यातोऽतिनिर्भयः ॥ २८॥
 भूभारहरणार्थाय गच्छ तात गृहं सुखम् । श्रुत्वा मायीचवचनं रावणः प्रत्यभाषत ॥ २९॥ ato na mānuṣo rāmaḥ sāksānnārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ । māyāmānuṣaveṣeṇa vanaṃ yāto'tinirbhayaḥ ॥ 28॥ bhūbhāraharaṇārthāya gaccha tāta grhaṃ sukham । śrutvā māricavacanam rāvaṇaḥ pratyabhāṣata ॥ 29॥

28-29. Hence, you must believe me, Sri Ram is not an ordinary human. He is the truthful personification of the indefinable, attributeless, limitless, imperishable entity Sri Narayan himself. He has assumed a human form to remove the burden of the earth and has, therefore, come to the forest fearlessly (with this purpose in mind). Hence, oh dear, you should stop procrastinating any further and remove all doubts from your mind; and you should return home cheerfully.'

Hearing these words of sane advice given by Marich, Ravana however became extremely peeved and exasperated (because he regarded this as a lecture given by an old man who is terrified of death and whose capricious mind does not allow him to think coherently). So Ravana answered Marich (and gave his reasons as to why he is so determined to confront Sri Ram) as follows – (28-29)

परमात्मा यदा रामः प्रार्थितो ब्रह्मणा किल ।
मां हन्तुं मानुषो भूत्वा यत्नादिह समागतः ॥ ३०॥
करिष्यत्यचिरादेव सत्यसङ्कल्प ईश्वरः । अतोऽहं यत्नतः सीतामानेष्याम्येव राघवात् ॥ ३१॥ paramātmā yadā rāmaḥ prārthito brahmaṇā kila । māṃ hantum mānuṣo bhūtvā yatnādiha samāgataḥ ॥ 30॥ kariṣyatyacirādeva satyasaṅkalpa īśvaraḥ । ato'haṃ yatnataḥ sītāmāneṣyāmyeva rāghavāt ॥ 31॥

30-31. 'If Parmatma (the Supreme Soul or the Supreme Lord of the world) has indeed come himself in the form of Sri Ram by assuming a human body on the express prayers of Brahma to kill me, then he is sure to do it soon, because the Lord God is true to his words (and if this is the case then there is no escaping it for me). Therefore, I will definitely make efforts to bring Sita away from Raghav (Sri Ram), as soon as I can (30-31).

वधे प्राप्ते रणे वीर प्राप्स्यामि परमं पदम् ।
यद्वा रामं रणे हत्वा सीतां प्राप्स्यामि निर्भयः ॥ ३२॥
तदुत्तिष्ठ महाभाग विवित्मृगरूपधृक् ।
रामं सलक्ष्मणं शीघ्रमाश्रमादतिदूरतः ॥ ३३॥
आक्रम्य गच्छ त्वं शीघ्रं सुखं तिष्ठ यथा पुरा । अतः परं चेद्यत्किञ्चिद्भाषसे मद्विभीषणम् ॥ ३४॥
हनिष्याम्यसिनानेन त्वामत्रैव न संशयः ।
मारीचस्तद्वचः श्रुत्वा स्वात्मन्येवान्वचिन्तयत् ॥ ३५॥

vadhe prāpte raṇe vīra prāpsyāmi paramaṃ padam । yadvā rāmaṃ raṇe hatvā sītāṃ prāpsyāmi nirbhayaḥ ॥ 32॥ taduttiṣṭha mahābhāga vicitramṛgarūpadhṛk । rāmaṃ salakṣmaṇaṃ śīghramāśramādatidūrataḥ ॥ 33॥ ākramya gaccha tvam śīghraṃ sukhaṃ tiṣṭha yathā purā । ataḥ paraṃ cedyatkiñcidbhāṣase madvibhīṣaṇam ॥ 34॥ haniṣyāmyasinānena tvāmatraiva na saṃśayaḥ । māricastadvacaḥ śrutvā svātmanyevānvacintayat ॥ 35॥

32-35. Oh the brave one (Marich)! If I am killed at his (Ram's) hands in battle, I shall attain the highest stature that a creature can expect to attain for himself, and on the contrary if I am able to kill (subdue) Sri Ram in the battle-field, then I shall get Sita (as a trophy) without any fear or chances of mischief later (for the simple reason that I would have vanquished her husband and claim my right over her as a trophy of battle won) (32).

Hence, oh the most lucky and fortunate one (mahābhāga)¹, get up immediately, assume the form of a strange deer, and take Sri Ram and Laxman far away from the hermitage very soon (33), and then (when my mission has been accomplished) you can return back to your hermitage and live happily as you have been doing now. If, however, you try to scare me off by saying anything more (34) then be certain that I shall kill you here instantly with this sword.'

Hearing his threatening words, Marich thought to himself that he has very little choice left for himself (35)—

[Note—¹Why has Ravana called Marich “mahābhāga”? Well, Marich had escaped death in the first instance, then he had been meditating on Lord Ram for a long time by constantly remembering the Lord's holy name, and now he is getting another chance to meet the Lord and get killed so that his soul finds freedom from his demonic body and attains final deliverance and emancipation. Say, what more would a living being wish for if salvation is finally at hand? Ravana himself wished for such an auspicious end for his own self, so he was surely honest and right in calling Marich very fortunate and lucky one.]

यदि मां राघवो हन्यात्तदा मुक्तो भवार्णवात् ।
मां हन्याद्यदि चेदुष्टस्तदा मे निरयो ध्रुवम् ॥ ३६॥
इति निश्चित्य मरणं रामादुत्थाय वेगतः ।
अब्रवीद्रावणं राजन् करोम्याज्ञां तव प्रभो ॥ ३७॥

yadi māṃ rāghavo hanyāttadā mukto bhavārṇavāt । māṃ hanyādyadi cedduṣṭastadā me nirayo dhruvam ॥ 36॥ iti niścitya maraṇaṃ rāmādutthāya vegataḥ । abravidrāvaṇaṃ rājan karomyājñāṃ tava prabho ॥ 37॥

36-37. [Marich thought to himself—] ‘If I am killed at that hands of Raghav (Sri Ram), then I shall be able to cross this ocean representing the gross, deluding mundane world of transmigration. But if this wicked rascal (Ravana) kills me, then I shall have to fall in hell.’ (36).

In this situation, Marich decided, as a matter of choice, that it would be wiser for him to get killed at the hands of Sri Ram; so he got up hastily and said to Ravana, ‘Oh king! Oh Lord! I shall obey your orders.’ (37).

इत्युक्त्वा स्थमास्थाय गतो रामाश्रमं प्रीति ।
शुद्धजाम्बूनदप्रख्यो मृगोऽभूद्रौप्यबिन्दुकः ॥ ३८॥
रत्नशृङ्गो मणिस्तुरो नीलरत्नविलोचनः ।

विद्युत्प्रभो विमुग्धास्यो विचचार वनान्तरे ॥ ३९॥ रमाश्रमपदस्यान्ते सीतादृष्टिपथे चरन् ॥ ४०॥ ityuktvā rathamāsthāya gato rāmāśramam prati । śuddhajāmbūnadaprakhyo mrgo'bhūdraupyabindukah ॥ 38॥ ratnaśṛṅgo maṅikhuro nīlaratnavilocanaḥ । vidyutprabho vimugdhāsyo vicacāra vanāntare ॥ 39॥ rāmāśramapadasyānte sītādr̥ṣṭipathe caran ॥ 40॥

38-40. Saying this, Marich boarded the chariot (with Ravana), and came to Sri Ram's hermitage (at Panchvati). There, he assumed the form of a strange and beautiful deer with silvery spots on a pure golden skin (38).

Its horns were gem-studded, the hooves were embedded with jewels, and its eyes were like a blue sapphire. In this way, that strange and majestic deer with an electric-like dazzle and fascinating countenance began roaming (39) near the hermitage of Sri Ram, within the sight of Sita (to ensure that she sees the deer) (40).

क्षणं च धावत्यवतिष्ठते क्षणं समीपमागत्य पुनर्भयावृतः ।
एवं स मायामृगवेषरूपधृक् चचार सीतां परिमोहयन् खलः ॥ ४१॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामयणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे अरण्यकाण्डे षष्ठः सर्गः ॥ ६॥ kṣaṇam ca dhāvatyavatiṣṭhate kṣaṇam samīpamāgatya punarbhayāvṛtaḥ । evaṃ sa māyāmṛgaveṣarūpadhr̥k cacāra sītāṃ parimohayan khalaḥ ॥ 41॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmayaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde
araṇyakāṇḍe ṣaṣṭhaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 6॥

41. In one moment he pranced and bounced playfully and in another he came and stood motionless, and again he ran away as if out of fear. In this manner, that imposter (Marich) assumed a deceitful form of a decoy deer and roamed about playfully trying to attract Sita's attention (41).

[Note—Both Ravana and Marich knew very well that Sri Ram was not an ordinary prince as is very evident by verse nos. 30-36. So, it was a conscious decision on their part to create wilful enmity with the Lord as a means of their liberation from the body of a demon, and attain emancipation and salvation for their respective souls.]

Thus ends Canto 6 narrating the conversation between Lord Mahesh (Shiva) and Uma (his divine consort Parvati).

(c) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7 (Slaying of Marich, who was disguised as a deer, by Lord Ram, and abduction of Sita by Ravana):-

॥ सप्तमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

अथ रामोऽपि तत्सर्वं ज्ञात्वा रावणचेष्टितम् ।
 उवाच सीतामेकान्ते शृणु जानकि मे वचः ॥ १॥
 रावणो भिक्षुरूपेण आगमिष्यति तेऽन्तिकम् ।
 त्वं तु छायां त्वदाकारं स्थापयित्वा तजे विश ॥ २॥
 अग्नावदृश्यरूपेण वर्षं तिष्ठ ममाज्ञया ।
 रावणस्य वधान्ते मां पूर्ववत्प्राप्स्यसे शुभे ॥ ३॥

॥ saptamaḥ sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca

atha rāmo'pi tatsarvaṃ jñātvā rāvaṇaceṣṭitam । uvāca sītāmekānte śṛṇu jānaki me vacaḥ ॥ 1॥ rāvaṇo bhikṣurūpeṇa āgamiṣyati te'ntikam । tvaṃ tu chāyāṃ tvadākārāṃ sthāpayitvoṭaje viśa ॥ 2॥ agnāvadrīśyarūpeṇa varṣaṃ tiṣṭha mamājñayā । rāvaṇasya vadhānte mām pūrvavatprāpsyase śubhe ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva continued with his narrative—‘Oh Parvati! Here, becoming aware of all the conspiracies of Ravana, Sri Ram advised Sita when they were alone, ‘Oh Sita! Listen to what I have to tell you (1).

Oh the auspicious one! Ravana will come to you disguised as a mendicant. Hence, by my orders, you must enter the holy fire leaving behind your look-alike shadow in this hut, and stay there in the fire in an invisible form for one year. After that, after the killing of Ravana, you shall get back to me once again.¹ (2-3).

[Note—¹This establishes that the period of Sita's separation from Sri Ram was for one year. Further, it was she, in an invisible, intangible form, in her capacity as the all-powerful, dynamic, all-engulfing infinite energy residing in the fire that, when ignited by Hanuman at Lanka, was responsible for the devastation of the city.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.]

श्रुत्वा रामोदितं वाक्यं सापि तत् तथाकरोत् । मायासीतां बहिः स्थाप्य स्वयमन्तर्दधेऽनले ॥ ४॥
 मायासीता तदाऽपश्यन्मृगं मायाविनिर्मितम् ।
 हसन्ती राममभ्येत्य प्रोवाच विनयान्विता ॥ ५॥
 पश्य राम मृगं चित्रं कानकं रत्नभूषितम् ।
 विचित्रबिन्दुभिर्युक्तं चरन्तमकुतोभयम् । बद्ध्वा देहि मम क्रीडामृगो भवतु सुन्दरः ॥ ६॥ śrutvā rāmoditaṃ vākyaṃ sāpi tatra tathākarot । māyāsītāṃ bahiḥ sthāpya svayamantardadhe'nale ॥ 4॥ māyāsītā tadā'paśyanmṛgaṃ māyāvinirmitam । hasantī rāmamabhyetya provāca vinayānvitā ॥ 5॥ paśya rāma mṛgaṃ citraṃ kānakaṃ ratnabhūṣitam । vicitrabindubhiryuktaṃ carantamakutobhayam । baddhvā dehi mama krīḍāmṛgo bhavatu sundaraḥ ॥ 6॥

4-6. Hearing these words of Sri Ram, Sita did as she was told. She became invisible in fire, leaving behind a shadowy Sita (4). Then that Maya-Sita (illusionary Sita) saw (i.e. was attracted to) that Maya-deer (i.e. an illusionary deer), came to Sri Ram and smilingly, politely said to him (5), ---

‘Oh Sri Ram! Look at this golden deer which is adorned by gems and jewels. Ah! What marvelous spots are there on his body and how fearlessly it is wandering and frolicking here! Oh Lord! Tie it and bring it to me; let it be my playmate.’ (6).

[Note—(i) Not until the time Maya-Sita had made her appearance, the deer could not succeed in its attempts to attract the ‘original Sita’. The lesson drawn is that ‘Maya attracts Maya’. If we are free from Maya, this delusionary, imaginary and artificial world will automatically lose its charm and sheen for us.

(ii) Sita had not asked Sri Ram to kill the deer as is widely believed, but only asked him to bring it alive.]

तथेति धनुरादाय गच्छन् लक्ष्मणमब्रवीत् । रक्ष त्वमतियत्नेन सीतां मत्प्राणवल्लभाम् ॥ ७॥
 मायिनः सन्ति विपिने रक्षसा घोरदर्शनाः ।
 अतोऽत्रावहितः साध्वीं रक्ष सीतामनिन्दिताम् ॥ ८॥
 लक्ष्मणो राममाहेदं देवायं मृगरूपधृक् । मारीचोऽत्र न सन्देह एवम्भूतो मृगः कुतः ॥ ९॥ tatheti dhanurādāya gacchan lakṣmaṇamabravīt । rakṣa tvamatiyatnena sītāṃ matprāṇavallabhām ॥ 7॥ māyinaḥ santi vipine rākṣasā ghoradarśanāḥ । ato'trāvahitaḥ sādhvīm rakṣa sītāmaninditām ॥ 8॥ lakṣmaṇo rāmamāhedam devāyaṃ mṛgarūpadhṛk । mārico'tra na sandeha evambhūto mṛgaḥ kutaḥ ॥ 9॥

7-9. Then he (Sri Ram) said ‘alright’, picked up his bow, and said to Laxman while departing, ‘Oh Laxman! You must make all efforts to protect my dearest Sita (7).

Most ferocious, vicious, illusive and deceptive demons are roaming in the forest. Hence, you should be very alert and careful in protecting the faultless and holy Sita.’ (8).

Then Laxman replied to Sri Ram, ‘Oh Lord! This is Marich who is disguised as a deer, there is no doubt about it, because such a strange deer in the entire existence is non-existent?’ (9).

[Note—Laxman was aware that this is ploy by Marich because he had had the experience of him trying to kill them previously in the form of a deer—see Canto 6, verse nos. 19-21.]

श्रीराम उवाच

यदि मारीच एवायं तदा हन्मि न संशयः ।

मृगश्चेदानयिष्यामि सीताविश्रमहेतवे ॥ १०॥

गमिष्यामि मृगं बद्ध्वा ह्यानयिष्यामि सत्वरः ।

त्वं प्रयत्नेन सन्तिष्ठ सीतासंरक्षणोद्यतः ॥ ११॥

śrīrāma uvāca

yadi mārica evāyaṃ tadā hanmi na saṃśayaḥ ।

mṛgaścedānayiṣyāmi sītāviśramahetave ॥ 10॥

gamiṣyāmi mṛgaṃ baddhvā hyānayiṣyāmi satvaraḥ ।

tvam prayatnena santiṣṭha sītāsaṃrakṣaṇodyataḥ ॥ 11॥

10-11. Sri Ram replied, ‘If he is indeed Marich then there is no doubt that I shall kill him. And if he is an ordinary deer, I shall bring him to please Sita (10).

I shall swiftly go and soon tie this deer and bring it here. Meanwhile, you should be alert, keep a vigilant eye and protect Sita.’ (11).

इत्युक्त्वा प्रययौ रामो मायामृगमनुद्रुतः ।

माया यदाश्रया लोकमोहिनी जगदाकृतिः ॥ १२॥

निर्विकारश्चिदात्मापि पूर्णोऽपि मृगमन्वगात् ।

भक्तानुकम्पी भगवानिति सत्यं वचो हरिः ॥ १३॥ ityuktvā prayayau rāmo māyāmṛgamanudrutah ।

māyā yadāśrayā lokamohinī jagadākṛtiḥ ॥ 12॥

nirvikāraścidātmāpi pūrṇo'pi mṛgamanvagāt ।

bhaktānukampī bhagavāniti satyaṃ vaco hariḥ ॥ 13॥

12-13. [What a wonder that—] The Maya which embodies (or symbolises) the universal delusion-creating power of the Lord that enchants and captivates the whole world and even the great gods by its fascinating, maverick and powerful spell, which is itself dependent on and obedient to Sri Ram, the Supreme Being—that same person (Sri Ram) ran behind pursuing a ‘Maya-deer’ (i.e. a deer which was as deceptive and illusionary as the Maya which has created it) (12).

In spite of being faultless, eternal, measureless, pure consciousness and blissful supreme Soul as well as all-pervading, omnipresent, self sufficient and complete Lord—he rushed behind that deer. This goes to prove the truth of the statement that ‘Lord Hari is very dear, merciful, compassionate, munificent and benevolent to his devotees’ (13).

[Note—How? Because it was the desire of Marich to get killed at the hands of Sri Ram and it was the wish of Ravana that Marich should take Sri Ram far away from the dwelling so that he can abduct Sita. Despite the fact that Sri Ram knew that he will have to suffer a lot of hardship due to this single incident, he had allowed it to happen. That is why he is called a ‘Bhakta Vatsala’ as above. See Canto 6, verse nos. 36-37 also.]

कर्तुं सीताप्रियार्थाय जानन्नपि मृगं ययौ ।
अन्यथा पूर्णकामस्य रामस्य विदितात्मनः ॥ १४॥
मृगेण वा स्त्रिया वापि किं कार्यं परमात्मनः ॥ १५॥ kartuṃ sītāpriyārthāya jānannapi mṛgaṃ yayau । anyathā pūrṇakāmasya rāmasya viditātmanah ॥ 14॥ mrgeṇa vā striyā vāpi kiṃ kāryaṃ paramātmanah ॥ 15॥

14-15. The omniscient Lord knew everything; inspite of that he went behind the deer pursuing it just in order to please Sita (refer verse 6 above). Otherwise, what had Sri Ram—who is fully contented, is without any wants or desires of any kind, is enlightened, self-realised and most wise (14)—had to do with a deer or a woman.

That deceptive deer appeared near the Lord for one moment and went far away from him and disappeared from sight in another moment (15).

कदाचिद् दृश्यतेऽभ्याशे क्षणं धावति लीयते ।
दृश्यते च ततो दूरदेवं राममपाहरत् ।
ततो रामोऽपि विज्ञाय राक्षसोऽयमिति स्फुटम् ॥ १६॥
विव्याध शरमादाय राक्षसं मृगरूपिणम् ।
पपात रुधिराक्तस्यो मारीचः पूर्वरूपधृक् ॥ १७॥
हा हतोऽस्मि महाबाहो त्राहि लक्ष्मण मां द्रुतम् । इत्युक्त्वा रामवद्वाचा पपात रुधिराशनः ॥ १८॥ kadācid drśyate'bhyāśe kṣaṇaṃ dhāvati liyate । drśyate ca tato dūrādevaṃ rāmamapāharat । tato rāmo'pi vijñāya rākṣaso'yamiti sphuṭam ॥ 16॥ vivyādha śaramādāya rākṣasaṃ mṛgarūpiṇam । papāta rudhirāktāsyo mārīcaḥ pūrvarūpadhṛk ॥ 17॥ hā hato'smi mahābāho trāhi lakṣmaṇa māṃ drutam । ityuktvā rāmavadvācā papāta rudhirāśanaḥ ॥ 18॥

16-18. It reappeared again at a great distance. In this manner, appearing and disappearing repeatedly, he took Sri Ram very far away. Then being certain that this is a demon, and not an ordinary deer (16), Sri Ram pierced (shot) him with a single arrow. Immediately on being shot, Marich fell on the ground, assumed his original form of a demon, with blood spilling out from his mouth (17).

That blood-drinking demon (a virtual vampire) fell to the ground, crying aloud in the voice mimicking that of Sri Ram—‘Oh brave Laxman! I am in mortal danger. Come to my aid immediately.’ (18).

यन्नामाज्ञोऽपि मरणे स्मृत्वा तत्साम्यमाप्नुयात् । किमुताग्रे हरि पश्यन्स्तेनैव निहतोऽसुरः ॥ १९॥
तद्देहादुत्थितं तेजः सर्वलोकस्य पश्यतः । राममेवाविशद्देवा विस्मयं परमं ययुः ॥ २०॥ yannāmājño'pi maraṇe smṛtvā tatsāmyamāpnuyāt । kimutāgre hariṃ paśyanstenaiva nihato'suraḥ ॥ 19॥ taddehādutthitaṃ tejaḥ sarvalokasya paśyataḥ । rāmamevāviśaddevā vismayam paramaṃ yayuḥ ॥ 20॥

19-20. Even the ignorant ones who remember him (the Lord, Sri Ram) at the time of death become one with him (i.e. they merge their soul with the supreme Soul of the Lord which is called attainment of emancipation and salvation), to die at the hands of ‘that’ Hari while looking at him (i.e., having him within sight before closing the eyes for good)—what to say of the good luck and fortunes of such a demon! [How fortunate and privileged he was, how redeemed his soul was!] (19).

The effulgence of light that represented his soul (because the ‘soul’ is self-illuminated pure Consciousness that is present in the body of all living beings, and which is also called the ‘Atma’ of the creature) emerged from his body and instantly entered Sri Ram. The Gods were very astonished and bewildered at this marvelous spectacle¹ (20).

[Note—¹Indeed they were! It's such an irony that demons such as Marich, Ravana and Kumbhakarna had their souls merging into Sri Ram at the end of their lives while the great sages, seers, hermits and mystics on this earth who claimed to be spiritually enlightened and attained ones, and their exalted counterparts the Gods in heaven who pride themselves of their elevated stature, never had this privilege. Mere boast of spirituality will not please the Lord.

Even lowly low-caste Sabari and the vulture Jatayu had their share of salvation, but exalted sages and seers who had met Lord Ram, except a few such as sage Sutikshan, remained what they were—sages and seers; none had the privilege of attaining eternal peace and beatitude for their soul, none got the reward of emancipation and salvation, none found liberation and deliverance from this gross body as none died while the Lord was in their front to ensure their final liberation from the cycle of transmigration as was the honoured case of Sabari and Jatayu as well as of the demons Marich, Ravana and Kumbhakarna.

Why were the gods astonished? They hadn't ever imagined that someone whom they had always thought was a nasty and sinful demon would have this rarest of rare privilege that his soul would be so holy and purified that it would be accepted by the Supreme Being by allowing it to merge with his own Supreme Self. The gods' astonishment itself reflects negatively on their claim of wisdom and spiritual superiority, for they had failed to remember that the soul is inherently perfect and holy, and that the Supreme Lord believes in a creature's internal feelings and thoughts rather than how he acts and behaves externally, because the Lord understands that the creature is bound by certain orders of destiny and providence that arise due to the cumulative effects of his past deeds over which the creature has no control in his present life. But if the creature is wise and prudent he would love and worship the Lord internally, at his mental and sub-conscious level, inspite of the physical compulsions of his existential circumstances in his present life, because the creature knows that the Lord has this penetrating insight to know what goes on inside someone's heart and mind, and if the Lord finds that the creature is holy from within inspite of having an evil external frame due to existential compulsions then redemption for such fortunate creature is sure to be had.]

किं कर्म कृत्वा किं प्राप्तः पातकी मुनिहिंसकः ।
 अथवा राघवस्यायं महिमा नात्र संशयः ॥ २१॥
 रामबाणेन संविद्धः पूर्वं राममनुस्मरन् । भयात्सर्वं परित्यज्य गृहवित्तादिकं च यत् ॥ २२॥

kiṃ karma kṛtvā kiṃ prāptaḥ pātakī munihimsakaḥ । athavā rāghavasyāyaṃ mahimā nātra saṃśayaḥ ॥ 21॥ rāmabāṇena saṃviddhaḥ pūrvam rāmamanusmaran । bhayātsarvaṃ parityajya gṛhavittādikaṃ ca yat ॥ 22॥

21-22. They (the Gods) said, 'This cruel demon who was a killer of hermits, had done so many sinful, unrighteous deeds and then attained such an auspicious end! Without doubt it is due to the benevolence, benediction and munificence as well as profound and majestic glory of Raghav (Sri Ram). Having been shot (pierced) by Sri Ram's arrows on two previous occasions, he had already forsaken his household and wealth out of fear, and was always engrossed (constantly involved) in remembering Sri Ram (21-22).

हृदि रामं सदा ध्यात्वा निर्धूताशेषकल्मषः ।
 अन्ते रामेण निहतः पश्यन् राममवाप सः ॥ २३॥
 द्विजो वा राक्षसो वापि पापी वा धार्मिकोऽपि वा ।
 त्यजन् कलेवरं रामं स्मृत्वा याति परं पदम् ॥ २४॥

hr̥di rāmaṃ sadā dhyātvā nirdhūtāśeṣakalmaṣaḥ । ante rāmeṇa nihataḥ paśyan rāmamavāpa saḥ ॥ 23॥ dvijo vā rākṣaso vāpi pāpī vā dhārmiko'pi vā । tyajan kalevaram rāmaṃ smṛtvā yāti param padam ॥ 24॥

23-24. By constantly remembering Sri Ram in his heart (albeit out of fear and animosity), all his sins, misdemeanours and unrighteousness were destroyed while at the end (i.e., at the time of his death) he died looking at the Lord and was killed by his hands. This is why he has attained Sri Ram (i.e. the supreme Lord) himself (23).

Those who leave their bodies (die) remembering Sri Ram—whether they are Brahmins or demons, whether they are sinful or righteous—they are sure to attain the supreme stature of being one with the Lord.’ (24).

[Note—Verse nos. 21-24 mark the praise of Gods for Marich. To their credit, they acknowledged that Marich had indeed become sinless by remembering Sri Ram. No wonder in that—all those who come in contact with the Lord do become sinless. But how many of them ‘merged’ in him? Even sage Sarbhang died looking at Sri Ram, but he went to heaven and did not merge his soul in the Lord, although he was standing in front of the former. Refer also Adhyatma Ramayan’s Aranya Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 11-12.]

इति तेऽन्योन्यमाभाष्य ततो देवा दिवं ययुः ॥ २५॥
 रामस्तत्त्वित्तयामास म्रियमाणोऽसुराधमः ।
 हा लक्ष्मणेति मद्वाक्यमनुकुर्वन्ममार किम् ।
 श्रुत्वा मद्वाक्यसदृशं वाक्यं सीतापि किं भवेत् ॥ २६॥

iti te'nyonyamābhāṣya tato devā divaṃ yayuḥ ॥ 25॥ rāmastaccintayāmāsa mriyamāṇo'surādhamah । hā lakṣmaṇeti madvākyamanukurvanmamāra kim । śrutvā madvākyasadṛśaṃ vākyaṃ sītāpi kiṃ bhavet ॥ 26॥

25-26. Saying this to each other, the Gods went to the heaven. Then Sri Ram began to ponder—why has this lowly demon died calling out ‘Oh Laxman’ in my voice? What will happen to Sita when she hears a voice like that of mine (i.e. a voice mimicking me, implying that I am in danger and need Laxman’s help) (25-26).

इति चिन्तापरीतात्मा रामो दूरान्न्यवर्तत ॥ २७॥
 सीता तद्भाषितं श्रुत्वा मारीचस्य दुरात्मनः ।
 भीतातिदुःखसंविग्ना लक्ष्मणं त्विदमब्रवीत् । गच्छ लक्ष्मण वेगेन भ्राता तेऽसुरपीडितः ॥ २८॥ iti cintāparītātmā rāmo dūrānnyavartata ॥ 27॥ sītā tadbhāṣitaṃ śrutvā māricasya durātmanah । bhītātiduḥkhasaṃvignā lakṣmaṇaṃ tvidamabravīt । gaccha lakṣmaṇa vegena bhrātā te'surapīḍitaḥ ॥ 28॥

27-28. Worrying in this way, Sri Ram started on his way back to his hermitage from a great distance. Here, Sita heard the voice of evil Marich mimicking Sri Ram (27), and becoming greatly afraid about Sri Ram's welfare and overcome by mental agitations and worries, she said to Laxman, ‘Oh Laxman! You must go immediately; your brother is in danger and is being tormented by demons (28).

हा लक्ष्मणेति वचनं भ्रातुस्ते न शृणोषि किम् ।
 तामाह लक्ष्मणो देवि रामवाक्यं न तद्भवेत् ॥ २९॥
 यः कश्चिद्राक्षसो देवि म्रियमाणोऽब्रवीद्वचः ।
 रामस्त्रैलोक्यमपि यः क्रुद्धो नाशयति क्षणात् ॥ ३०॥
 स कथं दीनवचनं भाषतेऽमरपूजितः ।
 क्रुद्धा लक्ष्मणमालोक्य सीता बाष्पविलोचना ॥ ३१॥
 प्राह लक्ष्मण दुर्बुद्धे भ्रातुर्व्यसनमिच्छसि । प्रेषितो भरतेनैव रामनाशाभिकाङ्क्षिणा ॥ ३२॥ hā lakṣmaṇeti vacanaṃ bhrātuste na śṛṇoṣi kim । tāmāha lakṣmaṇo devi rāmvākyaṃ na tadbhavet ॥ 29॥ yaḥ kaścīdrākṣaso devi mriyamāṇo'bravīdvacaḥ । rāmastrailokyamapi yaḥ kruddho nāśayati kṣaṇāt ॥ 30॥ sa kathaṃ dīnavacanaṃ bhāṣate'marapūjitaḥ । kruddhā lakṣmaṇamālokya sītā bāṣpavilocanā ॥ 31॥ prāha lakṣmaṇa durbuddhe bhrāturvyasanamicchasi । preṣito bharatenaiva rāmanāśābhikāṅkṣiṇā ॥ 32॥

29-32. Don't you hear your brother's voice calling out 'Oh Laxman'?

Laxman replied, 'Oh goddess (devi)! These words are not of Sri Ram (29). Some demon has said them while dying. Sri Ram—who can destroy the Triloki (the whole of the three worlds—subterranean, terrestrial, celestial) in an instant if he gets angry (30)—how can that (supreme, all powerful) Lord speak in such miserable, pitiful and distressed words?'

Then Sita became angry and admonished Laxman, saying with tearful eyes (31), 'Oh Laxman! Do you want to see your brother in trouble? Oh you evil minded one! It looks like Bharat—who wants the destruction of Sri Ram—has sent you (privately, surreptitiously, with some malefic intentions) (32).

मां नेतुमागतोऽसि त्वं रामनाश उपस्थिते ।
 न प्राप्स्यसे त्वं मामद्य पश्य प्राणांस्त्यजाम्यहम् ॥ ३३॥
 न जानातीदृशं रामस्त्वां भार्याहरणोद्यतम् । रामादन्यं न स्पृशामि त्वां वा भरतमेव वा ॥ ३४॥ māṃ netumāgato'si tvam rāmanāśa upasthite । na prāpsyase tvam māmadya paśya prāṇānstyajāmyaham ॥ 33॥ na jānātīdṛśaṃ rāmastvāṃ bhāryāharaṇodyatam । rāmādanyaṃ na sprśāmi tvāṃ vā bharatameva vā ॥ 34॥

33-34. Have you come to take me away after Sri Ram is somehow eliminated (killed)? But you shall not get hold of me. Look, I shall die now (33).

Sri Ram does not know that you are eager to usurp his loyal wife. I cannot touch either you or Bharat or anyone else in this world, for I know no one except Sri Ram. [To wit, I am a chaste and loyal wife of Sri Ram. So do not ever dare to cast an evil eye upon me, not you nor anyone else. Beware?]' (34).

इत्युक्त्वा वध्यमाना सा स्वबाहुभ्यां रुरोद ह ।
 तच्छ्रुत्वा लक्ष्मणः कर्णौ पिधायातीव दुःखितः ॥ ३५॥
 मामेवं भाषसे चण्डि धिक् त्वां नाशमुपैष्यसि ।
 इत्युक्त्वा वनदेवीभ्यः समर्प्य जनकात्मजाम् ॥ ३६॥
 ययौ दुःखातिसंविग्नो राममेव शनैः शनैः ।
 ततोऽन्तरं समालोक्य रावणो भिक्षुवेषधृक् ॥ ३७॥
 सीतासमीपमगमत् स्फुरदण्डकमण्डलुः ।
 सीता तमवलोक्याशु नत्वा सम्पूज्य भक्तितः ॥ ३८॥
 कन्दमूलफलादीनि दत्त्वा स्वागतमब्रवीत् ।
 मुने भुङ्क्व फलादीनि विश्रमस्व यथासुखम् ॥ ३९॥
 इदानीमेव भर्ता मे ह्यागमिष्यति ते प्रियम् । करिष्यति विशेषेण तिष्ठ त्वं यदि रोचते ॥ ४०॥

ityuktvā vadhyamānā sā svabāhubhyāṃ ruroda ha । tacchrutvā lakṣmaṇaḥ karṇau pidhāyātīva duḥkhitaḥ ॥ 35॥ māmevaṃ bhāṣase caṇḍi dhik tvāṃ nāsamupaiṣyasi । ityuktvā vanadevībhyaḥ samarpya janakātmajām ॥ 36॥ yayau duḥkhātisaṃvigno rāmameva śanaiḥ śanaiḥ । tato'ntaraṃ samālokya rāvaṇo bhikṣuveṣadhṛk ॥ 37॥ sītāsamīpamagamāt sphuraddaṇḍakamaṇḍaluḥ । sītā tamavalokyāśu natvā sampūjya bhaktitaḥ ॥ 38॥ kandamūlaphalādīni dattvā svāgatamabravīt । mune bhunṅkṣva phalādīni viśramasva yathāsukham ॥ 39॥ idānīmeva bhartā me hyāgamiṣyati te priyam । kariṣyati viśeṣeṇa tiṣṭha tvam yadi rocate ॥ 40॥

35-40. Saying this, she starting beating her chest with her hands, and wept bitterly. Hearing such reprehensive, stern, scornful and accusing words from her, Laxman was aghast and overwhelmed with anguish and anger. He closed both his ears in disgust with his hands (35).

He said disdainfully, 'Oh Chandi! ['Chandi' is an epithet for a woman in anger; it is used to show disgust at a woman who has lost all sense of prudence in her fit of anger; Chandi is a goddess of war and an embodiment of ferocity and vehemence.]

Shame to you that you say such (abhorable, reprehensible, despicable and hateful) words to me. This will cause your own destruction (ruin).'

Saying this, Laxman put her in the care of the patron deities of the forest (36), and being immensely anguished, perturbed, peeved and remorseful, he proceeded reluctantly and slowly to where Sri Ram was.

Just at that time and as was the want of destiny, seeing an opportune moment, Ravana assumed the form of a mendicant (37), complete with his staff and Kamandal (a water pot), and came to Sita. She bowed to him as soon as she saw a mendicant, worshipped him with due devotion (i.e. sincerely) (38), welcomed him by offering refreshment of edible roots, stems and fruits, and said, ‘Oh hermit! Eat these fruits etc. and make yourself comfortable (39). My husband will be coming back in a short while. If you wish, wait for some more time. He can show some greater respect to you (i.e. you will be properly worshipped and honoured by my husband; I am unable to do so properly as I have my limitations for being a woman who is expected to maintain certain decorum and civil politeness when dealing with strangers).’ (40).

[Note—Verse nos. 31-36 show the effects of anger and false accusations. But we must remember that this is not the ‘original’ Sita speaking—she has concealed herself in the fire; it is her deceptive, shadowy Maya who speaks to Laxman. The lesson to draw is that Maya forcefully leads us astray from our chosen path and duty, and it fills us with agitations and anguish, anger and frustration leading to reckless behaviour and our ruin.]

भिक्षुरुवाच

का त्वं कमलपत्राक्षि को वा भर्ता तवानग्ये ।
किमर्थमत्र ते वासो वने राक्षससेविते ।
ब्रूहि भद्रे ततः सर्वं स्ववृत्तान्तं निवेदये ॥ ४१॥

bhikṣuruvāca

kā tvaṃ kamalapatrākṣi ko vā bhartā tavānaghe । kimarthamatra te vāso vane rākṣasasevite । brūhi bhadre tataḥ sarvaṃ svavṛttāntaṃ nivedaye ॥ 41॥

41. Ravana, who was in the disguise of a mendicant, said, ‘Oh the lotus-eyed one (kamalapatrākṣi)! Who are you? Who is your husband? Oh the faultless and immaculate lady (tavānaghe)! Why do you live in this forest inhabited by demons? Oh honourable lady (bhadre)! Tell me all this, then I shall also tell you about myself.’ (41).

सीतोवाच

अयोध्याधिपतिः श्रीमान् राजा दशरथो महान् ।
तस्य ज्येष्ठः सुतो रामः सर्वलक्षणलक्षितः ॥ ४२॥
तस्याहं धर्मतः पत्नी सीता जनकनन्दिनी ।
तस्य भ्राता कनीयान्श्च लक्ष्मणो भ्रातृवत्सलः ॥ ४३॥
पितुराज्ञां पुरस्कृत्य दण्डके वस्तुमागतः । चतुर्दश समास्तां तु ज्ञातुमिच्छामि मे वद ॥ ४४॥

sītovāca

ayodhyādhipatiḥ śrīmān rājā daśaratho mahān । tasya jyeṣṭhaḥ suto rāmaḥ sarvalakṣaṇalakṣitaḥ ॥ 42॥ tasyāhaṃ dharmataḥ patnī sītā janakanandinī । tasya bhrātā kaṇīyānsca lakṣmaṇo bhrātrvatsalaḥ ॥ 43॥ piturājñāṃ puraskṛtya daṇḍake vastumāgataḥ । caturdaśa samāstvāṃ tu jñātumicchāmi me vada ॥ 44॥

42-44. Sita said—‘Oh mendicant! Sri Dasrath, the great king, was the ruler of Ayodhya. His eldest son is Sri Ram who possesses all good characters and virtues (42).

I, Sita, the daughter of Janak, am his wife. His younger brother is Laxman. He (Laxman) is very fond of his brother (Sri Ram) (43).

Sri Ram, along with us two, have come to live in the Dandkaranya forest for fourteen years on the orders of his father. Now I want to know about you. You should also tell me about yourself.’ (44).

भिक्षुरुवाच

पौलस्त्यतनयोऽहं तु यवणो रक्षसाधिपः ।
 त्वत्कामपरितप्तोऽहं त्वां नेतुं पुरमागतः ॥ ४५॥
 मुनिवेषेण रामेण किं करिष्यसि मां भज ।
 भुङ्क्ष्व भोगान् मया सार्धं त्यज दुःखं वनोद्भवम् ॥ ४६॥

bhikṣuruvāca

paulastyatanayo'haṃ tu rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ । tvatkāmaparitampto'haṃ tvāṃ netuṃ puramāgataḥ ॥ 45॥ muniveṣeṇa rāmeṇa kiṃ kariṣyasi māṃ bhaja । bhuṅkṣva bhogān mayā sārthaṃ tyaja duḥkhaṃ vanodbhavam ॥ 46॥

45-46. The mendicant replied—‘I am Ravana, the king of demons and the son of Vishrava of the Pulastya clan (or a grand son of Pulastya). I yearn to possess you; hence, I have come here to take you with me to my capital (at Lanka) (45).

What will you get (benefit) from that Ram who is attired as a hermit. Have affection and love for me, and avoid all the hardships (and sorrows, troubles and miseries) associated with the forest. Instead, enjoy various types of comforts and pleasures with me.’ (46).

श्रुत्वा तद्वचनं सीता भीता किञ्चिदुवाच तम् ।
 यद्येवं भाषसे मां त्वं नाशमेष्यसि राघवात् ॥ ४७॥
 आगमिष्यति रामोऽपि क्षणं तिष्ठ सहानुजः ।
 मां को धर्षयितुं शक्तो हरेर्भार्या शशो यथा ॥ ४८॥ śrutvā tadvacanaṃ sītā bhītā kiñciduvāca tam । yadyevaṃ bhāṣase māṃ tvāṃ nāśameṣyasi rāghavāt ॥ 47॥

āgamiṣyati rāmo'pi kṣaṇaṃ tiṣṭha sahānujaḥ । māṃ ko dharsayitum śakto harerbhāryāṃ śaśo yathā ॥ 48॥

47-48. Hearing these words of Ravana, Sita became a little scared, and said to him, 'If you say such things to me, Raghav (Sri Ram) will destroy (punish) you (47).

Just wait a little while, Sri Ram shall be coming soon with his younger brother. Who can use force with me? Is it possible that a rabbit uses force against a lioness? (48).

रामबाणैर्विभिन्नस्त्वं पतिष्यसि महीतले ॥ ४९॥
इति सीतावचः श्रुत्वा यवणः क्रोधमूर्च्छितः ।
स्वरूपं दर्शयामास महापर्वतसन्निभम् । दशास्यं विंशतिभुजं कालमेघसमद्युतिम् ॥ ५०॥

rāmabāṇairvibhinnastvaṃ patiṣyasi mahītale ॥ 49॥ iti sītāvacah śrutvā rāvaṇaḥ krodhamūrcchitaḥ । svarūpaṃ darśayāmāsa mahāparvatasannibham । daśāsyam viṃśatibhujam kālameghasamadyutim ॥ 50॥

49-50. Being pierced (shot) and torn (cut) to pieces, you'll soon sleep (lie dead) on the surface of the earth (i.e. you will die at the hands of Sri Ram).'

Hearing such (scornful, sarcastic, bold and reproachful) words of Sita, Ravana became extremely agitated with anger (49) and showed her his colossus, mountainous form which had ten heads and twenty arms, and who had the fearful visage and an awe-inspiring terrifying form resembling that of a black cloud (of dooms day) (50).

तदृष्ट्वा वनदेव्यश्च भूतानि च विततसुः ।
ततो विदार्य धरणीं नखैरुद्धृत्य बाहुभिः ॥ ५१॥
तोलयित्वा रथे क्षिप्त्वा ययौ क्षिप्रं विहायसा ।
हा राम हा लक्ष्मणेति रुदती जनकात्मजा ॥ ५२॥
भयोद्विग्नमना दीना पश्यन्ती भुवमेव सा ।
श्रुत्वा तत्क्रन्दितं दीनं सीतायाः पक्षिसतमः ॥ ५३॥
जटायुरुत्थितः शीघ्रं नगाग्रातीक्ष्णतुण्डकः ।
तिष्ठ तिष्ठेति तं प्रह को गच्छति ममाग्रतः ॥ ५४॥
मुषित्वा लोकनाथस्य भार्या शून्याद्दनालयात् । शुनको मन्तूपूतं त्वं पुरोडाशमिवाध्वरे ॥ ५५॥ tadrṣṭvā vanadevyaśca bhūtāni ca vitatrasuḥ । tato vidārya dharaṇīm nakhairuddhṛtya bāhubhiḥ ॥ 51॥ tolayitvā rathe kṣiptvā yayau kṣipram vihāyasā । hā rāma hā lakṣmaṇeti rudatī janakātmajā ॥ 52॥ bhayodvignamanā dīnā paśyantī bhuvameva sā । śrutvā tatkranditaṃ dīnaṃ sītāyāḥ pakṣisattamaḥ ॥ 53॥ jaṭāyurutthitaḥ śighraṃ nagāgrāttikṣṇatunḍakaḥ । tiṣṭha tiṣṭheti taṃ prāha ko gacchati mamāgrataḥ ॥ 54॥ muṣitvā lokanāthasya bhāryāṃ śūnyādvānālayāt । śunako mantrapūtaṃ tvam̐ puroḍāśamivādhvare ॥ 55॥

51-55. Seeing that fearful, terrible form, the patron goddesses and gods of the forest became immensely scared. [Perhaps this is the reason why the forest goddesses whom Laxman had entrusted the security of Sita did not react and tried to protect her. Refer verse no. 36.]

Then Ravana used his nails to dig and scoop-up the earth from beneath Sita, and lifted it in his hands along with her (51), put it on his chariot, and then sped away hastily through the path of the sky¹. At that time, Sita became extremely horrified and wept bitterly, wailing aloud woefully in utter distress, ‘Oh Ram, Oh Laxman!’ (52).

Sita became terribly frightened and looked pitifully and haplessly at the ground below. Hearing these loud wailings of Sita crying for help, Jatayu, the best among vultures (53), who had a sharp beak, got up from the summit of the mountain, and challenged Ravana, saying: ‘Oh you rascal, stop! Like the dog which surreptitiously takes away (steals) ‘Purodash²’ material of the fire sacrifice, who are you who is taking away the wife of the Lord of the Lokas (i.e. Sri Ram) from this lonely, dense forest right in front of me? [To wit, how dare you trespass my area of authority with such impunity; who the hell are you to kidnap someone’s wife while I am here to guard the realm? Stop instantly and answer me before you proceed.]’ (54-55).

[Note—¹Ravana had tried to rape two Apsaras or celestial damsels called Punjiksthala and Rambha, and was cursed by Brahma and Nal Kuber, son of Kuber, respectively that if he tried to force himself upon any woman against her wishes in future, his head will split in 100 pieces. This is the reason why Ravana did not touch Sita, and in order to abduct her he had scooped up the earth from underneath her feet, and planted it on his chariot just like a gardener transplants his plants from one spot in the garden to another.

²Purodash is the offering made to a sacred fire during a sacrifice. It consists of a mixture of wheat flour, rice, sugar and milk cooked together.]

इत्युक्त्वा तीक्ष्णतुण्डेन चूर्णयामास तद्रथम् ।
 वाहान् बिभेद पादाभ्यां चूर्णयामास तद्गनुः ॥ ५६॥
 ततः सीतां परित्यज्य रावणः खड्गमाददे ।
 चिच्छेद पक्षौ सामर्षः पक्षिराजस्य धीमतः ॥ ५७॥
 पपात किञ्चिच्छेषेण पूणेन भुवि पक्षिराट् । पुनरन्यस्थेनाशु सीतामादाय रावणः ॥ ५८॥ ityuktvā tīkṣṇatunḍena cūrṇayāmāsa tadratham । vāhān bibheda pādābhyāṃ cūrṇayāmāsa taddhanuḥ ॥ 56॥ tataḥ sītāṃ parityajya rāvaṇaḥ khadgamādade । ciccheda pakṣau sāmaraṣaḥ pakṣirājasya dhīmataḥ ॥ 57॥

papāta kiñciccheṣeṇa prāṇena bhuvi pakṣirāt ।

punaranyarathenāśu sītāmādāya rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 58॥

56-58. Saying this, Jatau used his sharp beaks to break his chariot to smithereens, used his claws to kill the horses and cut Ravana's bow to pieces (56).

Then Ravana left Sita aside and took out his sword, and out of frustration, cut-off the wings of Jatau (57).

With the wings chopped-off, the poor Jatau became helpless and fell to the ground almost half dead. Then Ravana put Sita in a second (reserve; back-up) chariot and sped off (58).

[Note—This verse shows that he had another standby chariot ready for contingencies. How come he had two chariots? When he has visited Marich, he had brought along two chariots—one for himself and the other for Marich. But since Marich boarded the chariot along with him—see Canto 6, verse no. 38—the other chariot was towed along for emergencies.]

क्रोशन्ती रामरामेति त्रातारं नाधिगच्छति ।

हा राम हा जगन्नाथ मां न पश्यसि दुःखिताम् ॥ ५९॥

रक्षसा नीयमानां स्वां भार्या मोचय राघव ।

हा लक्ष्मण महाभाग त्राहि मामपराधिनीम् ॥ ६०॥ krośantī rāmarāmeti trātāraṃ nādhigacchati ।

hā rāma hā jagannātha māṃ na paśyasi duḥkhitām ॥ 59॥

rakṣasā nīyamānāṃ svāṃ bhāryāṃ mocaya rāghava ।

hā lakṣmaṇa mahābhāga trāhi māmaparādhinīm ॥ 60॥

59-60. At that time, finding no one to save her, Sita repeatedly called out to Sri Ram, weeping and wailing woefully—‘Oh Sri Ram! Oh the Lord of the world! Don't you (or can't you) see this distressed and tormented me? (59).

Oh Raghav! Your wife is being taken away (forcefully) by a demon, you must liberate her. Oh the great Laxman! Protect me, who am the culprit (i.e. I am guilty of casting aspersions on you and on your character, ridiculing you and forcing you to abandon me alone in the forest. It is my fault that I am being kidnapped. That is why I call myself a culprit) (60).

वाक्शरेण हतस्त्वं मे क्षन्तुमर्हसि देवर ।

इत्येवं क्रोशमानां तां रामागमनशङ्कया ॥ ६१॥

जगाम वायुवेगेन सीतामादाय सत्वरः ॥ ६२॥

विहायसा नीयमाना सीतापश्यदधोमुखी ।

पर्वताग्रे स्थितान् पञ्च वानरान् वारिजानना ।

उत्तरीयार्धखण्डेन विमुक्त्याभरणादिकम् ॥ ६३॥

बद्ध्वा चिक्षेप रामाय कथयन्त्विति पर्वते ॥ ६४॥

ततः समुद्रमुल्लङ्घ्य लङ्कां गत्वा स रावणः ।
 स्वान्तःपुरे रहस्ये तामशोकविपिनेऽक्षिपत् ।
 राक्षसीभिः परिवृतां मातृबुद्ध्यान्वपालयत् ॥ ६५॥

vāksareṇa hatastvamaṃ me kṣantumarhasi devara । ityevaṃ krośamānām tām rāmāgamanaśaṅkayā ॥ 61॥ jagāma vāyuvegena sītāmādāya satvaraḥ ॥ 62॥ vihāyasā nīyamānā sītāpaśyadadhomukhī । parvatāgre sthitān pañca vānarān vārijānanā । uttarīyārdhakhaṇḍena vimucyābharaṇādikam ॥ 63॥ baddhvā cikṣepa rāmāya kathayantviti parvate ॥ 64॥
 tataḥ samudramullaṅghya laṅkāṃ gatvā sa rāvaṇaḥ ।
 svāntaḥpure rahasye tāmaśokavipine'kṣipat ।
 rākṣasībhiḥ parivr̥tām mātṛbuddhyānvapālayat ॥ 65॥

61-65. ‘Oh brother in law! I had accused you of having ill-intentions against me and Sri Ram (literally, shot scathing verbal acrimonious arrows at you accusing you of many things which I regret now. Refer verse nos. 31-36). So forgive me!’

Seeing Sita wailing and lamenting like this, and fearing that Sri Ram would hear her and arrive soon (61), Ravana moved speedily with great haste, as fast as the wind. In this manner, while going through the sky and looking downwards (62), the lotus-eyed Sita saw five monkeys sitting on the top of a mountain (of Rishyamuk). Seeing them, she tore off her scarf into pieces, tied her ornaments in them with knots, and threw them down one by one on the mountain with the idea that these will tell Sri Ram about her (i.e., the direction by which she was going).

Eventually, Ravana crossed the ocean and reached Lanka (63-64).

There in his palace, he placed her (Sita) in a secluded place called ‘Ashok Van’ (which was an enchanting garden inside Ravana’s royal palace). Keeping her surrounded (i.e. guarded) by demonesses, he protected her (and kept a strict vigil on her) as if she was his mother. [To wit, Ravana ensured that no one amongst the demons would unnecessarily trouble Sita. So he appointed certain female demons to guard Sita round the clock. One such demoness was Tadka, an old lady who was wise and god-fearing. By-and-by she became a close companion of Sita and used to keep her spirits high and hopes for freedom alive all through her ordeal.] (65).

[Note—(1) Sita must have thrown at least 2-3 packets down, if not more. This was to help Sri Ram identify or chart the direction in which she was flying because by drawing a straight line between any 2-3 points, it would be easy for Sri Ram to extend it to Lanka—or the general direction in which Ravana took her. It is based on simple geometry.

(2) Mentally, Ravana revered Sita as his mother, but outwardly he had to play his role in the drama of which he was a villain as much as Sri Ram played his role as a hero in spite of him knowing everything beforehand. Ravana had taken proper care of Sita with the same reverential feeling as one would have for his own mother.]

कृशाऽतिदीना परिकर्मवर्जिता दुःखेन शुष्यद्दनाऽतिविह्वला ।

हा राम रामेति विलप्यमाना सीता स्थिता राक्षसवृन्दमध्ये ॥ ६६॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामयणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे अरण्यकाण्डे सप्तमः सर्गः ॥ ७॥ krśā'tidīnā parikarmavarjitā duḥkhena śuśyadvadanā'tivihvalā । hā rāma rāmeti vilapyamānā sītā sthitā rākṣasavṛndamadhye ॥ 66॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmayaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde
araṇyakāṇḍe saptamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 7॥

66. At that place, Sita, who had become very weak, emaciated, forlorn and miserably wretched, abandoned all ornamentations. She was withered in body and was tormented (mentally). She spent her days remorsefully lamenting, saying 'Oh Ram, Oh Ram' continuously (66).

[Note—Sita was undergoing immense mental distress and abject sense hopelessness which was more devastating for her health than any physical torture. Since Ravana had revered her as his mother, the chances of any physical torture were remote. She became emaciated and weak due to mental agonies and worries. She had become a mental and physical wreck.]

Thus ends Canto 7 of Aranya Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan narrating what Lord Shiva told Parvati with respect to Sita's abduction by Ravana.

-----**-----

Section 5.2.3:

Geetawali Ramayan

{The Story of Abduction of Sita by Ravana}

'Geetawali Ramayan' is another version of the epic story of the Ramayan that was written by Goswami Tulsidas. This fascinating book is so called because its composition pattern makes it suitable as a "Book of Songs", because the word 'Geeta' means a 'song'. Its verses have been set to different Ragas of classical Indian music, and are so wonderfully penned and planned that single events of the story of the Ramayan are composed in different styles of poetic composition that conform to different Ragas so that the same episode can be sung melodiously in varying styles of classical songs.

Another salient feature of Geetawali Ramayan is that the pace of narration is slow and easy-going as they are meant to be sung in melodious tunes, and a song needs ample time and space that is unique to the individual requirements of the style in which it is composed. A song is not a narrative like that of a dry prose; it focuses on one aspect of a particular event and delves on it sufficiently long enough to make it touch the finer cords of heart and stir up relevant emotions.

Verses of Geetawali Ramayan, and even Kavitawali Ramayan that also falls in the genre of songs and poetry and forms a part of our narrative as we shall see in due course of our reading, have been used in our narration to add a new flavour and taste to the Story of Ravana; it adds to the narrative an emotional and sentimental quotient that are natural and inherent to songs and poetry, something usually lacking in prose to a great extent. It also makes the rendering of the story diverse and multifaceted as the reader can read it from different angles and different perspectives.

Another thing: the style of composition of both Geetawali and Kavitawali is such that they have a slow-motion narrative, as their verses focus on a particular event more closely, describing a single event in a number of verses composed in different poetic styles and set to different musical tunes known as 'Ragas' of classical Indian music. So when the reader reads the verses of Geetawali or Kavitawali, which have been included in the general flow of our text at intervals, it is like a rewinding of the story and re-visiting its selected episodes to read them once again in slow-motion, at an easy pace; this gives a chance to see that particular event from up close as if having a ring-side viewing of it. It adds further charm to the general reading of the story.

This said, we shall now read Geetawali Ramayan, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3-8 that describe the slaying of Marich (verse nos. 3-6), Sita's abduction by Ravana (verse no. 7), and the killing of Jatau by Ravana (verse no. 8). Now therefore we shall start reading the verses in right earnest as follows:-

मारीच-वध
राग सोरठ
(3/3)

बैठे हैं राम-लषन अरु सीता ।
पंचबटी बर परनकुटी तर, कहैं कछु कथा पुनीता ॥ 1 ॥
कपट-कुरंग कनकमनिमय लखि प्रियसों कहति हँसि बाला ।
पाए पालिबे जोग मंजु मृग, मारेहु मंजुल छाला ॥ 2 ॥
प्रिया-बचन सुनि बिहँसि प्रेमबस गवहिं चाप-सर लीन्हें ।
चल्यो भाजि, फिरि फिरि चितवत मुनिमख-रखवारे चीन्हें ॥ 3 ॥
सोहति मधुर मनोहर मूरति हेम-हरिनके पाछे ।
धावनि, नवनि, बिलोकनि, बिथकनि बसै तुलसी उर आछे ॥ 4 ॥ mārīca-vadha

rāga sōraṭha
(3/3)

baiṭhē haiṁ rāma-laṣana aru sītā.
pañcabaṭī bara paranakuṭī tara, kahaiṁ kachu kathā punītā.. 1..
kapaṭa-kuraṅga kanakamanimaya lakhi priyasōm kahati hamṣi bālā.

pā'ē pālibē jōga man̄ju mrga, mārēhu man̄jula chālā.. 2..
 priyā-bacana suni biham̄si prēmabasa gavahim̄ cāpa-sara līnhēm.
 calyō bhāji, phiri phiri citavata munimakha-rakhavārē cīnhēm.. 3.. sōhati madhura manōhara mūrati hēma-harinakē pāchē.
 dhāvani, navani, bilōkani, bithakani basai tulasī ura āchē.. 4..

The slaying of the Demon Marich-I

Verse no. 3/3—[Marich was one of the demons who had gone to disturb the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra which Lord Ram and Laxman had stood to guard. He was accompanied by another demon named Subahu, and they led a huge army of demons to attack the fire sacrifice. In the battle that ensued, Subahu was burnt to death while Marich was hit by the head-less shaft of Lord Ram's arrow which spared his life but flung him 700 Yojans (1 Yojan = appx. 8 or 16 miles depending upon different measuring scales) away to an island in the middle of the ocean where he lived hidden in utter affright of the Lord. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210.

Now it so happened that when Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman entered the deep realms of the wild forest, beyond the mountains of Vindhyaachal, they decided to tarry a while and take shelter in Panch-vati, a pleasant place surrounded by five huge banyan trees on the banks of river Godavari, to abide there for some time ere moving ahead on their wanderings in the forest. This place was the play-ground of demons and demonesses. One such female demon was Supernakha, a sister of Ravana, the king of the demon race. She was extremely lascivious and pervert as was the wont of her ilk. When she descried the handsome and well-built beauteous and charming form of Lord Ram, she was overcome with passion and wished to marry the Lord. She disguised herself as a beautiful maiden and approached Lord Ram with this absurd proposal. Obviously the Lord rejected her overtures. She became furious and lunged at Sita to kill her. Then Lord Ram signalled Laxman to snip-off her nose and ears as punishment. Bleeding and aghast, she rushed to her cousin brothers named Khar, Dushan and Tisira, asking them to take revenge. Peeved beyond measure and felt challenged, they attacked Lord Ram with a fierce army. Howbeit, they were all decimated in the battle that ensued. Stunned and flabbergasted, Supernakha rushed to Ravana to inform him of all the developments. She made a strong case for Ravana to intervene and take up arms for her, as the person who could do this to her and kill her invincible cousins surely posed a grave danger to Ravana himself. So, after due thought and council, Ravana devised a device to settle scores with Lord Ram, and to implement his plans he went to Marich and forced him, under the threat of death should he refuse to do as was told, because Marich was very reluctant to confront Lord Ram, to disguise himself as a deer with a golden hide and play around the hermitage of Lord Ram.

By and by, as was decreed by Destiny and was the fiat of Fate which only helped Lord Ram to carry out his pre-planned strategy, Sita asked the Lord to fetch the deer as she wanted to keep it as a pet to play with in the hermitage. Hereat, Lord Ram went behind Marich who was now disguised as a golden deer. Marich ran far away from the hermitage when the Lord finally shot him as he refused to be trapped. While dying, Marich lent out a shrill cry, shouting the name of Laxman at the top of his voice. When Sita heard it she felt Lord Ram was in danger and needed Laxman's help. So she forced Laxman to go to the aid of his brother, and was thus left alone in the hermitage.

Meanwhile, Ravana lay in wait for this precise moment. He came to Sita disguised as a mendicant, begging for alms. When she came out to offer something to him, he caught hold of her, and forcing her on his chariot, he took her to his capital city of Lanka and held her captive.

This entire episode is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 29 ka.

However, Marich-specific narration appears in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23—to Doha no. 27.

In Geetawali however, we come straight to the narration of the incident of the slaying of Marich, in verse nos. 3/3—3/6 herein below.]

Lord Sri Ram, Sita and Laxman are sitting inside the beautiful thatched hut in the Panchvati forest (1).

At the moment when Sita saw the deceitful deer with a golden hide that was studded with priceless gems, its skin glistening with the hue of gold, she said to her husband (Lord Ram), 'If you can trap and bring this deer alive, it is worth keeping; and even if it is killed, its hide is very beautiful (and we can use it as a seating mat).'¹ (2)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 27.]

Hearing the words of his beloved, Lord Ram lifted the bow and arrow. Seeing Lord Ram pursuing it, the deer ran away, but constantly kept glancing back (because) he could recognise Lord Ram who had protected sage Vishwamitra's sacrifice (and had thrown Marich far onto the island in the middle of the ocean with one shot of his headless arrow) (3).

The image of Lord Ram running behind a golden deer is very attractive and indescribably beautiful. The Lord's running, bending, taking aim, getting tired and resting a while, and then resuming his run to pursue the golden deer—Tulsidas says that he has permanently etched this enchanting scene in his heart² (4).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10-13 that precede Doha no. 27.]

राग कल्याण

(3/4)

कर सर-धनु, कटि रुचिर निषंग ।

प्रिया-प्रीति-प्रेरित बन-बीथिन्ह बिचरत कपट-कनक-मृग संग ॥ 1 ॥

भुज बिसाल, कमनीय कंध-उर, स्रम-सीकर सोहैं साँवरे अंग ।

मनु मुकुता मनि मरकत गिरिपर लसत ललित रबि-किरनि प्रसंग ॥ 2 ॥

नलिन नयन, सिर जटा-मुकुट, बिच सुमन-माल मनु सिव-सिर गंग ।

तुलसिदास ऐसी मूरति की बलि, छबि बिलोकि लाजै अमित अनंग ।।३।।

rāga kalyāṇa
(3/4)

kara sara-dhanu, kaṭi rucira niṣaṅga.
priyā-prīti-prērita bana-bīthinha bicarata kapaṭa-kanaka-mrga saṅga.. 1..
bhuja bisāla, kamaṇīya kandha-ura, srama-sīkara sōhairṁ sām̐varē aṅga.
manu mukutā mani marakata giripara lasata lalita rabi-kirani prasaṅga..2..
nalina nayana, sira jaṭā-mukūṭa, bica sumana-māla manu siva-sira gaṅga.
tulasidāsa aisī mūrati kī bali, chabi bilōki lājaiṁ amita anaṅga..3..

The slaying of Demon Marich-II

Verse no. 3/4—Lord Ram has a bow and arrow in his hands, and an attractive quiver tied to his waist.

Inspired by his beloved's love (or, being unable to deny her, his beloved wife Sita, what she so longingly desired), he is moving around the forest paths behind the decoy, evasive golden deer (1).

His arms are long and muscular; his shoulders and chest are pretty to behold. The sweat drops that adorn his dark complexioned body look as magnificent as pearls that embellish a mountain of Markat-mani (i.e. a mountain of emerald) when the sunlight falls upon them¹ (2).

[¹Here, the dark-complexioned body of Lord Ram is like the mountain of emerald, and the sweat drops are like the pearls that decorate its sides. Both the sweat drops as well as the pearls dazzle and shine with a twinkle when the sunlight falls upon them, while the body of the Lord glistens in the sunlight even as the smooth sides of the mountain of emerald does when the sunlight is reflected from its surface.]

The Lord's eyes are like lotuses; the head has a crown of matted hairs with a garland of flowers tucked in its folds resembling the holy river Ganges on the head of Lord Shiva. [The garland is made of white flowers, resembling the frothy and milky waters of the river.]

Tulsidas says that he has sacrificed himself on this majestic and extremely enchanting sight of the Lord (i.e. he is in thrall and totally spellbound by this astounding vision of Lord Ram) which puts to shame the image of even countless Kamdeo-cupids taken together. [To wit, a thousand Kamdeos, who is the patron god of beauty and charm, would be no match for this wonderful image of Lord Ram.] (3).

राग केदारा
(3/5)

राघव, भावति मोहि बिपिनकी बीथिन्ह धावनि ।
अरुन—कंज—बरन—चरन सोकहरन, अंकुस—कुलिस—

केतु—अंकित अवनि ॥ 1 ॥
 सुंदर स्यामल अंग, बसन पीत सुरंग, कटि निषंग
 परिकर मेरवनि ।
 कनक—कुरंग संग, साजे कर सर—चाप, राजिवनयन
 इत उत चितवनि ॥ 2 ॥
 सोहत सिर कुमुट जटा—पटल—निकर, सुमन लता
 सहित रची बनवनि ।
 तैसेई स्रम—सीकर रुचिर राजत मुख, तैसिए ललित
 भ्रुकुटिन्हकी नवनि ॥ 3 ॥
 देखत खग—निकर, मृग रवनिन्हजुत थकित बिसारि
 जहाँ—तहाँकी भँवनि ।
 हरि—दरसन—फल पयो है ग्यान बिमल, जाँचत भगति
 मुनि चाहत जवनि ॥ 4 ॥
 जिन्हके मन मगन भए हैं रस सगुन, तिन्हके लेखे
 अगुन—मुकुति कवनि ।
 श्रवन—सुख करनि, भवसरिता—तरनि, गावत तुलसिदास कीरति पवनि ॥ 5 ॥

rāga kēdārā
 (3/5)

rāghava, bhāvati mōhi bipinakī bīthinha dhāvani.
 aruna-kañja-barana-carana sōkaharana, aṅkusa-kulisa-kētu-aṅkita avani.. 1..
 sundara syāmala aṅga, basana pīta suraṅga, kaṭi niṣaṅgaparikara mēravani.
 kanaka-kuraṅga saṅga, sājē kara sara-cāpa, rājivanayana ita uta citavani.. 2.. sōhata sira kumuṭa jaṭā-paṭala-nikara, sumana latā sahita racī banavani.
 taisē'ī srama-sīkara rucira rājata mukha, taisi'e lalita bhrakuṭinhakī navani.. 3.. dēkhata khaga-nikara, mrga ravaninhajuta thakita bisāri jahām'tahām'kī bham'vani.
 hari-darasana-phala payō hai gyāna bimāla, jām'cata bhagati muni cāhata javani.. 4..
 jinhakē mana magana bha'ē haiṁ rasa saguna, tinhakē lēkhē aguna-mukuti kavani.
 śravana-sukha karani, bhavasaritā-tarani, gāvata tulasidāsa kīrati pavani.. 5..

The slaying of Demon Marich-III

Verse no. 3/5—[Tulsidas addresses Sri Ram and says—] ‘Oh Raghav (Sri Ram)! Forsooth I very much like (or am enchanted by the vision of) your running on the unpaved, rough ground of the forest (bipinakī bīthinha dhāvani), as a result of which the earth of that place is getting marked by the footprints of your holy feet which have the colour of red lotus, are the eliminator of sorrows, tribulations and agonies, and have the three auspicious sign of the Ankush (the goad), the Vajra (thunderbolt) and the Dwhaja (divine standard or flag of Vishnu) etc. marked on their soles¹ (1).

[¹Lord Vishnu has these three signs on the sole of his feet. The ‘standard’ or the flag of Vishnu symbolizes his determination to uphold the law of Dharma, i.e. the principles of righteousness, probity, propriety, nobility in thought and conduct.

Tulsidas hereby stresses that he is taking so much interest in the narration of the story of Lord Ram not because the Lord was some great prince and Tulsidas is some bard trying to please his followers and gain acclaim as a great narrator of history, but because the Lord was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, and Tulsidas has used this means of narration to remember the Lord, focus his mind on the Lord, and thereby purify himself and his inner-being, fill his heart with devotion and love for the Lord, whereat his entire being feels ecstatic and his life fulfilled, and that he has found it the best way to attain bliss and beatitude that suits him because he is unable to follow the rigours of meditation and other means of spiritual peace.]

I (Tulsidas) am enchanted by the most charming image of the Lord wearing a yellow silk cloth called the 'Pitambar' around his most beautiful dark complexioned body, the quiver and waist-cloth that are tied around the Lord's waist, his pursuing (running behind) the golden deer with a bow and arrow in hand, and his glancing quickly here and there with alert eyes (2).

Besides this, the crown of matted hairs on the Lord's head, with flowers and creepers tucked here and there in it, look extremely magnificent. Similarly, sweat drops adorn and look magnificent on the Lord's beauteous face, while the curvature of his two eyebrows are no less marvelous to behold (3).

At that time, the flock of birds and animals, both male and female, who come out to watch the Lord, become benumbed and stunned into immobility due to the awe they find themselves in when they observe the extremely enchanting, the spellbinding, the stunning and captivating beauty of Lord Ram's sight as he runs behind the golden deer.

By their good fortune they have already got (even without asking) the fruit of pure, pristine Gyan (realization of the Truth) that comes naturally as a result of having Darshan (divine, holy viewing) of the Lord². Now, as they stand still gazing at Lord Ram they appear to beg and plead with the Lord for blessing them with having selfless devotion and affection for him which is much sought after by even the sages and hermits³ (4).

²This refers to the ultimate bliss that an aspirant achieves when he realizes the Truth of the Self. These poor creatures didn't have the benefit of doing great religious practices to achieve it. But when they saw Lord Ram, the intensity of blessedness they experienced was the same that is attained by becoming self-realised. Since Lord Ram is a manifestation of the Supreme Self, the 'Parmatma', his sight was equivalent to viewing the true Self in a visible form.

³Albeit that was alright, but it was a temporary period of feeling blessed, for soon the Lord would go far away and these animals and birds would lose sight of the Lord. Likewise, it is a very difficult to retain the spiritual gains made by realization of the Self, called the path of 'Gyan', so much so even great sages and hermits come to the conclusion that it is far easier and better to follow the path of Bhakti for the Lord, i.e. the path of devotion and love. This latter path is smooth, without any cumbersome procedures, and easy to follow, and more importantly, its gains can be maintained easily for long durations. It gives eternal blessedness more easily and sustainably as compared to the path of Gyan.

So, in this imagery, Tulsidas envisages that the way these birds and animals stand transfixed gazing at Lord Ram, it appears to him that they are pleading with the Lord to bless them with Bhakti so that even after the few moments when the Lord would have gone beyond their field of vision they could still remember the Lord for all times in their lives and derive the same sense of bliss that they are getting in the present moment.]

[Lauding the glorious virtues of Bhakti as opposed to dry and abstract philosophy of obtaining Mukti, or blessedness, by pursuing the path of Gyan, Tulsidas makes the following observation—] Those whose mind and intellect are submerged in the succulent juice-like vision of the image of the manifest form of the Lord (which in this case is the form of Lord Ram), what values (or importance, significance) do the virtues of an abstract form of salvation and emancipation have for them?

That is why, to wit, Tulsidas sings the glories and fame of Lord Ram (as a means for attaining his own blessedness, bliss and beatitude) that are holy and divine, are pleasant to the ears, and can help one cross the river symbolized by this deluding and mundane world (5).

[Note—Stanza nos. 4 and 5 lay emphasis on ‘Saguna’ form of devotion for the Lord as opposed to the ‘Nirguna’ form. The former represents the formed, physically verifiable, visible and known form of the Lord God that has attributes. The latter would be the opposite of it: i.e. it would be to worship the Lord in his macrocosmic form, a form that is invisible, attributeless, all-pervading, omnipresent.

Even as the presence of the lamp will automatically eliminate darkness, so does the presence of the Lord remove the darkness of ignorance, and in the absence of ignorance, wisdom shines through. It is like removing the dark soot or rust from the surface of a vessel to bring out the shine of brass from underneath it.

It is far more practical and better to have the lamp burning right in front and get illumination from it (Saguna) than to use a mirror to reflect the sun that is far away to get its light for the purpose of getting the same illumination (Nirguna)!

This is what Tulsidas alludes to in stanza no. 4. He has used the metaphor of birds and animals to highlight his philosophy of Bhakti vis-à-vis Gyan.]

राग सोरठ
(3/6)

रघुबर दूरि जाइ मृग मार्यो ।
लषन पुकारि, राम हरुए कहि, मरतहु बैर सँभार्यो ॥ 1 ॥
सुनहु तात ! कोउ तुम्हहि पुकारत प्राननाथकी नाई ।
कह्यो लषन, हत्या हरिन, कोपि सिय हटि पटयो बरिआई ॥ 2 ॥
बंधु बिलोकि कहत तुलसी प्रभु 'भाई ! भली न कीन्हीं । मेरे जान जानकी काहू खल छल करि हरि लीन्हीं ॥ 3 ॥

rāga sōraṭha
(3/6)

raghubara dūri jā'i mrga māryō.
laṣana pukāri, rāma haru'ē kahi, maratahu baira sam̃bhāryō.. 1..

sunahu tāta! kō'u tumhahi pukārata prānanāthakī nā'īm.
 kahyō laṣana, hatyā harina, kōpi siya haṭhi paṭhayō bari'āī.. 2..
 bandhu bilōki kahata tulasī prabhu `bhā'ī! bhalī na kīnhīm.
 mērē jāna jānakī kāhū khala chala kari hari līnhīm.. 3..

The slaying of Demon Marich-IV

Verse no. 3/6—[Lord Ram went far away pursuing the golden deer, far enough to give Ravana the chance and the freedom to abduct Sita comfortably. As has been noted above, it was a part of the greater scheme of the Lord, and he wished to make sure that this opportunity was not lost. He did not wish to make Ravana doubt whether he would be able to abduct Sita successfully or not. So he went as far away as was reasonable. Then he shot the deer, who was actually the demon Marich in disguise. The demon cried out aloud the name of Laxman and then the holy name of the Lord softly before he died. His utterance of Lord Ram's name at the final moment of his life ensured his emancipation and deliverance.

Meanwhile, when Sita heard Laxman's name being called out, she thought that the Lord was in trouble. So she persuaded Laxman to go forthwith to the aid of the Lord. This was the opportunity the wicked Ravana was waiting for. He disguised himself as a hermit and came to the hermitage from his hiding place to ask Sita for food. As soon as she came close, he caught hold of her and fled.

The Lord was on his way back after killing the deer, and so when he saw Laxman coming towards him, he knew at once that things have gone wrong, that Sita is not safe.

See introductory note to Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse no. 3/3 herein above. Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 27 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-17 that precede it.]

Lord Ram went very far away before killing the deer. The deer cried aloud 'Oh Laxman', and then softly uttered 'Oh Ram' before dying.

In this way, even while dying, he remembered his old enmity, and at the same time he ensured his salvation¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10-17 that precede Doha no. 27.

By calling out for Laxman, Marich made it appear that Lord Ram was in danger so that Laxman leaves Sita alone and rushes to help Lord Ram. This will give Ravana an opportunity to kidnap her. This will also help Marich settle squares with Ram who had shot and flung him earlier when Marich had gone to defile sage Vishwamitra fire sacrifice. By saying 'Ram' as he collapsed dying, Marich had also pronounced the Lord's holy name which is at once a provider of emancipation and salvation. The Lord's holy name liberates and delivers the soul from the cycle of transmigration and gives it permanent rest. So we see how clever Marich was—he has kept his word to Ravana that he would help him to steal Sita, he has settled his old enmity with Ram, and to cap it all he had even ensured his own Mukti, i.e. his own emancipation and deliverance simultaneously by uttering the Lord's divine name 'Ram' while dying. Definitely it is very clever of him!]

On hearing someone call out Laxman's name, Sita said to him, 'Laxman, someone is calling you in the same manner as Lord Ram would. [So, it appears that the Lord needs you. Hence, you must go immediately.]' Laxman attempted to assure her that there is nothing to worry about, for it is the deer that has been certainly killed.

At this, Sita became angry and forcefully sent Laxman away (2).²

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 28.]

Seeing Laxman coming towards him, Tulsidas' Lord Sri Ram said, 'Brother, you have not done good. In my view (i.e. I have an intuitive feeling that) some scoundrel has used deceit to abduct Sita.'³ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 30.]

सीता-हरण
(3/7)

आरत बचन कहति बैदेही ।
बिलपति भूरि बिसूरि 'दूरि गए मृग सँग परम सनेही' ॥ 1 ॥
कहे कटु बचन, रेख नाँघी मैं, तात छमा सो कीजै ।
देखि बधिक-बस राजमरालिनि, लषन लाल ! छिनि लीजै ॥ 2 ॥
बनदेवनि सिय कहन कहति यों, छल करि नीच हरी हौं ।
गोमर-कर सुरधेनु, नाथ ! ज्यौं त्यों परहाथ परी हौं ॥ 3 ॥ तुलसिदास रघुनाथ-नाम-धुनि अकनि गीध धुकि धायो ।
'पुत्रि पुत्रि! जनि डरहि, न जैहै नीचु, मीचु हौं आयो' ॥ 4 ॥

sītā-haraṇa
(3/7)

ārata bacana kahati baidēhī.
bilapati bhūri bisūri 'dūri ga'ē mrga samṅga parama sanēhī'.. 1..
kahē kaṭu bacana, rēkha nāmṅghī mairṁ, tāta chamā sō kijai.
dēkhi badhika-basa rājamarālini, laṣana lāla! chini lijai.. 2..
banadēvani siya kahana kahati yōmṁ, chala kari nīca harī haumṁ.
gōmara-kara suradhēnu, nātha! jyaumṁ tyaumṁ parahātha parī haumṁ.. 3..
tulasidāsa raghunātha-nāma-dhuni akani gīdha dhuki dhāyō.
'putri putri! jani ḍarahi, na jaihai nīcu, mīcu haumṁ āyō'.. 4..

Abduction of Sita

Verse no. 3/7— [Now it so happened that when Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman entered the deeper parts of the wild forest, beyond the mountains of Vindhyaachal, they decided to tarry a while and take shelter in Panch-vati, a pleasant place surrounded by five huge banyan trees on the banks of river Godavari, to abide there for some time ere moving ahead on their wanderings in the forest. This place was the play-ground of demons and demonesses. One such female demon was Supernakha, a sister of Ravana, the king of the demon race. She was extremely lascivious and pervert as was the wont of her ilk. When she descried the handsome and well-built beauteous and charming form of Lord Ram, she was overcome with passion and wished to marry the Lord. She disguised herself as a beautiful maiden and approached Lord Ram with this absurd proposal. Obviously the Lord rejected her overtures. She became furious and lunged at Sita to kill her. Then Lord Ram signalled Laxman to snip-off her nose and ears as punishment. Bleeding and aghast, she rushed to her cousin brothers named Khar, Dushan and Tisira, asking them to take revenge. Peeved beyond measure and felt challenged, they attacked Lord Ram with a fierce army. Howbeit, they were all decimated in the battle that ensued. Stunned and flabbergasted, Supernakha rushed to Ravana to inform him of all the developments. She made a strong case for Ravana to intervene and take up arms for her, as the person who could do this to her and kill her invincible cousins surely posed a grave danger to Ravana himself. So, after due thought and council, Ravana devised a device to settle scores with Lord Ram, and to implement his plans he went to Marich and forced him, under the threat of death should he refuse to do as was told, because Marich was very reluctant to confront Lord Ram, to disguise himself as a deer with a golden hide and play around the hermitage of Lord Ram.

By and by, as was the fiat of Fate and the decree of Destiny which only helped Lord Ram to carry out his pre-planned strategy, Sita asked the Lord to fetch the deer as she wanted to keep it as a pet to play with in the hermitage. Hereat, Lord Ram went behind Marich who was now disguised as a golden deer. Marich ran far away from the hermitage when the Lord finally shot him as he refused to be trapped. While dying, Marich lent out a shrill cry, shouting the name of Laxman at the top of his voice. When Sita heard it she felt Lord Ram was in danger and needed Laxman's help. So she forced Laxman to go to the aid of his brother, and was thus left alone in the hermitage.

Meanwhile, Ravana lay in wait for this precise moment. He came to Sita disguised as a mendicant, begging for alms. When she came out to offer something to him, he caught hold of her, and forcing her on his chariot, he took her to his capital city of Lanka and held her captive.

As Ravana was taking her away, Jatayu, the old vulture whom Lord Ram had befriended on his way, heard her wailings and lamentations, and discovering that she was Lord Ram's wife, he intervened and chased the chariot. However hard he tried to rescue Sita from the clutches of Ravana, he was no match for the ferocious and well-armed demon, who seeing no other way finally drew his sword and cut the bird's wings, at which the poor Jatayu fell on the ground mortally wounded.

This entire episode is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 29 ka.

However, the narration that specifically describes the abduction of Sita and the way she squealed pitifully like a frightened fowl sore affright when it is caught in the talons of a cruel hawk, wailing and lamenting as she was being taken by Ravana aboard his chariot, and Jatayu's intervention which is the subject matter of the present verse of Geetawali, appears in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Doha no. 28—to Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 29.

Albeit, when Ravana fled with Sita, she wailed and lamented woefully. She was filled with contrition and regretted what she did—first telling Lord Ram to go and bring the golden deer for her, and then asking Laxman to go away from the hermitage. Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3/3 and 3/6 herein above.]

Sita wailed and lamented most woefully—‘Alas! Alack! Oh my beloved Lord Ram; who knows how far has he gone pursuing the deer! [To wit, an he haply be somewhere near by, he would definitely hear my wailings, and would immediately rush to help me.] (1).

Oh dear Laxman, I said harsh words to you and crossed the line marked by you. So oh son, excuse me. And save me from this hunter (Ravana)¹ (2).’

[¹Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 28; and (b) Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse no. 3/6.

At the time of dying, Marich had let out a shrill cry, calling out the name of Laxman. When Sita heard it she thought that Lord Ram was calling, and forced Laxman to go to his brother’s aid. Laxman knew that it was not Lord Ram but Marich calling, but Sita got so angry at his reluctance to go that he decided that it was wiser for him to leave. But before going away, he had marked a circle on the ground around the boundary of the hut, activating it as a sort of shield with some mystical Mantras to protect the area of the hermitage from any danger, asking Sita not to step out of it.

But the ways of destiny and the doing of fate are so mysterious that when an accident is to occur, all wit, wisdom and precautions fail. So, when Ravana approached Sita disguised as a mendicant seeking alms, he stood at a distance from the circumference of this circle, and in order to reach him to put the alms in his begging bowl, Sita inadvertently and errantly stepped out of this protected circle. Seizing the moment, Ravana grabbed her and pulled her onto his waiting chariot as he quickly fled the sight.]

Then she said to the forest deities, ‘Please tell Lord Ram that I have been kidnapped by the vile Ravana. Oh Lord (Ram)! I am in the clutches of this rascal like a cow called ‘Surdhenu’ (or Kaam-dhenu)² is in the hands of a butcher (3).’

[²This is the cow of the gods.]

Tulsidas says that hearing Sita's pitiful cry and hearing Lord Ram's name being said by her in utter distress, the vulture king Jatau rushed forward angrily to help her rescue from the clutches of the demon.

He said, ‘Daughter! Don't be afraid! This scoundrel (Ravana) can't escape from me now; I've come disguised as his own death!’³ (4).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-11 that precede Doha no. 29.]

जटायु-वध
(3/8)

फिरत न बारहि बार प्रचार्यो ।
चपरि चोंच-चंगुल हय हति, रथ खंड खंड करि डार्यो ॥ 1 ॥
बिरथ-बिकल कियो, छीन लीन्हि सिय, घन घायनि अकुलान्यो ।

तब असि काढ़ि, काटि पर, पाँवर लै प्रभु-प्रिया परान्यो ॥ 2 ॥
 रामकाज खगराज आजु लर्यो, जियत न जानकि त्यागी ।
 तुलसिदास सुर-सिद्ध सराहत, धन्य बिहँग बड़भागी ॥ 3 ॥

jaṭāyu-vadha
 (3/8)

phirata na bārahi bāra pracāryō.
 capari cōñca-caṅgula haya hati, ratha khaṇḍa khaṇḍa kari ḍāryō.. 1..
 biratha-bikala kiyō, chīna līnhi siya, ghana ghāyani akulān'yō.
 taba asi kāḍhi, kāṭi para, pāmvara lai prabhu-priyā parān'yō.. 2..
 rāmakāja khagarāja āju laryō, jiyata na jānaki tyāgī.
 tulasidāsa sura-sid'dha sarāhata, dhan'ya bihamṅa barabhāgī.. 3..

Death of Jatau

Verse no. 3/8—[The valiant and brave Jatau attacked Ravana with all the ferocity and strength he could muster, though old age acted a severe drag on his agility and powers. A fierce fight ensued wherein Jatau managed to inflict severe deep wounds on Ravana, and at one point of time even managed to take Sita out of the chariot and keep her safe somewhere. But the poor bird was obviously no match for the muscular, powerfully built and angry Ravana who was not only stoked by vengeance which made him mad and reckless to the extreme, but was also armed to the teeth. He drew his sword and snipped off Jatau's wings. Thus incapacitated and mortally wounded, the poor Jatau fell to the ground, wailing and marveling at the way Fate and Destiny finally have their say. He groaned and continued to repeat the holy name of Lord Ram, and somehow managed to hold on to his breath, which albeit was very shallow, till the time Lord Ram and Laxman came that way in search of Sita so that he (Jatau) could convey the news to the Lord, and then make peace with his soul.

The fight between Jatau and Ravana has been described vividly in Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-22 that precede Doha no. 29.]

Jatau scolded and reproached Ravana severely, most sternly, and repeatedly, but the latter did not relent. Then Jatau swiftly attacked the horses with his beaks and claws and killed them, and broke the chariot into splinters (1).

Then he snatched Sita from Ravana's clutches, who being severely wounded and seething with anger, drew his sword and cut off the wings of the vulture, recovered Sita (from the safe hideout where Jatau had hidden her temporary), and escaped (2).

Tulsidas says that at that moment, the gods and enlightened ones praised Jatau that as long as he lived, he fought the demon valiantly and did not let him proceed with Sita. Jatau is forsooth and without gainsay extremely lucky; we hail him; glory to him! (3).

-----**-----

Part 2

Chapter 6: The Search for Sita, And her Discovery as a Captive in Lanka

Section 6.1:

Ram Charit Manas

Till this point we have read why and how Ravana abducted Sita. Now we move on to the next phase of the narrative. In this Chapter no. 6 we read that when Lord Ram returned to his hermitage and found it empty, he was sorely sad and grieved for Sita. But soon the Lord gathered his courage and resilience for which he was famous, and getting his acts together he decided resolutely to find her abductor and punish him. So the Lord set out in search of Sita. On the way he meets Jatau who dies before the Lord, and the Lord performs his last rites. Moving ahead, the Lord meets Sabari, the old tribal woman, who directs him towards Kishkindha, the monkey kingdom, with an advice that there he would meet Sugriv and other monkey warriors who will help him in his search.

By and by, Lord Ram reached the Rishyamook Mountain atop whose summit lived Sugriv lived in exile with his monkey and bear companions such as Hanuman, Jamvant etc. Here Lord Ram befriends Sugriv and restores his right over the kingdom of Kishkindha from which he was unceremoniously ousted by his elder brother Vali due to some misunderstanding between the two brothers.

In due course, a huge effort was launched to trace Sita, and hundreds and thousands of monkeys and bears were sent as messengers in all the directions. One such group consisted of Hanuman, Angad, Nal, Neel, Jamvant etc. who were chiefs of their various groups. This particular group was fortunate as it became the privileged one to ultimately trace Sita. When this group reached the shore of the mighty ocean across which was situated Lanka where Sita was held in captivity by Ravana, it met Sampati, the elder brother of Jatau, who, being a vulture, had a long sight and could see Sita seated in a garden in Lanka. He advised the group to send someone there and accomplish their mission successfully.

Hanuman was selected for this great and historical endeavour: he virtually jumped across the ocean to land at Lanka, and there he met Sita.

This part of the Story straddles three Chapters or Kandas or Cantos of Ram Charit Manas, viz. the second half of Aranya Kand, the whole of Kishkindha Kand, and the beginning of Sundar Kand.

Since our focus is on telling of the Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka, and also since we draw from multiple sources (such as Adhyatma Ramayan, Geetawali Ramayan and Kavitalawali Ramayan besides Anand Ramayan) to tell this fascinating story, we would be constrained, from a practical point, to restrict our narrative to only those parts or sections of Ram Charit Manas (and for that matter, of the other books which we quote) that have a direct bearing on the general theme of this Story.

So therefore, in order to remain focused and avoid unnecessary distraction, we will quote only that part of the Text that is relevant for our purpose, skipping the rest, as our objective here is not to present a full and comprehensive rendering of Ram Charit Manas verse-by-verse per-se, but to cite its verses selectively and skillfully so as to construct the Story of Ravana around them just like an artisan selects a variety of mosaic pieces to create a ‘big picture’ that he wants to make.

Verily, our Book is a sort of ‘bouquet of flowers’ as it draws from more than one source to tell the Story of Ravana, and it is obvious that all the flowers in the garden cannot be accommodated in the limited space of a single bouquet. This practical constraint compels us to be selective, for it is essential and crucial for the successful completion of the project of writing this Book. However, all necessary verses will be included.

Section 6.1.1: Lord Ram begins his search for Sita:

After slaying Marich, Lord Ram was on his way back to his hermitage when he met Laxman on the way. The Lord immediately perceived that there was something gravely wrong, and he was proved right because he found the hermitage empty upon his return; Sita was not there.

Initially he was extremely shocked and felt forlorn and hopeless, but soon he gathered courage and regained his quintessential power of resilience and being steadfast in the face of the gravest of adversities; so overcoming initial distress and dismay at the sudden misfortune that had come to haunt him, the Lord launched his search for Sita with a firm determination.

This part of the story appears in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-17 that precede Doha no. 30.

चौ०. रघुपति अनुजहि आवत देखी । बाहिज चिंता कीन्हि बिसेषी ॥ १ ॥
जनकसुता परिहरिहु अकेली । आयहु तात बचन मम पेली ॥ २ ॥
निसिचर निकर फिरहिं बन माहीं । मम मन सीता आश्रम नाहीं ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

raghupati anujahi āvata dēkhī. bāhija cintā kīnhi bisēṣī. 1.
janakasutā pariharihu akēlī. āyahu tāta bacana mama pēlī. 2.
niscara nikara phirahim bana māhīm. mama mana sitā āśrama nāhīm. 3.

When Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram) saw his younger brother Laxman coming to him (in spite of his instructions not to leave Sita alone in the wild forest infested with demons), he appeared to be flabbergasted and very worried, but this was only an external show of consternation and annoyance (bāhija cintā kīnhi bisēṣī). (1)

Expressing his concern to Laxman, Lord Ram said to him, ‘My dear; you left Sita alone. You had disobeyed my orders and come here. (2)

Hordes of demons roam around freely in the wild forest¹; I have an intuitive feeling that Sita is not in the hermitage. (3)

[Note—¹Externally Lord Ram appeared to be annoyed that Laxman had disobeyed him by leaving Sita alone, and this may be dangerous for her as the forest was full of evil creatures who would be lurking in the dark and waiting for the first chance to cause harm. The Lord however was well aware of what must have happened as all the developments were pre-planned by him in advance, and though he pretended to be annoyed that Laxman left Sita alone but actually he felt happy that things were going according to the master plan, for otherwise it would have been quite difficult for him to find an excuse to get rid of the cruel and sinful demons.

In this context, refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 6, 8-9 that precedes Doha no. 27 which expressly endorse these observations.]

गहि पद कमल अनुज कर जोरी । कहेउ नाथ कछु मोहि न खोरी ॥ ४ ॥
 अनुज समेत गए प्रभु तहवाँ । गोदावरि तट आश्रम जहवाँ ॥ ५ ॥ आश्रम देखि जानकी हीना । भए बिकल जस प्राकृत दीना ॥ ६ ॥

gahi pada kamala anuja kara jōrī. kahē'u nātha kachū mōhi na khōrī. 4.
 anuja samēta ga'e prabhu tahavām̃. gōdāvāri taṭa āśrama jahavām̃. 5.
 āśrama dēkhi jānakī hīnā. bha'e bikala jasa prākṛta dīnā. 6.

The Lord's younger brother (Laxman) fell at the feet of the Lord and pleaded that there was no fault on his part (as he was compelled by Sita to leave her and come to where Lord Ram was). Laxman said, 'Oh Lord, I have not erred willingly at all (for I was compelled to come here by Sita herself who raised a tantrum to force me to leave her against my wishes)¹.' (4)

Lord Ram went with his brother to the banks of river Godavari where he had his hermitage. (5)

Finding the hermitage empty and Sita missing from there, the Lord felt extremely distressed and dismayed like an ordinary man would be in this situation. (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 28.]

हा गुन खानि जानकी सीता । रूप सील ब्रत नेम पुनीता ॥ ७ ॥ लछिमन समुझाए बहु भाँती । पूछत चले लता तरु पाँती ॥ ८ ॥ hā guna khāni jānakī sītā. rūpa sīla brata nēma punītā. 7.

 lachimana samujhā'e bahu bhāntī. pūchata calē latā taru pām̃tī. 8.

Lord Ram wailed and lamented like an ordinary man who is extremely perturbed and afflicted; he grieved thus: 'Oh Janki (Sita; the daughter of king Janak) who is an abode of all good virtues. Oh Sita who is perfect and excellent in beauty and manners, is steady in upholding the vows of righteousness and probity, and steadfast in observing all the rules of good conduct and goodness in general. [“What has happened to you; where have you gone; why did you leave me?”] (7)

Laxman consoled the Lord in various ways and did his best to uplift his sagging spirits and repair the Lord’s broken heart in the best way possible in the prevailing situation (like a faithful and true friend and companion should in times of distress and misfortune that befalls a person).

The Lord recovered himself soon, and began his search for Sita. He moved along the forest path, asking creepers, trees and leaves about the whereabouts of Sita¹. (8)

[Note—Lord Ram was so sad, so distressed and so overwhelmed by grief that he asked anything that came his way about Sita. At that time it appeared that he has lost all common sense and mental bearing in his desperation to find where Sita had gone by asking even inanimate trees, creepers and leaves about her though it is obvious that these things can’t hear or speak.

Why did the Lord do it? It is because he had to play to perfection his role of a person whose dear wife has been lost. Further, Laxman was kept in the dark about the Lord’s plan to get Sita abducted by Ravana as a prelude to eliminating the demons. So he did not wish to let anyone doubt that Sita’s abduction was known to him, and he was unaffected by it. That would not fit into his role of a human being; and since the Lord is perfect in whatever he chooses to do, he must act perfectly in his role of a human being too.

Besides this, any dispassionate behaviour on his part which would indicate that losing Sita has had no great impact on him, would have sent a wrong signal to his adversaries: for then tongues would start wagging that Sri Ram was not too pleased with Sita and so her loss did not affect him as it should have. This was not acceptable at all.

Refer also to: Chaupai line nos. 16-17 herein below that endorse these view points.]

हे खग मृग हे मधुकर श्रेणी । तुम्ह देखी सीता मृगनैनी ॥ ९ ॥
 खंजन सुक कपोत मृग मीना । मधुप निकर कोकिला प्रबीना ॥ १० ॥
 कुंद कली दाड़िम दामिनी । कमल सरद ससि अहिभामिनी ॥ ११ ॥
 बरुन पास मनोज धनु हंसा । गज केहरि निज सुनत प्रसंसा ॥ १२ ॥
 श्रीफल कनक कदलि हरषाहीं । नेकु न संक सकुच मन माहीं ॥ १३ ॥

hē khaga mṛga hē madhukara śrēnī. tumha dēkhī sītā mṛganainī. 9.
 khanjāna suka kapōta mṛga mīnā. madhupa nikara kōkilā prabīnā. 10.
 kunda kalī dāḍīma dāminī. kamala sarada sasi ahibhāminī. 11.
 baruna pāsa manōja dhanu hansā. gaja kēhari nija sunata prasansā. 12.
 śrīphala kanaka kadali haraṣāhīm. nēku na saṅka sakuca mana māhīm. 13.

‘Oh birds; oh animals; oh swarm of bees! Have any one of you seen the doe-eyed Sita? (9)

Alas! The wagtail, the parrot, the pigeon, the deer, the fish, the swarm of bees, the expert cuckoo [10], the buds of jasmine flower, the pomegranate, the streak of lightening, the lotus flower, the moon of the autumn night, the she-serpent who moves smoothly as she slides on a surface [11], the noose of Varun (the Water God), the bow of Kaamdeo (cupid), the majestic swan, the mighty elephant and the grand lion—all of them now hear themselves being praised and honoured (by poets for their respective qualities, virtues and characters that are unique to them, who earlier were shunned by the same poets who desisted from praising them and comparing them to Sita as they were no match for her singular beauty and virtues represented by each of these entities) [12]¹. (10-12)

Similarly, the fruits of the wood-apple tree and the golden coloured banana tree also feel happy; they do not at all feel bashful and have no misgivings about anything. [With Sita gone, these entities too are happy that poets would now use them as metaphors when they wish to compare other things with the unique qualities that these entities have. Earlier the poets shunned them as Sita was much superior in all respects as far as the virtues represented by the wood-apple and banana trees was concerned. But now that she has gone, the poets have no choice but to cite these two entities for comparison purposes.] (13)

[Note—¹Indian poets and bards usually use these entities when they need examples of certain unique and excellent qualities that they stand for. But all these qualities faded in excellence when compared with similar qualities of Sita; so the poets refrained from citing them as metaphors as that would undermine their reputation as skillful and knowledgeable poets and bards. Now that Sita is no more, these entities feel happy that once again they will have the honour being cited as examples of certain stellar virtues or qualities by poets and bards.

That said, now let us what special features these entities possess that make them so favourite of poets and bards when they use them as standards to describe the beauty of a lady in her prime.

The eyes of a bewitching beauty are compared to the eyes of a fish, the wagtail and the fawn; the nose to the parrot's beak; the neck to that of a pigeon; the curl of hairs to a swarm of black-bees; the voice to the singing of the cuckoo; the teeth to the buds of the jasmine flower and the seeds of the pomegranate; the brilliance and glisten of complexion to the radiance and splendour of lightening; the limbs, i.e. the hand and the leg, as well as the face and the eyes to the lotus flower; the face to the full moon of autumn; the long braid of hair hanging and swaying at the back or front of the lady to the smooth sliding motion of a serpent; the enticing smile that captivates all beholders to the snare of Varun; the curve of the eyebrow to the bow of Kaamdeo (cupid); the swagger in the gait and its swaying movement to the majestic way a swan swims or an elephant walks; the waist to that of an adult lion; the breasts to the fruits of the wood-apple tree; and the thighs to the smooth skin of the banana tree.

The subtle idea here is that though these selected entities are models of beauty themselves in their respective fields, yet they were no comparisons to Sita; and hence poets and bards shied away from citing any of them. But now that Sita is gone, and if the poets and bards need a metaphor in her absence, they have no other options but to cite one of these entities to suit their purpose. This makes these entities happy that at last they are once again in demand and sought after.]

सुनु जानकी तोहि बिनु आजू । हरषे सकल पाइ जनु राजू ॥ १४ ॥
 किमि सहि जात अनख तोहि पाहीं । प्रिया बेगि प्रगटसि कस नाहीं ॥ १५ ॥
 एहि बिधि खोजत बिलपत स्वामी । मनहुँ महा बिरही अति कामी ॥ १६ ॥ पूरनकाम राम सुख रासी । मनुज चरित कर अज अबिनासी ॥ १७ ॥

sunu jānakī tōhi binu ājū. haraṣē sakala pā'i janu rājū. 14.
 kimi sahi jāta anakha tōhi pāhīm. priyā bēgi pragaṭasi kasa nāhīm. 15.
 ēhi bidhi khōjata bilapata svāmī. manahum' mahā birahī ati kāmī. 16.
 pūranakāma rāma sukha rāsī. manuja carita kara aja abināsī. 17.

Oh Janki (Sita), listen. All these entities are so happy at your absence as if they have acquired the kingdom of some place. [To wit, all of a sudden they feel very fortunate that once again they are sought after by poets for citing them as metaphors of beauty.] (14)

Say, how can you bear such rivalry? [These entities are rejoicing at your misfortune; they are least concerned that your absence has caused so much misery to me.

My dear, tell me is it ever possible that you would tolerate their impertinence and ill-manners? If not, then why are you hiding? If you come out and reveal yourself, they would be put to ignominious shame and would go to hide themselves.] (15)

In this way, overcome with grief and distress, the Lord moved around in a miserable condition, lamenting and wailing for Sita woefully like a very passionate man who has been smitten by deathly pangs of separation from his beloved, leaving him utterly inconsolable. (16)

Lord Ram is eternally contented and fulfilled; he is an eternal abode of bliss, happiness and beatitude. But now he is acting like a mortal man even though he is immortal and one who neither dies nor takes a birth. [This is because he is the Supreme Being. And this being the case, it also means that he is perfect in whatever he does, even playing his role as a human being to perfection. He shows here how a husband whose dear wife has been lost feels and behaves.] (17)

Section 6.1.2: Lord Ram meets Jatayu and performs his last rites:

Wandering in the forest looking for Sita as described herein above, Lord Ram came to the place where Jatayu, the vulture, lay wounded on the ground after his wings were cut by Ravana as the latter fled with Sita towards Lanka.

The Lord met Jatayu most affectionately, caressed him and cleaned his wounds personally, feeling very sorry for him as he tried to sooth the bird and give peace to him as best as he could. Jatayu told the Lord about Ravana and the general direction in which he had gone on the chariot with a wailing Sita in his captivity. Then Jatayu prayed to Lord Ram and died. The Lord performed his last rites as he would have done for his own father. Jatayu found deliverance, and went to the abode of the Lord in heaven.

This part of the story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 33.

Now, let us read what happened:

आगें परा गीधपति देखा । सुमिरत राम चरन जिन्ह रेखा ॥ १८ ॥

āgēr̄m parā gīdhapati dēkhā. sumirata rāma carana jinha rēkhā. 18.

When Lord Ram moved ahead he came to the place where he saw the king of vultures, Jatau, lying on the ground (because his wings had been cut-off by Ravana). Jatau was remembering Lord Ram and his mind was concentrated on the holy feet of the Lord with their auspicious marks¹. (18)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world. According to scriptures, the sole of Lord Vishnu's feet have 48 marks which are considered unique to him and very auspicious. They are the following:

(a) Marks or holy signs under the sole of the left foot—(i) a vertical line (Urdhva-rekha), (ii) a swastika, (iii) an octagon made by a pair of squares intersecting each other to form eight-cornered star (Ashtakona), (iv) a golden coloured coil consisting of two-and-a-half concentric circles (symbolizing goddess Laxmi, the goddess of wealth and prosperity), (v) a plough (Hal), (vi) a pestle (Moosal), (vii) a figure of the serpent (the celestial serpent known as Sesh-nath), (viii) an arrow, (ix) a zero (symbolising the sky element that is infinite and nothingness; Shunya), (x) a lotus flower (Kamal), (xi) a chariot, (xii) a thunderbolt (Vajra), (xiii) a grain of barley (symbolising crop and cereals that give nourishment), (xiv) the tree (Kalpa-taru; the all wish fulfilling tree found in heaven), (xv) a goad (Ankush; symbolising control of the world and subduing sinful creatures), (xvi) a flag (Pataka or Dhvaj; insignia of supreme and universal authority), (xvii) a crown (Mukut; the lordship of this creation), (xviii) a discus (serrated circular weapon; the Sudarshan Chakra), (xix) a throne (standing for supremacy authority and emperorship of this creation), (xx) the danda (staff of Yama, the god of death; symbolising the Lord's power over death), (xxi) a flapper or whisker (used to whisk away flies; swayed before kings and emperors; it is known as Chamar); (xxii) a parasol or umbrella (put on the head of a sovereign; symbol of universal power and authority over this creation), (xxiii) a male human figure (of Viraat Purush; the cosmic form of the Supreme Being; the supreme Father), and (xxiiii) a garland (of victory). Total = 24 signs.

(b) Marks or holy signs under the sole of the right foot—(i) flowing water (symbolising the holy river Saryu), (ii) a cow's hoof, (iii) the earth, (iv) a pitcher, (v) a flag (Pataka), (vi) a black plum (Jambu Phal), (vii) a crescent moon (Chandra), (viii) a conch shell (Shankha) (ix) a hexagon (a figure made by intersecting of two equilateral triangles), (x) a triangle (Trikone), (xi) a mace (Gada), (xii) a living being (symbolized by a point standing for the soul which is atomic in size), (xiii) a Vindu (the decimal; a dot; symbolising the source of cosmic energy), (xiv) the Shakti (cosmic dynamic powers and energy represented by a semi-circle at the lower end or the base of the dot, the Vindu), (xv) a lake or reservoir of nectar (Sudha-kunda), (xvi) three horizontal lines (symbolising the three phases of creation, time and space; or the three segments of the world: the heaven, the earth and the nether world), (xvii) a fish, (xviii) a full moon (Chandrama), (xix) an Indian lute (Vina), (xx) a flute, (xxi) a bow; (xxii) a quiver, (xxiii) a swan (Hansa), and (xxiii) a tiara (known as Chandrika; a crescent-shaped ornament worn on the top of a turban or crown of kings; an ornament of a lady's head). Total = 24 signs.

Grand total = 24 on left foot + 24 of right foot = 48.]

दो०. कर सरोज सिर परसेउ कृपासिंधु रघुबीर ।

निरखि राम छबि धाम मुख बिगत भई सब पीर ॥ ३० ॥

dōhā.

kara sarōja sira parasē'u kṛpāsindhu raghubīra.

nirakhi rāma chabi dhāma mukha bigata bhaī saba pīra. 30.

Lord Raghubir (Sri Ram), who is an ocean of mercy, compassion and grace, felt very sorry and sad for Jatau; the Lord caressed him very affectionately by moving his loving hands over the wounded bird's head.

When Jatau observed the charming face of Lord Ram up close, all his agonies and grief disappeared (for he felt extremely comforted, happy and fulfilled notwithstanding his sufferings and pain caused by the mortal wound that bled severely, inflicted on his body by Ravana). (Doha no. 30)

[Note—Lord Ram was well acquainted with Jatau; they had met earlier when the Lord had entered the Dandakaranya forest, and an affectionate bond of friendship was established between the two. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 13.

It was this friendship that led to Jatau intervening on the Lord's behalf when he saw Ravana taking away Sita.

Jatau was a friend of king Dasrath, Lord Ram's father and king of Ayodhya. So when Lord Ram and Jatau met, the latter assured him that while the Lord, Sita and Laxman live in Panchavati, from where Sita was later on abducted by Ravana, he would keep a watch over them, and protect them like a father would as he was a friend of Lord Ram's father. In case both the brothers go out in the forest on some errand, such as to hunt or collect firewood or eatables, then he would guard Sita. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 3-7. So Jatau kept his promise very well, even sacrificing his life for keeping his word.

And Lord Ram too lived up to the affectionate relationship that Jatau had established with him, a relationship that was no less than that which exists between a son and a father—for the Lord showed him the same respect he would have shown to his own father by performing the last rites of Jatau with his own hands at the time of his death as a son would have done for his father. Glory to Jatau for he had this rare privilege that no one else except Sabari, of whom we will soon read, had.

The emotion of love and affection exhibited by Lord Ram and Jatau was mutual, natural and spontaneous. Lord Ram was greatly moved by Jatau's miserable, pitiable condition; the Lord took the wounded bird in his arms lovingly, he caressed him affectionately, he unfolded his long lock of hairs and cleaned Jatau's wounds with them, he grieved and lamented at Jatau's ill fortune as if he was directly affected by it, he spoke sweet words of reassurance and encouragement to shore up Jatau's sagging and dejected spirits even as he held the bird close to his bosom to comfort him.

Jatau, meanwhile, knew that he won't live, for his wounds were grave and fatal. He was anxiously waiting to see Lord Ram for one final moment of his life like a father in the throes of death awaits his only son so that he can see him for the last time and die in his presence. Jatau wasn't sure, but he hoped. He clung to life for another reason also: his sacrifice would be meaningful if he could tell the Lord about Sita being abducted by Ravana; it will also make the Lord aware that Jatau has lived up to his promise that he would take care of them as best as he could while they lived in the area of the forest where Jatau lived. Death would have come one day or the other, for Jatau was old and nearing the end of his life. But how nice would it be if there was someone to perform his last rites, and his body does not decay and rot to emit a foul smell, or fall prey to wild carnivorous animals who might tear him apart and feast on his carcass, he gloomily thought with a sad and mournful mind. So now since he has lived up to his own part of the bargain, he wondered if Lord Ram would live up to his own part by performing his last rites as he knows that Jatau was his father's friend, and when a father's friend dies in an alien land where there is no one to take care of him, it becomes obligatory for a person to step in to fill the gap and assume the role of next-of-kin, as now the situation was between Jatau and Lord Ram. Jatau wished to have a dignified death; he had sacrificed his life for a noble cause and so hoped that the Supreme Lord who rewards a creature in accordance with his deeds would now apply the same principles to him as well during his last moments. So when Jatau saw Lord Ram caressing him with love and empathy he felt completely contented; he felt that his life had certainly been fruitful in spite of his being born a flesh-eating vulture, a birth not worthy of any praise, for even in his death he had been able to serve the Lord in the best way he could.

And truly indeed, the all-knowing Lord Ram read the inner thoughts of Jatau, that he treated the Lord as his son. So it was a natural emotion of grief and sadness and empathy when the Lord saw Jatau lying wailing and mortally wounded on the ground; and similarly when Jatau realized that his 'son' has finally arrived, he felt very happy and contented in his last moments.]

चौ०. तब कह गीध बचन धरि धीरा । सुनुहु राम भंजन भव भीरा ॥ १ ॥
 नाथ दसानन यह गति कीन्ही । तेहिं खल जनकसुता हरि लीन्ही ॥ २ ॥
 लै दच्छिन दिसि गयउ गोसाईं । बिलपति अति कुररी की नाईं ॥ ३ ॥
 दरस लागि प्रभु राखेउँ प्राना । चलन चहत अब कृपानिधाना ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

taba kaha gīdha bacana dhari dhīrā. sunahu rāma bhañjana bhava bhīrā. 1.
 nātha dasānana yaha gati kīnhī. tēhim khala janakasutā hari līnhī. 2.
 lai dacchina disi gaya'u gōsā'īm. bilapati ati kurarī kī nā'īm. 3.
 darasa lāgi prabhu rākhē'um' prānā. calana cahata aba kṛpānidhānā. 4.

Then the vulture (Jatau) recovered himself and patiently said to Lord Ram, 'Listen Ram who destroys (eliminates; removes; helps the creature to get rid of) the terrible fear of birth and death and their associated miseries and pains in this mortal world of transmigration (bhañjana bhava bhīrā)¹.

[¹Jatau was seriously injured; he was barely able to breathe. So when he felt Lord Ram's caressing hands on his body and opened his eyes to see the Lord, he gave a sigh of contentment and joy. His wishes were honoured by the Lord; now he would not only die in peace but would have also the opportunity to find final deliverance from the cycle of transmigration. That is why he recalls this special virtue of the Lord that he grants freedom from the fear of birth and death. There was nothing more to worry and be fearful of now. So Jatau was very patient; he slowly opened his tired eyes that were already half closed as he was on the verge of death, and calmly conversed with Lord Ram. His calm demeanours and contented look showed he had no regrets for what he had done or what fate he is destined to have, for he was absolutely certain that things were indeed done rightly, and there was nothing better that he could have done. As for his fate he was assured of a fine one: with Lord Ram holding him in an affectionate embrace, clasping him to his bosom and cleaning his wounds himself, was there any trace of doubt left about it by any stretch of imagination?] (1)

Oh Lord, this wretched condition of mine has been caused by the ten-headed Ravana; it is he who has stolen Sita. (2)

He has taken her in the southern direction even as she kept wailing and screaming loudly like a caged and frightened osprey (bilapati ati kurarī kī nā'īm). (3)

I have somehow managed to keep myself alive so that I can see your holy self, oh my Lord. Now my 'Pran' (my vital life forces) want to leave this gross body and exit from it².

[²I wish to die now; the wounds are hurting me sorely; I somehow managed to cling to life just to see you and convey my blessing as well as the information about Sita being taken away by the rascal Ravana. But now that purpose has been served; so I wish to die peacefully.] (4)

राम कहा तनु राखहु ताता । मुख मुसुकाइ कही तेहिं बाता ॥ ५ ॥
जा कर नाम मरत मुख आवा । अधमउ मुकुत होइ श्रुति गावा ॥ ६ ॥
सो मम लोचन गोचर आगें । राखौं देह नाथ केहि खाँगें ॥ ७ ॥ rāma kahā tanu rākhahu tātā. mukha musukā'i kahī tēhim bātā. 5.

jā kara nāma marata mukha āvā. adhama'u mukuta hō'i śruti gāvā. 6.
sō mama lōcana gōcara āgēm. rākhaur̄m dēha nātha kēhi khāmḡēm. 7.

[Lord Ram was immensely moved and emotionally overwhelmed by the pitiful condition of Jatau. He thought 'Jatau is my father's friend; he has valiantly fought Sita's abductor on my behalf inspite of being unarmed and his old age; he has suffered so gravely for me, yet he is so contented and peaceful. How great and holy is his soul; how grand is his mind and heart inspite of his body of a vulture. Surely I must honour his wishes; it is my honourable duty and moral obligation. Since I have the power over death and life of creatures in this creation, as it is my prerogative as the Supreme Being and the Lord of the world, I must now do for this noble bird what he wants me to do for him, even if it goes beyond the Laws of Nature. So the Lord thought that since Jatau has suffered and is about to die for his cause, he must now grant him life to the bird if he so wishes.]

Lord Ram told Jatau with a smile on his face, ‘My dear, keep your body (if you so wish).¹’ (5)

Jatau replied, ‘The Lord whose name is so holy, divine and spiritually purifying that if it comes to the mouth of a dying creature, if the dying creature utters the Lord’s name even once at the time of his death, then no matter how lowly and fallen he might be he is sure to find Mukti for himself (i.e. such a creature finds liberation and deliverance from the cycle of birth and death with its accompanying horrors; his soul gets eternal peace, bliss and beatitude; the creature is blessed with emancipation and salvation at that instant itself). This is what the scriptures say and affirm about the glory and spiritual powers of the Lord’s divine, holy name (and hence it is the Truth). (6)

That same Lord is standing right in my front, and is being watched affectionately by my eager eyes. Say oh Lord, why then, for what reason, should I wish to keep this mortal body?²’ (7)

[Note—¹To wit, you need not die; if you wish to live I will ensure that your wounds are quickly healed magically, and you be restored to the condition in which you were prior to this misadventure.

Why did Lord Ram smile when he spoke to Jatau? Well, Lord Ram indicated to Jatau that it is no problem for him to restore the latter’s healthy body if he so wished. But, at the same time, the Lord also wished to test how truly Jatau was holy and wise internally, for now Jatau had two options before him: either to live in this mortal world for some more days and die like an ordinary vulture, or to get the rarest of rare destiny that eludes even the greatest of sages, seers, hermits and ascetics, the destiny that grants eternal peace, bliss and beatitude to the creature, and emancipation and salvation to his soul, by dying now even as the Supreme Being is there to take care of him and his soul?

So the Lord smiled to see what Jatau’s response was: whether he is an ordinary creature who loves his gross body that every living being is aware is perishable yet wishes to cling to it, or he is an enlightened soul who grabs the first opportunity to discard this mortal body and seek eternity, who yearns for deliverance for his soul, who strives for attainment of emancipation and salvation.

²It is not always that such an opportunity presents itself to a dying creature that the Supreme Being himself stands before him to grant his wishes. What good fortune befalls me today that the Lord stands right before me, and I see him up so close, soothing my wounds and comforting me so lovingly. Am I not going to die one day; has anyone who is born remains forever in this world that is characterized by mortality and transmigration? If it is the case that all those who have taken a birth must die, then where would I get this rarest of rare chance that I have at this instant? Where again will I have the Lord standing before my eyes at the time of my death? Where again will I be assured of the best destiny that the soul can ever expect to have as I have today, as the Supreme Lord is himself present to take care of my soul?

No, no, dear Ram; I am not so stupid to let go of this golden chance. I don’t want to keep this mortal and gross body of a vulture; I wish to discard it and find eternal deliverance while you are here before me. Nothing doing; this is my wish, if you ask me!]

जल भरि नयन कहहिं रघुराई । तात कर्म निज तें गति पाई ॥ ८ ॥
 परहित बस जिन्ह के मन माहीं । तिन्ह कहुँ जग दुर्लभ कछु नाहीं ॥ ९ ॥ तनु तजि तात जाहु मम धामा । देउँ काह तुम्ह पूरनकामा ॥ १० ॥

jala bhari nayana kahahim raghurā'ī. tāta karma nija tēm gati pā'ī. 8.
 parahita basa jinha kē mana māhīm. tinha kahum' jaga durlabha kachu nāhīm.
 9.
 tanu taji tāta jāhu mama dhāmā. dē'um' kāha tumha pūranakāmā. 10.

Tears welled-up in the eyes of Lord of the Raghus (“raghurā'ī”; Lord Ram) as he said to Jatau, ‘My dear. You shall get the destiny that you deserve in accordance to the deeds you have done; your fate is decided by your own actions and deeds. [And what is it? The Lord explains below.] (8)

He who is selfless in his actions and keeps the good and welfare of others in his heart, for such a person there is nothing inaccessible or impossible to attain in this world. (9)

My dear (tāta)! You discard this gross mortal body of yours and go to my own abode in the heaven¹. What more can I grant you; you are fulfilled and contented in every respect. (10)

[Note—¹Jatau had selflessly served Lord Ram by sacrificing his own body in order to protect Sita. For such a noble deed there is only one destiny—it is an abode in heaven. This certainty of destiny obtained by serving others selflessly and dying for the cause of their good oversteps other considerations of life such as the nature of one’s birth, one’s stature in life, whether or not he has done any other religious deeds during his lifetime, or has worshipped the Lord God, or has adopted a mean for his livelihood that may or may not be regarded as being totally noble and righteous, and so on.

This singular act of selflessness and having the thought of good of others in one’s heart determines one’s auspicious fate at the time of death.

So since Jatau had died while trying to protect Sita from the clutches of Ravana, his auspicious destiny in heaven is secured for him. Hence Lord Ram says that he is not doing anything special for Jatau by granting him an abode in the heaven as this was his rightful claim.]

दो०. सीता हरन तात जनि कहहु पिता सन जाइ । जौं मैं राम त कुल सहित कहिहि दसानन आइ ॥ ३१ ॥

dōhā.

sītā harana tāta jani kahahu pitā sana jā'i.
 jaum' maim' rāma ta kula sahita kahihi dasānana ā'i. 31.

My dear; when you go to heaven please don't tell my father (Dasrath) about Sita's abduction. [Because this will cause intense pain in his heart, for it was he who had sent us to forest exile. He will be overcome with remorse, and I would not like to cause distress to him in heaven where he rests in peace.]

If I am truly worthy of my name ‘Ram’¹ then one day soon Ravana will come there with his kin and companions and his entire family to tell this story himself to my father². (Doha no. 31)

[Note—¹What does the Lord mean by saying “if I am truly worthy of my name Ram”? Earlier we have read that Jatau made two significant observations concerning Lord Ram—viz. (i) The Lord was one who destroys or eliminates the fear of transmigration and its associated miseries in this mortal world, and (ii) The Lord is one whose name is so holy, divine and spiritually purifying that it provides deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the creature if it is said even once at the time of death, and the Srutis or the Vedas affirm it—refer to Chaupai line nos. 1 and 6 that precede Doha no. 31 respectively herein above.

Lord Ram’s name, pronounced as “RAAM”, is called a ‘Tarak Mantra’, i.e. it is a spiritual formula that blesses the one who says it with the reward of liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation. This spiritual fact is specifically declared in Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad, Canto 2, verse no. 1 belonging to the Atharva Veda tradition. In general, the great spiritual importance and the supreme value of Lord Ram’s Name as being the holiest of Mantras has been elaborately dealt with in Ram Purva Tapini Upanishad, Cantos 1-4, and Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad; these two Upanishads pertain to the Atharva Veda and are exclusively dedicated to expounding upon the divinity of Lord Ram and his Holy Name.

Lord Shiva is a great exponent of this spiritual philosophy for he uses this method to grant instant deliverance to the dying creature on the banks of the holy river Ganges in the pilgrim city of Kashi by uttering the holy name of Lord Ram into his ears—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 19.

The greatness and glory of Lord Ram’s holy name has been elaborately enumerated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 28.

This said, suppose Lord Ram were to be a little more elaborate in his declaration, then what would he have told Jatau? He would have said something to the effect as follows—

“Listen dear Jatau. You have yourself acknowledged that I am the one who grants Mukti, or liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul of a creature. And you have also accepted that my name is so holy, divine, purifying and mystical that even a fallen and sinful and lowly creature is blessed with Mukti and finds eternal peace and bliss if he utters my name. So therefore, now I am obliged to live up to this reputation; it has become sacrosanct for me especially because you have cited the Vedas to make this declaration. This being the case, I have to make sure that Ravana too gets Mukti, for I would be right in front when he dies. Since it has been my hoary reputation that I am forgiving, merciful, compassionate, gracious, magnanimous, beneficent and kind to one and all, that I, being the Supreme Being and the Lord of this creation, treat all creatures alike, and even in my punishment is hidden my grace and compassion for the creature for I don’t want any soul to perish and suffer in hell, so I declare to you that when I slay Ravana I will also make sure that he finds the same destiny that you have now been fortunate to attain. Although Ravana is sinful and evil, yet his soul yearns for deliverance, and he constantly remembers me even if it out of animosity or fear, so it is obligatory for me to send him to heaven. I don't distinguish between two creatures as I know that their souls are one and the same, and this soul is eternally and inherently pure and holy; it is the gross physical body that is sinful and evil, and not the soul of the creature. So look here my dear—Ravana cannot go to hell any longer, and I declare now that I will send him to heaven where you are going, and where Dasrath too dwells.

I don't see Dasrath as my father, nor Jatau as a vulture, or Ravana as a demon who has taken away my wife; I see their Atma which is holy and pure consciousness that is my own reflection, and it is one uniform entity.

To wit, for me all creatures are equally dear; I don't pay attention to their physical bodies as this is acquired by the individual based on what he had done in his previous life. As far as I am concerned, being the Supreme Lord of this creation, I go deeper and examine what lies behind the curtain of delusions and the shell known as the creature's body which hides his 'true self', which all self-realised and enlightened persons know is the nothing but 'pure consciousness' known as the individual's Atma or the soul. Now this Atma, which is the creature's 'true self', is as pure, divine and holy as my own cosmic Self, the Supreme Atma that is known as 'Parmatma'. It's just like the case of sky or space present inside a small box that would represent the individual's Atma, and the endless space that extends to infinity which you see all around you and which stands for the Parmatma. Say, is there any fundamental difference between the two types of space? So likewise, there is no fundamental difference between the individual creature known as the Jiva and me who is known as the Supreme Being.

This being the irrefutable fact, say how can I not see my 'true image' in the creature? And since I am eternal, never-changing and constant, why will I not see the same consistency in all the individual creatures? That is why I say that Dasrath, Jatau and Ravana are equal for me. I practice equanimity and universality in my outlook, and I don't have a narrow selfish mind to view this creation in a fractured way because it is but my own image, and I am uniform and one in all respects.

Well, let me add something more: If I, Ram, promise that notwithstanding how sinful and evil Ravana is he will go to heaven, for he remembers me and utters my holy name, the spiritual rewards of which surely accrues to him as they can't go in vain, making it my moral duty to redeem his soul, then remember also all those who care to pay attention—that if I can promise spiritual peace and eternal freedom from the cycle of transmigration (Mukti) to Ravana whom the whole world despises as being singularly sinful and evil, then all the creatures should rejoice that their destiny is also insured by me, that all can find Mukti, but the only condition is that they should remember me, they should remember my holy name, have faith in me, and be devoted to me so much so that when they breathe their last they die remembering me and my holy name instead of anything else, especially anything related to this gross world and its material things.”

²A very remarkable phrase is used here—it is “kahihī dasānana ā'i”, i.e. Ravana will come 'here' to tell this story to Dasrath. Ordinarily the term 'there' should have been used; Lord Ram should have said that “Ravana would go 'there', to heaven, to tell the story of Sita's abduction to Dasrath and other residents of heaven when they ask him to acquaint them with the story of his life”.

This implies two things very clearly and obviously: one is that Lord Ram predicts that Ravana would also go to heaven at the time of his death in spite of his being a cruel demon who has not done any good deed in his life; and second, that he would go to that part of heaven which is the abode of the Lord himself and where the Lord himself would go after his mission is complete—this is why he says “he will come ‘here’ ”, instead of saying “he will go ‘there’ ”.

At the time of death, Dasrath, the worldly father of Lord Ram, had gone to heaven because he had died remembering the Lord and muttering his holy name till his last breath. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 155—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 156. Dasrath’s last moments were like those of Jatau.

A very interesting observation is to be made here. All hatred, animosity, ill-will, jealousy and malice, all factors that distinguish two creatures as being ‘me and you’, ‘my friend and my enemy’, are limited to the gross mortal body of a creature and the equally gross mortal world where he lives. Rising from this limited gross view of existence and attaining a higher and sublime level enlightens the creature of the futility of such lowly and selfish thoughts, as the true identity of all living beings is their soul, and this soul is a universally pure entity known as Consciousness that is holy and divine.

When a creature dies he discards his gross physical body, and assumes a subtle form that is ethereal in nature. It is in this form that he goes to heaven or hell as he is judged in accordance to the law of deeds done in life and their results that accumulate over time. Those who live in heaven have an ethereal form, and not a gross form like the creatures of this world. The glory of Lord Ram’s holy name is that it provides the creature a chance to get an exalted destiny for himself in case his deeds alone don’t ensure it for him.

In the present case, Dasrath, Jatau and Ravana attained heaven precisely for this reason—for all of them had been constantly remembering Lord Ram as long as they lived, and at the time of death too their minds were concentrated on the Lord and his holy name. Refer to Ram Charit Manas: (a) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 155 and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it with respect to king Dasrath; (b) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 30 with respect to Jatau; and (c) in Lanka Kand we read that Ravana’s mind was constantly occupied by the thoughts of Lord Ram, albeit it was due to animosity and fear combined, but nonetheless he remembered the Lord at all the moments of his existence which unwittingly became a sort of meditation for him, and even while dying he not only was fortunate to see the Lord standing in front but his last words had the name of Lord Ram—for he cried “where is Ram whom I want to defeat in the battle-field” (Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 103). This means that even while dying Ravana had a last divine glimpse of the holy form of Lord Ram and uttered his holy name. These factors played a crucial role to determine his destiny—for it was now sure he would not go to hell.]

चौ०. गीध देह तजि धरि हरि रूपा । भूषन बहु पट पीत अनूपा ॥ १ ॥

caupāī.

gīdha dēha taji dhari hari rūpā. bhūṣana bahu paṭa pīta anūpā. 1.

The vulture left his mortal coil (his gross body) and assumed a holy form that was in likeness of Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu). He was attired in magnificent clothes of different kinds, and adorned in ornaments of equal magnificence that covered his body.

[To wit, after discarding his physical body of a vulture, Jatau's soul regained its original form as the Holy One; it was a sublime form of ethereal nature. This verse means that a creature's soul is eternally holy and his true self is an image of the Supreme Being; it is the creature's gross physical body that is so ugly and has so many varied forms which are totally different from his true identity which is one and the same—that of an image of the Supreme Being. What a wonder of this creation and the magic delusion plays that rarely does one understand this universal truth.]

दो०. अबिरल भगति मागि बर गीध गयउ हरिधाम । तेहि की क्रिया जथोचित निज कर कीन्ही राम ॥ ३२ ॥

dōhā.

abirala bhagati māgi bara gīdha gaya'u haridhāma.
tēhi kī kriyā jathōcita nija kara kīnhī rāma. 32.

Asking Lord Ram to grant him eternal and uninterrupted devotion for the Lord, the vulture (Jatau) went to the heavenly abode of Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu; the Supreme Being).

After that, Lord Ram performed his last rites in the proper way with his own hands¹. (Doha no. 32)

[Note—¹This rare honour was granted to Jatau alone by Lord Ram; for not even Dasrath, the worldly father of the Lord, had had the privilege that his last rites would be performed by his son, Lord Ram. So Jatau is deemed to be the most fortunate one in the whole story of the Ramayan.

It is to be noted however that there was one more person whose last rite was done by the Lord—and it was Sabari, the aged tribal woman whom the Lord would meet soon after moving ahead after cremating Jatau. But Sabari was a 'woman', while Jatau was a 'male'.

The result is that Jatau was elevated to the grand stature of being Lord Ram's father, and Sabari to being his mother!

It is such a remarkable thing and a wonderful one also that Lord Ram would elevate a lowly flesh-eating vulture and a lowly tribal woman who had been shunned by the rest of the society to the grand pedestal of being the Lord's "father and mother" respectively.

This is why it is said that there is no Lord or God like Lord Ram in this world; for Lord Ram accepts devotion and love and faith for him as the only criterion for accepting the creature; he overlooks all the faults and shortcomings of a creature and readily grants him liberation and deliverance if the creature surrenders before the Lord and had deep reverence for him. See verses below.]

चौ०. कोमल चित अति दीनदयाला । कारन बिनु रघुनाथ कृपाला ॥ १ ॥
गीध अधम खग आमिष भोगी । गति दीन्ही जो जाचत जोगी ॥ २ ॥
सुनहु उमा ते लोग अभागी । हरि तजि होहिं बिषय अनुरागी ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kōmala cita ati dīnadayālā. kārana binu raghunātha kṛpālā. 1.
gīdha adhama khaga āmiṣa bhōgī. gati dīnhī jō jācata jōgī. 2.
sunahu umā tē lōga abhāgī. hari taji hōhim biṣaya anurāgī. 3.

Lord Ram has a very soft heart and mind; he is of a very affable nature, most merciful, very compassionate, and full of grace. He readily shows his kindness in a selfless manner to even the most humble of creatures. (1)

A vulture is a most hateful and lowly carnivorous bird who eats flesh of dead creatures; yet the Lord granted him a destiny that is suitable for a great ascetic (because the Lord sent him to heaven where great and holy ones can only go). (2)

Lord Shiva (the primary narrator of the story of Ram Charit Manas) told his consort, ‘Listen Uma! Those persons who abandon such a magnanimous and merciful Lord Hari and instead indulge in self and worldly gratification, and are attracted towards the sense objects of this material, mortal world—verily indeed, to say the truth, such persons are very stupid and most unfortunate.’ (3)

पुनि सीतहि खोजत द्वौ भाई । चले बिलोकत बन बहुताई ॥ ४ ॥
संकुल लता बिटप घन कानन । बहु खग मृग तहँ गज पंचानन ॥ ५ ॥ puni sītahi khōjata dvau bhāī. calē bilōkata bana bahutāī. 4.

saṅkula latā biṭapa ghana kānana. bahu khaga mṛga taham̐ gaja pañcānana.
5.

Once again, the two brothers (Lord Ram and Laxman) resumed their search for Sita. They moved ahead in the forest observing it closely. (4)

The forest was dense with creepers and trees; it was inhabited by many varieties of birds and deer, and there dwelt in it many elephants and lions. (5)

[Note—Lord Ram and Laxman moved slowly and steadily thorough the thick forest, looking minutely at every nook and corner of it, at every shade and glade, behind every thicket and under each canopy formed by closely interlocked creepers and dense foliage of trees, in every direction, sideways to the left and to the right—not leaving any place unexamined or unexplored along the forest path.]

Section 6.1.3: Lord Ram meets Sabari who advises him to go to Lake Pampa where he would meet Sugriv who will give him more information about Sita:

After performing the last rites of Jatau, Lord Ram and his younger brother resumed their search for Sita. They meandered through the forest and on the way provided deliverance to a demon named Kabandha. By-and-by they reached the hermitage of Sabari, an old woman who was cast out by the society and lived in the abandoned hermitage of sage Matang*. She however was a great devotee of Lord Ram; she waited patiently for the moment when Lord Ram would pass that way, as this was what the sage had advised her before going away. She eagerly kept a vigil on the forest path leading up to and going beyond her hermitage—waiting for the Lord's arrival. Finally her long wait ended and the Lord arrived. She worshipped and prayed to him, offered the two brothers plums which she had been plucking and collecting especially for this occasion, and then when Lord Ram asked her if she can tell him anything about Sita, she advised him to go Lake Pampa where he would meet Sugriv, the prince of the monkeys, who will help him not only in finding Sita but also in the endeavour to secure her freedom.

This part of the story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 33, Chaupai line nos. 3, 5-10 that precede Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 37. Out of these verses we shall select only those that directly relate to this part of the story, and skip those that are not pertinent to our narrative.

*Now, a brief word about Sage Matang: He is considered as being a 'Brahm-rishi', i.e. a great and exalted sage who was self-realised, exceptionally enlightened and well versed in true knowledge of Brahm, the Supreme Being and an embodiment of the cosmic form of pure Consciousness, that granted the sage a stature that was equivalent to Brahm.

He had his hermitage at a place near Lake Pampa, on a hill known as Rishyamook. This place is situated now in Hampi in the state of Karnataka in South India.

One of his most famous disciples was Sabari, the lowly woman whom Lord Ram met. The Lord preached her the nine-fold path of Bhakti (devotion), and then honoured her by not only granting deliverance from this world of transmigration but even performing her last rites like a son does for his mother.

When the king of the monkey race, Vaali, killed the demon Dundhubhi and flung his severed head, it fell near the hermitage of sage Matang, and as a result blood was sprinkled all over the place, defiling the sage's hermitage. The infuriated sage cursed Vaali that if he ever came that way his own head would be blown to pieces.

According to a legend, sage Matang's daughter was named Maatangi; she was an attendant of goddess Lalita, one of the many forms of Parvati, the divine consort of Lord Shiva.

आवत पंथ कबंध निपाता । तेहिं सब कही साप कै बाता ॥ ६ ॥

दुरबासा मोहि दीन्ही सापा । प्रभु पद पेखि मिटा सो पापा ॥ ७ ॥ āvata pantha kabandha nipātā. tēhiṃ saba kahī sāpa kai bātā. 6.

durabāsā mōhi dīnhī sāpā. prabhu pada pēkhi miṭā sō pāpā. 7.

[Chaupai nos. 6-7 that precedes Doha no. 33.]

On the way, Lord Ram faced a demon called 'Kabandha'¹ whom the Lord slayed. The demon, after leaving his mortal body, told Lord Ram about sage Durvasa's curse that had made him a demon. (6)

He said to Lord Ram, ‘Sage Durvasa had cursed me². But now after having seen the holy feet of the Lord my sins have been washed off. (7)

[Note—¹Kabandha was like a gigantic octopus or a giant spider or a huge tarantula; he had a blue coloured body that had no abdomen, neck or head. On his chest he had a large grotesque eye, and his limbs extended for four Kosas (roughly 4 x 2 = 8 miles) from the side of his colossus body that was like a rough, irregularly-shaped ball. There were sharp thorny hairs growing wildly all over it. This gave Kabandha a most terrifying appearance.

When he saw Lord Ram and Laxman he lunged towards them to gobble them up. Then the Lord cut-off his long creeper-like arms, as a result of which he fell down on the ground with a huge thud. He asked the Lord who the two brothers were, and when he learnt about the true identity of the Lord he felt very happy that at last he will be redeemed. And redeemed he was for he regained his original form of a Gandharva and went to heaven once again as we shall read below.

²Kabandha was a Gandharva, a celestial musician and singer, in his previous life. Due to sage Durvasa’s curse he had become a demon. He was so proud of his handsome body of a Gandharva that one day he laughed at sage Durvasa because the sage was looking ugly. This infuriated the sage who cursed him to have a body that would be most horrible to look at.

Another story says that once he was singing and dancing in the court of Indra, the king of gods, when sage Durvasa visited. Seeing the sage’s body he laughed, and the sage cursed him. Another variant of this story says that the sage remained aloof and disinterested in his singing and dancing, so the Gandharva laughed as he thought the sage could not appreciate fine music; then the sage got angry and cursed him.]

कहि निज धर्म ताहि समुझावा । निज पद प्रीति देखि मन भावा ॥ ३ ॥

रघुपति चरन कमल सिरु नाई । गयउ गगन आपनि गति पाई ॥ ४ ॥

kahi nija dharma tāhi samujhāvā. nija pada prīti dēkhi mana bhāvā. 3 raghupati carana kamala siru nā'ī. gaya'u gagana āpani gati pā'ī. 4.

Lord Ram explained to him his laws of Dharma (laws which govern righteousness, auspiciousness, propriety, probity, decency and good conduct)¹. Then the Lord observed that Kabandha had affection for his holy feet, which pleased him. (3)

Bowing his head reverentially before the lotus-like holy feet of Lord Ram (Raghupati), he (Kabandha) went back to the heaven and attained a destiny that he deserved². (4)

[Note—¹Kabandha had caused offense to sage Durvasa as he was very proud of his skill as a musician as well as his body that was very handsome. So Lord Ram told him that pride is not a good thing, and so is showing disrespect to saints and sages.

²After offering his obeisance at the holy feet of Lord Ram, Kabandha regained his stature of an exalted soul and went back to heaven. It ought to be noted here that it is not said that he “became a Gandharva once again”; it is merely said that he “attained a destiny that he deserved”.

To wit, he attained emancipation and salvation for his soul. He no longer was an entertainer like Gandharvas who dance and sing and play music for the gods are; he was now a liberated soul which had found eternal freedom from the cycle of birth and death; his soul had found eternal peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity. After all, no lesser reward could be had when a creature is delivered by Lord Ram himself. Becoming a Gandharva is not something highly praised just as court musicians and singers were not too highly looked upon as being in a noble profession by society even though they had access to a king and his courtiers.]

After providing liberation to Kabandha from his demon body, Lord Ram and Laxman moved ahead. We shall now read what happened next from Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34 onwards as follows:-

ताहि देइ गति राम उदारा । सबरी कें आश्रम पगु धारा ॥ ५ ॥
 सबरी देखि राम गृहँ आए । मुनि के बचन समुझि जियँ भाए ॥ ६ ॥
 सरसिज लोचन बाहु बिसाला । जटा मुकुट सिर उर बनमाला ॥ ७ ॥
 स्याम गौर सुंदर दोउ भाई । सबरी परी चरन लपटाई ॥ ८ ॥ tāhi dē'i gati rāma udārā. sabarī kēm āśrama pagu dhārā. 5.

 sabarī dēkhi rāma gṛham'ā'ē. muni kē bacana samujhi jiyam'bhā'ē. 6.
 sarasija lōcana bāhu bisālā. jaṭā mukuṭa sira ura banamālā. 7.
 syāma gaura sundara dō'u bhā'ī. sabarī parī carana lapaṭā'ī. 8.

After providing him (Kabandha) the destiny that he deserved, the magnanimous, benevolent and beneficent Lord Ram (rāma udārā) stepped into the hermitage of Sabari¹. (5)

When Sabari saw that Lord Ram has come home to her in her hermitage, she recalled the words of the sage (Matang) and felt exceedingly fortunate, glad and happy in her heart. [To wit, Sabari remembered what sage Matang had told her earlier, and when the sage's words bore fruit and Lord Ram came to her hermitage, her joy and happiness knew no bounds.] (6)

The two brothers (Lord Ram and Laxman) had lotus-like eyes, long muscular arms, wore a crown of matted hairs on their heads and a garland of flowers that bloom in the forest on their chests [7], and their complexions were dark and fair respectively (i.e. Lord Ram had a dark complexion, while Laxman was fair). When Sabari saw them, she fell on the ground and clasped their holy feet [8]. (7-8)

[Note—¹Sabari (also pronounced as 'Shabari') was a woman belonging to a forest tribe called 'Sabari'. This tribe was classified as Shudras or lower caste, and sustained themselves by collecting and selling honey and fruits from the forest trees. Being of a low caste, she is said have been ostracized by others. She served a sage named Matanga very devotedly. The sage was a realised soul, and so pleased was he with her devotion and service that he blessed her at the time of leaving his body that she would find her emancipation and salvation when Lord Ram visits her while searching for Sita. Like her Guru, Sabari too left her mortal body after having the privilege of meeting and worshipping the Lord in person by lighting the pyre herself with her mystical powers. According to Adhyatma Ramayana of sage Veda Vyas, it was Lord Ram who had performed her last rites himself, a rare privilege that was even denied to his own worldly father Dasrath.

Sabari used to live in the hermitage where earlier sage Matanga lived. This hermitage was near Mount Rishyamook where Sugriv, the exiled younger brother of the king of monkeys Vali, lived with his close confidantes Hanuman, Jamvant, Naal and Neel etc. This place was about ten Yojans or eighty miles from Kishkindha, the capital of the forest kingdom of which Vali was the king.

There is a story about Lake Pampa on the banks of which she lived. The great sage Matang had his hermitage here. To be precise it was on Rishyamook mountain on the other end of Lake Pampa, but perhaps he maintained a small hermitage on the plains where Sabari lived to serve him.

Sabari used to get up very early and clean the path around this lake before her Guru went there for his daily bath and other chores. It so happened that one day, the sages and seers who lived in that area saw her cleaning the path leading to the lake very early in the morning. Since she was of a low caste, they cursed and scolded her because they regarded her appearance as defiling the place. This misplaced notion of superiority and high stature immensely displeased the Lord. So as soon as those haughty and proud sages went and took a dip in that lake, its water turned turbid, polluted and infested by warms and filth. When Sri Ram had gone there during his forest exile, the sages and seers requested him to purify that lake. Sri Ram, being all-knowing, knew the secret behind that pollution, and in order to teach those sages a lesson of their lives, he asked them to request Sabari to take a dip in it. As soon as she did it, the water regained its former pristine purity, and the lake its former exceptional scenic beauty. This made the haughty sages and seers feel ashamed at their ignorance and behaviour.

Lord Sri Ram had visited her hermitage and enjoyed the fruits offered by her just like he would have enjoyed them if they were given to him by his mother. In the 'Ram-Sarawali of Surdas', verse no. 11, it is said that 'Sabari was a long time ardent devotee and a humble follower of Raghupati (Sri Ram). He accepted and ate fruits offered by her, preached her on the concept of complete devotion, and then liberated her by giving her residence in his own abode.'

It was Shabari who had advised Sri Ram to go towards the Rishyamook mountain and make friends with Sugriv, the monkey king, who in turn would help the Lord in finding out Sita and freeing her from the clutches of her captors.]

प्रेम मगन मुख बचन न आवा । पुनि पुनि पद सरोज सिर नावा ॥ ९ ॥

सादर जल लै चरन पखारे । पुनि सुंदर आसन बैठारे ॥ १० ॥

prēma magana mukha bacana na āvā. puni puni pada sarōja sira nāvā. 9.
sādara jala lai carana pakhārē. puni sundara āsana baiṭhārē. 10.

She was so overwhelmed by surging emotions of affection and love for the Lord and his brother that she became dumb with joy so much so that she could not find words to speak. She repeatedly fell down and bowed her head before the lotus-like feet of the two brothers. [To wit, Sabari was so moved and emotionally stunned that she could not even say a word of welcome for Lord Ram and Laxman. She simply fell down before the two brothers and clasped their feet with both hands.] (9)

She then washed their feet reverentially with water, and then offered them excellent seats of honour to sit down upon. (10)

दो०. कंद मूल फल सुरस अति दिए राम कहूँ आनि । प्रेम सहित प्रभु खाए बारंबार बखानि ॥ ३४ ॥

dōhā.

kanda mūla phala surasa ati di'ē rāma kahum' āni.
prēma sahita prabhu khā'ē bārambāra bakhāni. 34.

Then she brought tasty edible roots, tubers, bulbs as well as succulent fruits and offered them to Lord Ram¹.

The Lord ate them with relish, praising them much repeatedly. (Doha no. 34)

[Note—¹Sabari brought refreshments that were available in the forest; she had been collecting them and storing them for a long time in the hope that one day Lord Ram would visit her. She knew that sage Matang's words can't be wrong, so she waited patiently. As we have seen, she did not speak a word, but simply brought these delicious offerings and gave them to Lord Ram (di'ē rāma kahum' āni).

Does this mean that she neglected Laxman or did not offer refreshment to him? Not at all; Lord Ram was the elder brother and so he only is mentioned here. The fact is that the two brothers sat side-by-side, and they used to share their meals together ever since they started on their journey into the forest; they shared their joys and sorrows together as if they were one soul with two bodies. Hence, Sabari brought in the fruits etc. and placed them before the two brothers who sat close to each other, and who would partake of these refreshments together too.

We have read in the previous verse that Sabari caught hold of the feet of both the brothers simultaneously (Chaupai line no. 8 herein above). Obviously she could do this if they were standing very close to each other, so that Sabari could encircle and clasp their feet at the same time with her outstretched arms.]

[After these warm and affectionate gestures of welcome and Sabari's worship of the Lord, when he was refreshed and rested, he enquired from her if she could tell him anything about Sita. We shall now read onwards from Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 36 about this conversation. When the time came for Lord Ram to move ahead, Sabari left her mortal coil by offering her gross body in the self-ignited sacred fire of Yoga. Then Lord Ram performed her last rites like he had done for Jatau earlier. This way, the Lord provided deliverance to Sabari too.]

जनकसुता कइ सुधि भामिनी । जानहि कहु करिबरगामिनी ॥ १० ॥
पंपा सरहि जाहु रघुराई । तहँ होइहि सुग्रीव मितार्ई ॥ ११ ॥

सो सब कहिहि देव रघुबीरा । जानतहूँ पूछहु मतिधीरा ॥ १२ ॥
बार बार प्रभु पद सिरु नाई । प्रेम सहित सब कथा सुनाई ॥ १३ ॥ janakasutā ka'i sudhi bhāminī. jānahi kahu karibaragāminī. 10.

pampā sarahi jāhu raghurā'ī. taham' hō'ihī sugrīva mitā'ī. 11.
sō saba kahihi dēva raghubīrā. jānatahūm' pūchahu matidhīrā. 12.
bāra bāra prabhu pada siru nā'ī. prēma sahita saba kathā sunā'ī. 13.

Lord Ram asked Sabari about the whereabouts of Sita. The Lord said, 'Oh good and noble lady (bhāminī)? Please tell me about the whereabouts of the daughter of Janak ("janakasutā"; Sita) who walks with an elegant and dignified style that resembles the way a majestic she-elephant walks (karibaragāminī). Pray, please tell me if you know anything about her.'¹

[¹This verse can be interpreted and read in another way also as follows: "Oh good and noble lady (bhāminī)? Please tell me about the whereabouts of the daughter of Janak ("janakasutā"; Sita) if you know anything about her. You live in the forest and have seen many a majestic she-elephants moving about (karibaragāminī). Well, Sita too walks in this style, and so can you recollect any lady going this way with a gait similar to the way an elephant walks? Pray, tell me please."] (10)

Sabari replied, 'Oh Lord Raghurai (Lord Ram who is the Lord of the line of kings descending from the great King Raghu)! Go to Lake Pampa where you will be befriended by Sugriv (the prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha). (11)

He shall tell you everything about her (Sita). Oh Lord with a steady and calm mind (matidhīrā)²! You know everything³, but you still ask me as if you are ignorant of developments. (12)

[²Sabari observed that Lord Ram was calm and composed during his stay at her hermitage inspite of the fact that his wife Sita was stolen by some fiend; the Lord was not agitated and looked distressed and sad like a man whose wife has been kidnapped by a fiend is expected to be. So she makes this comment.

³Of course Lord Ram knew everything—this is clearly stated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 24.]

Then Sabari bowed her head at the holy feet of Lord Ram repeatedly and affectionately narrated the whole story to him⁴. (13)

[⁴What story did Sabari tell Lord Ram? It is not mentioned here which story it was. But surely it was the story about her own past and what sage Matang had told her as it would be clear in the following verses where she lit a fire and discarded her gross body by burning it in this fire, after which Lord Ram performed her last rites in accordance to her wishes. This story has been briefly narrated as a note appended to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34 herein above in this section.]

छं०. कहि कथा सकल बिलोकि हरि मुख हृदयँ पद पंकज धरे । १ ।
तजि जोग पावक देह हरि पद लीन भइ जहँ नहिं फिरे ॥ २ ॥
नर बिबिध कर्म अधर्म बहु मत सोकप्रद सब त्यागहू । ३ ।

बिस्वास करि कह दास तुलसी राम पद अनुरागहू ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kahi kathā sakala bilōki hari mukha hṛdayam̐ pada pañkaja dharē. 1.
taji jōga pāvaka dēha hari pada līna bha'i jaham̐ nahim̐ phirē. 2.
nara bibidha karma adharna bahu mata sōkaprada saba tyāgahū. 3.
bisvāsa kari kaha dāsa tulasī rāma pada anurāgahū. 4.

Having narrated to Lord Ram the whole story, she (Sabari) fixed her eyes (affectionately) on the charming face of Lord Hari (Sri Ram) and enshrined his lotus-like holy feet in her heart. (Chanda line no. 1)

Then she discarded (burnt) her gross body in the self-ignited fire of Yoga (deep meditation)¹, and attained an exalted, sublime state from where there is no return to the gross mortal world and its cycle of transmigration². (Chanda line no. 2)

Tulsidas, the saint-poet, observes—“Oh Men! All the different kinds of deeds and improper activities, as well as the many sectarian beliefs and narrow-minded self-centered schools of thought—all of them give nothing but sorrows and grief to the creature. So you will be well advised to abandon all such distractions and misleading thoughts and precepts [3], and instead, focus your attention in developing affection and devotion for the holy feet of Lord Ram (as one single window and a sure-shot formula to attain complete fulfillment and peace for your soul) [4].” (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹Yoga generates heat and energy inside the body as the flow of breath is restricted, inhalation and exhalation stops, the vital winds present in the body get heated as they circulate within it, and all vital forces of life are harnessed and concentrated at focal points, called Chakras, present at different locations inside the body. The body gets naturally heated, and if breathing is not resumed within a specified period the heat builds up to such an extent that the gross body starts smouldering till a stage is reached when it dries up completely from within and ultimately crumbles into a heap of ash like burnt-out firewood.

It's surely not an easy process; and since this kind of Yoga leads to death, only those who are determined to leave this body would ever put it into practice. But a death obtained by this method is deemed to be the best way for a soul to leave the gross body of a creature. The fire ignited by Yoga is as sacred and holy as the fire of a religious sacrifice.

²When a Jiva, the living being, leaves his gross body by this method, his soul finds eternal liberation and deliverance because the body has been voluntarily abandoned and offered as a sacrifice to the holy fire. Hence, the creature gets final emancipation and salvation; his soul will no longer remain entangled in the cycle of birth and death.

To wit, Sabari attained 'Mukti'—i.e. liberation from the seemingly endless cycle of birth and death in which the creature's soul is usually trapped.]

दो०. जाति हीन अघ जन्म महि मुक्त कीन्हि असि नारि । महामंद मन सुख चहसि ऐसे प्रभुहि बिसारि ॥ ३६ ॥

dōhā.

jāti hīna agha janma mahi mukta kīnhi asi nāri.
mahāmanda mana sukha cahasi aisē prabhuhi bisāri. 36.

[Tulsidas observes—] That lady (Sabari) was out-caste, shunned by the society and had a lowly birth, yet she was granted Mukti (liberation and deliverance) by the Lord.

Oh Mana (mind and heart)! Say how supremely foolish and dumb-witted you would be if you forget or neglect such a (magnanimous, benevolent, beneficent, kind, obliging, merciful and gracious) Lord, and try to seek happiness and peace elsewhere. (Doha no. 36)

[Note—The spiritual philosophy outlined in this Doha is more elaborately explained in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 122 along with Chaupai line nos. 12-19 that precede it. These verses are part of my Book titled “Kaagbhusund Ramayan” which has been published separately and is available for the interested reader for download or purchase via the internet.]

चौ०. चले राम त्यागा बन सोऊ । अतुलित बल नर केहरि दोऊ ॥ १ ॥
बिरही इव प्रभु करत बिषादा । कहत कथा अनेक संबादा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

calē rāma tyāgā bana sō'ū. atulita bala nara kēhari dō'ū. 1.
birahī iva prabhu karata biṣādā. kahata kathā anēka sambādā. 2.

Lord Ram then left that forest (i.e. the Dandak forest) and moved ahead (in the direction of the Pampa Lake as advised by Sabari).

Verily, the two brothers were unparalleled in their strength and valour; there were like lions in the human race. (1)

(For the purpose of external show—) The Lord behaved and lamented woefully like a passionate man suffering from excessive grief and overcome with sorrow at being separated from his beloved wife. As he moved along, he spoke of many tales and said many things that indicated this state of his (external) being¹. (2)

[Note—¹Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-17 that precede Doha no. 30 where Lord Ram's external behaviour is the same as referred to here. It is observed in Chaupai line nos. 6 and 17 of these verses that it is a great wonder that the Lord, who is omnipotent, omniscient, dispassionate and steady would act in this way like an ordinary human being lamenting for his lost wife.

But why was it; why did Lord Ram behave like an ordinary man lamenting for his wife? The Lord wanted to maintain this delusion and surround himself with a smoke-screen of doubt about his true identity of the Supreme Being as it was an expedient necessary for eliminating the demons headed by Ravana; for if Ravana got a hint that Lord Ram was not a human being but the Supreme Being himself, then he would soon surrender himself before the Lord and return Sita instead of confronting the Lord and fighting him tooth-and-nail. If he surrendered and asked for forgiveness, the Lord would be morally bound to forgive him, and should this happen the scourge of the demons would remain intact, and the whole exercise of coming down to earth would go down in vain. Ravana was very clever; so in this eventuality, he would keep low for some time and let things cool off before reverting to his old evil ways. What would then happen?

All the sufferings and horrors of mother earth and the gods that Ravana and his ilk had caused, the scourge which Lord Vishnu had promised to eradicate, would be back again with a vengeance. The resurgent Ravana, whose anger and wrath were suppressed due to unfavourable conditions for him, would become more forcefully vindictive and ferociously vicious in wreaking vengeance on those who dared to complain against him to Lord Vishnu. It is a well-established doctrine of political philosophy that once an enemy is identified, he should be completely done away with; any remnant of a thorny plant or a poison, no matter how inconsequential and miniscule and seemingly harmless it seems to be, can grow back into a thorn that would prick to kill, or a potion of poison that is fermented over time would acquire scalding acid-like properties that would burn through!

The world had had enough of Ravana's cruelty and savagery; there was no scope and sense in giving him a second chance, for he was so evil and pervert that instead of actually mending his way by the opportunity given to him by way of goodwill will be employed by him only to recover himself till Lord Ram was somewhere around, and then he would pounce upon his prey, the creatures of the world and the gods of heaven, with full force like a huge meteorite striking the earth with a blast violent enough to reduce everything to rubble.

Consequentially it was necessary to keep the doubts about the Lord's true identity alive; it was vital to let Ravana remain confused about who Lord Ram was, as the former already was totally confounded on this matter—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.

So therefore, had the Lord remained calm and poised and emotionally unmoved when he moved in the open on the path in the forest—as he was when he met Jatau and Sabari and even Kabandha—then Ravana's spies would have immediately got the wind of it and inform Ravana. That would have spoilt the whole master-plan of the Supreme Being who had to take the trouble of becoming a human being precisely for eliminating the scourge known as 'Demonic Ravana'.]

Section 6.1.4—6.1.6: (Lord Ram arrives at Mt. Rishyamook on the banks of Lake Pampa where he meets and befriends Sugriv, the monkey prince; reconnoitring teams of spies and scouts are sent in all directions to find the whereabouts of Sita; one group reaches the shore of the southern ocean from where Hanuman is sent to Lanka to meet Sita and bring back her news:

After providing Mukti to Sabari, the two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, moved in the direction of Lake Pampa as advised by her. At the lake they took some time to rest and refresh themselves. Here the celestial sage Narad met Lord Ram, and the brief conversation between them revolved around spiritual matters and why the Lord had prevented Narad from marrying and getting entangled in routine family matters. The Lord in essence told Narad that for a saint and a sage of his exalted nature, one who has already renounced the world with its material charms and sensual pleasures, it is inappropriate to get involved in it once again, and it is for this basic reason why the Lord prevented him from marrying because the Lord always ensures that the good and well-being of his devotee is taken care of; if by some odd chance the devotee is about to commit some error of judgement which will land him or her in trouble, the Lord steps in to sort out the matter in favour of the devotee.

From there Lord Ram and Laxman moved ahead towards the other end of the lake where a chain of mountains bordering the kingdom of Kishkindha was situated.

The next phase of this marvelous story of ours takes us to the foothills of this chain of mountains, the highest peak of which was called 'Rishyamook', and then to 'Kishkindha', the kingdom of the monkey race. At Rishyamook Lord Ram met and befriended Sugriv, the prince of this kingdom, who promised to the Lord that he would spare no effort to find where Sita was, as well as to help him to retrieve her. It was here that Lord Ram also met Hanuman, one of the chief companions of Sugriv, and hereafter one of the Lord's main devotees and an obedient follower, for whom the word of the Lord was sacrosanct. The Lord spent the rainy season on Mt. Parvarsan, and as autumn arrived and winter was fast approaching, he asked Sugriv to keep his promise—i.e. to make efforts to search Sita.

One very important point is to be noted here. The inhabitants of Kishkindha were probably called 'monkeys and bears' because their lifestyle and habits, their external appearances and characteristic features, their special qualities and abilities were more like those of monkeys and bears than ordinary human beings. For instance, they grew large body hair and nails; they could easily climb trees and leap across branches; they could climb mountains which were difficult for humans to access; they ate forest fruits and lived atop trees in tree-houses; they inhabited thick forested areas away from human population. This was all made necessary as expediencies of life and survival in the hills and forests where they lived. So in effect these inhabitants of Kishkindha were forest and hill dwelling tribes of ancient India.

But they surely weren't animals called "monkeys and bears" in the way we understand these words to mean today; they weren't "animals" like today's monkeys and bears. Come to think of it: even we humans, who pride ourselves as highly civilised and evolved in this creation, actually belong to the "animal kingdom" which science likes to call "zoology"; humans are not studied under the head 'botany' which deals with the members of the plant kingdom, but under the classification of 'zoology'.

For one, these monkeys and bears could walk erect and speak the human tongue in an intelligible way; they were surely bilingual and may be even knew more than one languages like we do today. When they conversed within their own community they used their own lingua franca, and when they interacted with other tribes or foreigners they used a universal language in vogue at the time; and this language was Sanskrit. This is evident from the fact that Lord Ram could talk freely with them in a human tongue, and then we will read later on in the story that Hanuman and Angad would converse with Ravana and Vibhishan etc. who were demons from a different culture. Their interaction was only possible if they could speak a common international language like we use standard English today.

It is said in Adhyatma Ramayan that Hanuman spoke to Lord Ram in perfect Sanskrit language when he met the Lord at the base of Mt. Rishyamook. This was the language of the educated class in those days, and no one can expect a 'monkey', the 'animal', to speak classical language as Hanuman did so much so that even Lord Ram was highly impressed with Hanuman's expertise with the Sanskrit language and its grammar, and the Lord expressed his astonishment on this count to Laxman. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 12-18.

The second important reason is that these monkeys and bears were actually gods who had come down to earth in these forms to help Lord Ram eliminate the scourge of the demons headed by Ravana. This is clearly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188 as well as in Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 29-30.

Coming back to our narrative, a huge reconnoitring team of countless monkey and bear warriors was assembled; it was divided into many groups, and all the groups were dispatched in different directions to search Sita. One such group consisted of some of the most faithful and able chiefs of the community, such as Hanuman, Angad, Nal, Neel and Jamvant etc., was dispatched in the south direction by the Lord and his friend Sugriv as they already knew that Ravana had fled in that direction. This group reached the shores of the southern ocean where they met Sampati, the elder brother of Jatau. Sampati, being a vulture who inherently have the ability to see long distances, told them that Sita was seated under a tree in a garden at Lanka.

It was then decided that Hanuman would go across and meet her personally, and come back with a first-hand report.

These events have been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 5; (ii) Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it; and (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Doha no. 30.

For the purpose of convenience of reading, these episodes have been grouped under three sub-sections as follows:

6.1.4—Here we read about Lord Ram's arrival at Mt. Rishyamook where he meets Hanuman and befriends Sugriv, the monkey prince. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 5.

6.1.5—Lord Ram spends the rainy season on Mt. Pravarsan, and at the end of this season reconnoitring teams of spies and scouts are sent in all directions to find the whereabouts of Sita. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it; (ii) from Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 18; and (iii) from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Doha no. 23.

6.1.6—One such group heads towards the southern ocean, and on the way enters a cave where it meets a hermitress named Swayamprabha. She employs her mystical powers to transfer the messengers of Lord Ram directly to the shore of the ocean across which was situated Lanka where Sita was held captive. At the shore they meet Sampati, the old vulture, who tells them about Sita being actually held captive in Lanka as he could see her sitting there under a tree inside a garden. It is decided then to send Hanuman across the ocean to the island of Lanka to ascertain facts, and come back with a first-hand report of Sita. These developments are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Doha no. 30.

Now let us begin our narration by citing these verses directly from the holy book Ram Charit Manas:-

Section 6.1.4: Lord Ram arrives at Mt. Rishyamook that was situated beyond Lake Pampa; here he meets Hanuman and befriends Sugriv, the monkey prince:

This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 5 as follows:-

चौ०. आगें चले बहुरि रघुराया । रिष्यमूक पर्वत निअराया ॥ १ ॥
 तहँ रह सचिव सहित सुग्रीवा । आवत देखि अतुल बल सींवा ॥ २ ॥
 अति सभीत कह सुनु हनुमाना । पुरुष जुगल बल रूप निधाना ॥ ३ ॥
 धरि बटु रूप देखु तैं जाई । कहेसु जानि जियँ सयन बुझाई ॥ ४ ॥ पठए बालि होहिं मन मैला । भागौं तुरत तजौं यह सैला ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

āgēm calē bahuri raghurāyā. riṣyamūka parbata ni'arāyā. 1.
 taham̃ raha saciva sahita sugrīvā. āvata dēkhi atula bala sīnvā. 2.
 ati sabhīta kaha sunu hanumānā. puruṣa jugala bala rūpa nidhānā. 3.
 dhari baṭu rūpa dēkhu taim̃ jāī. kahēsū jāni jiyam̃ sayana bujhāī. 4.
 paṭha'ē bāli hōhim̃ mana mailā. bhāgaur̃ turata tajaur̃ yaha sailā. 5.

The Lord of the Raghu's line of kings ("raghurāyā"; Lord Ram) then moved ahead and neared Mt. Rishyamook¹. (1)

On the summit of this mountain lived Sugriv (the prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha²) with his ministers and courtiers. He saw the two brothers, who from their very appearance seemed to possess immeasurable strength and looked most valiant, approaching the place. (2)

This sight made him sore affright³; so he said to Hanuman (who was his close confidante and companion), 'Listen Hanuman⁴! These two gentlemen look as if they are repositories of immense strength and unparalleled valour. (3)

You go to them disguised as a young Brahmin student (dhari baṭu rūpa)⁵ and look into the matter; find out their intention, why have they come here in this direction, and then signal to me by a gesture of your eyes (to tell me if they are friendly or not). (4)

In case you discover that they have been sent by Baali and have some sort of ill-intentions that would create some danger for me, then indicate to me by your gesture so that I will make good my escape and run away from here immediately, abandoning this mountain forthwith.' (5)

[Note—¹Mt. Rishyamook was on the far end of Lake Pampa; it was a part of a chain of hills that lay on the outer fringes of the kingdom of Kishkindha. It is so called because sage Matang used to do Tapa (penances; austerity; stern religious practices) silently here. "Rishya = Rishi = a sage"; "Mook = silent".

Another interpretation is that a special class of deer called Rishya used to live in and around this mountain; these animals moved around silently like sages. The mountain got its name from them.

According to Valmiki's Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 73, verse nos. 32-34, it was first created by Brahma, the creator of this world. It had a thick cover of evergreen trees, and was steep and so thickly covered by creepers and undergrowth that it was difficult to climb it easily. It was further made inaccessible by abundance of snakes that were found everywhere on it.

This mountain was uninhabited and so inhospitable that no one would even think of coming here to hide. Besides its general foreboding atmosphere, it also bore sage Matang's curse which said that if Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv who turned to become his arch enemy, ever came there, his head would break to many pieces, i.e. he would die.

The reason for the sage cursing Baali is that the latter used to be very restless; he would come to that forest to eat fruits, shake trees violently and break their branches and leaves, littering the whole place near sage Matang's hermitage, make a lot of noise and create general nuisance. The sage got infuriated and cursed him that if he ever dared to come near that place then his head would break up into many pieces.

Another reason says that when Baali killed the demon Dundubhi, he flung his body for a distance of 1 Yojan (roughly 8 miles); this carcass fell near the sage's hermitage, and blood and flesh littered the place. So the angry sage cursed Baali that anyone who would one day reduce the heap of bones that formed a mountain at the spot where the dead body fell into rubble, and cut the seven tall trees that grew on this mountain, would kill Baali. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 7; and Valmiki Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 11, verse no. 47 etc.

So Sugriv and his companions found Mt. Rishyamook a perfect place to live without fear of Baali.

²As we have read in the introduction of this sub-section, the inhabitants of Kishkindha were not actual 'monkeys and bears' as we may think, but they were so-called because of their lifestyle and habits, their external appearances and characteristic features, their special qualities and abilities which were more like those of monkeys and bears than ordinary human beings. For instance, they grew large body hair and nails; they could easily climb trees and leap across branches; they could climb mountains which were difficult for humans to access; they ate forest fruits and lived atop trees in tree-houses; they inhabited thick forested areas away from human population. This was all made necessary as expediencies of life and survival in the hills and forests where they lived. So in effect these inhabitants of Kishkindha were forest and hill dwelling tribes of ancient India.

But they surely weren't animals called "monkeys and bears" in the way we understand these words to mean today; they weren't "animals" like today's monkeys and bears. Come to think of it: even we humans, who pride ourselves as highly civilised and evolved in this creation, actually belong to the "animal kingdom" which science likes to call "zoology"; humans are not studied under the head 'botany' which deals with the members of the plant kingdom, but under the classification of 'zoology'.

For one, these monkeys and bears could walk erect and speak the human tongue in an intelligible way; they were surely bilingual and may be even knew more than one languages like we do today. When they conversed within their own community they used their own lingua franca, and when they interacted with other tribes or foreigners they used a universal language in vogue at the time; and this language was Sanskrit. This is evident from the fact that Lord Ram could talk freely with them in a human tongue, and then we will read later on in the story that Hanuman and Angad would converse with Ravana and Vibhishan etc. who were demons from a different culture. Their interaction was only possible if they could speak a common international language like we use standard English today.

It is said in Adhyatma Ramayan that Hanuman spoke to Lord Ram in perfect Sanskrit language when he met the Lord at the base of Mt. Rishyamook. This was the language of the educated class in those days, and no one can expect a ‘monkey’, the ‘animal’, to speak classical language as Hanuman did so much so that even Lord Ram was highly impressed with Hanuman’s expertise with the Sanskrit language and its grammar, and the Lord expressed his astonishment on this count to Laxman. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 12-18.

The second important reason is that these monkeys and bears were actually gods who had come down to earth in these forms to help Lord Ram eliminate the scourge of the demons headed by Ravana. This is clearly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188 as well as in Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 29-30.

³What made Sugriv so terrified of strangers? The reason has been described in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-13 that precede Doha no. 6.

In brief however, this story is this: Sugriv had developed some misunderstanding with his elder brother Baali (also pronounced as Vaali) who first thrashed him severely and then ousted him from the capital of Kishkindha. Sugriv was pursued by Baali relentlessly; eventually he came to live on Mt. Rishyamook on the advice of Hanuman and others as it was safe from any attack from Baali because he would dare not come here.

But though Baali would not come personally, he still could send some powerful warrior in disguise to square up with his brother-turned-enemy Sugriv and kill him. This probability made Sugriv afraid of any stranger coming that way, more so because that area was almost barren of life and far away from any other inhabited area or civilisation; no one ventured that way and it was almost out of bounds for travellers.

⁴Another interesting question that arises here is this: Of all his companions, why did Sugriv select Hanuman for this mission? It was because by experience Sugriv knew very well that Hanuman was exceptionally intelligent, wise and practical; he could tackle matters himself and solve the issue on the spot without further instructions or consultations; he was trust-worthy, faithful and honest; and he was fearless, prudent, brave, courageous, strong and powerful to face any adverse situation should it arise unexpectedly; Sugriv knew that no one could compare with Hanuman in these qualities. This fact is reiterated in Valmiki’s Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Canto 2, verse nos. 13-19; (ii) Canto 44, verse nos.1, 6-8.

Meanwhile, one would like to read a little more about Hanuman: who he was? A brief life-sketch of Hanuman is added at the end of the notes to these verses; it is marked by * sign.

⁵Why did Sugriv advise Hanuman to go as a ‘Brahmin student’ (a “baṭu rūpa”) to meet Lord Ram? Well, the two brothers were armed with bows and arrows, had quivers tied to their waists, the way they walked with dignified steps fearlessly and with confidence, their general manners and bearing—all gave an impression that they were some noble men and great warriors. Sugriv, who was already apprehensive about them and their objective of coming that way, did not wish to take risk. He knew that everyone respects a Brahmin and trusts him; so if Hanuman goes there attired as a Brahmin, especially as a student, then the chances of these two strangers harming him or deceiving him as to their purpose of coming here were minimal.

Why as Hanuman advised to go as a ‘student’ instead of as an adult Brahmin? The reason is this: Had Hanuman gone to meet the Lord as an ‘adult Brahmin’, there were chances that the Lord would immediately become suspicious about him because the area of the forest where this interaction took place was deep in the forest, a remote area that was far from civilisation and virtually uninhabited as it lay beyond the famous Dandkak forest which was itself literally intractable. Adult Brahmins lived in populated areas such as villages, towns and cities, but not in the far depth of a forest. A young Brahmin-student, however, would go to distant places to study under renowned sages and seers who usually had their hermitages in forests as they needed quietude for their spiritual pursuits; some senior ones even lived on mountains and hill tops, and though they did not maintain hermitages per se, yet they would occasionally accept isolated students who they thought were eager for knowledge and worthy to be imparted the knowledge that only these sages possessed.

To wit, the chances of meeting an adult Brahmin in this part of the land were very remote; but in case of a ‘student’ it was quite possible that he was on the way to his Guru’s (teacher’s) hermitage to study, and he met the two brothers on the path by pure good chance. His Guru could well be an aged sage or seer living on one of the mountains or hills in that area. So this form of Hanuman as a ‘student’ would not arouse any suspicion in the mind of the two brothers as an adult Brahmin would surely do—so reasoned Sugriv.

There were some other reasons that too weighed in favour of sending Hanuman disguised as a ‘student Brahmin’. If a young boy makes some mistake he is usually overlooked by an adult; so if by some misadventure Hanuman said something or any of his gestures or actions were such as to cause a bit of annoyance to the two strangers, there were fair chances that they would overlook it as a youngster’s error committed in folly, and forgive him.

Further, this form of a ‘student’ would enable Hanuman to bow and pay his respects to the two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, is expected to show respect to elders even if he is Brahmin, otherwise it would be bad manners for the boy. When the strangers see that the student who is interacting with them is good mannered, polite and cultured they would be willing to reciprocate and engage with him; this was vital to extract the information needed by Sugriv.

On the other hand, if Hanuman appeared as an adult Brahmin, there were chances that the two brothers would just pay their homage to him and move on. An adult Brahmin would have to maintain his dignity and decorum; he would not be expected to bow and show other forms of respect to the visitors with the same ease with which a young boy could do.

So now, since these so-called monkeys were virtually like humans as we have noted herein above, it wasn’t difficult for Hanuman to disguise himself as a Brahmin student when he came down the summit of the mountain to meet Lord Ram. He had only to wear appropriate clothes and apply some holy marks on his forehead and body, such as make a Tilak mark on his forehead, sling a sacred thread across his shoulders, and tie his hairs in a tuft at the back of his head, to indicate that he was a Brahmin student.

And then he spoke with Lord Ram in the human tongue during the interview; in fact, to be precise, it was in perfect Sanskrit that Hanuman interacted with Lord Ram as noted in note no. 2 herein above. Hence, the Lord felt he was in the company of educated natives who could talk in the Lord's language, and it would be practical and prudent to become friendly with them, if no other reason than at least because he has to cross this country to reach the place where Sita was held captive by Ravana. If these natives could speak Sanskrit then, the Lord thought, communication would not be a barrier any more.

Lord Ram was in an alien country; it was wise to be friendly with the natives of the place. The Lord needed help to find Sita, and he reasoned that if he was good and friendly towards these natives then they would be cooperative and helpful; they will extend logistical help, and manpower too could be easily arranged.

*⁴A life sketch of Hanuman is narrated in the following scriptures—(i) Anand Ramayan, Saar Kand, Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 155-190; (ii) Valmiki's Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Sarga (Canto) 66, verse nos. 1-17 (as narrated by Jamvant, the Bear king); Uttar Kand, Sarga 35-36 (as described to Sri Ram by sage Agastya).

Wonderful hymns dedicated to Lord Hanuman are found in Tulsidas' "Vinai Patrika", verse nos. 25-36.

These describe Hanuman as the Son of the Wind God. The story of Hanuman being the son of the Wind God is briefly this: An Apsara (a heavenly damsel of great beauty) named Punjiksthal became the daughter of a monkey named Kunjar. Her name was Anjana, and she was married to Kesari. One day Anjana assumed a form of a human female, adorned her self with ornaments and garlands of choicest flowers, and went to the top of a mountain to enjoy the beauty of Nature that spread all around her. Her bewitching beauty attracted the attention of the Wind God who embraced her (in the form of a soft, pleasant and fragrant gust of wind that swirled all around her, enveloping her from all sides). As a result of this embrace, Anjana gave birth to a son who had all the excellent virtues of the Wind God: he possessed stupendous powers, had astounding strength, was matchless in valiance and courage, his intelligence and wisdom had no parallel, radiance effused from him like a divine glow, and he was a personified form of glory and excellence. That is why Hanuman is usually called the 'son of the Wind God'.

But it is also universally believed that Hanuman is a manifestation of Lord Shiva, and represents the 'Tej' (glory and dynamism) of Lord Ram. This is clearly mentioned in Brihad Brahm Sanhita, Chapter (Pratham) 3, Canto (Adhyaya) 1, verse (Shloka) no. 102. This verse also says that it is Lord Shiva who manifested also as Sankarshan, one of the forms of Lord Vishnu. In the case of Hanuman, it is said here that "Hanuman is a manifestation of Lord Maha Shiva, and represents the Tej (glory and dynamic aspect) of Lord Ram".

There are three Gods in the Trinity—viz. Brahma is the creator, Vishnu is the sustainer and protector of creation, and Shiva is the concluder who brings about the end of creation when the time comes. In the story of the Ramayan, Lord Vishnu manifested himself as Lord Ram, the prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya, Brahma became the Jamvant who was an old and wise chief of the bear community who lived in the kingdom of Kishkindha, and Shiva took the form of Hanuman who was an ardent and faithful devotee of Lord Ram as well as one of the chief advisors of Sugriv, the king of Kishkindha, the kingdom of the monkey race.

Lord Shiva reveres Lord Ram, constantly chants his holy name “Ram”, and worships the Lord as his chosen deity. So when the time came to serve Lord Ram during his manifestation on earth, Shiva did not wish to lose this opportunity; he therefore chose to become a monkey known as Hanuman so that he will not only have a chance to be helpful to his beloved Lord but also be able to serve him diligently, and in the case need arose, to extend full protection to Lord Ram. In fact it was Hanuman who had actually found Sita, Lord Ram’s wife who was abducted by the demon king Ravana, imprisoned in Lanka. Further we read that in the epic war of Lanka, when the forces of Lord Ram consisting of the monkeys and the bears of Kishkindha had fought a no-holds barred bloody battle with the demon forces of Ravana, it was Hanuman who had played a pivotal role of singular importance; he was crucial to the winning of the war in general. Even Lord Ram had acknowledged Hanuman’s valour and praised him lavishly during the heat of battle once when he told Laxman, his younger brother, that there was only one warrior he sees in the whole battle field of Lanka who has taken the demon-bull by its horns, and this warrior was none other than Hanuman. This is clearly stated in Kavitawali Ramayan of Goswami Tulsidas, Lanka Kand, verse no. 40.

Not only this, Lord Ram had publicly shown his affection for Hanuman when he lovingly embraced him and declared that he would forever remain indebted to Hanuman: refer—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 32. The occasion was Hanuman bringing the news of Sita and conveying it to Lord Ram.

The especial bond that existed between Lord Ram and Hanuman was unique, and it is no where more evident than the time when they first met at the base of Mt. Rishyamook. Lord Ram and Hanuman had both become overwhelmed with tidal waves of affectionate emotions so much that while Hanuman’s voice trembled, his body was thrilled and he could barely stifle his sobs, Lord Ram wept and tears flowed down his eyes even as he clasped Hanuman to his bosom. There seemed no formality or artificiality in this spontaneous burst of loving emotions; Hanuman had become so joyous that he lost control over his senses so much that instead of showing respect to his Lord he went on to reprimand Lord Ram for forgetting him for so long. It was like a scene of two fast friends who had been separated long back due to misfortunes inflicted upon them by providence had one day met each other most unexpectedly at a place and time that they weren’t aware of a minute ago. This episode is fully narrated in vivid details in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 2—Doha no. 3.

And as if to add a tiara to the crown, or a diamond that is placed centrally on the helm of this crown, it was only Hanuman who was allowed by Lord Ram to stay with him after he returned home to Ayodhya at the end of his 14-year forest sojourn; and Hanuman stayed with the Lord for the rest of his time on earth.

To wit, Lord Hanuman was one of the greatest devotees of Lord Ram. His devotion for Lord Ram had no match. He is regarded as the wisest, the most enlightened and a highly self-realised soul. He is an incarnation of the eleventh form of Lord Shiva that is known as Rudra. When Lord Vishnu decided to manifest himself as Lord Ram in this world, all the different Gods has assumed various forms to serve the Lord. Shiva had taken the form of Hanuman to serve Lord Ram.

According to the Purans (mythological histories), the name of his mother was Anjana. She was the wife of the monkey king Kesari. He was born as a grace of the Wind God, also known as Marut. Hence, Hanuman was also known as ‘Anjaneya’ or ‘Maruti’. However, his most common name ‘Hanuman’ is derived from the fact that once he had been hit by the ‘Vajra’, the hard weapon of Indra, the king of Gods. The story goes that once, a little time after his birth, the infant Hanuman had felt extremely hungry, and seeing the rising sun he thought it to be some ripe red fruit dangling from the sky. So he leapt to the sky to eat the rising sun. Incidentally, it was the time of the solar eclipse, when, according to mythology, the head of the demon known as Rahu was proceeding to devour the sun. When he saw Hanuman rushing towards the sun, Rahu ran away scared, thinking that Hanuman was some competitor who was out there to grab his food. Rahu complained to Indra, the king of Gods, that he is being denied his regular meal. At this, Indra intervened. When Hanuman saw Indra approaching astride his white majestic elephant known as Eraavat, he thought that it was some other white fruit. So he left sun alone and instead leapt at Eraavat. Indra was shocked, confounded and perplexed, and in order to stop Hanuman he threw his formidable weapon known as Vajra. The Vajra hit him on the chin, thereby causing a dent. The jaw swelled as result. This incident gave ‘Hanuman’ his famous name.

The word ‘Hanu’ means the lower jaw, the chin, while ‘Maan’ means to hit to subdue or defeat. Another interpretation is that ‘Hanu’ means to crush, to trounce, to take away, or to eliminate, and ‘Maan’ means one’s pride, arrogance, haughtiness and ego. So the composite word ‘Hanuman’ refers to this incident when Indra had subdued the son of the Wind God by breaking his chin-bone as a token punishment for him being extremely arrogant and unnecessarily mischievous.

But when the Wind God saw that Hanuman was hurt, he became extremely angry as Hanuman was born as his grace, so he stopped the movement of air. This caused suffocation in this creation and all the Gods were on the verge of asphyxiation. So they appeased the Wind God by blessing Hanuman with invincibility and formidable powers. This made Hanuman immortal and immune to the dangers of fire, water and wind.

As for the colour of Hanuman’s face being ‘of a red tinge’, there are two tales in this regard. One says that his fair skin was tanned red due to the intense heat of the sun as once he had leapt into the sky to eat the sun, thinking it to be some big red fruit dangling from the sky. Another legend says that when he saw Sita applying the red vermilion powder on her head and when asked about it was told that it was a mark that showed that Sita was eternally a wife of Lord Ram, or was inseparable from the Lord, Hanuman applied this powder on his whole face to please the Lord and signal to him that if a single dot or a line of red on Sita’s head could endear her to Lord Ram so much, how much more the Lord will love to see Hanuman with his whole countenance coloured in red of the vermilion.

Once as a child he was even cursed by sages because of his mischievous nature as he used to play havoc with the trees and plants around the hermitages and forests where they lived, uprooting them, breaking their branches, eating their fruits and littering the place all around. So they cursed him that he would forget his powers till the time someone reminded him about them. As it happened, when the monkeys and bears set out in search of Sita, who had been abducted by the demon king of Lanka known as Ravana, and had reached the shores of the vast ocean, they faced the formidable challenge of having to cross it, face this formidable enemy, and come back alive. It was then that Jamvant, the old patriarch of the bears, had reminded Hanuman about his lost strength. Hanuman regained his old stupendous powers and abilities, and he was the one who not only crossed the ocean but also burnt Lanka before coming back with the news of Sita. These events are narrated in the epic Ramayana in great detail.

Hanuman can be likened to a diamond amongst all the characters in the epic story of Ramayan which deals with Lord Vishnu's incarnation as Lord Ram. In fact, the story of Lord Ram and his conquest of Lanka would not have been what it was without Hanuman. Even Lord Ram had openly accepted his indebtedness to Hanuman.

Hanuman was very dear to Lord Ram. The Lord was exceptionally obliged to him, and on several occasions he had expressed this too. Hanuman was more close to Lord Ram than any other single character in the Ramayana. Whenever the Lord needed help, he looked at Hanuman. Hanuman had always repeated the holy Name of Lord Ram silently, and this gave him immense strength and peace. By the way of the Name, Hanuman was able to have the Lord stay with him always. The best proof of the Lord recognizing this divine quality and spiritual nature of Hanuman was when the Lord directed him to stay in this world at the time of the Lord's own departure for his heavenly abode at the end of his tenure on this earth, and keep the light of the Lord's glory alight by way of repeating his divine Name and ensuring protection for those who said the Lord's Name. In other words, the Lord had appointed Hanuman as the heir to his legacy, and passed on the baton of Dharma (virtues of righteousness, probity, propriety, nobility and auspiciousness) and Satya (truth) to him to act as their custodian on the strength of Lord's holy Name.

We read in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 26 that Hanuman was able to keep Lord Ram under his loving sway by the virtue of repeating the Lord's holy Name constantly.

So therefore, when Lord Ram left this world for his heavenly abode during the final episodes of Ramayana, all those who were close to him as well as the rest of his subjects had also left this world with the Lord. But Hanuman remained behind with the express mandate from the Lord to ensure that the Lord's glory as well as the glory of his divine name can be perpetuated, and to ensure that the devotees of the Lord can be afforded protection. This has been narrated in (i) Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga (Canto) 9, verse nos. 34-36; (ii) Anand Ramayan, Purva Kand, Sarga (Canto) 5, verse nos. 9-13; (iii) Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga 108, verse nos. 32-35.

Hanuman had immense mental and physical agility, strength, power and prowess. His character was immaculate and his intellect was of high refinement. He had complete, unchallenged and unparalleled knowledge of the scriptures. One of the reasons is that his teacher was the Sun God himself who had taught him all the Vedas and other scriptures. His speech was elegant and scholarly. He is regarded as a treasury of the eight Siddhis (mystical powers) and the nine Nidhis (spiritual assets). He was a renunciate and a celibate since birth.

The eight Siddhis which Hanuman possessed were the following—(i) 'Anima'—means the power to become microscopic or so minute that one becomes invisible to the naked eye; to become small like an atom; (ii) 'Mahima'—is to have majesty, glory and fame; to be honoured and acknowledged for one's achievements, wisdom, erudition, knowledge and skills; to become huge like a mountain, thereby standing out and being unique or special in a crowd; (iii) 'Garima'—is to be heavy-weight in any field, to have special qualities that give one's ideas and words a great amount of importance and weight; to have stature, dignity, decorum, gravity and significance; (iv) 'Laghima'—is the grand virtue of being simple and humble inspite of being great, powerful and authoritative; it is to have simplicity and humility despite possessing grandeur, majesty, power, authority and magnificence; (v) 'Praapti'—is to be able to attain, gain or obtain anything wished or desired for; (vi) 'Praakramya'—is to have valour, ardour, strength, powers, prowess, potential and punch leading to triumph, glory and majesty; (vii) 'Ishwatwa'—is to be able to have lordship or sway over everything else; to be able to rule over others; (viii) 'Vashitwa'—is to be able to control and subdue others, and exert influence on them so much so that they become obedient and subservient.

The nine Nidhis that Hanuman possessed were the following— Spiritual assets—according to saint Tulsidas' epic Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha 35-36, they are—(i) communion with saints and pious people where the Lord's glories are being sung, (ii) serving one's teacher and elders, (iii) praising the Lord's glories and doing Kirtan and Bhajan which are community singing of the Lord's glories, (iv) repeating the divine Mantras or holy words of the Lord, i.e. doing Japa, (v) having such virtues as 'Dam' or tolerance, patience, fortitude and resilience, 'Sheel' or good and righteous demeanours, 'Virati' or being renunciate and detached from deeds and to be dispassionate towards the world, 'Sam' or equanimity, looking everything as Brahm, having a non-dual approach of or view of the world, 'Santosh' or contentedness, and 'SaraI' or simplicity and humility, (vi) having no deceit, conceit and falsehoods, (vii) not finding faults with others and criticising them unnecessarily, (viii) to have firm reliance and faith in the Lord, and (ix) not to feel dejected, depressed, despaired, inferior, lowly and condemned under any adverse circumstances, because the great and merciful Lord is always with them.

According to another version, the nine Nidhis are the various special virtues or qualities or attributes that one possesses, and which make him special amongst others. They are the following—(i) Buddhi—intelligence and the power to discriminate, to think sharply, quickly, logically, rationally, deeply and analytically. (ii) Bal—strength, vigour and power of the body and of the mind as well as of the spirit. (iii) Yasha—fame, good reputation and name; majesty and renown. (iv) Dhairya—to have courage, fortitude, resilience, ability to hold on in the face of greatest adversity, misfortune and opposition. (v) Nirbhayataa—fearlessness, courage, bravery and an indomitable spirit. (vi) Aarogyataa—to be freed from diseases and illnesses, both mental as well as bodily. (vii) Ajaadyataa—the opposite of Jadataa; to be free from the negative trait of inertia, lethargy, depression, stagnation, lack of drive, initiative and will power. (viii) Vaakya-patutaa—to be an expert orator; speaking skills, eloquence, diplomacy, and wise and intelligent choice of the spoken word. (ix) Bhakti—to have steady and robust devotion, loyalty, dedication and conviction for one's chosen deity and faith. This quality, of course, comes under the category of spiritual assets also.

Other variations include the following qualities in this list of Nidhis because they are like an asset for a man which stand him in good stead in his life— (i) Sham—having self restraint and control; having peace, tranquility, serenity and quietness; being able to suppress desires, yearnings and natural instincts and impulses. (ii) Dam—tolerance, forbearance, fortitude. (iii) Upriti—renunciation, detachment, dispassion, indifference and non-involvement. (iv) Titksha—endurance, patience, fortitude, sufferance, equanimity. (v) Samadhan—the ability to find a solution, an answer to even the most vexing problem; lack of confusion or doubts; clarity of thoughts and conception. (vi) Shraddha—having faith, belief, conviction, reverence and devotion. (vii) Sakhya—friendship and the ability to co-exist with even one's adversary. (viii) Daya—kindness, compassion, graciousness. (ix) Atma Bodh—self-realisation and awareness about the true nature of one's conscious 'self', to be enlightened about the Atma, the pure consciousness, that resides inside one's inner self as his soul, as his Spirit.

Sometimes, the last Nidhi of 'Atma Bodh' is replaced with 'Seva' or the natural habit of serving others selflessly.

Faces of Hanuman—In iconography, Hanuman is depicted as having five, ten or eleven faces.

(a) The five faces of Hanuman are as follows—(i) in the eastern direction it is that of a monkey; (ii) in the southern direction it is that of Lord Nrisingh; (iii) in the western direction it is that of Lord Garuda; (iv) in the northern direction it is that of Lord Varaha; and (v) in the zenith it is that of Lord Hayagriva.

The genesis of the story is linked with the battle of Lanka when the son of the ten-headed Ravana, known as Mahi-Ravana, had kidnapped Ram and Laxman and hid them underground in the nether world. He prepared them to sacrifice to the goddess whom he worshipped in order to please the goddess so that his father Ravana could win the war. When Hanuman got the wind of it, he went to the nether world and hid behind the idol of the goddess. The demon Mahi-Ravana offered all sorts of inedible things to the goddess—such as wine, excreta, meat, urine etc. He had his eyes closed in meditation. So Hanuman assumed this heads and ate up all the offerings. Finally, when the wicked demon thought that the sacrifice is finished and the goddess is happy with him, he was about to chop off the heads of the two brothers at the altar, Hanuman emerged from hiding in this ferocious form with five heads (or according to the previous narration with eleven unconventional heads) to kill the demon. It is believed that even Ram and Laxman could not recognize Hanuman in that form till the time they saw his monkey head with which he bowed before the Lord.

In essence we can say that Hanuman epitomised the glory of knowledge and the Shakti of the Supreme Brahman rolled into one. When he appeared to save Ram and Laxman from the clutches of Mahi-Ravana, he represented the supreme power of creation. This form of Hanuman—whether it is of five heads or nine heads or eleven heads—implies that all the fundamental forces of Nature had joined hands to get rid of or negate the negative forces that had become ascendant, and to restore the balance in favour of the positive forces and principles of creation.

The five faces of Hanuman stand for the following—(i) the five elements of creation, viz. sky, air, fire, water and earth. (ii) the five chief vital winds called Prans—viz. Pran, Apan, Samaan, Vyaan and Udaan. This fits in perfectly with the fact that Hanuman is regarded as the son of the Wind God.

(b) The ten or eleven faces of Hanuman—According to another version, Hanuman is shown as having eleven or ten faces as follows—(i) in the eastern direction it is that of a monkey (Hanuman in his original form); (ii) in the south-east corner (called 'Agnaya Kona') it is that of a Kshatriya (warrior class); (iii) in the southern direction it is that of Lord Nrisingh (half man and half lion incarnation of Vishnu); (iv) in the south-west corner (called 'Nairitya Kona') it is that of Lord Ganesh; (v) in the western direction it is that of Harishwar (Hari or Vishnu; or it can be interpreted as Hari's Lord or Shiva in line with the term Rameshwar which is one of the forms of Shiva); (vi) in the north-west corner (called 'Vaayavya Kona') it is that of Lord Bhairav (one of the forms of Shiva); (vii) in the northern direction it is that of Varaha; (viii) in the north-east corner (called 'Ishan Kona') it is that of Lord Rudra (one of the forms of Shiva); and (ix) in the zenith corner (above; towards the sky) it is that of Lord Hayagriva (Lord Sun; Vishnu with a horse's head; one of the many incarnations of Vishnu).

In this above description only nine faces are given; two are missing. The other two faces are that of Lord Garuda (mount of Vishnu) and Lord Shiva. In this version, the face on the west side is that of Garuda (instead of Harishwar), and Lord Varaha faces in the lower direction called nadir. The eleventh face is a combination of all the faces—i.e. it is the face of all-encompassing and all-incorporating Lord Isha.

The point to note here are that all these forms are manifestations or representations of the five or the eleven principal 'Tattwas' or the fundamental elements of creation. The eleven heads are symbols of the following Tattwas—the five elements (sky, air, fire, water and earth) + five vital winds (Pran, Apan, Samaan, Vyaan and Udaan) + Chitta (mind and its sub-conscious). These eleven Tattwas form the basic units which combine together to form the physical body of any living being. It will be noted that only nine specific heads are mentioned though the total number of heads are eleven. Well, the significance of the number 'nine' vis-à-vis the nine Tattwas is as follows—

'The Pashupat Brahm Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, Canto 1, verse no. 14 says that there are nine Tattvas which are actually subtle revelations of the supreme Brahm. They are the following—The three fundamental Gunas, i.e. the Sata, the Raja and the Tama, the three basic characters of the Atma known as Sat-Chit-Anand, i.e. Sat (truth), Chitta (consciousness) and Anand (bliss), and the three forms of divinity represented by the Trinity Gods, i.e. Brahma the creator, Vishnu the sustainer, and Rudra the concluder of creation, represent the nine Tattvas of creation.'

The Par Brahm Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, verse no. 5 says that the sacred thread that is worn by Brahmins has three main strands, and each strand consists of three sub-strands. The total number of strands thus becomes nine (3 x 3 = 9). These nine strands symbolically represent the nine Tattvas of creation which actually stand for the nine revelations of the same Brahm. The fact that the sacred thread has nine finer strands is endorsed in the Pashupat Brahm Upanishad, Canto 1, verse no. 27.'

It must be remembered that Hanuman is not an ordinary soul, but he is the most enlightened One to have come on this earth. He is regarded as the leader in the community of the wise and enlightened ones. There is no wonder in it because of two reasons—one, he is Shiva personified, and Shiva is the most enlightened amongst the Trinity Gods, and second, his teacher was the Sun God who is personification of the Supreme Brahm, and his brilliant light is a metaphor of the immensity of knowledge and enlightenment he has as well as the light this knowledge provides to the world. Without knowledge this world would be engulfed in a thick shroud of darkness of ignorance symbolized by the night.

The importance of the figure five is of great metaphysical importance. It represents the Pancha Mahaabh. They were formed at the beginning of creation, and consist of earth, water or fluid, fire or energy, air or wind and sky or space elements in increasing degree of subtlety. They can be studied at two levels—one at the very core level, and the other at the more general level.

The study of the body at the core level of the five Bhuts consisting of the five primary elements consisting of the sky or space, air or wind, fire or energy, water or fluids, and earth. Refer verse nos. 1-2, and 5-6 of Shaarirako-panishad. Briefly, the earth element formed the solid part of the body, the water element formed the fluid part, the fire element formed the warmth and heat of the body, the movement of the body is revelation of the air element, and the subtle space between various organs and tissues of the body, both at the external as well as internal levels, is the sky element.

The next level would be the various Koshas or Sheaths that are made of a combination of these five elements. They are the following—Anna Maye Kosh (the food sheath), Pran Maye Kosh (the vital wind sheath), Manomaye Kosh (the mind sheath), Vigyan Maye Kosh (the intellect sheath), and Anand Maye Kosh (the bliss sheath). These Koshas are also like the elements or units that decide the complexities of the creature's body and its position in the hierarchy of evolution.

All the living organisms can be classified into the following five types depending upon the number of Koshas they have—(i) Udbhij—these are those life forms that are born from seeds, such as members of the plant kingdom. These have only one Kosha, the Anna Maye Kalaa. In other words, they depend on food and become food for others higher up in the evolutionary ladder. (ii) Swedaj—they are those which are born from dampness and sweat, such as fungi, algae, bacteria, germs, mosquito, lice, flies etc. They have two Koshas, viz. Anna Maye and Pran Maye. That is, they are formed from food, they live for food and they die as food. Besides this, they also exhibit signs of life, e.g. the mosquito and lice have life like any other member of the animal kingdom. (iii) Andaj—they are placed higher up in the evolutionary ladder, and are born from eggs, whether inside the mother's womb or outside. Such birds as pigeon, sparrow, parrot, peacock etc. come under this category. They have three Koshas which are Anna Maye, Pran Maye and Mano-maye. The last Kosh refers to the fact that such creatures have a mind and heart which enables them to think, albeit in a primitive level. (iv) Jaruyuj—these are the creatures that are born as embryo that develops inside the mother's womb. Under this class come the animals such as horses, cows, dogs, elephants etc. They have four Koshas, such as Anna Maye, Pran Maye, Mano-maye and Vigyan Maye. The last Kosh refers to their ability to have a higher level of thinking ability called intelligence. The human being comes under this last category with the added benefit of having five Koshas. Besides the four Koshas mentioned above in other creatures of this category, the man has the fifth one and it is called the Anand Maye Kosh. It is only possessed by a man and not by other creatures in the sense that the man can realise the true meaning of the terms 'bliss and happiness that is eternal and substantial' by the virtue of his attaining higher level of intelligence and his ability to delve into the secrets of the concept of truth itself and then realising that kind of happiness and bliss that is not superficial and which is not limited to enjoyment of the sensual pleasures of the body and the material comforts of the world, but which has a holistic and all-inclusive dimension that incorporates the spirit or the soul.]

बिप्र रूप धरि कपि तहँ गयऊ । माथ नाइ पूछत अस भयऊ ॥ ६ ॥

को तुम्ह स्यामल गौर सरीरा । छत्री रूप फिरहु बन बीरा ॥ ७ ॥

कठिन भूमि कोमल पद गामी । कवन हेतु बिचरहु बन स्वामी ॥ ८ ॥

मृदुल मनोहर सुंदर गाता । सहत दुसह बन आतप बाता ॥ ९ ॥

की तुम्ह तीनि देव महँ कोऊ । नर नारायन की तुम्ह दोऊ ॥ १० ॥

bipra rūpa dhari kapi taham̃ gaya'ū. mātha nā'i pūchata asa bhaya'ū. 6.

kō tumha syāmala gaura sarīrā. chatrī rūpa phirahu bana bīrā. 7.

kaṭhina bhūmi kōmala pada gāmī. kavana hētu bicarahu bana svāmī. 8.

mṛdula manōhara sundara gātā. sahata dusaha bana ātapa bātā. 9.

kī tumha tīni dēva maham̐ kō'ū. nara nārāyana kī tumha dō'ū. 10.

Hanuman (“Kapi”; literally the monkey) assumed the form of a Brahmin and went there (down the mountain, to meet the two travellers, Lord Ram and Laxman). He bowed his head reverentially before the Lord¹ and enquired as follows—(6)

‘Who are you two, one with a dark and the other with a fair complexion? You look like Kshatriyas (the warrior class; a valiant, brave and courageous race) who are roaming in the forest; prithe, please say what is the reason for your wandering here in the wilds? (7)

The ground is hard and very harsh to walk on barefoot, while your feet are very soft and tender. Oh Lord (svāmī)! This being the case, what is the reason for you roaming around (barefoot) in this wilderness that the forest is²? (8)

Your bodies are tender, charming and handsome (like that of great princes), and here you are enduring such extreme hardships in the forest, facing adversities such as the heat of the sun and the blow of the wind! Say, what is the reason for this misfortune (that seems to have befallen you)? (9)

Or else, are you a manifestation of one of the Gods of the Trinity (i.e. are you either of Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva); or is that you two are Nara (the Jiva; the living being) and Narayan (the Supreme Being; the cosmic Male) themselves who have assumed your forms³? Please be kind to tell me, which of these are you two. (10)

[Note—¹Hanuman was in the form of a Brahmin before whom others bow their heads, and it is not the other way round. So it seems out of place that Hanuman, who was in the attire of a Brahmin, should bow to a stranger. But in this case he was in the disguise of a young student, and not an adult Brahmin. Being a student and much younger in age to the visitors, it was his duty to show respect to the guests by bowing to them.

Further, Lord Ram and Laxman were attired as hermits and were senior in age, while Hanuman was in the guise of a young Brahmin student. Hence, Lord Ram and Laxman deserved respect from the young student.

Another reason is that as soon as Hanuman came near Lord Ram, his sixth sense, his intuitive feeling told him that this gentleman was no ordinary man as the Lord had some exceptional aura of divinity and holiness around him that deserved special attention and aroused spontaneous respect. This doubt in Hanuman’s mind—whether Lord Ram was not actually the Supreme Being who had promised to come down one day, and for helping whom the Creator Brahma had advised the gods to assume the form of monkeys and bears and wait for the Lord’s arrival—will soon be clear when he asks the Lord expressly if he was not one of the Trinity Gods; whether he was Nara (a human male) or Narayan (the cosmic Male; Lord Vishnu). {See Chaupai line no. 8 herein below.}

In addition to the above reasons, there are two more. One is this: Hanuman had come to enquire about these two strangers; it was he who needed the opportunity to talk. So he wished to give a first good impression upon the visitors by being polite, and bowing before one’s guest is a welcoming gesture that immediately softens him up quite a bit. So the chances of a friendly conversation were brightened when Hanuman bowed before the travellers to show that he is a polite person, and a conversation with him will not be unpleasant for the two brothers. Rather, the two brothers would like to engage with their interlocutor more for some time, giving Hanuman the time and space to find more about them and their intention.

Otherwise there were chances that the two brothers would quietly walk on and neglect Hanuman; or would be very brief and circumvent in their reply which would not serve Hanuman's purpose.

The other is this: Hanuman was a monkey by his body, but had hidden it in over garments to disguise himself as a Brahmin student. It was done so quickly that he was very conscious of himself; he feared that these two intelligent gentlemen would immediately know that he was an impostor if he faced them directly and looked at them straight in their eyes. So he kept his head low and sight fixed on the ground before him out of shyness and the usual guilt that accompanies deception. He wondered: "what would happen if these strangers found out who I actually am?" So he avoided a direct and straightforward interaction with Lord Ram; and instead kept his head bowed and eyes low.

²We read elsewhere in Ram Charit Manas that a similar observation was made by the awe-struck villagers and travellers whom Lord Ram, Laxman and Sita had met on the path earlier when they had left Ayodhya and were on their way to the forest. Refer: Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 2 and 4 that precede Doha no. 121; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 119.

³In this analogy, since Lord Ram is dark complexioned he resembles Lord Vishnu very closely. Laxman, being of a fair complexion, resembles more closely either Brahma whose visage is yellowish as his other name is Hiranayagarbha, the 'cosmic egg', because he is the 'creator' of this world, or Shiva who has a ash-coloured complexion because he keep his body smeared with the ash of the fire sacrifice.

As for 'Nara and Narayan', they represent the male aspect of creation; they stand for the 'Father'. At the macrocosmic level he is the universal Father known as Parmatma, and at the microcosmic level he is the creature's father known as the Jiva. Here, Lord Ram stands for the Parmatma, and his shadow-like dear brother Laxman is like the Jiva.]

दो०. जग कारन तारन भव भंजन धरनी भार ।

की तुम्ह अखिल भुवन पति लीन्ह मनुज अवतार ॥ १ ॥

dōhā.

jaga kārana tārana bhava bhanjana dharanī bhāra.

kī tumha akhila bhuvana pati linha manuja avatāra. 1.

Or is that for the express welfare of the world and liberate its creatures from the horrors of transmigration, and in the process eliminate the burden of the earth (created on it by those who are wicked, sinful and evil)—the Supreme Lord of the whole world, the Lord of the entire creation, has indeed manifested himself in the form of a human being?

[Prithee my Lord; I beseech thee to be kind enough to enlighten me on this matter of singular importance. Is it true that the Supreme Being has decided to come down personally to eliminate evil and negative forces from this world, to restore the balance in favour of the good, the noble and the righteous by eliminating those that are bad, evil and unrighteous, and to extend protection to his devotees and show them the right path to liberation and deliverance? Oh Lord, am I correct? I shall be highly grateful if you should be graceful enough to tell me something on this matter.]’ (Doha no. 1)

चौ०. कोसलेस दसरथ के जाए । हम पितु बचन मानि बन आए ॥ १ ॥
 नाम राम लछिमन दोउ भाई । संग नारि सुकुमारि सुहाई ॥ २ ॥
 इहाँ हरी निसिचर बैदेही । बिप्र फिरहिं हम खोजत तेही ॥ ३ ॥
 आपन चरित कहा हम गाई । कहहु बिप्र निज कथा बुझाई ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

kōsalēsa dasaratha kē jā'ē. hama pitu bacana māni bana ā'ē. 1.
 nāma rāma lachimana dō'u bhā'ī. saṅga nāri sukumāri suhā'ī. 2.
 ihām' harī nisicara baidēhī. bipra phirahirṁ hama khōjata tēhī. 3.
 āpana carita kahā hama gā'ī. kahahu bipra nija kathā bujhā'ī. 4.

Lord Ram answered Hanuman, ‘We (i.e. myself and my brother Laxman) are sons of king Dasrath of the kingdom of Kaushal (which is another name for the realm of Ayodhya). We have come to the forest to keep our father’s words¹. (1)

Our names are Ram and Laxman respectively; and we two are brothers. We had a charming and pretty young lady with us; she was tender and delicate (nāri sukumāri suhā'ī). (2)

Here in the forest some demon has stolen Vaidehi² (Sita, my wife). Oh Brahmin (bipra)! We are wondering in search of her. (3)

We have narrated to you about our story; prithee Brahmin, now please tell us about yourself.’ (4)

[Note—¹This story is narrated in detail in the first half of the second Canto of Ram Charit Manas that is known as Ayodhya Kand; refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 2—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 81.

Briefly it is this: King Dasrath, who had become old, had decided to anoint his eldest son, prince Ram, as the Regent of Ayodhya. The gods were alarmed as this would make it difficult for the Lord to carry out the main objective for which he had come down from heaven to earth, viz. to eliminate Ravana and his clan of cruel and sinful demons. Why so? Because to fulfil this mission certain conditions had to be complied with, and once Lord Ram ascended the throne of the great kingdom of Ayodhya it would be well-nigh impossible to do so.

Hence, it was necessary to prevent his anointment and manoeuvre things in such a way that the Lord goes to the forest, crosses the country and reach Ravana’s citadel at Lanka. So the gods devised a device by which Kaikeyi, the Lord’s step-mother, became suddenly overcome with delusions that created jealousy, selfishness and greed for power in her mind. She had a favourite maid called Manthra with whom she always shared her thoughts. The gods used her as a medium to implement their master-plan; this old maid prevailed upon her mistress Kaikeyi that she must get her own son Bharat appointed to the throne somehow. Since Kaikeyi's wisdom and sense of propriety had already been clouded by delusions, she could not see the propriety or otherwise of this evil advice, and readily agreed.

By-and-by, Kaikeyi forced her husband king Dasrath to send Lord Ram to fourteen years of exile in the forest and put her own son Bharat on the throne. The Lord was very happy as this is what he exactly wished to happen. Laxman and Sita decided to accompany the Lord for they declared that they can't live without him.

This is how the three—i.e. Lord Ram, his wife Sita, and his younger brother Laxman had come to the forest.

²Lord Ram has significantly used the word “Vaidehi” for Sita; it is a remarkable that he chose to employ this epithet for Sita. On the face of it the word means ‘the daughter of Videha, the king of Janakpur’, which Sita indeed was.

But there is a subtle hint in what the Lord wished to mean: he indicated that the lady who has been stolen by the demon ‘has no physical body’, i.e. it is merely a shadow or an image of the real Sita, for the word ‘Vaidehi’ literally means ‘one without a body’. To wit, Sita who has been kidnapped is not the real Sita who is Lord Ram's wife, for the Lord had cast some magical spell by which a huge smokescreen of delusions has been created as is usually done in theatrical performances where a director arranges scenes of storms and rain and lightening, or of murder and bloodshed on the stage which are so life-like and surreal that the audience thinks that the scenes which it sees unfolding before its eyes are actual events; all those who watch the play flow with the narrative enacted by actors on stage and become emotionally involved in it as if they are participating in real events.

So was exactly the case here: no one could guess that the Sita whom Ravana had abducted was only a mirage, only an image, only a shadow or a ghost, and not the real lady known by this name.

As we have already read earlier, Sita had been made to take shelter with the sacred fire by Lord Ram who entrusted her in the safe custody of the Fire God, and she had also been taken into confidence by the Lord who had told her all that he planned and the reason why he wanted to hide her. But this was a closely guarded secret that not even Laxman was privy to. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.]

प्रभु पहिचानि परेउ गहि चरना । सो सुख उमा जाइ नहिं बरना ॥ ५ ॥

पुलकित तन मुख आव न बचना । देखत रुचिर बेष कै रचना ॥ ६ ॥

पुनि धीरजु धरि अस्तुति कीन्ही । हरष हृदयँ निज नाथहि चीन्ही ॥ ७ ॥ prabhu pahicāni parē'u gahi caranā. sō sukha umā jā'i nahim̐ baranā. 5.

pulakita tana mukha āva na bacanā. dēkhata rucira bēṣa kai racanā. 6.
puni dhīrajū dhari astuti kīnhī. haraṣa hṛdayam̐ nija nāthahi cīnhī. 7.

Hanuman recognised his dear Lord¹, and consequentially he fell down at the Lord's feet.

[Lord Shiva, who has been narrating this story of Ram Charit Manas to his consort Parvati, said to her—] “Oh Uma! It is not possible to describe how joyous and exhilarated he (Hanuman) felt at that moment.” (5)

He (Hanuman) was exceedingly thrilled in his body so much that no words came to his mouth as he was emotionally overwhelmed. He kept his eyes fixed on the magnificent sight that Lord Ram (and Laxman) presented to him. [To wit, Hanuman was so transfixed with joy and emotion that neither could he speak nor could he move his eyes away from the Lord.] (6)

After some time, however, he recovered himself; then he patiently offered his obeisance to the Lord by praising him and offering prayers. He was overjoyed in his heart as he had recognised his dear Lord. (7)

[Note—¹How did Hanuman know that Lord Ram was the Lord for whom he had been waiting for so long to come? Hanuman had remembered the earlier events which had compelled the gods and mother earth to approach Lord Vishnu and pray to him to come down to save them by eliminating the scourge of the demons led by Ravana, as which the Lord had promised them that he will indeed come in the form of Ram and take a human birth in the household of king Dasrath of Ayodhya. And at that time, the grandfather of this creation, Brahma, had advised the gods to take the form of monkeys and bears and descend to earth, and wait for the arrival of the Lord; then they must help the Lord to successfully accomplish an enterprise that actually was their own demand. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

Now finally, that great moment has arrived. This realisation made Hanuman literally jump with joy and excitement.

Another reason is this: from the very first moment Hanuman came close to Lord Ram, he could feel that the visitor is no ordinary man, as extraordinary spiritual energy and a halo of divinity radiated from the Lord and spread in all the directions like the brilliant rays of the splendorous sun to embrace everyone who came in contact with him. It was an un-forgetful, hitherto an unknown emotional reaction, and an extremely sublime experience that had mesmerised and captivated the mind and the heart of Hanuman from the very first moment of his interaction with Lord Ram.

Some sixth sense within him, his instinct, his intuition, his sub-conscious, and what we may call his gut-feeling, told him that he has at last met the one for whom he had been waiting eagerly and emotionally for so long, the Lord who was very dear to him.]

मोर न्याउ मैं पूछा साईं । तुम्ह पूछहु कस नर की नाईं ॥ ८ ॥

तब माया बस फिरउँ भुलाना । ता ते मैं नहिं प्रभु पहिचाना ॥ ९ ॥ mōra n'yā'u mair̃ pūchā sā'ir̃. tumha pūchahu kasa nara kī nā'ir̃. 8.

taba māyā basa phira'um̃ bhulānā. tā tē mair̃ nahir̃ prabhu pahicānā. 9.

Having recovered his emotional bearing and mental composure, Hanuman politely and affectionately reproached Lord Ram in a plaintive accent, ‘Oh Lord! It is okay that I, being a humble creature, ask who you are, but how come even you (who are the all-knowing Supreme Being) are feigning ignorance and pretending that you do not know me as if you were an ordinary human being. (8)

I was under the influence of your Maya (powers to create delusions and ignorance) due to which I had become forgetful and ignorant, and it is for this reason I could not recognise you immediately, and had erred to ask you who you were¹. (9)

[Note—¹Had Hanuman been free from the Lord's overpowering Maya that leaves no one un-influenced by it, he would have instantly known who the Lord actually was, instead of asking him about it as done in Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede Doha no. 1 herein above.

But by the grace of the Lord, this Maya soon withdrew and Hanuman's natural sense of wisdom and intelligence could see the truth; it just like the case of the moon and the sun during eclipse, for soon they emerge from the shadow of the eclipse that hides their shine for some time, and regain their original brilliance.]

दो०. एकु मैं मंद मोहबस कुटिल हृदय अग्यान ।
पुनि प्रभु मोहि बिसारेउ दीनबंधु भगवान ॥ २ ॥

dōhā.

ēku mair̄ṁ manda mōhabasa kuṭila hṛdaya agyāna.
puni prabhu mōhi bisārē'u dīnabandhu bhagavāna. 2.

In the first place I am of a low intellect, am overcome with delusions, have a wicked heart, and am ignorant (as a Jiva usually is).

And oh Lord, you are a friend of those who are humble, lowly and fallen; you are their benefactor, and so I am astonished that even you had forgotten me. Why so my Lord; how come you could not recognise (me who is) your eternal servant and devotee?¹ (Doha no. 2)

[Note—¹This is a conversation between a devotee of the Lord and the dearest object of his devotion and worship—in this case Hanuman and Lord Ram respectively.

Let us take an example to understand this scene better. It is like a conversation between two fast friends who had separated a long time ago, only to meet once again almost unexpectedly some time later on in life. A lot of change had happened to both of them—they grew older, their physical appearances changed over time, and the rough and tumble of life had made them so different now from the time when they first separated that neither of them could recognise the other though they had played, eaten and lived together for countless years long ago. But some intuitive feeling, some inner-voice tells them that there exists some secret bond between them which has been so much covered with the dust of time that it needs a bit of dusting and cleaning to see the reality behind the external crust. So when they meet after a long passage of time, they would exchange pleasantries and wish to learn about each other. Some undercurrent of emotion, some tone of the voice and style of speaking and idioms, some well-known gestures and bodily movements with which they were so familiar with since their youth, suddenly come to their memories. They suddenly recognise each other—and what follows is a natural guess for everyone: They would clasp each other in a tight embrace, weep and shake each other in sheer joy of excitement. Nay, not only this, they would accuse each other affectionately and lovingly why the one had forgotten and neglected the other for so many years. Then they would sit down to reminisce about their past and revel in it for a long time, laughing and joking and patting each other, using choicest epithets and nicknames they used for each other long ago, before coming back to the harsh realities of the present and sobering up.

Something of this sort played out between Hanuman and Lord Ram! It took some time for Hanuman to recognise Lord Ram, and once he came to know who the Lord was, he spoke to him affectionately and lovingly like a devotee would speak to his Lord. There was no element of formality or fear; Hanuman politely and affectionately admonished or chided his beloved Lord Ram as to why he took so long to reveal his true identity before Hanuman; why did he try to play hide-and-seek with him.

Remember: this conversation is drenched in the emotion of affection and love that a devotee has for his beloved Lord, and this bond is so strong and informal that playful chiding and affectionate teasing of each other is not out of the normal.

Hanuman loved Lord Ram so much that he did not hesitate in the expression of his emotional outburst when he told the Lord that the fault of not recognising each other was of the Lord's as he is all-knowing, while Hanuman was simply a creature who is bound by Maya, and therefore it is okay if he could not know the truth about the Lord initially.

In the next set of verses Hanuman clarifies his position.]

चौ०. जदपि नाथ बहु अवगुन मोरें । सेवक प्रभुहि परै जनि भोरें ॥ १ ॥
 नाथ जीव तव मायाँ मोहा । सो निस्तरइ तुम्हारेहिँ छोहा ॥ २ ॥
 ता पर मैं रघुबीर दोहाई । जानउँ नहिँ कछु भजन उपाई ॥ ३ ॥
 सेवक सुत पति मातु भरोसें । रहइ असोच बनइ प्रभु पोसें ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jadapi nātha bahu avaguna mōrēm. sēvaka prabhuhi parai jani bhōrēm. 1.
 nātha jīva tava māyāṁ mōhā. sō nistarā'i tumhārēhiṁ chōhā. 2.
 tā para mairṁ raghubīra dōhā'ī. jāna'um' nahim kachu bhajana upā'ī. 3.
 sēvaka suta pati mātu bharōsēm. raha'i asōca bana'i prabhu pōsēm. 4.

[Hanuman continued—] 'Oh Lord, though it may be true that I have many faults and shortcomings, may be my mind is fickle and my memory weak, but let the Lord not cast me into neglect and forget about me due to my limitations (as a Jiva, a living being)¹.

[¹To wit, it may be that I am not sufficiently competent to be called your servant or devotee for so many faults of mine, but you are renowned for your mercy, compassion and grace, you are very benevolent, magnanimous and beneficent, and you are a benefactor of those who are lowly and unfortunate. So therefore it is expected of you that you do not turn your back to me, and accept me as I am. I am sure you have not forgotten me inspite of my stupidity that I could not recognise you instantly, as soon as I saw you; but that is acceptable because I am an ordinary creature with so many limitations and shortcomings, but oh Lord I am surprised that even you could not recognise me; or was it that you were playing some sort of friendly trick with me and trying to tease me so that I would cry out and jump with joy as soon as I discovered who you actually are, and the stunned expression of extreme happiness and exhilaration that would overcome my whole being on this discovery would give you intense pleasure. Come, come my dear Lord; you see—you couldn't trick me, could you?] (1)

Oh Lord! The Jiva (a living being) is invariably under the influence of your Maya (delusions that overcome all mortal creatures which make them forget their true identity, i.e. their 'self' which is pure consciousness). This Maya can only be got rid of by your grace and kindness upon that Jiva².

[²I am a Jiva, so it is natural that I was deluded and could not recognise you immediately. But you are not a Jiva; you are the Supreme Being who is free from Maya. So why did you not recognise me immediately; why did you ask me who I was? It would have been proper if you had smile at me and teased me by saying, "Hello Hanuman; why are disguising yourself as a Brahmin student; do you think I have not recognised you? You look funny in this attire; shed it aside and resume your original form." Oh Lord, how happy and joyous would I have felt if you had said something to this effect, instead of asking me who I am.] (2)

Oh Lord Raghubir, I say truly on oath that I do not know how to either worship you or have devotion for you, and neither do I know of any means to achieve success in this direction. Yet I am certain that the Lord would take care of me and hence I am free from worries and fear, because I am aware of the universal principle that a servant rests easy and is in peace by relying on the strength of his master, and so does a son who relies on his mother³.

[³A master is responsible for the welfare, happiness, safety and security of his servant who is totally dependent upon him, and so is a mother in respect to an infant son. The servant and the son both sleep in peace as they know that their master and mother respectively would take care of them in every way. So likewise Hanuman says that he is free from all worries and fears as he knows, and is certain too, that his Lord Ram is alert about his responsibilities towards him, and would care for the well-being and welfare of Hanuman who is totally dependent upon the Lord no matter what happens.] (3-4)

अस कहि परेउ चरन अकुलाई । निज तनु प्रगटि प्रीति उर छाई ॥ ५ ॥
 तब रघुपति उठाइ उर लावा । निज लोचन जल सींचि जुड़ावा ॥ ६ ॥
 सुनु कपि जियँ मानसि जनि ऊना । तैं मम प्रिय लछिमन ते दूना ॥ ७ ॥ समदरसी मोहि कह सब कोऊ । सेवक प्रिय अनन्यगति सोऊ ॥ ८ ॥

asa kahi parē'u carana akulāī. nija tanu pragaṭi prīti ura chāī. 5.
 taba raghupati uṭhā'i ura lāvā. nija lōcana jala sīnci jurāvā. 6.
 sunu kapi jiyam' mānasi jani ūnā. tair̄n mama priya lachimana tē dūnā. 7.
 samadarasī mōhi kaha saba kō'ū. sēvaka priya anan'yagati sō'ū. 8.

Saying so (as in Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 2—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3 herein above), he (i.e. Hanuman) was so stirred up with overwhelming emotions and so intensely overcome with affection for Lord Ram surging in his heart like a tidal wave that he fell down at the Lord's feet immediately, and then revealed his true form (as now there was no reason to hide his identity)¹. (5)

Then Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram) lifted Hanuman and clasped the latter to his bosom; the Lord shed tears (of affection and joy at having found his dearest devotee and companion) so as to drench Hanuman with them and sooth his emotional agitation². (6)

Lord Ram told Hanuman, 'Listen Kapi (literally meaning a monkey; it was the original form of Hanuman)! Don't feel so lowly and distressed; don't feel depressed in your heart³. Verily indeed I tell you that you are twice as dear to me as is Laxman. (7)

Although everyone says that I treat all alike and with equanimity, for I don't distinguish between individuals, yet it is also universally true that I love my devotees dearly, such devotees who are eternally devoted to me and have unflinching faith and affection for me. This principle of equanimity and non-distinction applies to all others⁴. (8)

[Note—¹As soon as Hanuman realised that the two visiting travellers were no strangers to him, but were the ones for whom he had been waiting all these years, he was excessively overjoyed. First he politely and lovingly admonished his dear and beloved Lord for playing hide-and-seek with him by pretending as if he did not know him or recognise who he was, and then when the truth dawned upon him then he was overwhelmed with surging emotions of affection and endearment like when it happens if two old friends who were close to each other since their childhood, and who had been out of touch for a long time due to circumstances but nevertheless longed that one day they will meet again and embrace each other, actually realise their dream all of a sudden when they stand face-to-face with each other.

One can well imagine how they will feel and react. The two would clasp each other affectionately, shed tears of joy, ask why one forgot the other, strike an instant bond, and make a promise never to separate again. This in essence is what transpired when Hanuman met Lord Ram. And surely enough, the two never ever separated from each other as long as Lord Ram lived in this world; out of all his companions and acquaintances and friends, no one was dearer to the Lord than Hanuman, and Hanuman served Lord Ram with unwavering devotion, faith and affection that had no parallel.

²When Lord Ram perceived that Hanuman's words and actions showed how much the latter loved his Lord and was moved by meeting him—the way Hanuman had fell at the Lord's feet in supplication, the way he had tried to stifle his sobs, the trembling of his voice as he spoke, the thrill that had spread over his body, and the apparent words of reproof which he had used for the Lord were actually a veiled attempt on his part to hide his affectionate emotions that had overwhelmed him—Lord Ram was intensely touched; he bent down to lift Hanuman and clasp the latter to his bosom. Tears of reciprocal joy filled Lord Ram's eyes and ran down his cheeks to flow over Hanuman, and the Lord was as overcome with emotions as Hanuman had been. It appeared that two long-lost fast friends have at last found each other by a stroke of good fortune. The Lord could not control his emotions as he lifted Hanuman, embraced him affectionately, and then wept with joy.

We see here that both Hanuman and Lord Ram have become emotional when they meet each other. So when Hanuman observed that Lord Ram was weeping so much that tears rolled down his eyes and over Hanuman's body, he was thrilled with joy because he understood that the Lord whom he loves so much has reciprocated his feelings in full measure. Spontaneous tears don't come easily; these tears of overwhelming happiness weren't artificial. So Hanuman calmed down and soon regained his composure.

A similar scene is witnessed later on when Hanuman brings the good news that Sita has been found. At that time also he falls at the feet of Lord Ram who lovingly embraces him, and even goes to the extent of saying that he would ever remain indebted to Hanuman. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 32—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 33.

³Lord Ram alludes to Hanuman's statements earlier that showed he was very depressed and felt lowly about himself so much so that he had supposed that because of his shortcomings the Lord may not have recognised him, and may not pay much attention to him even after knowing who Hanuman was. Refer: Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 2—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3 herein above.

So here Lord Ram clarifies that this is not the case at all, for he loves Hanuman more than he loves his own brother Laxman.

Remember: Laxman was standing by Lord Ram's side, and was it possible that this affirmation by the Lord that he loves someone else, in this case Hanuman who, by the way, was met for the first time in life and was virtually a stranger for the two brothers a few moments ago, more than Laxman would in any way offend the latter or make him sad? No; not at all. The brotherly relationship of love and affection between Laxman and Lord Ram was deep and unshakable, not so shallow and weak that such statements, which may have been made by the Lord because he thought it exigent due to circumstantial expediency, would in the slightest manner affect it.

Lord Ram had to show Hanuman that the latter was very dear to him and he should not feel depressed that the Lord had forgotten or neglected him. It was necessary for Lord Ram to do this even if it was merely from a political angle and a strategy that was needed by him to achieve success in his mission to retrieve Sita and eliminate Ravana and his cruel demons, for Hanuman's assistance and cooperation was very crucial for this objective.

Hanuman was the first acquaintance of Lord Ram in an alien land, and if he could be taken into confidence then other things would become easier. So the Lord did not wish to lose this golden opportunity, and hence he went out of his way to show Hanuman how dear was he to the Lord so as to strike an immediate rapport with him. And this strategy stood in good stead of the Lord, for now we shall read how Hanuman became instrumental in making Sugriv a friend of the Lord, a very important development as this would pave the way for the Lord in being able to trace Sita, and then get the help of an immense army of monkey and bear warriors to successfully complete his mission of not only retrieving her but also of eliminating the scourge of the demons. It is obvious that this monumental task would not have been possible without help.

⁴Lord Ram says that since he is the Supreme Lord of this world, he treats all individuals alike. To wit, the Lord says that he is an impartial and a neutral judge; he extends his mercy and grace equally upon all like the sun that gives its sunlight to all the creatures evenly. But there is an exception to this general rule—and it is that the Lord has a soft corner in his heart for his devotees for whom there is no one in this world except the Lord, who are totally and eternally dependent upon the Lord, and who love the Lord exclusively. The Lord says that he is duty bound to extend a special consideration for such individuals.]

दो०. सो अनन्य जाकेँ असि मति न टरइ हनुमंत । मैं सेवक सचराचर रूप स्वामि भगवंत ॥ ३ ॥

dōhā.

sō anan'ya jākēm asi mati na ṭara'i hanumanta.
mair̥m sēvaka sacarācara rūpa svāmi bhagavanta. 3.

Oh Hanuman! An individual is deemed to be my eternal devotee and loved by me if his mind is firm and steady in its conviction that he is an eternal servant and devotee of the Lord of the whole world, and this whole creation consisting of animate and inanimate things is nothing but the Lord's own image.¹ (Doha no. 3)

[Note—¹If the individual is enlightened enough to understand the grand philosophy enshrined in this Doha, that this entire creation is an image of his beloved Lord, then he would serve and love all other creatures equally and with great sincerity, as love and service done to them would be loving and serving his own dear Lord.

This is the universal message of love and service to one and all that Lord Ram advises here.]

चौ०. देखि पवनसुत पति अनुकूला । हृदयँ हरष बीती सब सूला ॥ १ ॥
नाथ सैल पर कपिपति रहई । सो सुग्रीव दास तव अहई ॥ २ ॥
तेहि सन नाथ मयत्री कीजे । दीन जानि तेहि अभय करीजे ॥ ३ ॥
सो सीता कर खोज कराइहि । जहँ तहँ मरकट कोटि पठाइहि ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

dēkhi pavanasuta pati anukūlā. ḥṛdayam̃ haraṣa bīti saba sūlā. 1.
nātha saila para kapipati raha'ī. sō sugrīva dāsa tava aha'ī. 2.
tēhi sana nātha mayatrī kijē. dīna jāni tēhi abhaya karijē. 3.
sō sītā kara khōja karā'ihī. jaham̃ taham̃ marakaṭa kōṭi paṭhā'ihī. 4.

When the Son of the Wind-God (i.e. Hanuman; “pavanasuta”) observed that the Lord was favourable to him and understood him without reservations, he felt overjoyed in his heart; all the agonies and misgivings of his heart disappeared. (1)

He told Lord Ram, ‘Oh Lord; the lord of the monkeys (kapipati) lives on the summit of this mountain (Rishyamook). His name is Sugriv, and he is your servant (i.e. he will obey you and do as you wish)¹. (2)

Oh Lord! Make a friendship with him (Sugriv), and considering him to be humble, afflicted and disenfranchised please be gracious to grant him freedom from fear. [To wit, show your grace upon him by making him fearless from the things that are worrying him.]² (3)

He (Sugriv) will help you in the search for Sita by sending hundreds and thousands of monkeys (and bears) in all the directions for this purpose.³ (4)

[Note—¹Sugriv had been ousted from the kingdom by his elder brother Baali (also pronounced as Vaali). Presently Baali was the ‘king of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha’. So why did Hanuman address Sugriv as ‘the lord of the monkeys’?

The answer is this: For those who were loyal to Sugriv and had decided to accompany him to exile on Mt. Rishyamook, he was their de-facto king and lord. Among this small group of faithful companions of Sugriv was Hanuman; others included Nal, Neel etc., as well as Jamvant, the lord of the bear community. For them Sugriv was the true King of Kishindha, or at least the next in line to the throne after Baali, his elder brother, and that he had been unjustly deprived of his rights and exiled by his elder brother. This unfair treatment meted out to Sugriv pained all the righteous ministers, some of whom decided to leave with him.

Besides this, Sugriv had already been appointed to the throne by all the ministers and courtiers of the kingdom before Baali threw him out. Sugriv however was not willing to accept the crown in the absence of his elder brother, but the ministers thought that it would not be right and wise to keep the throne vacant for any length of time; so they appointed Sugriv as the regent against his will. When Baali returned home after slaying the demon Mayavi, the son of the demon Maya, and found Sugriv on the throne, he thought that his younger brother has usurped his crown, though this was not the case. This infuriated Baali, and he beat Sugriv severely and threw him out. This story is narrated by Sugriv himself to Lord Ram in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-13 that precede Doha no. 6.

Another question arises: Lord Ram has yet not met Sugriv, so how come Hanuman say that ‘Sugriv is your servant and will follow your instructions’? The answer to this is: These monkeys and bears were actually different gods in their forms waiting for Lord Ram’s arrival as prophesised by Brahma, the creator, earlier. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

So as soon as Hanuman recognised that Lord Ram was indeed the Lord for whom they had been waiting for so long, there was no question that others would also surrender themselves before the Lord like he had done.

The full story of Baali and Sugriv is narrated in detail in (i) sage Veda Vyas’ Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttarkand, Canto 3; (ii) Anand Ramayan, Saar Kand (Chapter), Sarga (Canto) 13, verse no. 140-152; and (iii) Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 11.

It ought to be noted here that Sugriv was the son of the Sun-God like Hanuman who was the son of the Wind-God.

²First, Hanuman calls Sugriv ‘the lord of the monkeys’, and so it is proper to say now that Lord Ram make friends with him—because two great kings should strike a friendly note when they meet each other for the first time.

Then Hanuman says ‘show your grace upon him by making him fearless from the things that are worrying him’. Hanuman guessed that Lord Ram would wonder why a king of the monkey race would live in seclusion on a remote mountain instead of in the capital; so surely there must be something amiss, for this situation would make it obvious to the Lord that Sugriv must be suffering from some misfortune. Hence, Hanuman pleads with the Lord to help Sugriv overcome his predicaments.

³There is another reason for Hanuman going outright to ask Lord Ram to help remove the fears of Sugriv. He wished to serve the Lord's case—i.e. searching Sita and freeing her from her captives—in the best possible way he could, but to make this happen it was important to take the support of his own king, Sugriv. So if Lord Ram helps Sugriv regain his honour and get rid of his fear first then it would be easy for Hanuman to prevail upon Sugriv to do the Lord's work as his own work has been done, and then Sugriv would never be in a position to refuse.

So in order to ensure that the Lord did not hesitate in coming with him to the summit of the mountain to befriend Sugriv and help him overcome the grave fear that his been dogging him for long, Hanuman played his wise card by saying that if the Lord agrees to his proposal then he would see to it that Sugriv helps in the search for Sita.

Come to think of it: Lord Ram was in great need of an ally in an alien land, so when this suggestion came from Hanuman the Lord saw a golden opportunity, and was therefore very willing to cooperate.

In this intelligent way Hanuman served both Sugriv and Lord Ram in equal measure, and as a result of his wise mediation of his he became a favourite with both of them for eternity. This is also a primary reason why Lord Ram chose to give his signet ring for the purpose of identification to Hanuman when the group to which he belonged was about to go in the search for Sita. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precedes Doha no. 23.]

एहि बिधि सकल कथा समुझाई । लिए दुऔ जन पीठि चढ़ाई ॥ ५ ॥
जब सुग्रीवँ राम कहँ देखा । अतिसय जन्म धन्य करि लेखा ॥ ६ ॥
सादर मिलेउ नाइ पद माथा । भेंटेउ अनुज सहित रघुनाथा ॥ ७ ॥ कपि कर मन बिचार एहि रीती । करिहहिं बिधि मो सन ए प्रीती ॥ ८ ॥ ēhi bidhi sakala kathā samujhā'ī. li'ē du'au jana pīṭhi caṛhā'ī. 5.

jaba sugrīvam' rāma kahum' dēkhā. atisaya janma dhan'ya kari lēkhā. 6.
sādara milē'u nā'i pada māthā. bhēṅṭē'u anuja sahita raghunāthā. 7.
kapi kara mana bicāra ēhi rīti. karihahim bidhi mō sana ē prīti. 8.

In this way, after explaining all the aspects of the story¹ to the Lord, he (Hanuman) lifted the two of them (Lord Ram and his brother Laxman) on his back (i.e. on his shoulders, one brother on the left and the other on the right, to take them over the steep mountain to the summit where Sugriv was waiting). (5)

When Sugriv saw Lord Ram he considered that his life was very fortunate. (6)

He met and welcomed the two brothers by bowing his head respectfully at the feet of Lord Raghunath and his younger brother (Laxman)². (7)

He wondered in his mind, 'Oh Creator (bidhi)! Will they be my friends; it is possible that we can become friends'??*

[*This verse can also be read as follows: “He wondered by which means it may become possible to be friends with these two gentlemen”.]³ (8)

[Note—¹What story was explained by Hanuman to Lord Ram? It was the story of why and how Sugriv fell into the present miserable state, how he can be of help to the Lord, how the exiled monkeys had seen Sita crying loudly as she was being taken away by her abductor, and so on and so forth. This was done to remove any misgivings that the Lord may have had initially about his new acquaintances, and doubts that he might have had to agree to accompany Hanuman to the top of a steep mountain.

²Sugriv had immense faith in Hanuman, and trusted his wisdom and intelligence. That is why he had sent Hanuman to find out about the strangers in the first place. So when he observed from the summit that Hanuman had fallen at the feet of Lord Ram, the two embraced each other and had a cordial conversation for some time, and now Hanuman was bringing them to his hideout on the summit of the mountain, Sugriv was very sure that certainly it was for his good that Hanuman is doing it. He was sure that these two gentlemen who not only looked glorious, noble and royal but also had a divine halo and an unmistakable aura of charm about them, Sugriv concluded that these two guests were no ordinary men but some specially empowered honourable persons who deserve respect and welcome.

He had nothing to fear from them as was clear from the friendly expression on the faces of both Lord Ram and Laxman. Besides this, Hanuman had signalled to Sugriv in the manner decided between them before-hand (refer: Chauapi line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 1) that these two gentlemen would be of great help to the him (Sugriv), and there is nothing to fear from them at all.

Sugriv trusted Hanuman so much that when the latter told him that he has brought the two brothers up the mountain with a promise that Sugriv would welcome them as a friend, and that Sugriv must not hesitate to meet the two guests immediately and make friends with them, Sugriv did not think twice or in any way doubt the correctness of Hanuman’s decision, because he knew that Hanuman was not only exceptionally wise and intelligent but also very faithful and loyal to him. Sugriv was confident that the Creator may turn against him, but Hanuman would never betray him ever, no matter what happens.

Hanuman explained to Sugriv the strategic importance to have the two warrior brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, as his allies as their friendship would deter his arch enemy, Baali, from tormenting him further. The race to which the two brothers belonged was far superior in intelligence, strength and abilities compared to the race to which Sugriv and his brother Baali belonged. Hence, as soon as Baali discovers that Sugriv has forged an alliance with superior warriors he would stop bothering him any further, and so the constant fear of attack and harm by Baali in which Sugriv passes his days would be a thing of the past.

This logic of Hanuman was sound enough to convince Sugriv who saw merit in it. So he readily agreed to make friendship with Lord Ram.

³The word “bidhi” has two meanings: viz. ‘the Creator’, and ‘a mean to achieve success in anything undertake’. So both these interpretations could apply to this verse.]

दो०. तब हनुमंत उभय दिसि की सब कथा सुनाइ । पावक साखी देइ करि जोरी प्रीति दृढ़ाइ ॥ ४ ॥

dōhā.

taba hanumanta ubhaya disī kī saba kathā sunā'i.
pāvaka sākhī dē'i kari jōrī prīti dṛṛhā'i. 4.

Then Hanuman narrated the whole story of the two sides to each other¹. [To wit, Hanuman told Sugriv why Lord Ram was wondering in the forest, and then he told Lord Ram, or rather repeated what he had already told the Lord at the foot of the mountain, about Sugriv and the reason of his living on that mountain.]

After that, he lit a fire and made it a witness of the bond of friendship between the two of them—i.e. between Lord Ram and Sugriv². (Doha no. 4)

[Note—¹Both Sugriv and Lord Ram were suffering in one way or the other. Sugriv's right to the throne had been snatched by his elder brother Baali who threw him into exile and also kept his wife; Lord Ram had been exiled and his wife had been stolen by some rascal. They were literally on the same boat, on the same page. So they could easily empathise with and understand the agony of each other. Hanuman was so wise that he played the soft corner eruditely so as to ensure that both would cooperate with each other as both would be the gainer.

²The 'fire' is the most sacred and an inviolable witness; other witnesses could betray but the fire would never. And besides this, there were no chances of any of the sides rescinding on his promise made to the other with the fire god as a witness for the fear of inviting this god's wrath, and 'fire' is not something to fool around with.

So when a treaty is made with the 'fire' as a witness then it becomes inviolable and sacrosanct.

Hanuman wished to play it safe; it may be that sometime in the unknown future there can be situations when either of the two signatories of the treaty would try to force him to become biased against the other, and there may be existential expediencies when he too might become doubtful as to what is the correct thing to do. But with the 'fire' as the witness there was no scope of going back; the bond was sealed and delivered in a final manner.

And remember: Hanuman was also a witness by default, for he had too witnessed the declaration of this friendship between Lord Ram and Sugriv just like the sacred fire. So in case Sugriv, being a Jiva, a living being, an ordinary creature, who often times forgets his side of the bargain once his selfish needs are met, tries to play truant and shows lack of interest in serving Lord Ram, Hanuman would immediately intervene and remind Sugriv of the oath taken by the side of the sacred fire. And this did happen later on—when, after regaining his honour and throne by the intervention of Lord Ram on his behalf, Sugriv became indulgent in the pleasures that come with kingship, and all but forgot about his promise to Lord Ram to send teams all around to find Sita. At that time it was Hanuman who reminded him of his vows, and persuaded him to do what is needed without delay. This incident is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 19.]

चौ०. कीन्हि प्रीति कछु बीच न राखा । लछिमन राम चरित सब भाषा ॥ १ ॥
 कह सुग्रीव नयन भरि बारी । मिलिहि नाथ मिथिलेसकुमारी ॥ २ ॥
 मंत्रिन्ह सहित इहाँ एक बारा । बैठ रहेउँ मैं करत बिचारा ॥ ३ ॥
 गगन पंथ देखी मैं जाता । परबस परी बहुत बिलपाता ॥ ४ ॥
 राम राम हा राम पुकारी । हमहि देखि दीन्हैउ पट डारी ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

kīnhi prīti kachu bīca na rākhā. lachimana rāma carita saba bhāṣā. 1.
 kaha sugrīva nayana bhari bārī. milihi nātha mithilēsakumārī. 2.
 mantrinḥa sahita ihām'ēka bārā. baiṭha rahē'um' mairḥ karata bicārā. 3.
 gagana pantha dēkhī mairḥ jātā. parabasa parī bahuta bilapātā. 4.
 rāma rāma hā rāma pukārī. hamahi dēkhi dīnhē'u paṭa ḍārī. 5.

An unconditional bond of friendship was made between Lord Ram and Sugriv; both were treated as equal in this understanding¹.

Meanwhile, Laxman narrated the whole story of Lord Ram to all those present². (1)

When Sugriv heard the story (and the misery that the Lord was subjected to due to his wife Sita's abduction), he felt very sorry. With tears filling his eyes³ he said, 'Oh Lord (don't worry); the daughter of king of Mithila ("mithilēsakumārī"; i.e. Sita) would indeed be found. (2)

I was sitting here once with my ministers, discussing some matter. (3)

At that time I saw her being taken by the path of the sky; she was under the captivity of a kidnapper, and she was crying, lamenting and wailing very sorely. (4)

When she saw us, she cried aloud "Ram, Ram, Ram" in a very pitiful and distressed manner; then she dropped some pieces of her garments down from the sky⁴. [We have carefully preserved them as we realised that some lady was being abducted by a rascal, and may be her husband would come this way looking for her some day. Then we would give these pieces to him to convince him that we had indeed seen his wife being taken away by force. And if the need arises and it is within our abilities and the gentleman asks for our help, we would do our best.] (5)

[Note—¹The lesson which we learn here is that when a friendship is made there should be no strings attached to it, and all the friends should be treated equally; this makes the friendship last. Otherwise it would fall apart sooner or later.

²What was the need for Laxman to narrate the story of Lord Ram when Hanuman had already done so in Doha no. 4 herein above? Well, it is sure that Hanuman had limited his version to what Lord Ram had told him earlier when they met for the first time (Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 2 herein above); for Hanuman could not have known more than that from the mortal and worldly point of view though he had recognised the Lord at the subtler level of the Holy Spirit.

So Laxman deemed it necessary to add some more details besides the episode of Sita's abduction by some fiend. During this narration he must have told Sugriv how Lord Ram had slayed the different demons before coming here. It was to impress upon Sugriv and the rest of his companions that Lord Ram was not an ordinary person whose wife has been stolen and who helplessly wanders here and there searching for her; so they ought to beware, show due respect to the Lord, and not take the Lord lightly in spite of the bond of friendship that makes Lord Ram equal to Sugriv, and the Lord's nature of being obliging and polite, for god forbid that someone offends the Lord for then there would be no one to protect the offender.

³Tears welled up in Sugriv's eyes; this indicates that he was very moved by the sorrowful condition of Lord Ram. This is how a good friend should be—he treats his friend's sorrows and misfortunes as his own, and does whatever he can to help his friend even if it could mean harm to his own personal interests. This fact would be reiterated later on by Lord Ram when Sugriv narrates his own tale of woes concerning how his elder brother Baali had thrown him out of the kingdom and taken his wife. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 7.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 25 that precedes Doha no. 29.

Sita called out Lord Ram's name so that the monkeys, who were sitting on the summit of the mountain, would know whose wife she was, so that when the Lord arrives and discloses his name they would immediately know that he is the husband of the lady who was forcibly taken away.]

मागा राम तुरत तेहिं दीन्हा । पट उर लाइ सोच अति कीन्हा ॥ ६ ॥
 कह सुग्रीव सुनहु रघुबीरा । तजहु सोच मन आनहु धीरा ॥ ७ ॥ सब प्रकार करिहउँ सेवकाई । जेहि बिधि मिलिहि जानकी आई ॥ ८ ॥ māgā rāma turata tēhiṁ dīnhā. paṭa ura lā'i sōca ati kīnhā. 6.

 kaha sugrīva sunahu raghubīrā. tajahu sōca mana ānahu dhīrā. 7.
 saba prakāra kariha'um' sēvakāī. jēhi bidhi milihi jānakī āī. 8.

Lord Ram asked for that piece of cloth, and Sugriv gave it to him immediately. The Lord held the cloth close to his heart even as he felt very sorrowful and sad. (6)

Observing the Lord's sadness and a sense of depression, Sugriv reassured him, saying, 'Listen oh Lord Raghubir. Set aside your worries, and have courage and fortitude. (7)

I will serve you in all possible ways and employ all the means at my disposal¹ so that Janki ("jānakī"; the daughter of king Janak; Sita) can come and meet you². (8)

[Note—¹A true friend is one who would employ all his resources and go out of his way to help his friend in times of need. Lord Ram has too affirmed this noble quality of a friend in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 7 as we have already noted.

²Sugriv told Lord Ram that he need not worry on any count; he would not need to go anywhere or wander in the forest searching for Sita. The Lord can sit comfortably right here in Kishkindha, and Sugriv will do the rest for him—he would send messengers in all the directions to find out where Sita was. That is what he means by saying that he would do everything possible by which Sita would come here.

Section 6.1.5 Lord Ram spends the rainy season on Mt. Pravarsan, and at the end of this season reconnoitring teams of spies and scouts are sent in all directions to find the whereabouts of Sita:

Lord Ram restored the honour of Sugriv by being instrumental in the latter regaining his right to the throne of Kishkindha. After making Sugriv the king, Lord Ram decided to spend some time on a nearby mountain called Prabarshan. It was because the summer season had ended and the rains had arrived, and during the rainy season it was not advisable to start the search for Sita in the wilds.

When the four months of the rainy season ended and autumn approached and winter was not far off, Lord Ram summoned Sugriv and asked him to keep his promise by launching a search for Sita. Monkeys and bears from everywhere in the kingdom were called to the capital on the orders of their king Sugriv; groups were formed and ordered to go in all the directions and look for Sita.

One such group consisted of chiefs of the monkeys and bears, viz. Hanuman himself, Angad who was the prince of the kingdom and a nephew of Sugriv, Jamvant who was the chief of the bears, Nal and Neel who were the architects of the kingdom, and others. They headed to the south on the advice of Sugriv as this group had watched the chariot taking away Sita through the path of the sky in that direction.

This group reached the shore of the southern ocean, and then the roaring and heaving ocean stopped their progress like an insurmountable and formidable barrier. Here they met Sampati, a brother of Jatau, the vulture whom Lord Ram had met earlier, and he advised this group that Sita was held captive in Lanka as he could soar high in the sky and see her sitting remorsefully under a tree in the garden of the demon king Ravana. So therefore anyone who could surmount the mighty barrier of the ocean, and was strong enough to take on the demons of Lanka head on right inside their impregnable fort, would be able to meet Sita.

At this point it was decided that Hanuman would fit the bill perfectly as he had the qualities needed to successfully accomplish this formidable task. And so he got the privilege of being the one who would cross the ocean and go to meet Sita. Once there, Hanuman would reassure her that redemption was soon to come if she displayed a little more of patience, courage and resilience.

These episodes are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it; (ii) from Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 18; and (iii) from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Doha no. 23 as follows:-

कह प्रभु सुनु सुग्रीव हरीसा । पुर न जाउँ दस चारि बरीसा ॥ ७ ॥

गत ग्रीषम बरषा रितु आई । रहिहउँ निकट सैल पर छाई ॥ ८ ॥
 अंगद सहित करहु तुम्ह राजू । संतत हृदयँ धरेहु मम काजू ॥ ९ ॥ जब सुग्रीव भवन फिरि आए । रामु प्रबरषन गिरि पर छाए ॥ १० ॥

kaha prabhu sunu sugrīva harīsā. pura na jā'um̃ dasa cāri barīsā. 7.
 gata grīṣama baraṣā ritu ā'ī. rahiha'um̃ nikaṭa saila para chā'ī. 8.
 aṅgada sahita karahu tumha rājū. santata hr̥dayam̃ dharēhu mama kājū. 9.
 jaba sugrīva bhavana phiri ā'ē. rāmu prabaraṣana giri para chā'ē. 10.

The Lord (Sri Ram) said, ‘Listen Sugriv, the lord of the monkeys (sugrīva harīsā). I will not enter a city (or town) for ten and four years (dasa cāri barīsā)¹. (7)

The summer months had passed, and the rainy season has arrived. So for the time being, I will stay on the nearby hill (named Pravarshan)². (8)

You and Angad (Sugriv’s nephew and son of his elder brother Baali) jointly rule over the kingdom³, but during the period you must always remember my work (of searching Sita).’ (9)

When Sugriv returned home, Lord Ram took his abode on Mt. Pravarshan⁴ nearby. (10)

[Note—¹This is because Lord Ram was exceptionally diligent in keeping his words. He was sent to the forest by his step-mother Kaikeyi who had prevailed upon the Lord’s father king Dasrath to send the Lord for fourteen years in the forest attired as a hermit, and live there a secluded life of renunciation that is suitable for a hermit. As such it would not be proper for the Lord to enter a city or a town. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29.

It is to be noted that Lord Ram addresses Sugriv with the words “lord of monkeys”, which means a king of monkeys. It was to show him due honour like one great king would show another. Lord Ram was attired as a hermit and not as a king, and so it would not seem good and proper to address Sugriv as a ‘friend’ when all his ministers and chiefs were in attendance; it would undermine his royal position and dignity in the eyes of his subjects.

Besides this political prudence there was another subtle reason of Lord Ram calling Sugriv ‘a lord or king of the monkeys’. He wanted to tell Sugriv to remember the promise he had made to the Lord that he would go all out to search for Sita—because a right honourable king is known by his words, for a king’s word is his honour. He is a ‘lord’ of the monkeys, so if he gives orders no one would refuse. Then again, Sugriv can’t take the excuse that he has no manpower—for he had the resources of the monkey kingdom at his command. Refer verse no. 9 herein below.

The Lord’s apprehension that Sugriv would forget his work once he gets the throne and his wife back is clearly articulated by him in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 18 which we shall read shortly below.

²It would be very difficult to launch a search for Sita during the rainy season; so the Lord decided to give a break. It was also intended to help Sugriv get some time to get his bearings in order and to consolidate his position in the kingdom in the aftermath of the duel in which his elder brother Baali was killed. Some period of time was needed to stabilise things and restore order; since the rainy season lasts for roughly three to four months there was ample time for Sugriv.

³Lord Ram had virtually limited Sugriv's powers by telling him to rule the kingdom alongside his nephew Angad. The Lord had feared that there were high chances that Sugriv would get rid of Angad as he would think the latter posed a danger to him because he was the son of his arch-enemy Baali who had been killed so that Sugriv could ascend the throne. The Lord did not want this to happen; Angad was a boy, and he can never be held responsible for the ill deeds of his father Baali.

The Lord wished to ensure that Angad got his due respect in the kingdom, and is not barred from his rights and privileges. Sugriv had no choice but to obey the Lord's orders to rule the kingdom jointly with Angad, because it was the Lord who had been instrumental in Sugriv getting the crown, and Sugriv had already tested the powers and strengths of Lord Ram prior to challenging Baali so he dared not oppose him or disobey him. This is clearly narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 11-12 that precede Doha no. 7.

By this singular advice the Lord also made Angad highly favourable towards himself, as now Angad would also feel obliged to the Lord for ensuring that his uncle Sugriv did not torment him or quietly usurp all powers and disenfranchise him as he was the son of his arch-enemy Baali. Any feeling of injustice or bias that Angad may have harboured inside his heart was immediately done away with. In due course of time Angad became an ardent follower and devotee of Lord Ram no less than was Hanuman, and the Lord too showed Angad the respect and confidence he deserved.

Lord Ram had judged by this time that he could not rely too much on Sugriv; he appeared to be a selfish creature. There were ample hints for this—(a) Sugriv had not hesitated in getting his brother Baali killed just to get the crown of the kingdom; he could also have proposed a power-sharing mechanism instead of outright killing his brother; (b) Sugriv did not propose to Lord Ram that if the Lord did not wish to enter the capital of the kingdom then he could stay in a cottage or hut that Sugriv would get constructed on the outskirts, instead of living on a hill during the rainy season as it would be very uncomfortable; he did not think of it once his desire to get the throne was fulfilled!

This is why the Lord reminded Sugriv to remember the promise he had made to him with respect to searching for Sita.

⁴The words “prabaraṣana giri” mean a hill where there is an abundance of rain. This hill was part of the mountain range known as Malyawan.]

दो०. प्रथमहिं देवन्ह गिरि गुहा राखेउ रुचिर बनाइ ।

राम कृपानिधि कछु दिन बास करहिंगे आइ ॥ १२ ॥

dōhā.

prathamahim dēvanha giri guhā rākhē'u rucira banā'i.
rāma kṛpānidhi kachu dina bāsa karahiṅgē ā'i. 12.

In the meantime, the gods had prepared a nice cave on this hill, making it as comfortable and pleasant as possible, in anticipation that Lord Ram, who is an abode of grace, mercy and kindness, would come here and stay for a while. (Doha no. 12)

चौ०. बरषा गत निर्मल रितु आई । सुधि न तात सीता कै पाई ॥ १ ॥
 एक बार कैसेहुँ सुधि जानौं । कालहु जीति निमिष महुँ आनौं ॥ २ ॥
 कतहुँ रहउ जौं जीवति होई । तात जतन करि आनउँ सोई ॥ ३ ॥
 सुग्रीवहुँ सुधि मोरि बिसारी । पावा राज कोस पुर नारी ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

baraṣā gata nirmala ritu āī. sudhi na tāta sītā kai pāī. 1.
 ēka bāra kaisēhum' sudhi jānaum. kālahu jīti nimiṣa mahum' ānaum. 2.
 katahum' raha'u jaurm jīvati hōī. tāta jatana kari āna'um' sōī. 3.
 sugrīvahum' sudhi mōri bisārī. pāvā rāja kōsa pura nārī. 4.

[Four months of the rainy season passed and it appeared that Sugriv had forgotten about his promise to Lord Ram regarding the search for Sita as he had done nothing in this direction. This enraged the Lord, and he told Laxman to go and bring Sugriv to him by a 'show' of fear and anger—i.e. by pretending to be angry, and casting fear in his mind.]

Lord Ram confided to Laxman (his constant companion and younger brother), 'My dear; the rainy season has ended and the clear weather of autumn has arrived, but yet we have not got any hints about the whereabouts of Sita. (1)

If I get any bit of information, whether good or not so good, about her, by any means whatsoever and from any quarter, I will vanquish even the god of death and recover her literally in a flash of a moment (i.e. very soon). (2)

Wherever she may be, if she is alive, then oh my dear, I will bring her by deploying whatever means are needed for the purpose. (3)

Unfortunately, even Sugriv has all but forgotten about me and my work once he has got his kingdom and wife back. (4)

[Note—These verses show Lord Ram's anguish and dismay at Sugriv's attitude. Sugriv became indulgent in his affairs of the kingdom, all but forgetting the word he had given to the Lord about sending messengers in all directions to search for Sita.

The forest-dwelling tribes are accustomed to inclement and harsh weather such as rainy season or the summer months unlike humans living in towns and cities. So had Sugriv been diligent and conscientious he would have sent messengers to find out Sita, and by the end of three of four months the required information should have been got. But nothing was done.

The Lord had given him a long time of four or so months to find the whereabouts of Sita, but there was no news; Sugriv had not even bothered to pay a courtesy call on the two brothers since they came to live on Mt. Pravarshan. This attitude of negligence was annoying, and it irritated Lord Ram.]

दो०. तब अनुजहि समुझावा रघुपति करुना सींव । भय देखाइ लै आवहु तात सखा सुग्रीव ॥ १८ ॥

dōhā.

taba anujahi samujhāvā raghupati karunā sīnva.
bhaya dēkhā'i lai āvahu tāta sakhā sugrīva. 18.

Then Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram), who was an embodiment of limitless compassion and grace (karunā sīnva)¹, advised Laxman, ‘My dear (tāta); go to my friend Sugriv (sakhā sugrīva) and pretend to be angry at him, just to instil fear in him, and then bring him here to me.’ (Doha no. 18)

[Note—¹The epithet “karunā sīnva” has been added for Lord Ram here to clarify that when the Lord instructed Laxman to show anger and make Sugriv fearful, it was just for show and not actually intended to harm him, for the Lord immediately calls Sugriv his “friend”; it would be highly wrong to harm one’s friend.

But Sugriv had become indulgent and neglected even his benefactor Lord Ram, so he deserved some scolding. Even a father scolds his son over wrongdoing; a good friend too would admonish his buddy if he thinks the latter is erring or failing to do what is rightly expected of him.

To wit, this anger and threatening were merely to bring Sugriv to his senses—for Lord Ram is so merciful and compassionate that he can never ever think of harming anyone, least of all his friend whom he himself had put on the throne.]

चौ०. इहाँ पवनसुत हृदयँ बिचारा । राम काजु सुग्रीवँ बिसारा ॥ १ ॥
निकट जाइ चरनन्हि सिरु नावा । चारिहु बिधि तेहि कहि समुझावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ihām̃ pavanasuta hr̥dayam̃ bicārā. rāma kāju sugrīvam̃ bisārā. 1.
nikaṭa jā'i carananhi siru nāvā. cārihu bidhi tēhi kahi samujhāvā. 2.

Here in the capital, meanwhile, Hanuman too was restless and became alarmed because a long time had passed and Sugriv did not seem inclined to pursue Lord Ram’s work; it looked as he (Sugriv) had all but forgotten about it. (1)

So Hanuman went near him and bowed at his feet. Then he explained the situation squarely to Sugriv from all its four angles. [To wit, Hanuman warned Sugriv of the dire consequences of his negligent attitude.]¹ (2)

[Note—¹The phrase used in the text is “cārihu bidhi” to indicate the way Hanuman explained the gravity of the situation to Sugriv. The word “cārihu” means ‘all the four’, and “bidhi” means ways or means. To wit, Hanuman told Sugriv the pros and cons of neglecting Lord Ram’s work and going back on his own words of helping the Lord find Sita by sending messengers in all the directions to search for her. {Refer:

Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 5.}

He warned Sugriv that if the Lord becomes angry and decides to dethrone him, then god forbid, there would be no succour for Sugriv. Sugriv had ascended the throne only by taking the help of the Lord, for he alone was unable to overcome his arch enemy Baali in order to claim the crown, and he was well aware of the Lord's strength as he had himself tested it when he made Lord Ram fling the huge bones of the demon Dundhuvī as well as fell the seven tall trees that grew on them by a single arrow. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 7.}

Besides this, Angad, the son of Baali, would be too willing to settle scores with his uncle Sugriv who had killed his father; the danger loomed from within his own palace as Angad would revolt if he sees that Lord Ram too is angry with Sugriv, and surely there were many ways open to Angad to take revenge, for obviously there would be a number of courtiers who would like to see Angad on the throne and take sides with him. Sugriv faced the prospects of mutiny, poisoning, civil war, assassination and blood shed etc.

Then there was the burden of shame and ignominy of a king rescinding on his words of honour, of being ungrateful to his friend Lord Ram who had risked his reputation for the sake of putting Sugriv on the throne. What face would he have to show to his countrymen; he would be ridiculed, censored, looked down upon and be a butt of joke. No one in the future would rely on him or his words; it will create anarchy and spark disobedience in his subjects. No one would fear or respect him, as all will know that Sugriv was a selfish creature who has no scruples.

Hanuman also reminded Sugriv of how Lord Ram had displayed his strength by slaying formidable demons, episodes that were briefly outlined by Laxman. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 5.}

So Hanuman advised Sugriv that he would be wise to become alert and immediately take remedial steps—which were first to start the search for Sita without delay, and then meet Lord Ram and apologise to him. Should the Lord enquire what he was doing all this time, Sugriv would have a ready excuse that a large number of messengers have already been dispatched for the purpose; otherwise he would have no answer in his defense.]

सुनि सुग्रीवँ परम भय माना । बिषयँ मोर हरि लीन्हेउ ग्याना ॥ ३ ॥
 अब मारुतसुत दूत समूहा । पठवहु जहँ तहँ बानर जूहा ॥ ४ ॥ कहहु पाख महँ आव न जोई । मोरें कर ता कर बध होई ॥ ५ ॥

suni sugrīvam̐ parama bhaya mānā. biṣayam̐ mōra hari līnhē'u gyānā. 3.
 aba māruṭasuta dūta samūhā. paṭhavahu jaham̐ taham̐ bānara jūhā. 4.
 kahahu pākha mahum̐ āva na jō'ī. mōrēm̐ kara tā kara badha hō'ī.5.

When Sugriv heard of the gravity of the possibilities that he faced, he was sore alarmed and affright. He regretted and said, 'Indulgences in material world had eclipsed my wisdom and sense of propriety. (3)

Now oh the Son of the Wind God (Hanuman)¹, send heralds on errands in all the directions where great communities of monkeys and bears live. (4)

Tell them to convey to all the communities an urgent message from me, that if any of them do not come here within a time frame of ‘half a month’ (“pākha mahum²”; fifteen days) then he would be killed by my hands.² (5)

[Note—¹The use of the phrase ‘son of the wind god’ for Hanuman is significant. Speed and agility was needed at this time; natural barriers such as hills, mountains, rivers and forests had also to be confronted. The ‘wind’ has the ability to go anywhere it likes, and there is no barrier that can hinder its passage. That is why Sugriv invokes this uniqueness in Hanuman to remind him of his abilities and motivate him to act fast like his father the Wind God.

²Some sort of threatening and coercive methods were usually employed by kings and emperors to make those reluctant to follow their commands fall in line. Otherwise, half of those who were summoned would cook up some excuse for not coming.

Once Sugriv realised the seriousness of the situation, he lost no time to act; the ‘fifteen day’ time proves his sense of urgency. Why was it not said: ‘tell them to come here “immediately” ’? Well, the kingdom of Kishkindha was a wild territory consisting of forests, mountains, hills, valleys, rivers and the un-chartered wilderness in general. It will take time for the messengers to reach each corner of this unmapped but extensive territory; then some time must be given to the summoned monkeys and bears to prepare and make arrangements at home for their personal affairs before departure, and then some time would be taken cover the distance from their homes to reach the capitol.]

तब हनुमंत बोलाए दूता । सब कर करि सनमान बहूता ॥ ६ ॥
 भय अरु प्रीति नीति देखराई । चले सकल चरनन्हि सिर नाई ॥ ७ ॥ एहि अवसर लछिमन पुर आए । क्रोध देखि जहँ तहँ कपि धाए ॥ ८ ॥ taba hanumanta bōlā'ē dūtā. saba kara kari sanamāna bahūtā. 6.

 bhaya aru prīti nīti dēkharā'ī. calē sakala carananhi sira nā'ī. 7.
 ēhi avasara lachimana pura ā'ē. krōdha dēkhi jaham' taham' kapi dhā'ē. 8.

Then Hanuman called the messengers; he extended great cordiality towards them, praising them and their qualities, and in general showing them a special treatment by way of honouring them and giving them due respect¹. (6)

After this initial gestures of cordiality, Hanuman became solemn as he calmly explained the gravity of the situation and the seriousness of the issue for which these heralds were summoned. He used the usual tricks of politics and statecraft to drive the point home by using a mixture of fear, threat, affection and rewards, as well as the propriety and probity of the work they were expected to do. [To wit, it was a ‘carrot and stick’ approach.]

After this briefing, all of the heralds bowed before him (Hanuman) and set off on their mission². (7)

Just at that time, Laxman entered the city angrily (as advised by Lord Ram). All the monkeys ran hither and thither seeing him angry. (8)

[Note—¹Hanuman was very wise, erudite and clever. He wished to ensure loyalty and total commitment of the heralds for the project in hand, so he played on their sense of self-respect, ego and emotions by showing special treatment to them; this ensured that they would be enthusiastic towards doing the task which was to be assigned to them. His cordial welcome to the messengers immediately struck an emotional cord of friendship and loyalty with them, and created a spontaneous bond that endeared him to all of them as they felt very privileged and honoured to have been chosen for this grand assignment.

²We have read earlier that Lord Ram too had adopted this tact to make Sugriv relent and make arrangements for sending troops of messengers in search of Sita. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 18.

It was indeed a ‘carrot and stick’ approach: Hanuman told those who were assembled that if they did not obey then it would be tantamount to disobedience and disloyalty towards their king, in case of which they would be severely punished; if on the other hand they did their duty diligently then the king would reward them in material terms, give them titles of honour, and grant them largesse.

As regards the propriety of them being sent to search for Sita, it was in perfect order as a rascal had kidnapped the lawful wife of a gentleman, and it is an honourable duty of all, and a noble deed indeed, to help such a person in distress; its reward would be immense in both material terms, in addition to having good fame and emotional contentment of a task well done for a good cause.

All the messengers were convinced, and they cheerfully volunteered to do their best.]

दो०. धनुष चढ़ाइ कहा तब जारि करउँ पुर छार।

ब्याकुल नगर देखि तब आयउ बालिकुमार ॥ १९ ॥

dōhā.

dhanuṣa caṛhā'i kahā taba jāri kara'um' pura chāra.

byākula nagara dēkhi taba āya'u bālikumāra. 19.

He (Laxman) raised his stringed bow and mounted an arrow on it. Then he said angrily, ‘I will burn the city to ashes.’

When the son of Baali (“bālikumāra”; Angad) observed that the whole city was terrified and in turmoil, he came to meet Laxman (to calm him down)¹. (Doha no. 19)

[Note—¹It is very significant that Angad decided voluntarily, or he was asked by Sugriv or Hanuman, to go and meet Laxman. Angad was very certain that Laxman would not harm him. Why was it so? It was because his father Baali had held his hand and gave it to Lord Ram just at the time when he was dying, with a prayerful request that the Lord must take care of his son Angad and forever treat him as his servant, or as his follower and dependant. This is expressly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

Lord Ram and Laxman were morally bound by this last wish of Baali made just before he died; it was sacrosanct and could not be bargained or set aside in any condition. So after this moment Lord Ram took great care to ensure Angad was given due respect and honour; that he was shown given full dignity as a prince of the kingdom, and the Lord treated Angad with a kind heart for all times to come. This is the reason why Angad was sure that no harm would come to him from Laxman.

Earlier Lord Ram had made Angad the crown prince of the kingdom of Kishkindha while anointing Sugriv as its king; then the Lord had ordered Sugriv to share the responsibility of ruling the kingdom equally with Angad. By these two gestures the Lord ensured that Angad is not treated unfairly and like a second class citizen; and that after the death of Sugriv the throne would pass on to Angad. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Doha no. 11; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 12.}

Another important reason for selecting Angad to go out and meet Laxman is this: Sugriv was the king, and Angad was the crown prince. When a guest arrives in the kingdom it is usual practice that the prince is sent out to welcome him near the gates of the city, and the king receives the guest in the palace. So this custom was followed here, and since this was in order, therefore Laxman did not mind it.]

चौ०. चरन नाइ सिरु बिनती कीन्ही । लछिमन अभय बाँह तेहि दीन्ही ॥ १ ॥
 क्रोधवंत लछिमन सुनि काना । कह कपीस अति भयँ अकुलाना ॥ २ ॥
 सुनु हनुमंत संग लै तारा । करि बिनती समुझाउ कुमारा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

carana nā'i siru binatī kīnhī. lachimana abhaya bām̐ha tēhi dīnhī. 1.
 krōdhavanta lachimana suni kānā. kaha kapīsa ati bhayam̐ akulānā. 2.
 sunu hanumanta saṅga lai tārā. kari binatī samujhā'u kumārā. 3.

Angad came to Laxman, bowed his head at the latter's feet, and offered his prayers. At this humble and polite approach of Angad, Laxman was pleased; he extended his hands to hold of Angad's arms affectionately, and told Angad that he has nothing to fear from him. (1)

Meanwhile, inside the palace when the king of the monkeys (i.e. Sugriv) heard that Laxman is vehemently angry, he was terrified to his wits end.

He called Hanuman and instructed him urgently, 'Listen Hanumam; take Tara (the widow of Baali and the mother of Angad) with you, and go out to pray politely to the prince ("kumārā"; Laxman) and explain to him the situation¹. (2-3)

[Note—¹Sugriv decided to send Tara and Hanuman as he was sure that they, along with Angad who was already out to meet Laxman and given assurance of no harm from the latter, would be able to persuade Laxman to calm down and excuse the family for any misconduct done or error committed by them. The three—Angad, his mother Tara, and Hanuman—would together apologise on behalf of their king Sugriv.

One more reason was there for sending Tara. A noble man would never insult or harm a woman, especially when she was not at fault at all, nor would he use any abusive or uncouth language in her presence. So this was a sure-shot method to rein-in Laxman's anger.]

तारा सहित जाइ हनुमाना । चरन बंदि प्रभु सुजस बखाना ॥ ४ ॥
करि बिनती मंदिर लै आए । चरन पखारि पलंग बैठाए ॥ ५ ॥
तब कपीस चरनन्हि सिरु नावा । गहि भुज लछिमन कंठ लगावा ॥ ६ ॥ tārā sahita jā'i hanumānā. carana bandi prabhu sujasa bakhānā. 4.

kari binatī mandira lai ā'ē. carana pakhāri palamṅga baiṭhā'ē. 5.
taba kapīsa carananhi siru nāvā. gahi bhuja lachimana kaṅṭha lagāvā. 6.

Hanuman went along with Tara to pay their obeisance at the feet of Laxman; then they praised the glories of the Lord (i.e. of Lord Ram)¹. (4)

Then they prayed to him (Laxman) and requested him to come to the palace. Once there, they washed his feet reverentially and offered a cot as a seat for him sit down upon². (5)

At that moment Sugriv came and bowed his head at Laxman's feet. Laxman immediately took him by his arms and affectionately hugged him³. (6)

[Note—¹It was a clever strategy devised by Hanuman: Laxman cannot harm a person who has politely submitted himself before him, as well as praises Lord Ram at the same time.

²In a king's palace the guest of honour is given a high seat, whereas in an ordinary home he is seated on a sitting mat spread on the ground. So that's why a 'cot' was offered to Laxman.

³Sugriv was watching the proceedings from a hiding place; so when he observed that Laxman has calmed down and was in a friendly mood, he ventured out and came to meet him.

Laxman was instructed by Lord Ram to make a 'show' of anger and create fear as clearly stated in Doha no. 18 herein above; Laxman did not intend actual harm to anyone. So as soon as he saw Sugriv bow his head before him as a token of submission, Laxman grabbed this opportunity without a second thought, and reciprocated warmly by embracing Sugriv so as to put to rest any trace of apprehension that the latter might have had.

All bitterness was forgotten and forgiven; it was bonhomie and goodwill once again. This sudden change was crucial and essential—for, after all, the two brothers knew that they would need the full support of the monkeys and bears to successfully recover Sita. Hence there was no point to unnecessarily prolong the stand-off.]

नाथ बिषय सम मद कछु नाही । मुनि मन मोह करइ छन माहीं ॥ ७ ॥
मुनत बिनीत बचन सुख पावा । लछिमन तेहि बहु बिधि समुझावा ॥ ८ ॥

पवन तनय सब कथा सुनाई । जेहि बिधि गए दूत समुदाई ॥ ९ ॥

nātha biṣaya sama mada kachu nāhīm. muni mana mōha kara'i chana māhīm.
7.

sunata binīta bacana sukha pāvā. lachimana tēhi bahu bidhi samujhāvā. 8.
pavana tanaya saba kathā sunāī. jēhi bidhi ga'ē dūta samudāī. 9.

Sugriv said (by way of an apology and defence of his position), 'Oh Lord. There is no stronger intoxicating force that deludes a living being than the attractions of the sense objects of the material world which create delusions and attachments in the Mana (heart and mind) of even great sages.

[So, I request you to please excuse for my error and forgive me for the negligence caused due to this natural shortcoming of all living beings. Yes indeed it is true that I had become indulgent in the affairs of the world and had all but forgotten the promise I had made to Lord Ram. But I prithe to be kind on me, and forgive me for my irresponsible behaviour. I am at your service now.]' (7)

Hearing these polite words of humility, Laxman felt very pleased. Then he reassured Sugriv in many ways and explained the different aspects of the situation to him¹. (8)

At this juncture, Hanuman told Laxman everything about the large numbers of messengers being already dispatched in all the four direction with instructions to search for Sita and bring the news as quick as possible within a fixed time frame. (9)

[Note—¹To wit, Laxman assured Sugriv that neither he nor Lord Ram have any ill-will against him in the least; they had utmost trust and faith in him. The reason given by Sugriv was understandable; and he need not worry any longer.

Laxman may have also impressed upon him the urgency of the matter, for the longer it takes to locate Sita and recover her, the lesser would be the chance to find her in sustainable health, or even alive—because Sita may die due to grief and hopelessness if not found in time.

Besides this, the Lord had to return to Ayodhya as soon as the fourteen year period of forest exile ended, because if he did not return in the stipulated time his dear brother Bharat had vowed to end his life after that period. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 116 where Lord Ram himself makes this declaration.}

Hence, no more time is to be spent in searching for and recovering Sita.]

दो०. हरषि चले सुग्रीव तब अंगदादि कपि साथ ।

रामानुज आगें करि आए जहँ रघुनाथ ॥ २० ॥

dōhā.

haraṣi calē sugrīva taba aṅgadādi kapi sātha.
rāmānuja āgēm kari ā'ē jaham̃ raghunātha. 20.

Then Sugriv, Angad and the Kapi (i.e. Hanuman) together set off cheerfully to meet Lord Ram. Keeping Laxman in front to lead them¹, they arrived at the dwelling of Lord Raghunath (Sri Ram) (on Mt. Pravarshan)². (Doha no. 20)

[Note—¹Why was Laxman made to lead the group? There are two obvious reasons:

(a) None of them knew the exact place where Lord Ram lived on Mt. Pravarshan, because when Lord Ram took his leave of Sugriv after anointing him as the king of Kishkindha, it was Laxman alone who accompanied the Lord to the cave where they took up dwelling during the rainy season. No one amongst the monkeys knew this location. So it was necessary to have Laxman lead them to the correct cave.

(b) The group consisting of Sugriv, Angad and Hanuman were afraid because Lord Ram was angry with them. So if they kept Laxman in the front when they came face-to-face with Lord Ram, he would signal to the Lord that all was peaceful and in line with his wishes; so the chances of the Lord bursting out in anger as soon as he saw these ungrateful monkeys would be taken care of.

²In Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-3 we read about the time when Sugriv comes to meet Lord Ram on Mt. Pravarshan; the moment has been beautifully described as follows:- “They (i.e. Sugriv, Hanuman, and Laxman who was sent by Lord Ram to bring Sugriv to him) saw Lord Ram sitting on a stone slab on the mouth of the cave. He was attired in a deer skin, was dark complexioned, had a crown of matted hairs on his head (1), had large eyes, was calm, tranquil and serene, and his charming face had a smile of a man lost in some pleasant thoughts so much so that he is unaware of his surroundings. The Lord was so overwhelmed by the emotional torment created due to the agony of separation from his beloved wife Sita that he appeared to be weary and haggard even as he gazed absent-mindedly at the deer and birds that moved around him* (2).

Sugriv and Laxman got down from the chariot a little away, and came and fell down at his feet with devotion and reverence (3).

{*When Sugriv arrived at the cave where Lord Ram dwelt on Mt. Pravarshan, he found him sitting motionless, lost in deep thoughts. The Lord had a melancholic expression spread over his countenance that betrayed his emotional state of extreme sadness and profound gloom which was made all the more striking by the presence of a frozen smile on his dark-complexioned face and lotus-like eyes that were transfixed at a distant point where some deer and birds were moving around carelessly, for the smile and the gaze indicated that a huge emotional storm was blowing inside him as he was deeply lost in reminiscences and thoughts of Sita.}]

चौ०. नाइ चरन सिरु कह कर जोरी । नाथ मोहि कछु नाहिन खोरी ॥ १ ॥

अतिसय प्रबल देव तव माया । छूटइ राम करहु जौं दाया ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

nā'i carana siru kaha kara jōrī. nātha mōhi kachu nāhina khōrī. 1.

atisaya prabala dēva tava māyā. chūṭa'i rāma karahu jaurm dāyā. 2.

[When Sugriv met Lord Ram he apologised for the delay in carrying out the Lord's wish, which was to send messengers in all the directions to search for Sita. In the very beginning itself he defended himself by saying that it was not his mistake that he had forgotten the Lord's work and got involved in worldly affairs as it was due to the overpowering influence of the Lord's delusion-creating powers called 'Maya' that he got distracted from his path.]

Sugriv bowed his head reverentially at the feet of Lord Ram and politely made his submission, 'Oh Lord! I am not at fault (that I had become indulgent and all but forgot to carry out your orders). (1)

Oh Lord; your delusion-creating powers called Maya are extremely formidable and insurmountable; they are difficult to cope with. Oh Lord Ram! The firm grip of Maya can be broken or overcome only if you show mercy, grace and benevolence (upon the creature who has come under its influence). (2)

बिषय बस्य सुर नर मुनि स्वामी । मैं पावँर पसु कपि अति कामी ॥ ३ ॥
 नारि नयन सर जाहि न लागा । घोर क्रोध तम निसि जो जागा ॥ ४ ॥
 लोभ पाँस जेहिं गर न बँधाया । सो नर तुम्ह समान रघुराया ॥ ५ ॥ यह गुन साधन तेँ नहिं होई । तुम्हरी कृपाँ पाव कोइ कोई ॥ ६ ॥ biṣaya basya sura nara muni svāmī. maim pāvam̐ra pasu kapi ati kāmī. 3.

 nāri nayana sara jāhi na lāgā. ghōra krōdha tama nisi jō jāgā. 4.
 lōbha pām̐sa jēhim̐ gara na bam̐dhāyā. sō nara tumha samāna raghurāyā. 5.
 yaha guna sādhana tēm̐ nahim̐ hōī. tumharī kṛpām̐ pāva kō'i kōī. 6.

Even the gods, the humans and the sages, who are higher up in the hierarchy of creation, are not free from the tentacles of attachment to, and attraction for, the comforts and pleasures originating from the sense objects of this material world that Maya creates, so where do I, a lowly and humble creature of limited intellect whose form is like that of a monkey, stand against the formidable force of Maya?¹ (3)

He who has not been pierced by the symbolic arrow shot at him in the form of passionate, longing glances of a woman (i.e. he who succeeds in controlling himself and is not moved by gestures of lust and passion shown by a lovelorn lady), he who manages to remain awake in the horribly dark night symbolised by anger (i.e. he who is not provoked but remains calm and exercises self-control over his emotions when faced with an angry tirade, insinuations or ridicule by his adversaries) [4], ---

--- he who is not tied by the snare of greed and rapacity (i.e. he who overcomes all tendencies of greed and yearning, and practices exemplary renunciation and dispassion)—well, oh Lord, such a man as he is regarded as being similar to you (i.e. he is worthy of honour, respect, adoration, admiration, praise and glories that are similar to yours) [5] (4-5)

These qualities or virtues are not attainable by effort and by employing any other means, but it is only by your grace and mercy that some rare individuals are able to acquire them.² (6)

[Note—¹“To wit, when such exalted beings as gods and sages, as well as humans who are considered as being the first amongst all the members of the animal kingdom, are not spared from the influence of delusions that bind them to this artificial world of sensual charms, then say who am I in their comparison, for I am a lowly monkey (literally a “lowly animal; pāvam̐ra pasu”) by birth, and as such I have a fickle mind that is inherently attracted to sensual pleasures and is naturally inclined to be indulgent in the affairs of the world. So I may be forgiven and excused for my errors and negligence.”

Sugriv had made the same excuse before Laxman in Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20 herein above.

²To wit, the excellent characters noted above are rare in a living being. The few who are privileged to have them are those who are blessed by Lord Ram, for it is only by his grace and benevolence that one can have them.

Sugriv means that it is actually the fault of the Lord’s Maya that he had become so deluded as to forget about the urgency of the Lord’s work. But when the Lord decided to clear the influence of Maya, Sugriv was alerted about his mistake and made aware of his duties and responsibilities.

We will read in the next verse no. 7 that Lord Ram ‘smiled’, of course in amusement, at this logic of Sugriv and the excuse made by him!]

तब रघुपति बोले मुसुकाई । तुम्ह प्रिय मोहि भरत जिमि भाई ॥ ७ ॥
अब सोइ जतनु करहु मन लाई । जेहि बिधि सीता कै सुधि पाई ॥ ८ ॥ taba raghupati bōlē musukāī. tumha priya mōhi bharata jimi bhāī. 7.

aba sō'i jatanu karahu mana lāī. jēhi bidhi sītā kai sudhi pāī. 8.

Then Lord of the Raghus (“raghupati”; Lord Ram) smiled¹ and said, ‘You are dear to me like my brother Bharat is. (7)

However, please now make necessary arrangements, with all diligence and sincerity in your mind and heart (jatanu karahu mana lāī), so that the whereabouts of Sita can be known.² (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was quite amused by what Sugriv had said, so he smiled. Sugriv had found a ready-made excuse for his own follies by blaming the Maya of the Lord, which is universally blamed for the common tendency of all creatures to be indulgent in the material world, become selfish, pervert and sinful, get distracted from the correct path of righteousness and probity, and suffer from their horrible consequences.

The Lord smiled also because if he had not sent Laxman to give Sugriv a threat then the latter would have continued with his earlier ways, but now he seems to have become a philosopher, and it is more out of fear for his life than actually because he is a righteous man of scruples who regrets that he had erred. Why so? Because if Sugriv indeed had some sense of probity and propriety in him, even a rudimentary one, then he would not have thought of getting his own elder brother Baali killed for the sake of the throne of Kishkindha, and then so quickly forgetting the promise he made to someone, in this case Lord Ram, whose support he had taken to get rid of his brother. If he had been a creature of principles and scruples then he would have preferred to ask Lord Ram to help him get his rights back from Baali instead of getting him killed outright. And now he is preaching!

²Anyway, Lord Ram needed Sugriv's help to accomplish the mammoth task that was at hand—first to find out where Sita was, and then launch a campaign to retrieve her. The Lord needed manpower and logistics for this purpose, and so it was wise not to stretch the matter too far to the point that Sugriv is so embarrassed in public and ashamed of himself that he decides to square up his insult and humiliation by quietly revolting against the Lord and pulling the rug from under the Lord's feet at a crucial moment during the campaign to liberate Sita; there were chances that he may even share the secrets of the military strategy with Ravana, or order his troops to turn around when the war is just about to be won.

To wit, if Sugriv felt offended and humiliated in public in any way, and consequentially decides to turn hostile towards Lord Ram and Laxman to avenge his insult, then it would be a very bad thing for the two brothers as they were all alone in an alien land surrounded by unknown persons about whom nothing can be predicted. So it would be literally suicidal to push Sugriv to the corner, and shame him so much that he is too upset and loses his restraint to become emotionally aggressive towards the Lord; should it actually happen it would be fatal, especially because Laxman had threatened Sugriv in his own city while all his subjects were watching, and though Sugriv got scared initially but it is quite possible that he has taken offence in his heart for this public rebuke, and is looking for an excuse to rescind on his promise made to Lord Ram, and even take the two brothers hostage for insulting the king of Kishkindha. In this eventuality, the subjects of the kingdom would obviously and naturally side with their king instead of with total strangers like Lord Ram and Laxman.

So the risks were too great to make Sugriv feel uneasy beyond a limit. Hence, as soon as a window of opportunity came by way of Sugriv himself coming to submit and make excuses, the Lord was too willing to let the matter rest there and then. And so he extended an olive branch to Sugriv by calling him his “dear brother, like Bharat”.

Now Sugriv was bound by two relations with Lord Ram: one as a ‘friend’, and the other as a ‘brother’. By this single polite gesture Lord Ram instantly ensured Sugriv's loyalty and devotion towards himself.

We read in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 20-24 that when Sugriv presented the whole army of monkeys and bears at the service of Lord Ram and requested him to give them orders as he deemed fit, the Lord acted wisely and prudently by leaving the entire responsibility of selecting messengers and sending them to search for Sita, and then launching a campaign to free her from her captors, in on the shoulders of Sugriv. The Lord told Sugriv to appoint suitable messengers and heralds according to his own choice, depending upon the individual's ability and aptitude to succeed in the mission of finding Sita, because Sugriv knew his army better than anyone else, so he was the best judge to decide who amongst these commanders and warriors is the best suited for the job that is to be done. After all, Lord Ram was a stranger and a foreigner who had no experience of the skills, abilities and qualities of the warriors of the army of Kishkindha.

Sugriv was very pleased and felt delighted by this request of Lord Ram as it not only showed that the Lord trusted him and had no hard feelings for him because he had neglected the Lord's work earlier, but also because the Lord gave him due respect and the right to order his troops as a King of the kingdom of Kishkindha. Sugriv was happy that his dignity and self-respect was duly honoured by Lord Ram, and so it now devolves squarely upon his shoulders to ensure that the honour and dignity and respect and reputation of a great king of a great kingdom are properly taken care of.

To wit, Lord Ram was very wise and prudent in putting the responsibility on Sugriv's shoulders as now he was totally accountable for the success of the mission, and he cannot shrug it off by any sort of lame excuse.]

दो०. एहि बिधि होत बतकही आए बानर जूथ । नाना बरन सकल दिसि देखिअ कीस बरूथ ॥ २१ ॥

dōhā.

ēhi bidhi hōta batakahī ā'ē bānara jūtha.
nānā barana sakala disī dēkhi'a kīsa barūtha. 21.

While they were conversing in this manner, large groups of monkeys came there one after another in an unending line of troops. In all the four directions (as far as the eyes could see, and extending to the horizon), one could see monkey warriors of all sorts, having a wide variety of complexions, and belonging to as many classes, with varying visages, forms and demeanours¹. (Doha no. 21)

[Note—¹Of what sort were these monkey troops? These monkey warriors have been described elsewhere in (i) Valmiki's Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Sarga/Canto 37-40; and (ii) in Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse no. 9-10. We shall be reading the latter narration in due course in section 6.2 herein below where Adhyatma Ramayan is cited as part of this narrative.

Earlier we have read that Sugriv had given the heralds a time frame of fifteen-days by which the monkeys should come here. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 19.}

Some of these monkey warriors lived in nearby areas, and some in far-off lands. As soon as they received their king Sugriv's orders, they started departing from their dwelling places and arriving at Kishkindha, from where they were directed to Mt. Pravarshan where Lord Ram lived, and now Sugriv too had joined him.

Of course the arrival of troops must have taken some time, but it is certain that the entire army was assembled within fifteen days from the day Lord Ram had sent Laxman to coerce Sugriv to mend his ways, and Hanuman too had alerted him about his duties and responsibilities which Sugriv seemed to have neglected.]

चौ०. बानर कटक उमा में देखा । सो मूरुख जो करन चह लेखा ॥ १ ॥
आइ राम पद नावहिं माथा । निरखि बदनु सब होहिं सनाथा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bānara kaṭaka umā mair̥m dēkhā. sō mūrukha jō karana caha lēkhā. 1.
ā'i rāma pada nāvahir̥m māthā. nirakhi badanu saba hōhir̥m sanāthā. 2.

[Lord Shiva, who is the primary narrator of the story of Ram Charit Manas and who was also the first to conceive it in his mind, told his consort Parvati—] 'Oh Uma; I had seen the army of monkeys. Anyone who tries to describe this formidable army

(i.e. about its warriors and their numbers, its astonishing strength, its bubbling enthusiasm, its astounding energy, its incomparable valour, its matchless courage, its powerful force and irresistible punch) would be a foolish person¹. (1)

All the warriors came and bowed their heads at the feet of Lord Ram to pledge their unquestioned support and vow for their allegiance to the Lord and to his cause; all these warriors were in thrall when they observed the form of the Lord (from which effused a halo of divinity and holiness that automatically attracted them, and inspired loyalty and devotion in their hearts and minds) so much so that they unequivocally felt that they were highly honoured and exceptionally privileged to get an opportunity to serve the Lord². (2)

[Note—¹This is because this army of monkeys and bears that assembled to help Lord Ram was so great and unique that defied all descriptions. It was wondrous beyond imagination; it was a stupendous army of exceptional magnificence; it was an army the like of which was not hitherto seen anywhere.

²To wit, the huge army of monkeys and bears was so astonishingly impressed by the very first sight of Lord Ram that all its warriors were in awe and stood enthralled. The Lord's halo of holiness and divinity, his majesty and magnificence was so overpowering that no sooner did the warriors come in contact with the Lord then they decided voluntarily to serve him with all their might and to the best of their abilities.

It was a spontaneous emotional reaction that sprouted in the hearts and the minds of the warriors like the one that is generated inside the bosom of a creature when he feels what he is about to do is a good and noble deed that is done for an equally good and noble cause.

Thus, the participation of the monkeys and bears in the campaign for freeing Sita and elimination of the cruel demons was not done under coercion or any duress at all, but it was a voluntary involvement by each individual who took it as a privilege and an honour to be able to participate. In this scenario, if any one of them would have been told to stay back, he would have taken it as a punishment instead of seeing it as a chance to escape the risks of the impending campaign the result of which was unpredictable.

Every single warrior of the army was raring to go with enthusiasm that spilled over like milk that brims over when the pot is too full!]

अस कपि एक न सेना माहीं । राम कुसल जेहि पूछी नाही ॥ ३ ॥

यह कछु नहिं प्रभु कइ अधिकाई । बिस्वरूप व्यापक रघुराई ॥ ४ ॥ asa kapi ēka na sēnā māhīm. rāma kusala jēhi pūchī nāhīm. 3.

yaha kachu nahim prabhu ka'i adhikā'ī. bisvarūpa byāpaka raghurā'ī. 4.

There was not a single monkey (and bear) warrior in the whole army whom Lord Ram had not met individually and personally enquired about his welfare¹. (3)

There is no wonder in it, and nothing to be astonished about in this astounding feat of Lord of the Raghus (“raghurā'ī”; Lord Ram) because the Lord is a personified form, or an embodiment, of the cosmic form of the Supreme Being that is all-encompassing, all-pervading and omnipresent in this creation². (4)

[Note—¹When Lord Ram returned to Ayodhya after the Lanka campaign, the whole city poured out to meet him and emotionally welcome him. The gracious Lord wished to reciprocate this exuberant emotion of love and affection that the citizens exhibited universally, and also to show them he remembers each of them as much as they remembered him. So the Lord performed a miracle of sorts; he assumed countless forms and met each citizen individually. Everyone thought that the Lord has gone out of his way to meet him first and ask for his welfare before he met others; but it was such a miracle that the Lord met thousands of his subjects simultaneously. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 6.}

Another such occasion where Lord Ram had assumed countless forms at the same instant is found when Bharat lead a party from Ayodhya and went to meet Lord Ram in the forest at Chitrakoot in an attempt to persuade the Lord to return home. When this party arrived at the Lord's hermitage, he met everyone simultaneously by assuming as many forms as there were individuals in the party. This pleased each person and all of them felt that the Lord had shown them special treatment. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 244.}

The same mystical feat is achieved here. By this single amiable act of personal affection and graciousness, Lord Ram endeared himself to every single warrior of the army, as it was the first time in their lives that they had been personally shown so much respect and given such attention by anyone. Kings and commanders take a salute from the army regiments en-masse during a parade, but never do they go out of their way and against the rules of protocol to meet and hug each single member of the parade and ask 'how are you'.

Hence, this personal and affable approach of the Lord changed the law of the game instantly; each individual warrior became emotionally overwhelmed and felt that he is obliged to be loyal and obedient to such a nice and friendly Lord who made them all feel very comfortable by treating them all as one of his own.

So what otherwise would simply have been a formal army that was obliged to obey the commands given to it by its king and commanders now instantaneously transmuted itself into an army that was totally devoted and fully committed to Lord Ram, and vowed never to fail him.

²It is difficult for a human mind to understand how it happened if he does not realise that Lord Ram was not a human being, nor a magician. He was a personified form of the 'Supreme Being' who is almighty and omnipresent everywhere; in fact there is no place or spot in this creation where the Lord is not present.

To wit, the Lord is a personified form of Cosmic Consciousness that pervades throughout this creation in a uniform manner; it is only that under some circumstances this Consciousness is revealed and under other circumstances it remains invisible, or imperceptible for the senses. That makes the Lord visible at a given point of time, and remain invisible for the rest of the time. One such condition for making the Lord reveal himself is love and devotion. These facts have been affirmed by Lord Shiva himself to the gods and mother earth in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 185. The occasion was the assembly where they gathered together to seek Lord Vishnu and pray to him to help them against the terror unleashed by the demons lead by Ravana.

So therefore we conclude that since the Lord had revealed himself in as many numbers as there were monkeys and bears in the army so as to meet them individually and ask for their welfare, it proves unequivocally and in all sooth that the whole army was totally devoted and completely committed to serve Lord Ram; there is no doubt about it.

We can imagine and explain this phenomenon by a simple example. We know that water molecules exist in the air all around us; there would be no life if there was no moisture on earth. But do we see these water molecules as such? If the temperature drops below a certain point, these same molecules condense to form ‘water vapour’ which we see as a ‘cloud’ or ‘mist’ or ‘fog’, or even ‘steam’ that emerges from the spout of the kettle.

The same thing would apply to a more subtle element such as the ‘fire’. Its presence is felt in the form of ‘warmth’ all around us; even our body is warm due to the presence of this life-giving element inside the body, for a dead body is cold and not warm. But we don’t visibly ‘see’ fire as such, for it is so subtle an element that the gross organs of the eyes are not empowered to perceive it. But however, as soon as circumstances are favourable or conducive, this same fire element makes its visible form clear when we see flames leaping from burning wood or see the lighted wick of a candle.]

ठाढ़े जहँ तहँ आयसु पाई । कह सुग्रीव सबहि समुझाई ॥ ५ ॥
 राम काजु अरु मोर निहोरा । बानर जूथ जाहु चहुँ ओरा ॥ ६ ॥
 जनकसुता कहँ खोजहु जाई । मास दिवस महँ आएहु भाई ॥ ७ ॥ अवधि मेटि जो बिनु सुधि पाएँ । आवइ बनिहि सो मोहि मराएँ ॥ ८ ॥ thāṛhē jaham̃ taham̃ āyasu pā'ī. kaha sugrīva sabahi samujhā'ī. 5.

 rāma kāju aru mōra nihōrā. bānara jūtha jāhu cahum̃ ōrā. 6.
 janakasutā kahum̃ khōjahu jā'ī. māsa divasa maham̃ ā'ēhu bhā'ī. 7.
 avadhi mēṭi jō binu sudhi pā'ēm̃. āva'i banihi sō mōhi marā'ēm̃. 8.

After this initial introduction was over, all the warriors were ordered to stand in line wherever they were, in formations according to their ranks and stature in the hierarchy.

Then Sugriv addressed them, and explained everything to all of them. [To wit, Sugriv told them why they were summoned and what is to be done now; he also explained to them the propriety of his decision, and the rewards that await them at the successful conclusion of the campaign.] (5)

He said, ‘It is Lord Ram’s work (rāma kāju), and I also request you all to oblige me (aru mōra nihōrā). Oh monkey troops! Form groups and go in all the directions. (6)

Go and search for the daughter of Janak (“janakasutā”; Sita) everywhere (in all the directions)¹. Return here by the end of one month (i.e. within a month’s time). (7)

If anyone of you returns after this stipulated period, and without acquiring any information about the whereabouts of Sita, then as soon as you return to this forest you shall die at my hands².

[To wit, if you don't search Sita diligently, if you waste your time fooling around, if you take this mission lightly and think you are going to a picnic only to come back and offer excuses that you couldn't find Sita, or if you try to play tricks with me by not going out in the search at all but remain hidden in the forest during this period—then be warned that I will give you severe punishment, and it would be capital punishment; you will have to pay with your life. So don't force my hands, and try your best to find her.]' (8)

[Note—¹Sugriv had “explained everything” to the troops: this obviously means that he had told them what he had already told Lord Ram about his seeing Sita being taken away by the path of the sky in the general direction of the south. Besides this, Laxman also had briefed Sugriv about the events that occurred before they came here. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 5 herein above.} That means, Sugriv was told about Lord Ram's meeting with Jatau and Sabari, and that by the time the two brothers arrived at Lake Pampa and onwards at Mt. Rishyamook, they were well aware that Ravana had taken away Sita. It was also well known that Ravana lived in Lanka which lay roughly in the south direction from Kishkindha. So therefore, why did Sugriv order his troops to go in “all the directions”?

Well, though it is true that Ravana lived in the south direction and ordinarily if anyone wished to go after him he would head straight to south. But the case here is different—Ravana is a thief and a kidnapper for he has abducted the wife (Sita) of a noble and brave warrior-prince (Lord Ram) of whom he was so scared that he dared not wait a moment but hurtled away with the lady as fast as he could to escape her husband's wrath if he discovered his evil deed. And no sensible thief or kidnapper would keep his victim in a well-known place, such as his own home.

So therefore it was logical to suppose that Sita was kept captive in a place that no one would guess. This is the reason why Sugriv instructed his troops to “go in every direction”—which means even the northern direction. But the chances of Sita being taken to the north were remote as the general geographical area was populated by human beings and had villages, towns, cities as well as hermitages of sages, seers, ascetics and hermits as compared to the south part of the land, south of the Vindaya Mountains, especially the area that fell beyond the Dandakaranya forest, as it was too desolate, barren, thickly wooded, formidably wild and generally uninhabitable for any civilisation to flourish.

Hence, it is reasonable to guess that that while instructing his troops Sugriv must have told them to proceed in the ‘general direction of the south’, but spread themselves so as to cover all the angles in this direction, viz. from the extreme south-east end to the south-west corner, a rough half-circle of land.

Sugriv told the troops: “Spread yourselves everywhere; look into every nook and corner of the land; in every bower, under every canopy, in each alcove and recess, over glade and under arcade of creepers, in each cave, inside each hole, under each crevice, within all tunnels and vestibule, behind hedges, bushes and palisades of thickets, left and right and top of every ridge, mound and peak, over and beyond all mountains, hills and dales, cover all the gardens, orchards and groves, search under water as well as over land, letting not an inch of ground unexplored or remain unexamined by your vigilant eyes, not one nook or corner must escape your scrutiny. Remember not to miss any sign of life that you may find which might indicate that someone had been forcibly brought there or is being kept there, and then look out for and follow the tell-tale signs that you may suddenly descry. Keep your eyes open and your ears erect, be on your toes, seeing and hearing attentively and assiduously.

The search-party duly followed this instruction as we shall read shortly in Doha no. 23 herein below.

Besides this, take due precautions: don't go alone; form groups so that you have support and help in case of emergency, and don't get lost or feel scared. Have confidence in yourselves; never give space to hopelessness or dejection, for god will bless you as this is a noble enterprise and a deed done for a noble cause."

We shall read in verses that follow herein below that after the general mass of the troops had dispersed, Sugriv called his chosen companions, i.e. Angad, Nal and Hanuman, the chief monkey warriors, and Jamvant, the chief of the bears, and confidentially told them to go directly and exactly in the south direction. {Doha no. 22 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.}

A pertinent question here is this: how will the warriors know who Sita was, how will they recognise her, even when they managed to locate her, for they had never seen her before? The answer is this: Sita would be in grave distress and sorely grieving at her separation from Lord Ram; she would be in a sad and terrified state, physically weak, a shrunken countenance, weeping, lamenting, with tears on her face, unkempt clothes, dishevelled hairs, forlorn and weary appearance, and huddled up in some corner out of fear. So it would not be difficult to recognise her.

Besides this, Sugriv must have given them a general description of how she looked, first from his own observation when he saw her being taken as a hostage by her abductor, and second by a brief about her that Lord Ram was sure to have given him to share with the search teams.

²Another question is this: suppose even after trying their best the monkeys couldn't find Sita; will Sugriv then kill them? It is obvious that Sita would be found by any one of the countless groups, and not by all the groups, for the simple reason that the searchers would go out in different directions, and only one such group will be fortunate enough to go towards a direction that would take them to that spot where Sita was held captive. So does Sugriv mean that he would kill all other groups except the one which locates Sita?

No, not at all; there was nothing of this sort in what he had said. He simply meant that if these monkeys did not return within a month's time, and then came afterwards to say they could not find Sita, it is only then that he would punish them.

In case they failed despite their best efforts, they had nothing to fear if they returned before the stipulated time of one month and explained their position.

The threat of being killed applied only to those monkeys who neither returned within one month, nor brought any news of Sita even after this period. This restraint was necessary to drive home the urgency of the matter, for otherwise they would not take the mission seriously; they would do it leisurely and in their own time, coming back whenever it pleased them. This would derail the whole plan. So, stringent conditions were necessary to enforce discipline.]

दो०. बचन सुनत सब बानर जहँ तहँ चले तुरंत । तब सुग्रीवँ बोलाए अंगद नल हनुमंत ॥ २२ ॥

dōhā.

bacana sunata saba bānara jaham̃ taham̃ calē turanta.
taba sugrīvam̃ bōlā'e aṅgada nala hanumanta. 22.

After hearing these words (i.e. instructions of Sugriv), all the monkeys immediately departed in all the directions whithersoever they decided to proceed.

Then Sugriv called Angad, Nal and Hanuman (the chief amongst the monkeys). (Doha no. 22)

चौ०. सुनहु नील अंगद हनुमाना । जामवंत मतिधीर सुजाना ॥ १ ॥
सकल सुभट मिलि दच्छिन जाहू । सीता सुधि पूँछेहु सब काहू ॥ २ ॥ मन क्रम बचन सो जतन बिचारेहु । रामचंद्र कर काजु सँवारेहु ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

sunahu nīla aṅgada hanumānā. jāmavanta matidhīra sujānā. 1.
sakala subhaṭa mili dacchina jāhū. sītā sudhi puṁchēhu saba kāhū. 2.
mana krama bacana sō jatana bicārēhu. rāmacandra kara kāju samvārēhu. 3.

Summoning his chiefs, Sugriv advised them as follows: ‘Listen Neel, Angad, Hanuman and Jamvant¹. All of you are intelligent, have a resolute mind, and are wise. (1)

All of you excellent warriors must forthwith proceed in the south direction, and ask whosoever you meet about Sita and her whereabouts (because you may not know who will be helpful in your mission; so enquire from everyone). (2)

Use the faculties of your mind, wisdom and words in an intelligent manner, and adroitly adopt all such means and devise a device that may help you to successfully accomplish Lord Ramchandra’s work.

[To wit, all of you are wise and intelligent; it is not possible to tell you exactly what, when and how to do a thing or what action is to be taken. You have to take your own decisions on the spot; I can’t predict everything, and can only give you a general advice. Take everything and all factors into consideration, weigh all the pros and cons, and then act judiciously and with prudence according to the demands of the prevalent circumstance and the requirements of the current situation.] (3)

[Note—¹Nal and Neel were brothers; they were the architects and engineers for the kingdom of Kishkindha. Angad was Sugriv’s nephew; Hanuman was his chief advisor and a faithful devotee of Lord Ram. Jamvant was the chief of the bears.

They were close confidantes of Sugriv. So he called them and told them to go straight to the south—because the chances of Sita being discovered in this direction were far greater than anywhere else. Sugriv guessed that given the haughty and arrogant nature of Ravana, he would think that no one would ever dare to challenge him no matter where he kept Sita. So it is logical to deduce that he would keep her close by in order to exercise a tight vigil on her, which would be easier closer home than in a distant place.]

भानु पीठि सेइअ उर आगी । स्वामिहि सर्ब भाव छल त्यागी ॥ ४ ॥
 तजि माया सेइअ परलोका । मिटहिं सकल भवसंभव सोका ॥ ५ ॥
 देह धरे कर यह फलु भाई । भजिअ राम सब काम बिहाई ॥ ६ ॥
 सोइ गुनग्य सोई बड़भागी । जो रघुबीर चरन अनुरागी ॥ ७ ॥ bhānu pīṭhi sē'i'a ura āgī. svāmihi sarba bhāva chala tyāgī. 4.

 taji māyā sē'i'a paralōkā. miṭahir̄ sakala bhavasambhava sōkā. 5.
 dēha dharē kara yaha phalu bhā'i. bhaji'a rāma saba kāma bihā'i. 6.
 sō'i gunagya sō'i barabhāgī. jō raghubīra carana anurāgī. 7.

Remember this axiom: 'If someone wishes to warm himself by the sun's heat than he should sit with his back towards the sun, while if he wants to warm himself before a fire then he must sit facing the latter.' [To wit, it is advisable to take the heat of the sun on one's back instead of facing the sun directly from the front as it would be harmful, especially if its rays fall on one's eyes per chance and cause blindness. On the contrary, if one wishes to keep warm near a raging fire, it is advisable to sit or stand facing the fire instead of having one's back to it, because the fire is a dangerous thing and must always be watched directly as a safety precaution.]

But when it comes to serving one's lord, one must do it sincerely and without pretensions, and in whatsoever manner it can be done, without reservations or worrying unduly about the means that are adopted to be successful in this service. [Sugriv tells his companions that they should feel free to adopt any method they think fit and proper in order to successfully accomplish the work of Lord Ram, which was to find Sita. They ought naught unduly worry about the risks involved in the effort, but before they take any action they must discuss its pros and cons thoroughly, for he has already told them that they were wise and intelligent enough to see the matter through. So go ahead cheerfully.]¹ (4)

If one gets rid of Maya (worldly delusions and its attendant problems), and instead, strives to ensure a better fate for himself (by devoting himself to spiritual pursuit, and follow the path shown by the scriptures that lead to deliverance, emancipation and salvation of the soul)—then, in all sooth and without gainsay, he would find lasting peace and happiness. (5)

Oh my brothers (bhā'i)! The best reward that one can expect to have after having taken birth as a creature, an entity that has a gross physical body, is to worship and serve Lord Ram diligently by abstaining from all involvement in worldly matters. (6)

He who has sincere devotion and undiluted affection for the holy feet of Lord Ram is indeed a virtuous person who has all the excellent qualities one is expected to possess, and is also a most fortunate and privileged soul.² (7)

[Note—¹In this verse no. 4, Sugriv basically tells the group not to worry too much about the propriety or the danger of adopting a path or means to discover Sita if they conclude at a specific moment that a particular action is necessary to achieve success. They should not be like a man of vanity who takes pride in following certain dictums in totum without understanding their underlying principles.

For instance, when it is said that one should not face the sun while warming oneself, it is to safeguard against harming one's eyesight or tanning the complexion of the face too much. So if one takes adequate precautions then there is no need whatsoever not to sit facing the sun.

Similarly, if one is in a group sitting around a camp-fire for instance, and there is someone to alert him if anything goes wrong, such as a spark flying from the fire, then there is no risk of getting burnt by fire even if one sits with his back to it.

²The idea behind Sugriv's discourse is to inspire devotion and commitment in the heart of those who were selected by him to go on a mission to search for Sita. If these monkeys and bears were convinced that what they were about to do is not merely carrying out the orders of their king but a deed that would grant them everlasting joy and spiritual contentment. It's not only a noble cause they are serving but it is also a holy service done to the Supreme Lord who is in the form of Lord Ram.

So therefore, they must put their heart and soul in this mission.]

आयसु मागि चरन सिरु नाई । चले हरषि सुमिरत रघुराई ॥ ८ ॥
 पाछें पवन तनय सिरु नावा । जानि काज प्रभु निकट बोलावा ॥ ९ ॥
 परसा सीस सरोरुह पानी । करमुद्रिका दीन्हि जन जानी ॥ १० ॥
 बहु प्रकार सीतहि समुझाएहु । कहि बल बिरह बेगि तुम्ह आएहु ॥ ११ ॥
 हनुमत जन्म सुफल करि माना । चलेउ हृदयँ धरि कृपानिधाना ॥ १२ ॥ जद्यपि प्रभु जानत सब बाता । राजनीति राखत सुरत्राता ॥ १३ ॥

āyasu māgi carana siru nā'ī. calē haraṣi sumirata raghurā'ī. 8.
 pāchēr̄n pavana tanaya siru nāvā. jāni kāja prabhu nikaṭa bōlāvā. 9.
 parasā sīsa sarōruha pānī. karamudrikā dīnhi jana jānī. 10.
 bahu prakāra sītahi samujhā'ēhu. kahi bala biraha bēgi tumha ā'ēhu. 11.
 hanumata janma suphala kari mānā. calē'u hṛdayam̃ dhari kṛpānidhānā. 12.
 jadyapi prabhu jānata saba bātā. rājanīti rākhata suratrātā. 13.

After this briefing, they (i.e. Nal, Neel, Angad, Hanuman, Jamvant etc.) bowed their heads reverentially (before their king Sugriv as well as Lord Ram) to seek permission to depart on their mission. Then they took their leave, and started off cheerfully with gladdened hearts. (8)

The Son of the Wind-God¹ had bowed last; and as he was moving away Lord Ram called him near as the Lord knew that he was the one who would successfully do his work (of finding Sita)². (9)

The Lord caressed Hanuman's head with his lotus-like hands (to bless him and signal that success will be his).

Then Lord Ram took off his finger-ring (karamudrikā; 'kar' = hand; 'mudrika' = ring; literally it means the "ring worn on the hand", which in practical terms means the 'finger-ring')³ and gave it to him as the Lord considered him as his devoted servant who would be the one to accomplish his task. (10)

Then he told Hanuman the message that he should convey to Sita when he met her, ‘Reassure Sita in all possible ways. Tell her that I suffer immensely from the grief of separation from her, and assure of my strength and abilities (so that she feels confident that I will certainly come to free her inspite of all the odds). Then you must come back with all the speed you can muster.’ (11)

Hanuman realised that he indeed was the privileged one, the chosen one personally selected by the Lord. He felt fulfilled and considered his birth as being fully rewarded.

Then he started off on his mission after enshrining the holy feet of the merciful and compassionate Lord in his heart⁴. (12)

[This above incidence proves that—] Though the Lord (Sri Ram), who dispels the torments of the gods, knew everything⁵, yet he maintained an exterior of ignorance (about Sita) and generally behaved like a human being just in order to conform to the norms and laws of the world. (13)

[Note—¹The use of the epithet ‘the Son of the Wind God’ for Hanuman is very significant here. In a short while these messengers would come to the shore of the southern ocean, and they will have to overcome this formidable barrier in order to reach Lanka where Sita is held captive by Ravana. The ‘wind’ has the ability to ‘fly’ over the surface of the ocean without the latter obstructing its path in any way; on the contrary the wind lifts the water from the surface of the ocean to form huge waves that are then forced to follow the path taken by the wind.

Hence, amongst all the warriors dispatched to bring news of Sita, it would only be possible for Hanuman to achieve success in this enterprise because he is the ‘son of the wind god’, and hence has the unique quality possessed only by the ‘wind’, which is agility and speed, as well as the ability to fly unobstructed over the surface of the ocean; none of the others in the whole army of monkeys and bears had this rare ability.

Use of this title was intended to remind Hanuman about his exalted inheritance; to tell him that he is the only one who has this singular and distinctive ‘ability to fly or cruise like the wind’ that no one else has. So he is advised in a subtle manner to invoke this rare ability of his at the crucial time when the need would arise for someone to cross the ocean to find Sita; at that time he must remember that he is the ‘son of the wind god’, and thus has the genes of the wind god that gives him the special skill which empowers him to cruise or fly over the surface of the ocean like the wind does.

This will instill confidence and fearlessness in Hanuman’s mind and heart as he would be sure that his celestial father, the ‘Wind God’ who is the Lord of the wind element, would come to his aid most willingly and with full might of his—as the mission of Hanuman was in line with the wishes of all the Gods who had prayed to Lord Vishnu eliminate the scourge of Ravana and his race of cruel demons, a prayer which the Lord answered by coming down in the form of Lord Ram and devising a device by way of Sita’ abduction by Ravana as a means towards fulfilling this objective.

Not only crossing the ocean, this unique inheritance of Hanuman that he was the ‘son of the wind god’, and thus possessed the certain unique qualities of the ‘wind element’, would come in handy also when he lands on the soil of Lanka. He has to enter the strong fort of Lanka surreptitiously, roam around the city freely and undetected till he meets Sita, and then give a token of punishment to Ravana and the demons by burning their city to cinders. All this needed the agility and fearlessness from captivity, the ability to surmount the greatest of obstacles with stealth and speed, have access to all corners and nooks, and a formidable punching power to fell the enemy—eclectic qualities that the ‘wind’ possesses. Everyone knows that the wind or the air can easily pass through the smallest fissure or minutest of cracks; it can go unhindered anywhere it likes with speed; it can be so strong as to bend and topple huge trees or raise waves in the ocean to great heights as is seen during powerful storms; it remains hidden from view even while making its presence felt by its mere touch, or by the sound it creates when moving rapidly, or when it creates havoc all around as during severe storms.

And to top it all, when the time would come to spread the fire that would burn Lanka, ‘wind’ would be needed to fan the flames.

To wit, the lineage of Hanuman as being the ‘son of the wind god’ was purposely invoked here.

²Lord Ram had already judged the intelligence, prudence, wisdom and wit of Hanuman who had endeared himself to the Lord from the time they met first. Whenever a commander or an officer or a king needs some special work to be done that can’t be done by a single person, he would appoint a group of persons to do it. While reviewing the skills of the individuals in this group, the commanding officer would zero in on a particular individual whom he thinks, by his personal experience and long time observation, to be the most qualified and best equipped to achieve success. So while a general order is given to the group and the assignment explained to them, this favourite individual is briefed separately and in detail—because the commanding officer feels that this individual is more likely to succeed.

In the same manner, Lord Ram decided that it was Hanuman who would succeed in actually meeting Sita and bringing back news of her. So the Lord called him near and took him into confidence.

³Now about this “finger-ring” (karamudrikā). When Lord Ram had departed from his palace at Ayodhya he was completely attired as a hermit; he had discarded all paraphernalia that would indicate that he was a prince of a great kingdom, and had a grand royal heritage. He had doffed all his royal garments and shed all decorative ornaments normally worn by princes; he attired himself as a hermit who covers himself with plain ochre cloth, and kept only his bow and arrows along with the quiver as these had nothing with royalty but were as inseparable from a warrior as were the arms of his body. Though Sita also had worn simple clothes befitting the wife of a forest-dwelling sage, yet she retained some basic ornaments that are essential for a married lady to wear, and one such was her finger ring, the other was the sacred thread known as the ‘Mangal Sutra’, and the third was the ‘Chudamani’, a jewel worn on the crest of a diadem by queens but this term is also used for an ornament that is tucked in the thick plait of hair on the head of all married women.

At the time when Lord Ram, Laxman (his younger brother) and Sita were taken across river Ganges by the boatman known as the Kewat, the Lord wanted to pay his charges, but he had nothing to give to Kewat. So Sita took off her finger ring and offered it to the Lord to give it to Kewat as his fee; the overwhelmed Kewat refused to accept this ring as he knew that the Lord was on his way to the forest and it would be absolutely wrong and exceptionally greedy to take his wife’s finger ring in these circumstances; so he refused and the ring was returned. Sita did not take this ring back, as taking anything back once it is given as a gift to someone would be wrong for her. So Lord Ram had no option but to keep the ring himself, for obviously he could not do anything else as there was no option left for him. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 102 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

It is this very finger-ring that Lord Ram gave Hanuman to prove to Sita that he was indeed Lord Ram's messenger by giving her this personal ring of hers which no one can return to her but Lord Ram, as the Lord was the only one who could have possessed it. Sita would immediately recognise the ring as being hers, it would dispel all doubts in her mind, and in turn it would instil confidence in her towards Hanuman. This is exactly what had happened when Hanuman met Sita—she had grave misgivings in the beginning but this finger-ring, aided by Hanuman narrating the details of Lord Ram's story—from the time she left Ayodhya with Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman, till the time she was separated from the Lord—made her fully convinced of his authenticity and integrity. We shall be reading these events in due course when we come to this point in our narrative. {However, for the sake of quick referral, the relevant verses from Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, are Doha no. 12—to Doha no. 13.}

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse no. 29 it is said that the finger ring which Lord Ram gave to Hanuman to be carried with him as an identification tool which would convince Sita that he was indeed Lord Ram's messenger “had the initials of the Lord, i.e. the letters of the Lord's name RAM, engraved in it”. This means that it was the ring which Lord Ram had given to Sita at the time of their marriage, because rings are exchanged during formalisation of a marriage. Since that time Sita had worn it, and it must have been the same ring that she gave to her husband Lord Ram to give to the boatman in lieu of his charges for taking them and Laxman across river Ganges.

⁴To wit, when Lord Ram selected Hanuman for giving the ring as a token that would help him establish his identity before Sita, and also gave him the message that he needed to convey to her, Hanuman was exuberant with joy and felt exceptionally happy; his enthusiasm knew no bound, and he decided that he will do everything needed to live up to the trust that the Lord had reposed in him. Surely and certainly, Hanuman vowed in silence, he will never let the Lord down. Hanuman enshrined the Lord inside his heart like one consecrates a deity in a shrine.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24 where we have already read that everything was pre-planned by Lord Ram as it was necessary so that the cause of torments of the gods can be eliminated—i.e. Ravana and his evil demons can be slayed.

Once again in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precede Doha no. 27 it is explicitly mentioned that “Lord Ram knew everything that was happening” at the time when Sita asked him to go behind the decoy golden deer and bring it to her.

The use of the word “suratrātā” for Lord Ram is also of significance. The Lord is on a mission to end the torments of the gods that Ravana had inflicted upon them. So therefore, inspite of knowing everything, Lord Ram had to maintain secrecy for success in killing Ravana and his clan of cruel demons. The reason is that if Ravana got the hint who the Lord actually was, or that some powerful spy-warrior (i.e. Hanuman) was about to penetrate his fort and enter Lanka, and that he would burn it to ashes, then it was sure that he would immediately take preventive measures, such reinforce his defenses and barricade the entrance points more carefully, hide Sita somewhere else, and take all precautionary measures to prevent the burning of the city by the invader.

Hence, it was of utmost importance to keep everything under wraps and go about the mission as silently as possible.]

दो०. चले सकल बन खोजत सरिता सर गिरि खोह । राम काज लयलीन मन बिसरा तन कर छोह ॥ २३ ॥

dōhā.

calē sakala bana khōjata saritā sara giri khōha.
rāma kāja layalīna mana bisarā tana kara chōha. 23.

All the monkeys and bears departed on their mission to search Sita. They searched for her everywhere, in the forests and the wilderness, rivers and streams, ponds and lakes, mountains and hills along with their caves and ravines.

Their mind and heart were so involved in Lord Ram's mission that they were not even conscious of their own bodies and its comforts. [To wit, they did not bother to rest, eat or sleep; they relentlessly continued with their search day and night. Neither the heat of the sun or the darkness of the night could stop them, nor the wild animals could distract them in their path or the vagaries of Nature could slow their progress.] (Doha no. 23)

Section 6.1.6: One group sent out to search for Sita finally reaches the shore of the ocean and meets Sampati who tells them about Sita being held captive in Lanka. It is then decided to send Hanuman across the ocean to Lanka to ascertain facts, and come back with a first-hand report of Sita:

This privileged group of reconnoitring team headed to the south. They were full of enthusiasm and brimming with zeal and confidence. On the way they felt extremely thirsty and hungry, and searching for some refreshment they met a hermitress inside a splendid cave. She used her mystical powers that can transfer an individual from one point to another by transcendental means to transport this group directly to the shore of the southern ocean. A most fearful sight met them: they faced a formidable barrier in the form of an endless ocean, mighty and un-crossable as it was, that stopped their further progress.

The group was utterly frustrated and dismayed; they were in low spirits and at the end of their wits as they were certain that they had no chance of success any longer; for fate seemed to have stone-walled their progress and dashed all their hopes. Just at this despairing moment they met Sampati, an old vulture and an elder brother of Jatau who had died while trying to protect Sita as she was being taken away by Ravana.

When Sampati learned of the developments he, after paying his last respects to his younger brother Jatau, flew high in the sky, and by the virtue of the ability of seeing long distances that all vultures are endowed with, he could descry Sita sitting forlorn and distressed under a tree in a garden in Lanka. So anyone who could cross the mighty barrier in the form of the ocean and reach Lanka would be able to meet Sita.

The group huddled together to determine who among them was skilled and qualified enough to achieve this daunting task. The unanimous choice was Hanuman; so he was assigned this job. He confidently launched himself across the water of the ocean, flying over its surface like a plane or a cruise missile, and landed on the soil of Lanka. En-route however he faced some obstacles which he easily overcame.

These developments are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Doha no. 30 as follows:-

चौ०. कतहुँ होइ निसिचर सैं भेटा । प्रान लेहिं एक एक चपेटा ॥ १ ॥
 बहु प्रकार गिरि कानन हेरहिं । कोउ मुनि मिलइ ताहि सब घेरहिं ॥ २ ॥
 caupāī.

katahum' hō'i nisicara saim bhētā. prāna lēhim ēka ēka capētā. 1.
 bahu prakāra giri kānana hērahim. kō'u muni mila'i tāhi saba ghērahim. 2.

As they moved ahead on their mission, they talked loudly and animatedly amongst themselves, declaring that 'If we meet the demon (who has stolen Sita) anywhere and under any circumstance, we will kill him by each of us fiercely slapping and viciously cuffing him, one by one of us in turn.' (1)

They searched the mountains and hills as well as the forests thoroughly and in all possible ways. Wherever they met some sage or hermit¹, they surrounded him (to ask him if he knew anything of Sita, as exalted sages and hermits are known to have insight into everything). (2)

[Note—¹There were not many sages and hermits living in these parts out of fear of demons. But still here and there, in isolated and secluded pockets on the hills and in the forests, the monkeys and bears did find a few sages and hermits. So they surrounded them and asked for any help or guidance they could give.

But it appears that none of them were of any help; either no one knew where Sita had been taken away, or even if they knew they preferred to keep silent out of fear of the demons' wrath.]

लागि तृषा अतिसय अकुलाने । मिलइ न जल घन गहन भुलाने ॥ ३ ॥ मन हनुमान कीन्ह अनुमाना । मरन चहत सब बिनु जल पाना ॥ ४ ॥

lāgi tṛṣā atisaya akulānē. mila'i na jala ghana gahana bhulānē. 3.
 mana hanumāna kīnha anumānā. marana cahata saba binu jala pānā. 4.

The reconnoitring team was exhausted by thirst (and hunger); its members were very agitated and dying for water. They searched in vain for water, and in this desperation and agitated state of mind they got lost in the middle of the wild forest. (3)

Hanuman thought to himself that all of them would die for want of water to drink. (4)

चढ़ि गिरि सिखर चहूँ दिसि देखा । भूमि बिबर एक कौतुक पेखा ॥ ५ ॥ चक्रबाक बक हंस उड़ाहीं । बहुतक खग प्रबिसहिं तेहि माहीं ॥ ६ ॥ caḍhi giri sikhara cahūṁṁ disi dēkhā. bhūmi bibara ēka kautuka pēkhā. 5.

cakrabāka baka hansa urāhīm. bahutaka khaga prabisahim tēhi māhīm. 6.

So he (Hanuman) climbed atop a hill and looked carefully in all the directions. On one side he descried a strange and mysterious view around a cave-like opening (a hole or a cavity) in the ground that marvelled him with excessive marvel. (5)

[What did he see?] He could descry many types of water-birds such as Chakravaks (birds that go round and round over water bodies such as ponds and lakes; the ruddy-goose, the hummingbird or the howkmoth), Baks (herons), and Hans (swans) hovering over the mouth of the hole, and he could also observe that some of these birds as well as other birds were entering and leaving this cave-like opening¹. [He observed other birds also that usually flock to water bodies where flowers bloom and ripe fruits are to be found in abundance.] (6)

[Note—¹Hanuman was intelligent and wise; he concluded that this was a clear sign of the presence of water inside this hole. He gazed at this marvelous sight to confirm it was not a mirage, and when he was sure it was for real, he was exhilarated and exulted with excess of joy as this sight indicated availability of water, and consequently of life.

‘Eureka’, he exclaimed to his waiting companions, ‘Water has been found’!]

गिरि ते उतरि पवनसुत आवा । सब कहूँ लै सोइ बिबर देखावा ॥ ७ ॥ आगें कै हनुमंतहि लीन्हा । पैठे बिबर बिलंबु न कीन्हा ॥ ८ ॥ giri tē utari pavanasuta āvā. saba kahūṁṁ lai sō'i bibara dēkhāvā. 7.

āgēm kai hanumantahi līnhā. paiṭhē bibara bilambu na kīnhā. 8.

The son of the wind god descended hastily from the summit of the hill and summoned all his companions to come with him to the top and see the sight for themselves. (7)

The group put Hanuman in the lead and immediately started for that cave-like hole, and as soon as they reached it, all of them entered it without delaying even for a moment¹. (8)

[Note—¹From the start itself, Hanuman’s courage and valour, as well as his patient handling of adversities, has started showing. It was he who did not just lament for water but ran up the hill to look for it; it was he who was chosen to lead the group to the cave and enter it first.

The cave was dark and damp inside; an exceptional courage and an ability to sense danger was needed to move ahead inside it in pitch darkness and explore it. So all the monkeys and bears held each other's hands to form a line, and Hanuman led them from the front. He moved on inside the labyrinthine cave very cautiously, feeling his way along and keeping all his senses on the alert to catch any tell-tale signs of either danger, so that precautionary measures can be taken, or of water so that they can move in that direction through the tunnels.]

दो०. दीख जाइ उपबन बर सर बिगसित बहु कंज । मंदिर एक रुचिर तहँ बैठि नारि तप पुंज ॥ २४ ॥

dōhā.

dīkha jā'i upabana bara sara bigasita bahu kan̄ja.
mandira ēka rucira taham̄ baiṭhi nāri tapa pun̄ja. 24.

Ultimately they saw a wide open space deep inside the splendid cavern (or perhaps this cave ended here) where they found a magnificent garden and a wonderful pond in which many lotus flowers bloomed.

Nearby they perceived a temple-like structure in which sat an exalted hermitress who appeared to be an embodiment of spiritual energy and dynamism inherent in Tapa (austerity and penances) that she was engaged in doing¹. (Doha no. 24)

[Note—¹This story of the reconnoitring party discovering a fairy-tale like wondrous garden of a splendid view deep inside a mysterious cave in a desolate forest, complete with a wonderful pond and an astoundingly magnificent surrounding unexpected in an underground labyrinth of dark-and-gloomy tunnels and vestibules, mirrors the fascinating adventure narrated in the 652nd and the 653rd night of the legendary classic “Tale of One Thousand One Arabian Nights” where Prince Ahmed meets the fairy Princess Peri-Banu of the Jinns inside one such magical ‘fairy-cave’.]

चौ०. दूरि ते ताहि सबन्हि सिरु नावा । पूछें निज बृत्तांत सुनावा ॥ १ ॥
तेहिं तब कहा करहु जल पाना । खाहु सुरस सुंदर फल नाना ॥ २ ॥
मज्जनु कीन्ह मधुर फल खाए । तासु निकट पुनि सब चलि आए ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

dūri tē tāhi sabanhi siru nāvā. pūchēm nija br̄ttānta sunāvā. 1.
tēhim̄ taba kahā karahu jala pānā. khāhu surasa sundara phala nānā. 2.
majjanu kīnha madhura phala khā'ē. tāsu nikaṭa puni saba cali ā'ē. 3.

The team (of monkeys and bears) bowed their head to her from a distance¹. The hermitress then enquired of them who they were and why they had come here, thereat he (i.e. Hanuman as he was leading the group) briefed her about everything related to the reason why they had come in this direction, why they had entered the cave, and what their future objective was. (1)

When she heard everything, she advised them to refresh themselves by drinking the water (of the lake), and then eat to their content fruits, ripe, succulent and sweet, that were available in abundance at the place (inside the garden). (2)

The group took a bath and ate sweets fruits; after refreshing themselves all of them went near the hermitress². (3)

[Note—¹The monkeys and bears “bowed to the hermitress from a distance” because they were strangers to her, and neither were they sure how they would be received by her, whether she would welcome them or become annoyed at this intrusion into her privacy unannounced. The distance was also maintained for showing respect to a hermitress who was sitting in a meditative posture as described in Doha no. 24 herein above.

²By the affable manner in which the hermitress received the group, listened to their story with concern, and then affectionately showed them water and fruit trees had by now convinced all of the monkeys and bears that they were in a friendly company, that there is nothing to fear from this mystical woman. So though in the beginning they had stood at some distance to bow their heads to her, but now, after being refreshed with a bath, drinking water and eating fruits, they came near to her.]

तेहिं सब आपनि कथा सुनाई । मैं अब जाब जहाँ रघुराई ॥ ४ ॥
 मूदहु नयन बिबर तजि जाहू । पैहहु सीतहि जनि पछिताहू ॥ ५ ॥
 नयन मूदि पुनि देखहिं बीरा । ठाढ़े सकल सिंधु कें तीरा ॥ ६ ॥ tēhir̄ṁ saba āpani kathā sunāī. mair̄ṁ aba jāba jahām̄ raghurāī. 4.

 mūdahu nayana bibara taji jāhū. paihahu sītahi jani pachitāhū. 5.
 nayana mūdi puni dēkhaḥir̄ṁ bīrā. ṭhāṛhē sakala sindhu kēm̄ tīrā. 6.

Now it was the turn of the hermitress to narrate her own story¹ to the team of visitors, the monkeys and bears, which she did.

Then she said to them, ‘Now I shall go where Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghus (raghurāī), is. (4)

All of you must close your eyes in order to get out of this cavern; don’t worry, for by-and-by you will indeed find Sita². (5)

The brave warriors closed their eyes as instructed, and when they opened it they found themselves standing on the shore of the (southern) ocean³. (6)

[Note—¹A brief introduction about this “hermitress”: Her name was ‘Swayam Prabha’, literally meaning ‘a lady who shines from the radiance of her own glory’.

Her story is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 51-57. In short it is this: Some long time in the past Vishwakarma, the architect of gods, had a wife named Hema. She was beautiful, and an expert in the art of music and dance. She had pleased Lord Shiva with this skill of hers, and the Lord gifted her a magnificent but secret place where no one had access. The hermitress whom the troop of monkeys and bears searching for Sita had come to meet deep inside the cavern was a friend of Hema, and her name was ‘Swayam Prabha’.

Swayam Prabha was the daughter of a Gandharva (celestial musician) named Dibya, and she had tarried at this place with her friend Hema for a very long time, roughly ten million years. At the time of departing for heaven (i.e. at the time of her death and going to heaven, in the Brahma-Loka), Hema advised Swayam Prabha to remain behind alone and do Tapa (penances and austerities), with the intention of one day finding deliverance and salvation by having a divine view of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, who would come down as Lord Ram. At that future date, the Lord would come to the forest in order to fulfil some promise he would have made to the gods earlier, and here in the wild his consort would be stolen by the demons, monkey messengers would be dispatched to find her and they would come and meet her. She should then help them by showing the path, and go to meet Lord Ram herself. Then she should pray to the Lord and seek his blessings that would entitle her to go the heavenly abode of Lord Vishnu.

However, the story of this hermitress as narrated in Valmiki’s Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 51, verse nos. 10-18 differs from above. According to it the story is as follows: There was a demon named Mayavi. This stupendously beautiful garden was created by him using his magical powers, and it was embellished in gold. The shrine in which the hermitress was sitting when the team of monkeys and bears arrived was constructed in gold by another demon of great architectural skills; his name was Vishwakarma. He had done Tapa for one thousand years in a dense forest and pleased the creator Brahma, from whom he acquired all the construction skills of Sukracharya, the Guru of the demons. The demon Maya lived in this wonderful place for quite some time, but ultimately he was slayed when he got passionately involved with an Apsara (nymph of the heaven; the damsels in the court of the gods) named Hema and kept her as his mistress. After Maya’s death, the creator Brahma gifted this garden to Hema in memory of her former lover Maya.

The hermitress the reconnoitring team found inside this cave was named ‘Swayam Prabha’. She was a friend of Hema, and she had promised the latter to look after her home when she was gone. It was on one such occasion that the group of Lord Ram’s messengers found her inside this cave as narrated in the story of the Ramayan.

²To wit, this is literally a one-way cave, and once one gets inside it one cannot find one’s way out of it. I know its mystical secret, and the only way out is via a transcendental mean which I only possess and you probably don’t. Hence, it will be futile for you to try to find an exit or retrace your steps in order to get out. So listen to me: just close your eyes and I shall employ my magical powers to transport you in an instant to a place where you wish to go—which would be the place from where you can find Sita. In the meantime, I will also quit this place and go meet Lord Ram, for I had been waiting here patiently for the Lord to come so I can be of some help in aiding him to successfully accomplish his mission. Now since this is done—as I shall instantaneously place you near your destination from where Sita can be easily found—my objective in life is done, and after paying my obeisance to the Lord I shall proceed wherever the Lord instructs me to tarry. So rejoice and be ready. Now you will not have to wander aimlessly in the wild, as the distance to your destination is quite a distance, and then you aren’t even aware where it is; but now you shall be saved of all the time and the trouble endured to travel through the unknown landscape before you can reach the land which will serve your purpose.

And take heart, have courage. You will succeed in your mission of finding Sita.

³Like the magical way individuals were transported by Jinns in the many tales of the “One Thousand One Arabian Nights”, the group of monkeys and bears suddenly found themselves standing on the shore of the southern ocean. The roaring and heaving ocean stretched before them like an insurmountable barrier, a monster facing them with its arms spreading to the left and the right in a formidable challenge to their might, strength and courage, teasing them to their wits end, and horrifying them of the certain failure that stares them on this frontier.

The overwhelmed group gazed at the ocean in awe as they stood in stunned silence, dumbfounded into numbness of the senses, for they knew aught naught what to and what not to.]

सो पुनि गई जहाँ रघुनाथा । जाइ कमल पद नाएसि माथा ॥ ७ ॥

नाना भाँति बिनय तेहिं कीन्ही । अनपायनी भगति प्रभु दीन्ही ॥ ८ ॥ sō puni gaī jahām̐ raghunāthā. jā'i kamala pada nā'ēsi māthā. 7.

nānā bhām̐ti binaya tēhim̐ kīnhī. anapāyanī bhagati prabhu dīnhī. 8.

The hermitress, in the meantime, went to where Lord Raghunath (“raghunāthā”; Sri Ram) was¹, and bowed her head at the lotus-like feet of the Lord. (7)

She offered her prayers to the Lord in various ways, and the Lord, seeing her devotion and accepting her submission, granted her the boon of having an eternal, true and unwavering form of Bhakti (devotion for the Lord). (8)

[Note—¹Where was Lord Ram? He was on Mt. Pravarshan, waiting for the news of Sita that the messengers sent by him would finally bring.]

दो०. बदरीबन कहूँ सो गई प्रभु अग्या धरि सीस ।

उर धरि राम चरन जुग जे बंदत अज ईस ॥ २५ ॥

dōhā.

badarībana kahum̐ sō gaī prabhu agyā dhari sīsa.
ura dhari rāma carana juga jē bandata aja īsa. 25.

The hermitress (Swayam Prabha) bowed her head as a token of obedience to the Lord's commands (prabhu agyā dhari sīsa), and then, having enshrined Lord Ram's holy feet in her heart, the holy feet that are revered and worshipped (bandata) even by the creator Brahma (aja) and Lord Shiva (īsa), she went to the holy cite known as 'Badrivan' (in the higher reaches of the Himalaya mountain ranges)¹. (Doha no. 25)

[Note—¹Lord Ram first blessed her with steady Bhakti, and then instructed her to proceed to Badri-van, a forested area in the upper reaches of the northern Himalayas, to dwell there and devote her time practicing Bhakti and Tapa. The hermitress obeyed the Lord's instructions and proceeded forthwith to the place directed by the Lord.

As we have already learnt, she had the magical, supernatural power by which she could transport anyone by the transcendental method, as she had herself assured the messengers of Lord Ram inside the cave when she told them that though it is not possible for them to go out once they had entered it, nevertheless if they close their eyes and repose faith in her then she would herself work some magic charm and transport them instantaneously to the place they desire.

So obviously she used this supernatural powers herself first to go to Lord Ram, and then to proceed to Badrivan. This place is a revered pilgrim place in northern India, and is commonly known as Badrinath. It is said to be the gateway to heaven, for it is believed that if Tapa is done here then one is sure to attain a heavenly abode.]

चौ०. इहाँ बिचारहिं कपि मन माहीं । बीती अवधि काजु कछु नाहीं ॥ १ ॥
सब मिलि कहहिं परस्पर बाता । बिनु सुधि लाँ करब का भ्राता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ihām^ṁ bicārahim^ṁ kapi mana māhīm^ṁ. bīṭī avadhi kāju kachu nāhīm^ṁ. 1.
saba mili kahahim^ṁ paraspara bātā. binu sudhi la'ēm^ṁ karaba kā bhrātā. 2.

Here meanwhile (i.e. on the shore of the ocean where the search party of Lord Ram had been miraculously transported by the hermitress using her mystical powers of transcendental transfer), the Kapis (monkeys along with their bear companions) became pensive and began to worry that the time frame (of one month fixed by Sugriv) had passed away and yet they haven't been able to do any worthwhile work. (1)

They got together in a huddle and murmured in a sombre mood, 'Brother, what shall we now do if we are not able to acquire any information (of Sita).' (2)

[Note--The group lamented that one whole month has elapsed and still they have no information of Sita. So worried as they were, they got together into a consultation—what was the best course open to them now. Their worst fear was not the expiration of the one-month period, but not finding the whereabouts of Sita, for they knew that though it was too late for them now to return empty handed, as it is quite certain that their king Sugriv will then keep his threat and give them capital punishment should they do so, but if Sita is yet discovered, and then they are late in returning, there would be nothing to fear as Sugriv will spare them for being late because of the success in the mission, understanding that such unusually difficult enterprises may entail transgression of arbitrarily fixed time frame for accomplishment.]

कह अंगद लोचन भरि बारी । दुहुँ प्रकार भइ मृत्यु हमारी ॥ ३ ॥
इहाँ न सुधि सीता कै पाई । उहाँ गएँ मारिहि कपिराई ॥ ४ ॥

पिता बधे पर मारत मोही । राखा राम निहोर न ओही ॥ ५ ॥ पुनि पुनि अंगद कह सब पाहीं । मरन भयउ कछु संसय नाही ॥ ६ ॥ kaha aṅgada lōcana bhari bārī. duhum^ṃ prakāra bha'i mṛtyu hamārī. 3.

ihām^ṃ na sudhi sītā kai pā'ī. uhām^ṃ ga'eṃ^ṃ mārihi kapirā'ī. 4.
pitā badhē para mārata mōhī. rākhā rāma nihōra na ōhī. 5.
puni puni aṅgada kaha saba pāhīm. marana bhaya'u kachu sansaya nāhīm. 6.

Angad (the nephew of Sugriv and the son of his elder brother Baali) said with tears filled in his eyes (and with a grieving and remorseful tone), 'Our death seems certain either way, in both the situations. (3)

Here we have not been able to get any information of Sita (which would have assured us indemnity from punishment or even death at Sugriv's hand), and if we go back, the king of the monkeys (Sugriv) would kill us all¹. (4)

He (Sugriv) would have killed me soon after having slayed my father (Baali), but it was Lord Ram who had saved me at that time. So Sugriv has done no obligation on me and has no merit on my account, and I owe nothing to him in return.² (5)

[Angad grieved and lamented sorely with excess of grief; he was extremely depressed and dejected. He could not suppress his own sorrows as well as his worry about the gloomy fate of his companions so much so that he repeatedly lamented aloud.]

Angad repeatedly said to all of them who had huddled together around them, that death is a certainty, and there seems to be no doubt about it. (6)

[Note—¹The reader would recall Sugriv's warning in this regard: that if anyone returns without any news of Sita after the stipulated time of one month, then he would be given capital punishment. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 22 earlier.}

Though it is certainly true that this threat may have been meant to instil a sense of urgency and importance in the messengers who were sent out with the mission of searching Sita, and to keep them on their toes so that the matter is expedited as soon as possible without undue and inordinate delay, but in practical terms Sugriv did not intend to actually implement it. He was a King, and this being the case he would have to take many factors into consideration before carrying out such a cruel action, virtually a genocide, as to kill thousands of his warriors for simply not being able to find the location of a foreigner's wife, because for all practical purposes Lord Ram was a foreigner as far as Kishkindha and its inhabitants were concerned. There were chances therefore of mutiny, and Sugriv being taken a hostage by the angry soldiers many of whom may not have been too favourably inclined towards him, specially those who were favourable to his elder brother Baali whom Sugriv killed with the aid of Lord Ram to ascend on the throne of Kishkindha.

It is also possible that this severe stricture of Sugriv that all the messengers must find Sita by the month's end or come back, or else he would kill them if they returned without her news after the expiry of this period, was only meant to please Lord Ram and Laxman who had by now become suspicious of Sugriv's intentions and also angry at him for the delay and not keeping his promise of sending heralds everywhere till now. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 18 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it.}

But the monkeys and bears were not too sure as they doubted Sugriv's mind and nature. He was very selfish as is evident from the very fact that he had neglected Lord Ram's work once he got the throne, as well as the fact that he had no regrets at taking a stranger's help to kill his own brother Baali just to get this throne. So no one could be sure if he would kill this group of messengers if he fancied it.

What would weigh in favour of Sugriv's such a horrible decision, if he decides to actually take it? For one, he would find a ready excuse to kill Angad, his slain brother's son, as Sugriv had the greatest fear of revenge from him. This is a fact as reiterated by Angad himself when he asserts that Sugriv was on the brink of killing him when he was saved by Lord Ram.

The other possibility was that some other group would have found Sita and return triumphant to the kingdom, in which case too Sugriv will not spare them.

But here, overcome with sorrow and depression as he was, Angad had erred, for he did not ponder on the point that Sugriv would never contemplate of killing his trusted aid Hanuman, as well as Jamvant, the old bear king and Sugriv's trusted advisor; that would be beyond imagination.

²We see in this verse (no. 5) that the greatest fear of death is in the heart of Angad. He feels certain that their failure to find Sita would give his uncle Sugriv a ready-made excuse to get rid of him (Angad), even in case he (Sugriv) finds some subterfuge to excuse or pardon the others. Why so? It is because Sugriv feared that some day Angad would surreptitiously provoke internal rebellion or even assassinate his uncle Sugriv to grab the throne in order to exact retribution for the killing of his father Baali by Sugriv.

Angad therefore presented a perennial danger for Sugriv, so he thought he would be the primary target of his threat to kill.

Another question is this: How would Sugriv explain and justify that he had killed Angad and spared others if he indeed singled out Angad for the killing? Well, Angad was a prince, and as such, in deference to his position in the hierarchy, was put in charge of the group we are dealing with. So in case the mission fails and the group had to be punished, it would seem quite normal to punish the commander and the responsible person instead of all the other members of the group. Even in today's world it is the senior-most officer who bears the brunt of censorship and condemnation for the failure of a mission or any project gone awry, on the behalf of all those who are under his command.

So either way, Angad felt that he is the most unfortunate being—for one, he lost his father, and two, he would be publicly killed this time with Lord Ram refraining from protecting him as he had failed to do the Lord's personal work. This scenario, however, was the product of fear, for nothing of this sort would have been allowed by Lord Ram who is an embodiment of mercy, compassion, munificence, benevolence, beneficence, love and grace. But the ghost of fear is overwhelming, and it robs all reasoning.

But Angad's fears were unfounded and misplaced; Sugriv had no such intention of eliminating Angad as he is believed to have had by the latter as can be judged from the following:

(a) Sugriv had sent Hanuman and Jamvant, as well as Nal and Neel along with Angad, and these warriors were his close confidantes and trusted companions. Had Sugriv any sort of evil design on his nephew Angad, he would have sent him with some other group consisting of junior messengers, but not with his senior and trusted commanders, as there were countless other groups sent on the errand of finding Sita besides the group Angad accompanied. If success in the mission of finding Sita was to be attained then this particular company was most qualified for it. So therefore no insult was shown to Angad or his stature as the prince of the kingdom was undermined; in fact he was made the head of this reconnoitring team that had almost all the senior nobles and knights, as it were, of the kingdom of Kishkindha.

(b) Sugriv was well aware of Hanuman's and Jamvant's scrupulous nature, bravery and strength; they would never allow any harm to come to Angad, who was their prince, especially more so as he had lost his father which made them all very sympathetic and extremely considerate towards him. They would lay down their own lives to protect Angad.

(c) Angad had already received Lord Ram's protection, as he himself acknowledges in verse no. 5. So therefore, Sugriv would never ever dare to even think of touching Angad's single hair if nothing else then at least for this one single reason—that he has Lord Ram's protective shield covering him.]

अंगद बचन सुनत कपि बीरा । बोलि न सकहिं नयन बह नीरा ॥ ७ ॥
 छन एक सोच मगन होइ रहे । पुनि अस बचन कहत सब भए ॥ ८ ॥
 हम सीता कै सुधि लीन्हें बिना । नहिं जैहें जुबराज प्रबीना ॥ ९ ॥ अस कहि लवन सिंधु तट जाई । बैठे कपि सब दर्भ डसाई ॥ १० ॥

aṅgada bacana sunata kapi bīrā. bōli na sakahim nayana baha nīrā. 7.
 chana ēka sōca magana hō'i rahē. puni asa bacana kahata saba bha'ē. 8.
 hama sitā kai sudhi līnhēm binā. nahim jaihairm jubarāja prabīnā. 9.
 asa kahi lavana sindhu taṭa jāī. baiṭhē kapi saba darbha ḍasāī. 10.

Hearing the words of lamentations and grief spoken by Angad, all the Kapi warriors were so overcome with sorrow and remorse that none could speak a word even as tears welled up in their eyes. (7)

They were stunned and stupefied into dumbness for a moment, contemplating on the gravity of the situation and the fate that stares them in the face¹. Soon they recovered themselves and got their wits together; then all of them spoke simultaneously in a unanimous voice². (8)

'Oh Prince who is wise and intelligent; listen to our firm resolve: we will not go back without acquiring information about the whereabouts of Sita³!' (9)

Saying this, all the Kapis went near the shore of the salty ocean, spread sitting mats made of kush grass on the ground, and sat on it (with a firm determination not to turn back)⁴. (10)

[Note—¹The way Angad spoke with a heavy heart and choked throat, all the members of the group were emotionally affected; they empathised with his sorrow and grief, and mirrored his emotions and fears. The prospect of certain death upon return home on the one end, and an equal certainty of failure in the mission on the other hand, struck all of them with a doubling force of dismay and gloom, compounded with no hope in sight.

²But though initially they had felt lost and forlorn, they soon recovered as brave and courageous warriors are expected to in the face of adversities. And by this time round they had made a firm and unanimous resolution. What was it? They declare it in the following verse.

³The Kapis promised Angad, “We are determined to find Sita and return safely with the good news, or else we would prefer to live in exile with you. Don’t lament and grieve oh noble Prince; we are not going to die, and neither are we to be separated from each other. Take heart and gather your courage. But there is no point in sitting and weeping like a child. Let’s get up and get cracking, for we have nothing to lose either way.”

⁴The warriors sat down to make a stern vow, a sort of fasting unto death, a hunger-strike, that either they would overcome the barrier of the ocean that obstructs their path and prevents them from proceeding further, or they would end their lives here, putting an ignominious scar and a blackish taint on the face of the patron god of the ocean that he had been instrumental in taking the life of so many innocent creatures who were out doing a noble duty for their Lord. It was a sort of non-violent agitation done peacefully like we observe even in today’s modern society when people think that the government of the day won’t listen to their pleas and justified demands, and they don’t have the power to confront the might of those in authority and power; so the only option left to the citizens is to sit on a hunger strike or fast till death in an attempt to bring some sense to the stone-hearted stubborn rulers.]

जामवंत अंगद दुख देखी । कहीं कथा उपदेस बिसेषी ॥ ११ ॥
तात राम कहूँ नर जनि मानहु । निर्गुन ब्रह्म अजित अज जानहु ॥ १२ ॥ हम सब सेवक अति बड़भागी । संतत सगुन ब्रह्म अनुरागी ॥ १३ ॥ jāmvanta aṅgada dukha dēkhī. kahīm kathā upadēsa bisēṣī. 11.

tāta rāma kahum̐ nara jani mānahu. nirguna brahma ajita aja jānahu. 12.
hama saba sēvaka ati baṛabhāgī. santata saguna brahma anurāgī. 13.

Observing Angad’s state of mind of abject desperation, despair and hopelessness, Jamvant (the old chief of the bears) spoke to him wise words of wisdom especially meant to rejuvenate his sinking spirits and to reassure him. (11)

Jamvant said, ‘My dear (tāta)! Don’t treat Lord Ram a human being; know him to be the supreme Brahm, the formless supreme Lord of creation who is without attributes (nirguna brahma), the almighty Lord who is invincible (ajita) as well as eternal and unborn (aja).

[To wit, Lord Ram is a human manifestation of the Supreme Being; he is not any ordinary prince of any kingdom though he looks like one. The Lord has cast a veil of Maya, the cloud of delusions over the whole world so that his true identity remains secret. This illusion is necessary to accomplish the mammoth task for which the Lord had to assume a human form; the cruel Ravana and his demon horde will not be eliminated otherwise.] (12)

We those who serve the Lord are extremely and singularly fortunate to have got this stellar service; we are the lucky ones indeed to be able to regularly serve and be devoted to the visible form of the Supreme Being, the Brahm, whose primary form is invisible and cosmic in nature¹. (13)

[Note—¹Jamvant, the bear chief, was moved by Angad's lamentations; he felt extremely sad when he observed the utterly forlorn and dejected condition of his, for he empathised with Angad. So therefore Jamvant went close and put his arms around Angad, affectionately speaking to him in order to raise his spirits and inspire hope and encouragement inside his bosom.

Jamvant said to Angad, "Son; you must not lose hope. I would have kept quiet, but I couldn't restrain myself seeing your abject condition that seems to have reached alarming proportions. Remember dear: you are our captain and leader; if you go down the dumps so easily and sit down to weep and lament like a stricken person, what will happen to the rest of the group that depends upon your guidance and moral support. It ought to be you who must shore up others' sinking spirits and encourage them if they lose hope and feel dejected, and here on the contrary I see that you yourself seem to be sinking.

So come on Angad; cheer up and get up. Understand that you are on the mission of the Lord who is the Supreme Commander and the Ruler of the whole world; this being the case is it not an irony, something to laugh at and a matter of shame on our pride that you, being a brave and courageous prince yourself, should behave so meekly and hopelessly as if you were a servant of a weakling or a coward yourself? Hence, get your acts together and hold your chin up high; remember all other monkeys and bears are looking up to you for support and courage; their lives and hopes rest with you. I am sure you will live up to your reputation, duties and responsibilities. Be bold and courageous; be an excellent example to the rest of our group.

And why are you so affright that Sugriv would kill you; haven't you yourself acknowledged just now that Lord Ram had saved your life the first time, and don't you have trust in the Lord that he would do it again and again, that the all-merciful and compassionate Lord would never allow any harm to come to you? Perish any other contradictory thought if by some delusion or wrong understanding any such evil thing had even fleetingly touched your mind; banish it immediately. Remember: the Lord would take upon himself any evil eye that may be dared cast upon you; rest assured of it. I am old and experienced, and I love you to an extent that at least I won't either betray or mislead you.

Why are you so despondent, desolate and gloomy; why are you on a tailspin of depression and hopelessness? You are amongst friends and brothers; you are not abandoned and forgotten. We will never ever leave you alone and escape to save our own skins; we will live and die with you—it's my word of honour, and so it is the resolve of all our companions here.

Can't you see that all members of our group have tears in their eyes when they see you sad and hear you talk of dying at the hands of Sugriv? Don't you see that they have cast their lot with you, that they have spread sitting mats on the ground around you, keeping you in the center, so that no one can touch you without first fighting with all of us? In god's name, why do you feel scared and abandoned?

Angad; what has happened to you? Listen: we are brave, bold and honourable warriors, not contemptible cowards and spine-less sycophant courtiers who would bend over backwards to please their lord and king; we have our scruples and principles. We take the enemy in his face, and we face all adversities with a high chin; we don't show either of them our backs.

So say my dear, how come you even allowed such demeaning and degrading thoughts to enter your mind, that Sugriv would kill you, that we will not find Sita, that we will all die, that all hope is lost?

Cheer up; look up. Let us strive to devise a device to get around the unexpected obstacle in the form of this ocean, instead of lamenting and cursing our fates; the way you are behaving does not behove us on any count whatsoever; it will bring shame to all of us. We are all with you, and together we can surmount the greatest of obstacles that dares to challenge us.

You must act with dignity and fortitude, you must show exemplary courage and patience, you must present a stellar example of resilience and equanimity when faced with adversities and seemingly insurmountable difficulties, as these are the virtues that distinguishes a noble soul, and wherein lie an individual's glory for which he is remembered for all times to come. A person's manliness and strength of character lie in facing circumstances with his chin high up, and not timidly buckling his knees in defeat and surrender even before the final results are out.

My dear Angad; remember that fortune smiles on them who are courageous and brave, and not on cowards and runaways. A person is remembered and honoured for the smile he bears on his face when he emerges from the gravest of situations that are most daunting, and a fate that is malevolent and intractable, and not for the smile he bears for emerging from the comfort zone of favourable situations or a fate that is benevolent on him.”

It must be remembered by the reader at this juncture that Jamvant was actually Brahma, the creator of this world. His external appearance such as his old age, his wisdom and experience, his calm and thoughtful manners etc.—all mirrored this fact. So when Jamvant himself assured Angad, the latter felt relieved. He sighed and took a deep breath; fresh tears of hope and expectation of life moistened his eyes.]

दो०. निज इच्छाँ प्रभु अवतरइ सुर महि गो द्विज लागि ।
सगुन उपासक संग तहँ रहहिँ मोच्छ सब त्यागि ॥ २६ ॥

dōhā.

nija icchām̐ prabhu avatara'i sura mahi gō dvija lāgi.
saguna upāsaka saṅga taham̐ rahahim̐ mōccha saba tyāgi. 26.

The Lord has manifested himself in a human form for the good and happiness of the gods, mother earth and the cows (representing defenceless and humble creatures)¹.

Those devotees who prefer to worship the Supreme Being in his visible form that has attributes and can be easily related with in practical terms in this gross world, so that these devotees can enjoy company of the Lord they adore (as compared to those who prefer to worship the Lord in his invisible cosmic form that is all-pervading, sublime and subtle, a form known as 'pure Consciousness', but which is inaccessible, too abstract and intractable for a common creature)—such devotees would gladly bargain even the fruit of Moksha (deliverance, emancipation and salvation of the soul) if they are given the choice of serving the Lord². (Doha no. 26)

[Note—¹The demons led by Ravana had unleashed a reign of terror and mayhem. When their horrors transgressed limits of tolerance, the gods and the earth approached Lord Vishnu to intercede on their behalf and give them protection. The Lord had then promised them that he would come down personally and eliminate Ravana and his demon hordes. To fulfil his promise, Lord Vishnu manifested himself as Lord Ram. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 187.

²But primarily there is no difference between the two forms of the Supreme Lord—i.e. his visible form here in this mortal world as Lord Ram, and his cosmic invisible form as Lord Vishnu. This fact is reiterated by Lord Shiva in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 116; and (ii) Doha no. 118 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it.

The devotees are given an easy opportunity to attain liberation and deliverance from the miseries and sorrows associated with life in this mortal world by remembering and singing the stories related to the visible manifestation of the Supreme Being, as this form of the Lord can easily be understood and recalled even by an ordinary creature—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 122.

To wit, all devotees worship the same Lord, albeit in different forms in accordance to their liking and preferences. It is like the case of viewing the sky with glasses of different shades of colour: if we see through a blue glass we say the sky is blue, and if through a green-shaded glass, we see the same sky coloured green.

The “saguna upāsaka” is a devotee who worships and adores the form of the Lord God that is visible, has attributes and familiar to him, while the “nirguna upāsaka” is the devotee who worships and adores the invisible cosmic form of the Lord that has no attributes, is all-pervading and subtle, a form that is so abstract that no one can claim that he is fully familiar with it.

It is always easier and better to reach the unknown from what is well known, understand what is unfamiliar after first coming to grasp fully with what is familiar, rather than the other way round. So therefore, a wise devotee is one who first develops devotion, faith and love for the Lord God through the medium of the Lord’s ‘saguna form’, and then gradually evolves to a higher plane where he can have natural devotion, faith and love for the ‘nirguna form’ of the same Lord God. If the foundation of any building is firm and based on solid ground, its superstructure will also be firm, no matter how high this building may rise into the air.]

चौ०. एहि बिधि कथा कहहिं बहु भाँती । गिरि कंदराँ सुनी संपाती ॥ १ ॥
बाहेर होइ देखि बहु कीसा । मोहि अहार दीन्ह जगदीसा ॥ २ ॥
आजु सबहि कहँ भच्छन करऊँ । दिन बहु चले अहार बिनु मरऊँ ॥ ३ ॥ कबहुँ न मिल भरि उदर अहारा । आजु दीन्ह बिधि एकहिं बारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

ēhi bidhi kathā kahahim̃ bahu bhām̃tī. giri kandarām̃ sunī sampātī. 1.
 bāhēra hō'i dēkhi bahu kīsā. mōhi ahāra dīnha jagadīsā. 2.
 āju sabahi kaham̃ bhacchana kara'ūm̃. dina bahu calē ahāra binu mara'ūm̃. 3. kabahum̃ na mila bhari udara ahārā. āju dīnha bidhi ēkahim̃ bārā. 4.

In this way, the group of monkeys (and bears) were talking aloud amongst themselves on different aspects of the situation and their fate.

Their chatter was heard by a vulture named Sampati¹ (Jatau's elder brother) who lived inside a cave on the side of the mountain (facing the ocean). (1)

He (Sampati) came out to investigate from whence the noise came. When he saw a large number of monkeys (and bears)² animatedly talking on the shore of the ocean, down the slope of the mountain, he felt glad and said to himself, 'It's good that the Creator has granted me something to feed upon. (2)

I would devour all of them today itself, for I have been starving for many days during which I have had nothing to eat. (3)

I had never had enough food to fill my stomach on any day, but the Creator has been so generous with me today that he had recompensed me by granting enough food to fill my empty tummy all at once.' (4)

[Note—¹Sampati would tell his own story to the team of monkeys and bears soon when he meets them—see Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precedes Doha no. 28 herein below. His story is narrated in greater detail in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 8.

According to the legend narrated in the Srimad Bhagvata Mahapurāṇa, 4.1, there was an ancient sage by the name of Kashyap. He married the thirteen daughters of Daksha Prajapati, and his off-springs populated the entire creation. As such, Kashyap is called the progenitor of all living beings, right from the gods and the demons to the creatures, including all the sub-human species belonging to the zoological kingdom, that inhabit the rest of the mortal world.

One of his wives was called Vinata; she was the mother of the feathered creatures. From her Kashyap begot two sons—Aruna and Garuda. Aruna became the charioteer of the Sun-God, and Garuda served as the mount of Lord Vishnu. Out of these two brothers, Aruna became the father of the two vulture-brothers Sampati and Jatau.

These two brothers had enormous size and strength, could fly high up in the sky, had astounding long life, and miraculously could speak many tongues. This is evident from the fact that Jatau could converse with Lord Ram in the human tongue, and Sampati with the monkeys and bears in their own lingua-franca. Remember: we are talking about an era long past, about which we just have no idea or can imagine about. So what was a normal occurrence in the time it relates to may seem incredulous and wondrous to us today.

²The word used in the text is “kīsā”, which literally translates to a monkey, or more generally to a monkey-like individual. As we have read in a note appended earlier when we read about Lord Ram coming to Mt. Rishyamook and meeting Hanuman, these individuals appeared to be like monkeys because of their physical appearances, habits, nature, living style, manners, languages, culture etc. which were in variance with those of the members of the human race, prompting the latter to call the former ‘monkeys’. But this variance and oddity was caused over a long period of time due to the habitat and circumstances in which these so-called ‘monkeys’ had to live and survive—such as the harsh realities of their dwelling places, the forest, the mountains, the hills and the valleys, as well as the vagaries of Nature, of weather and climate, and many other factors that played a combined role to shape their behaviour and attitude to life. But nonetheless they were more human-like than being complete animals like monkeys actually are; the metamorphosis had been caused by the process of adaptation and adjustment and reconciliation for which the human race is well known and appreciated.

Besides this factor, the army of Lord Ram consisted of ‘both the monkeys and bears’, and not only the monkeys, as we shall discover in due course during the reading of the enchanting narration of the fierce war of Lanka. One instance will suffice for the time being to illustrate our point: in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 39 we read specifically that when the battle first commenced, “large numbers of bears and monkeys roared thunderously and jumped excitedly as they cheered Lord Ram and raised a cry honouring his glory as they launched their attack on the enemy forces (i.e. on the demon army of Ravana)”.

Moreover, we have just read that Jamvant had comforted Angad, and Jamvant was the chief of the bear community. So therefore it is natural to conclude that both the monkeys and bears constituted the team that was sitting near the ocean, and it was this team which Sampati saw.]

डरपे गीध बचन सुनि काना । अब भा मरन सत्य हम जाना ॥ ५ ॥ कपि सब उठे गीध कहँ देखी । जामवंत मन सोच बिसेषी ॥ ६ ॥ ḍarapē gīdha bacana suni kānā. aba bhā marana satya hama jānā. 5.

kapi saba uṭhē gīdha kaham̃ dēkhī. jāmavanta mana sōca bisēṣī. 6.

The group of monkeys and bears got terrified when they heard the words of the vulture, and they grieved at their fate, saying, ‘Now it is true that we will die; our fate seemed doomed’¹. (5)

The Kapis (monkeys, bears) got up when they saw the (huge) vulture. Meanwhile, Jamvant became pensive; he contemplated for a moment (about how to tackle this new, unforeseen development)². (6)

[Note—¹Sampati had a huge size. When these monkeys and bears heard him roaring loudly and saw his colossal frame hovering over them in the sky, ready to swoop down on them and kill them by fierce attacks of his claws and beak, they were all petrified with fear and were sure that now there is no escape from death.

²Jamvant was alarmed and aghast; he was consternated and flabbergasted. Just a few moments back he had somehow restored calm and confidence in the team by encouraging Angad, assuaging his feelings and building courage in the team as a whole, and now all of a sudden this piquant situation arose—for this hungry vulture would inflict severe injury to the monkeys and bears by striking them ferociously and viciously from the sky, biting and lacerating them with its beak and claws. The vulture had such a gigantic size when it spread its wings to full span that the sun was covered and a huge shadow fell on the ground as if a dark cloud had completely obscured the sun's light!

This sight itself was terrifying in its own right, and it only went to compound the fear of death that had already been bearing heavily over the mind of the stressed group of monkeys and bears. Jamvant had to think fast; so he became contemplative, as there was no time to lose.]

कह अंगद बिचारि मन माहीं । धन्य जटायू सम कोउ नाहीं ॥ ७ ॥

राम काज कारन तनु त्यागी । हरि पुर गयउ परम बड़ भागी ॥ ८ ॥

kaha aṅgada bicāri mana māhīm. dhan'ya jaṭāyū sama kō'u nāhīm. 7.
rāma kāja kārana tanu tyāgī. hari pura gaya'u parama baṛa bhāgī. 8.

Angad contemplated in his mind and exclaimed, 'In all sooth and without gainsay, there is no one more fortunate and worthy than Jatau. (7)

He had left his mortal body serving the cause of Lord Ram, and in doing so the most fortunate one had got a right of passage to the heavenly abode of Lord Hari (Vishnu)¹. (8)

[Note—¹Jatau died for the cause of Lord Ram, as he died trying to secure Sita's release from Ravana's clutches. And this noble deed of his paved the way for his unhindered passage to heaven where ordinarily a flesh-eating vulture would never have hoped to go ever.

When Angad saw that the new danger is in the form of a vulture, he immediately remembered Jatau about whom we have already read earlier. Jatau was severely wounded when the demon king Ravana cut-off his wings as he tried to save Sita from being kidnapped by the demon. Later on, when Lord Ram reached the spot, Jatau narrated the developments to the Lord, and then died in the Lord's arms. The Lord then performed his last rites as he would have done for his own father. Being graced with this rare privilege, Jatau attained an exalted stature by going straight to heaven in spite of his life being spent in eating cadavers as vultures are accustomed to. {The episode related to Jatau is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Doha no. 32.}

Angad wondered aloud about the ironies of this world: there was one vulture named Jatau who died serving the cause of Lord Ram, and here is another vulture (Sampati) who wants to create an obstacle in the Lord's work by killing his messengers.

Angad thought quickly and decided that if he mentioned the name of Jatau there were more than even chances that this new enemy would recognise the name, and would, in all likelihood, wish to investigate what the matter referred to was. And his guess paid—for Sampati stopped in his path as he indeed recognised this name as being that of his own younger brother.

So Sampati wondered what this monkey was saying, and he descended politely to make quarries. We shall see in the following verses that this is what exactly happened, and this speculation of Angad paid off.]

सुनि खग हरष सोक जुत बानी । आवा निकट कपिन्ह भय मानी ॥ ९ ॥
 तिन्हहि अभय करि पूछेसि जाई । कथा सकल तिन्ह ताहि सुनाई ॥ १० ॥
 सुनि संपाति बंधु कै करनी । रघुपति महिमा बहुबिधि बरनी ॥ ११ ॥ sunī khaga haraṣa sōka juta bānī. āvā nikaṭa kapinha bhaya mānī. 9.

 tinhahi abhaya kari pūchēsī jāī. kathā sakala tinha tāhi sunāī. 10.
 sunī sampāti bandhu kai karānī. raghupati mahimā bahubidhi barānī. 11.

When the bird (“khaga”; the vulture Sampati) heard these sombre words (of Angad) spoken in a sorrowful voice (sunī -- sōka juta bānī), he felt joyous (haraṣa)¹.

But as he approached them, the Kapis felt terrified (as they thought that Sampati would attack them). (9)

Sampati managed to calm them down and remove their fear by his friendly gestures and amiable demeanours. When he was close enough, he asked them the story related to Jatau, which they (here mainly Angad and Jamvant) cheerfully narrated to him. (10)

After hearing the noble deeds of his brother (Jatau), Sampati praised the glory of Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram) in various ways². (11)

[Note—¹Sampati had heard the name of his brother Jatau after a long time, so it was natural that he was glad to hear it. But then he also heard that Jatau had died serving Lord Ram’s cause, this made him sad and sorrowful. So we see in Sampati’s case that the two opposing emotions of happiness and sorrows simultaneously revealed themselves.

Sampati thought to himself that he could get more information about his dear brother Jatau from these monkeys and bears as they seem to be well acquainted with him, and the circumstances surrounding him and his death. So he abandoned his bellicose attitude and assumed an amiable countenance. He descended in a friendly manner, and politely approached the group slowly so as not to alarm them.

²After hearing the details of Jatau’s deeds, Sampati was emotionally overwhelmed. The one thing that struck him the most was Lord Ram’s merciful and gracious nature when he heard how the Lord had treated his dear brother affectionately; how he caressed the wounded vulture, wiped his blood and tended to his wounds himself, and finally performed Jatau’s last rites like he would have done for his own father. Sampati choked and somehow managed to hold back his tears. He was all praises for Lord Ram.

No other person would have done what the Lord did—no other person would lift a wounded vulture on his lap, wipe the blood off the vulture’s body with his long hairs as no other means were available, hold the wailing bird close to his bosom, and then taking care to perform his last rites properly—instead of just letting him die.

Verily, Sampati could not find enough words to thank Lord Ram on his dead brother’s behalf; he repeatedly praised the Lord and sang his glories by spreading his wings and lifting his beak to the heaven.

Samapati thanked God he did not act rashly in haste; he felt ashamed at himself that he was contemplating harming the messengers of the Lord for whom his younger brother Jatau had laid down his life. To overcome this guilt, he praised the Lord profusely.]

दो०. मोहि लै जाहु सिंधुतट देउँ तिलांजलि ताहि । बचन सहाइ करबि मैं पैहहु खोजहु जाहि ॥ २७ ॥

dōhā.

mōhi lai jāhu sindhutata dē'um' tilānjali tāhi.
bacana sahā'i karabi maiṁ paihahu khōjahu jāhi. 27.

He (Sampati) requested the monkeys and bears, 'Please take me to the shore of the ocean so that I can offer oblations of water to the soul¹ of my departed dear brother.

After this, I shall help you with my words by telling you where to find her whom you seek. (Doha no. 27)

[Note—¹Offerings are made to the soul of the dead by those related to the departed by using a little water to which sesame seeds are added. The dead individual is remembered, the offerings are made, and a prayer is said for the peace of the soul of the departed.

Why did Sampati ask the monkeys and bears to take him to the shore of the ocean to make oblations to his dead brother, instead of doing it himself? The answer is this:

First—Water is needed to offer oblations, and a vulture cannot collect sufficient water for this purpose. So Sampati needed help.

Second—Vultures don't perform oblations and other post-death rites of dear ones like humans do, but when Sampati heard how Lord Ram had shown due respect to his brother by offering oblations in the course of doing his last rites, he concluded that he should also follow this example. But since he was not accustomed to this rite he thought that the monkeys and bears who closely followed human behaviour and were evolutionary nearer to them would be able to guide him through the process.

Third—He wished to make the messengers feel easy and comfortable with him, especially after his threat of killing and devouring them all, and this purpose would be aided if he takes their help in completing performing the rites of his dead brother.

Four—The rite of the dead after cremation, where water is offered to the soul of the departed by his kin, is usually done near a water body, such as a pond, lake or river. Here the ocean was available, so Sampati asked the messengers to take him there.]

चौ०. अनुज क्रिया करि सागर तीरा । कहि निज कथा सुनहु कपि बीरा ॥ १ ॥ हम द्वौ बंधु प्रथम तरुनाई । गगन गए रबि निकट उड़ाई ॥ २ ॥
तेज न सहि सक सो फिरि आवा । मैं अभिमानी रबि निअरावा ॥ ३ ॥ जरे पंख अति तेज अपारा । परेउँ भूमि करि घोर चिकारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

anuja kriyā kari sāgara tīrā. kahi nija kathā sunahu kapi bīrā. 1.
hama dvau bandhu prathama tarunāī. gagana ga'ē rabi nikaṭa uṛāī. 2.
tēja na sahi saka sō phiri āvā. maim̄ abhimānī rabi ni'arāvā. 3.
jarē paṅkha ati tēja apārā. parē'um̄ bhūmi kari ghōra cikārā. 4.

After having performed the post-death rites of his younger brother (Jatau) on the shore of the ocean, Sampati narrated his own story to the monkeys and bears.

He said, 'Listen oh brave and valiant Kapis. (1)

We two (myself and Jatau) were brothers. One day when we were in prime of our youth, we took to the sky and flew towards the sun, getting closer and closer to it. (2)

He (Jatau) could not tolerate the sun's heat and so he turned back. But I continued on my path as I was haughty, egoistic, and full of pride. (3)

Ultimately my wings got burnt by the scorching heat of the sun, and making a fierce cry I fell down to the earth. (4)

मुनि एक नाम चंद्रमा ओही । लागी दया देखि करि मोही ॥ ५ ॥
बहु प्रकार तेहिं ग्यान सुनावा । देह जनित अभिमान छड़ावा ॥ ६ ॥
त्रेताँ ब्रह्म मनुज तनु धरिही । तासु नारि निसिचर पति हरिही ॥ ७ ॥
तासु खोज पठइहि प्रभु दूता । तिन्हहि मिलें तैं होब पुनीता ॥ ८ ॥
जमिहहिं पंख करसि जनि चिंता । तिन्हहि देखाइ देहेसु तैं सीता ॥ ९ ॥ muni ēka nāma candramā ōhī. lāgī dayā dēkhi kari mōhī. 5.

bahu prakāra tēhim̄ gyāna sunāvā. dēha janita abhimāna charāvā. 6.
trētām̄ brahma manuja tanu dharihī. tāsu nāri nisicara pati harihī. 7.
tāsu khōja paṭha'ihī prabhu dūtā. tinhahi milēm̄ taim̄ hōba punitā. 8.
jamihahim̄ paṅkha karasi jani cintā. tinhahi dēkhā'i dēhēsu taim̄ sītā. 9.

When I tumbled down with a yell and landed with a thud on the ground, wounded and weeping, a merciful sage named Chandrama took pity on me. (5)

The wise sage enlightened me about the futility of being proud of this gross mortal body. This teaching of the erudite sage made me regret and realise the impermanent nature of my youth and its false charms vis-à-vis the physical body¹. (6)

He told me, "During the Treta Yuga (which is the third era of the four-era one cycle of birth and death according to the scriptures), Brahm, the Supreme Being, would manifest as a human being (in the form of Lord Ram). At that time, his wife (Sita) would be stolen by a king of the demon race (Ravana). (7)

The Lord would send messengers to search for her. When you meet them you shall be restored and purified. [To wit, the scar of burn on your body would be healed, and you will be freed from the taint of being haughty and proud. Your sins would be washed at that time, and you will find your true peace.] (8)

Your wings would grow back; don't worry. At that time which I mention, show those messengers where Sita was to be found.” (9)

[Note—¹The erudite sage asked me the cause of my misery. When I narrated the whole episode to him and said that I went on nearing the sun as I was very proud of my strong and able body as well as my skill in flying high up in the sky and going up as high as I wished, he realised that I had met this horrible fate because of the pride that I had regarding my body. So he first applied emergency care to me and then advised me that one should not be proud of one's youthful body because one day this body will become old and feeble, that this body is subject to diseases and old age, and that no living being is immortal and so his body will die one day.

Hence, there is no sense of being proud of an entity that has no steady value, that is subject to decline and fall, and that will be lost permanently one day.]

मुनि कइ गिरा सत्य भइ आजू । सुनि मम बचन करहु प्रभु काजू ॥ १० ॥
गिरि त्रिकूट ऊपर बस लंका । तहँ रह रावन सहज असंका ॥ ११ ॥
तहँ असोक उपबन जहँ रहई । सीता बैठि सोच रत अहई ॥ १२ ॥

muni ka'i girā satya bha'i ājū. suni mama bacana karahu prabhu kājū. 10.
giri trikūṭa ūpara basa laṅkā. taḥam̃ raha rāvana sahaja asaṅkā. 11.
taḥam̃ asōka upabana jaham̃ rahaī. sītā baiṭhi sōca rata ahaī. 12.

Verily indeed, the great sage's words have become true today (i.e. the sage's words have borne fruit today)¹. Now, listen to my words (and pay attention to what I have to tell you), and then do accordingly so that the Lord's work can be successfully done. (10)

There is great mountain called Trikut (literally a mountain with three peaks). On it is established the city of Lanka. Ravana lives there fearlessly². (11)

In that place there is a garden (or a grove) called 'Ashok'³; Sita is sitting there lost in worries and thoughtful grief. (12)

[Note—¹The “sage's words have borne fruit today and have become true”—how? The wings of Sampati grew back fully, the scar of burn left by the sun vanished, and he got back some of his youthful stamina and energy that he had lost, and his body was restored to some extent with the same abilities that it possessed when he was young.

The proof of this miraculous feat is to be found just now. We will read below in an instant that Sampati flew high up in the sky from where he could see Sita sitting under a tree in the royal garden of Lanka. Now, this clearly means that (i) his youthful energy was quite back if not fully restored because now he was old; (ii) his wings were restored because without them he would not be able to fly in the sky and see the island of Lanka from high up; (iii) his eyesight was as clear and penetrating as it had been in his younger days—because he could see vividly and sharply enough over a long distance, as far away as Lanka which was roughly one hundred yojan (or approximately eight hundred miles) from the shore of the ocean, and could distinctly see Sita sitting there from this side of the ocean, which is not a small feat.

²To wit, he is the king of the place and hence has nothing to fear from anything or anybody in the city. It also means that Ravana is so confident of his own invincibility as well as the impenetrable nature of his fort that he has no fear from any quarter; he does not fear any rebellion or invasion respectively.

³The word “Ashok” used for the garden or the grove where Sita lived has the following connotations:

(i) It was so pleasant and comfortable that anyone who entered it felt relieved of all sufferings; it was rejuvenating and refreshing for the senses. Ravana wished to keep Sita comfortable, so he selected this particular garden to keep her so that she could get the maximum amount of comfort under the condition of captivity as could be managed without raising suspicion that a favourable treatment was being shown to an enemy’s wife who is held captive in order to punish her husband for insulting the king’s sister—i.e. Supernakha, the sister of Ravana, the king of the demons.

(ii) It had huge Ashoka Trees (“jonesia asoka” or “sarica indica” plant) with shades that had a wide circumference. This afforded a cool place for Sita to pass her days.]

दो०. मैं देखउँ तुम्ह नाहीं गीधहि दृष्टि अपार ।

बूढ़ भयउँ न त करतेउँ कछुक सहाय तुम्हार ॥ २८ ॥

dōhā.

mair̥m dēkha'um̃ tumha nāhīm̃ gīdhahi dr̥ṣṭi apāra.

būṛha bhaya'um̃ na ta karatē'um̃ kachuka sahāya tumhāra. 28.

I am clearly able to see her while you can’t; it is because a vulture is naturally gifted with an eye-sight that is long and penetrating.

Alas I am old (and feeble) and can’t help you; for otherwise I would have certainly helped you a bit more¹.’ (Doha no. 28)

[Note—¹Sampati told the messengers: “Look brothers, I am so sorry that I could not do much to help you and serve Lord Ram like my brother Jatau had done, for he laid down his life for the sake of the Lord and I can’t even take you across the ocean on my back. I am full of remorse and very regretful, but I can’t help, because old age has made me so feeble that I can’t endure the effort of flying a hundred yojans (see Chaupai line no. 1 that follows this Doha herein below) to land on the soil of Lanka, and then cover the same distance back here. Verily, my brother Jatau was more fortunate; he was exceptionally lucky.

Anyhow, I have done the best I could do—for by telling you exactly where to find Sita I have served the noble cause for which you have undertaken this mission; at least now onwards your futile search will end and you know your destination.”

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 54 however, Sampati gives the reason of his ‘not having wings’ (as they were burnt earlier) for his inability to help the reconnoitering team to go and meet Sita in Lanka situated 100 Yojans across the ocean.

The full story of Sampati has been by him narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 8.]

चौ०. जो नाघड़ सत जोजन सागर । करड़ सो राम काज मति आगर ॥ १ ॥
 मोहि बिलोकि धरहु मन धीरा । राम कृपाँ कस भयउ सरीरा ॥ २ ॥
 पापिउ जा कर नाम सुमिरहीं । अति अपार भवसागर तरहीं ॥ ३ ॥
 तासु दूत तुम्ह तजि कदराई । राम हृदयँ धरि करहु उपाई ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jō nāgha'i sata jōjana sāgara. kara'i sō rāma kāja mati āgara. 1.
 mōhi bilōki dharahu mana dhīrā. rāma kṛpām̐ kasa bhaya'u sarīrā. 2.
 pāpi'u jā kara nāma sumirahīm̐. ati apāra bhavasāgara tarahīm̐. 3.
 tāsu dūta tumha taji kadarāī. rāma hṛdayam̐ dhari karahu upāī. 4.

[Sampati continued—] ‘He who is able to jump across the span of the ocean measuring approximately One-hundred Yojans (roughly 800 miles) from here will be able to accomplish Lord Ram’s work (i.e. he will be successful in meeting Sita and bringing back her news)¹. (1)

Look at me and see how miraculously my body has recovered by the grace of Lord Ram. You must draw inspiration and courage from my example². (2)

The Lord whose name is so divine, holy and mystically empowered that even the greatest of sinners are able to cross over this huge, fathomless, endless and intractable ocean-like world of transmigration by merely remembering the Lord’s holy name “RAM (pronounced as Raam or Rāma)”, --- (3)

--- You are the messengers of the same (almighty and all-able) Lord; so stop being disheartened, don’t have gloomy thoughts and lose your nerves. Get up and go cracking; enshrine the holy image of Lord Ram in your hearts and make plans how to accomplish this task (of crossing the ocean for eight hundred miles).³ (4)

[Note—¹One Yojan is equivalent to four, eight or sixteen miles according to different methods of calculation. So the median figure of “eight miles for one yojan” is taken here for our calculation. Hence, 100 Yojans = 800 miles.

Sampati told the monkeys and bears who had anxiously huddled around him as follows:

“Listen. Lanka is situated roughly eight hundred miles from this shore. So any one of you who is able to cross the ocean by any method to cover this distance, by jumping or leaping across it, by spreading your body so huge that you can cover this span with one gigantic stride, or by cruising in the sky non-stop for this distance, he will land at Lanka and be successful in accomplishing Lord Ram’s work by meeting Sita and bringing back her news. But remember one crucial thing: It is a two-way journey; one side is eight hundred miles, so you need to have the skill and the ability to cover double this distance in order to be successful in the to-and-fro journey.

²My body was seriously wounded and had deep gashes because I fell thousands of feet from the sky when my wings were burnt by the scorching heat of the sun as I have already told you (Chaupai line nos. 4 that precedes Doha no. 28 herein above). I was physically disabled, and my injuries did not allow me to search for food as I could not fly. That is why I contemplated eating you all because it appeared to me that you were sitting near the shore to fast unto death, and then I would hobble down and have a hearty meal of your dead bodies. But look what miraculous transformation has happened to my decrepit body when I heard the glories of Lord Ram and the service my brother Jatau had rendered to him; merely hearing the Lord's holy name and hearing his glories had healed my body instantly so much that I could fly high once again, high enough to see Lanka across a distance of eight hundred miles. My eyesight too was restored to its level that I had in my prime time as a youth enabling me to peer clearly over this large distance and see small things distinctly; for otherwise how could I have seen Sita, who but looks like a small speck over this immense distance, so clearly, clear enough to be able to distinguish her from other females, the lady demons, in the same garden! Tell me: is it not a miracle and a vivid proof of Lord Ram's mystical powers?

So have courage and draw inspiration from my example. Since you are on the Lord's mission, failure can't come to touch you; what you experience now is a test of your faith and devotion for the Lord. Don't buckle; don't be foolish to surrender, thinking yourselves to be doomed.

Look, I have waited for so long a time for the day when my body would be healed when I meet Lord Ram's messengers and help them find the Lord's wife as advised by sage Chandrama (refer: Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 28 herein above). And you can see for yourselves that I have indeed been healed; there is no pretension in my words. So why do you despair; why do you think that you will have to die because Sita can't be found? Cheer up and get your acts together; banish gloomy thoughts and divert your energy and mind to find a way to cross the ocean for the distance I have told you. Have faith in Lord Ram, and things will be alright."

³Like Jamvant who had encouraged Angad earlier, here it is Sampati who raised the sagging spirit of the messengers, and ignited a fresh fire of hope and success in their hearts. What a moment early was a dark tunnel with no end in sight suddenly became virtually a veritable periscope that showed the light of the day and a green island in the yonder to the sailors who had lost all hopes of survival!]

अस कहि गरुड़ गीध जब गयऊ । तिन्ह कें मन अति बिसमय भयऊ ॥ ५ ॥

निज निज बल सब काहूँ भाषा । पार जाइ कर संसय राखा ॥ ६ ॥

जरठ भयउँ अब कहइ रिछेसा । नहिं तन रहा प्रथम बल लेसा ॥ ७ ॥

जबहिं त्रिबिक्रम भए खरारी । तब मैं तरुन रहेउँ बल भारी ॥ ८ ॥

asa kahi garuṛa gīdha jaba gaya'ū. tinha kēm mana ati bisamaya bhaya'ū. 5.

nija nija bala saba kāhūm' bhāṣā. pāra jā'i kara sansaya rākhā. 6.

jarat̥ha bhaya'um' aba kaha'i richēsā. nahim tana rahā prathama bala lēsā. 7.

jabahim tribikrama bha'e kharārī. taba maim taruna rahē'um' bala bhārī. 8.

[It must be noted here that the divine story of the ‘Ramayana’, the story that narrates the life and deeds of Lord Ram, and in its course narrates the story of Ravana and the war of Lanka too as these two stories are inseparable from one another, have been narrated by Lord Shiva to his consort goddess Parvati, also known as Uma, as well as by the saintly crow named Kaagbusund to Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, who had come to him to listen to it. Both these narratives are said to be the most ancient renderings of the Ramayana, and both are equally authentic and un-tampered.

That is why in Ram Charit Manas, from which we are reading at present, both these authorities, i.e. Lord Shiva and Kaagbhusund, have been cited, giving equal importance to both. It is to emphasise that the narration of Ram Charit Manas conforms both to the way Lord Shiva had told it to Parvati, as well as the way Kaagbhusund had told it to Garud.

Presently however, the narration quotes Kaagbhusund who said to Garud—]

‘Oh Garud! When the vulture (Sampati) had gone away after giving this advice (as narrated herein above), the messengers were amazed and confounded in their minds and hearts¹. (5)

Each one of them talked about his own strengths, abilities and skills, but they expressed doubts about their being able to go across the ocean². (6)

[The first among the commanders to speak was Jamvant, the bear chief.]

The chief of the bears said, ‘I have become old, and my body doesn’t have the energy and strength that I had in my youthful days. (7)

When the Lord, who is the slayer of demon Khar (“kharārī”; i.e. Lord Ram)³, had won over (or measured) all the three divisions of the world (“tribikrama”; a reference to Lord Vishnu’s incarnation as Lord Vaaman, the dwarf manifestation)⁴—at that time I was in my youth and had immense strength. [In the following Doha no. 29 Jamvant tells about what happened at that time.] (8)

[Note—¹They were amazed at the story narrated by Sampati, the way he was miraculously healed, and the sudden knowledge that Sita was to be found across the ocean in an island situated eight hundred miles from the shore. More than anything else, the prospect of crossing the mighty ocean confounded them; they felt more dismayed than earlier because one after another formidable obstacles are coming their way. First it was the prospect of dying due to thirst and hunger, than getting trapped in a cave from which there was no exit, which was followed by the horrifying prospect of being attacked by a hungry vulture. And to cap it all, now was the greatest of all hurdles—to be able to cross the heaving and roaring ocean that stood like an endless wall in front.

But inspite of the hopelessness of the situation, they still gathered courage as a glimmer of hope began to shine in their despairing hearts when they observed and discussed how magically Sampati’s body was healed by hearing the story of Lord Ram and the chance he had got of playing a helpful role in the successful accomplishment of the Lord’s mission.

²These monkey and bear warriors said that the problem now was to cross the eight hundred miles of ocean that was roaring menacingly at them. The sight of the heaving and splashing ocean itself was frightening even for a stern heart. Had it been any other obstacle or place over land, they would have easily overcome it and finished the task at hand quickly; but crossing the ocean is something extraordinary and beyond their means. It was a daunting prospect; a discouraging thought.

³Khar was a demon who was slayed by Lord Ram when he and his brother Dushan had attacked the Lord at Panchavti. In the battle that followed, they and their army of demons were killed by the Lord. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 20 along with the verses that precede it.} This episode has already been narrated in our narrative when we read about the episode of Supernakha.

⁴The word “Tribikram” means one who has conquered the three worlds. “Tri” = three; “Vikram” = one who is invincible, strong and valiant; one who conquers or defeats. This story relates to Lord Vishnu’s incarnation as the dwarf mendicant known as Vaaman. Since Lord Vishnu has also revealed himself as Lord Ram, so therefore the two forms of Vishnu, one as Vaaman and the other as Lord Ram, basically have no difference.

In the chronological order, Vaaman appeared before Lord Ram. Jamvant had a long life, and he spanned many generations and eras. He was young during the period Lord Vaaman appeared on earth, and now during the era of Lord Ram he has become aged.

The Lord is called ‘Tribikram’ because in his incarnation as Vaaman he had measured the whole creation in his steps, a way of saying that he had ‘conquered the entire creation consisting of the heaven, the earth and the nether world’.

The story is outlined in brief as a note appended to Doha no. 29 herein below as it would help to explain the things better in the right perspective and context.]

दो०. बलि बाँधत प्रभु बाढ़ेउ सो तनु बरनि न जाइ । उभय घरी महँ दीन्हिं सात प्रदच्छिन धाइ ॥ २९ ॥

dōhā.

bali bām̐dhata prabhu bāṛhē'u sō tanu barani na jā'i.
ubhaya gharī maham̐ dīnhīm̐ sāta pradacchina dhā'i. 29.

In order to measure the land granted to him as alms by king Bali, the Lord (Vaaman) had expanded his body to assume such a colossus form that even after covering the entire creation there still was some more space needed so as to complete the measurement. So Vaaman tied Bali and made him a prisoner as the latter could not fulfil his vows. Oh, it is impossible to describe that astounding form of the Lord (that exceeded the circumference of the entire universe and then went beyond it)¹.

Nevertheless, I wished to pay my respects to the Lord by going around him clockwise (i.e. by doing a clockwise circumambulation of his colossal form). I had performed seven rounds of this colossus form quickly in two Gharis by running fast, so much was my strength, stamina and energy at that time². (Doha no. 29)

[Note—¹King Bali had wanted to rule over the whole world. The Gods were alarmed as this would violate the law of creation, because no living being can claim to replace the authority of Lord Vishnu as the Lord of the world. So the Lord assumed the form of a Brahmin dwarf and approached Bali at the time he was doing the fire sacrifice to fulfil his objective, and asked for alms. Bali could not refuse the alms-seeker, and promised Lord Vaaman land equivalent to the area covered by his ‘three steps’ as desired.

Instantly, Vaaman expanded his body and measured the whole of the nether world and earth in one step; in the second step he measured the entire heaven and the sky. One step was still pending; there was no space left that could be measured by the third step. So in order to fulfil his vow Bali allowed the Lord to measure him by the third step—i.e. the great king voluntarily submitted to Lord Vaaman and allowed himself to be tied and enslaved in lieu of the land for the third step.

One can imagine the size of Lord Vaaman when he measured or girdled or straddled across or walked over the whole creation with just two steps—with one step yet pending!

Lord Vaaman is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu and an ancient one, for it took place in Sata Yuga, the 1st era of the 4-era cycle of creation and destruction according to Hindu scriptures. The Sata Yuga is also called the age of the Vedas as it was during this epoch the ancient scriptures known as the Vedas came into being and their hymns were primarily used to perform sacred fire sacrifices.

Hence, being an ancient incarnation of Lord Vishnu, Vaaman finds mention in the Vedas too—e.g. in Shatpath Brahman, 1/1/5; Taittiriya Brahman, 1/6/1; and Taittiriya Sanhita, 2/1/3.

²Such was the wondrous feat of Jamvant of which he refers to here that he quickly circled seven times, in a matter of about two gharis or roughly two hours, Lord Vaaman who had a colossal size that exceeded the span of the entire universe, because after measuring the cosmos by his two steps he still needed space for the third step, at which time Vaaman made Bali offer himself as a compensation. Truly it was an absolutely astounding feat.

What Jamvant intends to say here is that the distance of eight hundred miles to Lanka across the ocean is not even a speck in a canvas of space when compared to the dimension of the universe he had covered seven times in two hours, so quick and agile was his body during his youthful days. So striding across a distance of mere eight hundred miles would have been a child’s play for him if he had been younger. But alas he was old now, and so his vigour and agility have ebbed considerably due to old age.]

चौ० अंगद कहइ जाउँ मैं पारा । जियँ संसय कछु फिरती बारा ॥ १ ॥

जामवंत कह तुम्ह सब लायक । पठइअ किमि सब ही कर नायक ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

aṅgada kaha'i jā'um̐ mair̐ pārā. jiyam̐ sansaya kachu phiratī bārā. 1.

jāmavanta kaha tumha saba lāyaka. paṭha'i'a kimi saba hī kara nāyaka. 2.

Angad in his turn said, ‘I can go (leap across the ocean), but I have doubts about my chances of coming back (for I may not be able to return)¹.’ (1)

Jamvant interposed, saying, ‘Even though you are able and competent in every way, but how can we send you because you are our leader?²’ (2)

[Note—¹Angad said that he had sufficient strength to leap across the eight hundred miles of ocean and reach the island of Lanka, but this will require effort and he fears that by the time he lands there all his energy would be spent. Then it would not be a picnic: he would have to brave all sorts of odds to meet Sita, such as having to fight the demons who may obstruct him or try to capture him as a prisoner. That would further sap his energy. Perhaps he may also be gravely wounded in the course of the mission, becoming so handicapped that he wouldn't be able to come back. So he says that he has serious doubts and grave misgivings about his chances of returning.

Angad was reluctant to go for another reason too. He had seen Lord Ram calling Hanuman close at the time of their departure, and quietly giving him (Hanuman) his finger-ring with a message for Sita. Angad, being the commander and a leader of the group, was standing close by, and he was intelligent enough to conclude that Lord Ram has chosen Hanuman to be his message-bearer over all others, including Angad and Jamvant. So Angad did not wish to interfere; he had to find a polite excuse to recuse himself in deference to the Lord's wishes.

What will happen when they return and the Lord asks Hanuman about the mission and the news of Sita, about what he did with the finger-ring, how was it received by Sita, and what if anything did she give him in return as a token of hers; what answer would they give to the Lord—that instead of Hanuman it was Angad who had gone. Would it not displease the Lord that his orders were violated? Would it not put poor Hanuman in a seriously piquant situation for no fault of his?

No, no it should not be that way. As a leader it was his moral responsibility to take everything into consideration before taking a decision. It is not the time and circumstance for dare-devilry and showmanship.

²Jamvant did not at all like the idea of Angad going alone to Lanka. The apparent reason he gives is that it is not advisable to send away the leader and commander of the group as this would make them leaderless; there would be no one to take decisions if Angad goes.

Another practical objection to allowing Angad to go was that he was a prince, and it does not behove of a prince to go himself on errands while his attendants and soldiers sit around lazing, gossiping and idling away time.

However, besides these obvious reasons there were other subtle reasons also. One was that Angad was also the prince and the heir-apparent of the kingdom of Kishkindha; it is never wise to send an individual of such a singular importance to an alien land on a mission the outcome of which was completely unknown, and especially if he goes alone and unarmed to a hostile land where he would be surrounded on all sides by vicious enemies in the form of blood-thirsty, vicious and ferocious demons.

The other reason that weighed heavily on the mind of Jamvant, who was farsighted and prudent, was that Angad was already under great mental stress as he himself had expressed his grave fears concerning death at the hands of his uncle Sugriv if Sita was not found. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 26.} So Jamvant had a serious apprehension that if Angad is allowed to go abroad then perhaps he may decide never to return as long as he lived—and Angad's own statement expressing his doubts concerning his coming back reinforced Jamvant's suspicion.

What compounded this Jamvant's apprehension was the fact that Ravana was a friend of Baali, the father of Angad. {This story is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Saar Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101. In Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line

nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 21, Ravana too refers to this acquaintance when Angad meets him as an emissary of Lord Ram in a last attempt to avoid the war.} So there was this risk of Angad deciding to exploit this friendship and defect to Ravana's camp to avoid being killed or imprisoned by his uncle Sugriv.

Jamvant wondered what, after all, Angad meant when he said that "he can go but there is uncertainty about his return".]

कहइ रीक्षपति सुनु हनुमाना । का चुप साधि रहेउ बलवाना ॥ ३ ॥
 पवन तनय बल पवन समाना । बुधि बिबेक बिग्यान निधाना ॥ ४ ॥
 कवन सो काज कठिन जग माहीं । जो नहिं होइ तात तुम्ह पाहीं ॥ ५ ॥ राम काज लागि तव अवतारा । सुनतहिं भयउ पर्वताकारा ॥ ६ ॥ kaha'i rīkṣapati sunu hanumānā. kā cupa sādhi rahē'u balavānā. 3.

 pavana tanaya bala pavana samānā. budhi bibēka bigyāna nidhānā. 4.
 kavana sō kāja kaṭhina jaga māhīm. jō nahīm hō'i tāta tumha pāhīm. 5.
 rāma kāja lagi tava avatārā. sunatahiṁ bhaya'u parbatākārā. 6.

The king of the bears (i.e. Jamvant) turned to Hanuman (who during this time was sitting quietly and waiting for his turn to be asked to act), and exhorted him by saying, 'Listen Hanuman! Oh you brave one, say why are you sitting quietly; how come you are mum? (3)

You are a great Son of the exalted Wind-God, and verily you have the same characteristic strength, power and energy that the latter possesses. You are indeed a treasury of intelligence, wisdom and prudence. (4)

What work is there in this world that is so difficult that you can't do it; which work is there that you are not sufficiently equipped or competent enough to successfully do? (5)

You have manifested in this world exclusively to do Lord Ram's work and fulfil the Lord's mission! [So Hanuman, realise your true potentials and understand that the time for you to act has finally arrived. Wake up from your dream as it is the clarion call to rise has been sounded; the bugle is asking you to girdle yourself and become active instantly, for there is no time for further procrastination and brooding.]'

The moment Hanuman heard these inspiring words (spoken by Jamvant), he expanded his body to assume a form as gigantic as a colossus mountain¹. (6)

[Note—¹These motivating words of Jamvant reminded Hanuman about the mission of his life for which he had taken birth, which was to serve Lord Ram and help him in the mission of eliminating the cruel demons headed by Ravana. He is called "the Son of the Wind-God" because when the Gods were advised by the creator to go down to earth and prepare themselves to serve Lord Vishnu when he manifests himself as Lord Ram in order to eliminate the demons and their villainous king Ravana, the Wind-God decided to become Hanuman. Jamvant was alluding to this fact.

So as soon as he was reminded of his birth and responsibilities, Hanuman recollected everything which he appeared to have forgotten under the influence of Maya, the Lord's delusion creating powers. Things are to be done at the proper time, and so the Supreme Being cast his Maya upon Hanuman so that he lies dormant till the correct time arrives and he is needed. Till such time Hanuman was made to appear to be dreaming; he appeared to be docile, dumb and humble.

But once the veil of delusion was removed, he woke up from his day-dreaming and realised his true potentials. His growing to a colossus size is a metaphor for his stupendous abilities and astounding potentials that no one else could match.

Let us apply some imaginative skill intelligently, and then we can easily visualise what may have actually happened on that occasion. Remember: Hanuman was the 'son of the wind-god', and like a balloon filled with air his body could easily expand to a huge size. It was a necessary device devised to accomplish the task at hand—there was the need to cross the surface of the ocean, which means, in the absence of any other means of transport such as a ship or a bridge, one would have to 'fly or glide or cruise across the surface of the water' like a bird or an airplane. A hot-air balloon would also do the same thing!

So Hanuman did a bit of Yoga exercise: he held his breath within his body so that it expanded; the trapped air got heated as well, allowing him to rise from the ground and become afloat. Then with a little help from a favourable wind, he literally would glide across the surface of the water of the ocean! And since he was the 'son of the wind-god', things would easily be manoeuvred by the latter in his son's favour so that he can comfortably sail in the air to reach Lanka.

After all, it was in the interest of the Wind-God to do his might, and the best as much as he can at this crucial point of time, when the mission of eliminating the demons had reached a critical juncture. For, failure of being able to reach Lanka and trace Sita would mean that the whole master-plan of Lord Ram devised to help the gods themselves would come tumbling down like a house of cards, and then the gods themselves would be held responsible for the disaster.

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 16-21 we read the interesting way how Jamvant inspired Hanuman to act. Here it is:

Verse nos. 16-17: Saying this, Jamvant said to Hanuman who was sitting nearby, 'Oh Hanuman! When this great work of honour and fame has presented itself before you, why are you sitting silently and demurring (16) as if you are unaware of anything or reluctant to act? Come forward, oh the brave and immensely valorous and valiant One! You are the son of the wind-god himself, and as famed and renowned in valour and strength as him. Hence, show your prowess, ability, agility, might, power, skill and proficiency today (for this is the moment for which you and the rest of us had been waiting for so long, to serve Lord Ram, and make ourselves fortunate and our lives fulfilled). Rise to the occasion and step forward! (17).

18-19: The great Wind-God has produced you (i.e. given birth to you) to do the work of Lord Sri Ram. At the time of your birth, seeing the early morning rising sun and thinking it to be a ripe fruit, you had leapt 500 Yojans ($8 \times 500 = 4000$ miles) in the sky to grab it as part of your childhood playful activity, and had fallen back on the earth after that mighty leap (18-19).

20-21: Therefore, who is there who can ever describe your strength, valour and bravery? Oh the righteous and noble One. Stand up and come to the front. Do this job of Lord Ram, and be the protector of our lives¹ (20).

Hearing these encouraging and inspiring words of Jamavant, Hanuman was delighted and felt very pleased and motivated. He roared like a lion, and his shrill cry shook the universe (21).

{¹Jamvant motivated Hanuman by these inspiring words of encouragement: “If you could leap 500 Yojans when still a child, why can’t you now leap merely 100 Yojans when you are grown up and abler? Come, come; step forward and show your true mettle. Why do you feel shy when the time has come to be brave and showcase your powers, prowess and abilities? Come, come; you are a great and illustrious son of the equally great and illustrious wind-god; so you must remember to behave in a way that would make your father extremely proud of you, and not ashamed! You would not only make your father feel happy and proud of you but you will also get the eternal credit of saving the lives of all of us as well as serving Lord Ram who is a manifested form of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being himself. Your name and fame would become eternal like no one else’s has ever been; you will endear yourself not only to Lord Ram but to all other devotees of the Lord as well as to the entire community of monkeys and bears who now look up to you as their saviour. So get up cheerfully and get cracking!”}]

कनक बरन तन तेज बिराजा । मानहुँ अपर गिरिन्ह कर राजा ॥ ७ ॥
 सिंहनाद करि बारहिं बारा । लीलहिं नाघउँ जलनिधि खारा ॥ ८ ॥
 सहित सहाय रावनहि मारी । आनउँ इहाँ त्रिकूट उपारी ॥ ९ ॥
 जामवंत मैं पूँछउँ तोही । उचित सिखावनु दीजहु मोही ॥ १० ॥

kanaka barana tana tēja birājā. mānahum̐ apara girinha kara rājā. 7.
 simhanāda kari bārahim̐ bārā. līlahim̐ nāgha'um̐ jalanidhi khārā. 8.
 sahita sahāya rāvanahi mārī. āna'um̐ ihām̐ trikūṭa upārī. 9.
 jāmavanta mair̐ pūṁcha'um̐ tōhī. ucita sikhāvanu dījahu mōhī. 10.

[Now we read how wonderful and wondrous Hanuman looked in his gigantic form.]

The body of Hanuman was of a golden hue; it glowed radiantly. He appeared to be a ‘king amongst the mountains’. [To wit, he reminded the beholder of Mt. Sumeru, the holy golden mountain where the gods live.] (7)

He repeatedly roared like a lion, saying that he would devour the salty ocean or cross it as instructed to do.

[He could also have meant: “I will drink this ocean if it does not allow me to cross it!”] (8)

And I can and I would kill Ravana together with all his kith and kin and those who help him, and then uproot the mountain named Trikoot (over which Lanka was established) and bring it here. (9)

Jamvant—I am asking you what to do; please give me an appropriate advice.’ (10)

एतना करहु तात तुम्ह जाई । सीतहि देखि कहहु सुधि आई ॥ ११ ॥ तब निज भुज बल राजिवनैना । कौतुक लागि संग कपि सेना ॥ १२ ॥

ētanā karahu tāta tumha jā'ī. sītahi dēkhi kahahu sudhi ā'ī. 11.
taba nija bhuja bala rājivanainā. kautuka lāgi saṅga kapi sēnā. 12.

Jamvant replied, 'My dear (tāta). Do only this much—go and see (meet) Sita, give her the message (vouchsafed by Lord Ram to you), tell her about the developments here, and then come back. (11)

Then the lotus-eyed Lord ("rājivanainā"; i.e. Lord Ram) would finish the task successfully by employing the strength of his own arms, yet for the sake of sport he would take along with him the army of Kapis (monkeys chiefly, but also including the bears) for the job.

[To wit, as soon as the whereabouts of Sita are known, Lord Ram would go himself and use the strength of his own arms to free her. However, just to give us honour as well as an opportunity to enjoy the game of hunting, as it were, he would take our army of monkeys and bears along.] (12)

छं०. कपि सेन संग सँघारि निसिचर रामु सीतहि आनिहैं । १ ।
त्रैलोक पावन सुजसु सुर मुनि नारदादि बखानिहैं ॥ २ ॥
जो सुनत गावत कहत समुझत परम पद नर पावई । ३ । रघुबीर पद पाथोज मधुकर दास तुलसी गावई ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kapi sēna saṅga samṅhāri nisicara rāmu sītahi ānihaim. 1.
trailōka pāvana sujasu sura muni nāradādi bakhānihaim. 2.
jō sunata gāvata kahata samujhata parama pada nara pāva'ī. 3.
raghubīra pada pāthōja madhukara dāsa tulasī gāva'ī. 4.

Taking along the army of Kapis, Lord Ram would slay the demons, and bring back Sita. (Chanda line no. 1)

Verily indeed, the Gods and sage Narad would sing the marvels of this marvelous and glorious story for all times to come, hearing of which would purify all the three divisions of the world (i.e. the heaven, the earth, and the nether world).

[To wit, all those who listen to this glorious and magnificent story that describes the adventures of Lord Ram by which he freed Sita from the clutches of the demons, and in the process eliminated them as they had become a thorn for the gods and a painful scourge for mother earth, would feel exhilarated and spiritually fulfilled.] (Chanda line no. 2)

Hearing, singing and reciting, preaching and narrating, as well as understanding the true meaning and spiritual import of this glorious story, humans would be able to attain the final destination of the soul, which is to attain beatitude, felicity and eternal bliss.

[To wit, by carefully listening to, soulfully singing, studies and explains to others the subtle meaning and spiritual significance of this wonderful story of Lord Ram so that it is fully understood and all doubts regarding it are removed—if this happens then the attentive listener, the singer, the student, the preacher, the narrator or the teacher—all those desirous of attaining liberation and deliverance from the miseries of life in this mortal world, would certainly and surely attain the supreme state of blessedness.] (Chanda line no. 3)

It is the same nectar-like story that takes a creature to an exalted state of existence that Tuslidas is singing, and he enjoys it like a bee would enjoy drinking nectar of the lotus flower. (Chanda line no. 4)

-----**-----

Section 6.2:

Adhyatma Ramayan

We shall now take a pause in our reading of this marvelous story from Ram Charit Manas, and have a sort of a flash back or a rewind of the story by replaying the episodes narrated herein above in this Chapter no. 6 by reading them as they are told in Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas.

To recapitulate, we shall be reading about the following episodes here: Lord Ram begins his search of Sita; meeting Jatau and Sabari; friendship with Sugriv, the prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha; sending messengers in all the directions to locate Sita; she is sighted in Lanka by Sampati; the reconnaissance party deputed Hanuman to go and ascertain facts; Hanuman crosses the ocean to land on the shore of Lanka.

These episodes are covered in Adhyatma Ramayan's Aranya Kand, Canto 8—to Kishkindha Kand, Canto 9.

For ease of reading we have divided this Section 6.2 in the following sub-sections, each narrating one important episode and its related events, as follows:-

Sub-section 6.2.1: In this unit we read Lord Ram's state of grief when he found that Sita was missing from the hermitage when he returned there. He and his younger brother Laxman then started the search for Sita, and came to the place where the friendly vulture Jatau lay wounded on the ground because he was gravely injured by Ravana when he tried to save Sita from being taken away by the rascal. These events are narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 8.

Sub-section 6.2.2: In this part we read Lord Ram's meeting with Sabari, the old woman, who guided the Lord to go and meet Sugriv, the monkey prince, on Mt. Rishyamook, situated on the banks of Lake Pampa; he would certainly help the Lord find and recover Sita. This episode is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 10.

Sub-section 6.2.3: Lord Ram meets Sugriv and Hanuman, and befriends them. It is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1.

Sub-section 6.2.4: Sugriv had neglected the Lord's request to make earnest efforts to search Sita by sending scouts and messengers in all the directions. This annoyed the Lord, and Sugriv was warned of the consequences. We read about it in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 5.

Sub-section 6.2.5: A large number of messengers and scouts were dispatched in teams in all the directions to search for Sita. One such reconnoitring team heads south and enters a cave where they meet a hermitress named Swayamprabha. This episode is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6.

Sub-section 6.2.6: Moving ahead on their mission, this team reaches the shore of the southern ocean across which was situated Lanka where Sita was held captive. On the shore Lord Ram's messengers, the monkeys and bears, met Sampati, the old vulture king who was a brother of Jatau. We read about it in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7.

Sub-section 6.2.7: When Sampati told the group that Sita was held captive in Lanka and he could clearly see her there sitting under a tree in a garden, the next logical step was to send someone from amongst them across the ocean to Lanka which was situated at a distance of 100 Yojans (roughly 800 miles) from the shore as the bird flies. So a consultation was held and it was decided that Hanuman would carry out this expedition. Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 9 describes this fascinating episode.

Now let us start reading this fascinating tale of great wonderment from Adhyatma Ramayan as outlined above.

Sub-section 6.2.1: Lord Ram's state of grief when he found that Sita was missing from the hermitage when he returned there; he and his younger brother Laxman then started the search for Sita; they met Jatau who lay wounded on the ground after being gravely injured by Ravana as he tried to save Sita from being taken away by the rascal.

These events are narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranaya Kand, Canto 8 as follow now:-

॥ अष्टमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

रामो मायाविनं हत्वा राक्षसं कामरूपिणम् ।

प्रतस्थे स्वाश्रमं गन्तुं ततो दूराद्दर्श तम् ॥ १॥

आयान्तं लक्ष्मणं दीनं मुखेन परिशुष्यता ।

राघवश्चिन्तयामास स्वात्मन्येव महामतिः ॥ २॥

॥ aṣṭamaḥ sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca

rāmo māyāvinaṃ hatvā rākṣasaṃ kāmarūpiṇam । pratasthe svāśramaṃ gantum tato dūrāddadarśa tam ॥ 1॥

āyāntaṃ lakṣmaṇaṃ dīnaṃ mukhena pariśuṣyatā ।

rāghavaścintayāmāsa svātmanyeva mahāmatih ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Here, when Lord Ram had killed the deceptive demon (Marich), who was an impostor, and had turned back to return to his hermitage, he saw from a distance that Laxman was coming towards him. He had a remorseful countenance and a grave expression of regret on his face. The most wise Raghav (Sri Ram) thought to himself (1-2)—

लक्ष्मणस्तन्न जानाति मायासीतां मया कृताम् ।
 ज्ञात्वाप्येनं कञ्चयित्वा शोचामि प्रकृतो यथा ॥ ३॥
 यद्यहं विरतो भूत्वा तूष्णीं स्थास्यामि मन्दिरे । तदा राक्षसकोटीनां वधोपायः कथं भवेत् ॥ ४॥ lakṣmaṇastanna jānāti māyāsītāṃ mayā kṛtām । jñātvāpyenaṃ vañcayitvā śocāmi prākṛto yathā ॥ 3॥ yadyahaṃ virato bhūtvā tūṣṇiṃ sthāsyaṃ mandire । tadā rākṣasakoṭīnāṃ vadhopāyaḥ katham bhavet ॥ 4॥

3-4. 'Laxman does not know that I have created an illusionary Sita. I know it, but still I shall conceal this fact from him and lament like an ordinary human (3).

And if while acting thus I go overboard and overreact by pretending that like I a true hermit who is totally dispassionate and unattached to worldly affairs such as being attached to a wife and lamenting her loss, I too am a true recluse and would rather prefer to sit quietly in my cottage like a meditating hermit and keep myself aloof and disinterested in searching for her for it is the will of providence that I am left alone and free from all encumbrances, and sit dumbfounded in my cottage in the hermitage doing nothing out of shock as it were—well, this attitude will not serve my purpose at all, because then how can the means to eliminate the hundreds of thousands of demons be realised?

[To wit, if I don't act wisely, and despite the smokescreen of delusions that I shall create to make the world believe that I am emotionally broken by the loss of my dear wife, yet if I sit like a paralysed man who is totally devastated at such a great loss, then what would happen to the master-plan of eliminating the demons of which Sita's abduction was merely a ploy? So therefore, inspite of some show of grief and lamentation, I must go about my plans with alacrity.] (4).

यदि शोचामि तां दुःखसन्तप्तः कामुको यथा ।
 तदा क्रमेणानुचिन्वन् सीतां यास्येऽसुरालयम् ।
 रावणं सकुलं हत्वा सीतामग्नौ स्थितां पुनः ॥ ५॥
 मयैव स्थापितां नीत्वा यातायोध्यामतन्द्रितः ।
 अहं मनुष्यभावेन जातोऽस्मि ब्रह्मणार्थितः ॥ ६॥
 मनुष्यभावमापन्नः किञ्चित्कालं वसामि कौ ।
 ततो मायामनुष्यस्य चरितं मेऽनुशृण्वताम् ॥ ७॥
 मुक्तिः स्यादप्रयासेन भक्तिमार्गानुवर्तिनाम् ।
 निश्चित्यैवं तदा दृष्ट्वा लक्ष्मणं वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ८॥ yadi śocāmi tāṃ duḥkhasantaptaḥ kāmuko yathā । tadā krameṇānucinvan sītāṃ yāsye'surālayam । rāvaṇaṃ sakulaṃ hatvā sītāmagṇau sthitāṃ punaḥ ॥ 5॥ mayaiva sthāpitāṃ nītvā yātāyodhyāmatandritaḥ । ahaṃ manuṣyabhāvena jāto'smi brahmaṇārthitaḥ ॥ 6॥ manuṣyabhāvamāpannaḥ kiñcitkālaṃ vasāmi kau । tato māyāmanuṣyasya caritaṃ me'nuśṛṅvatām ॥ 7॥ muktiḥ syādaprayāsenā bhaktimārgānuvartinām । nīscityaivaṃ tadā dr̥ṣṭvā lakṣmaṇaṃ vākyamabravīt ॥ 8॥

5-8. On the contrary, if I pretend to be overcome with grief for her initially, and then instead of sitting like a dispassionate hermit I begin to lament woefully like a lustful and passionate person who grieves for his beloved wife, then obviously I shall have an excuse to go in search for Sita, and in due course of time reach Ravana, kill him along with his compatriots, relatives and companions (literally, the entire demon clan who is as evil and sinful as Ravana is), retrieve Sita who has been entrusted to (i.e. put in the custody of) the fire god, and then proceed to Ayodhya.

I have taken a human form due to the prayers of Brahma (the Creator). Hence, I shall stay on this earth and behave like an ordinary human being for some time. By doing this, some devotees who are devotedly inclined towards me and listen to the divine stories of my illusionary human form, they will get a chance to attain easy salvation without making any great effort for it.

[To wit, if I spend some time on earth then a history of my life would be left as a legacy, and my devotees would get an opportunity to recall this story and remember me as a easy means to attain bliss and beatitude. So therefore, I must act like a human being who wails for his lost wife, and not like the Supreme Being for whom all situations are the same, who has neither a wife nor someone who is lost.]'

Deciding thus, Lord Ram looked at Laxman and said (7-8)—

किमर्थमागतोऽसि त्वं सीतां त्यक्त्वा मम प्रियाम् ।
 नीता वा भक्षिता वापि राक्षसैर्जनकात्मजा ॥ ९॥
 लक्ष्मणः प्रोज्जलिः प्रह सीताया दुर्वचो रुदन् ।
 हा लक्ष्मणेति वचनं राक्षसोक्तं श्रुतं तया ॥ १०॥
 त्वद्वाक्यसदृशं श्रुत्वा मां गच्छेति त्वराब्रवीत् । रुदन्ती सा मया प्रोक्ता देवि राक्षसभाषितम् ॥ ११॥ kimarthamāgato'si tvam sītāṃ tyaktvā mama priyām । nītā vā bhakṣitā vāpi rākṣasairjanakātmajā ॥ 9॥ lakṣmaṇaḥ prāñjaliḥ prāha sītāyā durvaco rudan । hā lakṣmaṇeti vacanaṃ rākṣasoktaṃ śrutaṃ tayā ॥ 10॥ tvadvākyasadṛśaṃ śrutvā māṃ gaccheti tvarābravīt । rudantī sā mayā proktā devi rākṣasabhāṣitam ॥ 11॥

9-11. Lord Ram expressed his surprise on seeing Laxman coming his way and exclaimed, 'Oh Laxman! How and why did you come here leaving behind my beloved Sita alone? Now by this time the demons must have either stolen her or eaten her up' (9).

Then Laxman wept and submitted to the Lord with folded hands that Sita had made serious allegations against him. Laxman said—"Hearing the words of the demon calling out 'Ah Laxman' in your voice (or in a voice imitating you), Sita told me to come to your help immediately. Then I tried to explain the situation to her as she wept, 'Oh goddess', said I, 'These are not the words of Sri Ram, but the words of a demon. [So you need not worry.] (10-11).

नेदं रामस्य वचनं स्वस्था भव शुचिस्मिते ।
 इत्येवं सान्त्विता साध्वी मया प्रोवाच मां पुनः ।
 यदुक्तं दुर्वचो राम न वाच्यं पुस्तस्तव ॥ १२॥
 कर्णो पिधाय निर्गत्य यातोऽहं त्वां समीक्षितुम् ।
 रामस्तु लक्ष्मणं प्राह तथाप्यनुचितं कृतम् ॥ १३॥
 त्वया स्त्रीभाषितं सत्यं कृत्वा त्यक्त्वा शुभानना । नीता वा भक्षिता वापि राक्षसैर्नातु संशयः ॥ १४॥

nedam rāmasya vacanam svasthā bhava śucismite । ityevam sāntvitā sādhvī mayā provāca mām punaḥ । yaduktam durvaco rāma na vācyam puratastava ॥ 12॥ karṇau pidhāya nirgatya yāto'ham tvām samīkṣitum । rāmastu lakṣmaṇam prāha tathāpyanucitam kṛtam ॥ 13॥ tvayā strībhāṣitam satyam kṛtvā tyaktā śubhānanā । nītā vā bhakṣitā vāpi rākṣasairnātra saṁśayaḥ ॥ 14॥

12-14. Oh the auspicious one with a pleasant smile (śucismite). You should not worry.'

But inspite of my efforts to reassure her, the Sadhvi (the virtuous and chaste) Sita hurled such scornful words full of reprehensible accusation at me which are were so uncouth that they are unworthy to be repeated in front of you (12).

So I shut my ears in disgust and disdain, and decided, though against my will and with great regret, to leave her and come to see you.'

At this, Lord Ram said, 'Oh Laxman! It's alright, but still you have not done the right thing (13) by believing the words of a woman and leaving the auspicious Sita alone. Now there is no doubt that either the demons have stolen her or have eaten her up' (14).

इति चिन्तापरो रामः स्वाश्रमं त्वरितो ययौ ।
 तत्रादृष्ट्वा जनकजां विललापातिदुःखितः ॥ १५॥
 हा प्रिये क्व गतासि त्वं नासि पूर्ववदाश्रमे । अथवा मद्दिमोहार्थं लीलया क्व विलीयसे ॥ १६॥ iti cintāparo rāmaḥ svāśramam tvarito yayau । tatrādrṣṭvā janakajāṁ vilalāpātīduḥkhitaḥ ॥ 15॥ hā priye kva gatāsi tvam nāsi pūrvavadāśrame ।

athavā madvimohārtham līlayā kva viliyase ॥ 16॥

15-16. Worrying in this manner, Lord Ram speedily came back to his hermitage, and not finding Sita there, he became very dismayed and began lamenting remorsefully (15), 'Oh dear! You are not visible in the hermitage today; where have you gone? Or is it that you have hidden somewhere to play tricks on me?' (16).

इत्याचिन्वन् वनं सर्वं नापश्यज्जानकीं तदा ।
वनदेव्यः कुतः सीतां ब्रुवन्तु मम वल्लभाम् ॥ १७॥
मृगाश्च पक्षिणो वृक्षा दर्शयन्तु मम प्रियाम् । इत्येवं विलपन्नेव रामः सीतां न कुत्रचित् ॥ १८॥ ityācinvan vanam sarvam nāpaśyajjānakīm tadā । vanadevyaḥ kutaḥ sītāṃ bruvantu mama vallabhām ॥ 17॥ mrgāśca pakṣiṇo vṛkṣā darśayantu mama priyām । ityevam vilapanneva rāmaḥ sītāṃ na kutracit ॥ 18॥

17-18. Lamenting woefully in this manner, Lord Ram searched for her around the forest, but could not find her. Then he said—'Oh the patron goddesses of the forest! Tell me where is my dear wife Sita? Oh the deer, birds and trees! Please show me my beloved Sita' (17). Searching and lamenting in this woeful manner, Lord Ram looked everywhere but could not see (trace) Sita anywhere (18).

सर्वज्ञः सर्वथा क्वापि नापश्यद्रघुनन्दनः ।
आनन्दोऽप्यन्वशोचतामचलोऽप्यनुधावति ॥ १९॥
निर्ममो निरहङ्कारोऽप्यखण्डानन्दरूपवान् ।
मम जायेति सीतेति विललापातिदुःखितः ॥ २०॥
एवं मायामनुचरन्नसक्तोऽपि रघूत्तमः । आसक्त इव मूढानां भाति तत्त्वविदां न हि ॥ २१॥

sarvajñaḥ sarvathā kvāpi nāpaśyadraghunandanaḥ । ānando'pyanvaśocattāmacalo'pyanudhāvati ॥ 19॥ nirmamo nirahaṅkāro'pyakhaṇḍānandarūpavān । mama jāyēti sītēti vilalāpātīduḥkhitaḥ ॥ 20॥ evam māyāmanucarannasakto'pi raghūttamaḥ । āsakta iva mūḍhānāṃ bhāti tattvavidāṃ na hi ॥ 21॥

19-21. [What a wonder that—] Raghunandan (Lord Sri Ram), inspite of being wise and all-knowing, seems to be pursuing an illusive deer (who was actually a demon named Marich); inspite of being an embodiment of total bliss, beatitude and contentment, he mourned and grieved for Sita; inspite of being steady, calm and stable, he ran around here and there in search of her (19); inspite of being devoid of all attractions, attachments, endearments or affections towards anyone, despite having no trace of ego, pride, arrogance or haughtiness; and inspite of being an embodiment of bliss, contentedness, peace and tranquillity that are eternal, imperishable and uniform—the same Supreme Lord wailed most remorsefully, lamenting and calling out like an ordinary human 'Oh Sita; Oh my dearest Sita' (20).

In this manner, following his own decision to act like an ordinary human being surrounded or enveloped by Maya (worldly delusions of all kinds and their accompanying problems), the most exalted Raghu (Lord Ram) appears to be infatuated and wistful like an ignorant and lustful man, inspite of being unattached to and detached from everything in this mortal world—but those who have knowledge of the essential truth, the actual reality of the Lord, those who are aware of the true and real form of things, in short, those who are enlightened and wise, such erudite and spacious people do not have any doubt and suspicion about anything related to Lord Ram¹. (21)

[Note—¹To wit, those who are intelligent and wise know fully understand that the way the Lord behaved like an ordinary man grieving for his lost wife was simply a pretension in order to successfully carry out his mission of eliminating the cruel and sinful demons headed by Ravana, a mission that was promised by the Lord to the gods and mother earth because these demons had wreaked such havoc and had broken all boundaries of tolerance by their exceptional cruelty and reign of terror that had left all the creatures suffering horribly that it had become obligatory for the Supreme Lord who is responsible for maintaining law and order in this creation to intervene and put things in the right order. So such wise, erudite and enlightened persons are not confused or harbour any doubts about who Lord Ram actually was; they never think that because Lord Ram's behaviour was like any other human being he too was one, but they are convinced of his divinity and holy nature as being the Supreme Being himself in the form of Lord Ram—i.e. that Lord Ram was simply a human manifestation of Brahm, the Supreme Lord, the Almighty God, ultimate Authority, and the Creator of this creation.]

एवं विचिन्वन् सकलं वनं रामः सलक्ष्मणः ।
 भग्नं रथं छत्रचापं कूबरं पतितं भुवि ॥ २२॥
 दृष्ट्वा लक्ष्मणमाहेदं पश्य लक्ष्मण केनचित् । नीयमानां जनकजां तं जित्वान्यो जहार ताम् ॥ २३॥

evaṃ vicinvaṅ sakalaṃ vanaṃ rāmaḥ salakṣmaṇaḥ । bhagnaṃ rathaṃ chatracāpaṃ kūbaraṃ patitaṃ bhuvi ॥ 22॥ dr̥ṣṭvā lakṣmaṇamāhedam paśya lakṣmaṇa kenacit । nīyamānāṃ janakajāṃ taṃ jitvānyo jahāra tāṃ ॥ 23॥

22-23. Accompanied by Laxman, Lord Ram searched for Sita in the entire forest, and during it he found the broken parts of the chariot (of Ravana, in which he had abducted Sita from the hermitage at Panchavati)—such as a broken parasol, a bow and many wooden parts of the chariot—lying scattered on the ground (22).

Seeing them, the Lord (became apprehensive and) said to Laxman, 'Oh Laxman! Look! It appears that while Sita was being taken away by her abductor, some other individual has defeated the first one in a duel, and then has taken Sita away himself¹ (23).

[Note—¹The broken parts of the chariot gave the impression that there has been a severe struggle, a fierce one-to-one duel, between the individual who was taking Sita away in it and another individual who had attacked him en-route. Though it cannot be said with certainty what actually transpired, but it is a fair guess that the attacker had tried to snatch Sita from the abductor in order to take her himself as either a trophy after defeating the first, or as a hostage to demand some sort of ransom either from her husband if he could be found or from first abductor if he wishes to take her away.]

ततः कञ्चिद्भुवो भागं गत्वा पर्वतसन्निभम् ।
 रुधिराक्तवपुर्दृष्ट्वा रामो वाक्यमथाब्रवीत् ॥ २४॥
 एष वै भक्षयित्वा तां जानकीं शुभदर्शनाम् ।
 शेते विविक्तेऽतितृप्तः पश्य हन्मि निशाचरम् ॥ २५॥
 चापमानय शीघ्रं मे बाणं च रघुनन्दन । तच्छ्रुत्वा रामवचनं जटायुः प्राह भीतवत् ॥ २६॥

tataḥ kañcidbhuvo bhāgaṃ gatvā parvatasannibham । rudhirāktavapurdr̥ṣṭvā rāmo vākya mathābravīt ॥ 24॥ eṣa vai bhakṣayitvā tāṃ jānakīm śubhadarśanām । śete vivikte'titṛptaḥ paśya hanmi niśācaram ॥ 25॥ cāpamānaya śīghraṃ me bāṇaṃ ca raghunandana । tacchrutvā rā mavacanaṃ jaṭāyuhḥ prāha bhītavat ॥ 26॥

24-26. After going some distance, he saw a huge mountain-like body soaked in blood lying on the ground. Lord Ram said (24), 'Look! Without doubt this is the one who has eaten up Sita who was so charming to look at. After devouring her he felt so satisfied that he is now sleeping here alone. I will kill this demon immediately (25).

Oh Raghunandan (i.e. Laxman; a son of the exalted clan of king Raghu of Ayodhya)! Bring me my bow and arrow quickly¹. Hearing these words of Lord Ram, Jatau (the vulture) was appalled and terrified (as he feared that the Lord would shoot him even without letting him explain the developments). So Jatau said (26)—

[Note—¹Lord Ram had been so distraught, dejected, listless and heart-broken after Sita was abducted that he didn't much care for his arms, the bow and the arrow, any longer. So he put them on the ground in the hermitage itself, saying he needs them no longer, for what is the use of his weapons now that he could not use them to give protection to his own wife; what purpose will they now serve? Laxman however maintained his calm; he understood the abysmal emotional state of utter distress of his elder brother which had made him so depressed and hopeless that he does not care for his own life any more, and so feels that he does not need any weapon any longer. So Laxman wisely picked the Lord's bow and arrow and carried them along himself in addition to his own set, for he knew that when the Lord would regain his composure and calm down, he would indeed need his weapons. That is why Lord Ram now extends his hands and gestures to Laxman to “bring here”, or rather “give” his bow and arrow back to him.]

मां न मास्य भद्रं ते म्रियमाणं स्वकर्मणा । अहं जटायुस्ते भार्याहारिणं समनुद्रुतः ॥ २७॥
 रावणं तत्र युद्धं मे बभूवारीविमर्दन ।
 तस्य वाहान् रथं चापं छित्त्वाहं तेन घातितः ॥ २८॥
 पतितोऽस्मि जगन्नाथ प्राणान्स्त्यक्ष्यामि पश्य माम् ॥ २९॥

māṃ na māśya bhadrāṃ te mriyamāṇaṃ svakarmanā । ahaṃ jaṭāyuste bhāryāhāriṇaṃ samanudrutaḥ ॥ 27॥ rāvaṇaṃ tatra yuddhaṃ me babhūvārivimardana । tasya vāhān rathaṃ cāpaṃ chittvāhaṃ tena ghātitaḥ ॥ 28॥ patito'smi jagannātha prāṇānstyakṣyāmi paśya mām ॥ 29॥

27-29. 'I am already dying due to my own actions. You be blessed—you do not have to kill me. I am Jatau. I had pursued Ravana who was taking your wife away hastily (27). Oh the Supreme Lord who is the crusher of enemies, those who torment other creatures (babhūvārivimardana)! I had a duel with him and I was able to destroy his chariot, horses and bow, but I was no match for him, and was thus mortally wounded by him (28).

This is why I am lying here. Oh Jagganath (“jagannātha”; Lord of the world and the universe)! Look at me, who (being a vulture) am a humble, a lowly and a sinful creature. I want to die now (for my wounds are extremely serious, and so you need not take the trouble of killing me)' (29).

तच्छ्रुत्वा राघवो दीनं कण्ठप्राणं ददर्श ह ।
 हस्ताभ्यां संस्पृशन् रामो दुःखाश्रुवृत्तलोचनः ॥ ३०॥
 जटायो ब्रूहि मे भार्या केन नीता शुभानना ।
 मत्कार्यार्थं हतोऽसि त्वमतो मे प्रियबान्धवः ॥ ३१॥ tacchrutvā rāghavo dīnaṃ kaṅṭhaprāṇaṃ dadarśa ha । hastābhyāṃ saṃsprśan rāmo duḥkhāśruvṛtalocanaḥ ॥ 30॥ jaṭāyo brūhi me bhāryā kena nītā śubhānanā । matkāryārthaṃ hato'si tvamato me priyabāndhavaḥ ॥ 31॥

30-31. Hearing this, Raghav (Lord Ram) went near Jatau and found him close to death as he was struggling for breath because his throat was choked. He was in a very serious, miserable and pitiable condition. Seeing this, the Lord's eyes were filled with tears of sorrow, mercy and sympathy; he massaged and caressed Jatau's body affectionately with his hands to sooth his sufferings as much as possible, and to show that he cared for the unfortunate creature. Then Lord Ram told Jatau (30), 'Oh Jatau! Say, who has taken away my wife whose face was so sweet? You have preferred to die for my sake; you have laid down your life in order to serve me. Hence I affirm that indeed you are my dearest friend' (31).

जटायुः सन्नया वाचा वक्त्राद्रक्तं समुद्रमन् ।
 उवाच यवणो राम राक्षसो भीमविक्रमः ॥ ३२॥
 आदाय मैथिलीं सीतां दक्षिणाभिमुखो ययौ ।
 इतो वक्तुं न मे शक्तिः प्राणान्स्त्यक्ष्यामि तेऽग्रतः ॥ ३३॥
 दिष्ट्या दृष्टोऽसि राम त्वं म्रियमाणेन मेऽनघ । परमात्मासि विष्णुस्त्वं मायामनुजरूपधृक् ॥ ३४॥ jaṭāyuh sannayā vācā vaktrādraktaṃ samudvaman । uvāca rāvaṇo rāma rākṣaso bhīmavikramaḥ ॥ 32॥ ādāya maithilīm sītāṃ dakṣiṇābhimukho yayau । ito vaktuṃ na me śaktiḥ prāṇānstyakṣyāmi te'grataḥ ॥ 33॥ diṣṭyā drṣṭo'si rāma tvam mriyamāṇena me'nagha । paramātmāsi viṣṇustvaṃ māyāmanujarūpadhrk ॥ 34॥

32-34. Vomiting blood, Jatau spoke with a faltering voice—'Oh Sri Ram! The most valorous, powerful and renowned king of demons, whose name is Ravana (32), has taken away the daughter of the king of Mithila ("maithilīm"; Sita) in the south direction. I do not have the strength left in me to speak more. I want to die in front of you as my ghost (my soul) wants to leave my mortal body immediately (33). Oh Lord Ram! It is my great fortune that I have been able to see you at the time of my death. Oh the sinless, faultless, pure and almighty One (me'nagha)! In all sooth (I know that) you are Lord Vishnu, the Parmatma, the Supreme Lord of this creation, who has disguised himself in the form of an ordinary human being (34).

अन्तकालेऽपि दृष्ट्वा त्वां मुक्तोऽहं रघुसत्तम ।
 हस्ताभ्यां स्पृश मां राम पुनर्यास्यामि ते पदम् ॥ ३५॥
 तथेति रामः पस्पर्श तदङ्गं पाणिना स्मयन् । ततः प्राणान् परित्यज्य जटायुः पतितो भुवि ॥ ३६॥
 रामस्तमनुशोचित्वा बन्धुवत् साशुलोचनः । लक्ष्मणेन समानाय काष्ठानि प्रददाह तम् ॥ ३७॥ antakāle'pi drṣṭvā tvāṃ mukto'haṃ raghusattama । hastābhyāṃ sprśa māṃ rāma punaryāsyāmi te padam ॥ 35॥ tatheti rāmaḥ pasparśa tadaṅgaṃ pāṇinā smayan । tataḥ prāṇān parityajya jaṭāyuh patito bhuvi ॥ 36॥ rāmastamanuśocitvā bandhuvat sāśrulocanaḥ । lakṣmaṇena samānāyā kāṣṭhāni pradadāha tam ॥ 37॥

35-37. Oh the most exalted Raghu (Sri Ram)! Though I have found liberation and deliverance by merely having your holy sight (Darshan), you still must touch me with divine your hands, for then I shall be blessed and attain the highest stature attainable by the soul (i.e. I shall attain salvation; I shall attain eternal bliss, beatitude and felicity by reaching your abode and having an exalted stature that is equivalent to your own divine self—“punaryāsyāmi te padam”)' (35).

Saying 'alright', Sri Ram smiled and touched his body with his hands. Then Jatau's soul exited from his mortal body which fell to the ground, dead and lifeless (36).

Lord Ram mourned for him with tearful eyes as if he were his own kin. Then the Lord asked Laxman to bring some fire-wood and did Jatau's last rites (i.e. cremated him) with his own hands (37).

स्नात्वा दुःखेन रामोऽपि लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितः । हत्वा वने मृगं तत्र मांसखण्डान् समन्ततः ॥ ३८॥
शाद्वले प्राक्षिपद्रामः पृथक् पृथगनेकधा ।
भक्षन्तु पक्षिणः सर्वे तृप्तो भवतु पक्षिराट् ॥ ३९॥

snātvā duḥkhena rāmo'pi lakṣmaṇena samanvitaḥ । hatvā vane mṛgaṃ tatra māṃsakhaṇḍān samantataḥ ॥ 38॥ śādvale prākṣipadrāmaḥ pṛthak pṛthaganekadhā । bhakṣantu pakṣiṇaḥ sarve tṛpto bhavatu pakṣirāṭ ॥ 39॥

38-39. [Deciding to do Jatau's 'Shraadh', the after-death rituals performed for the dead, befitting his birth as a cadaver-eating vulture, Lord Ram made the following arrangement—] Both Lord Ram and Laxman were equally sorry for Jatau and grieved for him. Then they took a bath (to purify themselves before performing the Shraadh ceremony). Thereafter, they went and hunted some prey and cut their flesh into small pieces (38). They then made separate heaps of these pieces of meat on ground at a place covered with grass, and which had a water-body nearby, as a means of offering sacrifices for atonement of sins on behalf of the departed soul. This offering was then eaten by other flesh-eating birds, including vultures, who belonged to the same race as Jatau, because it was a symbolic feast given for the peace of the soul of the departed. This ceremonial ritual gave immense contentment to all the birds as well as to the king of birds (Jatau) himself, as his soul attained bliss and peace by this performance (39).

[Note—The vulture Jatau is the one character in the whole of Ramayana whose 'Shraadh' ceremony—a religious rite performed after the death of a near relative or a loved one so that soul of the deceased finds peace and rest, and it includes a feast for the members of the community—was done so elaborately by Lord Sri Ram himself. The other individual was Sabari, the old tribal woman whose last rites too were done by Lord Ram personally.

Even the Lord's own worldly father Dasrath did not get this privilege at the time of his death at Ayodhya, though a symbolic rite was performed by Lord Ram at Chitrakoot when Bharat, the Lord's brother who had gone to meet him in an effort to bring the Lord back to Ayodhya, had informed him of the death of their father. But the point to note is that Lord Ram had to do Dasrath's Shraadh as a matter of routine and custom, but to do it for a lowly bird as a vulture who eats dead bodies, i.e. Jatau, is a sterling example of Lord Ram's greatness, grace, mercy and benevolence, of his equanimity and his inherent nature of treating all creatures alike, and his special attention to take care of those who serve him in any way. It's a marvel of the Lord's magnanimity and his extremely beneficent nature.

He had no second thoughts in breaking tradition to do the last rites of a flesh-eating vulture, and completing the process by giving a symbolic feast for the departed soul. It was a feast that conformed to the lifestyle of the individual for whom it was given—i.e. flesh of hunted animals was offered as food to carnivorous birds, as Jatayu, being a vulture, ate flesh of dead animals. To wit, Lord Ram did not hesitate a moment that it is unconventional and very odd for a man to perform cremation of a lowly vulture, and then going through the whole process systematically so much so that the requirement of a 'feast given for the peace of the soul of the dead' was also taken care of. This shows that Lord Sri Ram is a singular Lord who is extremely munificent, merciful, magnanimous, benevolent, beneficent and graceful.]

इत्युक्त्वा राघवः प्राह जटायो गच्छ मत्पदम् । मत्सारूप्यं भजस्वाद्य सर्वलोकस्य पश्यतः ॥ ४०॥
ततोऽनन्तरमेवासौ दिव्यरूपधरः शुभः । विमानवरमारुह्य भास्वरं भानुसन्निभम् ॥ ४१॥ ityuktvā rāghavaḥ prāha jaṭāyo gaccha matpadam । matsārūpyaṃ bhajasvādya sarvalokasya paśyataḥ ॥ 40॥ tato'nantaramevāsau divyarūpadharaḥ śubhaḥ । vimānavaramāruhya bhāsvaram bhānusannibham ॥ 41॥

40-41. Raghav (Lord Ram) told him, 'Jatayu! Go to my exalted abode in heaven and achieve oneness with me (i.e. attain a stature that will make you divine and holy) ' (40).

After that, he (Jatayu) assumed a glorious form that was radiant and divine; then he cheerfully boarded a heavenly chariot which was illuminated like the sun (41).

[Jatayu offered his prayers to Lord Ram. When he finished, the Lord blessed him and advised him to go to Vishnu Loka, the heavenly abode of Lord Ram as follows:-]

इत्येवं स्तुवतस्तस्य प्रसन्नोऽभूद्रघूत्तमः ।
उवाच गच्छ भद्रं ते मम विष्णोः परं पदम् ॥ ५४॥
शृणोति य इदं स्तोत्रं लिखेद्वा नियतः पठेत् । स याति मम सारूप्यं मरणे मत्स्मृतिं लभेत् ॥ ५५॥
इति राघवभाषितं तदा श्रुतवान् हर्षसमाकुलो द्विजः ।
रघुनन्दनसाम्यमास्थितः प्रययौ ब्रह्मसुपूजितं पदम् ॥ ५६॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामयणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे

ityevaṃ stuvatastasya prasanno'bhūdraghūttamaḥ ।

uvāca gaccha bhadraṃ te mama viṣṇoḥ paraṃ padam ॥ 54॥

śrṇoti ya idaṃ stotraṃ likhedvā niyataḥ paṭhet । sa yāti mama sārūpyaṃ maraṇe matsmṛtiṃ labhet ॥ 55॥

iti rāghavabhāṣitaṃ tadā śrutavān harṣasamākulo dvijaḥ । raghunandanasāmyamāsthitaḥ prayayau brahmasupūjitaṃ padam ॥ 56॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmayaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde

54-55. When Jatau had prayed to Lord Ram, the most exalted Lord amongst the Raghus, the Lord was very pleased, and said, 'Oh Jatau! You be blessed! You go to the supreme abode of Lord Vishnu, the abode beyond which there is nothing superior ("mama viṣṇoḥ paraṃ padam") (54).

Those persons who listen, write, read or recite the Stotra (prayers; hymns) of mine with which you have offered your prayers to me, and if they do it with due concentration, conviction, faith and dedication, then surely such individuals attain oneness with me, and they get the benefit of remembering me at the time of their death (like you have got). [To wit, those devotees who recite the hymns with which you have offered your prayers to me, they will be surely be blessed by me so much so that if at the time of their death they are unable to remember me or my divine name then still they would attain heaven, and their soul would find deliverance and beatitude.] (55).

56. The elderly and revered Jatau heard these sweet words spoken by Raghav (Lord Ram) with great delight; thereafter he assumed a divine form similar to Lord Ram and went to the abode which is worshipped and adored by Brahma, the creator, himself (because it is the abode of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being) (56).

Thus ends the conversation between Lord Shiva (Maheshwar) and his divine consort Uma (also known as Parvati) in Kishkindha Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that describes the episode of Jatau.

Sub-section 6.2.2: In this part we read Lord Ram's meeting with Sabari, the old woman, who guided the Lord to go and meet Sugriv, the monkey prince, on Mt. Rishyamook, situated on the opposite bank of Lake Pampa; he would certainly help the Lord find and recover Sita.

This episode is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 1-19, and 32-44 as follows:-

॥ दशमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

लब्ध्वा वरं स गन्धर्वः प्रयास्यन् राममब्रवीत् ।

शबर्यास्ते पुरोभागे आश्रमे रघुनन्दन ॥ १॥

भवत्या त्वत्पादकमले भक्तिमार्गविशारदा ।

तां प्रयाहि महाभाग सर्वं ते कथयिष्यति ॥ २॥

इत्युक्त्वा पूययौ सोऽपि विमानेनार्कवर्चसा ।
विष्णोः पदं रामनामस्मरणे फलमीदृशम् ॥ ३॥

॥ daśamaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca
labdhvā varam sa gandharvaḥ prayāsyān rāmamabravīt । śabaryāste purobhāge āśrame raghunandana ॥ 1॥ bhaktyā tvatpādakamale bhaktimārgaviśāradā । tām prayāhi mahābhāga sarvaṃ te kathayiṣyati ॥ 2॥ ityuktvā prayayau so'pi vimānenārka-varcasā । viṣṇoḥ padaṃ rāmanāmasmarāṇe phalamīdr̥śam ॥ 3॥

[After performing the last rites of Jatau, Lord Ram and Laxman proceeded ahead in the direction indicated by him, i.e. they headed towards the south. After some distance they met a demon named Kabandha, who was a Gandharva (musician in heaven) that became a demon due to a curse. While departing for heaven, Kabandha advised Lord Ram to go to the hermitage of Sabari, an old out-caste woman living alone in an abandoned hermitage down the path. She would help the Lord by guiding him further.]

1-3. Lord Shiva continued with his narration, and said—'Oh Parvati! Having received the requisite blessings from Lord Ram and granted deliverance from his demon-body, the Gandharva (i.e. the demon Kabandha) said, "Oh Raghunandan (Sri Ram)! Sabari lives in a hermitage in the yonder (1). She has great affection for your holy feet and is an ardent devotee of yours. Oh the most fortunate and exalted Lord! Please pay her a visit. She will tell you everything about Sita" (2).

Saying this, the Gandharva boarded a chariot as splendid as the sun, and went to the abode of Lord Vishnu (like the way Jatau had gone). Verily, this is indeed the excellent reward of remembering the holy name of Lord Ram (3).

त्यक्त्वा तद्विपिनं घोरं सिंहव्याघ्रादिदूषितम् ।
शनैरथाश्रमपदं शबर्या रघुनन्दनः ॥ ४॥
शबरी राममालोक्य लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितम् ।
आयान्तमाराद्धर्षेण प्रत्युत्थायाचिरेण सा ॥ ५॥
पतित्वा पादयोरग्रे हर्षपूर्णाश्रुलोचना । स्वागतेनाभिनन्द्याथ स्वासने सन्न्यवेशयत् ॥ ६॥ tyaktvā tadvipinaṃ ghoram siṃhavyāghrādīdūṣitam । śanairathāśramapadaṃ śabaryā raghunandanaḥ ॥ 4॥ śabarī rāmamālokya lakṣmaṇena samanvitam । āyāntamārāddharṣeṇa pratyutthāyācīreṇa sā ॥ 5॥ patitvā pādayoragre harṣapūrṇāśrulochanā । svāgatenābhinandyātha svāsane sannyaवेशayat ॥ 6॥

4-6. Thence, leaving behind that wild forest infested by fierce lions, tigers etc., Raghunandan (Sri Ram) slowly wended his way to reach the hermitage of Sabari (4).

Seeing Lord Ram and Laxman coming near, Sabari stood up instantly with great delight and ecstasy (5). Her eyes welled up with tears of joy and happiness, and she fell at the feet of Lord Ram with an overflowing heart. She welcomed him, asked about his well-being, and after that seated him on a comfortable seat (6).

रामलक्ष्मणयोः सम्यक्पादौ प्रक्षाल्य भक्तितः ।
तज्जलेनाभिषिक्त्याङ्गमथाद्यादिभिराहता ॥ ७॥
सम्पूज्य विधिवद्गमं ससौमित्रिं सपर्यया ।
सङ्गृहीतानि दिव्यानि रामार्थं शबरी मुदा ॥ ८॥
फलान्यमृतकल्पानि ददौ रामाय भक्तितः । पादौ सम्पूज्य कुसुमैः सुगन्धैः सानुलेपनैः ॥ ९॥ rāmalakṣmaṇayoḥ samyakpādaḥ prakṣālya bhaktitaḥ । tajjalena bhiṣicyāṅgamathārgghyādibhirāhṛtā ॥ 7॥ sampūjya vidhivadgamaṁ sasaumitriṁ saparyayā । saṅgrhītāni divyāni rāmārthaṁ śabarī mudā ॥ 8॥ phalānyamṛtakalpāni dadau rāmāya bhaktitaḥ । pādaḥ sampūjya kusumaiḥ sugandhaiḥ sānulepanaiḥ ॥ 9॥

7-9. Then she washed the feet of Lord Ram and Laxman reverentially, with due devotion, sprinkled this water on her body, worshipped Lord Ram and Laxman according to established traditions, and then most cheerfully she offered the two brothers refreshment in the form of sweet nectar-like fruits that she had been collecting for specifically for the Lord over a long period of time; she offered these fruits to the Lord with devotion and affection brimming over in her heart. Then she worshipped Lord Ram's lotus-like feet with flowers having the fragrance of sandalwood (7-9).

कृतातिथ्यं रघुश्रेष्ठमुपविष्टं सहानुजम् ।
शबरी भक्तिसम्पन्ना प्राञ्जलिर्वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ १०॥
अत्राश्रमे रघुश्रेष्ठ गुरवो मे महर्षयः ।
स्थिताः शुश्रूषणं तेषां कुर्वती समुपस्थिता ॥ ११॥
बहुवर्षसहस्राणि गतास्ते ब्रह्मणः पदम् ।
गमिष्यन्तोऽब्रुवन्मां त्वं वसात्रैव समाहिता ॥ १२॥ kṛtātithyaṁ raghuśreṣṭhamupaviṣṭaṁ sahānujaṁ । śabarī bhaktisampannā prāñjalirvākyaṁ abravīt ॥ 10॥ atrāśrame raghuśreṣṭha guravo me maharṣayaḥ । sthitāḥ śuśrūṣaṇaṁ teṣāṁ kurvātī samupasthitā ॥ 11॥ bahuvarṣasahasrāṇi gatāste brahmaṇaḥ padam । gamiṣyanto'bruvanmāṁ tvaṁ vasātraiva samāhitā ॥ 12॥

10-12. When the formalities of welcoming a guest were over and the most exalted ones in Raghu's clan (i.e. Lord Ram and Laxman) were comfortably seated, Sabari politely briefed the two brothers about herself, saying with folded hands (10)—'Oh the most exalted Raghu (Lord Ram)! Earlier my Guru, the great sage (Matang), used to stay in this hermitage. I lived here for thousands of years serving him. Now that exalted great sage has gone to the Brahma Lok (i.e. he has died). At the time of his departure to heaven, the sage had instructed me to make my mind calm and steady, and stay right here. (11-12).

रामो दाशरथिर्जातः परमात्मा सनातनः ।
 राक्षसानां वधार्थाय ऋषीणां रक्षणाय च ॥ १३॥
 आगमिष्यति चैकाग्रध्याननिष्ठा स्थिरा भव ।
 इदानीं चित्रकूटाद्रावाश्रमे वसति प्रभुः ॥ १४॥
 यावदागमनं तस्य तावद्रक्ष कलेवरम् ।
 दृष्ट्वैव राघवं दग्ध्वा देहं यास्यसि तत्पदम् ॥ १५॥ rāmo dāśarathirjātaḥ paramātmā sanātanaḥ । rākṣasānāṃ vadhārthāya ṛṣīṇāṃ rakṣaṇāya ca ॥ 13॥ āgamiṣyati caikāgradhyānaniṣṭhā sthīrā bhava । idānīm citrakūṭādrāvāśrame vasati prabhuḥ ॥ 14॥ yāvadaḡamanam tasya tāvadrakṣa kalevaram । drṣṭvaiva rāghavam dagdhvā deham yāsyasi tatpadam ॥ 15॥

13-15. (He had advised me that—) The eternal Parmatma (the Supreme Lord) has taken birth as Lord Sri Ram, the son of king Dasrath, for the purpose of slaying the demons so as to protect the sages, seers, ascetics and hermits (who were being tormented by these cruel demons) (13). He shall be coming here soon (to this hermitage). So in the meanwhile, you meditate upon the divine form of the Lord and stay here. Nowadays, the Lord is residing on the Chitrakoot mountains (14). Till the time he comes here, look after (take care of) your body. When Raghav (Lord Ram) comes here, you would burn your mortal, gross body while beholding the divine form of the Lord who will be right in front of you, and then due to this fortunate circumstance you will be so highly blessed that you would attain the exalted abode of the Lord itself (i.e. you will find deliverance from this mortal body, and go to heaven) (15).

[Note—This explains why Sabari had been collecting flowers and fruits as she was eagerly awaiting the arrival of Lord Ram and Laxman, because she knew in advance that they will surely come; the words of the great sage can't go in vain.]

तथैवाकरवं राम त्वद्धानैकपरायणा ।
 प्रतीक्ष्यागमनं तेऽद्य सफलं गुरुभाषितम् ॥ १६॥
 तव सन्दर्शनं राम गुरुणामपि मे न हि । योषिन्मूढाऽप्रमेयात्मन् हीनजातिसमुद्भवा ॥ १७॥ tathaivākaravaṃ rāma tvaddhyānaikaparāyaṇā । pratikṣyāgamaṃ te'dya saphalaṃ gurubhāṣitam ॥ 16॥ tava sandarśanaṃ rāma gurūṇāmapi me na hi । yoṣinmūḍhā'prameyātman hīnajāṭisamudbhavā ॥ 17॥

16-17. Oh Lord Ram! According to his instructions, I had been meditating exclusively on you, thinking only of you, and was eagerly awaiting your arrival. Today those words of my Guru have become truthful and have borne fruit (16).

Oh Lord Ram! Even my Guru was not fortunate to have your Darshan (divine sight); but, oh the Supreme Soul that is eternal, universal, infinite and sublime, I am an ignorant, illiterate, ordinary and humble woman born in a low caste (so, I could never ever expect it in my wildest of dreams that I will ever get a chance to meet your holiness)!

[To wit, it's such a great wonder of providence and a wondrous marvel of fate that on the one hand such an exalted sage, sage Matang, could not have the good luck to meet you and get blessed by you during his entire life, and on the other hand a poor and lowly woman like me has had this rarest of rare good fortune that I not only could have your divine sight and an opportunity to have your company by way of hosting you, washing your holy feet, serving you sweet fruits, worshipping you, but also the opportunity to find my deliverance at your holy hands, in your holy presence. I don't know what good deed I did that has borne this fruit for me! I am dazed and amazed.] (17).

तव दासस्य दासानां शतसङ्ख्योत्तरस्य वा ।
 दासीत्वे नाधिकारोऽस्ति कुतः साक्षात्तवैव हि ॥ १८॥
 कथं यमाद्य मे दृष्टस्त्वं मनोवागबोचरः । स्तोतुं न जाने देवेश किं करोमि प्रसीद मे ॥ १९॥ tava dāsasya dāsānāṃ śatasankhyottarasya vā । dāsīṭve nādhikāro'sti kutaḥ sāksāttavaiva hi ॥ 18॥ kathaṃ rāmādyā me dr̥ṣṭastvaṃ manovāgagocaraḥ । stotuṃ na jāne deveśa kiṃ karomi prasīda me ॥ 19॥

18-19. I am not worthy even to be called a maid servant of those who are themselves servants far down for a hundred rungs in the hierarchy of servants who directly serve your devotees. Then say, what face do I have to call myself your 'direct or first rung servant', one who serves you directly, one who is your close devotee, your close follower, your near subordinate? [To wit, I am so lowly and humble and unworthy that I cannot claim the privilege of being called your devotee, yet you are so gracious and kind that you have mercifully granted me this stature of being your devotee. How graceful of you!] (18).

Oh Lord Ram! You are not the subject matter of the mind; the mind cannot understand you by application of intelligence, nor can you be understood by using the faculty of speech (i.e. no one can explain who you actually are). This being the case, I just don't know how have I been so lucky and privileged to be able to have your divine sight, and am able to see your holy form so up close. Oh the Lord of the Gods! I do not know how to pray you and sing your glories. What shall I do now? Please be pleased with me out of your own accord (because I am totally incompetent to pray to you or honour you by sing hymns of your glory)' (19).

[Note— Sabari expresses her humility and astonishment. In verse no. 18 she means that she is so lowly by birth that she can't imagine that she would be able to properly serve pious and saintly souls who are devotees of the Lord. In verse no. 19 she expresses surprise at her good fortune and the rare privilege that she has got; she is extremely astonished at the most unexpected reward that she has been granted, a reward that is beyond her wildest of dreams. She is so dumb-founded and stunned that she is lost for words, and so she says she can't even offer even a simple prayer to welcome and honour the Lord.]

[The simplicity and humility of Sabari on the one hand, and the unbound affection and the purity of devotion that she had for the Lord on the other hand, pleased Lord Ram exceedingly. So he blessed her as follows:-]

श्रीराम उवाच

पुंस्त्वे स्त्रीत्वे विशेषो वा जातिनामाश्रमादयः ।
न कारणं मद्भजने भक्तिरेव हि कारणम् ॥ २०॥
यज्ञदानतपोभिर्वा वेदाध्ययनकर्मभिः । नैव द्रष्टुमहं शक्यो मद्भक्तिविमुखैः सदा ॥ २१॥

śrīrāma uvāca

pum̐stve strī̐tve viśeṣo vā jātināmāśramādayaḥ । na kāraṇaṃ madbhajane bhaktireva hi kāraṇam ॥ 20॥ yajñādānatapobhīrvā vedādhyayanakarmabhiḥ । naiva draṣṭumaham śakyo madbhaktivimukhaiḥ sadā ॥ 21॥

20-22. (Lord Ram replied—) 'Distinction between a male and female body, or distinction made on the basis of caste, creed, clan, name and section of society, are not conducive for my worship (i.e. they are not the essential elements or a necessity for my worship or devotion; rather they are obstructions as they block one's spiritual progress). The only factor that pleases me and necessary for attaining spiritual peace is to have true devotion for me and to have sincere faith in me. (20).

Those who are devoid of dedication and lack sincerity in having devotion for me as well as while worshipping me, can never expect to attain me by any other means such as by doing fire sacrifices, making charities, performing penances and austerities, or by studying the Vedas (ancient scriptures) in an effort to become acquainted with me and my holy, divine form (21).

इतो मद्दर्शनान्मुक्तिस्तव नास्त्यत् संशयः ।
यदि जानासि मे ब्रूहि सीता कमललोचना ॥ ३२॥
कुत्रास्ते केन वा नीता प्रिया मे प्रियदर्शना ॥ ३३॥ ito maddarśanānmuktistava nāstyatra saṃśayaḥ । yadi jānāsi me brūhi sītā kamalalocanā ॥ 32॥ kutrāste kena vā nītā priyā me priyadarśanā ॥ 33॥

32-33. Now that you have had my Darshan (i.e. you have seen my holy and my divine form), your emancipation and salvation are indeed a certainty—there is no doubt about it. Meanwhile, if you know then please do tell me about the whereabouts of the lotus-eyed Sita (32). Who has taken away my beloved wife who is so charming to behold (can you tell me)?' (33).

शबर्युवाच

देव जानासि सर्वज्ञ सर्व त्वं विश्वभावन ।
 तथाऽपि पृच्छसे यन्मां लोकाननुसृतः प्रभो ॥ ३४॥
 ततोऽहमभिधास्यामि सीता यत्राधुना स्थिता । रावणेन हता सीता लङ्कायां वर्ततेऽधुना ॥ ३५॥

śabaryuvāca

deva jānāsi sarvajña sarvaṃ tvaṃ viśvabhāvana । tathā'pi pṛcchase yanmāṃ lokānanusṛtaḥ prabho ॥ 34॥ tato'hamabhidhāsyāmi sītā yatrādhunā sthitā । rāvaṇena hṛtā sītā laṅkāyāṃ vartate'dhunā ॥ 35॥

34-35. (Sabari said—) 'Oh Lord who is all-knowing, wise, erudite and omniscient! Oh the one who charms the universe, one who enchants and keeps in his thrall the entire world! You are aware of everything. In spite of that, oh Lord, if you wish to follow the traditional behaviour of an ordinary human and therefore ask me about the whereabouts of Sita (34), then I shall tell you. Sita has been stolen by Ravana, and at this time she is in Lanka (as his prisoner) (35).

इतः समीपे रामाऽऽस्ते पम्पानाम सरोवरम् ।
 ऋष्यमूकगिरिर्नाम तत्समीपे महानगः ॥ ३६॥
 चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः सार्धं सुग्रीवो वानराधिपः ।
 भीतभीतः सदा यत्र तिष्ठत्यतुलविक्रमः ॥ ३७॥
 वालिनश्च भयाद् भ्रूतुस्तदगम्यमृषेर्भयात् ।
 वालिनस्तत्र गच्छ त्वं तेन सख्यं कुरु प्रभो ॥ ३८॥
 सुग्रीवेण स सर्वं ते कार्यं सम्पादयिष्यति । अहमग्निं प्रवेक्ष्यामि तवाग्रे रघुनन्दन ॥ ३९॥ itaḥ samīpe rāmā"ste pampānāma sarovaram । ṛṣyamūkagirirnāma tatsamīpe mahānagaḥ ॥ 36॥ caturbhirmantribhiḥ sārddhaṃ sugrīvo vānarādhipaḥ । bhītabhītaḥ sadā yatra tiṣṭhatyatulavikramaḥ ॥ 37॥

vālinaśca bhayād bhrātustadagamyamṛṣerbhayāt । vālinastatra gaccha tvam tena sakhyam kuru prabho ॥ 38॥ sugrīveṇa sa sarvam te kāryam sampādayiṣyati । ahamagniṃ pravekṣyāmi tavāgre raghunandana ॥ 39॥

36-39. Oh Lord Ram! There is a lake called Pampa near here. Near it is a large mountain called Rishyamook (36). There, Sugriv, the king of monkeys who is peerless in valour and famed in strength, lives with his four ministers (37) due to the fear of his brother Baali. Because of a curse by a sage, that place is totally out of bounds for Baali. Oh Lord! Go there and befriend yourself with Sugriv (38). Oh Raghunandan (Lord Ram)! Sugriv will fulfil all your requirements (i.e. he will help you first find Sita and then free her from the demon's captivity). Now, I shall enter the sacred fire in front of you (in order to burn my mortal body and let my soul attain deliverance) (39).

मुहूर्तं तिष्ठ राजेन्द्र यावदग्ध्वा कलेवरम् ।
यास्यामि भगवन् राम तव विष्णोः परं पदम् ॥ ४०॥
इति रामं समामन्त्र्य प्रविवेश हुताशनम् ।
क्षणान्निर्धूय सकलमविद्याकृतबन्धनम् ।
रामप्रासादाच्छबरीं मोक्षं प्रापातिदुर्लभम् ॥ ४१॥

muhūrtaṃ tiṣṭha rājendra yāvaddagdhvā kalevaram । yāsyāmi bhagavan rāma tava viṣṇoḥ paraṃ padam ॥ 40॥ iti rāmaṃ samāmantrya praviveśa hutāśanam । kṣaṇānnirdhūya sakalamavidyākṛtabandhanam । rāmaprasādācchabarī mokṣaṃ prāpātidurlabham ॥ 41॥

40-41. Oh Rajendra (literally, a King amongst the kings)! Oh Lord Ram! Till the time I burn my mortal coil (my physical gross body) and go to the abode of Lord Vishnu, you must wait here for one Muhurt till then. [To wit, please wait here for some time while I make preparations to leave my gross body and free my soul from its captivity. Wait for about a quarter of an hour, or 1 Muhurt, which is roughly equivalent to 48 minutes.] (40).

After requesting Lord Ram in the above manner, Sabari entered the holy fire, and in a fleeting moment she burnt all her fetters symbolised by worldly delusions and her gross mortal body, thereby freeing her soul which attained deliverance and emancipation by the grace of Lord Ram (41).

Sub-section 6.2.3: Lord Ram meets Sugriv and Hanuman, and befriends them.

After his meeting with Sabari and providing her soul deliverance, Lord Ram followed her advice and moved ahead on his way to reach the other side of Lake Pampa where he came to the base of a mighty mountain called Rishyamook. Here he met Hanuman and Sugriv, and befriended them. They were great warriors of the kingdom of the monkey race, known as Kishkindha, and were living in exile on the summit of this mountain with some other companions, because Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv and the king of Kishkindha, had thrown him out of the capital due to some misunderstanding between the two brothers.

This episode is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 1-45 as follows:-

॥ अध्यात्मरामायणे किष्किन्धाकाण्डम् ॥

॥ प्रथमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

ततः सलक्ष्मणो रामः शनैः पम्पासरस्तटम् ।

आगत्य सरसां श्रेष्ठां दृष्ट्वा विस्मयमाचरौ ॥ १॥

क्रोशमात्रं सुविस्तीर्णमगाधामलशम्बरम् ।

उत्फुल्लाम्बुजकल्हारकुमुदोत्पलमण्डितम् ॥ २॥

॥ adhyātmārāmāyaṇe kiṣkindhākāṇḍam ॥

॥ prathamah sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

tataḥ salakṣmaṇo rāmaḥ śanaiḥ pampāsarastaṭam ।

āgatya sarasāṃ śreṣṭhāṃ dṛṣṭvā vismayamāyayau ॥ 1॥ crośamātraṃ suvistīrṇamagādhāmalaśambaram । utphullāmbujakalhāarakumudotpalamaṇḍitam ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Thence Lord Ram, accompanied by Laxman, gradually came to the banks of the lake called Pampa. He was very astonished when he saw it; its beauty amazed him (1).

It was one Kosa (appx. 2 miles) in length, was filled with crystal clear water that could not be fathomed, and lotus flowers of various kinds, large and small such as Kalahaar and Utpal, some fully blooming and others still as buds, as well as fully grown water lilies and their newly sprouted buds, adorned the lake in their colourful abundance (2).

हंसकारण्डवाकीर्णं चक्रवाकादिशोभितम् ।

जलकुवकुटकोयष्टिक्रौञ्चनादोपनादितम् ॥ ३॥

नानापुष्पलताकीर्णं नानाफलसमावृतम् ।

सतां मनःस्वच्छजलं पद्मकिञ्जल्कवासितम् ॥ ४॥ haṃsakāraṇḍavākīrṇaṃ cakravākādīśobhitam ।

jalakukkuṭakoyaṣṭikrauñcanādopanāditam ॥ 3॥

nānāpuṣpalatākīrṇaṃ nānāphalasaṃāvṛtam ।

satām manahsvacchajalam padmakiñjalkavāsitam ॥ 4॥

3-4. Birds such as Hans (swan) and Kaarandav (a flamingo; a duck) were floating on its placid waters; Chakravaks (the ruddy goose) etc. were enhancing its beauty; while the environment around the lake was echoing with the clamour of sounds made by Jalkukut (a type of cock-like bird with a black body and blue feathers that lives on the surface of water bodies), Koyasti (a type of Indian cuckoo), Kronch (the heron bird) etc. (3).

The area surrounding the lake was well endowed with a fascinating array of colourful flowering creepers as well as fruit trees of different types, while its crystal clear water, which was made fragrant and sweet-smelling by yellow lotus flowers that abounded in it, was as clean and clear as the mind of saints and pious souls (4).

तत्रोपस्पृश्य सलिलं पीत्वा श्रमहरं विभुः ।
सानुजः सरसस्तीरे शीतलेन पथा ययौ ॥ ५॥
ऋष्यमूकगिरेः पार्श्वे गच्छन्तौ रामलक्ष्मणौ ।
धनुर्बाणकरौ दान्तौ जटावल्कलमण्डितौ ।
पश्यन्तौ विविधान् वृक्षान् गिरेः शोभां सुविक्रमौ ॥ ६॥ tatropaspr̥śya salilam pītvā śramaharam vibhuḥ । sānujaḥ sarasastīre śītalena pathā yayau ॥ 5॥ ṛṣyamūkagireḥ pārsve gacchantau rāmalakṣmaṇau । dhanurbāṇakarau dāntau jaṭāvalkalamañḍitau । paśyantau vividhān vṛkṣān gireḥ śobhāṃ suvikramau ॥ 6॥

5-6. Reaching the place, the ‘Vibhu’ (i.e. the Lord who is omnipresent, immanent, magnanimous, eternal and almighty; Lord Ram), along with his younger brother (Laxman), sipped and drank its water which was very refreshing, and which removed his weariness. [To wit, the two brothers refreshed themselves by rinsing their mouths, sprinkling water on their tired bodies, and drinking the water of Pampa lake that was clean, sweet and cool.]

Then, having refreshed himself, the Lord moved on along the banks of the lake on a path that was cooled by the shade of the trees lining it (5).

In this manner Lord Ram and Laxman—who were adorned by matted hairs and clothes made of birch, who practiced self-restrain (i.e. they had full control over their sense organs), were most valiant, brave and powerful, and who held a bow and arrow each in their hands—moved slowly to come near the Rishyamook mountain, all the while watching with fascination and enjoying the beautiful sight of different types of trees found on the way, and beholding the beauty of the mountain that loomed in the front (6).

सुग्रीवस्तु गिरेर्मूर्ध्नि चतुर्भिः सह वानरैः ।
स्थित्वा ददर्श तौ यान्तावारुरोह गिरेः शिरः ॥ ७॥
भयादाह हनूमन्तं कौ तौ वीरवर्यौ सखे ।

गच्छ जानीहि भद्रं ते वटुभूत्वा द्विजाकृतिः ॥ ८॥ sugrīvastu girermūrdhni caturbhiḥ saha vānaraiḥ । sthitvā dadarśa tau yāntāvāruroha gireḥ śiraḥ ॥ 7॥ bhayādāha hanūmantam kau tau vīravarau sakhe । gaccha jānihi bhadram te vaṭurbhūtvā dvijākṛtiḥ ॥ 8॥

7-8. At that time, Sugriv (the prince of the kingdom of Kishkindha, the realm of the monkey race, who had been living in exile on Mt. Rishyamook) was sitting with his four ministers on the summit of a mountain. When he saw the two brothers coming that way, he climbed to the highest peak of the mountain. [It shows that Rishyamook was not a single cone-shaped mountain, but it was a series of undulating hills and mountains with low and high peaks.] (7).

Scared at the sight, he said to Hanuman, 'Oh friend! Look; who are these two braves! You be blessed! You go to them dressed (or disguised) as a Brahmachari Brahmin (a young celibate Brahmin; a student Brahmin) and find out the details about them (8).

वालिना प्रेषितौ किंवा मां हन्तुं समुपागतौ ।
ताभ्यां सम्भाषणं कृत्वा जानीहि हृदयं तयोः ॥ ९॥
यदि तौ दुष्टहृदयौ सञ्ज्ञां कुरु कराग्रतः । विनयावनतो भूत्वा एवं जानीहि निश्चयम् ॥ १०॥ vālinā preṣitau kiṃvā māṃ hantum samupāgatau । tābhyāṃ sambhāṣaṇam kṛtvā jānihi hṛdayam tayoh ॥ 9॥ yadi tau duṣṭahrdayau sanjñāṃ kuru karāgrataḥ । vinayāvanato bhūtvā evaṃ jānihi niścayam ॥ 10॥

9-10. Is it that they have come here to kill me at the behest of Vaali¹? You talk with them and find out the reason for their coming here (9). If you find they are wicked, have malicious intentions and a malefic heart, you must indicate it to me by making signs with your fingers. Be careful; find out all about this in a very polite way (so as not to give them a hint about your own identity and why you are asking them questions). [To wit, use all your skills to determine who these two warriors are and why have they come here. Don't do anything to make them suspicious of you, and don't offend them. Be careful, as you will be alone down there, facing two armed warriors.] (10).

[Note—¹“Vaali” was the name of Sugriv's elder brother. In Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, which we are currently reading, this word is spelled as “Vaali”, but in Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas it is spelled as “Baali”.

Why was Sugriv so scared of Vaali (or Baali), and why would Vaali send someone to kill his younger brother? Though it is not the subject matter of our book, but a brief note would not be out of place to outline this fascinating story of love between the two siblings that turned into hate. It is as follows:

We read in the story of the Ramayana that Sugriv and Vaali were two brothers, Vaali being the elder of the two siblings. They were the rulers of the monkey race and had their capital at Kishkindha. Once, a demon named Dundhubhi came to challenge Vaali for a duel. Vaali killed him and flung his dead body on the mountain called Rishyamook. Blood of the demon sprayed in all the directions, and this blood defiled a hermitage of a sage who lived on this mountain. So he cursed that if Vaali ever came in that place he would die. It was out of this fear that Vaali never came near Mt. Rishyamook.

Earlier, the two brothers had very cordial relations. Once a demon named Maayaawi, the son of Maye, came to Kishkindha and challenged Vaali. When Vaali rushed towards him, the demon fled and hid inside a cave. Vaali pursued him inside, but while entering the cave he told his younger brother Surgriv to guard the mouth of the cave and wait for him for at least a fortnight. Sugriv waited for one full month, but Vaali did not come back. At the end of this period blood started seeping out of the mouth of the cave. Thinking that the demon has killed his brother and would come out to kill him also, Sugriv covered the mouth of the cave with a huge boulder and fled from there. When he returned to Kishkindha, the courtiers had no choice but to anoint him as the king in place of his brother whom they all thought was killed by the demon.

Meanwhile it so happened that the blood that had seeped out of the cave's mouth was that of the demon who was killed by Vaali. When Vaali came out, he did not find Sugriv, and to make matters worse he found the mouth of the cave closed by a heavy boulder. When he came back to Kishkindha he found Sugriv on the throne. Naturally of course he went mad with anger, and beat his brother mercilessly. Sugriv, though not at all at fault, tried his best to explain the situation to Vaali, but the seed of misunderstanding and animosity was already sown, and seeing no way out, Sugriv fled with his life. Vaali usurped the kingdom and the wife of Sugriv forcibly. Sugriv was so terrified of Vaali who was baying for his blood that he escaped to the summit of a mountain called Rishyamook along with his trusted aides, and lived a forlorn and sorrowful life in hiding, because he knew that Vaali would never come to harm him here because of the sage's earlier curse.

The story goes that on some previous occasion Vaali had collected seven fruits of the coconut tree and kept them on the ground to take bath in the lake known as Pampaa. When he returned he found that a huge python was sitting on these seven fruits. This was tantamount to defiling the fruits and so Vaali cursed the serpent that the seven fruits would pierce his body and grow into tall trees. When the mother of the serpent came to know of this curse, she also cursed Vaali that anyone who would cut these seven coconut trees with a single arrow would be the one who would also kill him.

When Lord Ram was wandering in the forest in search of Sita, his wife who was abducted by Ravana, the demon king of Lanka, he passed that way. By-and-by, the Lord and Sugriv struck a bond of friendship, and the Lord promised him to restore his lost dignity and right to the kingdom of Kishkindha, the monkey kingdom, from which he was disinherited. In return, Sugriv promised the Lord that he would do all he can to help the Lord find Sita and recover her, even if that meant a war with Sita's abductor.

Sugriv knew about the secret of the seven coconut trees. As he wished to be sure that Lord Ram was indeed capable to restore him to the throne of Kishkindha by eliminating Vaali, and that the things wouldn't go out of hands and make life further tormenting for him, Sugriv asked the Lord to fell these seven tall coconut trees with a single arrow. So when Lord Sri Ram felled the seven trees with an arrow, Sugriv knew that the Lord would indeed be able to kill his arch enemy Vaali.

With Lord Sri Ram's patronage and support, Sugriv went and challenged his elder brother Vaali for a duel. Vaali was absolutely stunned, as he had never expected Sugriv to ever have enough courage and strength to challenge him like this. His wife Taaraa also tried to dissuade him by pointing out that Sugriv has the support of Lord Sri Ram who is the Supreme Being incarnate, but Vaali was wiser because he decided that either way he was the winner. If he managed to eliminate Sugriv then he would get rid of this constant nuisance of a brother, and if he gets killed at the hands of Lord Sri Ram then also he will be lucky as his emancipation and salvation was absolutely sure. Where, he thought to himself, will he get such an opportunity again in life. In the first bout, Sugriv got bruised and beaten badly. He limped back to Sri Ram and complained bitterly. The Lord replied that he did not shoot Vaali because the two brothers looked exactly alike and he could not distinguish between them. There was a hidden message in this statement—the Lord wished to convey to Sugriv that for him all the creatures are alike. But at the same time he had to keep the words he had given to Sugriv that he would eliminate his enemy Vaali. So the Lord put a garland around his neck, purportedly to identify him but actually to finally warn Vaali that the victory of Sugriv is decided, and if he wants to save himself then he must make a truce. This time around too, Vaali beat Sugriv black and blue. The Lord was watching the proceedings from behind a tree. When the situation became worst and Sugriv was about to be knocked down, the Lord shot an arrow that hit Vaali and he fell down.

It is said that Lord Sri Ram had to shoot Vaali from hiding because the latter had a boon which said that half of the enemy's strength would pass on to Vaali if the enemy is within his sight. Nevertheless, Vaali felt privileged that the Lord of the world has himself killed him and given his soul the chance of finding liberation and deliverance from the fetters of the gross body of a monkey. At the time of death, Vaali put his son Angad in the Lord's custody. This showed that Vaali was extremely prudent and wise. By entrusting the conqueror Ram with the safety and security of his son Angad he ensured that Angad would be safe from any kind of evil design of his uncle Sugriv who would now never try to kill him overtly or covertly.

Besides this thing of the Lord giving Sugriv his word to kill his enemy and undo the grave injustice done to him and restore his dignity and right to the kingdom, there was another very important reason why Vaali had to be eliminated. On some previous occasion a reciprocal military pact was made between Vaali and Ravana that essentially said that they would not allow their respective territories to be used to launch an attack on the other, and also that they would come to each others aid should either of them is called to do so. The story is that once Vaali had put Ravana under his armpit for many days while the latter had gone to challenge the former when he was doing some worship. Peeved by Ravana's arrogance and impertinence, Vaali had tucked him under his arms to stop him from annoying him any further. When his worship was finished and he had returned back to his capital at Kishkindha, he realised that Ravana was still squeezed under his armpit. So he released the latter and made a pact of friendship with him. This story is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Saar Kanda (Chapter 1), Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 96-101.

Since Lord Sri Ram needed to cross the territory of Kishkindha and also take the help of the army of this place to launch an assault on Lanka it was militarily wise and prudent to eliminate the foe in the backyard.

But the Lord knew the constraints under which he had to eliminate Vaali though the latter had not offended the Lord in any manner whatsoever. The Lord was well aware of his responsibilities towards Angad and he wished to rectify this apparent biased action of his of killing Vaali at the behest of Sugriv—so he ensured that the final right to the kingdom of Kishkindha went to the heir of Vaali, instead of the heir of Sugriv, by appointing Angad as the heir-apparent or the prince regent, and declaring that though Sugriv was made the king of Kishkindha upon Vaali's death it was Angad who would succeed to the throne after Sugriv instead of any direct descendent of Sugriv such as his own son.

The full story of Vaali and Sugriv is narrated in detail in (i) sage Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttarkand, Canto 3; (ii) Anand Ramayan, Saar Kand (Chapter), Sarga (Canto) 13, verse no. 140-152; and (iii) Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 11.]

तथेति वटुरूपेण हनुमान् समुपागतः ।
 विनयावनतो भूत्वा रामं नत्वेदमब्रवीत् ॥ ११॥ कौ युवां पुरुषव्याघ्रौ युवानौ वीरसम्मताौ । द्योतयन्तौ दिशः सर्वाः प्रभया भास्करविव ॥ १२॥ tatheti vaṭurūpeṇa hanumān samupāgataḥ । vinayāvanato bhūtva rāmaṃ natvedamabravīt ॥ 11॥ kau yuvāṃ puruṣavyāghrau yuvānau vīrasammatau । dyotayantau diśaḥ sarvāḥ prabhayā bhāskarāviva ॥ 12॥

11-12. Then Hanuman disguised himself as a Brahmachari and came to meet Lord Ram, bowed before him, and said most politely (11)—'Oh the one who is like a lion amongst men! Who are you two? You are young with a youthful body, and you look very brave, courageous and strong. You look so radiant and glorious that you resemble the sun that illuminates all the directions of the compass with its brilliance (12).

[Note—As we observe here and in the verses that follow herein below, Hanuman was extremely polite and courteous while meeting Lord Ram and Laxman. He was all praises for the Lord. What could have been the reason?

For one, he was actually overwhelmed by the Lord's holy presence. For another, he decided to take all precautions by first speaking in the language of the two brothers instead of in his own dialect, and secondly to be highly polite and heap praises on the strangers to avoid any risk of either making them suspicious of his intentions by his unsolicited offer of acquaintance and enquiry about their identity in a wild and alien land.]

युवां त्रैलोक्यकर्तारविति भाति मनो मम ।
 युवां प्रधानपुरुषौ जगद्धेतू जगन्मयौ ॥ १३॥
 मायया मानुषाकारौ चरन्ताविव लीलया । भूभारहरणार्थाय भक्तानां पालनाय च ॥ १४॥ yuvāṃ trailokyakartārāviti bhāti mano mama । yuvāṃ pradhānapuruṣau jagaddhetū jaganmayau ॥ 13॥ māyayā mānuṣākārau carantāviva līlayā । bhūbhāraharaṇārthāya bhaktānāṃ pālanāya ca ॥ 14॥

13-14. My heart and mind says, and I have a hunch that you are the creator of the Triloki (the 3 worlds—the heaven, the earth and the nether world), are the primary cause of the whole world (i.e. it is you who had caused this universe to come into existence), are all-pervading and immanent in this world (in the form of the universal Atma, the universal pure Consciousness), are a personified form of the Viraat Purush (the cosmic Male; the Father of this creation; Lord Vishnu) (13).

It appears that in order to remove the burden of the earth and to protect and sustain your devotees, you have playfully assumed a human form by virtue of your Maya (delusion creating powers)¹, and are roaming around like an ordinary man (14).

[Note—¹The Supreme Lord of this creation had used his delusion-creating powers to hide his true identity so that the people of the world would think that he was an ordinary human being like all others. This smoke-screen was necessary in order to eliminate the cruel demons led by Ravana, because the latter had voluntarily exempted humans when he sought a boon of invincibility from Brahma, the first of the Trinity Gods, as he thought that if the Gods, who are mighty and immortal, would not be able to kill or harm him, then what is there to worry about from a human being who could easily be overcome and crushed as they would be no match for Ravana in strength or any other matter.

Hence, Lord Vishnu had to assume this particular form, i.e. the form of a ‘human being’ as the prince of Ayodhya known as Lord Ram, to exploit this single loop-hole in the otherwise solid armour of Ravana’s defence in order to slay this villainous demon king.]

अवतीर्णाविह परौ चरन्तौ क्षत्रियाकृती ।
 जगत्स्थितिलयौ सर्गं लीलया कर्तुमुद्यताौ ॥ १५॥
 स्वतन्त्रौ प्रेरकौ सर्वहृदयस्थाविहेश्वरौ । नरनारायणौ लोके चरन्ताविति मे मतिः ॥ १६॥ avatīrṇāviha parau carantau kṣatriyākṛtī । jagatsthithilayau sargaṃ līlayā kartumudyatau ॥ 15॥ svatantrau prerakau sarvahr̥dayasthāviheśvarau । naranārāyaṇau loke carantāviti me matiḥ ॥ 16॥

15-16. You are verily the Supreme Lord himself, for it is truly him who has revealed himself in the form of a Kshatriya prince known as “Lord Sri Ram”, and wandering on this earth like an ordinary human. You are the Lord who actively and diligently create and sustain this entire universe, and finally bring about its end, as if it was a mere game or a sport for you (15).

As per my wisdom and understanding, it looks that you reside in the heart (the inner-self) of all living beings as their true ‘self’ (i.e. as their Atma, the pure conscious soul); you are the one who motivates and inspires all; you are absolutely independent and do not need any help or support to carry out your wishes. Oh Lord!

Indeed I am sure that you are the same Supreme Being who is roaming here in this wild forest' (16).

श्रीरामो लक्ष्मणं प्राह पश्यैनं वटुरुपिणम् ।
शब्दशास्त्रमशेषेण श्रुतं नूनमनेकधा ॥ १७॥
अनेन भाषितं कृत्स्नं न किञ्चिदपशब्दितम् । ततः प्राह हनूमन्तं राघवो ज्ञानविग्रहः ॥ १८॥

śrīrāmo lakṣmaṇaṃ prāha paśyainaṃ vaṭurūpiṇam । śabdaśāstramaśeṣeṇa śrutaṃ nūnamanekadhā ॥ 17॥ anena bhāṣitaṃ kṛtsnaṃ na kiñcidapaśabditam । tataḥ prāha hanūmantam rāghavo jñānavigrahaḥ ॥ 18॥

17-18. Hearing these well-spoken words of Hanuman, Lord Ram confided to Laxman, 'Oh Laxman! Look at this individual who is standing in front of us attired as a Brahmachari. Surely he has studied the science of language (i.e. grammar) thoroughly and diligently (17). Listen! He has said so many things, but there has been no error in his speech or use of words. His language is perfect and he is very cultured in his mannerism. [So obviously he has had an excellent education.]'

Then Raghav (Lord Ram), who is an embodiment of knowledge and wisdom, turned to answer Hanuman and said (18)—

अहं दाशरथी रामस्त्वयं मे लक्ष्मणोऽनुजः ।
सीतया भार्यया सार्धं पितुर्वचनगौरवात् ॥ १९॥
आगतस्तत्र विपिने स्थितोऽहं दण्डके द्विज ।
तत्र भार्या हता सीता रक्षसा केनचिन्मम ।
तामन्वेष्टुमिहायातौ त्वं को वा कस्य वा वद ॥ २०॥ ahaṃ dāśarathī rāmastvayaṃ me lakṣmaṇo'nujaḥ । sītayā bhāryayā sārddham piturvacanagauravāt ॥ 19॥ āgatastatra vipine sthito'haṃ daṇḍake dvija । tatra bhāryā hrtā sītā rakṣasā kenacinmama । tāmanveṣṭumihāyātau tvam ko vā kasya vā vada ॥ 20॥

19-20. 'I am the son of king Dasrath, and this is my younger brother Laxman. I have come to the forest, along with my wife Sita, to obey the words of my father (19).

I used to stay in the Dandkaranya forest. There, some demon has stolen my wife Sita. We have come here to search for her. Pray be kind to tell us, who you are and whose son are you?' (20).

वटुरुवाच ।
सुग्रीवो नाम राजा यो वानराणां महामतिः ।
चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः सार्धं निरिमूर्धनि तिष्ठति ॥ २१॥

भ्राता कनियान् सुग्रीवो वालिनः पापचेतसः । तेन निष्कासितो भार्या हता तस्येह वालिना ॥ २२॥ vaṭuruvāca ।

sugrīvo nāma rājā yo vānarāṇām mahāmatih । caturbhirmantribhiḥ sārddham girimūrdhani tiṣṭhati ॥ 21॥ bhrātā kaniyān sugrīvo vāliṇaḥ pāpacetasah । tena niṣkāsito bhāryā hṛtā tasyeha vālinā ॥ 22॥

21-22. The Brahmachari (vaṭuka) said, 'Oh Lord! Sugriv is the king of the monkey race; he is wise and great. He stays on the summit of this mountain with his four ministers (21).

He is the younger brother of Vaali, who is sinful, wicked, evil and pervert in his mind and heart. He (Vaali) has forcefully taken away Sugriv's wife, and has thrown him out of the house (22).

तद्भयादृष्यमूकारख्यं गिरिमाश्रित्य संस्थितः ।
अहं सुग्रीवसचिवो वायुपुत्रो महामते ॥ २३॥
हनुमान्नाम विख्यातो ह्यञ्जनीगर्भसम्भवः ।
तेन सख्यं त्वया युक्तं सुग्रीवेण रघूत्तम ॥ २४॥
भार्यापहारिणं हन्तुं सहायस्ते भविष्यति । इदानीमेव गच्छाम आगच्छ यदि रोचते ॥ २५॥

tadbhayādṛṣyamūkākhyam girimāśritya samsthitaḥ । aham sugrīvasacivo vāyuputro mahāmate ॥ 23॥ hanumānnāma vikhyāto hyañjanīgarbhasambhavaḥ । tena sakhyam tvayā yuktaṁ sugrīveṇa raghūttama ॥ 24॥ bhāryāpahāriṇam hantum sahayaste bhaviṣyati । idānīmeva gacchāma āgaccha yadi rocate ॥ 25॥

23-25. Hence, out of his fear, Sugriv stays on this Rishyamook mountain. Oh the great and wise one (Lord Ram)! I am a minister of Sugriv, and am the son of the Wind-God (23).

I have taken birth from the womb of mother Anjani, and am known in the world by the name of Hanuman. Oh the most exalted Raghu (Lord Ram)! You should make friends with Sugriv (24).

He will be of help to you to kill the one who has stolen your wife. Come, if you wish, we shall go to him' (25).

श्रीराम उवाच ।

अहमप्यागतस्तेन सख्यं कर्तुं कपीश्वर ।
सख्युस्तस्यापि यत्कार्यं तत्करिष्याम्यसंशयम् ॥ २६॥

हनुमान् स्वस्वरूपेण स्थितो राममथाब्रवीत् ।
 आरोहतां मम स्कन्धौ गच्छामः पर्वतोपरि ॥ २७॥
 यत् तिष्ठति सुग्रीवो मन्त्रिभिर्वालिनो भयात् । तथेति तस्यारुरोह स्कन्धं रामोऽथ लक्ष्मणः ॥ २८॥

śrīrāma uvāca ।

ahamapyāgatastena sakhyaṃ kartuṃ kapīśvara । sakhyustasyāpi yatkāryaṃ tatkarīṣyāmyasaṃśayam ॥ 26॥ hanumān svasvarūpeṇa sthito rāmamathābravīt । ārohatāṃ mama skandhau gacchāmaḥ parvatopari ॥ 27॥ yatra tiṣṭhati sugrīvo mantribhirvālino bhayāt । tatheti tasyāruroha skandhaṃ rāmo'tha lakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 28॥

26-28. Lord Ram replied, 'Oh the Lord of Monkeys! I too have come to befriend him (Sugriv)¹. I will also try to do any work of that friend if there is any I can do. There is no doubt about it' (26).

Hearing this, Hanuman shed his disguised form and presented himself in his true form, and said to Lord Ram, 'Both of you sit on my shoulders. Then we shall go up the mountain (27) where Sugriv, along with his ministers, keeps hiding out of fear of Vaali'. Saying 'alright', Lord Ram and Laxman mounted on the shoulders of Hanuman, one on each side (28).

[Note—¹We have already read that Sabari had advised Lord Ram to come to Rishyamook mountain where he would find Sugriv. The Lord should make him a friend as he would help the Lord to find Sita and free her from her abductor. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranaya Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 34-39.]

उत्पपात गिरेर्मूर्ध्नि क्षणादेव महाकपिः ।
 वृक्षच्छायां समाश्रित्य स्थितौ तौ रामलक्ष्मणौ ॥ २९॥
 हनुमानपि सुग्रीवमुपगम्य कृताञ्जलिः ।
 व्येतु ते भयमायातौ राजन् श्रीरामलक्ष्मणौ ॥ ३०॥
 शीघ्रमुत्तिष्ठ रामेण सख्यं ते योजितं मया ।
 अग्निं साक्षिणमारोप्य तेन सख्यं द्रुतं कुरु ॥ ३१॥ utpapāta girermūrdhni kṣaṇādeva mahākapiḥ । vṛkṣacchāyāṃ samāśritya sthitau tau rāmalakṣmaṇau ॥ 29॥ hanumānapi sugrīvamupagamya kṛtāñjaliḥ । vyetu te bhayamāyātau rājan śrīrāmalakṣmaṇau ॥ 30॥ śīghramuttiṣṭha rāmeṇa sakhyaṃ te yojitaṃ mayā । agniṃ sākṣiṇamāropya tena sakhyaṃ drutaṃ kuru ॥ 31॥

29-31. The great Lord of monkeys jumped (i.e. made a great leap) to reach the summit of the mountain so quickly as if in a flash. There, Lord Ram and Laxman stood under the shade of a tree (waiting for Hanuman to go and brief Sugriv, and then bring him to introduce the two brothers to him) (29).

Hanuman went to Sugriv to report, apprised him of the developments, and said to him politely with folded hands—'Oh king! Remove your doubts and suspicions because Lord Ram and Laxman have come to visit you (as a friend, and not as an enemy as you had feared) (30). So get up quickly. I have arranged for your friendship with Lord Ram. Make friends with him soon, with the sacred fire as a witness. [Don't harbour apprehensions, for when I recommend them to you I am responsible for my actions. Remember that I am absolutely loyal to you; that I owe my allegiance to you first and foremost, and it is my moral responsibility to ensure no harm comes to you. So don't worry in the least.]' (31).

ततोऽतिहर्षात्सुग्रीवः समागम्य रघूत्तमम् ।
 वृक्षशाखां स्वयं छित्वा विष्टराय ददौ मुदा ॥ ३२॥
 हनूमान्लक्ष्मणायादात्सुग्रीवाय च लक्ष्मणः ।
 हर्षेण महताविष्टाः सर्व एवावतस्थिरे ॥ ३३॥
 लक्ष्मणस्त्वब्रवीत्सर्वं रामवृत्तान्तमादितः । वनवासाभिगमनं सीताहरणमेव च ॥ ३४॥ tato'tiharṣātsugrīvaḥ samāgamyā raghūttamam । vṛkṣaśākhāṃ svayaṃ chitvā viṣṭarāya dadau mudā ॥ 32॥ hanūmānllakṣmaṇāyādātsugrīvāya ca lakṣmaṇaḥ । harṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭāḥ sarva evāvatasthire ॥ 33॥ lakṣmaṇastvabravītsarvaṃ rāmaṇvṛttāntamāditaḥ । vanavāsābhigamaṇaṃ sītāharaṇameva ca ॥ 34॥

32-34. Then Sugriv was very happy to hear the news, and so he came to Lord Ram delightfully¹. He broke a branch of a tree with his own hands and gave it to the Lord to sit upon (32).

Similarly, Hanuman gave a seat to Laxman, and Laxman offered one to Sugriv in turn. Everyone sat down on their respective seats, happily and comfortably (33).

Thence, Laxman narrated the whole story of Lord Ram from the beginning (i.e. from the time they left Ayodhya) to their coming to the forest to live here, and the subsequent abduction of Sita from their hermitage in the forest (34).

[Note—¹We have already read in a note appended to Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 4 in sub-section 6.1.4 of our Book why Sugriv so readily agreed to be friends with Lord Ram on the suggestion of Hanuman. It was because Sugriv trusted Hanuman so much that when the latter told him that he has brought the two brothers up the mountain with a promise that Sugriv would welcome them as a friend, and that Sugriv must not hesitate to meet the two guests immediately and make friends with them, Sugriv did not think twice or in any way doubt the correctness of Hanuman's decision, because he knew that Hanuman was not only exceptionally wise and intelligent but also very faithful and loyal to him. Sugriv was confident that the Creator may turn against him, but Hanuman would never betray him ever, no matter what happens.

Hanuman explained to Sugriv the strategic importance to have the two warrior brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, as his allies as their friendship would deter his arch enemy, Vaali, from tormenting him further. The race to which the two brothers belonged was far superior in intelligence, strength and abilities compared to the race to which Sugriv and his brother Vaali belonged. Hence, as soon as Vaali discovers that Sugriv has forged an alliance with superior warriors like Lord Ram and Laxman, he would stop bothering him any further, and so the constant fear of attack and harm from Vaali in which Sugriv passed his days would be a thing of the past.

This logic of Hanuman was sound enough to convince Sugriv that he has a lot to gain by making Lord Ram and Laxman his friends.]

लक्ष्मणोक्तं वचः श्रुत्वा सुग्रीवो राममब्रवीत् ।
अहं करिष्ये राजेन्द्र सीतायाः परिमार्गणम् ॥ ३५॥
साहाय्यमपि ते राम करिष्ये शत्रुघातिनः ।
शृणु राम मया दृष्टं किञ्चित्ते कथयाम्यहम् ॥ ३६॥

lakṣmaṇoktaṃ vacaḥ śrutvā sugrīvo rāmamabravīt । ahaṃ kariṣye rājendra sītāyāḥ parimārgaṇam ॥ 35॥ sāhāyāmapi te rāma kariṣye śatrughātiṇaḥ । śrṇu rāma mayā dr̥ṣṭaṃ kiñcitta kathayāmyaham ॥ 36॥

35-36. Hearing the words of Laxman, Sugriv said to Lord Ram, 'Oh the King of kings! I shall search for Sita (35). I shall help you to slay your enemy. Oh Lord Ram! I shall now tell you all that I have seen myself. Listen carefully (36)—

एकदा मन्त्रिभिः सार्धं स्थितोऽहं गिरिमूर्धनि ।
विहायसा नीयमानां केनचित्प्रमदोत्तमाम् ॥ ३७॥
क्रोशन्तीं रामरामेति दृष्ट्वास्मान् पर्वतोपरि ।
आमुत्त्याभरणान्याशु स्वोत्तरीयेण भामिनी ॥ ३८॥
निरीक्ष्याधः परित्यज्य क्रोशन्ती तेन रक्षसा । नीताहं भूषणान्याशु गुहायामक्षिपं प्रभो ॥ ३९॥

ekadā mantribhiḥ sārḍhaṃ sthito'haṃ girimūrdhani । vihāyasā nīyamānāṃ kenacitpramadottamām ॥ 37॥ krośantiṃ rāmarāmeti dr̥ṣṭvāsmān parvatopari । āmucyābharaṇānyāśu svottariyeṇa bhāminī ॥ 38॥ nirīkṣyādhaḥ parityajya krośanti tena rakṣasā । nītāhaṃ bhūṣaṇānyāśu guhāyāmakṣipaṃ prabho ॥ 39॥

37-39. One day I was sitting with my ministers on the top of the mountain. At that time we saw that some demon was taking away some most attractive and charming woman by the path of the sky (37).

That lady was wailing aloud 'Ram, Ram'. Seeing us sitting atop the mountain, she took off her ornaments, tied them in a cloth (probably her scarf), and seeing us, she threw it down. Oh Lord! In this way, that demon took away that gentle lady who was constantly and woefully lamenting and wailing. I immediately picked up those ornaments and kept it aside (i.e. I hid them) in a mountain cave (38-39).

इदानीमपि पश्य त्वं जानीहि तव वा न वा ।
 इत्युक्त्वानीय रामाय दर्शयामास वानरः ॥ ४०॥
 विमुच्य रामस्तदृष्ट्वा हा सीतेति मुहुर्मुहुः ।
 हृदि निक्षिप्य तत्सर्वं रुरोद प्रकृतो यथा ॥ ४१॥ idānīmapi paśya tvaṃ jānīhi tava vā na vā । ityuktvanīya rāmāya darśayāmāsa vānaraḥ ॥ 40॥ vimucya rāmastadr̥ṣṭvā hā sīteti muhurmuḥuḥ । hr̥di nikṣipyā tatsarvaṃ ruroda prākṛto yathā ॥ 41॥

40-41. You must have a look at them and see if they are yours or not. [See for yourself to check if you can recognise those things as belonging to your wife, for if you can identify them then it is sure that the lady of whom I am talking about was indeed Sita, your wife. In that case we will be sure also about the direction in which she was being taken away by the demon. So please have a close look.]

Saying this, the monkey (Sugriv) brought them and showed them to Lord Ram (40).

When the Lord opened the bundle and saw the ornaments, he immediately recognised them to belong to his wife Sita; so he clasped them to his heart. Like an ordinary man suddenly remembering his lost wife after discovering some signs of her that she left behind, the Lord began to cry, wailing repeatedly 'Oh Sita, Oh Sita!' (41).

आश्वास्य राघवं भ्राता लक्ष्मणो वाक्यमब्रवीत् । अचिरेणैव ते राम प्राप्यते जानकी शुभा ।
 वानरेन्द्रसहायेन हत्वा रावणमाहवे ॥ ४२॥
 सुग्रीवोऽप्याह हे राम प्रतिज्ञां करवाणि ते । समरे रावणं हत्वा तव दास्यामि जानकीम् ॥ ४३॥ āśvāsya rāghavaṃ bhrātā lakṣmaṇo vākyamabravīt । acireṇaiva te rāma prāpyate jānakī śubhā । vānarendrasahāyena hatvā rāvaṇamāhave ॥ 42॥ sugrīvo'pyāha he rāma pratijñāṃ karavāṇi te । samare rāvaṇaṃ hatvā tava dāsyaṃ jānakīm ॥ 43॥

42-43. Then brother Laxman consoled him, saying—'Oh Raghav; with the help of the king of monkeys (Sugriv) you shall soon kill Ravana in the war and retrieve the auspicious Janki (Sita). [So you must not lament; have patience and courage. The time is not far away when you shall once again meet Sita.]' (42).

Sugriv also reassured Lord Ram and promised all help, saying 'Oh Lord Sri Ram! I make a promise to you that I shall get Sita back to you by killing Ravana in the war' (43).

ततो हनूमान् प्रज्वाल्य तयोरग्निं समीपतः ।
तावुभौ यमसुग्रीवावग्नौ साक्षिणि तिष्ठति ॥ ४४॥
बाहू प्रसार्य चालिङ्ग्य परस्परमकल्मषौ । समीपे रघुनाथस्य सुग्रीवः समुपाविशत् ॥ ४५॥ tato hanūmān prajvālya tayoragniṃ samīpataḥ । tāvubhau rāmasugrīvāvagnau sākṣiṇi tiṣṭhati ॥ 44॥ bāhū prasārya cālīṅgya parasparamakalmaṣau । samīpe raghunāthasya sugrīvaḥ samupāviśat ॥ 45॥

44-45. Then Hanuman lit a fire near them. Both Lord Ram and Sugriv made the sacred fire as a witness (44), and once again formally met and embraced each other with wide open arms. Thereafter, Sugriv sat down near the Lord. [Earlier, before the ritual of making friendship with fire as a witness, Sugriv sat in front of Lord Ram. But after their friendship was formalised, Sugriv sat by the side of the Lord. This indicates closeness and formalisation of their relationship as friends.] (45).

Sub-section 6.2.4: In due course of time, Sugriv dispatched a large number of messengers and heralds as spies and scouts in all the directions to search for Sita. One such reconnoitring team consisting of prominent monkey and bear warriors heads towards south and enters a cave where they meet a hermitress named Swayamprabha.

After a bond of friendship was forged between Lord Ram and Sugriv, they chatted and shared information about each other. During this intercourse Lord Ram enquired from Sugriv the reason for his living a life of fear and seclusion away from his capital, at which Sugriv confided with the Lord about his misfortunes, about the grave injustice done to him by his elder brother Vaali who had thrown him out of the kingdom, kept his wife, and threatened him with death if he ever dared to re-enter the capital city of Kishkindha. Lord Ram took pity on him, and as a good friend he assured to help Sugriv regain his honour and wife.

Supported and encouraged by the almighty Lord, Sugriv challenged and managed to slay his inimical brother Vaali in a fierce face-to-face duel. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranaya Kand, Canto 2.}

Thereafter, by the grace of Lord Ram, Sugriv ascended the throne and became the king of Kishkindha. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranaya Kand, Canto 3.}

But such is the way of this selfish world that once Sugriv had got back his kingdom, he neglected to do Lord Ram's work—i.e. he forgot to make efforts to search for Sita by sending scouts and messengers in all the directions.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram and Laxman took up dwelling on a nearby mountain called Pravarshan to pass the four months of the rainy season, because for one, it would very difficult to launch the search operation in the wild forest during rains, and second, some practical time must be given to Sugriv to help him establish his authority and grip as the kingdom's new ruler and put things in order.

Since Sugriv had got so involved in worldly matters that he neglected the Lord's work, Hanuman warned and alerted him about his mistake and the gravity of consequences of annoying Lord Ram. In the meantime, Lord Ram too went Laxman to make Sugriv see sense and mend his ways immediately as time was fast running out. {These developments are narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto no. 5.}

That said briefly, and in order to remain focused on our story, we shall skip these above referred events as they do not bear any direct relation to the theme of our story, and come straight to the point when Sugriv felt very sorry for his folly of neglecting to send teams to search Sita, and in the process inadvertently offending Lord Ram. He immediately made amends by meeting and apologising to the Lord, and then ordered a large number of monkeys and bears to go in every direction of the earth and diligently search Sita.

One such team was special as it consisted of prominent and trusted members of Sugriv's court—such as Hanuman (his most trusted and wise lieutenant), Jamvant (the elderly chief of the bears who was equally trusted and wise), Angad (his nephew and heir apparent), Nal and Neel (expert architects and construction engineers), and other confidantes like them. This particular group headed in the south direction.

By-and-by this team reached a cave and met a hermitress named Swayamprabha, who transported them instantly, in a magical way, to the shore of the southern ocean by employing her transcendental mystical powers of movement.

Now we shall proceed to read about these episodes from Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto no. 6 as follows:-

॥ षष्ठ सर्गः ॥

दृष्ट्वा रामं समासीनं गुहाद्वारि शिलातले ।
 चैलाजिनधरं श्यामं जटामौलिविराजितम् ॥ १॥
 विशालनयनं शान्तं स्मितचारुमुखाम्बुजम् ।
 सीताविरहसन्तप्तं पश्यन्तं मृगपक्षिणः ॥ २॥
 रथाद्दूरत्समुत्पत्य वेगात्सुग्रीवलक्ष्मणौ ।
 रामस्य पादयोरग्रे पेततुर्भक्तिसंयुतौ ॥ ३॥

॥ ṣaṣṭha sargaḥ ॥

dr̥ṣṭvā rāmaṃ samāsīnaṃ guhādvāri śilātale । cailājīnadharaṃ śyāmaṃ jaṭāmaulivirājitaṃ ॥ 1॥ viśālanayanaṃ śāntaṃ smitacārumukhāmbujam । sītāvirahasantaptaṃ paśyantaṃ mṛgapakṣiṇaḥ ॥ 2॥ rathāddūrātsamutpatya vegātsugrīvalakṣmaṇau । rāmasya pādāyoraḡre petaturbhaktisaṃyutau ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! They (i.e. Sugriv, Hanuman, and Laxman who was sent by Lord Ram to bring Sugriv to him) saw Lord Ram sitting on a stone slab on the mouth of the cave. He was attired in a deer skin, was dark complexioned, had a crown of matted hairs on his head (1), had large eyes, was calm, tranquil and serene, and his charming face had a smile of a man lost in some pleasant thoughts so much so that he is unaware of his surroundings. The Lord was so overwhelmed by the emotional torment created due to the agony of separation from his beloved wife Sita that he appeared to be weary and haggard even as he gazed absent-mindedly at the deer and birds that moved around him¹ (2).

Sugriv and Laxman got down from the chariot a little away, and came and fell down at his feet with devotion and reverence (3).

[Note—¹When Sugriv arrived at the cave where Lord Ram dwelt on Mt. Pravarshan, he found him sitting motionless, lost in deep thoughts. The Lord had a melancholic expression spread over his countenance that betrayed his emotional state of extreme sadness and profound gloom which was made all the more striking by the presence of a frozen smile on his dark-complexioned face and lotus-like eyes that were transfixed at a distant point where some deer and birds were moving around carelessly, for the smile and the gaze indicated that a huge emotional storm was blowing inside him as he was deeply lost in reminiscences and thoughts of Sita.]

रामः सुग्रीवमालिङ्ग्य पृष्टवानामयमन्तिके ।
स्थापयित्वा यथान्यायं पूजयामास धर्मवित् ॥ ४॥
ततोऽब्रवीद्रघुश्रेष्ठं सुग्रीवो भक्तिनम्रधीः । देव पश्य समायान्तीं वानराणां महाचमूम् ॥ ५॥ rāmaḥ sugrīvamāliṅgya pṛṣṭvānāmayamantike । sthāpayitvā yathānyāyaṃ pūjayāmāsa dharmavit ॥ 4॥ tato'bravidraghuśreṣṭhaṃ sugrīvo bhaktinamradhīḥ । deva paśya samāyāntīṃ vānarāṇāṃ mahācamūm ॥ 5॥

4-5. Lord Ram—who is an expert in the laws of Dharma (one's lawful duty, noble conduct, righteousness, probity, propriety)—embraced Sugriv and asked about his welfare. The Lord seated Sugriv close to himself, and duly honoured him (4).

Then Sugriv said to the most exalted Raghu (Lord Ram) very reverentially, 'Oh Lord! Look around and you will observe that a huge army of monkeys has started arriving¹ (5).

[Note—¹Sugriv came straight to the point as he was already aware what, in all probability, was going on in the mind of Lord Ram, for Laxman had briefed him on this point when he told Sugriv that the Lord is very annoyed that he (Sugriv) has forgotten to keep his promise to the Lord concerning the search for Sita.

So Sugriv did not wish to take any risk; he had arranged things in a way that by the time he came to where Lord Ram was, a large number of monkey and bear warriors had started arriving. This clever move pre-empted any chance of Lord Ram expressing any sort of anger at Sugriv.]

कुलावलाद्रिसम्भूता मेरुमन्दरसन्निभाः ।
 नानाद्वीपसरिच्छैलवासिनः पर्वतोपमाः ॥ ६॥
 असङ्ख्याताः समायान्ति हरयः कामरूपिणः । सर्वे देवांशसम्भूताः सर्वे युद्धविशारदाः ॥ ७॥ kulācalādrisambhūtā merumandarāsannibhāḥ । nānādīvīpasaricchailavāsinaḥ parvatopamāḥ ॥ 6॥ asaṅkhyātāḥ samāyānti harayaḥ kāmarūpiṇaḥ । sarve devāṃśasambhūtāḥ sarve yuddhaviśārādāḥ ॥ 7॥

6-7. [Briefing Lord Ram about the army of monkeys that was gradually assembling there, Sugriv said—] These monkeys are born on the Himalayas and other great mountains; they have bodies as colossus as the Sumeru and Mandrachal mountains¹; they live in different continents, along river banks and on mountains, and are as huge and enormous as mountains themselves! (6).

All of them have been born from the sperms of Gods (i.e. these monkeys carry the genes of Gods, and are their manifested forms)². They can assume any form they like, and are very expert in the art of warfare (7).

[Note—¹Mt. Sumeru is the heavenly golden-hued mountain where Gods live. Mt. Mandrachal was a huge legendary mountain that was used as the churning rod by the Gods and the Demons to churn the first ocean in the beginning of creation in order to produce Amrit, the ambrosia of eternity and bliss.

²“The monkeys and bears having the genes of Gods” means that they possess unique qualities, strength and power that only Gods possess. At the time Lord Vishnu had promised these Gods and Mother Earth that he would come down as Lord Ram to eliminate Ravana and the race of cruel demons that was oppressing them, the Gods were advised by the Creator Brahma to come down to earth as monkeys and bears to serve Lord Ram. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 22-32.]

अत्र केचिद्गजबलाः केचिदशगजोपमाः ।
 गजायुतबलाः केचिदन्येऽमितबलाः प्रभो ॥ ८॥
 केचिदञ्जनकूटाभाः केचित्कनकसन्निभाः । केचिद्रक्तान्तवदना दीर्घवालास्तथापरे ॥ ९॥
 शुद्धस्फटिकसङ्काशाः केचिद्राक्षससन्निभाः ।
 गर्जन्तः परितो यान्ति वानरा युद्धकाङ्क्षिणः ॥ १०॥ atra kecidgajabalāḥ keciddaśagajopamāḥ । gajāyutabalāḥ kecidanye'mitabalāḥ prabho ॥ 8॥ kecidañjanakūṭābhāḥ kecitkanakasannibhāḥ । kecidraktāntavadanā dīrghavālāstathāpare ॥ 9॥ śuddhasphaṭikasāṅkāśāḥ kecidrākṣasasannibhāḥ ।

garjantaḥ parito yānti vānarā yuddhakāṅkṣiṇaḥ ॥ 10॥

8-10. Oh Lord! Out of them, some have the strength of one, some of ten and some of 10 thousand elephants taken together, while there are so many of them whose strength and valour can't even be compared with anything at all (8).

Look, some are black (dark complexioned) like the Kajjal Giri (the mountain of solidified soot), some are fair complexioned like gold, some have red faces like the colour of blood, while some have long (creeper-like hairs on their bodies (9).

Some look charming as they are clean, gentle and polite like pure crystal is, while others look terrible and frightening like demons. All of these monkeys are very eager for battle, and that's why they are so agitated, running hither and thither energetically, raring to go, and roaring all the while (10).

त्वदाज्ञाकारिणः सर्वे फलमूलाशनाः प्रभो ।

ऋक्षाणामधिपो वीरो जाम्बवान्नाम बुद्धिमान् ॥ ११॥

एष मे मन्त्रिणां श्रेष्ठः कोटिभल्लूकवृन्दपः ।

हनूमानेष विख्यातो महासत्त्वपराक्रमः ॥ १२॥ tvadājñākāriṇaḥ sarve phalamūlāśanāḥ prabho । ṛkṣāṅāmadhīpo vīro jāmbavānnāma buddhimān ॥ 11॥

eṣa me mantriṇāṃ śreṣṭhaḥ koṭibhallūkavr̥ndapaḥ ।

hanūmāneṣa vikhyāto mahāsattvaparākramaḥ ॥ 12॥

11-12. Oh Lord! They will all obey you and they will survive by eating only fruits and roots etc. [To wit, you will not have to worry about logistics and ration for this huge army.]

[Then Sugriv introduced the chief commanders of the army to Lord Ram—] This king of bears, Jamvant, is very brave, wise and intelligent (11). He is the Lord (commander) of 10 million bears, and is foremost among my ministers. Next, this is Hanuman, the son of the wind-god; he is famous for his great strength and valour, and is most glorious, brilliant and radiant by the virtue of his excellent character and magnificent qualities (12).

वायुपुत्रोऽतितेजस्वी मन्त्री बुद्धिमतां वरः ।

नलो नीलश्च गवयो गवाक्षो गन्धमादनः ॥ १३॥

शरभो मैन्दवश्चैव गजः पनस एव च ।

वलीमुखो दधिमुखः सुषेणस्तार एव च ॥ १४॥

केसरी च महासत्त्वः पिता हनुमतो बली ।

एते ते यूथपा राम प्रधान्येन मयोदिताः ॥ १५॥ vāyuputro'titejasvī mantrī buddhimatāṃ varaḥ ।

nalo nīlaśca gavayo gavākṣo gandhamādanaḥ ॥ 13॥

śarabho maindavaścaiva gajaḥ panasa eva ca ।

valīmukho dadhimukhaḥ suṣeṇastāra eva ca ॥ 14॥ kesarī ca mahāsattvaḥ pitā hanumato balī । ete te yūthapā rāma prādhānyena mayoditāḥ ॥ 15॥

13-15. He is foremost amongst the wise ones, and is my chief (most senior) minister. Besides these two, my other army chief commanders are as follows—Nal, Neel, Gawai, Gawaksha, Gandhamadan, Sharav, Maindav, Gaj, Panas, Valimukh, Dadhimukh, Sushen, Taar, and the father of Hanuman known by the name of Kesari; the latter is most valorous, a great warrior, very famous, extremely steadfast and exceptionally agile (13-15).

महात्मानो महावीर्याः शक्रतुल्यपराक्रमाः ।
एते प्रत्येकतः कोटिकोटिवानरयूथपाः ॥ १६॥
तवाज्ञाकारिणः सर्वे सर्वे देवांशसम्भवाः । एष वालिसुतः श्रीमानङ्गदो नाम विश्रुतः ॥ १७॥ mahātmāno mahāvīryāḥ śakratulyaparākramāḥ । ete pratyekataḥ koṭikoṭivānarayūthapāḥ ॥ 16॥ tavājñākāriṇaḥ sarve sarve devāṃśasambhavāḥ । eṣa vālisutaḥ śrīmānaṅgado nāma viśrutaḥ ॥ 17॥

16-17. All of them are of a noble and great heart; they are strong, valorous, valiant and mighty like Indra (the king of Gods). Each of them is the Lord (commander) of millions of monkeys (i.e. each one of the commanders I have named has a huge army of monkeys under his orders) (16). All of them are obedient to you, and they have been born out of the miniscule fraction (or sperms) of Gods. This is Baali's son, the most famous Angad (17).

वालितुल्यबलो वीरो रक्षसानां बलान्तकः ।
एते चान्ये च बहवस्त्वदर्थे त्यक्तजीविताः ॥ १८॥
योद्धारः पर्वताग्रैश्च निपुणाः शत्रुघातने । आज्ञापय रघुश्रेष्ठ सर्वे ते वशवर्तिनः ॥ १९॥ vālitulyabalo vīro rākṣasānāṃ balāntakaḥ । ete cānye ca bahavastvadarthe tyaktajīvitāḥ ॥ 18॥ yoddhāraḥ parvatāgraiśca nipuṇāḥ śatrughātane । ājñāpaya raghuśreṣṭha sarve te vaśavartinaḥ ॥ 19॥

18-19. He is also as strong as Baali, and is capable of crushing the demon hordes. In this manner, these monkeys as well as many others are eager to lay down their lives for you (18).

They fight with large rocks uprooted from mountains, and they are all very expert in crushing and destroying the enemy. Oh the most exalted Raghu (Sri Ram)! All of them are under your control and command. So therefore, order them as you deem fit' (19).

रामः सुग्रीवमालिङ्ग्य हर्षपूर्णाश्रुलोचनः ।
 प्राह सुग्रीव जानासि सर्वं त्वं कार्यगौरवम् ॥ २०॥
 मार्गणार्थं हि जानक्या नियुङ्क्ष्व यदि रोचते ।
 श्रुत्वा रामस्य वचनं सुग्रीवः प्रीतमानसः ॥ २१॥
 प्रेषयामास बलिनो वानरान् वानरर्षभः ।
 दिक्षु सर्वासु विविधान् वानरान् प्रेष्य सत्वरम् ॥ २२॥
 दक्षिणां दिशमत्यर्थं प्रयत्नेन महाबलान् ।
 युवराजं जाम्बवन्तं हनूमन्तं महाबलम् ॥ २३॥
 नलं सुषेणं शरभं मैन्दं द्विविदमेव च । प्रेषयामास सुग्रीवो वचनं चेदमब्रवीत् ॥ २४॥ rāmaḥ sugrīvamāliṅgya harṣapūrṇāśrulocanaḥ । prāha sugrīva jānāsi sarvaṃ tvaṃ kāryagauravam ॥ 20॥ mārgaṇārthaṃ hi jānakyā niyuṅkṣva yadi rocate । śrutvā rāmasya vacanaṃ sugrīvaḥ prītamānasaḥ ॥ 21॥ preṣayāmāsa balino vānarān vānararṣabhaḥ । dikṣu sarvāsu vividhān vānarān preṣya satvaram ॥ 22॥ dakṣiṇāṃ diśamatyarthaṃ prayatnena mahābalān । yuvarājaṃ jāmbavantaṃ hanūmantaṃ mahābalaṃ ॥ 23॥ nalaṃ suṣeṇaṃ śarabhaṃ maindaṃ dvidivameva ca । preṣayāmāsa sugrīvo vacanaṃ cedamabravīt ॥ 24॥

20-24. Lord Ram's eyes were filled with tears of joy and delight, and he embraced Sugriv. He said, 'Oh Sugriv! You are aware of the difficulty of my task that is to be accomplished (20). If you think proper, you must appoint them (i.e. assign them) the task of searching out Sita according to their ability and aptitude. [You are the best judge to decide who amongst these commanders and warriors is the best suited for the job that is to be done, which is to search for Sita first and then to launch a campaign to free her from her captors, for I am but a stranger and a foreigner who have no experience of their skills, abilities and qualities. Hence you are the one who is best placed to select the messengers and then assign them the work as you think fit and proper.]'

Hearing these words of advice from Lord Ram, Sugriv was very delighted and pleased¹ (21). He gladly sent many monkeys in search of Sita. Having sent other monkeys in the various directions (22), he most carefully, after deep thought and considering all aspects, selected the most valorous prince Angad, the bear chief Jamavant, his trusted lieutenant Hanuman, and his other ministers such as Nal, Sushen, Sharav, Maind and Dwividh etc., and sent them towards the south. He said to them (23-24)—

[Note—¹When Lord Ram left the details of the planning and the implementation of the project of searching out Sita and recovering her on Sugriv, the latter felt very glad and delighted as it not only showed that the Lord trusted him and had no hard feelings for him because he had neglected the Lord's work earlier, but also because the Lord gave him due respect and the right to order his troops as a King of the kingdom of Kishkindha. Sugriv was happy that his dignity and self-respect was duly honoured by Lord Ram, and so it now devolves squarely upon his shoulders to ensure that the honour and dignity and respect and reputation of a great king of a great kingdom are properly taken care of.

To wit, Lord Ram was very wise and prudent in putting the responsibility on Sugriv's shoulders as now he was totally accountable for the success of the mission, and he cannot shrug it off by any sort of lame excuse.]

विविन्वन्तु प्रयत्नेन भवन्तो जानकीं शुभाम् ।
मासादर्वाङ्निवर्तध्वं मच्छासनपुरःसराः ॥ २५॥
सीतामदृष्ट्वा यदि वो मासादूर्ध्वं दिनं भवेत् । तदा प्राणान्तिकं दण्डं मतः प्राप्स्यथ वानराः ॥ २६॥ vicinvantu prayatnena bhavanto jānakīm śubhām । māsādarvāñnivartadhvaṃ macchāsanapuraḥsarāḥ ॥ 25॥ sītāmadrṣṭvā yadi vo māsādūrdhvaṃ dinaṃ bhavet । tadā prāṇāntikaṃ daṇḍaṃ mattaḥ prāpsyatha vānarāḥ ॥ 26॥

25-26. 'By my orders, all of you must diligently, industriously and sincerely, make all possible efforts to search out the most auspicious and virtuous Janki (Sita), and return within one month (25).

If you return after one month without having found or seen her, then oh monkeys, be warned that you shall suffer capital punishment at my hands. [To wit, if you come back after the stipulated period of one month with no positive news of Sita, then you will suffer as I will severely punish you.]¹ (26).

[Note—¹This threat was merely meant to tell the army that their king, Sugriv, was very serious about this matter. They should not waste time in loitering around, and go about the search seriously. Fixing a time was important for maintaining discipline and order, for otherwise there would have been no control over the thousands of monkeys and bears who were dispatched on the mission, for there were fair chances that they would spend time fooling around somewhere, and then take their own time to come back leisurely to report that they could not find Sita.]

इति प्रस्थाप्य सुग्रीवो वानरान् भीमविक्रमान् ।
रामस्य पार्श्वे श्रीरामं नत्वा चोपविवेश सः ॥ २७॥
गच्छन्तं मारुतिं दृष्ट्वा रामो वचनमब्रवीत् ।
अभिज्ञानार्थमेतन्मे ह्यङ्गुलीयकमुत्तमम् ॥ २८॥
मन्नामाक्षरसंयुक्तं सीतायै दीयतां रहः ।
अस्मिन् कार्ये प्रमाणं हि त्वमेव कपिसत्तम ।
जानामि सत्त्वं ते सर्वं गच्छ पन्थाः शुभस्तव ॥ २९॥ iti prasthāpya sugrīvo vānarān bhīmavikramān । rāmasya pārśve śrīrāmaṃ natvā copaviveśa saḥ ॥ 27॥ gacchantam mārutiṃ dr̥ṣṭvā rāmo vacanamabravīt । abhijñānārthametanme hyaṅgulīyakamuttamam ॥ 28॥ mannāmākṣarasamyuktaṃ sītāyai dīyatāṃ rahaḥ । asmin kārye pramāṇam hi tvameva kapisattama । jānāmi sattvaṃ te sarvaṃ gaccha panthāḥ śubhastava ॥ 29॥

27-29. Having thus dispatched those most strong, valiant and brave monkeys on their mission, Sugriv came and bowed before Lord Ram. He sat down near him (27). At that moment, seeing the son of the wind-god, Hanuman, about to go on his mission, Lord Ram called him near and said, 'Take my finger ring which has my initials (i.e. letters of my name) engraved on it with you. You should give this to Sita when she is alone as a means of your identification. Oh the best among monkeys (kapisattama)! You are the only one who is capable of doing this difficult task. I know your strength and intelligence. Alright then, proceed now on your path. Be blessed and have good luck!' (28-29).

एवं कपीनां राज्ञा ते विसृष्टाः परिमार्गणे ।
 सीताया अङ्गदमुखा बभ्रमुस्तत् तत् ह ॥ ३०॥
 भ्रमन्तो विन्ध्यगहने ददृशुः पर्वतोपमम् ।
 राक्षसं भीषणाकारं भक्षयन्तं मृगान् गजान् ॥ ३१॥
 रावणोऽयमिति ज्ञात्वा केचिद्वानरपुङ्गवाः ।
 जघ्नुः किलकिलाशब्दं मुञ्चन्तो मुष्टिभिः क्षणात् ॥ ३२॥
 नायं रावण इत्युक्त्वा ययुरन्यन्महद्वनम् । तृषार्ता सलिलं तत् नाविन्दन् हरिपुङ्गवाः ॥ ३३॥ evaṃ kapināṃ rājñā te visṛṣṭāḥ parimārgaṇe । sītāyā aṅgadamukhā babhramustatra tatra ha ॥ 30॥ bhramanto vindhyagahane dadṛśuḥ parvatopamam । rākṣasaṃ bhīṣaṇākāraṃ bhakṣayantaṃ mṛgān gajān ॥ 31॥ rāvaṇo'yamiti jñātvā kecidvānarapuṅgavāḥ । jaghnuḥ kilakilāśabdam muñcanto muṣṭibhiḥ kṣaṇāt ॥ 32॥ nāyaṃ rāvaṇa ityuktvā yayuranyanmahadvanam ।

 tṛṣārtā salilaṃ tatra nāvindan haripuṅgavāḥ ॥ 33॥

30-33. In this manner, Angad and other monkeys were dispatched by the king of monkeys with his clear mandate. They began to roam about on this earth in search of Sita (30).

While wandering, they came to a dense forest of the Vindhyachal mountain. There they saw a mountain-like formidable demon who was catching hold of deer and elephants of the forest and eating them (31). Some monkeys mistakenly thought that he was Ravana, so they chuckled loudly and excitedly, and punched him to death in a fraction of a moment (32). Then they realised that he cannot be Ravana because of the ease with which he could be killed. So they went to another dense forest in search of Sita. There they felt very thirsty, but water was not visible anywhere (33).

विभ्रमन्तो महारण्ये शुष्ककण्ठोष्ठतालुकाः । ददृशुर्गह्वरं तत्र तृणगुल्मावृतं महत् ॥ ३४॥
 आर्द्रपक्षान् कूर्चहंसाग्निःसृतान् ददृशुस्ततः ।
 अत्रास्ते सलिलं नूनं प्रविशामो महागुहाम् ॥ ३५॥
 इत्युक्त्वा हनुमानग्रे प्रविवेश तमन्वयुः ।
 सर्वे परस्परं धृत्वा बाहून् बाहुभिरुत्सुकाः ॥ ३६॥ vibhramanto mahāraṇye śuṣkakaṅṭhoṣṭhātālukāḥ । dadṛśurgahvaram tatra tṛṇagulmāvṛtaṃ mahat ॥ 34॥ ārdrapakṣān krauñcahaṃsānniḥsṛtān dadṛśustataḥ । atrāste salilaṃ nūnaṃ pravīśāmo mahāguhām ॥ 35॥ ityuktvā hanumānagre praviveśa tamanvayuh । sarve parasparam dhṛtvā bāhūn bāhubhirutsukāḥ ॥ 36॥

34-36. Roaming around thirsty in that un-inhabitable and dense forest, their throat, lips and palate became parched. Then they saw a large cave covered by grass and creepers (34). Coming out of it they saw herons and swans with wet wings. Guessing that the cave must have a water body, they all decided to enter it in search of water. Hanuman went in first, and behind him all the monkeys followed arm-in-arm very eagerly, but scared to enter an unknown and labyrinthine cave (35-36).

[Note—The cave must have been dark. They went in arm-in-arm so that they aren't lost in the pitch darkness of the labyrinthine cave or to face God-only-knew what was inside it.]

अन्धकारे महदूरं गत्वापश्यन् कपीश्वराः ।
 जलाशयान् मणिनिभतोयान् कल्पद्रुमोपमान् ॥ ३७॥
 वृक्षान् पक्वफलैर्नम्रान् मधुद्रोणसमन्वितान् ।
 गृहान् सर्वगुणोपेतान् मणिवस्त्रादिपूरितान् ॥ ३८॥
 दिव्यभक्ष्यान्नसहितान् मानुषैः परिवर्जितान् ।
 विरिमतास्तत्र भवने दिव्ये कनकविष्टरे ॥ ३९॥
 प्रभया दीप्यमानां तु ददृशुः स्त्रियमेककाम् ।
 ध्यायन्तीं वीरवसनां योगिनीं योगमास्थिताम् ॥ ४०॥ andhakāre mahaddūraṃ gatvāpaśyan kapīśvarāḥ । jalāśayān maṇinibhatoyān kalpadrumopamān ॥ 37॥ vṛkṣān pakvaphalairnamrān madhudroṇasamanvitān । grhān sarvagūṇopetān maṇivastrādipūritān ॥ 38॥ divyabhakṣyānnasahitān mānuṣaiḥ parivarjitān ।

vismitāstatra bhavane divye kanakaviṣṭare ॥ 39॥ prabhayā dīpyamānāṃ tu dadṛśuḥ striyamekakām । dhyāyantīm cīravasanāṃ yoginīm yogamāsthītām ॥ 40॥

37-40. After proceeding far in pitch darkness, the monkeys found a pond with water as clean and pure as crystal. There were Kalpa tree-like evergreen trees (37) laden with fruits near it, and they had honeycombs hanging from them. Nearby they saw a pleasant dwelling that was richly decorated with colourful clothes and ornaments, and well endowed with all sorts of delectable eatables. It had all the auspicious signs befitting a hermitage, but was completely desolate. They were utterly astonished and stunned to see a beautiful lady with divine radiance sitting alone on a golden throne in one of the rooms of the dwelling. That lady was a Yogini (a female ascetic) sitting in deep meditation. Her glowing radiance illuminated the place. She wore clothes made from birch (37-40).

पूणेमुस्तां महाभागां भक्त्या भीत्या च वानराः ।
 दृष्ट्वा तान् वानरान् देवी प्रह यूयं किमागताः ॥ ४१॥
 कुतो वा कस्य दूता वा मत्स्थानं किं प्रधर्षथ ।
 तच्छ्रुत्वा हनुमानाह शृणु वक्ष्यामि देवि ते ॥ ४२॥
 अयोध्याधिपतिः श्रीमान् राजा दशरथः प्रभुः ।
 तस्य पुत्रो महाभागो ज्येष्ठो राम इति श्रुतः ॥ ४३॥ praṇemustāṃ mahābhāgāṃ bhaktyā bhītyā ca vānarāḥ । dr̥ṣṭvā tān vānarān devī prāha yūyaṃ kimāgatāḥ ॥ 41॥ kuto vā kasya dūtā vā matsthānaṃ kiṃ pradharṣatha । tacchrutvā hanumānāha śṛṇu vakṣyāmi devi te ॥ 42॥ ayodhyādhipatiḥ śrīmān rājā daśarathaḥ prabhuḥ । tasya putro mahābhāgo jyeṣṭho rāma iti śrutah ॥ 43॥

41-43. Seeing that great soul, the monkeys bowed before her with respect and awe. Then that lady ascetic looked at them and said, 'Why and from whence have you all come? (41). Whose messengers are you? And why are you defiling my place?'

Hearing this, Hanuman replied, 'Oh goddess! I shall tell you everything. Listen (42)—'A most famous and majestic king known by the name of Dasrath was the ruler of Ayodhya. His exalted eldest son is famed by the name of Lord Sri Ram (43).

पितुराज्ञां पुरस्कृत्य सभार्यः सानुजो वनम् ।
 गतस्तत्र हता भार्या तस्य साध्वी दुःसत्मना ॥ ४४॥
 रावणेन ततो रामः सुग्रीवं सानुजो ययौ । सुग्रीवो मित्रभावेन रामस्य प्रियवत्तभाम् ॥ ४५॥ piturājñāṃ puraskṛtya sabhāryaḥ sānujo vanam । gatastatra hr̥tā bhāryā tasya sādhvī durātmanā ॥ 44॥ rāvaṇena tato rāmaḥ sugrīvaṃ sānujo yayau । sugrīvo mitrabhāvena rāmasya priyavallabhām ॥ 45॥

44-45. Obeying the words of his father, the Lord has come to the forest with his wife and younger brother. Here, his most virtuous and chaste wife has been abducted by the vile and wicked (44) Ravana. After that he has come to Sugriv along with his younger brother (Laxman) in search of Sita, his wife. Being friendly with Lord Ram, Sugriv has ordered us to search for the beloved wife of the Lord (45).

मृगयध्वमिति प्रह ततो वयमुपागताः ।
 ततो वनं विचिन्वन्तो जानकीं जलकाङ्क्षिणः ॥ ४६॥
 प्रविष्टा गह्वरं घोरं दैवादत् समागताः ।
 त्वं वा किमर्थमत्रासि का वा त्वं वद नः शुभे ॥ ४७॥ mrgayadhvamiti prāha tato vayamupāgatāḥ । tato vanaṃ vicinvanto jānakīm jalakāṅkṣiṇaḥ ॥ 46॥ praviṣṭā gahvaraṃ ghoraṃ daivādatra samāgatāḥ । tvaṃ vā kimarthamatrāsi kā vā tvaṃ vada naḥ śubhe ॥ 47॥

46-47. Hence, we have come from there (in our effort to find the whereabouts of Sita). Here we felt the need for water because we have become very thirsty while roaming here and there in search of Sita (46). That is why all of us entered this formidable cave, and by chance have come here. Oh the blessed and auspicious One! Why do you stay here, and who are you? Do tell us please' (47).

योगिनी च तथा दृष्ट्वा वानरान् प्रह हृष्टधीः ।
 यथेष्टं फलमूलानि जग्ध्वा पीत्वामृतं पयः ॥ ४८॥
 आगच्छत ततो वक्ष्ये मम वृत्तान्तमादितः ।
 तथेति भुक्त्वा पीत्वा च हृष्टास्ते सर्ववानराः ॥ ४९॥
 देव्याः समीपं गत्वा ते बद्धाञ्जलिपुटाः स्थिताः । ततः प्रह हनूमन्तं योगिनी दिव्यदर्शना ॥ ५०॥ yoginī ca tathā dr̥ṣṭvā vānarān prāha hr̥ṣṭadhīḥ । yatheṣṭaṃ phalamūlāni jagdhvā pītvāmṛtaṃ payaḥ ॥ 48॥ āgacchata tato vakṣye mama vṛttāntamāditaḥ । tatheti bhuktvā pītvā ca hr̥ṣṭāste sarvavānarāḥ ॥ 49॥ devyāḥ samīpaṃ gatvā te baddhāñjalipuṭāḥ sthitāḥ । tataḥ prāha hanūmantaṃ yoginī divyadarśanā ॥ 50॥

48-50. The lady ascetic was very pleased and delighted to learn about this. She said to the monkeys, 'First, you should eat fruits and edible roots according to your wish, and quench your thirst by drinking water (48). Then come to me and I shall tell you my full story from the beginning'.

At this advice all the monkeys said 'alright', and they ate fruits and drank water to their hearts' content (49). Thus refreshed and feeling cheerful, they came with a delighted heart to the exalted lady, and stood before her with folded hands. The glorious looking hermitress then said to Hanuman (50)—

हेमा नाम पुरा दिव्यरूपिणी विश्वकर्मणः ।
पुत्री महेशं नृत्येन तोषयामास भामिनी ॥ ५१॥
तुष्टो महेशः प्रददाविदं दिव्यपुरं महत् । अत्र स्थिता सा सुदती वर्षाणामयुतायुतम् ॥ ५२॥ hemā nāma purā divyarūpiṇī viśvakarmaṇaḥ । putrī maheśaṃ nr̥tyena toṣayāmāsa bhāminī ॥ 51॥ tuṣṭo maheśaḥ pradadāvidaṃ divyapuraṃ mahat । atra sthitā sā sudatī varṣāṇāmayutāyutam ॥ 52॥

51-52. 'In some ancient time, Vishwakarma (the architect of the gods) had a divine and beautiful looking daughter named Hema. She pleased Lord Shiva with her dance (51). He granted this large and magnificent city to her as a present (because he was very pleased with her dance). That lady with beautiful rows of teeth ("sudatī"; i.e. when she opened her mouth it revealed shining white teeth that resembled two rows of pearls) stayed here for thousands of years (52).

तस्या अहं सखी विष्णुतत्परा मोक्षकाङ्क्षिणी ।
नाम्ना स्वयम्प्रभा दिव्यगन्धर्वतनया पुरा ॥ ५३॥
गच्छन्ती ब्रह्मलोकं सा मामाहेदं तपश्चर । अत्रैव निवसन्ती त्वं सर्वप्राणिविवर्जिते ॥ ५४॥ tasyā ahaṃ sakhī viṣṇutatparā mokṣakāṅkṣiṇī । nāmnā svayamprabhā divyagandharvatanayā purā ॥ 53॥ gacchantī brahmalokaṃ sā māmāhedaṃ tapaścara । atraiva nivasantī tvaṃ sarvaprāṇivivarjite ॥ 54॥

53-54. I am her friend Swyamprabha, daughter of a Gandharva (a celestial musician) named Divya. I am desirous of emancipation and salvation (53). When she (Hema) went back to the heavens, she advised me, 'You should stay at this lonely place and do severe austerities and penances (Tapa) (54).

त्रेतायुगे दाशरथिर्भूत्वा नारायणोऽव्ययः ।
भूभारहरणार्थाय विचरिष्यति कानने ॥ ५५॥
मार्गन्तो वानरास्तस्य भार्यामायान्ति ते गुहाम् ।

पूजयित्वाथ तान् नत्वा रामं स्तुत्वा प्रयत्नतः ॥ ५६॥
 यातासि भवनं विष्णोर्योगिनम्यं सनातनम् ।
 इतोऽहं गन्तुमिच्छामि रामं द्रष्टुं त्वरान्विता ॥ ५७॥ tretāyuge dāśarathirbhūtvā nārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ । bhūbhāraharaṇārthāya vicariṣyati kānane ॥ 55॥ mārganto vānarāstasya bhāryāmāyānti te guhām । pūjayitvātha tān natvā rāmaṃ stutvā prayatnataḥ ॥ 56॥ yātāsi bhavanaṃ viṣṇoryogigamyam sanātanam । ito'haṃ gantumicchāmi rāmaṃ draṣṭuṃ tvarānvitā ॥ 57॥

55-57. During the Treta Yuga, the supreme, unmanifest and attributeless Lord Narayan (Lord Vishnu) will reveal himself (as Lord Ram) in the household of king Dasrath (of Ayodhya), and in due course of time he would roam in the forest to remove the burden of the earth. [To wit, the Supreme Being will make the earth holy and sanctified by walking on it barefoot; all taints of sins and evil that has darkened the earth's soil would then be removed, and the mother earth would once again regain her pristine purity that she possessed before the advent of sinful creatures that spoilt her beauty and trampled upon her primary untarnished and unblemished form that was bestowed upon her by Nature at the time of beginning of creation.] (55).

Some monkeys shall come to your cave while searching for his wife (Sita). You should then welcome them with due respect, and then you should go to Lord Ram and worship him by singing his glories (i.e. say prayers to him in the form of Stotras), after which you would proceed to the eternal abode of Lord Vishnu which is attainable by Yogis (ascetics) alone. [That is why I am advising you to do penances, austerities and meditation, i.e. Tapa and Yoga, as by this means you will clean your inner-self and prepare to have a divine sight of Lord Ram that is available only to a selected few who are eligible for this rare privilege, glory and honour. When that happens, your wish of attaining emancipation and salvation for your soul would be fulfilled.]'

Hence, I immediately wish to go and meet Lord Ram (because my long and patient wait has ended now) (56-57).

यूयं पितृध्वमक्षीणि गमिष्यथ बहिर्गुहाम् ।
 तथैव चक्रुस्ते वेगाद्गताः पूर्वस्थितं वनम् ॥ ५८॥
 सापि त्यक्त्वा गुहां शीघ्रं ययौ राघवसन्निधिम् ।
 तत्र रामं ससुग्रीवं लक्ष्मणं च ददर्श ह ॥ ५९॥ कृत्वा प्रदक्षिणं रामं पूजाम्य बहुशः सुधीः । आह गद्गदया वाचा रोमान्विततनूरुहा ॥ ६०॥ yūyam pidadhvamakṣiṇi gamiṣyatha bahirguhām । tathaiva cakruste vegādgatāḥ pūrvasthitaṃ vanam ॥ 58॥ sāpi tyaktvā guhām śīghraṃ yayau rāghavasannidhim । tatra rāmaṃ sasugrīvaṃ lakṣmaṇaṃ ca dadarśa ha ॥ 59॥

kṛtvā pradakṣiṇaṃ rāmaṃ praṇamya bahuśaḥ sudhīḥ । āha gadgadayā vācā romāñcitatanūruhā ॥ 60॥

58-60. All of you close your eyes; you will be out of the cave instantly'. They (the monkeys and bears) did so and found themselves instantaneously outside the cave in the forest from where they had entered it¹ (58).

The Yogini too left the cave and immediately came to Lord Ram and had a Darshan (divine viewing) of the Lord who was with Sugriv and Laxman (on Mt. Pravarshan) (59). That wise hermitress paid her respects to Lord Ram by going around him clockwise repeatedly even as her body became thrilled by this holy experience. Then, after performing circumambulation of the Lord, she offered her prayers to him in an emotionally choked voice (60).

[Note—¹This version of Adhyatma Ramayan differs from what we have read in Ram Charit Manas in sub-section 6.1.6 of our Book where the reconnoitring team of monkeys and bears was directly transported to the shore of the southern ocean instead of the forest in front of the mouth of the cave from where they entered it.]

[We shall now proceed to read about what happened after the team of monkeys and bears found themselves back in the forest at the place from where they had entered the mysterious cave. They resumed their search and eventually arrived on the shore of the southern ocean where they meet Sampati, the old vulture, who would guide them further and tell them that Sita was held captive in Lanka. Therefore, anyone who was able to cross the mighty ocean would succeed in meeting her and accomplishing Lord Ram's work. This part of the story is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto nos. 7 and 9 as follows.]

Sub-section 6.2.5: Moving ahead on their mission, this team reaches the shore of the southern ocean across which was situated Lanka where Sita was held captive. On the shore, Lord Ram's messengers, the monkeys and bears, met Sampati, the old vulture king who was a brother of Jatau.

We read about it in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7 as follows:-

॥ सप्तम सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

अथ तत् समासीना वृक्षखण्डेषु वानराः ।

चिन्तयन्तो विमुह्यन्तः सीतामार्गणकर्षिताः ॥ १॥

तत्रोवाचाङ्गदः कांश्चिद्दानयान् वानरर्षभः ।

भ्रूतां गह्वरेऽस्माकं मासो नूनं गतोऽभवत् ॥ २॥

॥ saptama sargah ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

atha tatra samāsīnā vṛkṣakhaṇḍeṣu vānarāḥ । cintayanto vimuhyantaḥ sītāmārgaṇakarśītāḥ ॥ 1॥ tatrovācāṅgadaḥ kāmāścidvānarān vānararāṣabhaḥ । bhramatām gahvare'smākaṃ māso nūnaṃ gato'bhavat ॥ 2॥

Canto 7

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Meanwhile, the monkeys were very tired and weary from search of Sita. They sat worried and gloomy at a place surrounded by dense trees near the cave (1). At that time, the exalted monkey Angad said to some of the monkeys, 'It looks that we have already spent one month wandering in this cave (2).

सीता नाधिगतस्माभिर्न कृतं राजशासनम् ।
 यदि गच्छाम किष्किन्धां सुग्रीवोऽस्मान् हनिष्यति ॥ ३॥
 विशेषतः शत्रुसुतं मां मिषान्निहनिष्यति । मयि तस्य कुतः प्रीतिरहं रामेण रक्षितः ॥ ४॥ sītā nādhigatāsmābhirna kṛtaṃ rājaśāsanam । yadi gacchāma kiṣkindhāṃ sugrīvo'smān haniṣyati ॥ 3॥ viśeṣataḥ śatrusutaṃ māṃ miṣānnihaniṣyati । mayi tasya kutaḥ prītirahaṃ rāmeṇa rakṣitaḥ ॥ 4॥

3-4. But till date we have not found Sita. We have not been able to obey the orders of the king (Sugriv). If we now return to Kishkindha empty-handed, it is certain that he will kill us (3). Especially he will find this as an excuse to kill me because I am the son of his enemy (Baali). How can he ever have any affection for me? I have been protected by Lord Ram alone (i.e. he is the only one who favours me) (4).

इदानीं रामकार्यं मे न कृतं तन्मिषं भवेत् ।
 तस्य मद्भ्रनने नूनं सुग्रीवस्य दुरात्मनः ॥ ५॥
 मातृकल्पां भ्रातृभार्या पापात्मानुभवत्यसौ । न गच्छेयमतः पार्श्वं तस्य वानरपुङ्गवाः ॥ ६॥ idānīm rāmakāryaṃ me na kṛtaṃ tanmiṣaṃ bhavet । tasya maddhanane nūnaṃ sugrīvasya durātmanaḥ ॥ 5॥ mātrkalpāṃ bhrātrbhāryāṃ pāpātmānubhavatyasau । na gaccheyamataḥ pārśvaṃ tasya vānarapuṅgavāḥ ॥ 6॥

5-6. Now that I have not been successful in doing Lord Ram's work, it will give that evil and wicked Sugriv a ready made excuse to eliminate (kill) me (5). That vile and sinful one is enjoying the wife of his elder brother who is like his mother¹. Hence, oh the most superior monkeys, I shall not go back to him at any cost (6).

[Note—¹Verse nos. 4-6 highlights Angad's hate, indignation and complete loathe for Sugriv, especially for his ignominious deed of keeping as a mistress his elder brother's wife who happens to be Angad's mother. It also highlights Angad's resolve not to go back to his kingdom if he fails to be successful in finding Sita as he fears that his uncle Sugriv will find this as an excuse to eliminate him as he sees Angad as the greatest threat to his crown and security. This fear of Angad has been expressed by him in Ram Charit Manas as well—refer: Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precedes Doha no. 26.]

त्यक्ष्यामि जीवितं चात्र येन केनापि मृत्युना ।
इत्यश्रुनयनं केचिद्दृष्ट्वा वानरपुङ्गवाः ॥ ७॥
व्यथिताः साश्रुनयना युवराजमथाब्रुवन् ॥ ८॥ किमर्थं तव शोकोऽत्र वयं ते प्राणरक्षकाः । भवामो निवासामोऽत्र गुहायां भयवर्जिताः ॥ ९॥ tyakṣyāmi jīvitam cātra yena kenāpi mṛtyunā । ityaśrunayanam keciddṛṣṭvā vānarapuṅgavāḥ ॥ 7॥ vyathitāḥ sāśrunayanā yuvarājamathābruvan ॥ 8॥ kimartham tava śoko'tra vyaṃ te prāṇarakṣakāḥ । bhavāmo nivasāmo'tra guhāyām bhayavarjitāḥ ॥ 9॥

7-9. By some means I shall end my life here (for it would be better for me to die than to go back home to face public humiliation and get killed by my own uncle for no fault of mine)'.
Seeing him with such a despondent mood, overcome with an extreme sense of remorse, dejection and hopelessness, with tears welling up in his eyes (7), many a senior monkeys felt extremely gloomy, indignant and sorrowful. They said to the crown prince (Angad) with tearful eyes (8), 'Why do you regret and feel so sorry and remorseful? We shall all protect you and fearlessly live with you in this cave. [Fear not our beloved prince, for we are all with you; never fear that we would ever abandon you. We will spend our lives together in this cave, for it provides all the means for a comfortable living—there are abundant fruit trees and water bodies sufficient enough for us to survive happily. Is it not so?] (9).

सर्वसौभाग्यसहितं पुरं देवपुरोपमम् ।
शनैः परस्परं वाक्यं वदतां मारुतात्मजः ॥ १०॥
श्रुत्वाङ्गदं समालिङ्ग्य प्रोवाच नयकोविदः ।
विचार्यते किमर्थं ते दुर्विचारो न युज्यते ॥ ११॥
राज्ञोऽत्यन्तप्रियस्त्वं हि तारापुत्रोऽतिवल्लभः ।
रामस्य लक्ष्मणात्प्रीतिस्त्वयि नित्यं प्रवर्धते ॥ १२॥ sarvasaubhāgyasahitam puram devapuropamam । śanaiḥ parasparam vākyaṃ vadatām mārutātmajaḥ ॥ 10॥

śrutvāṅgadam samāliṅgya provāca nayakovidah । vicāryate kimarthaṃ te durvicāro na yujyate ॥ 11॥ rājñō'tyantapriyastvaṃ hi tārāputro'tivallabhaḥ । rāmasya lakṣmaṇātpṛitistvayi nityaṃ pravardhate ॥ 12॥

10-12. The city inside the cave (where Swayamprabha Yogini used to live) is fully provided with all the requirements of comforts and necessities of life'.

When these reassuring words that were spoken with a soothing touch to comfort Angad and which spread through the rank and file of the assembled messengers who all readily gave their assent to this approach finally reached the ears of Hanuman (i.e. when Hanuman became aware of these murmurings) (10), he—who was wise and an expert in all the rules and codes of conduct governing life in this world—embraced Angad and said, 'Oh Angad! Why do you feel so sorry and worry in this way. You must not have any bad and depressing thoughts (11). You are a dear son of Tara (the wife of Baali whom Sugriv has kept as his mistress), and this means that you are also dear to Sugriv. [This is because Sugriv would not do anything to annoy Tara, and since you are her beloved son, it follows that he would never touch you.]

And as for Lord Ram, his love and affection for you gets enhanced by each passing day as compared to Laxman. [To wit, Laxman is Lord Ram's own brother, and as such the Lord's love and affection for him is steady and deep from the very beginning. But in your case, ever since the Lord took upon himself the responsibility of your welfare and happiness after your father's death, this love and affection goes on increasing and becoming more and more deep and strong by each passing day as the Lord sees how you are totally devoted to and dependant upon him. So you have nothing to fear from any quarter: remember this—the Lord would ensure that Sugriv does not harm you in any way even if we were not to take into account the element of Tara, your mother, whom Sugriv too would not like to offend as she is held in high esteem by the citizens of Kishkindha as their erstwhile queen.] (12).

अतो न राघवाद्भूतिस्तव राज्ञो विशेषतः ।
 अहं तव हिते सक्तो वत्स नान्यं विचारय ॥ १३॥
 गुहावासश्च निर्भेद्य इत्युक्तं वानरैस्तु यत् । तदेतद्रामबाणानामभेद्यं किं जगत्त्रये ॥ १४॥ ato na rāghavādbhītistava rājñō viśeṣataḥ । ahaṃ tava hite sakto vatsa nānyaṃ vicāraya ॥ 13॥ guhāvāsaśca nirbhedyā ityuktaṃ vānaraistu yat । tadetadrāmabāṇānāmabhedyāṃ kiṃ jagattraye ॥ 14॥

13-14. Hence, you should have no fear or doubt either from Raghav's (Sri Ram's) side or from the king's (Sugriv's side). Besides, I am always with you and eager to look after your welfare. So, oh son (vatsa)¹, you should not worry unnecessarily for imaginary things (13). And what about these monkeys who said that there is no danger in this cave and we can live there comfortably? Say, which place is there in the whole world that cannot be pierced by the arrows of Lord Ram (should he decide to punish any one of us)² (14).

[Note—¹Remarkable indeed it is for Hanuman to address Angad as his “son—vatsa”! One can well imagine how Angad must have been emotionally affected by such an affectionate overture of Hanuman; one can imagine what a miraculously soothing effect it would have had on Angad who felt orphaned and alone in this world when his father Baali was killed and his mother Tara was kept by his uncle Sugriv. Now he has a ‘foster father’ in the form of Hanuman to look after him, and this father was not an ordinary one—for there was no one stronger and wiser and able in the whole of the kingdom of Kishkindha than Hanuman. With this one stroke of use of an affectionate word, Hanuman was able to help Angad overcome all his fears, apprehensions and consternations. Angad cheered up and was overcome with gratitude even as he must have thanked his benefactor Hanuman from the deepest corners of his grateful heart for this reassurance. Once and for all, Hanuman now became Angad’s best friend and confidante for life.

²And don’t think that by merely hiding and spending your life in this cave you will be safe as advised by our monkey friends. If Lord Ram gets angry with you for not reporting back to him and should he decide to withdraw his protective umbrella from over your head, then tell me which place on this earth is safe from the Lord’s wrath? Look at the gravity of the situation—if Sugriv actually wants to kill you and knows he can’t do it himself, then in case you do not go back and submit yourself to Lord Ram and tell him frankly about our failure of finding Sita, then is it not possible that Sugriv whom you call your arch enemy might somehow instigate the Lord and provoke him to cast his wrath on you. And if this happens, and should the Lord unfortunately decide to shoot his infallible arrow aimed at you, then tell me my dear son Angad what protection would you have; do you think that by hiding in this cave you would be safe. No, not at all; for the arrow of Lord Ram can penetrate anything and no place is safe from its attack.

So my dear son, don’t be misled to believe that you are safe in this cave as these monkey friends have advised you. The best option for all of us is to invoke the grace of Lord Ram and continue to make efforts for finding Sita. Remember: It’s the Lord’s mission and it is he would help us to be successful in it; but we must have faith, patience and resilience to pass this test.]

ये त्वां दुर्बोधयन्त्येते वानरा वानरर्षभ ।
पुत्रदाशदिकं त्यक्त्वा कथं स्थास्यन्ति ते त्वया ॥ १५॥
अन्यद्गुह्यतमं वक्ष्ये रहस्यं शृणु मे सुत । रामो न मानुषो देवः साक्षान्नारायणोऽव्ययः ॥ १६॥

ye tvāṃ durbodhayantyyete vānarā vānararṣabha । putradāśadikaṃ tyaktvā katham sthāsyanti te tvayā ॥ 15॥ anyadguhyatamaṃ vakṣye rahasyaṃ śṛṇu me suta । rāmo na mānuṣo devaḥ sāksānnārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ ॥ 16॥

15-16. Oh the exalted one who is the best amongst the monkeys (“vānararṣabha”; Angad)! Those monkeys who are giving you this advice, how will they live with you without their wives and sons? [To wit, it would not be practical for these monkeys to leave their families and stay in exile for any length of time. So sooner or later they would find some excuse to live you and escape to be united with their families. My advice to you is that you must think for yourself and be practical instead of placing too much reliance on what these monkey friends tell you to alleviate your immediate sufferings and worries. I don’t mean that they are not faithful or they don’t love you; what I mean is that in the long run you will be left to fend for your own self. So my sane advice to you is that it is better to be prudent and alert from the very start in whatever you chose to do.] (15).

Besides this, oh son (suta), I shall tell you a secret (i.e. a thing which is not known by everyone but remains within the confined knowledge of a few enlightened souls)—listen carefully. Lord Ram is no ordinary human. Is the personification of the eternal, unchanging, imperishable Lord Narayan (i.e. he is Lord Vishnu himself) (16).

सीता भगवती माया जनसम्मोहकारिणी ।
 लक्ष्मणो भुवनाधारः साक्षाच्छेषः फणीश्वरः ॥ १७॥
 ब्रह्मणा प्रार्थिताः सर्वे रक्षोगणविनाशने । मायामानुषभावेन जाता लोकैकरक्षकाः ॥ १८॥ sītā bhagavatī māyā janasammohakāriṇī । lakṣmaṇo bhuvanādhāraḥ sākṣāccheṣaḥ phaṇīśvaraḥ ॥ 17॥ brahmaṇā prārthitāḥ sarve rakṣogaṇavināśane । māyāmānuṣabhāvena jātā lokaikarakṣakāḥ ॥ 18॥

17-18. Verily indeed, Sita is Bhagwati (the eternal Goddess of Creation; she is the One-half of the cosmic form of the Supreme Lord) as well as is the Lord's Maya personified (i.e. Sita symbolises the Lord’s delusion creating powers, as well as his dynamic energy that is infinite and cosmic in its dimension) which enchants, enthrals and attracts the world and keeps it under its spell.

Laxman himself is the personification of Sheshnath, the legendary king of serpents who holds the creation on its hood (17).

They have manifested or revealed themselves in the form of human beings on the prayers of Brahma (the Creator) in order to destroy or eliminate the demons (representing the combined forces of evilness and sinfulness in this mortal world). Each one of them, i.e. Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman, therefore is capable of saving and protecting the world independently without the help of others¹ (18).

[Note—¹Lord Ram represents the Supreme Being known as Brahm who is the ultimate Lord of this entire creation; Sita represents Brahm’s cosmic energy and dynamic powers by which Brahm does anything; and Laxman represents that aspect of Brahm by which he sustains and protects the creation metaphorically depicted as Sheshnath, the cosmic serpent, supporting the world on his thousand hoods.

To wit, all the three—i.e. Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman—represent the different aspects of the same supreme Brahm; they symbolise the same Supreme Being performing different tasks and playing different roles. Hence, they are independently empowered to do what is needed to support and protect the world for the simple reason that it is the same Brahm operating through them.

In spite of this fact, since some subtle differentiation in roles did exist between these three forms of Brahm, so when the Lord decided to end the lawlessness created by the demonic forces representing evils, vices and sins in this world, he therefore thought it fit to coordinate the roles of all the above three forms so that their combined force could be harnessed and their joint energy could be focused to achieve sure success in the formidable task that was to be accomplished.]

वयं च पार्षदाः सर्वे विष्णोर्वैकुण्ठवासिनः ।

मनुष्यभावमापन्ने स्वेच्छया परमात्मनि ॥ १९॥

वयं वानररूपेण जातास्तस्यैव मायया ।

वयं तु तपसा पूर्वमाराध्य जगतां पतिम् ॥ २०॥

vayaṃ ca pārṣadāḥ sarve viṣṇorvaikuṅṭhavāsinaḥ ।

manuṣyabhāvamāpanne svecchayā paramātmani ॥ 19॥

vayaṃ vānararūpeṇa jātāstasyaiva māyayā ।

vayaṃ tu tapasā pūrvamārādhyā jagatāṃ patim ॥ 20॥

19-20. All of us are fortunate to serve Lord Vishnu, who has his abode in Vaikunth, as his servants and subordinates (pārṣadāḥ). When the Parmatma (the supreme Soul; the Supreme Being) decided out of his own free will to assume a human form (19), we too became monkeys by employing the Lord's powers known as Maya (in order to serve him)¹.

During some previous time, we had all worshipped the Lord of the World, and by doing austerities and penances (Tapa) we had become his subordinates by his grace and kindness (20).

[Note—¹To wit, all of us had been serving Lord Vishnu in his heavenly abode called Vaikunth. When the Lord decided to come down to this mortal world in the form of a human prince known by the name of Lord Ram, we too decided to accompany the Lord here to this mortal world in order to continue serving him. In order to give effect to our decision we harnessed the Lord's delusion creating powers known as Maya and assumed the form of monkeys and bears to coincide and be in sync with the Lord's form as a human being.

We all were so eager to accompany the Lord and serve him here in this mortal world too like we did in the heaven that we did a lot of Tapa so that our wishes are fulfilled. In short, we, the Gods of heaven who had been serving Lord Vishnu, voluntarily and willingly became monkeys and bears; no one compelled us, nor did Lord Vishnu request us to become monkeys and bears, because the Lord was himself competent to eliminate the demons even if we had not come to help him.

But since we volunteered to help the Lord he could not refuse our offer out of his affection for us. So though he could have independently known where Sita is—actually the fact is that the Lord does know everything in advance as he is all-knowing and omniscient—and he would have gone to free her by slaying her captors, the demons lead by their king Ravana of Lanka, yet he wishes to oblige us and give us a chance to let us serve him for our own contentment and joy. That is why he has asked us to find out where Sita is.

So therefore, Angad, know who we actually are, and our purpose of coming down to earth. Hence, cheer up, and stop feeling remorseful and sad.]

तेनैवानुगृहीताः स्मः पार्षदत्वमुपागताः ।
 इदानीमपि तस्यैव सेवां कृत्वैव मायया ॥ २१॥
 पुनर्वैकुण्ठमासाद्य सुखं स्थास्यामहे वयम् ।
 इत्यङ्गदमथाश्वस्य गता विन्ध्यं महाचलम् ॥ २२॥
 विचिन्वन्तोऽथ शनकैर्जानकीं दक्षिणाम्बुधेः । तीरे महेन्द्राख्यगिरेः पवित् पादमाययुः ॥ २३॥ tenaivānugrhitāḥ smaḥ pārṣadatvamupāgatāḥ । idānīmapi tasyaiva sevāṃ kṛtvaiva māyayā ॥ 21॥ punarvaikuṇṭhamāsādyā sukhaṃ sthāsyāmahe vayam । ityaṅgadamathāśvāsya gatā vindhyaṃ mahācalam ॥ 22॥ vicinvanto'tha śanakairjānakīm dakṣiṇāmbudheḥ । tīre mahendrākhyagireḥ pavitraṃ pādamāyayuh ॥ 23॥

21-23. Even now, inspired and impelled by the Lord's Maya, we shall continue to serve him as his servants and subordinates (21), and at the end we shall all go back to Vaikunth and live happily with him'.

In this manner, Hanuman consoled, encouraged and reassured Angad. Thence, all of them went to the Vindhyaachal mountain (22).

They gradually moved southwards in search of Sita and reached the shores of the southern ocean near the holy valley of Mt. Mahendra (23).

[Note—In verse nos. 11-22, Hanuman has shown his wisdom and wit in order to remove all the misgivings of Angad.]

दृष्ट्वा समुद्रं दुष्पारमगाधं भयवर्धनम् ।
 वानरा भयसन्त्रस्ताः किं कुर्म इति वादिनः ॥ २४॥
 निषेदुरुदधेस्तीरे सर्वे चिन्तासमन्विताः । मन्त्रयामासुरन्योन्यमङ्गदाद्या महाबलाः ॥ २५॥

dr̥ṣṭvā samudraṃ duṣpāramagādhaṃ bhayavardhanam । vānarā bhayasantrastāḥ kiṃ kurma iti vādinaḥ ॥ 24॥ niṣedurudadhestīre sarve cintāsamanvitāḥ । mantrayāmāsuranyonyamaṅgadādyā mahābalāḥ ॥ 25॥

24-25. There, they became extremely frightened and utterly dismayed on seeing the vast ocean stretched endlessly before them. This ocean-like barrier seemed to have no end; it was very awe inspiring and formidable to behold. Its mere sight aroused grave fear and abject despair in the heart of the monkeys and bears. They wondered what to do next (24).

Angad and other monkeys, who were otherwise very valiant and courageous, however lost their zeal and confidence when they saw the mighty ocean. They sat down near the shore, extremely worried and confused; they were once again overwhelmed with bewilderment and doubts, not knowing what next to do.

After a while, there was heard a murmur in the group as these messengers began expressing their fears and consternations even as they discussed among themselves about their fate and the gravity of the situation as follows (25)—

भ्रमतो मे वने मासो गतोऽत्रैव गुहान्तरे ।
न दृष्टो रावणो वाद्य सीता वा जनकात्मजा ॥ २६॥
सुग्रीवस्तीक्ष्णदण्डोऽस्मान्निहन्त्येव न संशयः ।
सुग्रीववधतोऽस्माकं श्रेयः प्रायोपवेशनम् ॥ २७॥
इति निश्चित्य तत्रैव दर्भानास्तीर्य सर्वतः । उपाविवेशुस्ते सर्वे मरणे कृतनिश्चयाः ॥ २८॥ bhramato me vane māso gato'traiva guhāntare । na dr̥ṣṭo rāvaṇo vādya sītā vā janakātmajā ॥ 26॥ sugrīvastīkṣṇadaṇḍo'smānnihantyeva na saṃśayaḥ । sugrīvavadhato'smākaṃ śreyaḥ prāyopaveśanam ॥ 27॥ iti niścitya tatraiva darbhānāstīrya sarvataḥ । upāviveśuste sarve maraṇe kṛtaniścayāḥ ॥ 28॥

26-28. 'Ah! Alas! We spent a month wandering in the forest and roaming in that cave. But we have not yet been able to see either Ravana or the daughter of Janak (Sita) till now (26).

Sugriv is severe in his punishment. He shall instantly and without doubt kill all of us. Instead of dying at the hands of Sugriv, it is better for us to die without food and water' (27).

Deciding thus, they spread grass on the floor and sat on it determined to end their lives by fasting (from hunger and thirst) (28).

एतस्मिन्नन्तरे तत्र महेन्द्राद्रिगुहान्तरात् ।
निर्गत्य शनकैरागादृधुः पर्वतसन्निभः ॥ २९॥
दृष्ट्वा प्रायोपवेशेन स्थितान् वानरपुङ्गवान् ।
उवाच शनकैर्गृधुः प्राप्तो भक्ष्योऽद्य मे बहुः ॥ ३०॥
एकैकशः कूमात्सर्वान् भक्षयामि दिने दिने । श्रुत्वा तद्गृध्रवचनं वानरा भीतमानसाः ॥ ३१॥ etasminnantare tatra mahendrādriguhāntarāt । nirgatya śanakairāgādgr̥dhraḥ parvatasannibhaḥ ॥ 29॥ dr̥ṣṭvā prāyopaveśena sthitān vānarapuṅgavān ।

uvāca śanakairḡdhraḥ prāpto bhakṣyo'dya me bahuḥ ॥ 30॥ ekaikaśaḥ kramātsarvān bhakṣayāmi dine dine । śrutvā tadḡdhravacanam vānarā bhītamānasāḥ ॥ 31॥

29-31. At this time, a mountain-like huge vulture came out of a cave in Mt. Mahendra and slowly walked towards them (29).

Seeing those huge monkeys ready to die without food and water, he said softly and contentedly to himself, 'Today I have got a lot of food to eat (30). I shall eat them one by one daily. [And since there are a large number of monkeys and bears in the group ready to die near the shore of the ocean, I am so lucky that I will have plenty to eat for a long time!']

[The vulture was so excited that at last he would be able to have a grand feast by eating these monkeys and bears when they die one by one due to their determination to fast-unto-death that he could not suppress his joy and spoke loud enough to enable the monkeys to hear his voice.]

When the terrified monkeys heard these horrifying words of the vulture, they said (31)—

भक्षयिष्यति नः सर्वानसौ गृध्रो न संशयः ।
 रामकार्यं च नास्माभिः कृतं किञ्चिद्दरीश्वरः ॥ ३२॥
 सुग्रीवस्यापि च हितं न कृतं स्वात्मनामपि । वृथानेन वधं प्राप्तं गच्छामो यमसादनम् ॥ ३३॥ bhakṣayiṣyati naḥ sarvānasau ḡdhro na saṃśayaḥ । rāmakāryam ca nāsmābhiḥ kṛtam kiñcidhariśvarāḥ ॥ 32॥ sugrīvasyāpi ca hitam na kṛtam svātmanāmapi । vṛthānena vadham prāptā gacchāmo yamasādanam ॥ 33॥

32-33. 'Alas! Without doubt, this vulture shall eat all of us. Oh the deity whom we monkeys worship and who is our patron god (ddhariśvarāḥ)! We have not done the job of Lord Ram nor of Sugriv, and neither have we done any good thing for ourselves or have done any noble deed in our lives that would stand in good stead for us now. All our efforts and life has gone in vain, and now we shall surely be killed by this vulture and go to hell (32-33).

[Note—One is left to wonder about the depressive and hopeless mood of these monkeys. These are the same brave fellows who had punched an ogre and killed him in Canto 6, verse no. 32, but are now afraid of an old vulture. The lesson which we learn from this episode is that if we lose our courage and enthusiasm, even trifles and the not-so-trifles might seem like insurmountable hurdles and formidable obstacles, while if we retain our enthusiasm, zeal and courage, we can surmount the greatest of difficulties and overcome the most unexpected of adversities that may obstruct our path to success.

The same was the case with the monkeys and bears when they saw the formidable ocean in front of them. When Hanuman decided finally to cross it, the ocean could not stop him from doing so. Similarly, Lord Ram also was able to tame this ocean by getting a bridge constructed across it once he finally decided to it. In both the cases of Hanuman and Lord Ram the same ocean yielded which earlier seemed to be an almost unconquerable obstacle.

Hence, with a little grit and courage and confidence it is actually possible for a man to achieve the impossible.]

अहो जटायुर्धर्मात्मा रामस्यार्थे मृतः सुधीः ॥
मोक्षं प्राप दुःखापापं योगिनामप्यरिन्दमः ॥ ३४॥
सम्पातिस्तु तदा वाक्यं श्रुत्वा वानरभाषितम् । के वा यूयं मम भ्रातुः कर्णपीयूषसन्निभम् ॥ ३५॥
जटायुरिति नामाद्य व्याहरन्तः परस्परम् । उच्यतां वो भयं मा भून्मतः प्लवगसत्तमाः ॥ ३६॥

aho jaṭāyurdharmātmā rāmasyārthe mṛtaḥ sudhīḥ ॥ mokṣaṃ prāpa durāvāpaṃ yogināmapyarindamaḥ ॥ 34॥ sampātistu tadā vākyaṃ śrutvā vānarabhāṣitam । ke vā yūyaṃ mama bhrātuḥ karṇapīyūṣasannibham ॥ 35॥ jaṭāyuriti nāmādya vyāharantaḥ parasparam । ucyatāṃ vo bhayaṃ mā bhūnmattaḥ plavagasattamāḥ ॥ 36॥

34-36. 'Ah! The righteous Jatau was blessed and fortunate. That wise one died while doing the work of Lord Ram¹. He attained emancipation and salvation which is rare and difficult even for the Yogis (ascetics) to attain' (34).

Hearing these words of the monkeys, Sampati said, 'Oh you great monkeys! Who are you that you talk amongst yourselves about my brother Jatau? These words appear sweet like nectar for my ears. Do not at all be afraid of me, and tell me about yourselves' (35-36).

[Note—¹Jatau had died while trying to save Sita from the clutches of Ravana as he was taking her away on his chariot to Lanka. Ravana had cut Jatau's wings, and the vulture died due to this wound. But since he died serving Lord Ram, and at the time of his death he was fortunate to have Lord Ram himself caressing him and tending to his wounds, Jatau had found deliverance and gone to heaven even though he was a flesh-eating bird of lowly birth. This episode is narrated in detail in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranaya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 51-58; and Canto 8, verse nos. 26-56.]

तमुवाचाङ्गदः श्रीमानुत्थितो गृध्रसन्निधौ । रामो दाशरथिः श्रीमान् लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितः ॥ ३७॥
सीतया भार्यया सार्धं विचचार महावने । तस्य सीता हता साध्वी रावणेन दुरात्मना ॥ ३८॥ tamuvācāṅgadaḥ śrīmānutthito gṛdhrasannidhau । rāmo dāśarathīḥ śrīmān lakṣmaṇena samanvitaḥ ॥ 37॥ sītayā bhāryayā sārddhaṃ vicacāra mahāvane ।

tasya sītā hṛtā sādhvī rāvaṇena durātmanā ॥ 38॥

37-38. Then Angad got up, went near that vulture, and said, 'Dasrath's son Lord Ram, along with Laxman (37) and wife Sita, was roaming in the dense Dandkaranya forest which is very wild and uninhabitable. There, his most chaste and virtuous wife Sita was abducted by the evil-hearted and wicked Ravana (38).

मृगयां निर्गते रामे लक्ष्मणे च हता बलात् ।
रामरामेति क्रोशन्ती श्रुत्वा गृध्रः प्रतापवान् ॥ ३९॥
जटायुर्नाम पक्षीन्द्रो युद्धं कृत्वा सुदारुणम् । रावणेन हतो वीरो राघवार्थं महाबलः ॥ ४०॥ mrgayāṃ nirgate rāme lakṣmaṇe ca hṛtā balāt । rāmarāmeti krośanti śrutvā ḡṛdhraḥ pratāpavān ॥ 39॥ jaṭāyurnāma pakṣīndro yuddham kṛtvā sudāruṇam । rāvaṇena hato vīro rāghavārtham mahābalaḥ ॥ 40॥

39-40. When Lord Ram and Laxman had gone to hunt a deer, he (Ravana, disguised as a mendicant) forcefully took her away. At that time, she wept and cried aloud, lamenting woefully 'Oh Ram'. Hearing her lamentations, the valiant and brave vulture (39) Jatau, the king of birds, fought a ferocious battle with Ravana to the best of his ability on behalf of Lord Ram. But at last, unfortunately, that brave, courageous and most strong vulture (i.e. Jatau) was killed at the hands of Ravana (40).

रामेण दग्धो रामस्य सायूज्यमगमत्क्षणात् ।
रामः सुग्रीवमासाद्य सख्यं कृत्वाग्निसाक्षिकम् ॥ ४१॥
सुग्रीवचोदितो हत्वा वालिनं सुदुरासदम् । राज्यं ददौ वानराणां सुग्रीवाय महाबलः ॥ ४२॥ rāmeṇa dagdho rāmasya sāyūjyamagamatkṣaṇāt । rāmaḥ sugrīvamāsādya sakhyaṃ kṛtvāgnisākṣikam ॥ 41॥ sugrīvacodito hatvā vāliṇaṃ sudurāsadam । rājyaṃ dadau vānarāṇāṃ sugrīvāya mahābalaḥ ॥ 42॥

41-42. Thereafter, his last rites were done by Lord Ram himself, and he instantly attained the supreme stature by being one with the Lord himself. After that, Lord Ram came to Sugriv and befriended him with the sacred fire as a witness (41).

Then, on the request of Sugriv (and taking pity on him), the most valorous and strong Lord killed the invincible and formidable Baali (Sugriv's elder brother who had become his arch enemy) and gave the kingdom of monkeys (known as Kishkindha) to Sugriv (42).

सुग्रीवः प्रेषयामास सीतायाः परिमार्गणे ।
अस्मान् वानरवृन्दान् वै महासत्वान् महाबलः ॥ ४३॥

मासादर्वाङ्गिनवर्तध्वं नो चेत्प्राणान् हरामि वः । इत्याज्ञया भ्रमन्तोऽस्मिन् वने गहरमध्यगाः ॥ ४४॥ sugrīvaḥ preṣayāmāsa sītāyāḥ parimārgaṇe । asmān vānaravṛndān vai mahāsattvān mahābalaḥ ॥ 43॥ māsādarvāṅnivartadhvaṃ no cetprāṅān harāmi vaḥ । ityājñayā bhramanto'smin vane gahvaramadhyagāḥ ॥ 44॥

43-44. Sugriv has sent numerous monkeys and bears, who are extremely brave, strong and courageous like we are, in search of Sita (43), and has warned us that we must return and report back to him within a period of one month or else he would kill us (as punishment). On his orders, while roaming in the forest, we entered a deep cave (44).

गतो मासो न जानीमः सीतां वा रावणं च वा ॥
मर्तुं प्रायोपविष्टा स्मस्तीरे लवणवारिधेः ॥ ४५॥
यदि जानासि हे पक्षिन् सीतां कथय नः शुभाम् ।
अङ्गदस्य वचः श्रुत्वा सम्पातिर्हृष्टमानसः ॥ ४६॥
उवाच मत्प्रियो भ्राता जटायुः प्लवणेश्वराः ।
बहुवर्षसहस्रान्ते भ्रातृवार्ता श्रुता मया ॥ ४७॥ gato māso na jānīmaḥ sītāṃ vā rāvaṇaṃ ca vā ॥ martuṃ prāyopaviṣṭā smastīre lavaṇavāridheḥ ॥ 45॥ yadi jānāsi he pakṣin sītāṃ kathaya naḥ śubhām । aṅgadasya vacaḥ śrutvā sampātirhrṣṭamānasaḥ ॥ 46॥ uvāca matpriyo bhrātā jaṭāyuhḥ plavageśvarāḥ । bahuvarṣasahasrānte bhrātrvartā śrutā mayā ॥ 47॥

45-47. There we spent a month, but till now we have neither found out anything about Sita nor about Ravana (her abductor). So we have decided to forsake food and water and die on the shores of this salty ocean (45).

Oh Bird! If you have any information about the auspicious Sita, please do tell us'.

Hearing these words of Angad, Sampati was delighted in his heart (46), and said 'Oh the great monkeys! Jatau was my dear brother. I have heard about my brother after a gap of many thousand years (47).

वाक्साहास्यं करिष्येऽहं भवतां प्लवणेश्वराः ।
भ्रातुः सलिलदानाय नयध्वं मां जलान्तिकम् ॥ ४८॥ पश्चात्सर्वं शुभं वक्ष्ये भवतां कार्यसिद्धये ।
तथेति निन्युस्ते तीरे समुद्रस्य विहङ्गमम् ॥ ४९॥

vāksāhāyamaṃ kariṣye'haṃ bhavatāṃ plavageśvarāḥ ।

bhrātuḥ saliladānāya nayadhvaṃ māṃ jalāntikam ॥ 48॥ paścātsarvaṃ śubhaṃ vakṣye bhavatāṃ kāryasiddhaye । tatheti ninyuste tīraṃ samudrasya vihaṅgamam ॥ 49॥

48-49. Oh great monkeys! I shall definitely help you verbally. Take me near water of the ocean first so that I can offer him (Jatau) water for the last time as an oblation to the soul of my departed dear brother (Jatau) (48).

Then I shall tell you everything that will ensure success in your work'. Saying 'alright', they took (escorted) Sampati to the shore of the ocean (49).

सोऽपि तत्सलिले स्नात्वा भ्रातुर्दत्त्वा जलाञ्जलिम् ।
 पुनः स्वस्थानमासाद्य स्थितो नीतो हरीश्वरैः । सम्पातिः कथयामास वानरान् परिहर्षयन् ॥ ५०॥

so'pi tatsalile snātvā bhrāturdattvā jalāñjalim । punaḥ svasthānamāsādyā sthito nīto harīśvaraiḥ । sampātiḥ kathayāmāsa vānarān pariharṣayan ॥ 50॥

50. There he purified himself by bathing in the water and gave oblations (offering of water) to his dead brother. Then the monkeys took him to the previous place¹. Sitting there, Sampati said things that delighted the heart of the monkeys (50)—

[Note—¹This shows that Sampati was very old and unable to walk properly; he must have hobbled along taking the support of the monkeys and bears.

There is another important reason why Sampati had sought the help of the monkeys and bears to escort him to the ocean and help him perform the post-death rites of his dead brother Jatau: he wished to become friendly with them and tell them that he means no harm to them. This confidence-building gesture was necessary as earlier Sampati, when he had first seen the group determined to die by fasting, had expressed his joy that now he, being a vulture, would have a lot to eat for a long time hence without having to search for food anywhere; his statement had terrified the monkeys and bears. So now Sampati wished to express his regrets and ask for forgiveness, and the best way he thought it can be done was to spend some time being very close and friendly with the monkeys and bears as if he was one of them.

This is quite a normal and natural way of removing all misgivings and striking a friendly note with someone whom we have inadvertently offended; sharing meals together, eating a piece of bread cut from the loaf that is shared by all others, and drinking from the same vessel from which all drink, are gestures that create instant rapport.]

लङ्का नाम नगर्यास्ते त्रिकूटगिरिमूर्धनि ।
 तत्र शोकवने सीता राक्षसीभिः सुरक्षिता ॥ ५१॥
 समुद्रमध्ये सा लङ्का शतयोजनदूरतः । दृश्यते मे न सन्देहः सीता च परिदृश्यते ॥ ५२॥ laṅkā nāma nagaryāste trikūṭagirimūrdhani । tatrāśokavane sītā rākṣasībhiḥ surakṣitā ॥ 51॥ samudramadhye sā laṅkā śatayojanadūrataḥ ।

 dr̥śyate me na sandehaḥ sītā ca paridr̥śyate ॥ 52॥

51-52. 'A city named Lanka exists on a mountain called Trikut. There, Sita lives in the Ashok Van (a garden; a grove) under the care and vigilant eyes of demonesses (51).

That Lanka is approximately 100 Yojans (roughly 800 miles) from here in the centre of the ocean (i.e. it was a large island 800 miles from the shore). There is no doubt about it—I can see both the city as well as Sita from here (52).

गृध्रत्वाद्दूरदृष्टिर्मे नात्र संशयितुं क्षमम् ।
 शतयोजनविस्तीर्णं समुद्रं यस्तु लङ्घयेत् ॥ ५३॥
 स एव जानकीं दृष्ट्वा पुनरायास्यति ध्रुवम् ।
 अहमेव दुरात्मानं रावणं हन्तुमुत्सहे ।
 भ्रातुर्हन्तारमेकाकी किन्तु पक्षविवर्जितः ॥ ५४॥

gr̥dhratvāddūradr̥ṣṭirme nātra saṁśayitum kṣamam । śatayojanavistīrṇaṁ samudraṁ yastu laṅghayet ॥ 53॥ sa eva jānakīm dr̥ṣṭvā punarāyāsyati dhruvam । ahameva durātmānaṁ rāvaṇaṁ hantumutsahe । bhrāturhantāramekāki kintu pakṣavivarjitaḥ ॥ 54॥

53-54. You should have no doubts or confusions about it. Being a vulture, my eyesight has a long range. Anyone amongst you who can leap across 100 Yojan wide ocean (53) can certainly go and see (meet) Janki (Sita), and then come back. I am myself capable and proficient enough to kill that evil hearted and wicked Ravana, but unfortunately I do not have wings now (because they had been burnt while I had tried to reach the sun)¹ (54).

[Note—¹Sampati's story, and how and why his wings were burnt, has been narrated in detail in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 8, which we shall skip here as it is not directly related to the theme of our Book.

However, it has been briefly narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 28, which we have already read in our Book earlier in its sub-section 6.1.6.

In Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 28 however, the reason which Sampati gives for his inability to personally help the reconnoitring team go across the ocean was his 'old age', while currently in Adhyatma Ramayan he says that he is unable to help them because 'he has no wings as they were burnt earlier'.]

यतध्वमतियत्नेन लङ्घितुं सरितां पतिम् ।
 ततो हन्ता रघुश्रेष्ठो रावणं राक्षसाधिपम् ॥ ५५॥

उल्लङ्घ्य सिन्धुं शतयोजनायतं
 लङ्कां प्रविश्याथ विदेहकन्यकाम् ।
 दृष्ट्वा समाभाष्य च वारिधिं पुन-स्तर्तुं समर्थः कतमो विचार्यताम् ॥ ५६॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे किष्किन्धाकाण्डे
 सप्तमः सर्गः ॥ ७॥

yatadhvamatiyatnena laṅghitum saritām patim । tato hantā raghuśreṣṭho rāvaṇaṃ rākṣasādhipam ॥ 55॥ ullāṅghya sindhum śatayojanāyatam laṅkāṃ praviśyātha videhakanyakām । dr̥ṣṭvā samābhāṣya ca vāridhiṃ punastartum samarthaḥ katamo vicāryatām ॥ 56॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde kiṣkindhākāṇḍe
 saptamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 7॥

55-56. You should try to leap across the ocean somehow. Then the king of demons, Ravana, will be slayed by the most exalted of the Raghus (Lord Sri Ram) himself (55).

You should discuss and find out amongst yourself who is able to cross 100 Yojan wide ocean, see and meet the daughter of king Videha (Sita), talk with her, and then cross the ocean again to come back here' (56).

Thus ends the discourse that Lord Shiva gave for Uma in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto no. 7.

Sub-section 6.2.6: When Sampati told the group that Sita was held captive in Lanka and he could clearly see her there sitting under a tree in a garden, the next logical step was to send someone from amongst them across the ocean to Lanka which was situated at a distance of 100 Yojans (roughly 800 miles) from the shore as the bird flies. So a consultation was held and it was decided that Hanuman would carry out this expedition.

Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 9 describes this fascinating episode as follows:-

॥नवम सर्गः ॥
 श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
 गते विहायसा नृधराजे वानरपुङ्गवाः ।
 हर्षेण महताविष्टाः सीतादर्शलालसाः ॥ १॥
 ऊचुः समुद्रं पश्यन्तो नक्रचक्रभयङ्करम् ।

तरङ्गादिभिरुन्नद्धमाकाशमिव दुर्गहम् ॥ २॥
 परस्परमवोचन् वै कथमेनं तरामहे ।
 उवाच चाङ्गदस्तत्र शृणुध्वं वानरोत्तमाः ॥ ३॥

||navama sargaḥ ||
 śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
 gate vihāyasā ṛdhrarāje vānarapuṅgavāḥ । harṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭāḥ sītādarśalālasāḥ ॥ 1॥ ūcuḥ samudraṃ paśyanto nakracakrabhayaṅkaram । taraṅgādibhirunnaddhamākāśamiva durgraham ॥ 2॥ parasparamavocan vai kathamenam tarāmahe । uvāca cāṅgadastatra śṛṇudhvaṃ vānarottamāḥ ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! When the king of vultures had gone away through the path of the sky, the throng of brave monkeys, who were very eager to find out about the whereabouts of Sita, became extremely delighted (because they had come to know finally where she was located) (1).

But after the initial euphoria subsided and they saw the most awesome, insurmountable, formidable and frightening barrier in the form of the mighty ocean which blocked their way with its rapidly churning and swirling whirlpools, high waves that were buffeting against the shore and heaving across its surface, and which was as unfathomable as the sky (2)—they were utterly dismayed and wondered amongst themselves how to cross it. Then Angad said, 'Oh the most superior and excellent monkeys (vānarottamāḥ)! Listen (3)—

भवन्तोऽत्यन्तबलिनः शूराश्च कृतविक्रमाः ।
 को वात्र वारिधिं तीर्त्वा राजकार्यं करिष्यति ॥ ४॥
 एतेषां वानराणां स प्राणदाता न संशयः । तदुत्तिष्ठतु मे शीघ्रं पुरतो यो महाबलः ॥ ५॥ bhavanto'tyantabalinaḥ śūrāśca kṛtavikramāḥ । ko vātra vāridhiṃ tīrtvā rājakāryaṃ kariṣyati ॥ 4॥ eteṣāṃ vānarāṅām sa prāṇadātā na saṃśayaḥ । taduttiṣṭhatu me śīghraṃ purato yo mahābalaḥ ॥ 5॥

4-5. All of you are very strong, brave, courageous and powerful. Hence, tell me, who among you is capable to leap across the ocean and do the king's work? (4).

That monkey will undoubtedly be the saviour of the life of all of us. Therefore, anyone of you who is brave, courageous and strong enough to undertake this mission should step forward and come in front of me (5).

वानराणां च सर्वेषां रामसुग्रीवयोरपि ।
 स एव पालको भूयान्नात्र कार्या विचारणा ॥ ६॥

इत्युक्ते युवराजेन तूष्णीं वानरसैनिकाः । आसन्नोचुः किञ्चिदपि परस्परविलोकिनः ॥ ७॥ vānarāṇām ca sarveṣāṃ rāmasugrīvayorapi । sa eva pālako bhūyānnātra kāryā vicāraṇā ॥ 6॥ ityukte yuvarājena tūṣṇīm vānarasainikāḥ । āsannocuh kiñcidapi parasparavilokinaḥ ॥ 7॥

6-7. There is no doubt that he will be the saviour of the life of all us monkeys, Sugriv as well as of Lord Ram himself¹ (6).

When the crown prince (Angad) has said so, all the monkey and bear commanders sat quietly, contemplating on what to do. No one could speak a word. They just stared at each other. [The messengers sat still in dismay and frustration—as it was an extremely daunting task to go and come back across the length of one hundred Yojans of water of the unfriendly ocean. No one had the courage to volunteer; gloom and despair once again overcame them.] (7).

[Note—¹By saying that anyone from the team who would be able to cross the ocean will be able to save the life of all the monkeys (as well as the bears who were implied as they also were part of the reconnoitring team, though not explicitly mentioned), Angad meant that otherwise Sugriv will kill all of them (see Canto 6, verse no. 26).

That monkey will be the saviour of Sugriv because otherwise he will be the victim of shame of not having fulfilled the promise he had given to Lords Ram at the time of making friendship with him—that he would find out about Sita and help the Lord recover her. So by all chances Sugriv may commit suicide in disgust and shame at having failed to do Lord Ram's work.

That monkey will also be the saviour of Lord Ram because otherwise the Lord will be so overwhelmed with sorrows and anguish and grief of separation from Sita that seeing no hope of ever seeing her again, he might also end his life.]

अङ्गद उवाच ।
उच्यतां वै बलं सर्वैः प्रत्येकं कार्यसिद्धये ।
केन वा साध्यते कार्यं जानीमस्तदनन्तरम् ॥ ८॥
अङ्गदस्य वचः श्रुत्वा प्रोचुर्वीरा बलं पृथक् । योजनानां दशारभ्य दशोत्तरगुणं जगुः ॥ ९॥ aṅgada uvāca ।

ucyatām vai balaṃ sarvaiḥ pratyekaṃ kāryasiddhaye । kena vā sādhyate kāryaṃ jānīmastadanantaram ॥ 8॥ aṅgadasya vacaḥ śrutvā procurvīrā balaṃ pṛthak । yojanānāṃ daśārabhya daśottaraguṇaṃ jaguḥ ॥ 9॥

8-9. [Seeing that no one spoke, and observing that all the monkeys were extremely perturbed and frustrated—] Angad said once again, 'Alright; let us see. All of you tell me, one by one, about your individual strength vis-à-vis the job at hand. Then it shall be known who can accomplish this task successfully' (8).

Hearing these words of Angad, all the monkeys described their own strengths separately. They told him about their ability to go from as little as 10 Yojans (roughly 80 miles) to varying distances that progressively increased in multiples of 10 Yojans (9).

शतादर्वाञ्जाम्बवांस्तु प्राह मध्ये वनौकसाम् ।
पुरा त्रिविक्रमे देवे पादं भूमानलक्षणम् ॥ १०॥
त्रिःसप्तकृत्वोऽहमगां प्रदक्षिणविधानतः ।
इदानीं वार्धकग्रस्तो न शक्नोमि विलाङ्घितुम् ॥ ११॥ śatādarvāṅjāmbavāṃstu prāha madhye vanaukasām । purā trivikrame deve pādaṃ bhūmānalakṣaṇam ॥ 10॥ triḥsaptakṛtvo'hamagāṃ pradakṣiṇavidhānataḥ । idānīm vārdhakagrasto na śaknomi vilaṅghitum ॥ 11॥

10-11. At last, Jamvant, the bear king, said that his strength falls short of 100 Yojans (which was the distance needed to be covered in order to land on the soil of Lanka). He said, 'In an earlier time, when the Lord had manifested himself in the form of Tribikram (Lord Vaaman)¹, I had circumambulated his holy feet, which were equivalent in length to the dimension (circumference) of the earth, twenty one times. But old age has overcome me now, and that is why I cannot leap across the ocean at present' (10-11).

[Note—¹This episode is narrated in a note appended to Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 29 in sub-section 6.1.6 of our Book.]

अङ्गदोऽप्याह मे गन्तुं शक्यं पारं महोदधेः ।
पुनर्लाङ्घनसामर्थ्यं न जानाम्यस्ति वा न वा ॥ १२॥
तमाह जाम्बवान् वीरस्त्वं राजा नो नियामकः ।
न युक्तं त्वां नियोक्तुं मे त्वं समर्थोऽसि यद्यपि ॥ १३॥

aṅgado'pyāha me gantum śakyam pāraṃ mahodadheḥ । punarlaṅghanasāmarthyam na jānāmyasti vā na vā ॥ 12॥ tamāha jāmbavān vīrastvaṃ rājā no niyāmakah । na yuktaṃ tvāṃ niyoktuṃ me tvam samartha'si yadyapi ॥ 13॥

12-13. Even Angad expressed his inability and said, 'I can go across the great ocean but I do not know (i.e. I am not certain) whether I will be able to leap back across it' (12).

Then the brave Jamvant said to him, 'Oh Angad! Though you are able and proficient enough to do this work (and you simply underestimate your capabilities), but we do not think it appropriate to appoint you for this job because you are our leader and commander (and we can't put you to risk)' (13).

अङ्गद उवाच ।
 एवं चेत्पूर्ववत्सर्वे स्वप्स्यामो दर्भविष्टरे ।
 केनापि न कृतं कार्यं जीवितुं च न शक्यते ॥ १४॥
 तमाह जाम्बवान् वीरो दर्शयिष्यामि ते सुत । येनास्माकं कार्यसिद्धिर्भविस्यत्यचिरेण च ॥ १५॥ aṅgada uvāca ।

 evaṃ cetpūrvavatsarve svapsyāmo darbhaviṣṭare । kenāpi na kṛtaṃ kāryaṃ jīvitum ca na śakyate ॥ 14॥ tamāha jāmbavān vīro darśayisyāmi te suta । yenāsmākaṃ kāryasiddhirbhaviṣyatyacireṇa ca ॥ 15॥

14-15. Angad replied, 'If this is the case, then we should adopt our earlier defiant policy of dying without food and water while lying on mats made of grass. Since this work cannot be done by anyone, then say how can we expect to live or survive for long?'¹ (14).

At this abjectly despaired and distraught mood of Angad, Jamvant consoled him and said, 'Oh son (suta)! Have comfort, for the one by whose hands our work shall soon be done, I will now show you that brave fellow!' (15).

[Note—¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 27-28 in sub-section 6.2.5 of our Book herein above.

इत्युक्त्वा जाम्बवान् प्राह हनूमन्तमवस्थितम् ।
 हनूमन् किं रहस्तूष्णीं स्थीयते कार्यगौरवे ॥ १६॥
 प्रप्रेऽज्ञेनेव सामर्थ्यं दर्शयाद्य महाबल । त्वं साक्षाद्वायुतनयो वायुतुल्यपराक्रमः ॥ १७॥ ityuktvā jāmbavān prāha hanūmantamavasthitam । hanūman kiṃ rahastūṣṇīm sthīyate kāryagaurave ॥ 16॥ prāpte'jñeneva sāmartyaṃ darśayādya mahābala । tvaṃ sākṣādvāyutanayo vāyutulyaparākramaḥ ॥ 17॥

16-17. Saying this, Jamvant said to Hanuman who was sitting nearby, 'Oh Hanuman! When this great work of honour and fame has presented itself before you, why are you sitting silently and demurring (16) as if you are unaware of anything or reluctant to act? Come forward, oh the brave and immensely valorous and valiant One! You are the son of the wind-god himself, and as famed and renowned in valour and strength as him. Hence, show your prowess, ability, agility, might, power, skill and proficiency today (for this is the moment for which you and the rest of us had been waiting for so long, to serve Lord Ram, and make ourselves fortunate and our lives fulfilled). Rise to the occasion and step forward! (17).

रामकार्यार्थमेव त्वं जनितोऽसि महात्मना ।
जातमात्रेण ते पूर्वं दृष्ट्वोद्यन्तं विभावसुम् ॥ १८॥
पक्वं फलं जिघृक्षामीत्युत्प्लुतं बालचेष्टया । योजनानां पञ्चशतं पतितोऽसि ततो भुवि ॥ १९॥ rāmakāryārthameva tvam janito'si mahātmanā । jātamātreṇa te pūrvaṃ dr̥ṣṭvodyantaṃ vibhāvasum ॥ 18॥ pakvaṃ phalaṃ jighr̥kṣāmītyutplutaṃ bālaceṣṭayā । yojanānāṃ pañcaśataṃ patito'si tato bhuvi ॥ 19॥

18-19. The great Wind-God has produced you (i.e. given birth to you) to do the work of Lord Sri Ram. At the time of your birth, seeing the early morning rising sun and thinking it to be a ripe fruit, you had leapt 500 Yojans ($8 \times 500 = 4000$ miles) in the sky to grab it as part of your childhood playful activity, and had fallen back on the earth after that mighty leap (18-19).

अतस्त्वद्बलमाहात्म्यं को वा शक्नोति वर्णितुम् ।
उत्तिष्ठ कुरु रामस्य कार्यं नः पाहि सुव्रत ॥ २०॥
श्रुत्वा जाम्बवतो वाक्यं हनूमानतिहर्षितः ।
चकार नादं सिंहस्य ब्रह्माण्डं स्फोटयन्निव ॥ २१॥ atastvadbalamāhātmyaṃ ko vā śaknoti varṇitum । uttiṣṭha kuru rāmasya kāryaṃ naḥ pāhi suvrata ॥ 20॥ śrutvā jāmbavato vākyaṃ hanūmānatiharṣitaḥ । cakāra nādaṃ siṃhasya brahmāṇḍaṃ sphoṭayanniva ॥ 21॥

20-21. Therefore, who is there who can ever describe your strength, valour and bravery? Oh the righteous and noble One. Stand up and come to the front. Do this job of Lord Ram, and be the protector of our lives¹ (20).

Hearing these encouraging and inspiring words of Jamavant, Hanuman was delighted and felt very pleased and motivated. He roared like a lion, and his shrill cry shook the universe (21).

[Note—¹Jamvant motivated Hanuman by these inspiring words of encouragement: “If you could leap 500 Yojans when still a child, why can’t you now leap merely 100 Yojans when you are grown up and abler? Come, come; step forward and show your true mettle. Why do you feel shy when the time has come to be brave and showcase your powers, prowess and abilities? Come, come; you are a great and illustrious son of the equally great and illustrious wind-god; so you must remember to behave in a way that would make your father extremely proud of you, and not ashamed! You would not only make your father feel happy and proud of you but you will also get the eternal credit of saving the lives of all of us as well as serving Lord Ram who is a manifested form of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being himself. Your name and fame would become eternal like no one else’s has ever been; you will endear yourself not only to Lord Ram but to all other devotees of the Lord as well as to the entire community of monkeys and bears who now look up to you as their saviour. So get up cheerfully and get cracking!”]

बभूव पर्वताकारस्त्रिविक्रम इवापरः ।
 लङ्घयित्वा जलनिधिं कृत्वा लङ्कां च भस्मसात् ॥ २२॥
 रावणं सकुलं हत्वाऽऽनेष्ये जनकनन्दिनीम् ।
 यद्वा बद्ध्वा गले रज्ज्वा रावणं वामपाणिना ॥ २३॥
 लङ्कां सपर्वतां धृत्वा रामस्याग्रे क्षिपाम्यहम् ।
 यद्वा दृष्ट्वैव यास्यामि जानकीं शुभलक्षणाम् ॥ २४॥ babhūva parvatākārastrivikrama ivāparaḥ । laṅghayitvā jalanidhiṃ kṛtvā laṅkāṃ ca bhasmasāt ॥ 22॥ rāvaṇaṃ sakulaṃ hatvā"neṣye janakanandinīm । yadvā baddhvā gale rajjvā rāvaṇaṃ vāmapāṇinā ॥ 23॥ laṅkāṃ saporvatāṃ dhṛtvā rāmasyāgre kṣipāmyaham । yadvā dr̥ṣṭvaiva yāsyāmi jānakīm śubhalakṣaṇām ॥ 24॥

22-24. He (Hanuman) immediately became colossus like a huge mountain as if he were a second Lord Trivikram. [To wit, Hanuman expanded his body to such a huge size that he, if he so wished, could measure the whole earth by his single step like Lord Trivikram, or Lord Vaaman, had done earlier when he had measured the entire universe in his two steps, the earth in the first and the rest of the creation in the second, and the great king Bali then had to surrender his own head to the Lord to measure it in the third step which was still pending.]

Then Hanuman said to Jamavant, 'I will leap across the ocean and burn Lanka to ashes (22), kill Ravana along with his kin and other members of his race, and bring the daughter of Janak (Sita) back. Or, if you say, I shall tie Ravana with a rope around his neck, and lift Lanka together with Mt. Trikoot on which it is situated in my left hand, and put it in front of Lord Ram. Or should I come back after just meeting the auspicious Janki (Sita)? [Tell me Jamvant what I ought to do. I can do whatever you suggest me.]' (24).

श्रुत्वा हनुमतो वाक्यं जाम्बवानिदमब्रवीत् ।
 दृष्ट्वैवागच्छ भद्रं ते जीवन्तीं जानकीं शुभाम् ॥ २५॥
 पश्चाद्गमेण सहितो दर्शयिष्यसि पौरुषम् । कल्याणं भवताद्भद्रं गच्छतस्ते विहायसा ॥ २६॥ śrutvā hanumato vākyaṃ jāmbavānidamabravīt । dr̥ṣṭvaivāgaccha bhadraṃ te jīvantīm jānakīm śubhām ॥ 25॥ paścādrāmeṇa sahito darśayiṣyasi pauruṣam । kalyāṇaṃ bhavatādbhadra gacchataste vihāyasā ॥ 26॥

25-26. Hearing these words of Hanuman, Jamvant said, 'Oh the blessed one! You just go and see that the auspicious Janki (Sita) is alive, and come back (25).

Then you can go along with Lord Ram and showcase your strength, courage and valour. Let you be blessed and have all welfare while you go by the path of the sky! (26).

गच्छन्तं रामकार्यार्थं वायुस्त्वामनुगच्छतु ।
इत्याशीर्भिः समामन्त्र्य विसृष्टः प्लवगाधिपैः ॥ २७॥ महेन्द्राद्रिशिरो गत्वा बभूवाद्भुतदर्शनः ॥ २८॥ gacchantam rāmakāryārtham vāyustvāmanugacchatu । ityāśīrbhiḥ samāmantrya visrṣṭaḥ plavagādhipaiḥ ॥ 27॥ mahendrādriśiro gatvā babhūvādbhutadarśanaḥ ॥ 28॥

27-28. Let the wind follow you in your wake and aid you in your noble mission while you are on your way to do Lord Ram's work. [To wit, let the wind-god help you by making the wind favourable to you and blowing it in the same direction as the one in which you are moving in the sky towards Lanka so as to make your journey easy and comfortable. Let him help you by supporting you in the air and making you sail effortlessly in the firmament as if you would do if you had been sailing across the calm ocean in a beautiful ship!]

In this manner, when Hanuman was thus honoured and blessed by all the ministers and commanders of the monkeys and bears, and bidden farewell by them (27), he went and stood atop the summit of Mt. Mahendra. There he assumed a stupendously majestic, an extremely strange and very awe-inspiring formidable form that defied imagination (28).

महानगेन्द्रप्रतिमो महात्मा सुवर्णवर्णोऽरुणचारुवक्त्रः ।
महाफणीन्द्राभसुदीर्घबाहुर्वातात्मजोऽदृश्यत सर्वभूतैः ॥ २९॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे किष्किन्धाकाण्डे नवमः सर्गः ॥ ९॥

mahānagendrapratimo mahātmā suvarṇavarṇo'ruṇacāruvaktraḥ । mahāphaṇīndrābhasudīrghabāhurvātātmajo'drśyata sarvabhūtaiḥ ॥ 29॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmaramāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde kiṣkindhākāṇḍe navamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 9॥

29. At that time, all the creatures of this world saw Hanuman, the son of the wind-god, as a mountain-like colossus, with a countenance resembling the radiance of molten gold with a reddish hue (like the colour and shade of the rising sun in the morning or red hot liquid gold), and having long arms resembling the great legendary cosmic Serpent (known as Seshnath)! (29).

Thus ends Canto 9 of Kishkindha Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that describes the conversation of Lord Shiva and Uma.

-----**-----

Section 6.3:

Geetawali Ramayan

In Geetawali Ramayan, as also in Kavitawali Ramayan, the pattern adopted for narration of this epic Story is different from both Ram Charit Manas and Adhyatma Ramayan, as while in the latter two instances the narrative is in the form of a continuous flow of events in a seamless manner, but in the former two instances, i.e. in Geetawali and Kavitawali, the stress is on focusing attention on some selected interesting and important events or episodes that stand out as watershed landmarks in the background of the epic Story as a whole, and then describing them in greater detail from different angles and perspectives.

So now therefore, we shall read how the main events of the part of the Story which we have covered in our present Chapter no. 6 are narrated in Geetawali Ramayan, as a sort of recapitulation. For this purpose, the following verses of Geetawali are being cited: (a) Aranya Kand, verse nos. 12-16 (Lord Ram meeting Jatayu, the vulture, and the latter's deliverance), verse nos. 17/1—17/8 (Lord Ram's meeting with Sabari and her deliverance); (b) Kishkindha Kand, verse no. 1 (Lord Ram's friendship with Sugriv), and verse no. 2 (the search for Sita begins).

जटायुसे भेंट
(3/12)

मेरे एकौ हाथ न लागी ।
गयो बपु बीति बादि कानन ज्यों कलपलता दव दागी ॥ 1 ॥
दसरथसों न प्रेम प्रतिपाल्यौ, हुतो जो सकल जग साखी । बरबस हरत निसाचर पतिसों हठि न जानकी राखी ॥ 2 ॥
मरत न मैं रघुबीर बिलोके तापस बेष बनाए ।
चाहत चलन प्रान पाँवर बिनु सिय—सुधि प्रभुहि सुनाए ॥ 3 ॥
बार—बार कर मीजि, सीस धुनि गीधराज पछिताई ।
तुलसी प्रभु कृपालु तेहि औसर आइ गए दोउ भाई ॥ 4 ॥

jaṭāyusē bhēṅṭa
(3/12)

mērē ēkau hātha na lāgī.
gayō bapu bīti bādi kānana jyōm kalapalatā dāva dāgī.. 1.. dasarathasōm na prēma pratipālyau, hutō jō sakala jaga sākhī.
barabasa harata nisācara patisōm haṭhi na jānakī rākhī.. 2..
marata na mairā raghubīra bilōkē tāpasa bēṣa banā'ē.
cāhata calana prāna pāmvara binu siya-sudhi prabhuhi sunā'ē.. 3..

bāra-bāra kara mīn̄ji, sīsa dhuni gīdharāja pachitāī.
tulasī prabhu krpālu tēhi ausara ā'i ga'ē dō'u bhāī.. 4..

Lord Ram meets Jatau-I

Verse no. 3/12—[Verse nos. 3/12—3/16 describe Lord Ram's meeting with the injured Jatau, the old vulture who had fought valiantly with Ravana in an attempt to rescue Sita but was unable to protect her as he was mortally wounded. He fell down on the ground when Ravana clipped-off his wings with his sword. Lying bleeding and writhing in pain, Jatau concentrated his mind and heart in the holy feet of Lord Ram and waited for his arrival so that he could convey the developments regarding Sita to the Lord, and find an eternal rest for his soul in the presence of the Lord whom he knew to be a personified form of the Supreme Being.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram reached that spot while he was wondering in the wilds in search of Sita. He heard a soft and pitiful groan like someone dying from a little way off his path, and when he espied the cause he discovered Jatau. The Lord immediately recognized him as he had met him earlier also when the two had struck a friendship, and Jatau had said that he was an acquaintance of Dasrath, Lord Ram's father, and he would be in constantly on the vigil and stay near about to afford protection to the Lord, Sita and Laxman to the best of his ability. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 13.

Now, when Lord Ram descried Jatau in such a pathetic condition, he was extremely sorry and moved emotionally. He extended all love and affection that one would do to one's father, tended to Jatau's wounds, cleaned them with his long tresses, and picked him up gently onto his lap, resting his head on his arms. Jatau conveyed to the Lord all the tidings, and then though the Lord told him that if he wished he could grant him a long life but Jatau preferred to leave this mortal body which he would nevertheless have to one or the other day, but this unique opportunity of having the Lord tending to him and sitting so close to him won't come again. So, Jatau discarded his mortal body and obtained liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation. Say, how luck he was: while alive he offered himself at the service of the Lord, and while dying he had the Lord in front of his eyes. Lord Ram performed his last rites with tears in his eyes as he would have done for his own father. This was a rarest of rare privilege that was extended to Jatau by the Lord as not even Dasrath had got this benefit. In this singular way, Jatau made himself immortal in the annals of history, and even the gods found no sufficient words to praise his good fortune.

This entire episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 29—to Doha no. 32.]

[The vulture Jatau was full of anguish and remorse as he lay on the ground, mortally wounded and writhing in pain. He sorely lamented—] 'Alas! I have lost everything (or literally, I could not lay my hands on anything worthwhile!). Even as the Kalpa-creeper dies in a forest fire without being of any good to anyone, my body too was spent in vain (1).

The whole world is witness and knows very well that I and Dasrath were friends; we were affectionately acquainted with each other. But unfortunately I could not sustain (uphold, live up to) that relationship because when the king of demons (Ravana) was taking Sita away, I could not forcibly stop him from doing so (2).

Even at the time of my death (which is imminent), I could not see Lord Sri Ram attired as a hermit.

Now this sinful soul wishes to make its exit (from my sinful body) even before I could convey Sita's news, whereabouts and welfare to him (Sri Ram).' (3).

In this way, the king of vultures repeatedly wrings his hands and beats his head in utter frustration and despair. Just at that precise moment, Tulsidas' kind and gracious Lords, the two brothers (Sri Ram and Laxman)¹, came there. (4)

[¹The words “Tulsidas' kind and gracious Lords, the two brothers” (tulasī prabhu kṛpālu---dō'u bhā'ī) are very important in as much as they establish—and assert—that Tulsidas has equal respect for both Lord Ram and Laxman albeit he has focused his writings on Lord Ram as he is the Supreme Being himself.

Further, Tulsidas means that if Jatau, a vulture by birth, could inspire so much love and affection for himself in the heart of Sri Ram by asserting that he (Jatau) was a friend of Lord Ram's father, king Dasrath, so much so that the Lord treated the bird with the same respect as he would have had for his father as stressed in stanza 2 of this verse, Tulsidas goes a step further and says that: “Well, if this is the case then I too have a right to assert that the two brothers, Lord Sri Ram and Laxman, are dear to me equally, and they have affection for me as well.” This is because he, i.e. Tulsidas, too is a devotee of the Lord and loves him as dearly as did Jatau.]

(3 / 13)

राघौ गीध गोद करि लीन्हों ।
 नयन-सरोज सनेह-सलिल सुचि मनहु अरघजल दीन्हों ॥ 1 ॥
 सुनहु लषन ! खगपतिहि मिले बन मैं पितु-मरन न जान्यौ ।
 सहि न सक्यौ सो कठिन बिधाता, बड़ो पछु आजुहि भान्यौ ॥ 2 ॥
 बहु बिधि राम कह्यो तनु राखन, परम धीर नहि डोल्याँ ।
 रोकि, प्रेम, अवलोकि बदन-बिधु, बचन मनोहर बोल्यौ ॥ 3 ॥
 तुलसी प्रभु झूठे जीवन लागि समय न धोखो लैहौं ।
 जाको नाम मरत मुनिदुरलभ तुमहि कहाँ पुनि पैहौं ? ॥ 4 ॥

(3/13)

rāghau gīdha gōda kari līnhōm.

nayana-sarōja sanēha-salila suci manahu araghajala dīnhōm.. 1..
 sunahu laṣana! khagapatihi milē bana mairm pitu-marana na jān'yau.
 sahi na sakyau sō kaṭhina bidhātā, baṛō pachu ājuhi bhān'yau.. 2..
 bahu bidhi rāma kahyō tanu rākhana, parama dhīra nahi dōlyau.
 rōki, prēma, avalōki badana-bidhu, bacana manōhara bōlyau.. 3..
 tulasī prabhu jhūṭhē jīvana lagi samaya na dhōkhō laihaum.
 jākō nāma marata muniduralabha tumahi kahām̃ puni paihaum̃?.. 4..

Lord Ram meets Jatau-II

Verse no. 3/13—Lord Ram lifted the wounded Jatayu on to his lap, and washed him with his tears full of love and affection¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 30; and Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 31.]

Then he said, ‘Oh Laxman, listen! When I had met the vulture king in the forest, I forgot about the death of our father². But the wicked gods could not tolerate my peace and they destroyed even this solace which I had been left with (2).’

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 13.

It is to be noted here that Jatayu is the only and the exclusive character in the whole of the story of the Ramayana who has this privilege of being put on the same or even a notch higher pedestal than Dasrath. It is indeed remarkable that Lord Ram openly accepted him as his father given the fact that a vulture is a meat-eating bird. It indeed remarkable Lord Ram went further to honour Jatayu by cremating him with his own hands, something he didn’t do for his own father Dasrath. In Hindu system, it is the eldest son who gets this privilege, and it is a curse, or most unusual, that a father is cremated by someone else. However, by cremating Jatayu, Lord Ram gave him the rarest of rare privilege which is not even available to the gods, or for that matter to those great sages and ascetics who spend their entire lives in doing austerity and penances.

The underlying idea is that the only relationship that Lord Ram knows and acknowledges is that of sincere and abiding love, affection, devotion, submission and complete faith in him as the ‘Supreme Redeemer, Supreme Atma and Supreme Protector’ of creation. Anything less is not upto the mark. The Lord does not weigh the merits of a creature on the basis of his physical body, and by extension by the natural inclinations of this body such as what it would eat to survive or whether it does penances and austerities, because the body is nevertheless gross by nature and cannot be expected to behave like a sublime and holy entity. What matters is the driver of this body: the ‘soul’, or the ‘self’ that lives inside it and controls the body like a driver of a motor vehicle. If any accident occurs, it is not the vehicle that is to be blamed, but the driver whose carelessness that has caused it.

Therefore, if the soul of the individual creature is pure and reflects its purity by exhibiting characters possessed by the supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram, the ‘Parmatma’, the mutual attraction is spontaneous and natural. Only a pure magnet would attract iron, and not something that masquerades as a magnet while being merely a piece of lead. Polishing and pretensions can deceive the world, but not the Lord.

In the present context we deduce that albeit Jatayu was born as a meat-eating vulture that is universally regarded as sinful and vile, his Atma was purer than the rest of the creatures, and hence it qualified for the highest form of peace and blessedness that it indeed got.]

Then Lord Ram requested Jatayu to keep his body (not to die)³, but the courageous vulture did not move from his resolve, and said (3)—

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 31.]

‘Oh Lord! I wouldn't be cheated for this false life (i.e. I don't want to trade the rare opportunity I've got to attain salvation with living a life which is false and illusionary).

Well, he—whose name is unavailable even to the sages at the time of death—is standing before me. Say, in all sooth, where shall I find you again, where shall I find such a golden chance to attain liberation and deliverance again? [I'm not so stupid that I'll let go of such a golden and god-sent opportunity for attaining emancipation and salvation that leads the soul to eternal blessedness, beatitude and bliss by bargaining it with a life that is mortal.]⁴ (4).

[⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 31.]

(3 / 14)

नीके कै जानत राम हियो हौं ।
 प्रनतपाल, सेवक—कृपालु—चित, पितु पटतरहि दियो हौं ॥ 1 ॥
 त्रिजगजोनि—गत गीध, जनम भरि खाइ कुजंतु जियो हौं । महाराज सुकृती—समाज सब—ऊपर आजु कियो हौं ॥ 2 ॥
 श्रवन बचन, मुख नाम, रूप चख, राम उछंग लियो हौं ।
 तुलसी मो समान बड़भागी को कहि सकै बियो हौं ॥ 3 ॥

(3/14)

nīkē kai jānata rāma hiyō haum̃.
 pranatapāla, sēvaka-krpālu-cita, pitu paṭatarahi diyō haum̃.. 1.. trijagajōni-gata gīdha, janama bhari khā'i kujantu jiyō haum̃.
 mahārāja sukṛtī-samāja saba-ūpara āju kiyō haum̃.. 2..
 śravana bacana, mukha nāma, rūpa cakha, rāma uchaṅga liyō haum̃.
 tulasī mō samāna baṛabhāgī kō kahi sakai biyō haum̃.. 3..

Lord Ram meets Jatau-III

Verse no. 3/14—[Jatau continued—] ‘Oh Lord Sri Ram! I recognise the true nature and graciousness of your heart. You are the protector of those who have taken your shelter and refuge, and are kind, benevolent and merciful towards your servants (devotees, those who have surrendered themselves to you and serve you selflessly).

This is why you have compared me with your father (or, have raised me to the exalted stature of being your father)¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse no. 3/13, stanza no. 2 herein above.]

I was born from a lowly womb (i.e. I had a very low form of birth from an egg) in the family of vultures, and survived by eating numerous lowly, uneatable creatures (cadavers). Today, oh great king, you have raised such a vile creature (i.e. me) to the highest pedestal in the assembly of those who are righteous, noble and exalted! [Tell me, what more would I want!] (2).

Oh (how lucky am I)! My ears hear you speak; I am taking your holy name with my mouth; I am enjoying seeing your beautiful form sitting right before me, with my own eyes; and to top it all, you are having me in your lap!

Then say, who else is there who can call himself more lucky than me?² (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precedes Doha no. 31.]

(3 / 15)

मेरे जान तात ! कछू दिन जीजै ।
 देखिअ आपु सुवन-सेवासुख, मोहि पितुको सुख दीजै ॥ 1 ॥
 दिब्य-देह, इच्छा-जीवन जग बिधि मनाइ मैंगि लीजै ।
 हरि-हर-सुजस सुनाइ, दरस दै, लोग कृतारथ कीजै ॥ 2 ॥
 देखि बदन, सुनि बचन-अमिय, तन रामनयन-जल भीजै ।
 बोल्यो बिहग बिहंसि रघुबर ! बलि, कहाँ सुभाय, पतीजै ॥ 3 ॥
 मेरे मरिबे सम न चारि फल, होंहि तौ, क्यों न कहीजै ।
 तुलसी प्रभु दियो उतरु मौन हीं, परी मानो प्रेम सहीजै ॥ 4 ॥

(3/15)

mērē jāna tāta! kachū dina jījai.
 dēkhi'a āpu suvana-sēvāsukha, mōhi pitukō sukha dījai.. 1..
 dibya-dēha, icchā-jīvana jaga bidhi manā'i mamṅi lījai.
 hari-hara-sujasa sunā'i, darasa dai, lōga kṛtāratha kījai.. 2..
 dēkhi badana, suni bacana-amiya, tana rāmanayana-jala bhījai.
 bōlyō bihaga bihamṣi raghubara! bali, kahauṁ subhāya, patījai.. 3..
 mērē maribē sama na cāri phala, hōnhi tau, kyōm na kahījai.
 tulasī prabhu diyō utaru mauna hīṁ, parī mānō prēma sahījai.. 4..

Lord Ram meets Jatau-IV

Verse no. 3/15—Lord Ram said, ‘Oh Dear (tāta)! In my view, you should live a bit longer for a few more days. Give me an opportunity to serve you as a son, so that you can enjoy the privileges of being a father¹ (1).

[¹This emotion is an extension of what Lord Ram has said in verse no. 3/13, stanza no. 2 herein above. Lord says in essence that he hadn't been able to serve his own father Dasrath at Ayodhya, but at least he would be able to serve his ‘another father’ Jatau if he agrees to live a bit longer. Since Jatau was a bird, it would be easier for the latter to remain close in the vicinity of Lord Ram whom he should treat as his son, and this would also give the Lord an opportunity to serve Jatau in the best way he could so that it would mitigate his sense of sorrow at losing his human father to some extent.]

Gods are now pleased with you, so ask them for a divine form and a boon to live according to your wishes, and please everyone by praising and singing the Glory of Lord Vishnu and Lord Shiva (2).²

[²Lord Ram advises Jatau to discard this evil body of a vulture and assume some holy form, or the form of a holy Spirit like one of the gods, and live in that form for as long as he wants while enjoying the benefits of heaven.]

Then, hearing such sweet-as-nectar voice and words of Lord Ram, and finding his body drenched in the tears overflowing from Lord Ram's eyes, Jatau looked up to him and said, 'Son! I'm so exceptionally lucky and so very glad! Believe me, I speak from my heart (3).

Even the four fruits (i.e. "Artha" or prosperity, wealth; "Dharma" or righteousness; "Kaam" or wish fulfillment; and "Moksha" or liberation from transmigration of soul) are no match to my death (while I am in your arms)!

[So, what do you expect me to ask for? Nay, I don't want any of the forms you have suggested as ultimately my soul would be trapped in that form. Nay, I don't want any entrapments now. Even a holy body is a trap for the soul. The true freedom for the soul is when it is freed from all encumbrances and becomes one with the Supreme Soul. I don't want to be cheated at this juncture by any of the honey-traps you have promised me. I yearn for final liberation and deliverance that would give eternal salvation and emancipation to me and rest to my soul. I want beatitude and felicity and bliss that cannot come with assuming any form, holy or otherwise as all of them have their own set of problems. Say, even if I become god-like, will I become eternal? Surely not, because when the good effects of my service to you wears off, I would have to suffer the consequences of all that I do in the new form which I may assume now. What would happen then? When ultimately my soul would yearn for peace, will I get to see you again, or place my head on your lap again? So, my answer is 'no', I don't want all this stuff. To wit, if thou wiltst forsooth want to express thine gratitude to me, and if thou can grant emancipation to a soul, then grant me eternal bliss and beatitude by way of salvation and deliverance, nothing less than that my soul yearnest for!]

Tulsidas says that this argument and logic of Jatau made Lord Ram speechless because it was the irrefutable truth of existence. Lord Ram's silence was a seal of approval of Jatau's devotion and love for the Lord, as well as his views regarding his destiny that was sealed in the form of his emancipation and salvation inspite of his having a body that is regarded as most despicable and vile and lowly (because it was that of a vulture) (4).

(3 / 16)

मेरो सुनियो, तात ! सँदेसो ।
 सीय-हरन जनि कहेहु पितासों, हैहै अधिक अँदेसो ॥ 1 ॥
 रावरे पुन्यप्रताप-अनल महँ अलप दिननि रिपु दहिहैं । कुलसमेत सुरसभा दसानन समाचार सब कहिहैं ॥ 2 ॥
 सुनि प्रभु-बचन, राखि उर मूरति, चरन-कमल सिर नाई ।
 चल्यो नभ सुनत राम-कल-कीरति, अरु निज भाग बड़ाई ॥ 3 ॥
 पितु-ज्यों गीध-क्रिया करि रघुपति अपने धाम पढायो ।
 ऐसो प्रभु बिसारि तुलसी सठ ! तू चाहत सुख पायो ॥ 4 ॥

(3/16)

mērō suniyō, tāta! samḍēsō.
 sīya-harana jani kahēhu pitāsōm, hvaihai adhika amḍēsō.. 1..
 rāvarē pun'yapratāpa-anala maham̃ alapa dinani ripu dahihaim̃.
 kulasamēta surasabhā dasānana samācāra saba kahihaim̃.. 2..
 suni prabhu-bacana, rākhi ura mūrati, carana-kamala sira nā'ī.
 calyō nabha sunata rāma-kala-kīrati, aru nija bhāga barā'ī.. 3..
 pitu-jyōm̃ gīdha-kriyā kari raghupati apanē dhāma paṭhāyō.
 aisō prabhu bisāri tulasī saṭha! tū cāhata sukha pāyō.. 4..

Lord Ram meets Jatau-V

Verse no. 3/16—[Lord Sri Ram replied to Jatau—] ‘Oh Dear (tāta)! Please hear my message. Do not tell father (Dasrath) anything about Sita being abducted, as this will enhance his sorrows and worries¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 31.]

All the enemies and opponents would burn themselves soon in the fire of your glory, fame, righteousness and noble deeds. [This is a way of Lord Ram showing respect to Jatau.]

At that time, Ravana would himself, along with all his kin and relatives, go and convey all this news in the assembly of Gods. [By saying these words, Sri Ram has ensured a place for Ravana amongst the ‘assembly of Gods’ in the heaven. Indeed, though being a ferocious, cruel, vile and most despised creature because he was a ‘demon’ by birth, Ravana and his near and dear ones nevertheless went to the heaven just by the virtue of them constantly remembering Lord Ram, which, in practical terms, became a sort of meditation for them even as a spiritual aspirant constantly remembers the Lord and repeats his holy name to attain the Lord. This fact is endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 45; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71; (iii) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.] (2).’

Hearing these words (of Sri Ram), keeping his beauteous image in his mind and heart, bowing his head reverentially at his holy feet, and hearing Sri Ram's fames and glories as well as his own being sung in the sky (by the Gods), the vulture left for his heavenly abode through the path of the sky. [Here, by saying ‘Jatau went to heaven’, it alludes to his soul that went to the heaven or the abode of the Lord.]² (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 32.]

Raghupati (Sri Ram) performed the last rites of the vulture as if he were his (Sri Ram's) own father, and thereafter, the Lord sent him to his own abode³.

Tulsidas addresses himself and wonders, ‘Oh you idiot and wicked fool! Do you want to have comfort, happiness, joy and bliss by forsaking (or forgetting, ignoring, neglecting, being opposed to) such a (benign, merciful, gracious, compassionate, benevolent, magnanimous, munificent) Lord?’⁴ (4).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 32.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precedes Doha no. 33.]

शबरीसे भेंट
राग सूहो
(3/17/1)

सबरी सोइ उठी, फरकत बाम बिलोचन-बाहु।
सगुन सुहावने सूचत मुनि-मन-अगम उछाहु॥
मुनि-अगम उर आनंद, लोचन सजल, तनु पुलकावली।
तृन-पर्नसाल बनाइ, जल भरि कलस, फल चाहन चली॥
मंजुल मनोरथ करति, सुमिरति बिप्र-बरबानी भली।
ज्यो कलप-बेलि सकेलि सुकृत सुफूल-फूली सुख-फली॥ 1॥

śabarīsē bhēṅṭa
rāga sūhō
(3/17-1)

sabarī sō'i uṭhī, pharakata bāma bilōcana-bāhu.
saguna suhāvanē sūcata muni-mana-agama uchāhu..
muni-agama ura ānanda, lōcana sajala, tanu pulakāvalī.
tr̥ṇa-parnasāla banā'i, jala bhari kalasa, phala cāhana calī..
maṅjula manōratha karati, sumirati bipra-barabānī bhalī.
jyōm kalapa-bēli sakēli sukr̥ṭa suphūla-phūlī sukha-phalī.. 1..

Lord Ram's meeting with Sabari

[Geetawali describes the meeting of Lord Ram and his ardent devotee Sabari in beautiful words. The text has been divided into eight verses, each having four lines.

The Lord's meeting with Sabari has also been described in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 36.

After granting liberation and emancipation to Jatau, Lord Ram moved ahead in the direction told to him by Jatau. He reached the hermitage of Sabari, an old tribal woman devotee of the Lord who had been waiting the Lord's arrival for a long time.

*A brief life-sketch of Sabari is given at the end of this verse no. 3/17/1.

She extended motherly-like affection to Lord Ram and Laxman, worshipped them and fed them with fruits she had plucked herself. Lord Ram had preached her the famous 'nine-deemed paths of Bhakti'. Finally, like Jatau, she discarded her gross body in the fire of Tapa and her last rites were done by Lord Ram himself! Its again noteworthy that Lord Ram had done the last rites of another living being who was regarded as out-cast by the society. Lord Ram made Jatau exalted by elevating him to the high pedestal of being his 'father' by performing his last rites with his own hands, and now he elevates Sabari to the rank of his own mother by performing her last rites himself. Refer: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 36 along with Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it; and (ii) Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse no. 3/17/8.

This fact has also been reiterated in ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’ of sage Veda Vyas, Aranya Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 39—41.

Before attaining salvation, Sabari had told Lord Ram to proceed towards lake Pampa where he will meet Sugriv and his companions who would help the Lord to trace and recover Sita. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10-12 that precedes Doha no. 36.]

Verse no. 3/17/1—Ever since Sabari woke up today morning, her left eyelids and left arms are fluttering (quivering; palpitating, vibrating)¹. These auspicious signs indicate that some good tidings which would give joy and happiness even to the sages and hermits are in the offing.

Her heart has filled with immense bliss and joy which is rare even for the sages. Her eyes are full of tears, and the body is thrilled.

She erected a thatched hut of reeds and grass, filled a pot with water, and started towards the forest path (from where she expected Sri Ram and Laxman to arrive). [To wit, she hurriedly repaired her hut and prepared it to welcome Lord Ram and Laxman whom she had been expecting for a very long time. The auspicious signs she witnessed convinced her that her wait is about to end.]

She has pleasant hopes in her heart and repeatedly recalls the auspicious prophesy made by her preceptor sage Matang (that she will have the good fortune of seeing the divine form of Lord Sri Ram one day of the days).

It appears that the Kalpa-creeper, already blooming with beautiful flowers, has collected all the rewards (fruits) of the good deeds there are in Sabari’s fate, converted them into fruits of bliss, happiness and joy, and has got itself laden with them². (3/17/1).

¹It is believed that if the left arms and eyes of a male flutters then it is deemed a bad sign, whereas for a woman it is a good omen.

²Here, the creeper is Sabari, the flowers are her virtues and noble characters, the good deeds are the long services she had rendered to sage Matang after being castrated by the society and condemned by it, and the fruit is her final reward in the form of having Darshan or divine and holy viewing of the Lord, followed by her emancipation and final salvation.

*According to the story of Ramayana, Shabari was a woman belonging to a forest tribe called ‘Shabari’. This tribe was classified as Shudras or lower caste, and sustained themselves by collecting and selling honey and fruits from the forest trees. Being of a low caste, she is said have been ostracized by others. She served a sage named Matanga very devotedly. The sage was a realised soul, and so pleased was he with her devotion and service that he blessed her at the time of leaving his body that she would find her emancipation and salvation when Lord Ram visits her while searching for Sita. Like her Guru, Shabari too left her mortal body after having the privilege of meeting and worshipping the Lord in person by lighting the pyre herself with her mystical powers. According to Adhyatma Ramayana of sage Veda Vyas, it was Lord Ram who had performed her last rites himself, a rare privilege that was even denied to his own worldly father Dasrath.

Shabari used to live in the hermitage where earlier sage Matanga lived. This hermitage was near Mount Rishyamook where Sugriv, the exiled younger brother of the king of monkeys Vali, lived with his close confidantes Hanuman, Jamvant, Naal and Neel etc. This place was about ten Yojans or eighty miles from Kishkindha, the capital of the forest kingdom of which Vali was the king.

There is a story about Lake Pampa on the banks of which she lived. The great sage Matang had his hermitage here. Shabari used to get up very early and clean the path around this lake before her Guru went there for his daily bath and other chores. It so happened that one day, the sages and seers who lived in that area saw her cleaning the path leading to the lake very early in the morning. Since she was of a low caste, they cursed and scolded her because they regarded her appearance as defiling the place. This misplaced notion of superiority and high stature immensely displeased the Lord. So as soon as those haughty and proud sages went and took a dip in that lake, its water turned turbid, polluted and infested by warms and filth. When Sri Ram had gone there during his forest exile, the sages and seers requested him to purify that lake. Sri Ram, being all-knowing, knew the secret behind that pollution, and in order to teach those sages a lesson of their lives, he asked them to request Sabari to take a dip in it. As soon as she did it, the water regained its former pristine purity, and the lake its former exceptional scenic beauty. This made the haughty sages and seers feel ashamed at their ignorance and behaviour.

According to the story of Ramayana, Sri Ram had visited her hermitage and enjoyed the fruits offered by her just like he would have enjoyed them if they were given to him by his mother. In the 'Ram-Sarawali of Surdas', verse no. 11, it is said that 'Sabari was a long time ardent devotee and a humble follower of Raghupati (Sri Ram). He accepted and ate fruits offered by her, preached her on the concept of complete devotion, and then liberated her by giving her residence in his own abode.'

It was Shabari who had advised Sri Ram to go towards the Rishyamook mountain and make friends with Sugriv, the monkey king, who in turn would help the Lord in finding out Sita and freeing her from the clutches of her captors.

The entire episode of Sabari appears in Ram Charit Manas in Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precede Doha no. 34, to Doha no. 36. In these verses of Ram Charit Manas, the episode of Sabari is described in detail.]

(3/17/2)

प्रानप्रिय पाहुने ऐहैं राम-लषन मेरे आजु।
जानत जन-जियकी मृदु चित राम गरीबनिवाज॥
मृदु चित गरीबनिवाज आजु बिराजिहैं गृह आइकै।
ब्रह्मादि संकर-गौरी पूजित पुजिहौं अब जाइकै॥
लहि नाथ हौं रघुनाथ-बानो पतितपावन पाइकै।
दुहु ओर लाहु अघाइ तुलसी तीसरेहु गुन गाइकै॥ 2॥

(3/17-2)

prānapriya pāhunē aihaiṁ rāma-laṣana mērē āju.
jānata jana-jiyakiṁ mṛdu cita rāma garībanivāja..
mṛdu cita garībanivāja āju birājihaiṁ gr̥ha ā'ikai.
brahmādi saṅkara-gaurī pūjita pujihaurṁ aba jā'ikai..
lahi nātha haurṁ raghunātha-bānō patitapāvana pā'ikai.

duhu ōra lāhu aghā'i tulasī tīsarēhu guna gā'ikai.. 2..

Verse no. 3/17/2—[She contemplates—] ‘Ah! How lucky am I today that my dearer-than-life guests Sri Ram and Laxman would come.

Lord Sri Ram—who is of a sweet temperament, is the sustainer and benefactor of the underdog, the poor, lowly, humble and downtrodden—knows what is inside the mind of his devotees (because he is all-knowing, all-pervading, omniscient, omnipresent and resides in the heart of his devotees).

Now, I shall (go and) worship Lord Sri Ram who is worshipped by Brahma, Shiva, Parvati and other Gods.

Invoking Raghunath's (Sri Ram's) promise and famed glories that he makes even the downtrodden, the sinful, the lowly and the wretched ones into pure and holy ones, I shall now see him as my “Lord” (i.e. as my benefactor, liberator, purifier, sustainer and protector as well as one who provides for my succour and solace).

Thereby, I shall, as a result, reap multifold benefits: the rarest of rare rewards that one can have in this existential world (i.e. I will be getting the rewards of being alive, and especially at a time when the Lord has manifested himself on this earth and is passing this way so that I can personally serve and worship him), and also the rarest of rare rewards by way of spiritual bliss and beatitude that comes with attaining liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation.

Besides this, the third beneficiary would be Tulsidas who would benefit by singing the virtues and glories of the Lord for eternity¹ (3/17/2).’

[¹The point to note here is that Sabari has kept Tulsidas in mind while thinking of the benefits she will get on seeing Sri Ram. Perhaps Tulsidas was present as a ‘spirit’ on that occasion to witness that rarest of rare occasion just as he was present at Janakpur garden where Sri Ram had met Sita. Lovely indeed!

Sabari would become Videha Mukta, i.e. she would discard her gross mortal body and attain salvation and emancipation when she meets Lord Ram, while Tulsidas would become Jivan Mukta, i.e. he would continue to live in this body but attain an equivalent sense of bliss and beatitude by singing the divine stories of Lord Ram as well as the Lord’s holy name and glories for as long as he does not one day attain the same fate as that of Sabari!

The narration of these verses is in the present tense which also indicates the poet's presence on the occasion in a ‘spirit’ form. Here he acts as a scribe, a correspondent, a first hand witness to the unfolding drama of ardent devotion, matchless faith and conviction, as well as of the liberation of a downtrodden, an outcaste and an old wretched lady who was lifted instantaneously to a pedestal higher than that of a mother. This will be evident as we read on—]

(3/17/3)

दोना रुचिर रचे पूरन कंद—मूल, फल—फूल ।
 अनुपम अमियहुतें अंबक अवलोकत अनुकूल ॥
 अनुकूल अंबक अंब ज्यों निज डिंब हित सब आनिकै ।
 सुंदर सनेहसुधा सहस जनु सरस राखे सानिकै ॥
 छन भवन, छन बाहर, बिलोकति पंथ भूपर पानिकै । दोउ भाइ आये सबरिकाके प्रेम—पन पहिचानिकै ॥ 3 ॥

(3/17-3)

dōnā rucira racē pūrana kanda-mūla, phala-phūla.
 anupama amiyahutēm ambaka avalōkata anukūla..
 anukūla ambaka amba jyōm nija ḍimba hita saba ānikai.
 sundara sanēhasudhā sahasa janu sarasa rākhē sānikai..
 chana bhavana, chana bāhara, bilōkati pantha bhūpara pānikai.
 dō'u bhā'i āyē sabarikākē prēma-pana pahicānikai.. 3..

Verse no. 3/17/3—Then, Sabari made beautiful cups or bowls (out of green and freshly plucked leaves), and filled them with the most pleasant, the sweetest and the most appealing edible roots, stems, fruits and flowers that she could find, all of which were most succulent, tastier than Amrit (elixir of life) and most charming to behold.

Even as a mother gathers, prepares and keeps the best of things for her loving child, she brought most attractive and lovely fruits etc. for the Lord, dipped them symbolically in the nectar of love and affection which was thousands of times more succulent and sweeter than Amrit, and kept them away safely for Lord Sri Ram.

She spiritedly went inside her hut one moment, came out horridly a moment later, shaded her old worn-out eyes with her palms that acted like a hood over her thick set of eyebrows, and looked intently, expectantly, yearningly and most eagerly down the path from where Lord Sri Ram was expected to approach her hermitage.

Just at that moment, realizing the intensity of Sabari's love, affection, devotion, endearment and yearning, the two brothers came to her Ashram (3/17/3).

(3/17/4)

स्रवन सुनत चली, आवत देखि लषन-रघुराउ ।
 सिथिल सनेह कहै, 'है सुपना बिधि, कैधौ सति भाउ' ॥
 सति भाउ कै सपनो ? निहारि कुमार कोसलरायके ।
 गहे चरन, जे अघहरन नत-जन-बचन-मानस-कायके ॥
 लघु-भाग-भाजन उदधि उमग्यो लाभ-सुख चित चाय कै ।
 सो जननि ज्यों आदरी सानुज, राम भूखे भायकै ॥ 4 ॥

(3/17-4)

savana sunata calī, āvata dēkhi laṣana-raghurā'u.
 sithila sanēha kahai, 'hai supanā bidhi, kaidhauṁ sati bhā'u'..
 sati bhā'u kai sapanō? nihāri kumāra kōsalarāyakē.
 gahē carana, jē aghaharana nata-jana-bacana-mānasa-kāyakē..
 laghu-bhāga-bhājana udadhi umagyō lābha-sukha cita cāya kai.
 sō janani jyōm ādarī sānuja, rāma bhūkhē bhāyakai.. 4..

Verse no. 3/17/4—When Sabari heard of the arrival of Lord Sri Ram and Laxman, she went forward, and seeing them with her eyes she became overwhelmed with affection, wondering in amazement at her good fortune and the divine sight she beheld—'Oh God! Is this a dream or a reality?'

Saying this, she welcomed the Lord by falling at his feet and clasping them with her hands. These are the same holy feet that provide liberation to the devotees from all their sins. [This is because the Lord's holy feet are not only so pure and holy but they also possess so great a dynamic force and energy in them that any thing that is unholy and unclean immediately is transmuted into one that is holy and clean as soon as it comes into contact with these feet.]

Realising that she is immensely blessed, most fortunate, exceptionally lucky and very privileged though being of a low birth, an ocean of joy emerged from Sabari's heart. The Lord regarded her as if she was his own mother. (3/17/4).

(3/17/5)

प्रेम-पट पाँवड़े देत, सुअरघ बिलोचन-बारि ।
 आस्रम लै दिए आसन पंकज-पाँय पखारि ॥
 पद-पंकजात पखारि पूजे, पंथ-श्रम-बिरति भये ।
 फल-फूल अंकुर-मूल धरे सुधारि भरि दोना नये ॥
 पुभु खात पुलकित गात, स्वाद सराहि आदर जनु जये ।
 फल चारिहू फल चारि दहि, परचारि-फल सबरी दये ॥ 5 ॥

(3/17-5)

prēma-ṣaṭa pām̐varē dēta, su'aragha bilōcana-bāri.
 āsrama lai di'ē āsana paṅkaja-pām̐ya pakhāri..
 pada-paṅkajāta pakhāri pūjē, pantha-śrama-birati bhayē.
 phala-phūla aṅkura-mūla dharē sudhāri bhari dōnā nayē..
 pubhu khāta pulakita gāta, svāda sarāhi ādara janu jayē.
 phala cārihū phala cāri dahi, paracāri-phala sabarī dayē.. 5..

Verse no. 3/17/5—She laid a red-carpet of affection to welcome them (Sri Ram and Laxman), washed their feet by the water of her tears, and then brought them reverentially inside the hermitage and seated them.

She washed Lord Ram's feet and worshipped him, and this helped Lord Ram to overcome the weariness of the journey. Then she brought edible bulbs, roots, fruits, and germinated seeds etc. in new bowls made of leaves and placed them in front of them (Sri Ram-Laxman). Lord Ram started eating them, all the while relishing them and enjoying their delicious taste—thereby showing his due respects to the poor old woman.

Symbolically, Lord Ram, by eating those fruits, devoured all the four worldly fruits¹ that Sabari may have accumulated over time due to her austerities and penances, while compensating her with divine fruits that are far superior and rarer to obtain (in the form of spiritual bliss and beatitude, as well as liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation for her soul). (3/17/5).

[¹The usual fruits or rewards one gets for a well-conducted life are the following: “Artha” (prosperity), “Dharma” (righteousness), “Kaam” (wish fulfillment), and “Moksha” (freedom). But these rewards are not imperishable and it may happen that they may be nullified by some evil deeds done by the creature even unawares.

So, Lord Ram replaced these transient rewards with the fruit of devotion and eternal bliss that are a rarity to attain.]

(3/17/6)

सुमन बरषि, हरषे सुर, मुनि मुदित सराहि सिहात ।
 'केहि रुचि केहि छुधा सानुज माँगि माँगि प्रभु खात ॥
 प्रभु खात माँगत देति सबरी, राम भोगी जागके' ।
 पुलकत प्रसंसत सिद्ध-सिव-सनकादि भाजन भागके ॥
 बालक सुमित्रा कौसिलाके पाहुने फल-सागके ।
 सुनि समुझि तुलसी जानु रामहि बस अमल अनुरागके ॥ 6 ॥ sumana baraṣi, haraṣē sura, muni mudita sarāhi sihāta.

(3/17-6)

 'kēhi ruci kēhi chudhā sānuja māṁgi māṁgi prabhu khāta..
 prabhu khāta māṁgata dēti sabarī, rāma bhōgī jāgakē'.
 pulakata prasansata sid'dha-siva-sanakādi bhājana bhāgakē.. bālaka sumitrā kausilākē pāhunē phala-sāgakē.
 suni samujhi tulasī jānu rāmahi basa amala anurāgakē.. 6..

Verse no. 3/17/6—The Gods are happily showering flowers and feeling very glad, while the sages and saints too feel extremely delighted and praise Sabari for her good fortune.

They observed, 'Look how Lord Ram and Laxman are enjoying the offerings (of fruits, edible roots and stems) made by her (Sabari), and relishing their taste as if they were very hungry.

Lord Sri Ram (as the macrocosmic Viraat Purush or the Supreme Soul of creation) is the consumer of the various offerings made in a fire sacrifice. It is a great marvel that he is relishing these ordinary and humble fruits, desiring more of them, and Sabari is also repeatedly giving him the fruits one by one with great joy and cherish in her heart'.

This is how Sabari is being praised by the most exalted and fortunate persons such as the Siddhas (mystics, attained ones), sages Sankadi etc., and Lord Shiva. They all feel thrilled and emotional at the sight of the Lord being served by her.

Ah! The sons of Kaushalya and Sumitra (Sri Ram and Laxman respectively)¹ are partaking (or relishing, enjoying the taste of) raw fruits and vegetables offered to them (by Sabari) as her most honoured guests.

[¹By referring to their mothers, Tulsidas means that Lord Sri Ram and Laxman were born to queens, were accustomed to most delicious of foods, and were pampered with the choicest of delicacies. But today, in order to uphold the sanctity of the old Sabari's love and affection for them, they are relishing raw fruits and vegetable products as if they were the most delicious and choicest of eatables offered in the royal palace by their respective mothers.]

Tulsidas asserts that after hearing what he (Tulsidas) says, one must become certain and convinced that Sri Ram is moved only by, or is subject to control only by, or can be overcome only by devotion and love which are sincere, pure and without any trace of deceit, and by nothing else².

[²Indeed, even the most humble, downtrodden, out castes and lowly creatures were embraced by Sri Ram relying on the basis of their having undiluted love, affection and devotion of the highest order for the Lord. Some of these examples are the following—the Kols, Kirats, Bhils (forest tribal), Nishad (the boatman), Guha (cave dwellers), vulture (Jatau), Sabari (the outcaste old lady), monkeys (Sugriv), bears (Jamvant), demons (Vibhishan) etc.] (3/17/6).

(3 / 17/7)

रघुबर अँचइ उठे, सबरी करि प्रनाम कर जोरि।
 हौं बलि बलि गई, पुरई मंजु मनोरथ मोरि॥
 पुरई मनोरथ, स्वारथहु परमारथहु पूरन करी।
 अघ—अवगुनन्हिकी कोठरी करि कृपा मुद मंगल भरी॥
 तापस—किरातिनि—कोल मृदु मूरति मनोहर मन धरी।
 सिर नाइ, आयसु पाइ गवने, परमनिधि पाले परी॥ 7॥

(3/17-7)

raghubara am̐ca'i uṭhē, sabarī kari pranāma kara jōri.
 haum̐ bali bali ga'i, pura'i man̐ju manōratha mōri..
 pura'i manōratha, svārathahu paramārathahu pūrana karī.
 agha-avagunanhikī kōṭharī kari krpā muda maṅgala bhari..
 tāpasa-kirātini-kōla mṛḍu mūrati manōhara mana dharī.
 sira nā'i, āyasu pā'i gavanē, paramanidhi pālē pari.. 7..

Verse no. 3/17/7—[After eating—] Raghubar (Sri Ram) drank a sip of water (i.e. he sipped a little quantity of water just enough to clean his mouth), and got up.

Then Sabari brought together her hands and joined her palms as a sign of surrender and prayer. She bowed her head reverentially before Lord Ram and said, 'I sacrifice myself upon you (literally, thank you very much indeed) for you have fulfilled my most earnest desire.

You have fulfilled my (life long) quest and have also satisfied my self interest related to this mundane existence (by accepting my fruits, by being my honoured guest and letting me serve you with the same affection as you would have allowed your own mother), as well as my spiritual well being (by ensuring my emancipation and salvation).

I was a store-house (treasury, fount) of sins, evils, vices, unrighteousness and what not, but you have (eliminated all these and) filled it instead with happiness, bliss, joy and auspiciousness.'

At that time, the hermits and sages who had practiced austerities and penances, as well as the Kirats and Kols and other such forest-dwelling tribes (who were present on that happy and auspicious occasion), established the Lord's beautiful, pleasant and magnificent image in their respective hearts, bowed their heads in front of him (in reverence and to pay obeisance), got his permission (to leave), obtained the most precious gift (literally, wealth) of devotion, affection and love for the Lord, and then went their ways. (3/17/7).

(3/17/8)

सिय-सुधि सब कही नख-सिख निरखि-निरखि दोउ भाइ ।
 दै दै प्रदच्छिना करति प्रनाम, न प्रेम अघाइ ॥
 अति प्रीति मानस राखि रामहि, राम-धामहि सो गई ।
 तेहि मातु-ज्यो रघुनाथ अपने हाथ जल-अंजलि दई ॥
 तुलसी-भनित, सबरी-प्रनति, रघुबर-प्रकृति करुनामई ।
 गावत, सुनत, समुझत भगति हिय होय प्रभु पद नित नई ॥ 8 ॥

(3/17-8)

siya-sudhi saba kahī nakha-sikha nirakhi-nirakhi dō'u bhā'i.
 dai dai pradacchinā karati pranāma, na prēma aghā'i..
 ati prīti mānasa rākhi rāmahi, rāma-dhāmahi sō ga'ī.
 tēhi mātu-jyōm raghunātha apanē hātha jala-anjali da'ī..
 tulasī-bhanita, sabarī-pranati, raghubara-prakṛti karunāma'ī.
 gāvata, sunata, samujhata bhagati hiya hōya prabhu pada nita na'ī.. 8..

Verse no. 3/17/8—Sabari gave Lord Ram the entire news about Sita. Then, watching the beautiful countenance of the two brothers, she reverentially circumambulated them repeatedly even as her affection (motherly love) for them knew no bounds.

She made her heart the abode of Lord Ram, and brimming with devotion, she went to the heavenly abode of the Lord. Lord Ram cremated her and performed her last rites as befitting his own mother.

By singing the verses of Tulsidas, remembering the prayers and devotion of Sabari and singing the praises of the Lord of a benevolent and merciful nature, one can surely achieve the Eternal Blissful state of consciousness (existence) obtained by attaining the Shanti Pad (i.e. by obtaining the Holy Feet of the Lord that gives eternal peace and bliss to the soul of the creature). (3/17/3).

ऋष्यमूकपर राम
 राग केदारा
 (4/1)

भूषन-बसन बिलोकत सियके ।
 प्रेम-बिबस मन, कंप पुलक तनु, नीरजनयन नीर भरे पियके ॥ 1 ॥
 सकुचत कहत, सुमिरि उर उमगत, सील-सनेह-सुगुनगन तियके ।
 स्वामि-दसा-लखि लषन सखा कपि, पिघले हैं आँच माठ मानो धियके ॥ 2 ॥
 सोचत हानि मानि मन, गुनि-गुनि गये निघटि फल सकल सुकियके ।
 बरने जामवंत तेहि अवसर, बचन बिबेक बीररस बियके ॥ 3 ॥
 धीर बीर सुनि समुझि परसपर, बल-उपाय उघटत निज हियके ।
 तुलसिदास यह समउ कहेतें कबि लागत निपट निटुर जड़ जियके ॥ 4 ॥

r̥ṣyamūkapara rāma
rāga kēdārā

(4/1)

bhūṣana-basana bilōkata siyakē.

prēma-bibasa mana, kampa pulaka tanu, nīrajanayana nīra bharē piyakē.. 1..

sakucata kahata, sumiri ura umagata, sīla-sanēha-sugunagana tiyakē.

svāmi-dasā-lakhi laṣana sakhā kapi, pighalē hair̥m ām̥ca māṭha m̥nō ghiyakē..2..

sōcata hāni māni mana, guni-guni gayē nighaṭi phala sakala sukiyakē.

baranē jānavanta tēhi avasara, bacana bibēka bīrarsa biyakē.. 3..

dhīra bīra suni samujhi parasapara, bala-upāya ughaṭata nija hiyakē.

tulasidāsa yaha sama'u kahētēm kabi lāgata nipaṭa niṭhura jaṛa jiyakē.. 4..

Lord Ram's meeting with Sugriv

Verse no. 4/1—[As advised by Sabari, Lord Ram wended his way towards Lake Pampa and seeing its pleasant surroundings he tarried there for a while to take rest and refresh himself as well as Laxman. From there the Lord moved to the foothills of the Rishyamook mountain. Sugriv, the monkey prince of the kingdom of Kishkindha abided there with his few chosen companions after he was expelled from the capital by his elder brother Baali due to some unfortunate misunderstanding between the two brothers.

When Sugriv espied Lord Ram and Laxman wandering below he was sore affright, thinking that his inimical brother has sent some warrior to locate him and kill him in exile. So, to find out the truth, he sent Hanuman, one of his trusted companions. Hanuman, who in due course would become Lord Ram's most trusted and faithful follower and devotee, came down the slope disguised as a young Brahmin. He asked Lord Ram who he was and why was he wandering and looking here and there so eagerly as if searching for some lost thing. The Lord briefed him about his condition, whereby Hanuman immediately realized who he was: forsooth Lord Ram was no one else but Lord Vishnu for whose arrival the gods had been waiting for so long disguised as monkeys and bears as advised by their patriarch Brahma, the creator. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187 and Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that follow it.

Hanuman and Lord Ram whereat had an emotional meeting, with Hanuman falling at the Lord's feet and clasping it with devotion, and Lord Ram lifting him and affectionately embracing him. After that, Hanuman told Lord Ram about his master Sugriv, and proposed that they become friends, with the assurance that Sugriv would do his best to help the Lord find and rescue Sita.

Lord Ram, wise as he was, realised that the enterprise of finding Sita and rescuing her was no mean task, and that he would need help in any form it came. If that help meant the support of an army, so much the better. So, seizing the opportunity, Lord readily agreed, whereat Hanuman made the two brothers sit on his shoulders and took them up the mountain to its summit.

Hanuman introduced the two brothers to Sugriv with a hint to the latter that if they became friends it would be for mutual benefit. To wit, Hanuman subtly hinted to Sugriv that Lord Ram may help him settle scores with his enemy brother Baali and restore his rightful claim to the throne of Kishkindha, and in return Sugriv must oblige the Lord to locate and recover his wife Sita. It was a gain-gain situation for both, each being able to help the other's cause. So a solemn deal of friendship was made, with Hanuman and others as well as the fire as witnesses.

This part of the story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no.15 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 4.

After making friendship with Sugriv, Lord Ram sat down with him and both exchanged news and information about each other. Then Sugriv showed him some of the ornaments and pieces of clothes that Sita had thrown from the sky as Ravana's chariot was passing over the Rishyamook mountain towards Lanka. She thought it wisely that if anyone picks them up and showed them to the Lord when he comes that way searching for her trail, these things would help to convince the Lord that she was being taken in the direction where the Lord was heading. It also helped to establish the authenticity of Sugriv's story about his seeing Sita being taken away by Ravana.

Sugriv had picked them up at that time, and now he showed them to the Lord for identification. Then, Sugriv promised the Lord that he would do whatever was necessary and within his means to find Sita and get her back. This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede Doha no. 5.

Now a word about the inhabitants of Kishkindha as being 'monkeys' would be in order. First of all, they weren't like some animal whose image is conjured up in the mind by the use of the word "monkey". This is clear in the very beginning of Kishkindha Kand. Lord Ram and Hanuman had conversed fluently with each other, and surely this dialogue was intelligible to both of them. It would be incredulous to think that a monkey, an animal that is, would talk in a tongue spoken by high-bred human prince. In Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas it is clearly said that they conversed in Sanskrit, the classical language spoken by educated humans; Hanuman's speech was immaculate in grammar and accent, and Lord Ram had praised him for his manners and articulate language. Refer Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 17-18.

Not only Hanuman, but Lord Ram was freely able to talk with others too amongst the so-called 'monkeys and bears'. Therefore in all sooth they weren't "animals" as we would be inclined to identify them and think of them with the common use of the word 'monkey' for the residents of the kingdom of Kishkindha.

So here lies the catch. The 'Monkey race of Kishkindha' were, in all logical probabilities, a forest-dwelling warrior tribe more like the 'Pygmies' of inter-tropical Africa. They were dwarfs in appearance, because compared to the ordinary height of a man of other human races they had a short stature, perhaps a 'two-cubit man'. There were many like tribes in Africa (such as Akka, the Doko, the Tiki-Tiki, the Wambilikimo etc.) that shared land that was surrounded by habitats of taller men.

This tribe sprouted from mutation of the human gene, and normal men took their abnormalities of their ugly contours and stunted growth, which was around four spans high, as having been caused because of some curse or because they were possessed by some demon or evil spirit. So this tribe was pushed to the fringes of civilization, and cast-off by the society they were forced out of habitated areas and into the wilderness of the forests and mountains. Thus, they moved south of the Vindhya mountain range and lived in the densely forested mountainous region in the present day state of Karnataka in South India. It was called Kishkindha in earlier times.

Living in the midst of the wild-life of the forest and the wilderness of the mountains, this tribe, with the passage of time, had to adopt itself to the life-style and habits of the dwellers of the wilderness who were cut off from civilization and its trappings. They hunted and ate and lived like apes and monkeys, by way of necessity of survival, to adapt themselves to the forest and its cruel environs, becoming, over time, ferocious, and vicious in nature and completely different and unrecognizable from their ancestors who were in the era gone by were pushed out by the society into the jungle. Their external appearances underwent gradual but sure metamorphosis, such as they grew long hairs over the whole body like felt, had long nails and agile limbs that could aid them to climb and leap from trees to suit life in the forest, yellow-eyed, black-faced and speaking a language alien to humankind. In South Africa, the aboriginals speak a tongue called 'Bantu' which is a corrupted version of the main language of the southern part of the continent.

These sort of unconventional men were encountered by Sindabad the Sailor in his third journey across the oceans where he and his companions met such men on the 'Mountain of the Zughb' as narrated in the original version of the legendary tale of the 1001 Arabian Nights.

Nevertheless, though quite at odds with what civilization knew as 'men', they traced their roots to the human race, of course to back in time by, say, a couple of dozen or even a hundred or so centuries. During the intervening long period of time, the original tribe may have multiplied and diversified into many sub-tribes much like the humans of the civilized world. Each went its own way, and populated far-off places on earth when their original home, the area around Kishkindha, could not support the demands of an ever-increasing population. This is why we read that when Lord Ram's army of monkeys was to be assembled, they came from 'all corners of the earth, and its members were of different appearances and of various countenances, means and habits'. But they had their capital city and headquarters at Kishkindha. It's like people today migrating to different corners of the planet to make a living, even settling down there, but they are rooted to their mother-land and always recognized by the country of their forefathers. [Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 19; (ii) Doha no. 21; Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 54; (b) Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 5-6.

Some were very wise among them, like among other members of the human race. Eager to relate to and trace their past roots, and to find ways to integrate with the society of the current time, as during the era of Lord Ram's birth in Treta-yug when the Lord had gone to Kishkindha on his way to search for his stolen wife Sita, these ancient inhabitants of Kishkindha made efforts to learn the modern language of India, which was Sanskrit. Some excelled in it—such as the case was with Hanuman. [Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 17-18.]

By this time of course, the present generation of humans around Kishkindha had all but forgotten the bitterness and the circumstances of castration of this primitive tribe of yore, and so there were few inhibitions for learning and interacting.

Coming back to our narration of the story as it appears in Geetawali, when Sugriv showed to Lord Ram the ornaments that Sita had dropped from the sky from the chariot in which she was being whisked away by Ravana to Lanka, the Lord recognized them, and holding them close to his heart he was jubilant because it proved that he was proceeding in the right direction, but at the same time he wailed as these ornaments refreshed her memory and caused the agony of separation to get stoked.]

On seeing Sita's ornaments, Lord Ram was thrilled; his eyes became wet with tears, and his heart overflowed with affection and joy (1).

He hesitated at overtly praising the glory of Sita¹, but her memory filled his heart with joy as well as grief. Seeing his condition, Laxman, Sugriv and other monkeys also felt very emotional as if butter has started melting on contact with (emotional) heat (2).

[¹Sita was Lord Ram's wife, and therefore it would look highly unconventional and inappropriate to utter praises for her in front of other male companions.]

They became dejected and distressed at the thought of Sita's sufferings. At that time, the old bear-king called Jamvant consoled Lord Ram in different ways, using words of wisdom and courage (3).

Encouraged by him, the assembly began to ponder on ways to find and rescue Sita instead of wasting time in wailings and lamenting uselessly.

Addressing himself, Tulsidas says that a poet's heart appears to be emotionless, merciless and harsh because he is describing those moments (i.e. he should not describe such a pitiful and heart-wrenching scene, but there is no way out as he has to narrate the story as it happened)² (4).

[²Here, Tulsidas is referring to himself because he is the poet who is describing these moments. What he actually means is that one should not regard him as being merciless and heartless simply because he describes such poignant moments, but one should understand that as a poet and a scribe it is his moral duty that he narrates everything as it happened in a neutral manner, regardless of whether any event or moment is painful or not.]

सीताजीकी खोजका आदेश (4/2)

प्रभु कपि—नायक बोलि कह्यो है।
 बरषा गई, सरद आई, अब लागि नहि सिय—सोधु लह्यो है ॥ 1 ॥
 जा कारन तजि लोकलाज, तनु राखि बियोग सह्यो है।
 ताको तौ कपिराज आज लागि कछु न काज निबह्यो है ॥ 2 ॥
 सुनि सुग्रीव सभित नमित—मुख, उतरु न देन चह्यो है।
 आइ गए हरि जूथ, देखि उर पूरि प्रमोद रह्यो है ॥ 3 ॥
 पठये बदि—बदि अवधि दसहु दिसि, चले बलु सबनि गह्यो है। तुलसी सिय लागि भव—दधिनिधि मनु फिर हरि चहत मह्यो है ॥ 4 ॥

sītājīkī khōjakā ādēśa
(4/2)

prabhu kapi-nāyaka bōli kahyō hai.
 baraṣā ga'īm, sarada ā'īm, aba lagi nahi siya-sōdhu lahyō hai.. 1..
 jā kārana taji lōkalāja, tanu rākhi biyōga sahyō hai.
 tākō tau kapidāja āja lagi kachu na kāja nibahyō hai.. 2..
 suni sugrīva sabhīta namita-mukha, utaru na dēna cahyō hai.
 ā'i ga'ē hari jūtha, dēkhi ura pūri pramōda rahyō hai.. 3.. paṭhayē badi-badi avadhi dasahu disi, calē balu sabani gahyō hai.
 tulasī siya lagi bhava-dadhinidhi manu phira hari cahata mahyō hai.. 4..

Search for Sita Begins

Verse no. 4/2—[Sugriv was made the king of Kishkindha by the intervention of Lord Ram. The Lord himself tarried on the summit of a mountain called 'Prabarshan' during the four wet months of the rainy season. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 12.

At the end of this period, Lord Ram sent Laxman to remind Sugriv of the promises he had made in connection with Sita, because as is the usual habit of all living beings, Sugriv had forgotten the Lord's work after he was crowned king and got involved in routine work of the realm, as well as in enjoying the comforts and pleasures of kingdom. Hereat, Sugriv assembled groups of wise and agile monkeys and bears and send them in all the directions to search for Sita, with strict injunction that they are to report in a month's time. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 22.]

Lord Ram summoned Sugriv and said, 'Brother! The rainy season has gone and winter has come, but you have not yet made any effort to search Sita (1) for whom I have borne this body (i.e. I have not died due to the sorrow of parting with my beloved in the hope that one day I will see her). You have not done my work yet (2).'

Hearing this polite admonishment from the Lord, Sugriv became afraid (that he has offended the Lord who has obliged him so much, and his inaction in helping the Lord and fulfilling his promises made to him at the time of making friendship on the Rishyamook mountain, he may invite the wrath and punishment of the Lord).

Sugriv humbly bowed his head in shame. At that moment, huge companies of monkeys arrived in the town of Kiskindha, and their arrival led to celebrations (3).

All of them were sent in the 10 directions¹ and ordered to report back within a specified time-frame².

Tulsidas says that it appeared that Lord Ram wished to churn the ocean in search of Sita (an allegory to the mythical churning of ocean by the demons and the gods in search of nectar) (4).

[¹The 10 directions are the following = north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir.

²In Ram Charit Manas it is mentioned that this time limit was one month. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 22.]

-----**-----

Section 6.4:

Kavitawali Ramayan

Kavitawali Ramayan, another of Goswami Tulsidas' classic narration of the epic story of the life and time of Lord Ram universally known as the "Ramayana", is very brief while dealing with the topic which we have covered in Chapter no. 6 of our Book so much so that it has only two verses devoted to cover the entire period of the Story from the time Lord Ram went behind Marich, the decoy deer with the golden hide, till the time Hanuman was preparing to leap across the ocean to reach Lanka, the phase that is generally narrated under the titles of Aranya Kand and Kishkindha Kand respectively. So let's have a quick glimpse at Kavitawali before we move on with the narrative that will take us to the captivating story of Hanuman landing at Lanka, his meeting with Sita, and the subsequent burning of Lanka, which are very interesting and described in fine detail in the next Chapter of our Book.

पंचवटीं बर पर्नकुटी तर बैठे हैं रामु सुभायँ सुहाए ।
सोहै प्रिया, प्रिय बंधु लसै, 'तुलसी' सब अंग घने छबि छाए ॥
देखि मृगा मृगनैनी कहे प्रिय बैन, ते प्रीतमके मन भाए ।
हेमकुरंगके संग सरासनु सायकु लै रघुनायकु धाए ॥१॥

1. pañcabaṭīṁ bara parnakūṭī tara baiṭhē haiṁ rāmu subhāyam' suhā'ē.
sōhai priyā, priya bandhu lasai, 'tulasī' saba aṅga ghanē chabi chā'ē.
dēkhi mrgā mrganainī kahē priya baina, tē prītamakē mana bhā'ē.
hēmakuraṅgakē saṅga sarāsanu sāyaku lai raghunāyaku dhā'ē..1..

Verse no. 3/1—Lord Ram is sitting near the hut in Panchvati along with Sita and Laxman. Tulsidas says that the three look extremely beautiful and enchanting (1).

Seeing a golden deer (a fawn), Sita asked Lord Ram to go and fetch it for her. Then, Lord Ram picked up his bow and arrow and rushed towards that deer¹ (2).

[Note—It ought to be noted here that this Chapter called 'Aranya Kand' has been summed up by Tulsidas in merely a single verse in Kavitawali. This Chapter actually deals with the events in the life of Lord Ram after he left Chitrakoot with Sita and Laxman and entered the deeper part of the forest, which is called 'Aranya', which was very dense and far away from civilisation. It was here that the majority of hermits and sages lived in secluded hermitages in pursuit of their spiritual goals, doing penances, austerity, meditation and contemplation and undertaking all other such activities as prescribed in the scriptures. Here Lord Ram had met some of the greatest sages of their times, such as Atri and his wife Anusuiya, Sharbhanga, Agastya. This part of the forest was infested with ferocious and vicious demons, and they had been killing the resident sages with impunity over a long period of time so much so that a huge mountain of their bones was formed. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 9 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 6-8.}

It was during this journey through the forest that the demon Viradh was liberated and the Lord had befriended the vulture Jatau.

After leaving Chitrakoot, the next hermitage where Lord Ram stayed for some time was located deep in this forbidden part of the forest called ‘Dandak’, at a place called ‘Panchvati’ as it had five tall trees in a circle. It was at this place that the Lord implemented the next phase of his plan that would culminate in the elimination of the demons—and it was to maneuver the abduction of Sita by the demon king Ravana so that an excuse could be found to eliminate him in the tussle to free Sita. This incident is the one that has been cited in our aforesaid verse of Kavitaawali. It was a watershed development as it was the stepping stone for the next phase of the operation so that the very purpose of Lord Vishnu coming down to earth in the form of Lord Ram could be served. Had Sita not been abducted by Ravana, the story would have been completely different: in all probability it would have been that the Lord wandered here and there in the forest to pass the 14 years of exile and return home to receive the crown of Ayodhya. But that was not the reason why the Lord had come to the forest in the first place.

Therefore, Tulsidas has skipped all other events that are narrated in the full version of the story of Ram’s life and time in the deep recesses of the terrifying forest as they were only incidental to the main story and inconsequential to the fulfillment of the main aim of Lord Ram’s coming to the forest—which was to get Sita abducted and plant her in the fort of the demons so that the Lord could go there kill the evil demons so as to keep the promise he had made to the sages, the gods and mother earth when they had gone to pray to Lord Vishnu to protect them against the tyranny of Ravana and his demon race, and the Lord had promised them that it shall be done. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Doha no. 187.}

So, Tulsidas cut short the other details of this Chapter which he had already narrated in great detail in his epic narration of Lord Ram’s story in his timeless and ageless book known by the name ‘Ram Charit Manas’ in its Aranya Kand, because, as has been said by the sayer, “that it is needless to repeat it, for there is no avail in a twice-told tale”.

Hence, the clever narrator Tulsidas used only one peg to link two ends of the story just like one uses a rock or any other support to jump from this side to the other side of a narrow stream. The first part of the story ends in Ayodhya Kand with the Lord leaving Chitrakoot with his wife and brother, and the other part begins in Kishkindha Kand with the Lord wondering in the forest in search of his abducted wife and preparing to launch the next phase of the campaign of eliminating the demons by moving ahead towards their stronghold at Lanka and taking along the gods who had been waiting for his arrival at Kishkindha in the guise of monkeys and bears (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187 and Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that follow it).

This incident of Lord Ram running behind the golden deer, who was actually the demon Marich in disguise, has been described in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 23—to Doha no. 28; and in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto nos. 6-7.

We have already read it in detail in Chapter 6, sections 6.1 and 6.2 of our Book.]

जब अङ्गदादिनकी मति-गति मंद भई, पवनके पूतको न कूदिबेको पलु गो ।
 साहसी है सैलपर सहसा सकेलि आइ, चितवत चहूँ ओर, औरनि को कलु गो ॥
 'तुलसी' रसातलको निकसि सलिलु आयो,
 कोलु कलमल्यो, अहि-कमठको बलु गो ।
 चारिहू चरनके चपेट चाँपें चिपिटि गो, उचकें उचकि चारि अंगुल अचलु गो ॥१॥

1. jaba aṅgadādinakī mati-gati manda bhaī, pavanakē pūtakō na kūdibēkō palu gō.
 sāhasī hvai sailapara sahasā sakēli ā'i, citavata cahūm'ōra, aurani kō kalu gō..
 'tulasi' rasātalakō nikasi salilu āyō, kōlu kalamalyō, ahi-kamaṭhakō balu gō.
 cārihū caranakē capēṭa cāmpēm cipiṭi gō, ucakēm ucaki cāri aṅgula acalu gō..1..

Verse no. 4/1—When Angad and other monkeys became distressed, dejected and hopeless because no one was capable to leap across the vast ocean (and therefore, would be unable to achieve success in finding about Sita), in that circumstance the Wind-God's son Hanuman did not take more than a moment to jump up a mountain. Then he began to survey the landscape in all directions. [His courage and bold demeanour instilled fear among the adversaries / enemies, and confidence in the monkeys.] Tulsidas says that water sprouted from the earth's bosom, the God Varaaha (the Boar) wriggled, and God Sheshnath and legendary Tortoise lost their strength and courage. [God Varaaha had enough strength to rescue earth on his snout from the clutches of a demon; the serpent god Shesh holds earth on his hood; while the legendary Tortoise supports the huge mountain, used to churn the mythological ocean by the Gods and demons on his back. It simply means that the earth shook violently when Hanuman leapt upwards.]

When he made the final launch, the huge mountain flattened by the downward pressure of Hanuman's feet; and as soon as he was air-borne and the pressure removed, it rose a little bit—about the height measured by four fingers—from its flattened position. [This indicates a spring-like effect. In modern scientific terms, it is simple to visualize the event if compared to a rocket launch. The downward thrust generated by the leap-frog action of Hanuman's legs was sufficient to flatten the protuberance on the earth (the hill), and having thus become airborne because of the counter thrust upwards, Hanuman launched himself like a rocket. The pressure thus removed, the spring (the hill) tried to regain its former shape, but such was the weight launched that it could rise only four fingers, and not to the original height.]

-----**-----

Part 2

Chapter 7: Hanuman meets Sita; The Burning of Lanka by Hanuman; His return to give the Good News of Sita's discovery to Lord Ram

In this Chapter no. 7 we read how Hanuman crosses the ocean successfully after overcoming a few obstacles, and lands in Lanka where he meets Vibhishan, who then guides him to the place where Sita was held captive in a garden called 'Ashok Van'. Hanuman proceeds to meet her; Sita is elated to see him and receive assurance that Lord Ram is on his way to free her. Then Hanuman goes on the rampage and ruins that magnificent garden, which was Ravana's personal garden-of-pleasure, and during it he kills a large section of the demon army that tried to capture him. He, however, voluntarily submitted in the end and was brought to the demon court in the presence of their king Ravana.

A hot and acrimonious exchange of words between Ravana and Hanuman followed, at the end of which the infuriated demon king ordered Hanuman's tail be burned as a token of insult and humiliation of Lord Ram's messenger, and an implied rebuff to the Lord himself. Once the foolish demons tied Hanuman's ever-elongating tail with cloth, doused it with oil and lit it, he suddenly freed himself and ran amok in the city, jumping and leaping across the city's streets and buildings, gardens and yards, setting the whole place afire. Finally, the whole city of Lanka was turned into a smouldering place resembling a dark hulk of a burnt-out ship, or a verdant forest whose tall green trees are reduced to ash after a fierce wildfire ravages through it, turning what earlier was a magnificent gilded 'city of gold', that was the envy of even the heaven, into a heap of darkened ruins that were either still smoking or were covered with black ghastly soot at the time Hanuman left it to return to Kishkindha to report to Lord Ram about the success of his mission.

These events are traditionally covered in 'Sundar Kand' of the Ramayana. We shall read about them by citing (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34; (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto nos. 1-5; (c) Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-21; and (d) Kavitali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-32.

Section 7.1:

Ram Charit Manas

{Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34}

चौ०. जामवंत के बचन सुहाए । सुनि हनुमंत हृदय अति भाए ॥ १ ॥

तब लगि मोहि परिखेहु तुम्ह भाई । सहि दुख कंद मूल फल खाई ॥ २ ॥
जब लगि आवौं सीतहि देखी । होइहि काजु मोहि हरष बिसेषी ॥ ३ ॥
यह कहि नाइ सबन्हि कहूँ माथा । चलेउ हरषि हियँ धरि रघुनाथा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jāmvanta kē bacana suhā'ē. suni hanumanta hṛdaya ati bhā'ē. 1.
taba lagi mōhi parikhēhu tumha bhā'ī. sahi dukha kanda mūla phala khā'ī. 2.
jaba lagi āvaum sītahi dēkhī. hō'ihi kāju mōhi haraṣa bisēṣī. 3.
yaha kahi nā'i sabanhi kahum' māthā. calē'u haraṣi hiyam' dhari raghunāthā. 4.

[We must recall here what Jamvant had told Hanuman earlier in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-12 and Chanda line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 30, that he had the privilege to be the chosen one to do the work of Lord Ram, which was to go and meet Sita and then return to convey the good news about her to the Lord. Thus inspired and motivated, Hanuman, the fortunate son of the wind-god, immediately proceeded to accomplish the task assigned to him as follows—]

Jamvant's words were welcomed by Hanuman who received them with a cheerful and gladdened heart¹. (1)

Hanuman said, 'Brothers! Wait for me till the time I come back after meeting Sita. During the intervening period, cope with a little hardship and sustain yourselves somehow by eating fruits and edible roots [2], because a sixth sense makes me feel certain that the work will be done successfully as my heart is feeling cheerful, thrilled and elated as it usually happens when one is about to embark on an auspicious mission that is destined to be successful [3].²' (2-3)

Saying thus, Hanuman bowed his head to all his brethrens, invoked Lord Ram and enshrined the Lord's divine image in his heart, and proceeded on his mission³. (4)

[Note—¹Jamvant had made two points—viz. (i) first he had praised Hanuman and encouraged him by saying that his birth itself was for doing Lord Ram's work, so he must no longer procrastinate, but rather act swiftly to go across the ocean to find out about Sita's exact whereabouts (Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 30), (ii) and second, to just go and meet Sita and inform her about the latest situation, assuring her that soon Lord Ram would come himself with an army to free her from captivity (Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10-12 and Chanda line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 30).

These two pieces of advice gladdened Hanuman's hear as he felt exceptionally happy that he had been selected for this prestigious project.

²These verses show that Hanuman had full confidence in attaining success in the effort of seeing Sita. When a person does any thing with confidence and certainty of success, with his heart and mind fully devoted to the project at hand, than the chances of his actually attaining success are extremely high, as compared to when he does any thing half-heartedly and with an uncertain mind.

³The message is clear—when a person is about to start on a new project or enterprise, when he is just about to launch himself on a journey fraught with all sorts of uncertainties and dangers, the best insurance for success and the guard against failures he has is to remember the Lord God, the deity whom he worships and reveres, offer himself to the Lord, and then proceed with a cheerful and confident heart—success would be his.]

सिंधु तीर एक भूधर सुंदर । कौतुक कूदि चढ़ेउ ता ऊपर ॥ ५ ॥
 बार बार रघुबीर सँभारी । तरकेउ पवनतनय बल भारी ॥ ६ ॥
 जेहिं गिरि चरन देइ हनुमंता । चलेउ सो गा पाताल तुरंता ॥ ७ ॥
 जिमि अमोघ रघुपति कर बाना । एही भाँति चलेउ हनुमाना ॥ ८ ॥ sindhu tīra ēka bhūdhara sundara. kautuka kūdi caṛhē'u tā ūpara. 5.

 bāra bāra raghubīra sam̐bhārī. tarakē'u pavanatanaya bala bhārī. 6.
 jēhim̐ giri carana dē'i hanumantā. calē'u sō gā pātāla turantā. 7.
 jimi amōgha raghupati kara bānā. ēhī bhām̐ti calē'u hanumānā. 8.

There was a beautiful hill on the shore of the ocean; Hanuman sprang up to its summit with swift and light steps as if he was playing a sport. (5)

Remembering Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) and submitting himself to the Lord's care repeatedly (bāra bāra raghubīra sam̐bhārī), Hanuman, who had immense strength and energy, jumped on it like a powerful spring (of a catapult that is about to launch a ball across the sky). (6)

[In order to gain momentum and thrust, Hanuman leapt from one hill to another in the chain of hills that dotted the shore.] Whichever hill Hanuman placed his foot upon and sprang from it to the next one, that hill sank deep down into the bowls of the earth instantly (calē'u sō gā pātāla turantā)¹. (7)

In this way, Hanuman zoomed across the sky like an invincible arrow of Lord Ram streaking towards its target. [To wit, Hanuman was moving very speedily and in a straight line across the sky like an arrow would fly.] (8)

[Note—¹As Hanuman jumped from one hill to another to gain speed and traction, and during each such jump he increased his upward and forward thrust like a rocket that is about to be launched from its pad and head skyward, each of these hills sank in to the earth by the downward thrust exerted by his huge, bulky and muscular body before it finally became air-borne! The soil near the ocean was not as hard and solid as it is in the upcountry plains because water of the ocean made the earth soft around the shore. So when a pressure was exerted by Hanuman during his launch, these hills 'sank' in the soil instead of crumbling into rocky pieces.

In the period of history to which we are referring in this grand epical Story, the coast of the ocean bordering the southern edge of the landmass of the Indian continent would have certainly been different from what it is today, for the timeline we allude to was hundreds and thousands of years in the past. The shore-line had a chain of small and large protuberances, such as hills, hillocks, outcrops, cliffs and reefs, spreading for quite a distance not only along its length and extending back for many miles upland, but even jutting out into the water itself like gigantic natural piers and breakwaters.

Hanuman raced up these protuberances with a spring in his steps as he gradually picked up speed to gain momentum and traction till he reached the last hill or reef or cliff or outcrop which was the highest point along the line, and from here he made his giant leap into the air to become air-borne. Once in the air, he cruised in a straight line like the crow flies in order not to waste a single unit of his energy to cover even a single extra mile by making any deviation from this straight line. When it is said that he moved like Lord Ram's arrow it is meant that "he flew through the sky with great speed and in a straight line" because this is how any arrow would fly.]

जलनिधि रघुपति दूत बिचारी । तैं मैनाक होहि श्रमहारी ॥ ९ ॥

jalanidhi raghupati dūta bicārī. tair̄ maināka hōhi śramahārī. 9.

The Ocean (jalanidhi), (or its patron deity), realised that he (Hanuman) was Lord Ram's messenger; so he asked Mt. Mainak to prepare itself to give some rest to this messenger during the journey¹. (9)

[Note—¹Here, the 'ocean' has been personified. If not the ocean's water than at least its patron deity, the Varun-God, saw that Lord Ram's messenger, Hanuman, was on a mission for the Lord. Wishing to give Hanuman some sort of rest mid-way, the ocean or its patron deity requested a mountain located somewhere in the middle of the ocean to allow Hanuman to alight on it and take some rest before he moves ahead.

The ocean was willing to help Lord Ram's messenger because it owed its existence to one of the ancestors of the Lord, a great King of the Ikshwaku dynasty who was known as 'Sāgar', from whom the ocean derived its vernacular name 'sāgar'.

The story of creation of 'sagar' is closely related to the story of 'river Ganges' coming down to earth from heaven. It is briefly as follows: King Sagar had done a great horse sacrifice known as 'Ashwamedh Yagya'. This sacrificial horse was stolen by Indra, the king of Gods who was renowned for his mischief and jealous nature, in the guise of a demon. The reason was that king Sagar had already done 99 such sacrifices, and if he successfully completed this 100th sacrifice, he would have become eligible for the stature of Indra. This Indra could not tolerate.

King Sagar ordered his sixty thousand sons to go and find the horse. They dug-up the entire earth in search of this horse. Though they failed in their effort to find the concerned horse, but the earth that they dug-up formed the 'great hollow' that would be filled with water to form the 'ocean', which is like a great lake covering three-fourths of the surface of earth.]

दो०. हनूमान तेहि परसा कर पुनि कीन्ह प्रनाम ।

राम काजु कीन्हें बिनु मोहि कहाँ बिश्राम ॥ १ ॥

dōhā.

hanūmāna tēhi parasā kara puni kīnha pranāma.
rāma kāju kīnhēm binu mōhi kahām̃ bīsrāma. 1.

Hanuman merely touched Mainak with his hands (without spending any precious time resting on it) and bowed before it to pay his respects.

[When Mainak asked him to take some rest—] Hanuman told the Mountain, ‘How can I take rest before completing Lord Ram’s work?’¹ (Doha no. 1)

[Note—¹We must note here that even inanimate entities such as the ocean and the mountain have assumed an animate form to speak. This is in accordance with ancient style of writing poetry where inanimate things are given life and breath by the poet, enabling them to communicate emotions and sentiments that the poet likes to convey himself through these mediums.

This fact of Mt. Mainak assuming a human form is specifically mentioned in Valmiki’s Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 111-112.

Mt. Mainak was a friend of the Wind-God, and so he was willing to help the latter’s son Hanuman. Refer: Valmiki’s Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 131-132.

This action of the Mountain pleased Indra, the king of the gods, who thanked him and told him that in future he need not have any fear from his weapon known as Vajra, the thunderbolt. Refer: Valmiki’s Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 137-140.

Ancient legend holds that in earlier times, mountains could fly like birds. Indra did not like it, so he threw his thunderbolt at the flying mountains to cut their wings so that they became stationery. However, Mainak managed to escape because with the aid of its friend the wind-god it moved with tremendous speed ahead of the thunderbolt and hid itself under the water of the ocean where it was very deep, i.e. in its middle. This way, Mt. Mainak became obliged to both the Ocean and the Wind-God. Hence, when the time came to repay his debts, Mainak was more than willing, especially since Hanuman was, besides being the son of the wind-god, also the messenger of Lord Ram, the Supreme Being.

Mt. Mainak was situated in the middle of the ocean for the reason cited above—i.e. at a distance midway between the shore of the ocean that bordered the northern continent, and the shore that lined the land of the island of Lanka. To wit, it was situated roughly 50 Yojans from the either shores.

Therefore, by the time Hanuman reached this mountain he had covered half of the total distance to Lanka, i.e. approximately 50 Yojans out of the total 100 Yojans.

A very important lesson is learnt here—it is that we must not allow ourselves to become lax, careless and weary, or be distracted by anything no matter how tempting it may be, before we reach our objective. We must strive tirelessly and relentlessly to achieve our goal, and not let our guard down somewhere midway, as no one can say if such breaks may not take the wind out of the sail of success and ground the ship.]

चौ०. जात पवनसुत देवन्ह देखा । जानैँ कहूँ बल बुद्धि बिसेषा ॥ १ ॥
सुरसा नाम अहिन्ह कै माता । पठइन्हि आइ कही तेहिं बाता ॥ २ ॥
आजु सुरन्ह मोहि दीन्ह अहारा । सुनत बचन कह पवनकुमारा ॥ ३ ॥

राम काजु करि फिरि मैं आवौं । सीता कइ सुधि प्रभुहि सुनावौं ॥ ४ ॥
तब तव बदन पैठिहउँ आई । सत्य कहउँ मोहि जान दे माई ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

jāta pavanasuta dēvanha dēkhā. jānaim̐ kahum̐ bala bud'dhi bisēṣā. 1.
surasā nāma ahinha kai mātā. paṭha'inhi ā'i kahī tēhim̐ bātā. 2.
āju suranha mōhi dīnha ahārā. sunata bacana kaha pavanakumārā. 3.
rāma kāju kari phiri maim̐ āvaum̐. sītā ka'i sudhi prabhuhi sunāvaum̐. 4.
taba tava badana paiṭhiha'um̐ āī. satya kaha'um̐ mōhi jāna dē māī. 5.

When the gods saw that the son of the wind-god was on his way, they wished to ascertain whether he had the necessary strength, wit, intelligence and maneuverability to be successful in the mission¹. (1)

So these gods sent Sursa, the mother of the serpents, to test Hanuman. She came and stood in his way, saying—(2)

‘Today the gods have given me sufficient food (for I shall gobble up this creature and satisfy my hunger).’

When the son of the wind-god (Hanuman) heard her say this, he replied—(3)

‘I will accomplish Lord Ram’s work and return, then I will go and inform the Lord about Sita and her well-being, --- (4)

--- After that, I will come and offer myself to you voluntarily by entering your stomach (i.e. I shall allow you to eat me whole, and I will cheerfully surrender myself to you for this purpose).

I promise to you mother that what I say is the truth, and trust me that I will truly do what I say to you, but I beg you to let me go ahead now and wait till I come back to you once again.² (5)

[Note—¹The mission was exceptionally tough, and the enemy equally formidable. Hanuman was about to enter, all alone and unarmed, the citadel of the ferocious and vicious demons! The Gods were worried if he would actually succeed; they knew how strong and powerful Ravana was, and to overcome such a formidable adversary it was absolutely essential to have a level of strength and power that exceeded the opponent so that he can be outwitted. So the gods held a quick parley and decided to test Hanuman’s eligibility, his aptitude and intelligence, to determine if he needed some extra help from them, for which they must prepare in advance, or if he would accomplish the mission successfully independently. They thought that it was better to be on the safe side and take precautionary measures—but the need of the hour was to judge what sort of help was needed to be extended to Hanuman, and for this he must first be tested.

²A very remarkable statement by Hanuman—it shows his commitment, dedication and devotion to his duty as well as to his Lord. He is not afraid of death; he would rather willingly embrace it, but what bothers him most was the fear of failure to carry out his Lord’s orders and serve him fully before dying, because if this happens and Sursa eats him before he finishes the mission then he would not be able to get a chance of being blessed by Lord Ram, which in turn would entitle him to attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation.

Besides this, he wished to see his beloved Lord Ram for one last time before dying. That is why he asked Sursa to give him some time so that he could first meet Sita, convey her news to Lord Ram, and pay his last respects to his beloved Lord before taking leave from him to come back and offer himself to her for feeding her hunger!

This first test proved to the gods that Hanuman does not fear death, that he was totally devoted to Lord Ram and committed to carry out the Lord's command with due diligence and faith, and that he is not haughty and egoist.

The next group of verses herein below will show that though Hanuman was humble and polite, yet he was not to be taken for granted, because if he was not allowed to do what he thought was right and correct then he had the ability and the intelligence, the wit and the craft, to out-manuever his opponent and bring the latter to heel.]

कवनेहुँ जतन देइ नहिं जाना । ग्रससि न मोहि कहेउ हनुमाना ॥ ६ ॥
जोजन भरि तेहिं बदनु पसारा । कपि तनु कीन्ह दुगुन बिस्तारा ॥ ७ ॥
सोरह जोजन मुख तेहिं ठयऊ । तुरत पवनसुत बतिस भयऊ ॥ ८ ॥
जस जस सुरसा बदनु बढ़ावा । तासु दून कपि रूप देखावा ॥ ९ ॥ सत जोजन तेहिं आनन कीन्हा । अति लघु रूप पवनसुत लीन्हा ॥ १० ॥ kavanēhum' jatana dē'i nahim jānā. grasasi na mōhi kahē'u hanumānā. 6.

jōjana bhari tēhim badanu pasārā. kapi tanu kīnha duguna bistārā. 7.
sōraha jōjana mukha tēhim ṭhaya'ū. turata pavanasuta battisa bhaya'ū. 8.
jasa jasa surasā badanu baṛhāvā. tāsū dūna kapi rūpa dēkhāvā. 9.
sata jōjana tēhim ānana kīnhā. ati laghu rūpa pavanasuta līnhā. 10.

No matter how hard Hanuman tried to politely persuade Sursa and convince her to allow him to proceed, she would not listen to him, and stood blocking his way.

Finally he decided that it was enough. So at last Hanuman bluntly told her, 'You will not devour me. [Listen, oh wretch of a woman! It seems you are hell-bent for a showdown. Come, face it now you evil one. Let me see how you can put me in your hideous mouth!]' (6)

Thus challenged, Sursa expanded her body for one yojan (roughly 8 miles)¹. The Kapi (Hanuman) immediately enlarged his body to twice that dimension (i.e. Hanuman expanded his body for 16 miles). (7)

Peeved and angry, Sursa expanded herself so much that her mouth opened wide to measure sixteen yojans (128 miles). [Sursa opened her mouth so wide that its diameter was about 128 miles.]

Not to be outwitted, the son of the wind-god instantly enlarged his body to measure thirty-two yojans (256 miles). (8)

As Sursa continued to increase the size of her body (mouth) progressively, the Kapi (Hanuman) enlarged his body instantly to twice that dimension². (9)

When finally Sursa had expanded her body so much so that the hollow cavity of her yawning mouth measured one hundred yojans (roughly 800 miles in diameter), the son of the wind-god suddenly reduced his body to a miniature size (i.e. he immediately shrank his huge body to revert back to its original size, or even smaller than what it actually was)³. (10)

[Note—¹Sursa expanded her body for “one yojan”—which actually means her ‘mouth and stomach’ were enlarged to a sufficient size that would enable her to devour Hanuman wholly. This clearly implies that Hanuman’s own form was roughly of this size, or a little smaller than one yojan. We have already read that at the time Jamvant inspired Hanuman to get ready to do Lord Ram’s work and praised him, Hanuman had assumed a colossus size. It was his bulky and muscular form that had played a crucial role in making the hills, hillocks, cliffs and reefs sink into the earth when he ran across their tops in leaps and bounds in order to gain momentum, speed and thrust to acquire the lift that was needed to launch himself into the air from the shore of the ocean. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 30.

²The reader must remember that we are reading of events occurring in some long gone era when mountains could sink, vultures and monkeys could speak the human tongue, warriors used bows and arrows that never seemed to end in numbers, when great sages and ascetics lived in forests to do sacrifices and practice meditation, when certain forms of creatures could change their forms and go anywhere they wished by using the transcendental path of movement, and so on and so forth. There is no wonder or fantasy in anything that we describe in this Book as happening during that era as the mind may not be able to fully understand or even imagine certain things which it has not actually seen or experienced in the present world, things to which it is not exposed or accustomed to. For instance, even a hundred or so years back it would have been difficult for a person to imagine and believe that one day there will be a certain thing called a mobile or cell phone, or internet, or computer or the so many other wonders of science that have completely revolutionized life in the world.

If a hot air balloon can be inflated to a multi-storey size and made to lift in the air and float, it is certainly possible that the body of a creature, which also has wind inside it in the form of breath and other vital airs, and is definitely hot from the within, can be expanded. Everyone can expand his chest and abdomen by at least a few inches by inhaling deeply, though in today’s world we lack the knowledge to do anything further. But that does not mean that in earlier times men had not mastered the art of expanding their bodies to whatever size they wished, and even time-travel using the transcendental path of movement.

In which direction did Sursa extend her body? Well, obviously it was in the latitudinal or vertical direction for the simple reason that Hanuman, whom she wished to put into her mouth whole, was standing before her, and not lying prostrate in which case she would have been compelled to expand herself in the longitudinal or horizontal direction.

To wit, when she had finally reached the maximum expansion of her body it stood at a height of 800 miles from the surface of the ocean!

³This trick of Hanuman proved to the gods that he was exceptionally witty and clever enough to out-manuever his opponent. First he enlarged his body to such an extent that even if Sursa wanted she would not be able to eat him as every time his body was twice as large as Sursa's mouth, so he wouldn't fit into it. When she grew to such a huge size that extended for 800 miles into the sky like a gigantic tower bulging around its middle to represent her wide open mouth—mind you, this length is not a joke, for it extended high up into the blue sky, almost touching the outer ring of the atmosphere—her eyes would have become so large and situated so high up from the surface of the earth that she would fail to see anything low down on the surface of the ocean, close to her chin.

At this point, when Hanuman suddenly, and without any hint, reduced his size to the ordinary, he seemed to virtually vanish from the level of vision of Sursa's massive eyeballs; she suddenly realized to her dismay that she couldn't see him. She rolled her eyes wildly in search of Hanuman, like a gigantic planet spinning rapidly in the middle of the Milky Way.]

बदन पड़िठि पुनि बाहेर आवा । मागा बिदा ताहि सिरु नावा ॥ ११ ॥
मोहि सुरन्ह जेहि लागि पठावा । बुधि बल मरमु तोर मैं पावा ॥ १२ ॥ badana pa'iṭhi puni bāhēra āvā. māgā bidā tāhi siru nāvā. 11.

mōhi suranha jēhi lāgi paṭhāvā. budhi bala maramu tōra mairṁ pāvā. 12.

[Then, in deference to Sursa's wish, whom he had already addressed as a 'mother' in verse no. 5, Hanuman played another trick.] He entered her body and came out of it (swiftly, unopposed and unstopped)¹.

Then he bowed his head to her (because he had already called her a 'mother') and asked her to grant him leave to proceed². (11)

Sursa was pleased. She exclaimed, 'I have ascertained (judged) the extent of your wit, intelligence and strength (i.e. your competence and skills) for which the gods had sent me. [To wit, I have found out that you are fully eligible to accomplish Lord Ram's work; you will successfully do it as you have the brains and the guts for it. Moreover, since you have shown me respect, I also bless you.] (12)

[Note—¹To wit, Sursa was at present 800 miles high; so she could not know or feel that anything of as small a size as an ordinary creature had entered and then exited from her colossus cavern-like mouth. So Hanuman easily entered and came out from her mouth.

²By doing this, Hanuman fulfilled Sursa's wish—which was that she wanted to devour him wholly and put him inside her mouth. He had called Sursa a 'mother' as a show of respect to a woman (refer: Chaupai line no. 5 herein above), but once she was called a 'mother' it became obligatory for Hanuman to fulfill her wishes. So he entered her mouth.

Addressing Sursa as a 'mother' was a highly commendable act of Hanuman as it proved that he had no intention of insulting her, and he confronted and challenged her only because she was creating a hurdle in his path. He had even offered to come back to let her eat him, but she still wouldn't budge. Hence, Hanuman had no choice left to him.

This test showed to the gods that Hanuman knew how to respect even to his enemies, a character that is exceptionally noble and rarely found in a person. Only a great warrior and a noble person of high birth and great heart would know to show due respect to his opponent, especially after defeating him, as Hanuman had bowed to Sursa and sought permission from her to move ahead ‘even after’ subduing her.]

दो०. राम काजु सबु करिहहु तुम्ह बल बुद्धि निधान ।
आसिष देइ गई सो हरषि चलेउ हनुमान ॥ २ ॥

dōhā.

rāma kāju sabu karihahu tumha bala bud'dhi nidhāna.
āsiṣa dē'i ga'ī sō haraṣi calē'u hanumāna. 2.

[Sursa said—] I bless you that you will successfully do all of Lord Ram's works¹ as you are a treasury of (i.e. you possess immense) strength, intelligence, wit and skill needed for the purpose.'

After blessing him Sursa went her way, and then Hanuman too resumed his journey with an exhilarated heart. (Doha no. 2)

[Note—¹While blessing Hanuman Sursa has said a very interesting thing—she has prophesized that he would do “all the works” of Lord Ram—“rāma kāju sabu karihahu”. Presently he had only one work at hand—which was to see where Sita was and report back to the Lord. Even Jamvant had expressly told him that this was the only thing he was required to do. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 30.}]

So now it was predicted that not only success in this mission was a foregone conclusion but many other such missions would be successfully done by Hanuman on behalf of Lord Ram.

This was the reason why Hanuman felt so joyous in his heart as he resumed his onward journey—“haraṣi calē'u hanumāna”.]

चौ०. निसिचरि एक सिंधु महँ रहई । करि माया नभु के खग गहई ॥ १ ॥
जीव जंतु जे गगन उड़ाहीं । जल बिलोकि तिन्ह कै परिछाहीं ॥ २ ॥
गहइ छाहँ सक सो न उड़ाई । एहि बिधि सदा गगनचर खाई ॥ ३ ॥
सोइ छल हनूमान कहँ कीन्हा । तासु कपटु कपि तुरतहिं चीन्हा ॥ ४ ॥
ताहि मारि मारुतसुत बीरा । बारिधि पार गयउ मतिधीरा ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

nisicari ēka sindhu mahum' raha'ī. kari māyā nabhu kē khaga gaha'ī. 1.
jīva jantu jē gagana urāhīm. jala bilōki tinha kai parichāhīm. 2.
gaha'i chāham' saka sō na urā'ī. ēhi bidhi sadā gaganacara khā'ī. 3.
sō'i chala hanumāna kaham' kīnhā. tāsu kapaṭu kapi turatahīm cīnhā. 4.
tāhi māri mārutasuta bīrā. bāridhi pāra gaya'u matidhīrā. 5.

[After overcoming the first obstacle in the way, i.e. Sursa, Hanuman was confronted with another formidable one in the form of a demoness who had the power to pull down anything flying over the surface of the ocean by holding its shadow which fell on the surface of the water as that object flew overhead. This was Ravana's way of ensuring security of his city of Lanka. In modern-day world we can visualize this phenomenon in the form of a military radar that would automatically capture images of all flying objects within the air space of a country, and a robotic instrument operating in sync with it that would automatically pull down or disable the intruding object by some kind of ray or use of powerful magnets.]

In the ocean there lived a female demon¹ who would use her magical powers to capture birds ("khaga"; or anything that flew over the ocean). (1)

Any creature such as birds and insects or any other kind of living being (jīva jantu) that flew in the sky overhead, and if the demoness could see its shadow falling on the water of the ocean, --- (2)

--- She would hold the shadow so that the creature could not fly and proceed further. In this way she used to regularly eat those who lived and moved in the sky (gaganacara). (3)

As was her wont, she employed her usual trick on Hanuman, but unfortunately for her the Kapi (Hanuman) immediately recognized it². (4)

So the valiant, brave and courageous son of the wind-god (Hanuman) immediately killed her³. After that (there being no other hindrance on the way), he, with a calm and stable mind (matidhīrā), crossed the ocean which was a huge and endless reservoir of water (bāridhi). [To wit, after slaying this demoness, Hanuman landed on the soil of Lanka un-opposed. The obstacles he had encountered en-route had not at all affected his composure and stability of mind.]⁴ (5)

[Note—¹This second obstacle was different than the one Hanuman met a little while ago. The first one, Sursa, was not a "demoness"; she was the mother of serpents, but this lady whom Hanuman met now was one of the race of demons. Sursa was sent by the gods to test Hanuman's eligibility for the great task at hand, but this demoness was appointed by Ravana or one of his commanders to safeguard the borders of the island of Lanka.

So therefore, this demoness would not stop any demon flying overhead; she would stop only the non-demons.

The story goes that this demoness was known by the name of "Singhika". {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse no. 35.} She was the daughter of the demon Hiranyakshyap and a wife of the demon Viprachiti. Her son was the demon Rahu who, according to mythology, is known to devour the sun and the moon gods that cause the solar and lunar eclipses respectively. Singhika had the ability, like all members of the demon race, that enabled her to assume any form she wanted, and a special power to catch and pull down any flying object by holding its shadow, an ability that made her unique. This singular skill of hers was the reason why Ravana selected her to guard his borders from the ocean which formed a sort of an intractable moat that ringed his capital of Lanka.

We can say that like a child pulls down his kite with the help of its string, this demoness could pull down the flying object by catching hold of an invisible subtle link that existed between that object and its shadow that fell on the surface of the water of the ocean.

As we have already noted in the introductory paragraph to these verses, some kind of magnetic radiation or other form of energy such as some kind of ray was employed by this demoness to stop and pull down the object which cast the shadow. Singhika lived below the surface of the water, and as soon natural light falling on the surface of the ocean was obstructed by the a dark patch of the shadow she would know that something was flying overhead, and then she would immediately activate her holding mechanism.

²Hanuman was flying with a certain regular speed. So when he suddenly found that something was dragging him and pulling him down, he realized that there was something amiss. When he looked down he saw the gaping hole of the mouth of this wicked demoness waiting for the flying object to fall down straight into her mouth.

She must have resembled a huge shark or whale floating on the ocean with its jaws wide open.

³So without wasting any time Hanuman killed her. Valmiki's Ramayan says that Hanuman entered her wide open mouth and ferociously tore through her mouth and gullet with his sharp pointed nails so she bled profusely and died instantly. Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 181-191.

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse no. 38, Hanuman had killed her by kicking at her violently.

⁴This demoness, Singhika, was the last obstacle for Hanuman. As we have noted in our reading, Mt. Mainak was located at half the distance to Lanka; then came Sursa first and Singhika second. Singhika was stationed nearer to the shore of Lanka as she was a member of the demon race and appointed by Ravana, the king of the demons, with a special mandate to guard the coast of the island from somewhere offshore.

The point to be noted here is that Hanuman was so confident of himself that inspite of facing formidable obstacles he did not lose his self-control, poise and mental balance as he, being prudent, wise and intelligent, knew fully well that these virtues were necessary to succeed in any enterprise.

Once again, the gods, who were watching the proceedings silently from heaven, cheered and applauded Hanuman. They were overjoyed to discover that the son of the wind-god was absolutely fit to do the job for which he had been selected—for Hanuman had wit and intelligence, strength and power, calmness and self-control, steadfastness and diligence, fearlessness and boldness, and the ability to handle odd situations as and when they present themselves even unannounced.]

तहाँ जाइ देखी बन सोभा । गुंजत चंचरीक मधु लोभा ॥ ६ ॥

नाना तरु फल फूल सुहाए । खग मृग बृंद देखि मन भाए ॥ ७ ॥

सैल बिसाल देखि एक आगें । ता पर धाइ चढ़ेउ भय त्यागें ॥ ८ ॥ tahām̃ jā'i dēkhī bana sōbhā. guṅjata cañcarīka madhu lōbhā. 6.

nānā taru phala phūla suhā'ē. khaga mṛga bṛnda dēkhi mana bhā'ē. 7.

saila bisāla dēkhi ēka āgēm. tā para dhā'i caṛhē'u bhaya tyāgēm. 8.

When he landed on the other side of the ocean he saw a magnificent sight there. He saw beautiful forests where honey-bees were buzzing around coveting sources of honey. (6)

He saw different kinds of beautiful trees, fruits and flowers, as well as wonderful birds and animals—the pleasant sight of all these things cheered Hanuman's heart¹. (7)

In the front of him Hanuman saw a huge hill; so he sprang forward and ran to its top fearlessly². (8)

[Note—¹Though Lanka was notorious as being the capital city of the demon race who were cruel and blood-thirsty, who relished plunder and laying to waste cities and villages, killing and burning what came their way, yet they ensured that their own capital was well-maintained and looked after. The very entrance of Lanka presented a very enchanting sight with its verdantly rich forests, colourful trees and flowers, sweet fruits, buzzing honey-bees, and cheerful birds and animals who roamed around fearlessly.

The demons ate flesh of animals and humans, but they spared the animals and birds in their own gardens, forests and parks. Ravana's own royal garden where he had held Sita captive was exceptionally beautiful, vying with the garden of heaven.

²Which hill was this? It was not an ordinary 'hill', but one of huge size, almost like a 'mountain'. Hence it was aptly called 'Mt. Subel'. It was so high that it gave Hanuman a panoramic view of Lanka. It was one of the three high hills or mountains that formed the kingdom of the demons called 'Lanka'. The other two mountains were called 'Trikoṭ' and 'Sundar'.

Later on in the story we shall read that when Lord Ram landed on the soil of Lanka with his army, he too mounted this Mt. Subel and pitched his camp here. It was from here that he could have a good view of the capital city of the demon kingdom of Lanka that was situated on the second mountain called Trikoṭ which was on the south of Subel. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 11; and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13.}

उमा न कछु कपि कै अधिकाई । प्रभु प्रताप जो कालहि खाई ॥ ९ ॥
गिरि पर चढ़ि लंका तेहि देखी । कहि न जाइ अति दुर्ग बिसेषी ॥ १० ॥
अति उतंग जलनिधि चहु पासा । कनक कोट कर परम प्रकासा ॥ ११ ॥

umā na kachu kapi kai adhi kā'ī. prabhu pratāpa jō kālahi khā'ī. 9.
giri para caḍhi laṅkā tēhirī dēkhī. kahi na jā'i ati durga bisēṣī. 10.
ati utaṅga jalanidhi cahu pāsā. kanaka kōṭa kara parama prakāsā. 11.

[Lord Shiva, who is the principal narrator of this epic Story, told his listener Uma, his consort—] Listen Uma; there is no wonder or any special credit that can be assigned to the Kapi (Hanuman) for the marvelous things that had happened—for all of it was achieved owing to Lord Ram's own cosmic powers that are so stupendous in proportion and astounding in their abilities that they do not spare even Kaal, the god of death¹. (9)

When Hanuman reached to top of the hill (that overlooked the city), he looked at the city of Lanka from this vantage point. He saw that its fort was so remarkable that no words could describe it². (10)

The ocean with its heaving waves surrounded the city and its fort from all sides like a gigantic moat. The fort itself had very high walls, with its turrets and ramparts shining brilliantly from the light reflecting from their gilded surfaces³. (11)

[Note—¹To wit, Shiva told Uma that she need not be surprised at the miraculous way Hanuman crossed the mighty ocean after overcoming formidable obstacles, and still retained his calm and vigour as nothing had happened when he landed in Lanka because he was feeling so relaxed and energized as if he had just stood up from rest. There was nothing to be astonished that Hanuman had no fear while entering the dense forest in enemy's land, and crossing it to its other end where he saw a huge hill on which he jumped without fear of any kind, such as being caught or attacked by the ferocious and vicious demons. For indeed, the credit for all these unimaginable events goes to Lord Ram's cosmic mystical powers that are truly so great as they are able to control the working of the entire universe itself. Nay, not only this, but they are so strong that they can even devour the god of death, known as Kaal, himself.

This being the case, crossing the ocean, or defeating the demoness, or moving in forest of Lanka fearlessly, and going on the top of one of its hills that overlooked the city without the fear of being caught or attacked by the demons were inconsequential deeds of Hanuman as he was acting on the behalf of Lord Ram himself, and not on his own accord.

²Refer a note appended to Chaupai line no. 8 herein above regarding this 'hill' on which Hanuman climbed to have a panoramic view of Lanka.

³The view from the top of the hill was fantastic and enthralling. On one side was the forest through which Hanuman had just traveled, on the opposite side was a huge gilded fort encircling a magnificent city that resembled a land of fairies, as one of the fabulous cities described in "The One Thousand and One Arabian Nights". It was situated in the middle of the ocean which formed a natural moat around it. This made Lanka an impregnable citadel for the demons.

The magnificence and grandeur of the capital city of Lanak, named after the demon kingdom bearing the same name, has also been alluded to in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 178 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.

To wit, the present set of verses present a panoramic view of the grand and golden city of Lanka that was famed for its grandeur and magnificence, a city that rivaled Heaven, the city of the gods in general, and Amravati, the city of Indra, the king of gods, in particular.]

छं०. कनक कोट बिचित्र मनि कृत सुंदरायतना घना । १ ।

चउहट्ट हट्ट सुबट्ट बीथीं चारु पुर बहु बिधि बना ॥ २ ॥

गज बाजि खच्चर निकर पदचर रथ बरूथन्हि को गनै । ३ । बहुरूप निसिचर जूथ अतिबल सेन बरनत नहिं बनै ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kanaka kōṭa bicitra mani kṛta sundarāyatanā ghanā. 1.
 ca'uhaṭṭa haṭṭa subaṭṭa bīthim cāru pura bahu bidhi banā. 2.
 gaja bāji khaccara nikara padacara ratha barūthanhi kō ganai. 3.
 bahurūpa nisicara jūtha atibala sēna baranata nahim banai. 4.

The surrounding wall of the city (the ramparts of the fort) were gilded and inlaid with precious stones of different kinds. It had, at intervals, many grand towers and tall turrets of immense dimensions. (Chanda line no. 1)

The magnificent city itself had broad squares, wonderful market-places, beautiful avenues, wide streets and well laid out by-lanes. The city was very enthralling, well designed, and wonderfully decorated in various ways (Chanda line no. 2)

Who could count the multitudes of elephants, horses and mules, as well as the countless numbers of foot soldiers and chariots that dotted the city and roamed around it? (Chanda line no. 3)

One could see a lot many hordes of demon warriors of different forms and features, all of whom were immensely brave and strong in their own right. Verily indeed, it is not possible to describe the teeming demon army that was patrolling the place (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—As Hanuman stood atop the hill and looked around him, he observed a wonderful spectacle. There in the front he beheld the mesmerizing sight of the golden city of Lanka. Its outer perimeter was protected by the fort made of golden bricks; the city was well planned with streets and squares that were beautifully laid out and decked up; and the army and the military police that was patrolling the city were formidable and awe-inspiring.]

बन बाग उपबन बाटिका सर कूप बापीं सोहहीं । ५ ।
 नर नाग सुर गंधर्ब कन्या रूप मुनि मन मोहहीं ॥ ६ ॥
 कहूँ माल देह बिसाल सैल समान अतिबल गर्जहीं । ७ ।
 नाना अखारेन्ह भिरहिं बहु बिधि एक एकन्ह तर्जहीं ॥ ८ ॥ bana bāga upabana bāṭikā sara kūpa bāpim sōhahim. 5.

 nara nāga sura gandharba kan'yā rūpa muni mana mōhahim. 6.
 kahum' māla dēha bisāla saila samāna atibala garjahim. 7.
 nānā akhārēnha bhirahim bahu bidhi ēka ēkanha tarjahim. 8.

Forests, gardens, orchards and parks, as well as lakes, ponds and other water-bodies that abounded in the city looked very charming and attractive. (Chanda line no. 5)

There were also seen in the city countless daughters and ladies belonging to the human race (who lived on earth), the serpent race (who inhabited the subterranean world), and the Gods and the Gandharvas (who lived in heaven), who were so exceptionally beautiful and charming that they could even tempt the mind and heart of great sages, hermits and ascetics who are supposed to practice strict self-control over their senses and desire for pleasures of the world¹. (Chanda line no. 6)

At many places were seen roaring wrestlers who were exceptionally strong and had bodies as huge as mountains. (Chanda line no. 7)

Many such mighty wrestlers were challenging each other and engaged in fierce duels in many a courts and arenas earmarked for such sport. (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹Ravana had overrun the world—the surface of the earth, the subterranean world, and the heaven; and as a trophy of his successful campaigns he had brought with him women belonging to the different races he had vanquished, such as the humans, the serpents, the gods and the gandharvas respectively. Out of these ladies he filled his own harems with the choicest and most beautiful ones who took his fancy, and he rewarded all his soldiers and commanders with the rest of these women.

The net effect was that the city of Lanka was full of male and female demons who were its original inhabitants, but at the same time it was also teeming with beautiful ladies of different age groups belonging to other non-demon races such as humans, serpents, gods and gandharvas. Most of these women were employed as harlots and concubines by the demons who were famed for their pervert, lustful and promiscuous nature, as they had no moral scruples worth the name.

Refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 182.]

करि जतन भट कोटिन्ह बिकट तन नगर चहुँ दिसि रच्छहीं । ९ ।
 कहुँ महिष मानुष धेनु खर अज खल निसाचर भच्छहीं ॥ १० ॥
 एहि लागि तुलसीदास इन्ह की कथा कछु एक है कही । ११ । रघुबीर सर तीरथ सरीरन्हि त्यागि गति पैहहिं सही ॥ १२ ॥

kari jatana bhaṭa kōṭinha bikaṭa tana nagara cahum̐ disi racchahīm. 9.
 kahum̐ mahiṣa mānuṣa dhēnu khara aja khala nisācara bhacchahīm. 10 ēhi lāgi tulasīdāsa inha kī kathā kachu ēka hai kahī. 11.
 raghubīra sara tīratha sarīranhi tyāgi gati paihahīm sahī. 12.

Ferocious and vicious demon warriors who had terrible bodies of all forms and sizes, and who numbered hundreds and thousands, were guarding the city from all the four sides¹. (Chanda line no. 9)

In some of the places could be seen cruel demons feasting on raw (uncooked) buffalos, humans, cows, mules and goats. (Chanda line no. 10)

The poet-saint Tulsidas (who penned this epic Ram Charit Manas) says that he has recorded in brief this scene of Lanka and its inhabitant demon hordes because they were lucky as they would soon discard their demonic bodies at the altar of arrows shot by Lord Ram which would surely grant them (i.e. their souls) deliverance from their sinful bodies just like the fate of those creatures who die in some holy pilgrim place². (Chanda line no. 11-12)

[Note—¹After Ravana had brought Sita as captive, he used to remain on his tenterhooks, feeling very uneasy and highly alarmed as he was always apprehensive of some kind of powerful invasion to free her. He knew about the strength of Lord Ram from what he had heard from his sister Supernakha about the way the Lord had not only decimated the demon army led by Khar, Dushan and Trishira which attacked him but had also killed these mighty demons themselves. It was not a child's play to achieve this feat single-handedly. He had also heard how the Lord had earlier protected the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra by killing the demon Subahu along with his demon army, and throwing another demon Marich hundreds of miles away by shooting a headless arrow at him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.}

So therefore Ravana had deployed additional troops to secure the city, and these troopers were carefully selected for their strength, skill, power and vigour; for Ravana wished to be extra cautious and could not afford to take any chances.

This is the reason why at the time Hanuman was examining the city from the hill-top he saw it teeming with soldiers.

²This fact has also been endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.]

दो०. पुर रखवारे देखि बहु कपि मन कीन्ह बिचार । अति लघु रूप धरौं निसि नगर करौं पइसार ॥ ३ ॥

dōhā.

pura rakhavārē dēkhi bahu kapi mana kīnha bicāra.
ati laghu rūpa dharauṁ nisi nagara karauṁ pa'isāra. 3.

When Kapi (Hanuman) observed that there were a large number of demons guarding the city, he decided that it would be wise and prudent to enter it by assuming a very small size for his body, and then sneaking in by taking advantage of the cover of darkness during the night. (Doha no. 3)

[Note—If Hanuman could expand his body to become huge as he did while facing Sursa, it was also possible for him to reduce it to a small size. To wit, Hanuman had that mystical ability to assume any size he wished.

Since the entrance points of Lanka were well guarded so he decided to sneak in with a very small frame, almost like that of a mosquito, so that no one would notice him. This is what he actually would do as we shall read below in the next verse.

Further, since it would be too risky to enter Lanka during daytime, so the best time would be the night when it would be completely dark. This implies that the day was of the new moon as there would be total darkness on that night.

Hanuman also thought that night would be safer because in all probability the guards would be fast asleep; during the day they had been feasting and drinking heavily or fighting duels, so by night-time they will get sufficiently drowsy and feel lethargic enough to fall prey to sleep.]

चौ०. मसक समान रूप कपि धरी । लंकहि चलेउ सुमिरि नरहरी ॥ १ ॥
 नाम लंकिनी एक निसिचरी । सो कह चलेसि मोहि निंदरी ॥ २ ॥
 जानेहि नहीं मरमु सठ मोरा । मोर अहार जहाँ लगि चोरा ॥ ३ ॥
 मुठिका एक महा कपि हनी । रुधिर बमत धरनीं ढनमनी ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

masaka samāna rūpa kapi dharī. laṅkahi calē'u sumiri naraharī. 1.
 nāma laṅkinī ēka nisicarī. sō kaha calēsi mōhi nindarī. 2.
 jānēhi nahīm maramu saṭha mōrā. mōra ahāra jahām' lagi cōrā. 3.
 muṭhikā ēka mahā kapi hanī. rudhira bamata dharanīm ḍhanamanī. 4.

Deciding that he must assume a very small size to avoid detection at the time of entering Lanka, Hanuman became as small as a house fly or a mosquito¹ and started on his way to Lanka (from his perch on the hill top where he had passed the day, waiting for nightfall) by first remembering (and praying) to Lord Ram, who was a human incarnation of Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu; “naraharī”). (1)

There was a female demon by the name of Lankini. Unfortunately, as Hanuman attempted to sneak in surreptitiously, he was sighted by this vigilant demoness².

She intercepted him and called out aloud, ‘Oh you stranger; where are you going; how dare you insult me by attempting to go inside without seeking my permission?’ (2)

Oh you stupid fellow! Don’t you know my nature that I am habituated to feed on intruders who try to enter Lanka surreptitiously like a thief?’ (3)

Hearing this challenge and seeing this unexpected obstacle, Hanuman wasted no time to punch the demoness fiercely with his clenched fist that made her swoon and fall to the ground vomiting blood³. (4)

[Note—¹First of all it was darkness of the night, and secondly it is common for mosquitoes to roam wildly during the night—so Hanuman thought that this was the best plan to avoid detection, and to enter the city unnoticed.

This verse should not be interpreted to mean that Hanuman ‘actually’ became a fly or a mosquito in physical terms, but that he became only ‘as small as’ a fly or a mosquito in size. How did he manage to do it? Well, in ancient times some few living creatures had certain mystical abilities that empowered them to assume whatever form and size they wished; they could become huge and small, they could change their original forms to resemble some other creature, and even vanish from sight if they so wished only to suddenly reappear elsewhere. These abilities are called ‘Siddhis’; they are rare magical skills that enable the possessor to perform miracles beyond the abilities of ordinary creatures.

Since Hanuman was the ‘son of the wind-god’, so the latter aided his entry by blowing a breeze towards the city from the side of the ocean, and with this breeze Hanuman drifted towards the fort.

²She was so called because she was the captain of the sentries assigned the duty to protect the outer rim of the city from any intruder. She was selected because she was always very diligent in her duties; so while the other guards and soldiers slumbered and snored away, she kept strict eye on all entrance and exit points as she stayed wide awake and alert. Besides this diligence and steadfastness in doing her assigned duty, she had another excellent skill to her credit—which was sharp eyesight and the ability to see in the darkness of the night like nocturnal animals do. Because of these qualities she was assigned night duty, and was at her sentinel post when Hanuman tried to sneak in.

³Hanuman acted very swiftly to silence her as any hesitation would have been catastrophic, because if this demoness started yelling then all those demon soldiers who were fast asleep all around the entrance would have woken up, and that would have meant an instant clash even before he had a chance to put his foot in the city. He was not afraid of any clashes, but this encounter at the gate would have caused a general state of emergency and turmoil in the city, and the risk was that Ravana, who was very intelligent, would have guessed that someone has come searching for Sita, and this meant that she could be put to some form of grave and unknown danger. This risk could not be afforded at any cost; so Hanuman decided to silence the demoness immediately.

Earlier we have read how he had killed the demoness of the ocean, the one named Singhika, by a single blow (refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 3 herein above). He has proved his prowess and mettle once again by felling Lankini by a single hard blow here too; Lankini was not given a chance to utter another word. This precaution worked marvelously because all other sentries continued to sleep soundly, and Hanuman could enter Lanka unnoticed by anyone more.]

पुनि संभारि उठी सो लंका । जोरि पानि कर बिनय ससंका ॥ ५ ॥
जब रावनहि ब्रह्म बर दीन्हा । चलत बिरंचि कहा मोहि चीन्हा ॥ ६ ॥
बिकल होसि तैं कपि कें मारे । तब जानेसु निसिचर संघारे ॥ ७ ॥
तात मोर अति पुन्य बहूता । देखेउँ नयन राम कर दूता ॥ ८ ॥ puni sambhāri uṭhī sō laṅkā. jōri pāni kara binaya sasaṅkā. 5.

jaba rāvanahi brahma bara dīnhā. calata biran̄ci kahā mōhi cīnhā. 6.
bikala hōsi taim̄ kapi kēm̄ mārē. taba jānēsū nīsicara saṅghārē. 7.
tāta mōra ati pun'ya bahūtā. dēkhē'um̄ nayana rāma kara dūtā. 8.

Then that guardian of Lanka recovered herself and got up, but she was very terrified. She clasped her hands in supplication and prayed for mercy. (5)

She (Lankini) said, ‘At the time Brahma, the creator, gave boons to Ravana¹, and was on his way back, his sight fell on me, and recognizing me he gave me the following sign or clue that prophesized the doom of the demon race. (6)

He said to me, “When one day you become extremely agitated and are seriously wounded by being hit or punched by a Kapi (a monkey-like being), then at that time you must become aware that all was over for the demon race and their time was up (i.e. their extermination was near)². (7)

Since that event has happened just now, I realize that the time has arrived indeed. My dear (tāta), forsooth I say that I am very fortunate to be able to see with my own eyes a messenger of Lord Ram. [So you be blessed.] (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 177.

²A very important observation can be made here—and it is this: Everything in the Creator’s creation is destined to come to an end. Even the boons granted by the Creator Brahma himself could not ensure eternity for Ravana and his demon race, for the Creator himself predicted the end.]

दो०. तात स्वर्ग अपबर्ग सुख धरिअ तुला एक अंग । तूल न ताहि सकल मिलि जो सुख लव सतसंग ॥ ४ ॥

dōhā.

tāta svarga apabarga sukha dhari'a tulā ēka aṅga.
tūla na tāhi sakala mili jō sukha lava satasaṅga. 4.

My dear (tāta)! If one were to put all the pleasures and happiness of Swarga (heaven) as well as of Moksha (deliverance from this world of miseries and transmigration) on one side of a scale, and weigh it against the happiness and joy derived by even a little time spent in Satsang—verily indeed and without gainsay it can be affirmatively said that all the best types of pleasures and happiness of the former kind simply cannot match even a fraction of the joy and happiness pertaining to the latter category¹. (Doha no. 4)

[Note—¹In this verse the importance of ‘Satsang’ is being stressed. It is said here that there is absolutely no comparison between the intensity and depth of spiritual bliss, beatitude, peace, happiness, fulfillment and contentedness that are attained by the virtue of Satsang done even for a little time on the one hand, and all the pleasures, comforts and joys that are obtained by going to heaven or getting freedom from worldly problems that torment the creature endlessly on the other hand—because the former is multiple times superior to and supersedes the latter many times over.

The term “Satsang” means having communion with saintly and pious souls; meeting holy people who are devoted to Lord God; talking with them who have offered themselves in the service of the Lord.

Here, meeting of Lankini with Hanuman is likened to a ‘Satsang’ because he is on a mission of Lord Ram, he is devoted to the Lord and committed to his work, he has offered himself and sacrificed his personal safety completely in order to accomplish the mission of the Lord, which is to eliminate the cruel demon and restore peace in the world. Hanuman has no personal agenda to accomplish; all he wishes is to serve his dear Lord Ram to the best of his ability, and in this effort he would not tolerate any obstacle or make any compromise. An aura of holiness and divinity effuses from his being and spreads out on all directions, bestowing spiritual peace, bliss and happiness on all those who come in contact with him, just like the rays of light from the sun or the moon radiate in all directions to spread cheer in this world.

Just imagine what would have happened if the world had not been blessed with the light emanating from the sun and the moon; would artificial light of the best kind that man has ever produced from any source, say from electricity or atomic energy, have ever given life, energy and vitality to this world like the rays of the sun and the moon do? Likewise, the joy and bliss of Satsang simply have no parallel; all the joys and pleasures of heaven as well as the freedom from miseries of life in this mortal gross world taken together simply cannot match the elation and bliss that a single source in the form of nectar of Satsang provides to a creature.]

चौ०. प्रबिसि नगर कीजे सब काजा । हृदयँ राखि कोसलपुर राजा ॥ १ ॥

caupāī.

prabisi nagara kījē saba kājā. hṛdayamṅ rākhi kōsalapura rājā. 1.

[Lankini blessed Hanuman and gave him permission to enter the city of Lanka.] She said, ‘Enter the city, and keeping the Lord of Kaushal (Lord Ram) in your heart (i.e. by steadily remembering the Lord and invoking his blessings in your heart), do all the work (which have been assigned to you by the Lord). [I gladly allow you to enter the city. Invoke Lord Ram’s grace and remember him at all times as you go about accomplishing your task. I bless you of success on my part; have no worries from me.]’ (1)

[Note—In the previous verses she has disclosed the secret known only to her; it was a prophesy by the Creator himself—that one day a Kapi would hit her hard, then at that time she must realize that time of the end of the demon race had arrived. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 4 herein above.}

This is a mortal world; whatever and whosoever that has taken birth in this world is as mortal as the world itself. Even the gods of heaven, who seemingly have endless life, actually have a limited life-span; their life seems ‘endless’ simply because we measure it with the scale with which we measure life in this mortal human world, which is extremely small in length. It is just like comparing distances between galaxies and celestial bodies using scales of measurement that we use to measure distances on the surface of the earth, viz. inches, feet and miles, instead of a scale fit for cosmic measurements, such as in light-years. Come to think of it—even Brahma the creator has a limited life-span, and one fine ‘cosmic day’ he would too cease to exist like the other two gods of the Trinity.

To wit, what Brahma told Lankini was a mere reiteration of the universal and well-known Law of Creation—that all that has come into being would also come to an end! This being the incontrovertible, irrefutable and irrevocable Truth pertaining to this creation, the demons, no matter what boon their king had extracted from the Creator, were bound to die; it was only that Brahma gave a sign to Lankini when that would actually happen, and there was nothing more to it nor any new thing that was predicted by the Creator.

Now since the doom of the demon race was near at hand, and it was beyond the powers of Lankini to stop it, she was clever to take the credit of helping the messenger deputed by the Supreme Being to implement the Law of Creation as stated above. It would also enable her to be in the good books of the Supreme Judge on the 'Day of Reckoning'—for surely she would merit some concession for not harassing and causing unnecessary hurdles in the path of the Supreme Lord's messenger, in this case Hanuman, in carrying out his orders successfully.

Another important point to note here is that Lankini advises Hanuman to remember Lord Ram constantly throughout his stay in Lanka, as this would be his sure-shot formula for success. She reminds him that he must always remember that whatever wondrous feats he shall accomplish during this campaign are made possible only by the virtue of authority and power of the supreme Lord Ram himself, as they would not be at all possible otherwise, so he must never think that he had done anything great or noteworthy on his own accord.

A similar idea was expressed by Jamvant when the victorious team went to Lord Ram to report to him about the success of the mission—that whatever was achieved and all success that was obtained were due to the grace of the Lord, and no individual, including Hanuman, should take credit for anything. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 30.]

गरल सुधा रिपु करहिं मिताई । गोपद सिंधु अनल सितलाई ॥ २ ॥ गरुड सुमेरु रेनु सम ताही । राम कृपा करि चितवा जाही ॥ ३ ॥ garala sudhā ripu karahim mitā'ī. gōpada sindhu anala sitalā'ī. 2.

garuṛa sumēru rēnu sama tāhī. rāma kṛpā kari citavā jāhī. 3.

[The saintly crow Kaagbhusund, who was narrating this glorious story of Lord Ram's life and deeds that have been chronicled in Ram Charit Manas, to Garud, the vehicle of Lord Vishnu, who had come to the former to hear the story being narrated, said—]

'Oh Garud! He upon whom Lord Ram casts his sight of mercy, grace and benevolence, then for this fortunate soul even poison turns into nectar, his enemy becomes his friend, the vast ocean transforms into a shallow body of water no larger than the hollow made on earth by a cow's hoof, the fire becomes cool [2], and the mighty Mt. Sumeru becomes as small and light as a particle of dust or sand [3].' (2-3)

[Note—Kaagbhusund has narrated to Garud the epic story of the Ramayana in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 125. This wonderful narration has already been published separately in English by the author of this present Book; it is available on-line on the same platforms as this current Book.

In these two verses, the glory of Lord Ram is being emphasized. In simple words they imply that if the Lord so wishes, then what seems to be impossible can easily become possible; five examples are given in this context.]

अति लघु रूप धरेउ हनुमाना । पैठा नगर सुमिरि भगवाना ॥ ४ ॥

मंदिर मंदिर प्रति करि सोधा । देखे जहँ तहँ अगनित जोधा ॥ ५ ॥ ati laghu rūpa dharē'u hanumānā. paithā nagara sumiri bhagavānā. 4.

mandira mandira prati kari sōdhā. dēkhē jaham̐ taham̐ aganita jōdhā. 5.

Hanuman resumed his small form¹, and remembering the Lord (Sri Ram)², he entered the city of Lanka³. (4)

He went from one residence to another, looking carefully at each dwelling (to see if he could find any hint of Sita in any of these dwelling places). Everywhere he looked he could only see countless demon warriors. (5)

[Note—¹We have read in Chaupai line no. 1 that preceded Doha no. 4 herein above that when Hanuman started for Lanka from his perch on top of the hill that overlooked the city, he had assumed a miniature form. Once again it is said in this verse that he had taken a miniature form while entering the city. This is because for some time Hanuman had to revert back to his normal form, which was the same as the one he has had while crossing the ocean, i.e. it was huge. {Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 30.}

This occasion was when Lankini—who was of a huge size by the virtue of her being a female demon, and also because she was a sentry appointed to guard the gates of Lanka, which means that she must have had a muscular and almost masculine body like that of a demon warrior—had intercepted him. Hanuman had punched her so hard that she vomited blood, swooned and fell down on the ground. Now, to hit a demoness of such a huge proportion so effectively that she would be vanquished by a single blow, Hanuman had to assume a form at least of a size that equaled hers, if not bigger.

Once the job was done he had to resume his small form in order to stealthily enter Lanka and remain undetected while moving inside the city, because if he retained a distinctive form then the instant he set foot within the city an alarm would be raised. He was not here to fight, for his mission was only limited to finding the whereabouts of Sita; so he wished not to make himself conspicuous. {Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 30.}

The fascinating and wondrous story of Hanuman's adventures in Lanka, the city of the giant Demon race, where he entered and roamed around for some time in a miniature form as small as a house fly or a mosquito, reminds one of Jonathan Swift's classical tale describing the "Travels of Gulliver", especially Gulliver's second voyage to the 'Land of Brobdingnag' where he was called 'Grildrig', which the English people call 'Mannikin'; or for that matter, if we have no hesitation in taking some liberty with imagination, then, with roles reversed, it is like the 'Adventure of a Lilliput in the Land of Gullivers', for Hanuman was no larger than a gnat or a cockroach or a mice running amok in city inhabited by Giants!

Indeed, Hanuman was like a Lilliputian in this adventurous journey to the Land of the Mammoths. And if we were to cite a metaphor from the Holy Bible, the closest that comes to our mind is the Story of Goliath, the giant, and David, from the Old Testament (1 Samuel, 17).]

²We will note that Hanuman had invoked Lord Ram at every crucial point of his journey. First he had done so when he started on the mission from the shore of the ocean—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 1.

Then he had invoked Lord Ram once again at the time he left his perch on the hill and started for the fort of Lanka in a miniature form—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4.

And he does it again here at the time of actually setting foot within the city of Lanka itself. This invocation and remembrance of Lord Ram ensured that the benevolent, merciful, gracious and all-powerful Lord would keep a strict watch on Hanuman with a vigilant eye to make sure that he is safe and secure, as well as successful in his mission; it was an insurance against any misfortune or evil eye that might show the impertinence to interfere in Hanuman's projects.

By his own example Hanuman shows us the way how we can go about our daily lives, attending to its chores and doing our expected duties diligently with a focused mind, at the same time as worshipping our beloved God. Since, from the practical point of view, the mind can't be expected to be completely focused on two different things simultaneously with the same level of concentration, because that would be distractive for it—i.e. it is not really possible in practice to focus the mind on God and do the work of this mundane world simultaneously with the same sincerity and diligence, then what we ought to do is to let the mind be attentive to the job at hand, do it meticulously with full focus and industry, but every now and then take a deep breath from the hectic schedule to pause for a moment to remember our beloved Lord God and thank him for everything, and once again resume our work.

This is a very effective and practical method both to relax as well as to gain peace and confidence, because we keep reminding ourselves that there is a powerful hand supporting and protecting us from behind, and there is nothing to fear. Even failure would not disturb us to an extreme despair as we know that, first, we had done our best and there was nothing more we could do, second, that no one should expect that every desire or wish of his must be fulfilled because this is not the way the world works, and third, that this development which we classify as 'failure' is actually an indication that our great 'protector and saviour' does not want the thing the way we want it to be.

True devotion and submission to the Lord God surely and without gainsay is to treat one's self as one who serves his Lord and carries out his orders and assignments to the best of one's abilities; and just like a servitor who is dispassionate towards the results of his efforts, as his only concern is to do what is assigned to him with utmost sincerity, honesty and diligence, the true devotee of the Lord God too does not get perturbed or worked up about the results of his efforts. For him, success and failure are the same.

In fact however, a true devotee is one who feels that even if he succeeds in any worldly endeavour, but forgets to remember his Lord God during the course of the proceedings that gave him such success, then that success is no better than total failure.

³We note here that Lankini had kept quiet about Hanuman's arrival and entry into the city. Besides her conviction that the end of the demons was near as it was Brahma's prophesy that cannot be negated, there was one other important reason why she kept quiet about an enemy's spy entering the city. She feared severe punishment, even death and torture, for negligence and letting Hanuman in; she was appointed to guard the gates of the fort after due diligence about her abilities and with the full confidence that she had the ability to defend it from any intruder whosoever he might be. She had herself asserted this when she first challenged Hanuman, saying that she feeds on thieves and intruders. So she decided to exercise discretion and keep quiet. {Refer specifically to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 4.}

गयउ दसानन मंदिर माहीं । अति बिचित्र कहि जात सो नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥
 सयन किएँ देखा कपि तेही । मंदिर महुँ न दीखि बैदेही ॥ ७ ॥ भवन एक पुनि दीख सुहावा । हरि मंदिर तहँ भिन्न बनावा ॥ ८ ॥ gaya'u dasānana mandira māhīm. ati bicitra kahi jāta sō nāhīm. 6.

 sayana ki'ēm' dēkhā kapi tēhī. mandira mahum' na dīkhi baidēhī. 7.
 bhavana ēka puni dīkha suhāvā. hari mandira taham' bhinna banāvā. 8.

In due course of time, during the process of examining all the dwellings of Lanka in search of any tangible hint of Sita, Hanuman reached the palace of Ravana. It was so extraordinarily magnificent and grand to behold that it is not possible to describe it in words. (6)

The Kapi (Hanuman) observed that he (Ravana) was asleep inside the palace, but nowhere could he perceive any sign of Vaidehi¹ (Sita). (7)

So he moved ahead, and soon descried a residence which was pleasant to look at, for it was like a virtual temple of Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu), and thus different from the rest of the buildings of the city². (8)

[Note—¹The word used here is “baidēhī”—which literally means ‘one without a physical body’. This is an apt epithet used for Sita because what Ravana had brought to Lanka was a mere shadow or an apparition of the real Sita, and not her true and real self. Thus, the ‘Sita’ that was held in Lanka was only an image of her; it was a false Sita; it was an illusion that created an impression that she was there but like an apparition it was merely a ghostly shadow.

As we have already read earlier, Lord Ram had planned everything meticulously in advance so that he can accomplish the mission of eliminating the cruel, sinful and vicious demons without any hitch, and towards this end it was absolutely necessary to induce them to commit some grave impertinence and sinful act of misdemeanour so that a justified excuse could be found to get rid of them. Since for this enterprise to succeed the Lord had to take help of Sita, and she was also willing to cooperate, but at the same time the Lord was very concerned that no evil spot could ever be cast on Sita's immaculate character, purity and chastity, so it became imperative for him to work out some way that both the ends could be met.

Thus, the Supreme Lord—who is a master of delusions, a maverick actor, and the best magician of this creation who excels in conjuring up fantastic illusions that even surpass the real thing—decided to hide the ‘real Sita’ by placing her in the safe custody of the Fire God, the only God whose integrity and powers cannot be questioned as his very name suggests that he represents the powerful ‘fire element’ of Nature that spares none and burns all that is not pure. So, what remained after this exercise was a reflection, an image, a shadow or an apparition, whatever we may like to call it, of Sita. This plan was carried out so secretly that even Laxman, Lord Ram's own brother and comrade-in-arm in the forest and throughout the epic War, was not aware of it; even he thought that Ravana had abducted the real Sita! This is explicitly and emphatically stated in all versions of the Ramayana. In the context of our present reading, refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.

Come to think of this miracle and view it from a broader perspective: When the whole of Lanka was burnt by Hanuman, about which we shall soon be reading in great detail in our Book, Sita remained unscathed. All other demons and demonesses ran helter-skelter to escape the leaping flames, but Sita remained confined to the same place under the tree where she had been sitting since her arrival at Lanka. It should be very clear and evident to an intelligent observer who looks closely and applies his mind to conclude that in this fiery scenario when flames were leaping everywhere, Sita could sit and survive because she had 'no physical body'! Fire can burn only those things that have a physical existence; it does not destroy an apparition or a ghost or an imaginary shadow for they do not actually exist.

The final proof came when the war ended. Lord Ram created a scene of having doubts about the integrity of Sita, and required her to prove her self by 'entering a raging fire'. This was merely a ruse to create a dazzling blaze that would blind everyone standing around so that the original Sita could come out from the place where she was hidden by the Lord himself, i.e. from the custody of the Fire God. This incident is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 14 that precedes Doha no. 108—to Chanda line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 109.

Of course we shall read all about this incident in due course of time when we reach that point in Chapter no. 19 of our Book.

A very pertinent question may arise in the mind of the reader here, and it is this: How was Hanuman sure that none of the ladies he saw in the many dwellings he investigated was Sita? That means he knew how to recognize her when he saw her, is it not so? Yes indeed, it is so. How come? The answer is this: At the time Ravana had been passing over the Mt. Rishyamook in his chariot with Sita, she had seen a group of monkeys sitting down below on the summit of this mountain, and she had then wailed loudly, called out Lord Ram's name, and had dropped down some of her ornament and pieces of clothes torn from her garments so that these monkeys could keep them to show Lord Ram when he passes that way searching for her. When the Lord came that way and chatted with Sugriv, the latter told him all about this incident. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 5.}

Hanuman had personally seen Sita on that occasion, and surely and certainly therefore he would easily recognize her when he saw her again.]

²All the buildings and residential places of Lanka bore universal marks and had characteristic features that identified them with their masters and lords, i.e. the demons who occupied them. But there was one dwelling that was different from the rest; it stood out for signs that indicated that some god-loving person occupies it. We shall soon read in the Doha no. 5 that follows herein below what signs distinguished it from the rest of the structures in Lanka.

The general atmosphere of this particular dwelling was similar to a temple dedicated to Lord Hari; it had a holy aura around it that was soothing for the senses and pleased the eyes of the beholder.

To wit, this residence was like an oasis in the vast desert known as Lanka; since it was different from the other buildings, so it caught the eye of Hanuman.]

दो०. रामायुध अंकित गृह सोभा बरनि न जाइ ।

नव तुलसिका बृंद तहँ देखि हरष कपिराइ ॥ ५ ॥

dōhā.

rāmāyudha aṅkita gṛha sōbhā barani na jā'i.

nava tulasikā bṛnda taḥaṁ dēkhi haraṣa kapirā'i. 5.

That dwelling was singular inasmuch as it had signs of Lord Ram's arms (weapons) marked on it (i.e. on its main entrance gate or doorway). [To wit, the 'bow and arrow', which are the weapons held by Lord Ram in his hands, were marked on this building.]¹

This building was so pleasant and beautiful to look at that its magnificence cannot be described. [Forsooth, the dwelling place looked all the more comforting and pleasing by the sign of the 'bow and arrow' marked on it, as this sign directly invoked the protective shield of Lord Ram, and also indicated that Lord Ram was always present there in a subtle and invisible way that cannot be perceived by the eye.]

Besides this sign, Hanuman, the Lord of the Kapis, also perceived clusters of the sacred Tulsi trees (the Basil plant) that were fresh and green planted in the courtyard; this sight excited him and filled him with a thrill. [To wit, the sign of the 'bow and arrow' as well as the 'presence of the sacred Tulsi tree' clearly meant that the inhabitant of this house was a devotee of Lord Ram. Hanuman was elated as at last he has discovered a true friend in an enemy's land who would surely be of a great help to him.]² (Doha no. 5)

[Note—¹It was a wonder of wonder to find someone openly putting up signs of Lord Ram, i.e. the bow and the arrow, on his home in a city of demons. It was well known that Ravana treated Lord Ram as his arch enemy as he knew that the Lord was the one who would exterminate the entire demon race. No king would ever like that someone in his kingdom would so blatantly exhibit any symbol of his enemy, which is no small offense, and it amounts to treason, sedition, disloyalty, betrayal and sacrilege, whatever one would like to call it.

How and why did Ravana allow this to happen right under his nose? It's a singular and remarkable pointer to Ravana's noble soul! Though he had a body of a demon, though he had been committing serious crimes and was accused of cruelty and viciousness, yet deep down in his heart he yearned for deliverance, emancipation and salvation of his soul. Being born a 'demon' he was constrained to behave like a 'demon', but internally he wanted spiritual peace and beatitude.

This particular house belonged to Ravana's brother Vibhishan. Vibhishan was a devout person who was pious and a devotee of Lord Vishnu who had manifested in the form of Lord Ram. In the very beginning when the three demon brothers, Ravana, Kumbhakarna and Vibhishan, had done severe Tapa (penance) to please Brahma, the creator, and the latter rewarded them with their desired boons, Vibhishan had sought devotion and love for Lord Hari. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 177.}

Ravana was well aware of it; he knew that since Vibhishan had got this boon directly from Brahma who had also granted boons to Ravana himself, so it was beyond his powers to cancel it, especially when Vibhishan was his own brother. If he tried to play fools with Brahma's grants to Vibhishan just because he did not like them, then there were good chances, Ravana feared, that Brahma would become so annoyed with him that he would do something that will neutralize Ravana's own boons.

Besides this, Ravana's tolerance of Vibhishan's open display of devotion for Lord Vishnu also indicates how obliging and accommodating he was as far at least as the members of his own race were concerned. Not only Vibhishan, Ravana had others in his kingdom whom he knew to be god-fearing and devoted to Lord Vishnu; one such was an old demoness by the name of Trijata. Ravana had specially appointed her to take care of Sita so that other cruel demoness do not torment her because he was aware of this fact—that Trijata would respect Sita as she was a pious and god-fearing creature. This fact that Trijata was a devotee of Lord Ram whom she knew to be an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, is explicitly stated in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11; we shall encounter Trijata very soon.

His own wife Mandodari had given clear indications of her respect and reverence for Lord Ram when she had made repeated entreaties with Ravana to give Sita back to the Lord, and stop his confrontational attitude towards Lord Ram. {Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Doha no. 7; (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. Doha no. 15; and (iii) once again in Doha no. 35—to Doha no. 37.}

Imagine Ravana tolerating his own wife siding with his enemy and singing the latter's praises on his face; would any husband tolerate this behaviour of his wife? But Ravana did. It is ample proof of his tolerant nature on the one hand, and his internal belief that finally the time of his deliverance has arrived, and that he is so lucky that the Supreme Being himself has come to deliver him by his own hands!

We have another instance of how Ravana had looked the other way when a member of his family praised Lord Ram. His own younger brother Kumbhakaran had sternly reproached him when Ravana disclosed that he had made Lord Ram his enemy. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Doha no. 63.} We also would be reading this incident in Chapter no. 15 of our Book.

In short, Ravana willingly allowed this small oasis of holiness, piety and devotion for Lord God in the form of the dwelling we refer to in this Doha to thrive in his city of Lanka because he derived some subtle form of spiritual peace, solace and comfort by it. Verily indeed, this particular house was like a patch of greenery in the dry desert represented by Lanka.

There is another reason also why the inhabitant of this house had put up the sign of the 'bow and the arrow' in front of the dwelling. He lived in a perpetual danger of being attacked, if not by Ravana himself then by other demons who hated him. So he had wisely marked the sign of the 'bow and arrow', which are weapons by which one would defend oneself, on his gate and doorway as a sort of magical charm to ward off evil eyes and protect him from some evil spirit that may aim to harm him.

²The 'Tulsi tree' is planted in houses of devotees of Lord Vishnu as this plant is very dear to the Lord. So when Hanuman saw these two signs—one of the bow and arrow, and the other of the Tulsi plant—in that house, he was convinced that its resident was surely a devotee of Lord Ram as well as Lord Vishnu, because the bow and arrow reminds one of Lord Ram, and Tulsi plant of Lord Vishnu.

He felt thrilled because at last he has found a friend in an alien land. If nothing else, then at least he can take some rest and refresh himself in that house if he introduces himself as a messenger of Lord Ram. He felt sure that the inhabitant would welcome him as soon as he knows who Hanuman was, and there was little to fear.

Still Hanuman was skeptical because it was so odd to see such an auspicious home in the middle of the city of demons. The next verse says exactly this.]

चौ०. लंका निसिचर निकर निवासा । इहाँ कहाँ सज्जन कर बासा ॥ १ ॥
 मन महुँ तरक करै कपि लागा । तेहीं समय बिभीषनु जागा ॥ २ ॥
 राम राम तेहिं सुमिरन कीन्हा । हृदयँ हरष कपि सज्जन चीन्हा ॥ ३ ॥
 एहि सन हठि करिहउँ पहिचानी । साधु ते होइ न कारज हानी ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

laṅkā nisicara nikara nivāsā. ihām̃ kahām̃ sajjana kara bāsā. 1.
 mana mahum̃ taraka karaim̃ kapi lāgā. tēhīm̃ samaya bibhīṣanu jāgā. 2.
 rāma rāma tēhīm̃ sumirana kīnhā. hṛdayam̃ haraṣa kapi sajjana cīnhā. 3.
 ēhi sana haṭhi kariha'um̃ pahicānī. sādhu tē hō'i na kāraja hānī. 4.

When Hanuman saw the dwelling marked by the holy signs as alluded to in the previous verses, he wondered, ‘Lanka is teeming with (cruel, evil, sinful and vicious) demons; where is the chance of finding a god-loving person, who is pious and of a pure heart, living in such a vile place as this?’ (1)

Just at the time the Kapi (Hanuman) was thus contemplating in his Mana (mind and heart), Vibhishan woke up (as night was coming to a close, and day-break was near)¹. (2)

As soon as he woke up, he invoked the holy name of Ram and repeated it aloud twice, saying “Ram, Ram”. When the Kapi heard these words pronounced he felt exhilarated in his heart, because he concluded that the speaker was indeed a pious and saintly soul². (3)

So Hanuman thought to himself, ‘I shall surely make an acquaintance with this gentleman, for I am absolutely sure that he, being a saintly person, can not cause any hindrance in my work. [Rather, I am quite certain that he would be of some help to me.]’ (4)

[Note—¹This verse clearly implies that Hanuman had spent the whole night searching for Sita, and investigating each and every home in the city. He had entered the fort at nightfall, and now it was nearing dawn.

It is to be observed here that he moved around so silently, so stealthily and so inconspicuously that no one got a wind that he was on the prowl. The city and its inhabitants were slumbering peacefully, not aware that a huge catastrophe was looming large over their heads. To wit, all the precautions taken by Ravana failed to prevent the implementation of what Providence had destined for the demon race, for the doom of the demon race had dawned that morning when Hanuman saw the first ray of sunlight over that city.

²The very utterance of Lord Ram's holy name immediately established Vibhishan's credentials to Hanuman. Only a saintly, pious and god-loving soul would invoke the holy name of the Lord God the very first thing in the morning. There is a lesson to be learnt here: we are recognized by the words we speak. If we are of a noble heart and have a pious soul, if we are devoted to God and conscious that he is our ultimate Father, if our upbringing is good and we have had good moral education—then remembering the Lord God, our supreme Benefactor, Protector, Saviour and Father, would be a part of our nature and our true character.

Vibhishan was accustomed and habituated to invoke the holy name of Lord Ram to start his day with; it was his natural habit and routine. He was not aware at this point of time that Hanuman was in Lanka, so he had not uttered the holy words 'Ram, Ram' to attract Hanuman's attention or to impress him in any way.

Another important point to note is that Vibhishan had uttered these holy words, 'Ram, Ram', quite loudly because they were heard by Hanuman who was somewhere at a distance outside his home. It was still dark as dawn was a few hours away; there was stillness and quietude in the city. The holy name of Lord Ram echoed all around Vibhishan's home; it was like the call that holy men would make to the laity to wake up to welcome a new day by first offering their obeisance to the Lord God, and pray to the Lord to seek his blessings for a good start of the day.]

बिप्र रूप धरि बचन सुनाए । सुनत बिभीषन उठि तहँ आए ॥ ५ ॥
 करि प्रनाम पूँछी कुसलाई । बिप्र कहहु निज कथा बुझाई ॥ ६ ॥
 की तुम्ह हरि दासन्ह महँ कोई । मोरें हृदय प्रीति अति होई ॥ ७ ॥ की तुम्ह रामु दीन अनुरागी । आयहु मोहि करन बड़भागी ॥ ८ ॥ bipra rūpa dhari bacana sunā'ē. sunata bibhīṣana uṭhi taham' ā'ē. 5.

 kari pranāma pūm̃chī kusalā'ī. bipra kahahu nija kathā bujhā'ī. 6.
 kī tumha hari dāsanha maham' kō'ī. mōrēm̃ hṛdaya prīti ati hō'ī. 7.
 kī tumha rāmu dīna anurāgī. āyahu mōhi karana baṛabhāgī. 8.

Hanuman approached Vibhishan's home by assuming the form of a Brahmin (bipra rūpa dhari), and called out to him. [To wit, Hanuman pronounced some words by which Vibhishan would immediately recognize that some acquaintance is standing at the door.]¹

As soon as Vibhishan heard these words, he got up and came (rushing) to the door from where he heard the call. (5)

Vibhishan bowed his head reverentially before the visitor and politely asked for his well-being, requesting the latter to introduce himself by telling more about his own self.

Hence, Vibhishan enquired, ‘Oh Brahmin (bipra)! Please enlighten me more about yourself. [Please be kind to tell me who you are, and what the purpose of your visit is.] (6)

Are you one of the devotees of Lord Hari (for you have pronounced the Lord’s name ‘Ram, Ram’ as a calling sign), for as soon as I have seen you a sort of natural affection has sprouted in my heart for you²? (7)

Or is it that you are the merciful and benevolent Lord Ram himself who has come in disguise to bless me and make me fulfilled³?’ (8)

[Note—¹Hanuman was very wise, intelligent and prudent. Just a moment earlier he had heard Vibhishan invoking Lord Ram’s name aloud; it was this name which had, in fact, made Hanuman decide that he must go and meet this person as he is surely to be a pious and god-loving soul who is devoted to Lord Ram, knowing fully well that the Lord is not an ordinary human being but a manifested form of the Supreme Being, for otherwise he wouldn’t have pronounced the Lord’s holy name “Ram” because it was the name of an enemy of the demon race.

So it is very certain that the best way Hanuman thought he should introduce himself to Vibhishan was by calling out the same name ‘Ram’ as the latter had done a while ago, because then Vibhishan would have no doubt that the person who is standing at the door calling out to him is a friend and not a foe.

Hanuman wished to play it safe and ensure that Vibhishan is taken into confidence at once when he decided to approach the latter’s home in the form of a Brahmin, for it was too risky to cause any doubt or alarm in Vibhishan’s mind regarding the identity of the early morning caller, as he could raise an alarm, at which demon guards would come rushing in to arrest the intruder, even before Hanuman would have had time to investigate the city further more closely and clearly during the daylight hours. The sight of a humble Brahmin standing at the door would be highly reassuring for Vibhishan and welcomed by him in a city where only ferocious demons of the most ugly shapes and hideous forms were to be seen everywhere.

We should also note that Hanuman had assumed the form of a Brahmin when he had gone to meet Lord Ram and Laxman at the foot of Mt. Rishyamook, because, as we have seen above, it is the safest form that pre-empts any chance of fear and apprehension. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 1.}

²Vibhishan told Hanuman, “Oh Brahmin, it appears to me that there exists a natural bond of affection between our souls, and they appear to resonate with the same frequency. As soon as I saw you it appears to me that I have met someone who is friendly, someone who is on the same plane of spiritual being as my own self. Obviously it is only possible between two brothers who have deep fraternal love for each other. It looks that we have a common father; which means that you too are a devotee of Lord Ram as I am, because the Lord is the Supreme Father to all his devotees. What is it; please tell me as curiosity has risen in my heart.”

Vibhishan loves Lord Ram very dearly; he is devoted to the Lord and worships him even while living in the midst of vicious and sinful demons who are vehemently opposed to the Lord. Anyone who has Lord Ram living in his heart will also love a devotee of the Lord with the same natural bond of affection and fraternal love that exists between brothers who are related to each other through blood, as they have a common father. The reverse is also true—i.e. if one loves a devotee of Lord Ram then the Lord would reside in his heart. This is clearly affirmed by the learned sage Valmiki in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 131.

To wit, a bond of mutual affection and brotherhood sprouted instantly and spontaneously between Hanuman and Vibhishan.

³A remarkable observation indeed! It implies that there is not much of a difference between Lord Ram himself and his true devotee; the devotee is deemed to be an image of the Lord in holiness, piety, bliss and purity of soul; the devotee is a veritable reflection of the glorious virtues that Lord Ram possesses.]

दो०. तब हनुमंत कही सब राम कथा निज नाम ।

सुनत जुगल तन पुलक मन मगन सुमिरि गुन ग्राम ॥ ६ ॥

dōhā.

taba hanumanta kahī saba rāma kathā nija nāma.

sunata jugala tana pulaka mana magana sumiri guna grāma. 6.

When Vibhishan asked Hanuman to tell him more about himself by way of an introduction, the latter disclosed his name and briefly narrated the story related to Lord Ram. [Hanuman told Vibhishan how Sita was abducted by Ravana, and how he has been sent by Lord Ram to meet her and find about her whereabouts, so that the Lord can come and free her.]

This narration of the Lord's story thrilled both the narrator and the listener; both of them became deeply emotional and got lost in a reverie of devotion and affection for the Lord when they remembered him and his glorious virtues¹. (Doha no. 6)

[Note—¹This is special quality of a true devotee of Lord Ram as shown here by Hanuman and Vibhishan, that is “he is thrilled when he hears the holy name of the Lord being pronounced, when he hears the divine story of the Lord being narrated”.

A similar condition prevailed upon the saintly crow Kaagbhusund when he narrated the holy story of Lord Ram to Garud; there are ample instances of it in Ram Charit Manas. Some of them are the following: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 64; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 68; (iii) Doha no. 69; (iv) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 124.

We also read in this context that the ‘listener’ of this story narrated by the crow-saint Kaagbhusund, i.e. Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu who had come to him specifically with this purpose in mind, too became highly thrilled so much so that his body became puffed, his feathers and stood on their end, and his wings spread wide in emotional excitement. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 93.]

चौ०. सुनहु पवनसुत रहनि हमारी । जिमि दसनन्हि महुँ जीभ बिचारी ॥ १ ॥

तात कबहुँ मोहि जानि अनाथा । करिहहिं कृपा भानुकुल नाथा ॥ २ ॥

तामस तनु कछु साधन नाही । प्रीति न पद सरोज मन माहीं ॥ ३ ॥
 अब मोहि भा भरोस हनुमंता । बिनु हरिकृपा मिलहिं नहिं संता ॥ ४ ॥
 जौं रघुबीर अनुग्रह कीन्हा । तौ तुम्ह मोहि दरसु हठि दीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

sunahu pavanasuta rahani hamārī. jimi dasananhi mahum̃ jībha bicārī. 1.
 tāta kabahum̃ mōhi jāni anāthā. karihahim̃ kṛpā bhānukula nāthā. 2.
 tāmasa tanu kachu sādhana nāhim̃. prīti na pada sarōja mana māhim̃. 3.
 aba mōhi bhā bharōsa hanumantā. binu harikṛpā milahim̃ nahim̃ santā. 4.
 jaur̃ raghubīra anugraha kīnhā. tau tumha mōhi darasu haṭhi dīnhā. 5.

[Once a good and friendly relationship was established between Vibhishan and Hanuman, the former invited the latter inside his home, and then they chatted amiably for a while. Vibhishan expressed his excess of happiness at meeting Hanuman, and told him about his pitiful existence amongst the cruel demons from whom he was always in danger. Vibhishan also wished to know if Lord Ram ever remembered him as he was one of Lord's loyal devotees, but who unfortunately got trapped in the midst of sinful demons due to the fiat of fate.]

Vibhishan said to Hanuman, 'Listen oh the son of the wind-god. My life (here in Lanka, amongst the demons) is similar to the precarious condition of the poor tongue which has to survive surrounded by sharp teeth, for I am in constant fear of the ten-headed Ravana¹. (1)

Oh my dear (tāta)! Tell me, will the 'Lord of the Solar Race' ("bhānukula nāthā"; Lord Ram who was a descendant of the Solar Race) show his grace, mercy and kindness upon me keeping in view the fact that I am humble and without a protector and guardian with me (except the Lord)²? (2)

For I have an evil body (as I am born in the sinful, evil and despicable demon race), and with this body it has not been possible for me to do any worthwhile good or noble deed that can be called meritorious, and on the strength of which I could have claimed some sort of eligibility to gain spiritual peace and happiness.

Besides this, I have not known, being a demon myself and living amongst demons, what true love and affection for the Lord is, and so I cannot that I have the required level of love and affection for the holy lotus like feet of the Lord (which is expected from a true devotee). (3)

But nevertheless, after having met you, who are a saintly soul, I am now certain and I fully convinced that the Lord is indeed benevolent and favourable towards me, for otherwise it would not have been possible for me to meet a saint like you³. (4)

For sooth and without gainsay, it is certainly true that you have voluntarily met me only because Lord Ram has been benevolent and gracious towards me⁴. [This is because meeting a saint is one of the biggest spiritual blessings that the Lord grants to a creature as it paves the way for the latter's deliverance and emancipation. Meeting a saint gives immense spiritual peace and bliss to the tormented soul as I have now witnessed myself. After meeting you I feel very happy and blissful; I now am certain that the day of my deliverance from suffering in this den of demons has finally arrived.]’ (5)

[Note—¹Just like the humble tongue that lives a precarious life in the mouth surrounded by sharp teeth from all sides, which can cut, bite and make it bleed at any moment if it dares to get in their way, Vibhishan also lives in constant danger of life and torture if he peradventure annoys his elder brother Ravana, the ten-headed one (jimi dasananhi mahum’ jībha bicārī).

As long as the tongue does not get in the way of the teeth, it is allowed to speak and eat, i.e. do whatever it likes, but the moment it steps beyond its threshold it immediately gets bitten off fiercely by the teeth. Similarly, as long as Vibhishan keeps to himself and minds his business, Ravana does not bother or torment him, obviously because they were brothers and both had done severe Tapa together to get boons from the creator Brahma. In fact it must be accepted, and Ravana must be given due credit for it, that he allowed Vibhishan quite a lot of freedom to practice his spiritual beliefs, for it is a truth that Ravana had tolerated his bother putting up the signs of Lord Ram—Ravana’s personal enemy and of the whole of the demon race in general by the virtue of his being an incarnation of Lord Vishnu whom the demons regard as their arch enemy and nemesis—in the front of his home in the middle of Lanka. Say, which king would ever allow anyone in his kingdom to openly display the signs of his enemy, such as the court of arms etc., on his house; would he not be charged with treason, betrayal, treachery and sedition? But Ravana tolerated it! {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 5 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.}

Can it be denied therefore that it was indeed and truly an excellent sign of Ravana’s noble heart and its secret piety and holiness, of his tolerant nature, and of his fraternal love for his brother whom he loved especially more because he was the only one in the whole family who was devoted to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, and as a result the only one who would carry forward the line of the demon race at the end of the war, who will be the lone torch-bearer of the glorious name of the demon family descended from illustrious sage Pulastya?

Just how apt and true this metaphor of the ‘tongue and the teeth’ vis-à-vis Vibhishan and Ravana is will be proved a little later in our Story when we read that at the time Vibhishan, in goof faith and keeping the welfare of this brother in mind, had advised his brother Ravana to give Sita back to Lord Ram and avoid a ruinous war, Ravana publicly insulted Vibhishan and kicked him, ordering him to quit his kingdom as he was a traitor praising his enemy. This led Vibhishan to abandon Lanka and take shelter with Lord Ram, joining the Lord in his war efforts. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precede Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 41.}

²Vibhishan asked Hanuman most eagerly: “Hanuman, tell me dear, will Lord Ram arrange things and maneuver them in such a favourable way that I am finally extricated from this den of sinful demons, and can live a free and happy life like other devotees of the Lord? Will the Lord accept me inspite of my being a member of the despicable demon race, and a brother of the evil Ravana? I don’t think that I am qualified enough for this honour, but I rely on the merciful and gracious nature of Lord Ram who, I am sure, will forgive me for any misdeeds that I may have done or the lack of good virtues that I ought to have possessed, except that I am devoted completely to the Lord. Lord Ram is renowned as being the Angel Guardian and the benevolent Lord of all those who have no one to protect and save them from sufferings; it is on this fame of the Lord that I put all my life at stake. So Hanuman, tell me please, will Lord Ram cast a compassionate glance at me for once?”

³Vibhishan says that the very fact that a great devotee of Lord Ram and a soul as pious and saintly as that of Hanuman had voluntarily come visiting him proves that Lord Ram is kindly disposed towards him, because meeting a true saint is only possible by the grace of the Lord. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 69 where Garuda has expressed an exactly similar sentiment towards the saintly crow Kaagbhushund when the latter narrated the divine story of Lord Ram to the former which gave him immense degree of peace and spiritual bliss.}

⁴There are many more instances in Ram Charit Manas where it is reiterated that meeting with a saint is a blessing for the soul, and it implies that Lord Ram is indeed benevolent on a person who is fortunate to meet a saint. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37—to Doha no. 38; (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 45; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 13, 21 that precede Doha no. 121; (iv) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 123, (v) Chaupai line nos. 6-9 that precede Doha no. 125.]

सुनहु बिभीषन प्रभु कै रीती । करहिं सदा सेवक पर प्रीती ॥ ६ ॥
कहहु कवन मैं परम कुलीना । कपि चंचल सबहीं बिधि हीना ॥ ७ ॥ प्रात लेइ जो नाम हमारा । तेहि दिन ताहि न मिलै अहारा ॥ ८ ॥ sunahu bibhīṣana prabhu kai rītī. karahim sadā sēvaka para prītī. 6.

kahahu kavana mairṁ parama kulīnā. kapi cañcala sabahim bidhi hīnā. 7.
prāta lē'i jō nāma hamārā. tēhi dina tāhi na milai ahārā. 8.

Hanuman replied, ‘Listen Vibhishan. I shall tell you the principles that the Lord (Sri Ram) always follows: it is that he always and invariably shows his affection and benevolence towards his ‘sevaks’ (i.e. to his devotees, those who serve him, those who follow him), for this is his wont and habit¹. (6)

Look at me. Say, in which noble race or superior clan am I born (that would have entitled me to obtain Lord Ram’s favour and grace, or the honour that the Lord has granted me by picking me as his messenger who would get the unmatched glory of finding Sita and be instrumental in eliminating the demon race in order to help the supreme Lord Vishnu to keep his promise made to the gods and mother earth)?

To wit, I am born in a lowly and humble race that is known by the name of Kapi (literally the monkey race), and by nature we are fickle and frivolous, as well as devoid of any worthwhile virtues. So what claim do I have for getting any honour that I have been granted?

[To wit, I am a living proof of Lord Ram’s graceful and benevolent nature that he has shown so much grace upon a humble and lowly creature like me just because the Lord realized that I am totally and faithfully devoted to him, and have deep and undiluted affection for him.] (7)

Indeed, I am born in such a lowly race that if anyone peradventure pronounces our name in the morning then it is regarded as such a bad omen for him that he would not get anything to eat that day. (8)

[Note—¹Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, (a) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 183; and (b) Uttar Kand, (i) Doha no. 86 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it; (ii) Doha no. 87 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.]

दो०. अस मैं अधम सखा सुनु मोहू पर रघुबीर । कीन्ही कृपा सुमिरि गुन भरे बिलोचन नीर ॥ ७ ॥

dōhā.

asa mairiṁ adhama sakhā sunu mōhū para raghubīra. kīnhī kṛpā sumiri guna bharē bilōcana nīra. 7.

My dear friend (sakhā). I am indeed of such a low birth, yet Lord Ram (Raghubir) had been so merciful and gracious upon me (that I can't describe as it is beyond my imagination).'

Saying this, and recalling Lord Ram's gracious nature and glorious virtues, Hanuman's eyes were filled with tears (of gratitude and thankfulness). (Doha no. 7)

चौ०. जानतहूँ अस स्वामि बिसारी । फिरहिं ते काहे न होहिं दुखारी ॥ १ ॥
एहि बिधि कहत राम गुन ग्रामा । पावा अनिर्बाच्य बिश्रामा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jānatahūṁ asa svāmi bisārī. phirahim tē kāhē na hōhim dukhārī. 1.
ēhi bidhi kahata rāma guna grāmā. pāvā anirbācya bisrāmā. 2.

[Hanuman was so overwhelmed with emotions that he could speak no further for a moment. Then he regained his composure and said—] 'Even after being aware of such an excellent and obliging nature of Lord Ram if a creature still wonders elsewhere seeking protection for himself, if he seeks succour and solace from his sufferings elsewhere, say why will such an unfortunate one not become unhappy and subjected to sufferings and miseries of all kinds?'¹ (1)

In this way, by remembering and reiterating the many virtues of Lord Ram, and singing the Lord's glories, both these blessed and noble souls (Vibhishan and Hanuman) derived immense bliss and peace which was so sublime and profound that it cannot be described in words². (2)

[Note—¹For indeed such a creature is like a fool who has abandoned an eternal spring of happiness right in his own courtyard and goes searching for water in a desert with a bucket in hand!

²The level of ecstasy and beatitude that Vibhishan and Hanuman enjoyed during those moments were of a sublime quality, the intensity, the effulgence and the depth of which was so great that the situation can be understood by us by natural instinct or by experience only, but which is extremely difficult to explain by employing words, as the latter, no matter how best and with skill they are selected from the dictionary, would not do justice to the exalted emotional state that prevailed at that time, for sentiments of such spiritual profundity cannot be butted-and-bounded in any language.]

पुनि सब कथा बिभीषन कही । जेहि बिधि जनकसुता तहँ रही ॥ ३ ॥
 तब हनुमंत कहा सुनु भ्राता । देखी चहउँ जानकी माता ॥ ४ ॥
 जुगुति बिभीषन सकल सुनाई । चलेउ पवनसुत बिदा कराई ॥ ५ ॥ puni saba kathā bibhīṣana kahī. jēhi bidhi janakasutā taham̃ rahī. 3.

 taba hanumanta kahā sunu bhrātā. dēkhī caha'um̃ jānakī mātā. 4.
 juguti bibhīṣana sakala sunā'ī. calē'u pavanasuta bidā karā'ī. 5.

[After some time of silence during which tears rolled down their eyes and they remained submerged in experiencing ecstasy and blissfulness, Vibhishan and Hanuman once again regained their composure and focused their mind to practical affairs of this mundane world, to the work at hand that had to be urgently accomplished.]

So, picking up the thread of conversation with Hanuman, Vibhishan told him everything about where and in what condition Janaksuta (“janakasutā”; literally the daughter of king Janak; i.e. Sita) lived there (in Lanka)¹. (3)

Then Hanuman expressed his desire to meet her, saying to Vibhishan, ‘Listen brother. I wish to see mother Sita. [Prithee, please now tell me how I can go and meet Sita easily; which would be the convenient way for me. It is day-time, so please tell me how I can sneak in undetected; by which path must I enter the place where she is incarcerated without causing an alarm.]’ (4)

Upon this request, Vibhishan disclosed to Hanuman how to manipulate things and maneuver his way through the secret path by which he can sneak in the garden where Sita sits and go close to her².

Armed with this vital piece of information, the son of the wind god took leave of Vibhishan and proceeded ahead with his mission. (5)

[Note—¹Earlier in Doha no. 6, Hanuman had told Vibhishan all about himself and about Lord Ram. Obviously this narration had informed Vibhishan about the reason why Hanuman had come to Lanka. After this initial briefing and introduction, both Vibhishan and Hanuman became close friends, so close indeed that they were like two siblings who loved each other dearly and were meeting after ages of separation. When this emotional storm subsided and they were back in the practical world to face its harsh realities, they realized that there are things to be done on priority basis. So now Vibhishan disclosed to Hanuman the site of Sita's captivity in Lanka, and the condition in which she lived there.

Another important point to note is of the use of the word “janakasutā” for Sita. King Janak was an ascetic-king, i.e. though he was a king but internally he was an exalted ascetic as he remained detached from all worldly affairs, maintained a distance from all material attractions, practices stellar self-control, and enjoyed meditation even while appearing to attend to the affairs of the world and doing his duties diligently. By employing this epithet of “janakasutā” for Sita Vibhishan meant that like her father king Janak, Sita too lived in Lanka like a true ascetic, remaining engrossed in meditation, practicing strict self-control, be detached to the world that surrounds her, and was able to maintain her calmness and quietude in the midst of the turmoil that characterized a land of demons.

²Vibhishan's advice came handy to Hanuman as he now was equipped with knowledge of the physical topography and plan of the place. With this information it was easy for Hanuman to avoid places where it would be easy to detect an outsider; he could now pass through some secret corridors and entrance chambers known only to a handful of the demons who were either members of the royal family of Lanka like Vibhishan himself was, or to a very few of the royal soldiers who were assigned the duty as body-guards. Vibhishan must have told Hanuman the time when these few body-guards changed their duties, because this was the right time when he could safely enter as these guards would then be distracted.

The fact is that Vibhishan played an extremely crucial and vital role in the entire enterprise of freeing Sita and winning the war of Lanka. Firstly, he helped Hanuman to locate Sita exactly and guided him to her; and secondly, as we shall read in due course, it was Vibhishan's help that enabled Lord Ram to finally kill Ravana, because when all efforts had failed to bring Ravana down Lord Ram looked to Vibhishan to tell him the secret of his invincibility, at which Vibhishan disclosed that Ravana could only be slayed if the Lord shot an arrow directly at his navel to pierce a pitcher that contained the nectar that provides him with eternity, and suck it out. This has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 102—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 103.]

करि सोइ रूप गयउ पुनि तहवाँ । बन असोक सीता रह जहवाँ ॥ ६ ॥
देखि मनहि महुँ कीन्ह प्रनामा । बैठेहिं बीति जात निसि जामा ॥ ७ ॥ कृस तनु सीस जटा एक बेनी । जपति हृदयँ रघुपति गुन श्रेनी ॥ ८ ॥ kari sō'i rūpa gaya'u puni tahavāṁ. bana asōka sītā raha jahavāṁ. 6.

dēkhi manahi mahum' kīnha pranāmā. baiṭhēhim bīti jāta nisi jāṁā. 7.
kṛsa tanu sīsa jaṭā ēka bēnī. japati hṛdayam' raghupati guna śrēnī. 8.

Hanuman assumed that same form by which he had entered Lanka (i.e. he assumed a very small form which was so tiny that no one would pay attention to him), and went to the garden known as ‘Ashok’¹ where Sita lived (or was held captive)*. (6)

When he saw Sita, Hanuman mentally bowed to her reverentially. He observed that she had been sitting still, deeply lost in thoughts. The impression that he got was that she had not slept throughout the night, and had been sitting in the same position for quite some time². (7)

[In the following verses and the Doha that follows herein below, the pitiable condition of Sita is being described.]

She was emaciated in her body; on her head there was a thick tuft of matted hairs formed by the plait of hairs that had become dry and luster-less.

Deep down in her anguished heart she was quietly repeating the holy name of Lord Raghupati (Ram), remembering the Lord and recounting the long legend of his glorious virtues. (8)

[Note—¹When Ravana brought Sita to Lanka, he had put her up in this garden which was a royal garden full of beautiful trees. She sat in the shadow of a huge Ashoka tree. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 26 that precedes Doha no. 29.}

This place was so called as it was so pleasant and comforting that anyone who entered it felt relieved of his sorrow, misery and grief. The ‘Ahoka’ tree itself may have two connotations, viz. (i) a tree of the species ‘Jonesia Ahoka’ or ‘Saraca Indica’; and (ii) a huge shade-providing tree with thick foliage and extended branches.

This garden also doubled as an orchard because besides having flowering trees it also was full of fruit bearing trees. This will be soon evident when Hanuman rampaged through it, eating fruits and uprooting trees. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 18.}

* The location of the “Ashok grove or garden” where Sita was held captive by Ravana was at the epicenter of the developments that led to the ultimate downfall of the great demon empire and the slaying of its powerful and invincible king Ravana—because it was here that Sita was placed ever since she was brought by Ravana after abducting her from Lord Ram’s hermitage in Panchavati, it was here that Hanuman met her, it was in this garden that the first battle of the war was fought between Hanuman and the forces of Ravana, and it was here that Sita stayed and did severe Tapa (suffering hardship for some noble cause, to do penances and austerities) till the war finally ended and Lord Ram, who was a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world, was able to successfully fulfill his promises made to the gods and mother earth that he would eliminate the scourge of the evil demons so as to free the world of their burden.

This “Ashok grove or garden” is important for another reason too—for its location in Lanka lent its name to the 5th Canto of the epic story of the Ramayana, because this Canto is called “Sundar Kand”. Why is this Chapter called “Sundar Kand”?

The reason is very interesting, and it is this: Lanka was established on a great, undulating mountain range located in the middle of the southern ocean. It had three high summits. This is why the mountain was called ‘Trikoort’—having three summits. The city of Lanka was established on these three summits. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 178 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it ; and (ii) Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 11-12 that precede Doha no. 28.}

These three summits were not the type of conventional conical tips having sharp, craggy mass of rocks that we usually find on mountain tops, because such summits cannot have a large flourishing city on them. So it is obvious that the three summits of Trikoot were like three high plateaus. The names of these three plateaus were 'Neel', 'Sundar' and 'Subel'. The first plateau named 'Neel' was the sight of the grand city of Lanka; the second plateau named 'Sundar' was the sight of the Ashok garden, and the third plateau named 'Subel' was the sight of the battle-field where the epic war was fought.

The second summit was the famed counterpart of the 'Sumeru' mountain in the north. The Sumeru was inhabited by the gods who lived in the heaven (i.e. in the northern direction of the compass pointing symbolically to heaven), while the demons lived on 'Trikoot' in the mortal world (i.e. in the southern direction of the compass). The Trikoot was conceptualized and built to rival Sumeru; it was the capital of the demon kingdom of Lanka, and a wonderfully decked-up golden city.

The third summit was called 'Sundar', meaning beautiful and magnificent, because its Ashok garden was exceptionally fascinating and charming, and singular beauty and magnificence had no rival in the world; special care was taken for its upkeep as it was the royal retreat of the kings of Lanka. It is this summit known as 'Sundar' which has been used to name this 5th Canto of the Ramayan for reasons explained herein above.

Out of these three summits, which were flat lands like large plateaus, the one on the northern side of the island of Lanka was called 'Subel'. It is here that Hanuman landed when he went to Lanka in search of Sita (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 3), and it is here that Lord Ram landed with his army of monkeys and bears when he went to free her and eliminate the demons (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11).

In both these cases we read that it is from the top of this Mt. Subel that Hanuman and Lord Ram surveyed the city of Lanka and its fort that were in the southern direction. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 3; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13.}

Therefore it naturally follows that the third summit known as 'Sundar', where Sita was held captive in its beautiful garden or a forest known as Ashok, was at the further end of Lanka, to the south of the Trikoot mountain.

To wit, Subel was at the northern end, Trikoot at the center, and Sundar at the far or the southern end of Lanka.

Subel was the flat land where the demons used to do physical exercises and practice martial art of warfare; it was from here that they would keep an hawk eye on the ocean lying on the north because the land mass from where there was any possibility of an invasion of Lanka was on this side, a mere 800 miles off the shore of Lanka as compared to its other sides where there was no land for thousands of miles around.

Since the summit called 'Sundar' was at the far end of Lanka, neither Hanuman nor Lord Ram and his ministers could see it and its Ashok grove. From Subel they could only see Trikoot, the capital city of the kingdom of Lanka.

Lanka was initially conceived as a domain city of Kuber, the treasurer of the gods; it was constructed by Vishwakarma, the gods' architect. This being the case, Lanka was an image of the abode of the gods in heaven, the city on Mt. Sumeru. When Ravana snatched it from Kuber, he made Lanka as the capital of the demon race which he headed. Since Lanka rivaled the city of the gods in heaven, its grandeur and magnificence can be well imagined.

We can site other instances in the Ramayan where the name of a particular Canto or Chapter is assigned according to the chief events covered under that Canto, or the name of the place which is the epicenter of main events. For example, the 1st Canto is called ‘Baal Kand’ because it deals with the birth and the early life of Lord Ram that covers his adolescence. {The word “Baal” means a child or a boy.}

Similarly, the 2nd Canto is called ‘Ayodhya Kand’ because this chapter deals with all the developments that led to Lord Ram coming to the forest, and what were its consequences for the rest of the kingdom. The 3rd Canto is titled ‘Aranya Kand’ because it describes the Lord’s journey through the wild forest beyond the borders of his kingdom. {The word “Aranya” means dense, wild forest.}

‘Kishkindha Kand’, the 4th Canto, derives its name from the geographical area where the tribal kingdom of the same name where Lord Ram spent the next phase of his life, meeting Sugriv, Hanuman, Angad etc., and forging new relationships.

The Canto where the epic war was fought is appropriately named ‘Lanka Kand’. This is the 6th Canto.

And finally, the last and the concluding Canto, the 7th, is called ‘Uttar Kand’, symbolizing the end of the narration. {The word “Uttar” refers to the concluding part of a narrative.}

The above note clearly explains why the 5th Canto of the Ramayan is universally called “Sundar Kand”.

²It was the early morning hours of the day, just after dawn. As we have read above, Hanuman met Vibhishan at the time he woke up and pronounced Lord Ram’s name. Pious and religious people are supposed to rise very early in the morning, much before dawn; the generally accepted time is around 4-5 a.m.

The conversation between Hanuman and Vibhishan must not have lasted long, and immediately after that Hanuman went to the garden.

Therefore, it was the time when the city of Lanka was still half asleep as demons were late risers. It ought to be noted that demons are called ‘Nishichara’ (niscara) which literally means ‘one who moves during the night’, which obviously means ‘one who remains active during the night and keeps late hours’. Such creatures usually sleep late during day to compensate for loss of sleep during the night.

To wit, when Hanuman first saw Sita he found her sitting with legs either crossed or bent at the knees, her hands encircling her legs and clasped in front, and her head hung over her bosom as if she was brooding while crouching or squatting. She looked tired and haggard; her hairs were unwashed and tied carelessly into a thick bun on her head; and her clothes were virtually ragged and unkempt. The general atmosphere of sadness, dejection, gloom and despair hung so heavily around her that it was not difficult for Hanuman to get an idea of the gravity of Sita’s sufferings instantaneously.]

दो०. निज पद नयन दिँ मन राम पद कमल लीन ।

परम दुखी भा पवनसुत देखि जानकी दीन ॥ ८ ॥

dōhā.

nija pada nayana di'ēm̐ mana rāma pada kamala līna.
parama dukhī bhā pavanasuta dēkhi jānakī dīna. 8.

Janki (Sita) sat with her lustreless eyes cast down and fixed at her feet, while her Mana (mind and heart) was fixed on the holy lotus-like feet of Lord Ram¹.

When the son of the wind god thus saw her pitiable condition of overwhelming misery and despair, he was filled with utter grief and sorrow. (Doha no. 8)

[Note—¹This is a posture usually common with people who have lost their dear ones, and are in a stupefied condition of excess of grief and despair. A person who deeply grieves for someone who is very dear to one's heart would sit quietly and forlorn in a corner, lost in his own thoughts, and looking blankly at no where in particular.

Sita sat with a lowered head; she constantly looked down towards the ground with low-cast eyes transfixed as if in a dazed stupor, so emotionally shocked and anguished she was. She did not sleep in the night, and her constant gaze made her eyes bloodshot. Her mind and heart, meanwhile, were engrossed in remembering Lord Ram; she fixed her attention on the holy feet of the Lord as a means of finding some solace and succour in the face of abject despair and hopelessness.

Happy events, cheerful days and moments of laughter of her past life glided across her mind like fluffy white clouds floating across the firmament during winter. She recollected the playful days of her childhood and happy days spent in dreaming during her youth, she remembered the day of the Bow-breaking ceremony when she had so fervently prayed to all the gods and deities she ever paid her respects to so that Lord Ram would break the bow and marry her, she vividly recollected how she had literally jumped with exhilaration and ecstasy when her prayers were indeed answered and the Lord snapped the bow with a thunderous roar that reverberated throughout the world and deafened one and all, but which sounded like sweet music to her ears, the memory of the moments of her putting the victory garland around the Lord's neck came clear as crystal to her mind, and she drew a deep breath and gasped in agony, she recollected the details of her marriage ceremony in its finest and closest detail, she remembered how lovingly she was welcomed in her in-law's household where she found love in abundance, even surpassing that she was accustomed to at her father's place at Lanka, the joyful days of married life she spent with her beloved husband Lord Ram in Ayodhya and the sudden strike of misfortune that turned the world around her when the Lord was asked to go to the forest for fourteen long years came rushing to her memory like a train of white clouds followed by a menacing bank of dark clouds that obscures the sunlight and turns the sky dark and gloomy, she recalled the moment when she decided to accompany the Lord to the forest, his attempts to dissuade her because the horrors she would face in the wild would be too unbearable for her, and the firmness with which she had said 'no, she won't stay back' and the Lord gave his consent to her to follow him, then she remembered those long days and months of the years they, she and her beloved Lord Ram as well as her son-like brother-in-law Laxman, had spent happily wandering in the forest, enjoying a carefree life like birds freed from a gilded cage do, smiling and wondering at the vast vista of beauty of Mother Nature that spread before her eyes all around, and imbibing the nectar of un-describable happiness and sweetness that was all hers to drink as much as she wished during the days, months and years gone by.

Sita was lost in this pleasant reverie, and during these sweet musings and happy recollections that went past the canvas of her memory like bright charming pictures cast on a screen that mesmerize the spectator so much that he forgets all about himself and his surroundings, Sita was in a state of stupor as she sat dazed and immobile, staring at the ground like a frozen picture cast in a frame, and now and then she would sigh or gasp in agony, drawing a deep breath and making exerting her remaining strength to hold back the hot tears that wished to roll down her cheeks like lava from a pent-up volcano.

Remember my dear readers, the ‘Sita’ whom we see here is a ‘shadow or an image or an apparition of the real Sita’ because she has been put in the safe custody of the Fire God by Lord Ram at the beginning of this unfortunate phase of the Story. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.}

Different shades of thoughts passed over the firmament of Sita’s mind. She was at once gloomy and dejected for one moment, feeling that she was rapidly sinking in an abyss, because despairing thoughts of doom and helplessness clouded her brow like banks of thick dark clouds that obscure the light of the sun, then at the next moment this cloud floated past and bright sunshine shone through as she remembered Lord Ram’s love for her, his unparallel valour, strength and abilities, and she was sure that sooner or later she would be resurrected by the Lord only if she managed to hold on for some more time.

Buffeted in this way between abject gloom and light of hope she finally decided to follow the maxim of life: that to have faith, to wait, and to hope, are the fundamental pillars of life, for if there is no faith, if there is no hope, and if one doesn’t have the patience to wait then life would lose its meaning. So therefore, she took a firm resolution to gather all her courage and wits together, to hope for her redemption, to wait for the arrival of the Lord, to have faith in her love and devotion for him, to give Providence time to regret for its errors, if they be any, and repent by bringing cheer back to her.

During these testing times of misfortune, she also discovered another truth of life: that when one is always enjoying happiness and goodness of life he does not realize how fortunate he has been, and he accuses the Lord God for the slightest feeling of uneasiness if, even for a moment, things do not happen the way he wants them to happen; but when he slips in a deep cavern of grief, sadness and despair where no sunlight enters, only then he begins to realize how merciful and benevolent the Lord God had been towards him when the Lord had been showering him with bountiful blessings pouring down upon him like rainfall, for now he begins to contrast his present situation of misery with the bright days of happiness when even the slightest deviation from the routine of cheer and joy had made him accuse the Lord of being cruel to him or neglecting him. Woe to him, for now he curses himself instead of cursing the merciful Lord. The contrast makes him wisened and pray to the Lord God, saying in supplication, “Oh my dearest Lord; please forgive me for my foolishness and once again show your everlasting grace on me as you had always been showing to me ere I stupidly accused of neglecting or being harsh to me, and I vow to you that I will never ever complain. Nay, not only not complain, but I will spend the rest of my life thanking you myself and telling the world my story so that others who are as stupid as me would learn a lesson before it is too late for them.”

These and sundry other like thoughts clouded her brow and filled her agonized mind as she sat there under the shade of the tree in the Ashok garden.]

चौ०. तरु पल्लव महुँ रहा लुकाई । करइ बिचार करौं का भाई ॥ १ ॥
तेहि अवसर रावनु तहुँ आवा । संग नारि बहु किएँ बनावा ॥ २ ॥ बहु बिधि खल सीतहि समुझावा । साम दान भय भेद देखावा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāṭi.

taru pallava mahum̃ rahā lukāṭi. kara'i bicāra karaum̃ kā bhāṭi. 1.
tēhi avasara rāvanu taham̃ āvā. saṅga nāri bahu ki'em̃ banāvā. 2.
bahu bidhi khala sītahi samujhāvā. sāma dāna bhaya bhēda dēkhāvā. 3.

Hanuman hid himself in the thick foliage of the tree under whose shade Sita sat in a gloomy and melancholic state, contemplating in his mind the next action he should take, and talking to himself, 'Come brother, what should I do next?'¹ (1)

Just at that moment Ravana came to that spot; he was accompanied by a horde of ladies who were gaily adorned in many different ways². (2)

That wicked fellow tried his best to convince Sita (to surrender herself to him), using all the tricks he could think of: such as employing polite persuasion, tempting her with gifts and treasures, using threats and coercive methods, and showing her the difference it would make to her situation if she conceded to his demands on the one hand, and the suffering she would have to endure if she refused his overtures on the other hand³. (3)

[Note—¹What was Hanuman thinking of during those moments; what was the reason of his uncertainty and procrastination? The answer is this: He had seen Sita sitting in a meditative posture, remembering Lord Ram and muttering silently the Lord's holy name. She appeared like a female ascetic deeply immersed in her spiritual practice. It is absolutely wrong to disturb an ascetic during the time he or she is submerged deep in meditation and remembering the Supreme Being; it would be a highly sinful thing to disturb an ascetic during this time. So Hanuman thought that he is obliged to wait, at least till the time Sita got up to attend to some of her routine chores of the day, such as to attend to Nature's call, wash her mouth, eat something in order to survive, and so on.

But he could not be sure when that will be; perhaps she may remain sitting thus for the whole day; or may be she would be taken away to some other place for confinement as a precaution by her captors to avoid her being detected by a spy sent by her husband; or may be some fierce demon guard may come to guard her by the time Hanuman had the opportunity to introduce himself to her.

He also feared that if he suddenly stood before her it would break her stupor, and she would be so shocked that she may die due to it even before Hanuman had the time to speak a word. Supposing she screamed when she saw him; this would surely be catastrophic. He did not wish to create a scene before introducing himself to Sita and conveying Lord Ram's message to her.

Time was precious and it was running out fast. This worried Hanuman as he waited behind the leaves, unable to decide what next to do. But this wait proved to be a blessing in disguise for him, for soon Ravana arrived there with quite a few females in tow. Then Hanuman thanked God for his delay in introducing himself to Sita, for had he done so and was found with her at the time Ravana came there, all hell would have broken loose and Sita would have been put to grave risk.

²It ought to be noted that Ravana did not approach Sita alone; he was accompanied by a number of females. These females may have been demonesses or ladies whom he had brought to Lanka as trophies of his many conquests. Nevertheless, he did not approach Sita alone as he wished to be sure that no one would ever accuse him of doing any physical wrong to her while she was in seclusion; the presence of not one or two but many females during his interaction with Sita pre-empted and prevented such evil accusations.

Another important point is this: He never allowed male demons to come near Sita; only female demons were allowed to guard her. This was another precaution Ravana took for the physical safety of Sita, and to ensure her privacy, self-respect and dignity. He did not want to take the risk of allowing male demons to in any way defile the purity and chastity of Sita even by their promiscuous glances or lustful thoughts.

³Remember: Ravana had brought Sita and put her in this garden with due respect that he would have given to his mother, and also with the awareness that she may prove to be the source of his deliverance from the sinful body of a demon if he could induce Lord Ram to come and kill him to free Sita. These facts are clearly hinted in (i) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 23; (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 30-31; 37; and Canto 7, verse no. 65.

Like Lord Ram who had concealed his true identity of the all-knowing Supreme Lord of the world, who had himself designed the plan of Sita's abduction to make it a pretext of eliminating the scourge of the evil demons but acted and behaved in such a way that he had no inkling of what had happened to her, weeping for her and searching for her like an ordinary human being, Ravana too wanted to act his part of a demon to perfection. This is the only and the one reason why he seemed to behave lustfully towards Sita, pretending to tempt her and even coerce her to surrender herself to his carnal desires and sensual pleasures.

So though Ravana pretended to have lustful designs on Sita, though he threatened her of dire consequences, though he tempted her and teased her—but he never actually harmed her physically or touched her inappropriately. This is remarkable for a demon like Ravana who was famed for his pervert and promiscuous nature.]

कह रावनु सुनु सुमुखि सयानी । मंदोदरी आदि सब रानी ॥ ४ ॥

तव अनुचरीं करउँ पन मोरा । एक बार बिलोकु मम ओरा ॥ ५ ॥ kaha rāvanu sunu sumukhi sayānī. mandōdarī ādi saba rānī. 4.

tava anucarīm kara'um̃ pana mōrā. ēka bāra bilōku mama ōrā. 5.

Ravana said, 'Oh the wise and intelligent one who has a pretty face (sumukhi sayānī); listen to me (sunu). Look, there is Mandodari and many other queens in my palace¹. (4)

I promise to you that I would be your servant if only you would look at me but once.², (5)

[Note—¹To wit, Ravana assured Sita that she would be well looked after, and she would have other ladies such as Mandodari and other queens to give her company. She will not feel alone; she would enjoy all the royal privileges that other females did.

²This clearly shows that Sita has not looked at Ravana even once after he had abducted her. In the context of his inner feelings whereby he had brought her with a desire to attain liberation and deliverance from his demon life through her medium, and also with a view that she was like a mother to him, this request of Ravana assumes a different meaning than what it appears to be on the surface.

There is a plea for mercy hidden in the heart of Ravana when he asks Sita to look at his face; he knows that if Sita, whom he treated like a ‘mother’, looked up and saw him, she would immediately feel pity for his demonic body and have mercy for his soul. She would immediately read what was in his mind as any mother would in the case of her child. Sita would see a prayer on Ravana’s quivering lips; she would see a plea for mercy in his eyes welling up with tears; she would observe how he bows his head subtly before her both in reverence and in shame; she would read his face to understand his inner thoughts and what was going on in his thumping heart.

But Sita did not look up. Why? Was she merciless; was she not a mother willing to do everything for her child? No, it is not that. The real reason is different, and this reason saddened Sita’s heart too at the subtle plane. It is this: If she showed any compassion to Ravana and spared him from death, what would be the result? There would be no war, and thus the cruel demons who had unleashed a reign of terror on the world, and for the end of which terror the Supreme Lord had to come personally on the prayers of the gods and mother earth—these demons won’t die, and the scourge would continue as before. In fact the disease symbolised by the demons may even increase manifold because Ravana would be emboldened with the knowledge that the Mother of the world in the person of Sita has become benevolent upon him and has promised her protection to him. This would mean the whole exercise would become null and void.

Sita, being the ‘Mother of the world’, brooded on this point; she concluded that she cannot show grace upon this single child of hers at the cost of allowing the rest of the world suffer at his hands because all the living beings were her off-spring. It was in the thus in the larger interest of this world that Sita refused to look up at Ravana.]

तृण धरि ओट कहति बैदेही । सुमिरि अवधपति परम सनेही ॥ ६ ॥
 सुनु दसमुख खद्योत प्रकासा । कबहुँ कि नलिनी करइ बिकासा ॥ ७ ॥
 अस मन समुझु कहति जानकी । खल सुधि नहिँ रघुबीर बान की ॥ ८ ॥ सठ सूनें हरि आनेहि मोही । अधम निलज्ज लाज नहिँ तोही ॥ ९ ॥

tr̥ṇa dhari oṭa kahati baidēhī. sumiri avadhapati parama sanēhī. 6.
 sunu dasamukha khadyōta prakāsā. kabahum̃ ki nalinī kara'i bikāsā. 7.
 asa mana samujhu kahati jānakī. khala sudhi nahim̃ raghubīra bāna kī. 8.
 saṭha sūnēm hari ānēhi mōhī. adhama nilajja lāja nahim̃ tōhī. 9.

Keeping a blade of grass between herself and Ravana¹, and remembering and invoking the Lord of Ayodhya (Lord Ram) who was very dear to her (sumiri avadhapati parama sanēhī), Vaidehi (Sita; the one who had no physical body as she was only an image or an apparition of her true self) spoke indignantly, rebuffing Ravana sternly, and telling him in unequivocal terms to mind his tongue and behave himself --- (6)

‘Listen, oh you ten-headed monster! Can a lotus flower ever expect to bloom in the feeble light of the fire-fly?’² (7)

Janki (Sita) warned Ravana, ‘Ponder over what I have just said; think over it. You wretched fellow; you are not acquainted with Lord Ram’s arrows.

[To wit, you do not know the fire that spews forth from the arrows shot by the Lord; this fire would burn you and your race to ashes. You do not realize your doom in your haughtiness and arrogance. Be ware!] (8)

You wicked and sinful rogue! You had abducted me when you found me alone in the hermitage. Oh you lowly and fallen one; aren’t you ashamed of yourself? Shame to you and your manhood!

[If you had the guts, why did you not openly challenge Lord Ram and defeat him in battle to bring me like you had done in the case of other women whom you had brought as trophies of your wars? You rascal and pervert creature! It was because you were terrified of Lord Ram and had no stomach to face his arrows. And now you show yourself before a helpless woman. You should bury yourself in the muck of shame and guilt! Woe betide the wretch who stole me like a thief, imagining that he would lay his evil hands on me, forgetting that no one has ever been able to hold a shadow, which, unfortunately for this foolish one, I indeed am. You, in an attempt to use me as a ransom tool, have, on the other hand, dug your own grave.]³ (9)

[Note—¹It is not deemed to be a good etiquette, it is not civil and polite in Indian culture for a married woman to talk to a male stranger directly, especially when her husband is not present. So therefore, Sita looked at a twig or a blade of grass in front of her, and used it as a medium to address Ravana. She appeared to talk with this inanimate twig or grass blade when replying to the demon king.

It also implies that she had not raised her head while replying, but kept her gaze fixed on the ground where the grass was.

There are two other reasons why Sita kept a twig or a blade of grass in front of her while replying to Ravana: One is that she wished to tell him that as far as she was concerned, Ravana was no better than that lifeless and useless piece lying at her feet on the ground, and soon his fate would also be like it as the fierce fire of the impending war would reduce his entire clan to ashes as easily as a fire burns a dry twig or a blade of grass to ashes.

The other reason is very significant—it is well known that Sita was born of Mother Earth, as king Janak had found her in a pitcher while clearing the ground to perform a fire sacrifice. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 59-60.}

Grass is born from earth, and so Sita regarded ‘grass’ as her symbolic brother. Hence, she kept her ‘brother’, the blade of grass, between herself and her tormentor Ravana when talking with the latter, to ensure that her ‘brother’ would stand guard for her safety. Perhaps Ravana understood this subtle message as he did not venture either to use force on her or come even a wee bit nearer to Sita.

²The lotus flower opens its petals during the day when bright sunlight falls on it. It will of course not unfold by and other light, especially one as dim and flickering as that emitted by the fire-fly. Here, Sita compares the glory and magnificence of Ravana to the feeble and flickering light of the fire-fly, and Ravana himself to this insect. Since Sita uses the metaphor of the lotus flower, it follows that by implication she is referring to Lord Ram who is likened to the splendorous sun because the lotus flower opens its petals in sunlight. She says that Ravana is inconsequential and without any worth when compared to Lord Ram.

³Then she sternly warns him that enough was enough, and henceforth he must stop tormenting her. Is he not aware of the powers and potentials of Lord Ram's arms? If he is a great and mighty warrior who claims to have conquered the heaven and the earth, then why does he not face Lord Ram directly in a duel and subjugate him instead of threatening a helpless and weary woman. Abducting a terrified and weeping woman who is alone at home is a cowardly and despicable act; what then he speaks so boastfully and loudly of his majesty and magnificence, what claim does he have of power and strength, for he is no better than a thief who dares not face the master of the house when he comes crouching through the back door during the darkness of the night, or a jackal or a hyena who steals the meal left over by a lion? Woe to Ravana; shame to him and his race! Why does he not bury himself in an avalanche of shame, dishonour, guilt, remorse and regret; why does the earth not open up in an abyss to devour such a mean and vile creature as he?

In this context, we can recollect a Psalm of the Holy Bible where what is said therein would reflect how Sita would have cursed Ravana who was tormenting her. Now, let us read this Psalm from The Holy Bible, Old Testament, Psalm 52/1-9:-

- 1: Why boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.
- 2: Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.
- 3: Thou lovest evil more than good; and lying rather than to speak righteousness.
- 4: Thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue.
- 5: God shall likewise destroy thee for ever, he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living.
- 6: The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:
- 7: Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness.
- 8: But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God: I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever.
- 9: I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy name; for it is good before thy saints.

It was truly such a stern rebuke for Ravana, especially in front of the women who had accompanied him, that he must have felt highly insulted and humiliated. He must have squirmed in anger and vowed his vengeance upon Sita, which surely he did as we read in the Doha no. 9 that follows herein below.]

दो०. आपुहि सुनि खद्योत सम रामहि भानु समान ।
परुष बचन सुनि काढि असि बोला अति खिसिआन ॥ ९ ॥

dōhā.

āpuhi suni khadyōta sama rāmahi bhānu samāna.
paruṣa bacana suni kāḍhi asi bōlā ati khisi'āna. 9.

Hearing himself being likened to the fire-fly, and by implication Lord Ram to the sun, and hearing Sita's stern words of rebuke, Ravana lost his cool and became furious. He felt extremely humiliated, and becoming exasperated and peeved, he drew his sword and said angrily --- (Doha no. 9)

चौ०. सीता तैं मम कृत अपमाना । कटिहउँ तव सिर कठिन कृपाना ॥ १ ॥
नाहिं त सपदि मानु मम बानी । सुमुखि होति न त जीवन हानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sītā tairi mama kṛta apamānā. kaṭiha'um' tava sira kaṭhina kṛpānā. 1.
nāhirī ta sapadi mānu mama bānī. sumukhi hōti na ta jīvana hānī. 2.

Ravana was indignant and angry. He said vehemently, 'Sita, you have insulted and humiliated me (in front of the females who accompany me). [Now, this is too much for me to bear.] I shall cut-off your head with me infallible sword which strikes hard. (1)

Or you must soon agree to what I say. Otherwise, oh the sweet faced One (sumukhi)¹, your life would be in danger. [To wit, if you wish to preserve yourself, give consent to my proposal, for otherwise I shall slay you with this sword of mine.]' (2)

[Note—¹By using the term "sumukhi" for Sita, Ravana means that he would have surely killed her right at that moment for insulting him, as slighting a king in his own kingdom invites immediate punishment, especially when the king is directly abused by the offender, which amounts to a grave crime no less than sacrilege, but for the moment he spares her life just because he does not want to kill such a pretty woman.

This interpretation is endorsed in Valmiki's Ramayana, Sundar Kand, Canto 22, verse nos. 4-6.]

स्याम सरोज दाम सम सुंदर । प्रभु भुज करि कर सम दसकंधर ॥ ३ ॥
सो भुज कंठ कि तव असि घोरा । सुनु सठ अस प्रवान पन मोरा ॥ ४ ॥
चंद्रहास हरु मम परितापं । रघुपति बिरह अनल संजातं ॥ ५ ॥
सीतल निसित बहसि बर धारा । कह सीता हरु मम दुख भारा ॥ ६ ॥ syāma sarōja dāma sama sundara. prabhu bhuja kari kara sama dasakandhara. 3.

sō bhuja kaṅṭha ki tava asi ghōrā. sunu saṭha asa pravāna pana mōrā. 4.
candrahāsa haru mama paritāpaṁ. raghupati biraha anala saṅjātaṁ. 5.
sītala nisita bahasi bara dhārā. kaha sītā haru mama dukha bhārā. 6.

[Sita replied—] 'The arms of my dear Lord (Ram) are as lovely as a string of blue lotuses, and they are as shapely, long and muscular as the trunk of an elephant. Oh you ten-headed One (dasakandhara)¹! Listen; can your ugly arms ever be a match for the arms of the Lord? (3)

I make a solemn vow before you, oh wicked fool, that it is either those arms of the Lord (Sri Ram) or your sword that will have my neck.

[To wit, I will never surrender to you, I will never bow before you evil crook, and I will never become a prey of your pervert designs. Woe to you, oh fool. I would prefer death by your sword rather than submitting myself to a foul and mean monster like you.]’ (4)

[Then Sita turned to the gleaming sword of Ravana and addressed it as follows—] ‘Oh *candrahāsa*² (a curved sword that is shaped like a crescent moon)! Please remove the immense suffering and misery that I am being subjected to due to my separation from Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram). [To wit, strike me and kill me so that my sufferings and torments come to an instant end.]³ (5)

You look cool, you have an excellent sharp edge, and you look able to remove my sufferings.’

Sita said to this Sword (of Ravana), ‘Prithee of Sword, I earnestly request you to end my sufferings and torments forthwith as they are so immense and intense that I can’t cope with them any longer.’ (6)

[Note—¹It ought to be noted that the actual word used in the text for Ravana is “dasakandhara”, which literally means ‘ten shoulders’. [“dasa” = ten; “kandhara” = shoulder. This in practical terms means ‘ten heads’ because each shoulder of Ravana supported a neck and a head.]

²The word “candrahāsa” literally means ‘that which laughs at the moon and puts it to shame because its shine and curve are better than that of the moon’. This sword of Ravana was very attractive as it had a gleaming surface which glittered in sunlight with a brilliance that was better than that of the disc of the moon; its edge was well curved, sharp and smooth, better than the rough and ragged edge of the crescent moon. This sword was like a war sickle or a scimitar.

Here, the Sword has been personified.

³Ravana has already threatened to kill Sita with this sword. So now Sita asks it to carry out its lord’s orders, and she is ready to oblige it.]

सुनत बचन पुनि मारन धावा । मयतनयाँ कहि नीति बुझावा ॥ ७ ॥
कहेसि सकल निसिचरिन्ह बोलाई । सीतहि बहु बिधि त्रासहु जाई ॥ ८ ॥
मास दिवस महुँ कहा न माना । तौ मैं मारबि काढ़ि कृपाना ॥ ९ ॥ sunata bacana puni mārana dhāvā. mayatanayāṁ kahi nīti bujhāvā. 7.

kahēsi sakala nisicarinha bōlāī. sītahi bahu bidhi trāsahu jāī. 8.
māsa divasa mahum kaha na mānā. tau mairm mārabi kāḍhi kṛpānā. 9.

When Ravana heard the words of Sita (that she is willing to die instead of yielding to his pervert overtures), he became excessively exasperated; he drew his sword and dashed forward to kill her¹.

[Sita had addressed the sword. So Ravana unsheathed it and got ready to strike it, as if saying, “Alright, as you wish. Here is your prayer answered. The Sword comes to embrace your neck!”]

At that moment, the daughter of the demon Maye, i.e. Mandodari, the wife of Ravana and the chief queen, stepped forward to stop him. She somehow pacified him with words of good counsel². (7)

Then Ravana summoned all the female demon guards³, and ordered them to go and subject Sita to a lot of torments. (8)

He declared, ‘If she does not agree to what I say within a period of one month, then I shall surely kill her by striking her with this sword.’⁴ (9)

[Note—¹The fact that Ravana rushed or dashed forward towards Sita with a drawn sword proves that he was standing at a reasonable distance from her. He wished to maintain Sita’s dignity and honour by not getting too close to her during the initial phase of conversation. As we have already noted earlier, though he acted in a most pervert and despicable way, threatening her to surrender herself to him, he internally respected her as he knew that she was the Mother of the world, and that she would become an instrument for his soul’s redemption; the way he externally behaved, however, was for public consumption only.

²Mandodari advised her husband to cool down; things done in haste are never good. The world will laugh at him that he got provoked by a distressed woman’s words; the world will scorn at him that he killed an unarmed woman. Besides this, if he had brought Sita with the intention that he would find deliverance when the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram kills his demonic body, then killing Sita would be counter-productive because then the chances are that Lord Ram may return back as no purpose would be served in fighting a bloody war when the objective of freeing Sita was already defeated.

So the best thing was to have patience, and give Sita some time to think and reconsider her position. Perhaps she may give her consent and Ravana’s wishes may be fulfilled. But killing her in a fit of rage is totally uncalled for.

³During the conversation between Ravana and Sita, the demoness guards stood at a distance in deference to their king Ravana, and to maintain decorum and etiquette. So now he calls them near to issue his orders.

⁴This threat was a blessing in disguise for Sita, as it would insure that she would continue to focus her attention on Lord Ram and pray to the Almighty to arrange her meeting with the Lord. When a person is certain of death, he or she loses all interests in this world, and remains focused on the Lord God, praying for the soul’s deliverance, redemption, emancipation and salvation. To wit, this period of one month would give Sita time to do Tapa (austerity and penance) for her purification; it will be the time when she could do Yoga (meditation) and Dhyana (contemplation).]

दो०. भवन गयउ दसकंधर इहाँ पिसाचिनि बृंद । सीतहि त्रास देखावहिं धरहिं रूप बहु मंद ॥ १० ॥

dōhā.

bhavana gaya'u dasakandhara ihām' pisācini bṛnda.
sītahi trāsa dēkhāvahiṁ dharahiṁ rūpa bahu manda. 10.

After giving his instructions to the female demon guards (as mentioned in the previous verses), the ten-headed One (Ravana) went back to his palace.

Meanwhile, these fiendish and cruel demonesses (pisācini bṛnda) showed all eagerness and diligence to carry out the orders of their lord by terrifying Sita with the use of harsh threatening words, and assuming all sorts of fearful forms¹. (Doha no. 10)

[Note—¹The word used in the text for these female demon guards deputed to exert pressure on Sita is “pisācini”. It implies that they were cruel, fiendish and wicked to extreme, for they derived great sadistic pleasure in torturing others, at least mentally if not physically. It is to be carefully noted here that no one actually harmed Sita physically; all the torments to which she was subjected were limited either to verbal abuses, threats, intimidations and insinuations or to creating fear in her mind by menacing sights of terrifying forms and horrifying gestures that would send a person cowering for cover, trembling all over and gasping for breath.

But Sita remained calm and unruffled in the face of these provocations. She knew that Ravana has just given her a month's time (Chaupai line no. 9 herein above), and so no harm would come to her within that period. So therefore she still has time to 'hope', for 'hope is life', and 'giving up hope is death'.

One month is not a short period, and ample chances were there that if she 'maintained her faith and continued to hope', i.e. she lived during this testing time, then Lord Ram would come to her rescue and free her. With this conviction Sita decided that she would not oblige these wicked demonesses by responding to them and giving them a chance to have a nice pastime at her expense. The best way to torment her tormentors was to neglect them completely and remain fearless, as this would frustrate them and make them tear out their hairs madly in anger and disgust. The effect would be that instead of making Sita suffer they themselves would suffer horribly at their failure; and the more they failed and threw greater tantrums the more it would give Sita a chance to have a nice pastime seeing their paroxysms of hilarious behaviour that comes with one losing one's senses, or as if they have been suddenly afflicted by chorea wherein they are performing Saint Vitus' dance.

To wit, Sita's confidence, self-restraint, reserve, patience and faith due to which she completely neglected these fiends created a piquant scenario where it was she who enjoyed the mad dance of these rascals rather than giving them an opportunity to derive any pleasure by seeing Sita terrified and weeping for mercy!]

चौ०. त्रिजटा नाम राच्छसी एका । राम चरन रति निपुन बिबेका ॥ १ ॥
सबन्हौ बोलि सुनाएसि सपना । सीतहि सेइ करहु हित अपना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

trijata nāma rācchasi ēkā. rāma carana rati nipuna bibēkā.1.
sabanhau bōli sunā'ēsi sapanā. sītahi sē'i karahu hita apanā. 2.

Amongst the demoness guards was one old lady named Trijata. She had deep affection for Lord Ram's holy feet (as she was a pious soul with a spiritual bearing), and was very wise and prudent¹. (1)

She called all her companions (the female demon guards) together, and sharing with them a wondrous and fearful dream that she had dreamt, she warned them about its implications as follows, 'Ensure your good and welfare by serving Sita (because if you don't listen to my advice and continue to make her suffer, than mind you, all of you would be doomed; I'll tell you just now why it would be so; listen carefully). (2)

[Note—¹Trijata was probably the demoness in charge of the detachment of guards deputed to keep a watch on Sita. Trijata was the senior most amongst them. It ought to be noted here that only female demons (demonesses) were put on guard duty for Sita; male demons were not allowed in her vicinity.

By appointing Trijata to guard Sita, Ravana wished to make it sure that beyond a limit Sita was not subjected to too harsh a treatment at the hands of other demonesses. Trijata was Sita's constant companion and soul mate during her confinement in Lanka; in due course of time she became Sita's best friend and confidante in whom she used to confide her thoughts and emotions. Trijata helped Sita by comforting her from time to time; she used to keep her hopes high, and at times when Sita was in troughs of depression and overcome by dejection Trijata would cheer her up and motivate her to keep up her faith and keep hoping because she would surely find redemption soon. This was Trijata's singular contribution towards fulfilling the divine mission of the Supreme Being inasmuch as she shielded Sita from any physical harm from any of the cruel demonesses who surrounded her at all times, and give moral support and companionship to Sita in times of despair and desolation.

As we shall read below, she wisely managed to send all the demonesses away from the spot, leaving Sita alone and freed from further harassment; otherwise these fiendish female demon guards would have continued to tease and torture Sita endlessly.]

सपनें बानर लंका जारी । जातुधान सेना सब मारी ॥ ३ ॥
खर आरूढ़ नगन दससीसा । मुंडित सिर खंडित भुज बीसा ॥ ४ ॥
एहि बिधि सो दच्छिन दिसि जाई । लंका मनहुँ बिभीषन पाई ॥ ५ ॥ sapanēm bānara laṅkā jāri. jātudhāna sēnā saba māri. 3.

khara ārūṛha nagana dasasīsā. muṇḍita sira khaṇḍita bhuja bīsā. 4.
ēhi bidhi sō dacchina disi jā'i. laṅkā manahum' bibhīṣana pā'i. 5.

In that dream a monkey (bānara) had burnt the whole of Lanka, and had killed the entire demon army (or at least the major part of it). (3)

I also saw that the ten-headed Ravana was naked and riding a donkey; he had his head tonsured and all his twenty arms were severed¹. (4)

In this way he was proceeding towards the south direction (indicative of going to hell, the nether or the lower world), and Vibhishan had got the kingdom of Lanka (i.e. he was crowned as its king)². (5)

[Note—¹Riding a donkey with his head shaved indicated that Ravana had been completely defeated by a powerful adversary who had paraded him naked on a donkey in the city to signal his former subjects that he had been vanquished.

His twenty arms were chopped off as a cruel punishment inflicted upon him in the war.

²Then, he was banished from Lanka and sent to exile as a prisoner of war to some remote island south of the city. It also might mean that he was being chased out of the city to go to hell. After that, his brother Vibhishan was crowned the king of Lanka.

It is believed that Yam, the god of death and guardian of hell, lives in the south. So therefore, ‘going in the south direction’ means two things—one is death, and the other is hell.]

नगर फिरी रघुबीर दोहाई । तब प्रभु सीता बोलि पठाई ॥ ६ ॥
 यह सपना मैं कहउँ पुकारी । होइहि सत्य गाँ दिन चारी ॥ ७ ॥
 तासु बचन सुनि ते सब डरीं । जनकसुता के चरनहि परीं ॥ ८ ॥ nagara phirī raghubīra dōhā'ī. taba prabhu sītā bōli paṭhā'ī. 6.

 yaha sapanā mair̄ kaha'um̄ pukārī. hō'ihī satya ga'em̄ dina cārī. 7.
 tāsu bacana suni tē saba ḍarīm̄. janakasutā kē carananhi parīm̄. 8.

The victory of Lord Ram was proclaimed throughout the city (of Lanka) by beating of the drum. Then the Lord summoned Sita and ordered that she be brought to him. (6)

I can affirm without hesitation that this dream would become true before four days have passed (i.e. in a very short period of time)¹. (7)

When the demonesses guarding Sita heard of this terrifying dream, they were all scared out of their wits, and all of them fell down at her feet (begging Sita to forgive them for any trouble they gave her, and spare them punishment and death)². (8)

[Note—¹The phrase ‘within four days’ is simply a figure of speech in colloquial language to mean ‘a very short time’. So Trijata meant that whatever she has said would happen shortly.

²When the demonesses heard this prophesy of doomsday, they became sore affright for their own safety. Thanks to Trijata’s wisdom and contrivance, there was immediate relief for Sita as the demonesses, who had been creating nuisance for her, themselves became terrified, and they stopped tormenting her from that instant. Not only that, they pleaded with Sita to show mercy on them and spare them punishment. Realizing that Ravana’s future was in doldrums, these selfish demonesses had no regrets in disobeying his commands; they determined that their own good lay in keeping Sita in good humour rather than trying to please Ravana who is to die soon.

This is an important signal—that the demons obeyed and fought for Ravana as they thought he was invincible and had supreme power. The demons were extremely selfish creatures, and were more interested in enjoying the pleasures of life and the spoils of various wars that came to them easily due to Ravana who won on the strength of boons granted to him by the creator Brahma than owing any serious allegiance and loyalty to him par se.

During our reading of this Story, when we will read about the Burning of Lanka by Hanuman, and later on during the course of the War itself, as narrated in Kavitawali Ramayan, we shall see how the citizens of Lanka curse Ravana for his stupidity that had brought ruin to the city and caused so much suffering to its inhabitants.

Presently however, when these demonesses returned home they surely must have confided with their partners about what Trijata had told them. But probably it had no or little effect on the male demons as they were too egoist, arrogant and haughty to believe in their defeat and Ravana's subjugation merely on the basis of some wild dream conjured up by an old and stupid demoness whom they thought was perchance out of her head.]

दो०. जहँ तहँ गई सकल तब सीता कर मन सोच । मास दिवस बीतें मोहि मारिहि निसिचर पोच ॥ ११ ॥

dōhā.

jaham̐ taham̐ ga'īm̐ sakala taba sītā kara mana sōca.
māsa divasa bitēm̐ mōhi mārihi niscara pōca. 11.

After that, when all the demoness guards dispersed and went away in different directions, Sita found herself alone and began to brood¹.

When one month will be over, the lowly demon would kill me. (Doha no. 11)

[Note—¹Till the time the demonesses were around, they were creating so much noise and nuisance that Sita had no time to think of anything; she was very disturbed. But when these wicked creatures went away, there was silence and peace around her. It was then that Sita got some time to brood and think of her misfortunes once again. She once again sank in despair and despondency, worrying what would happen to her after the expiry of one month.]

चौ०. त्रिजटा सन बोलीं कर जोरी । मातु बिपति संगिनि तैं मोरी ॥ १ ॥
तजौं देह करु बेगि उपाई । दुसह बिरहु अब नहिं सहि जाई ॥ २ ॥
आनि काठ रचु चिता बनाई । मातु अनल पुनि देहि लगाई ॥ ३ ॥
सत्य करहि मम प्रीति सयानी । सुनै को श्रवन सूल सम बानी ॥ ४ ॥

caupā'ī.

trijaṭā sana bōlīm̐ kara jōrī. mātu bipati saṅgini taim̐ mōrī. 1.
tajaur̐m̐ dēha karu bēgi upā'ī. dusaha birahu aba nahim̐ sahi jā'ī. 2.
āni kāṭha racu citā banā'ī. mātu anala puni dēhi lagā'ī. 3.

satya karahi mama prīti sayānī. sunai kō śravana sūla sama bānī. 4.

[Sita felt that Trijata had been a god-sent angel for her in times of misery and gloom, for it was she who had wittily sent the demonesses, who had been tormenting her, away. Sita also realized that Trijata was favourably disposed to her and had devotion for Lord Ram, so therefore Trijata was sincere in her manners. Hence, it was a natural instinct on Sita's part to treat Trijata as her closest friend and companion who was no less than a 'mother' for her in such horrifying times; she felt that in the vicious environment where her fate seemed to have doomed her, and in which her misfortunes had cast her, it was Trijata alone who would, if she could, become her saviour. So therefore Sita called Trijata her 'mother' as she was very caring and loving; Trijata felt empathy for Sita, she sympathized with Sita, and from all signs she would maneuver things in Sita's favour and accord her protection as much as she could.]

Sita pleaded with Trijata with clasped hands (in supplication, to stress upon Trijata her abject despair and the urgency of her entreaty), 'Mother, verily indeed you are my only friend and companion during my days of agony, misery, grief and despair. (1)

So please make some arrangement or contrive some method by which I can discard my body and end my life to get over its miserable existence, for truly I tell you honestly that the agony of separation (from my beloved Lord) has become unbearable for me, and its attendant misery and grief have tormented me so much that they have completely overwhelmed me. (2)

Bring some firewood and make a pyre for me. Then, oh mother, set fire to it. (3)

Oh the wise one with a tender heart! Put to practice your affection for me (by helping me to end my miseries, and find peace). Say, how can I, or for that matter anyone else, cope with the harsh words my ears are being bombarded with (for they appear to be like hot molten oil that is being poured into my ears)¹?

[To wit, if I live for one month, I would be subjected to daily abuse and threats said so menacingly and loudly that my ears would burst. It would be far better for me to put an end to this torture by dying. So please help me as I feel you love me like a mother loves her daughter. Say, will a mother like that her daughter be subjected to interminable horrifying torments by fiends and blood-thirsty vicious rascals, who know no mercy worth the name, right before her eyes? So if you truly love me and have sympathy for me then please bring an end to my sufferings.]' (4)

[Note—¹Sita is alluding to what Ravana had said to her and the way he behaved with her in Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 9, and Chaupai line nos. 1-2, 7-9 that precede Doha no. 10.

Then Sita alludes to the behaviour of the female demon guards who were instructed by Ravana to torment her as mentioned in Doha no. 10.

She therefore pleads with Trijata to bring all this to an end if she actually loved her and empathized with her by helping her to die.

We will remember what observations have been made in the note appended to Doha no. 8 herein above—that Sita decided to wait for Lord Ram to come, that she decided to have faith and hope. So in that context her present pleading to end her life seems contradictory. No, not really. As we have also observed that both Lord Ram and Ravana had been careful to play their respective parts to perfection—Lord Ram as a human being whose wife has been stolen and who goes out to search for her, and Ravana as the fierce demon who enjoys stealing other people's woman folk and shows no mercy to anyone—Sita too decided that she would play her role to perfection.

To wit, though internally she had made a firm resolve to wait patiently with hope and faith for one month to give Lord Ram time to come and eliminate the demons, and to turn a deaf ear to her tormentors' words as she was sure no actual harm will come to her from any demon as their lord Ravana has granted her a grace period of one full month, yet externally she pretended that to live for one more day was an impossible thing for her.

There was another reason why Sita asked Trijata for this favour; she wanted to test Trijata's honesty and integrity. Was Trijata playing any tricks with her on the behest of Ravana? Sita was absolutely certain that Trijata will not oblige her as she also knew that Ravana had granted immunity from death to Sita for one month. So if Sita died under the watch of Trijata, and after her death burnt firewood was discovered, Trijata would suffer an agonizing torture and death like no one had ever thought of. No, Trijata would not like to suffer horrible torture for herself; no one would. So surely Trijata will not burn Sita to death; it was a foregone conclusion that Sita knew.

With this prayer, to let her die by burning herself, Sita was able to enhance Trijata's personal empathy and sympathy for her; it also would ensure that Trijata would keep close company of Sita and not let her alone for long for the fear that she may harm herself. If that happens, Trijata would have no answer to give to Ravana, and this very thought would keep Trijata alert. This vigilance in turn would ensure that no other unscrupulous demon or demoness would come in secretly to kill her or gravely wound her.]

सुनत बचन पद गहि समुझाएसि । प्रभु प्रताप बल सुजसु सुनाएसि ॥ ५ ॥

निसि न अनल मिल सुनु सुकुमारी । अस कहि सो निज भवन सिधारी ॥ ६ ॥ sunata bacana pada gahi samujhā'ēsi. prabhu pratāpa bala sujasa sunā'ēsi. 5.

nisi na anala mila sunu sukumārī. asa kahi sō nija bhavana sidhārī. 6.

Hearing the agonized plea of Sita, Trijata fell down and clasped Sita's feet, consoling her by reminding her of Lord Ram's glory, valour, strength and fame. (5)

She told Sita, 'Listen oh tender lady (sukumārī)! Fire cannot be found here during the night¹.' Saying this, Trijata went home. (6)

[Note—¹Trijata wanted to find an excuse, so she said that it is not possible to either find firewood at such a short notice or some source from which fire can be lighted at that hour because it was still dark. This clearly implies that it was still dark and night had not yet fully ended. Obviously it was pre-dawn time, a few hours perhaps before the first rays of sunlight lights up the horizon. This time is called 'Brahma-muhurtha', and it is roughly between 4-5 a.m.

It was the time of the onset of winter when the sunrise is late; it would be dark till say 6 a.m. How do we know that it was early winter? We have read earlier that Lord Ram had spent the four months of the rainy season on Mt. Pravarshan. {Refer:

Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 12; and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18.}

Then some time surely must have passed while spies, heralds and messengers were assembled; then more than one month passed while Hanuman's group had been searching Sita in vain {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 22; and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 26.}.

To wit, one can make a rough guess that approximately two more months may have passed after the rainy season when we are reading of the events concerning Hanuman's meeting with at Lanka. This means winter was close by, and it was the time of the year when days begin to get shorter and nights longer. So while the day-break may be earlier during the summer season, but at the time of which we are talking about the first light of the sun may not be perceivable by, say, 6 a.m. Hence, during the moments of Trijata's conversation with Sita it was surely dark in the sky.

It ought to be noted that Trijata hastily left that place for home. She feared that if she tarried there any longer, Sita would make another absurd request which she would not be able to fulfill, and may be then Sita would start wailing aloud and also scream, for being overcome with misery and grief she seemed to have become desperate and crazy. Should it happen, it would be a catastrophe; all the guards would wake up and find Trijata alone with Sita, as all other demonesses have gone away. This would mean immediate scaffold and death by beheading for both Sita and her friend Trijata.]

कह सीता बिधि भा प्रतिकूला । मिलिहि न पावक मिटिहि न सूला ॥ ७ ॥
देखिअत प्रगट गगन अंगारा । अवनि न आवत एकउ तारा ॥ ८ ॥ पावकमय ससि स्रवत न आगी । मानहुँ मोहि जानि हत भागी ॥ ९ ॥

kaha sītā bidhi bhā pratikūlā. milihi na pāvaka miṭihi na sūlā. 7.
dēkhi'ata pragata gagana aṅgārā. avani na āvata ēka'u tārā. 8.
pāvakamaya sasi sravata na āgī. mānahum' mōhi jāni hata bhāgī. 9.

[Sita was feeling very miserable and forlorn as her only companion Trijata too had gone away, leaving her grieving and lamenting on her fate alone. So she began muttering to herself woefully.]

Sita said to herself, 'It appears that the Creator has become opposed to me, for I will not get fire, and without fire my horrifying agonies and interminable torments won't end. (7)

In the sky one can behold many flying sparks (a reference to comets that flew by or fire-flies that were seen everywhere overhead in the garden), but not a single shooting star (flying spark) can be found on the surface of the earth. [To wit, these sparks are flying here and there everywhere over my head, but why don't even one of them land on the ground so I can rush forward to burn myself by its fiery embrace?] (8)

Even the moon seems to be burning hot for me, but woe to me that even it does not shed one single ember of fire because it thinks me unlucky and unworthy of this grace. [To wit, the moonlight has spread all around me, but why is it not hot enough to burn me?]¹ (9)

[Note—¹The moon and its light are cool and soothing, but for someone who is under intense emotional stress the sight of the moon and its soothing cool light is unbearable. It appears that the moon is teasing Sita, the sufferer, instead of acting as a cool balm for her ruffled nerves and tormented being.

In these verses, the poet Tulsidas has described the state of the mind of those who are suffering from grief of separation from their beloved ones.]

सुनहि बिनय मम बिटप असोका । सत्य नाम करु हरु मम सोका ॥ १० ॥
 नूतन किसलय अनल समाना । देहि अगिनि जनि करहि निदाना ॥ ११ ॥
 देखि परम बिरहाकुल सीता । सो छन कपिहि कलप सम बीता ॥ १२ ॥ sunahi binaya mama bitapa asōkā. satya nāma karu haru mama sōkā. 10.

 nūtana kisalaya anala samānā. dēhi agini jani karahi nidānā. 11.
 dēkhi parama birahākula sītā. sō chana kapihi kalapa sama bītā. 12.

[Then Sita prayed to the Tree under whose shade she was sitting.]

Oh Ashoka Tree! Be true to your name and uphold the sanctity of it by removing my sorrow, grief and misery. [To wit, you are called ‘Ashok’, i.e. one who removes sorrow, grief and misery. So please live up to your reputation and prove that your name ‘Ashok’ is apt by freeing me from the horrors I am being subjected to.] (10)

The fresh leaves and branches that have sprouted on your body, they are like hot firewood I so long to have. Why don’t you shed some so that I can end my body with them? [I long to die by burning myself using these leaves and branches that fall from your stem. So please be graceful and shed some of your weight by letting some leaves and branches fall to the ground.] (11)

The Kapi (Hanuman), who was watching the events from his hiding post in the foliage of the tree, felt very sad and distraught when he saw and heard such lamentations and woeful grieving of Sita who was overcome with grief and immensely distressed due to her separation from Lord Ram.

Forsooth, each of these moments that Hanuman witnessed Sita suffering and lamenting seemed to be like ages for him¹. (12)

[Note—¹The idea is that time seems to fly when one is extremely happy, for one wishes to have more and more of this happiness even as the time seems to be too short for him. On the contrary, sadness and grief seems to stretch the same time eternally, because the sufferer thinks his suffering never seems to come to an end.

Therefore, the time Hanuman spent watching the sufferings of Sita seemed to be like an endless period of time to him, and he only wished that this time would come to an end.]

सो०. कपि करि हृदयँ बिचार दीन्ह मुद्रिका डारि तब । जनु असोक अंगार दीन्ह हरषि उठि कर गहेउ ॥ १२ ॥

sōraṭhā.

kapi kari hr̥dayam̐ bicāra dīnhi mudrikā ḍāri taba.
janu asōka aṅgāra dīnha haraṣi uṭhi kara gahē'u. 12.

Unable to cope with his emotional stress any longer, and hearing that Sita was praying for something to fall from overhead to the ground, Hanuman decided in his heart that it was the opportune time¹, and he then dropped the ring (of Lord Ram that he had brought with him).

When Sita saw the glittering ring fall to the ground in front, she thought that the Ashok tree has answered her prayers; so she rushed forward and gladly picked it up. (Doha no. 12)

[Note—¹Hanuman observed that Sita was very watchful at that moment for anything that fell to the ground. He thought it to be the right moment to drop the ring as it was sure noticed by Sita. Had it been another time there were chances that Sita would not have taken notice for anything falling on the ground, for it was a garden, and dry leaves and twigs, ripe fruits and flowers used to fall from trees to the ground as a routine matter. But this moment was not routine; it was the time when Sita longed to see any thing falling from above her on to the ground before her. So it was certain that the falling of the ring would be noticed by her. And so it indeed was as we shall read in the verses that follow herein below.

Another obvious reason why Hanuman thought that it was the best time to introduce himself to Sita was that it was what is known as the 'grave-yard shift for guards', the time of the night when a person is usually too sleepy to be alert enough to perceive some covert hush-hush conversation taking place in some dark corner of a huge park under the shadow of a large tree such as the one where Sita sat. The cock had yet not crowed, Trijata had gone home, all other demoness guards had already gone away prior to her departure, and since it was yet dark and all the demons were either fast asleep or just rising from their slumber, which meant they would only be half awake and trying to rub-off sleep from their eyes, the deck was clear for Hanuman. If he waited more there were chances that the time for the change of guards may arrive, and the next batch of demons may be more vigilant than their pervious comrades who were slack in their duty so as to let Hanuman sneak in; or may be Ravana himself would come again after some second thought and change of mind.

In a short time the first rays of the sunlight would remove the cover of darkness which had proved to be a boon for Hanuman, and if he loses these precious moments in procrastination and demurring then probably he won't get another chance at all. So he decided to act quickly and dropped the ring that Lord Ram had given him as a token to establish his identity.]

चौ०. तब देखी मुद्रिका मनोहर । राम नाम अंकित अति सुंदर ॥ १ ॥
चकित चितव मुदरी पहिचानी । हरष बिषाद हृदयँ अकुलानी ॥ २ ॥
जीति को सकइ अजय रघुराई । माया तें असि रचि नहिं जाई ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

taba dēkhī mudrikā manōhara. rāma nāma aṅkita ati sundara. 1.
cakita citava mudarī pahicānī. haraṣa biṣāda hr̥dayam̐ akulānī. 2.

jīti kō saka'i ajaya raghurā'ī. māyā tēm asi raci nahim jā'ī. 3.

When Hanuman dropped the finger-ring of Lord Ram that he had brought with him, Sita's attention was immediately drawn to it. She dashed forward and picked it up¹. When she held it in her hands and beheld a magnificent ring, she was shocked with astonishment as it had Lord Ram's name engraved in it in beautifully carved letters. (1)

As soon as she recognized the ring (as the one that exclusively belonged to her beloved Lord Ram, and since his name was engraved in it in a special manner that cannot be duplicated by anyone, for no one had the requisite skill to craft a similar ring, so there was no doubt it was the Lord's), she was immediately overcome by the contradictory emotions of excess of happiness, cheer and elation on the one hand, and grief, desperation and worry on the other hand which simultaneously buffeted her like two huge waves, causing immense consternation and great agitation in her heart. [Why was she thus agitated? It is answered herein below.] (2)

She was completely confounded and unable to understand the meaning of finding this unique ring. Dazed and astonished, she brooded, 'How amazing! Who can ever vanquish Lord Ram who is invincible and almighty? But at the same time a duplicate ring like his cannot be made by employing any skill or trick whatsoever. [So what does this mean? I am sore alarmed.]²' (3)

[Note: ¹As soon as Sita perceived that something had landed from above her head onto the ground before her, she dashed to pick it up. She thought that at last her prayers have been answered and some hot shining thing has fallen to the ground; now she would pick it up in hands and get burnt. But low and behold, she was for a stunning surprise that she could not even dream in her dreams, for what she held in her hands was not some fiery thing but a magnificent ring of exceptional beauty.

Sita was Dumb with amazement and awe by the unexpected sight of this magnificent ring which she recognized instantly, for it was a ring she was well acquainted with; it was not any ordinary ring but the one that exclusively belonged to Lord Ram.

Why, she wondered in stunned astonishment, is she dreaming or is she awake? What is this that she sees? Is it a mirage, is she hallucinating under stress and delusions, or is it a real miracle? How come this ring of Lord Ram has landed before her in the far away land of demons, which lay across the ocean, far-far away from land from where she was abducted? Who has brought it? Is it some wild dream; is it some nasty trick of the demons? Many such thoughts rushed wildly through her mind during those few moments.

The reader is reminded that a detailed note regarding this "ring" has already been appended to Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 23 of Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand in our Book when we were reading about the time when Lord Ram had summoned Hanuman and gave this 'ring' to him prior to the departure of the messengers in search of Sita.

²Sita was totally confounded at the sight of Lord Ram's exclusive ring. It cannot be duplicated, so does it mean that the demons have been able to subjugate him and Ravana had snatched his ring, and then he has played this nasty trick upon her to prove that Lord Ram will no more come to rescue her? But this is an impossible thing, as Lord Ram is un-conquerable; no power in the world can ever defeat the Lord. So what do these contradictory things mean?

The sight of Lord Ram's ring made Sita immediately jump up with exhilaration and cheer in her heart as now it was certain that the Lord has become aware of her location and has sent someone with this token to indicate to her that he was coming soon. But in the next moment she was overcome with doubts, and grief overtook her, when she thought of other possibilities: is it possible that her captors had managed to subdue the Lord and snatched his ring to prove to her that the Lord was vanquished, and she has no chance of escape, which would imply that if she wished for her good then she must obey Ravana. This notion hit her like a hammer, and no sooner had she smiled with joy than she was sucked in a vortex of grief and misery once again that numbed her senses.

Sita stood motionless in a state of shock; she was paralysed and dumbfounded.]

सीता मन बिचार कर नाना । मधुर बचन बोलेउ हनुमाना ॥ ४ ॥
 रामचंद्र गुन बरनैँ लागा । सुनतहिं सीता कर दुख भागा ॥ ५ ॥
 लागीं सुनैँ श्रवन मन लाई । आदिहु तेँ सब कथा सुनाई ॥ ६ ॥ sītā mana bicāra kara nānā. madhura bacana bōlē'u hanumānā. 4.

 rāmacandra guna baranaim lāgā. sunatahim sītā kara dukha bhāgā. 5.
 lāgīm sunaim śravana mana lāī. ādihu tēm saba kathā sunāī. 6.

In this way, contradictory thoughts eliciting elation and depression one after another flooded Sita as she stood motionless and stunned¹. At that moment, Hanuman began speaking some soft and sweet words of consolation from his concealed place behind the cover of foliage of the tree. [What was Hanuman saying? It is answered in the following verse.] (4)

He began reciting the glories of Lord Ramchandra and the legend of his virtues. When Sita heard them, all her sorrows and grief were chased away. [To wit, when Sita heard Lord Ram's glories and virtues being recited in a sweet voice, she was smoothed in her mind and heart; the pleasant words of Hanuman acted as a balm over her frayed nerves to calm her down.]² (5)

She became engrossed in listening to them; she listened to the narration attentively, with her mind, heart and ears fixed on the recitation of Lord Ram's divine story from the beginning³. (6)

[Note—¹What thoughts passed across her mind? Refer to Chaupai line no. 3 and the note appended to Chaupai no. 1 herein above.

²To wit, herein lies a great spiritual secret, a formula that can be used by one and all during testing times in life to find solace and succour from abject misery: so therefore, if one is overburdened with grief that seem to crush him under its weight, when dark clouds of doom and despair loom menacingly on the horizon ready to flood and drown everything, when all seems lost and even hope appears to be far-cry that makes its object too elusive to be ever attainable, when the sun sets and the fear of the ghosts of the night begin to roost—at that time, during those moments of complete gloom and utter bitterness, remembering Lord Ram’s holy name, recalling the Lord’s merciful nature, invoking his benevolence, grace and kindness towards his devotees, would act as a soothing balm and rejuvenates a sinking spirit, for in all sooth and without gainsay, hearing of the Lord’s glories and virtues act as a buoy for the sinking creature, and his soul immediately finds peace and beatitude.

³Hanuman narrated in brief the whole story of Lord Ram, particularly the events directly concerning Sita, like her marriage, the forest exile, the days Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman passed during their journey through the wilds, the events at Panchavati from where she was abducted, Lord Ram’s efforts to search for her, and his meeting Jatau and Sabari, and then the Lord’s onwards journey to Kishikindha where he met and befriended Sugriv, and then finally sending him with the ring to meet Sita.

As soon as Hanuman began to narrate Lord Ram’s story, Sita became attentive; she noticed that the narrative was very exact and truthful, and therefore she was convinced that the narrator was surely close to the Lord. As a result, hope once again re-ignited in her heart, and she became eager to meet the person whose voice she heard.]

श्रवनामृत जेहिं कथा सुहाई । कही सो प्रगट होति किन भाई ॥ ७ ॥ तब हनुमंत निकट चलि गयऊ । फिरि बैठीं मन बिसमय भयऊ ॥ ८ ॥ śravanāmṛta jēhīm kathā suhā'ī. kahī sō pragaṭa hōti kina bhā'ī. 7.

taba hanumanta nikaṭa cali gaya'ū. phiri baiṭhīm mana bisamaya bhaya'ū. 8.

Sita said earnestly, ‘He who has been narrating this legendary divine story of Lord Ram’s grace and mercy, which is like a nectar for the ear (and which has provided me unbound succour and solace), why doesn’t that person make himself visible; why does he remain hidden instead of revealing himself?’ (7)

At this request, Hanuman came down from his perch on the tree, and went near her. But as soon as Sita saw him she once again became uncertain of the truth, and so she turned her back to Hanuman and looked the other way¹. (8)

[Note—¹Hanuman’s form perhaps petrified Sita with fear. It is like the case of someone already scared stiff mentally, on emotional and psychological edge, and completely out of his wits, fearing physical harm from an enemy at every passing moment, suddenly seeing an unexpected sight, such as a squirrel or a mouse or a mongoose standing in front—surely that person would get the shock of his life for he is not prepared for it.

This is what happened with Sita; when she saw Hanuman for the first time she was so shocked and flabbergasted with disbelief that she thought for a moment that this was not Lord Ram’s messenger as she had thought him to be, but some horrifying creature sent by Ravana to tease and torture her after she had refused his immoral offers.]

राम दूत मैं मातु जानकी । सत्य सपथ करुनानिधान की ॥ ९ ॥
 यह मुद्रिका मातु मैं आनी । दीन्हि राम तुम्ह कहँ सहिदानी ॥ १० ॥ नर बानरहि संग कहु कैसें । कही कथा भइ संगति जैसें ॥ ११ ॥

rāma dūta mair̥m mātu jānakī. satya sapatha karunānidhāna kī. 9.
 yaha mudrikā mātu mair̥m ānī. dīnhi rāma tumha kaham̥ sahidānī. 10.
 nara bānarahi saṅga kahu kaisēm̥. kahī kathā bha'i saṅgati jaisēm̥. 11.

Hanuman realized what was going on in Sita's mind, so he was quick to introduce himself when he said, 'Mother Sita, I am a messenger of Lord Ram. I say this to you under oath by invoking Lord Ram that it is the Truth (and I am not lying to you). (9)

Mother, I have brought this finger-ring which Lord Ram gave me to give you as a token for my identification.¹ (10)

Then Sita asked Hanuman, 'Say, tell me how it happened that a human being and monkeys came in contact with each other and became friends?'

So Hanuman narrated to her all the events that led to establishment of friendship between Lord Ram (representing the 'human being') and Sugriv (representing the 'monkey race').² (11)

[Note—¹Refer to Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 23 where we have read about Lord Ram giving this ring to Hanuman.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 5.

Sita heard this narrative very attentively. She was particularly amazed when she heard how Lord Ram and Sugriv became friends, though she was convinced the line of narrative was truthful as she had herself witnessed Jatau's valiant effort to free her and his ultimate sacrifice when his wings were cut by Ravana, and how she had seen the monkeys on the top of a hill when she had dropped her clothes from the air. These events have been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-25 that precede Doha no. 29.

But inspite of all this, Sita wished to be certain that this was not some kind of trick to trap her. So she thought it fit to enquire deeply as to how Lord Ram and Sugriv became friends, for this would help her to descry some loophole, if there were any.]

दो०. कपि के बचन सप्रेम सुनि उपजा मन बिस्वास । जाना मन क्रम बचन यह कृपासिंधु कर दास ॥ १३ ॥

dōhā.

kapi kē bacana saprēma suni upajā mana bisvāsa.
 jānā mana krama bacana yaha kṛpāsindhu kara dāsa. 13.

Affectionately hearing the sweets words of the Kapi (i.e. hearing the answer which Hanuman gave her in response to her query), Sita realised and was convinced in her heart and mind that he indeed was a devoted and sincere servant of the Lord (Ram) who is an ocean of mercy, kindness, grace and benevolence, a servant who is truly committed to serving his Lord by his heart and mind (i.e. at the emotion level as well as the intellectual level), by his actions and deeds (i.e. in whatever he does), and by his words (i.e. in whatever he says). (Doha no. 13)

चौ०. हरिजन जानि प्रीति अति गाढी । सजल नयन पुलकावलि बाढी ॥ १ ॥

बूड़त बिरह जलधि हनुमाना । भयहु तात मो कहूँ जलजाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

harijana jāni prīti ati gārhi. sajala nayana pulakāvali bārhi. 1.

būrata biraha jaladhi hanumānā. bhayahu tāta mō kahum̃ jalajānā. 2.

Realising that Hanuman was truly a devotee and follower of Lord Hari (“harijana”; Lord Ram’s devotee), Sita developed an intense sense of love and affection for him. She became highly sentimental and so overwhelmed with emotion that tears welled up in her eyes, the body became thrilled, and she had goose-bumps all over. (1)

[After a moment she gathered her wits together and said to Hanuman), ‘My dear son Hanuman (hanumānā, tāta)! For me, who was desolate and desparate, almost drowning in the vast ocean of grief, sorrow and misery (that separation from my beloved Lord Ram has brought to me), you, I verily indeed declare, proved to be the proverbial ship that comes providentially to the rescue of a drowning person.

[To wit, had you not come in time then very soon I would have died due to the weight of the burden of grief, sorrow and pain that has overwhelmed me.] (2)

[Note—¹How did Sita know that the messenger’s name was ‘Hanuman’? Well, we have just read that Hanuman narrated the story of Lord Ram and all the events related to her in brief, ending with him bringing the ring given to him by Lord Ram as a token of identification when he met Sita. Obviously he must have also mentioned his own name during the narration. This is how Sita came to learn that he was called Hanuman.

And since he was a faithful and committed devotee and follower of Lord Ram, who is doing his best to serve the Lord, Sita treated him affectionately as her son (tāta).]

अब कहु कुसल जाउँ बलिहारी । अनुज सहित सुख भवन खरारी ॥ ३ ॥

कोमलचित कृपाल रघुराई । कपि केहि हेतु धरी निठुराई ॥ ४ ॥ aba kahu kusala jā'um̃ balihārī. anuja sahita sukha bhavana kharārī. 3.

kōmalacita kṛpāla raghurāī. kapi kēhi hētu dharī niṭhurāī. 4.

Now tell me, I beseech you, about the welfare of the younger brother (Laxman) of the Lord (Sri Ram) who is an abode of happiness and bliss, the Lord who had slayed the demon Khar¹; how are they both²? (3)

Oh Kapi (Hanuman)! Lord Ram is the great king of the Raghu dynasty (of Ayodhya) who is renowned for his soft heart and merciful nature. Say then, why has the Lord become so stern-hearted now (that he has yet not come to free me)³? (4)

[Note—¹This episode of Lord Ram slaying the demon Khar, along with his companions Dushan and Trishira, is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20. We have already read it earlier in connection with the deformation of the demoness Supernakha, the event that set in motion other events that culminated in Sita's abduction by Ravana and her incarnation in Lanka.

²Sita had named Laxman first, and then Lord Ram, when enquiring about their welfare. [anuja = Laxman; sahita = along or together with; sukha bhavana kharāri = Lord Ram.] She was especially very worried about Laxman and sorry that she had forced him to abandon her at the time when Lord Ram had gone pursuing the golden deer at her own behest. She was worried that Lord Ram would have been very angry at his younger brother to have defied his instructions not to leave Sita alone when he saw Laxman coming towards him whilst he was returning back to the hermitage after killing the deer, and his anger would have multiplied manifold when he found that Sita had been abducted because of Laxman's negligence. So Sita feared that Lord Ram may have severely punished Laxman, though the Lord loved him exceedingly like his own son, and this possibility, however remote, filled her with the greatest of worry and remorse, because Laxman was not at all at fault as it was she who had forced him to abandon her.

Since Sita too loved Laxman like her own son, she was extremely anxious of his welfare and safety. She was worried about Lord Ram also, but not to the extent of Laxman—because she knew that Lord Ram was invincible, able and almighty, and therefore capable of taking care of himself. A mother's tender heart is always more worried about her son as compared to her husband; she always treats her son gingerly, has a soft corner for him, regarding him with the greatest of care and tenderness, thinking that he is easily susceptible to harm and injury no matter how strong, valiant and powerful he might be, even if he surpasses his father in these qualities. So that is why Sita asked for Laxman's welfare first.

It is to be noted that she has 'linked' the two, Laxman and Lord Ram, with the use of the conjunction 'sahita'—when she says 'how is the younger brother "along with" the kind Lord who had slayed Khar'. This shows that she was equally worried about them both; she loved them equally. Like a woman who is also a mother, Sita remembered her dear husband Lord Ram as much as she remembered Laxman whom she treated as her son!

This is why Sita took care not to ask about their welfare as independent persons, but as inseparable companions; if one were to think of Lord Ram, then Laxman would automatically come to mind. Remarkable indeed! It's a great tribute to Laxman's sacrifices that he had made for his brother Ram—right from his decision to forgo the comforts of a great kingdom of Ayodhya when he decided to accompany Lord Ram and Sita to the forest, through the travails of the journey in the wilds and the difficulties and sufferings that it entailed, supporting Lord Ram and standing with him shoulder-to-shoulder like a true friend, son and companion. Laxman had played a crucial role in helping Lord Ram overcome the pangs of grief that had all but drowned him at the time when Sita was stolen, and thereafter he was the Lord's moral support and comrade-in-arm through the testing times during which the fierce War of Lanka was fought, even suffering grievously and almost embracing death during its course.

³Sita is suffering from intense agony of separation from her beloved Lord; and like someone who is suffering gravely from the pang of grief that accompanies such separation, she sort of holds him responsible for abandoning her for so long.]

सहज बानि सेवक सुख दायक । कबहुँक सुरति करत रघुनायक ॥ ५ ॥
 कबहुँ नयन मम सीतल ताता । होइहहिं निरखि स्याम मृदु गाता ॥ ६ ॥ बचनु न आव नयन भरे बारी । अहह नाथ हौं निपट बिसारी ॥ ७ ॥ sahaja bāni sēvaka sukha dāyaka. kabahum̃ka surati karata raghunāyaka. 5. kabahum̃ nayana mama sītala tātā. hō'ihahim̃ nirakhi syāma mṛdu gātā. 6.

 bacanu na āva nayana bhare bārī. ahaha nātha haum̃ nipaṭa bisārī. 7.

The Lord has a natural habit of providing happiness and joy to his devotees, followers and those who serve him; he is always cordial towards them, and ensures that his words invariably show his affection for them. Tell me, does such a benevolent and kind-hearted Lord ever remembers me (and speaks about me in affectionate terms)? (5)

Tell me, oh dear son (tātā), when my eyes would find their comfort and cool by seeing the Lord's tender, dark-complexioned form? [To wit, tell me, when will I be able to see Lord Ram again?]' (6)

Sita was overcome with grief and sorrow as she remembered Lord Ram so much so that for some moments she could speak no more even as her eyes got filled with tears. Then she regained some semblance of courage and self-restraint, and exclaimed in excess of anguish, 'Alack oh Lord; it seems that I have been completely forgotten (by you).¹' (7)

[Note—¹As we know, Lord Ram has not forgotten Sita at all. The very fact that Hanuman was there proves it. But Sita was suffering highly from emotional turmoil; she had lost all hopes of freedom and meeting Lord Ram again. We have read that she asked Trijata to arrange some firewood so she could die by burning herself, so desolate and hopeless she was feeling. But whilst earlier she used to keep her grief and memory of Lord Ram confined to herself, her pent-up emotions burst forth like an erupting volcano when she met Hanuman. It happens in excess of grief that a person feels so emotionally paralysed that he becomes numb and dumb; he seems to be like a lifeless statue. But as soon as some ray of hope, solace and succour shine through this foreboding darkness of despair and desolation, life in his grief-stricken heart is suddenly stirred up to express itself in the form of an exclamation that, though sounding like abject gloom, misery and helplessness, yet it also signals revival of hope and faith in his inner-being.

Sita felt her throat choked with emotions for a moment when hot tears filled her eyes and sorrows welled up in her heart like a rising storm; this storm of grief struck her hard and she was numbed for some time. Like a person who loses his footing and falls in the water when huge waves of the ocean strike him, but who soon recovers and gasps for breath to cling to dear life, calling out to his companions and exclaiming desperately, “save me, save me”, Sita too muttered in a hoarse voice “why has Lord Ram neglected me; why is he taking so long to come to my rescue”.

The intensity of suffering, the depth of agony and the intolerable pain of Sita’s heart were only exacerbated when she met Hanuman, as his presence reminded her of the happier days she had spent in the company of Lord Ram. The soulful way she lamented, and the earnestness with which she prayed to Lord Ram to come to her rescue and provide her salvation and emancipation find a resonance in a number of verses of the Psalms in the Old Testament of the Holy Bible. These verses reflect the sadness of her heart, the desperation of her soul, the poignancy of her heart, and how she must have hoped that her doleful prayers would be heard and answered soon by Lord Ram.

We shall now spend some moments to read some of the soul stirring and heart touching wonderful verses from the Psalms, as their reading would add beauty to our own narration, and lend depth and gravity to Sita’s sense of grief and misery, as well as her desire for liberation.

Psalm, 3/1-7:-

1: LORD, how are they increased that trouble me! many are they that rise up against me.

2: Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Selah.

3: But thou, O LORD, art a shield for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.

4: I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah.

5: I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.

6: I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.

7: Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God.

Psalm, 4/1:-

1: Hear me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

Psalm, 6/1-10:-

1: O LORD, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2: Have mercy upon me, O LORD; for I am weak: O LORD, heal me; for my bones are vexed.

3: My soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

4: Return, O LORD, deliver my soul: oh save me for thy mercies' sake.

5: For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

6: I am weary with my groaning; all the night make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears.

7: Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.
 8: Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.
 9: The LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.
 10: Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

Psalm, 7/1-2:-

1: O Lord my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me:
 2: Lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is none to deliver.

Psalm, 13/1-6:-

1: How long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?
 2: How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?
 3: Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;
 4: Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.
 5: But I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.
 6: I will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

Psalm, 17/6-13:-

6: I have called upon thee, for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.
 7: Shew thy marvellous lovingkindness, O thou that savest by thy right hand them which put their trust in thee from those that rise up against them.
 8: Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings, 9: From the wicked that oppress me, from my deadly enemies, who compass me about.
 10: They are inclosed in their own fat: with their mouth they speak proudly.
 11: They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;
 12: Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion lurking in secret places.
 13: Arise, O LORD, disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, which is thy sword.

Psalm, 18/4-6:-

4: The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.
 5: The sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me.
 6: In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

Psalm, 22/1-2, 12-13, 16-21:-

1: My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2: O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent.

12: Many bulls (read "demons") have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan (read 'Ravana') have beset me round.

13: They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

16: For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet.

17: I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18: They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

19: But be not thou far from me, O LORD: O my strength, haste thee to help me.

20: Deliver my soul from the sword; my darling from the power of the dog.

21: Save me from the lion's mouth: for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns.

Psalm, 25/6-7, 16-21:-

6: Remember, O LORD, thy tender mercies and thy loving kindnesses; for they have been ever of old.

7: Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O LORD.

16: Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted.

17: The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses.

18: Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins.

19: Consider mine enemies; for they are many; and they hate me with cruel hatred.

20: O keep my soul, and deliver me: let me not be ashamed; for I put my trust in thee.

21: Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait on thee.

Psalm, 35/1-8, 22-26:-

1: Plead my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

2: Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3: Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4: Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5: Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6: Let their way be dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7: For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8: Let destruction come upon him at unawares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

22: This thou hast seen, O LORD: keep not silence: O Lord, be not far from me.

23: Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my Lord.

24: Judge me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25: Let them not say in their hearts, Ah, so would we have it: let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26: Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

Psalm, 40/11-15, 17:-

10: I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

11: Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O LORD: let thy lovingkindness and thy truth continually preserve me.

12: For innumerable evils have compassed me about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head: therefore my heart faileth me.

13: Be pleased, O LORD, to deliver me: O LORD, make haste to help me.

14: Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil.

15: Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha.

17: But I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

Psalm, 43/5:-

5: Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

Psalm, 56/1-7:-

1: Be merciful unto me, O God: for man would swallow me up; he fighting daily oppresseth me.

2: Mine enemies would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou most High.

3: What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

4: In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5: Every day they wrest my words: all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6: They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7: Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.

Psalm, 57/1, 4-6:-

1: Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me: for my soul trusteth in thee: yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast.

4: My soul is among lions: and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.
 5: Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.
 6: They have prepared a net for my steps; my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they are fallen themselves.

Psalm, 64/1-8:-

1: Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve my life from fear of the enemy.
 2: Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:
 3: Who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words:
 4: That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.
 5: They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them?
 6: They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is deep.
 7: But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded.
 8: So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away.

Psalm, 69/1-5, 16-18, 22-30:-

1: Save me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul.
 2: I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.
 3: I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.
 4: They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.
 5: O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins are not hid from thee.
 16: Hear me, O LORD; for thy lovingkindness is good: turn unto me according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.
 17: And hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: hear me speedily.
 18: Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me because of mine enemies.
 22: Let their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.
 23: Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.
 24: Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.
 25: Let their habitation be desolate; and let none dwell in their tents.
 26: For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of those whom thou hast wounded.
 27: Add iniquity unto their iniquity: and let them not come into thy righteousness.
 28: Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.

29: But I am poor and sorrowful: let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30: I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving.

Psalm, 70/1-3:-

1: Make haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O LORD.

2: Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul: let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

3: Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha.

Psalm, 130/1-6:-

1: Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O LORD.

2: Lord, hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3: If thou, LORD, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand?

4: But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared.

5: I wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

6: My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning: I say, more than they that watch for the morning.

Psalm, 142/1-7:-

1: I cried unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2: I poured out my complaint before him; I shewed before him my trouble.

3: When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

4: I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me; no man cared for my soul.

5: I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living.

6: Attend unto my cry; for I am brought very low: deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7: Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.]

देखि परम बिरहाकुल सीता । बोला कपि मृदु बचन बिनीता ॥ ८ ॥

मातु कुसल प्रभु अनुज समेता । तव दुख दुखी सुकृपा निकेता ॥ ९ ॥

जनि जननी मानहु जियँ ऊना । तुम्ह ते प्रेमु राम कें दूना ॥ १० ॥ dēkhi parama birahākula sītā. bōlā kapi mṛdu bacana binītā. 8.

mātu kusala prabhu anuja samētā. tava dukha dukhī sukrpā nikētā. 9.

jani janani mānahu jiyam'ūnā. tumha tē prēmu rāma kēm dūnā. 10.

When the Kapi (Hanuman) perceived that Sita was overwhelmed with excess of grief, sorrow and remorse, he replied to her using sweet and polite words, --- (8)

‘Mother (mātu), the Lord and his younger brother are both doing well. The Lord, who is an abode of extreme grace, mercy and kindness, is sad and grieving for you. [Mother, don’t think that Lord Ram has forgotten you; banish this unwarranted thought. The truth is that the Lord remembers you as much as you remember him, and is very worried for you.]¹ (9)

Oh Mother (jananī)! Don’t allow wrong ideas, false notions and baseless misgivings find any place in your heart, for the fact is that Lord Ram loves you twice as much as you love him. [Please banish such evil thoughts that have expressed themselves from your mouth when you exclaimed why Lord Ram has abandoned you. There is no truth in it.]² (10)

[Note—¹This is in answer to Sita’s query whether the Lord remembers her, in verse no. 5 herein above.

²This is in reply to Sita’s query as to why the Lord has forgotten her, in verse no. 7 herein above.]

दो०. रघुपति कर संदेसु अब सुनु जननी धरि धीर । अस कहि कपि गदगद भयउ भरे बिलोचन नीर ॥ १४ ॥

dōhā.

raghupati kara sandēsu aba sunu jananī dhari dhīra.
asa kahi kapi gadagada bhaya'u bharē bilōcana nīra. 14.

Oh Mother (jananī)! Now have patience and listen to Lord Raghupati’s¹ message.’

Saying this, Hanuman was himself so overcome with emotions surging in his heart that he could not speak for some moments, and tears welled up in his eyes². (Doha no. 14)

[Note—¹In verse no. 5 Sita has referred to Lord Ram as ‘Raghunayak’, which means the same as the word ‘Raghupati’, i.e. the ‘Lord of the Raghu’s line of kings of the kingdom of Ayodhya’.

So being wise, Hanuman decided to use a similar word as the one used by Sita so that there would be no confusion in her mind that was already clouded by grief and worry regarding the Lord whose message Hanuman was about to convey her.

²Hanuman felt that he was so lucky and fortunate that he was chosen to become the spokesman for Lord Ram, the Supreme Being incarnate. He was overwhelmed with gratitude towards the Lord for providing him with this rare privilege and honour, for it will make him immortal in the annals of history as the one who carried Lord Ram’s message for Sita!

Remember: Sita has addressed Hanuman as her ‘son’—refer Chaupai line nos. 2 and 6 herein above. So Hanuman found his ‘mother’ who was there in a dire state;

this filled him with grief, and tears welled up in his eyes and his throat became choked.]

चौ०. कहेउ राम बियोग तव सीता । मो कहँ सकल भए बिपरीता ॥ १ ॥

नव तरु किसलय मनहुँ कृसानू । काल निसा सम निसि ससि भानू ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kahē'u rāma biyōga tava sītā. mō kahum' sakala bha'ē biparītā. 1.

nava taru kisalaya manahum' kṛsānū. kāla nisā sama nisi sasi bhānū. 2.

Hanuman conveyed Lord Ram's grief and sorrows to Sita in the following words: 'Lord Ram has given a message for you. He had said, "Sita, ever since I have been separated from you, all the things and situations (even ordinary ones that I had been taking for granted, and which never made me raise an eyebrow) have turned against me.

[To wit, everything appears to be inimical towards me; the whole world seems to be upside down for me; for my nerves are wrecked, my heart seems to sink in an abyss of despondency and grief, and my mind is befuddled like a man who is so intoxicated that he begins to hallucinate and sees things that actually don't exist. I have been on an emotional roller-coaster ride that plunges me in deep chasms of dejection and misery for one moment, and then lifts me up in the arms of faith to heights of hope at the next moment. Friends appear like enemies; water becomes fire; day looks dark as night; food is poison; and my breath seems to burn my inner organs instead of infusing life into the body. Verily indeed, my condition is no better than yours; rather it's far worse.] (1)

For instance, new and tender leaves on trees appear like tongues of fire to me¹, ordinary nights look like the dreadful night of the doomsday², and the moon (that is famed for its coolness) resembles the fiery, scorching ball of the sun³. (2)

[Note—¹Sita too thinks similarly, that the soft green leaves of the tree can provide her with fire, as we have already read in Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 12 herein above.

²When a person is suffering intensely with grief, and every moment of his life becomes a burden, the whole world around him becomes horrifyingly gloomy and dark and scary like the night of doomsday. This condition also prevailed in the magnificent city of Ayodhya, a city that was the envy of heaven, at the time Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman left it for the forest. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 83.

³Lord Ram says that when he lies down with his eyes shut, but perchance if he opens them and sees the moon in the sky, it reminds him of Sita's pretty face, and this memory once again ignites the fire of sorrow in his heart and burns it; so he immediately closes his eyes like someone who sees the sun by mistake and instantly shuts the eye involuntarily. The moon, instead of cooling his nerves, only scorches him.]

कुबलय बिपिन कुंत बन सरिसा । बारिद तपत तेल जनु बरिसा ॥ ३ ॥
जे हित रहे करत तेइ पीरा । उरग स्वास सम त्रिबिध समीरा ॥ ४ ॥ kubalaya bipina kunta bana sarisā. bārida tapata tēla janu barisā. 3.

jē hita rahē karata tē'i pīrā. uraga svāsa sama tribidha samīrā. 4.

A cluster of lotus flowers look like so many spears planted on the ground; and the clouds appear to pour down hot oil (instead of the cooling rain-water). (3)

It is such an irony that those elements which were earlier friendly and well-wishers inasmuch as they invariably gave peace and happiness to me have now become my tormentors and have turned hostile towards me. Even the three types of airs¹ have transformed themselves into the fiery breath spouting out of a dragon's mouth. (4)

[Note—¹The three types of airs alluded to here are the three qualities of the wind, such as a soft breeze, a cool wind, and a fragrant air. It also may mean the following: (i) the soft, fragrant and cool breeze that wafts slowly and caresses a person with its feather-like touch; (ii) the life-giving air that one breathes; and (iii) the air of the atmosphere.

Lord Ram means that life has become very suffocating and unbearable for him in the absence of Sita. All the primary elements of life—such as the air (the present verse no. 4), the sky (represented by the night, the moon and the sun in verse no. 2), the water (represented by the cloud in verse no. 3), the fire (represented by the leaves that look like tongues of fire as in verse no. 2), and the earth (represented by the lotus flower that seem to be spears planted on the ground as in verse no. 3)—have become his tormentors.]

कहेहू तें कछु दुख घटि होई । काहि कहौं यह जान न कोई ॥ ५ ॥
तत्व प्रेम कर मम अरु तोरा । जानत प्रिया एकु मनु मोरा ॥ ६ ॥
सो मनु सदा रहत तोहि पाहीं । जानु प्रीति रसु एतनेहि माहीं ॥ ७ ॥ kahēhū tēm kachu dukha ghaṭi hō'ī. kāhi kahaurṁ yaha jāna na kō'ī. 5.

tatva prēma kara mama aru tōrā. jānata priyā ēku manu mōrā. 6.
sō manu sadā rahata tōhi pāhīm. jānu prīti rasu ētanēhi māhīm. 7.

It is believed that if one speaks about one's grief and agony to someone who empathizes with him and is friendly inclined, then the intensity of sorrow decreases to some extent. But to whom should I speak to share my misery; for I have no one with whom I can confide, and no one would understand it even if I did speak. So I have to suffer silently within, and no one knows how much I suffer. (5)

Oh my dear (priyā)! The secret of the affection that exist between you and me, the bond of love that binds you and me, is known only to me; for my Mana (i.e. my heart and mind) alone is aware of its depth and purity. (6)

And that ‘Mana’ of mine dwells where you are. Regard these as indicators of my love and affection for you.

[To wit, though physical distance separates us, my soul still is with you. I always remember you; my heart has no place for any other entity except you; and my mind is occupied with your thoughts and memory. I pass my days in abject agony; my breath is fiery hot and it burns me; my friends look like enemies and I can’t share my grief with anyone to lessen the burden of my heart. So don’t think I have forgotten you.]¹ (7)

[Note—¹This statement is in answer to Sita’s query in verse no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 14 where she asks Hanuman if Lord Ram ever remembered her.

The ornate and flowery language, with its liberal usage of similes and metaphors, that Hanuman employs to assuage Sita’s agitated state and to infuse hope in her was surely his own. When a leader sends someone as an emissary, whom he selects with due care for his wisdom, intelligence, prudence, and skill at negotiation, he only gives a brief to his representative, leaving the details of what is to be said, and how the situation is to be handled on the ground, to the emissary himself, for how the things would turn out can’t be predicted in advance, and hence tutoring the messenger is impossible.

Lord Ram had just briefly told Hanuman what he was expected to do: “just go and meet Sita, introduce yourself and give this ring of mine for identification, reassure her in different ways as you deem fit, remind her about my strength and powers, tell her to have patience and wait as I will soon go to free her from the clutches of her captors, and then come back hastily”. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precede Doha no. 23.

Remember: Hundreds of monkey and bear warriors were present at that time, and they had their eyes and ears fixed on Lord Ram. So it would have been impractical, imprudent, indecent and immodest for the Lord to speak in such intimate language, as Hanuman now uses, in the presence of that assembly; giving the ring quietly and saying a few confidential words briefly to Hanuman is a different thing from showing emotions and making sentimental utterances.

Hence, like an intelligent and wise emissary, Hanuman used his own discretion for the way he reassured Sita. He had seen her miserable condition; he had heard what she said to Trijata and the Tree; and he had heard what she had said directly to him. So, he adapted his message to suit her mental state.]

प्रभु संदेसु सुनत बैदेही । मगन प्रेम तन सुधि नहिं तेही ॥ ८ ॥
 कह कपि हृदयँ धीर धरु माता । सुमिरु राम सेवक सुखदाता ॥ ९ ॥ उर आनहु रघुपति प्रभुताई । सुनि मम बचन तजहु कदराई ॥ १० ॥

prabhu sandēsu sunata baidēhī. magana prēma tana sudhi nahim tēhī. 8.
 kaha kapi hṛdayam̐ dhīra dharu mātā. sumiru rāma sēvaka sukhadātā. 9.
 ura ānahu raghupati prabhutā’ī. suni mama bacana tajahu kadarā’ī. 10.

When Vaidehi (Sita) heard the message of the Lord (Sri Ram), she became so much overwhelmed with love and affection that she lost awareness of her own body.

[For a moment she forgot all about her sufferings and miseries; she forgot that she was weak and hadn't slept for days. She no longer yearned for death, for new hope sprung forth in her heart like a well-spring of life.] (8)

Hanuman said, 'Mother, have patience, resilience and courage in your heart. Keep remembering Lord Ram who grants happiness, joy and bliss to his devotees and followers who serve him (sēvaka sukhadātā). (9)

Invoke the glories and majesty of Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram) in your heart. Pay heed to my advice, and abandon all your misgivings, banish all ill-thoughts, and free your mind from gloomy forebodings.¹

[¹Mother; I advise you to stop regretting for the past as you cannot change it; be confident in your present as the future rests upon it; and have hope for the future as there is always a sunrise after the darkness of the night. Don't be disheartened and forlorn; have faith as it is the basis of hope, and hope is the basis of life. If you live, you will meet Lord Ram again; but if you despair and lose life then you will drag the Lord along with you. Would you like that to happen? Then listen to me: have patience and courage.] (10)

दो०. निसिचर निकर पतंग सम रघुपति बान कृसानु ।

जननी हृदयँ धीर धरु जरे निसाचर जानु ॥ १५ ॥

dōhā.

nisicara nikara pataṅga sama raghupati bāna kṛsānu.

jananī hṛdayam' dhīra dharu jarē nisācara jānu. 15.

The demon hordes are like a swarm of insects, whilst the arrows of Lord Ram are like a blazing fire. Oh Mother (jananī)! Be resilient, have patience and courage in your heart, and consider these demons as good as burnt out insects¹. (Doha no. 15)

[Note—¹Just as insects are lured towards the flame and get burnt consequentially, so will all the demons die when hit by Lord Ram's powerful fiery arrows. Oh Mother, there is no doubt about it.]

चौ०. जौं रघुबीर होति सुधि पाई । करते नहिं बिलंबु रघुराई ॥ १ ॥

राम बान रबि उएँ जानकी । तम बरूथ कहँ जातुधान की ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jauṁ raghubīra hōti sudhi pāī. karatē nahim bilambu raghurāī. 1.

rāma bāna rabi u'ēm' jānakī. tama barūtha kham' jātudhāna kī. 2.

Had Lord Ram, the Great Lord of king Raghu's line (raghurāī), been aware of your whereabouts, then forsooth and without gainsay he would not have delayed even for a moment¹. (1)

Oh Daughter of Janak (“jānakī”; Sita)! When the dazzling sun symbolized by Lord Ram’s splendid arrows rises in the sky over the horizon, say then where will the darkness represented by the demon remain²? (2)

[Note—¹This assurance is in reply to Sita’s question as to why Lord Ram has become so stone-hearted that he has not come yet to free her, in Chaupai no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 14 herein above.

²The imagery is excellent. The sun rises in the horizon, traverses through the sky, and then sets in the opposite horizon. When Lord Ram would shoot his shining arrows, they will rise from the ground, follow their trajectory across the sky, and then descend upon the demons to kill them before hitting the ground on the opposite side of the battle-field. The war and its many battles would be fought during the day time, and so the sunlight would make the arrows gleam brilliantly, like shafts of lightning darting across the firmament.

Here, the gleaming arrows of Lord Ram are likened to the rays of the sun, and the dark-complexioned demons, whose inner-selves too are dark due to sin and evil they stand for, are likened to the darkness of the night.]

अबहिं मातु मैं जाउँ लवाई । प्रभु आयसु नहिं राम दोहाई ॥ ३ ॥
कछुक दिवस जननी धरु धीरा । कपिन्ह सहित अइहहिं रघुबीरा ॥ ४ ॥
निसिचर मारि तोहि लै जैहहिं । तिहुँ पुर नारदादि जसु गैहहिं ॥ ५ ॥ abahiṃ mātu maim jā’um’ lavā’ī. prabhu āyasu nahim rāma dōhā’ī. 3.

kachuka divasa janani dharu dhīrā. kapinha sahita a’ihahim raghubīrā. 4.
niscara māri tōhi lai jaiyahim. tihum’ pura nāradādi jasu gaihahim. 5.

Mother (mātu), I can take you back this instant itself, but I don’t have this mandate from the Lord, I say this truthfully to you on oath of Lord Ram.

[Please mother, understand my predicament. It’s not that I can’t free you right now, but I don’t have the permission to do so, neither from Lord Ram nor from Angad, our prince, or from Jamvant, our elderly advisor and the one who had inspired me to rise up to the occasion and come here. So therefore, I am constrained to exercise great restraint on my natural instinct, which wants me to take you back immediately.¹] (3)

Mother (jananī)! Have patience for some more days², for Lord Ram, the brave Lord of the Raghu dynasty (raghubīrā), would come soon with a formidable army of Kapis (monkeys and bears). (4)

He will slay the demons and take you back to freedom with all honour. It would be a glorious and grand event, so magnificent, so majestic and so singular that celestial sages like Narad and other minstrels would glorify it and make it immortal through their songs and ballads for all times to come.

[So therefore, don’t despond mother; have courage and patience and hope, for these are forsooth the virtues of life. I’ll go back and soon bring Lord Ram here; the Lord would come with a formidable army of monkeys and bears, and upon my honour

I say to you to have faith in me, to trust me and the words of a gentleman, that all these demons who have caused you so much trouble and torment would be defeated and slayed in the war that would ensue to free you. Be certain mother that you will indeed be freed, of which there is no gainsay.]’ (5)

[Note—¹Lord Ram as well as Jamvant had given clear instructions to Hanuman to just go and find about Sita, and come back with her news. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 23; and Chaupai line nos. 11-12 that precede Doha no. 30 respectively.

²Hanuman had heard already that Ravana had given a one-month grace period to Sita. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 10 herein above.} So there was a lot of time in hand; Ravana would definitely not harm Sita during this grace period as, though he was a demon, he was a great king, and kings are known by their words, for if a king loses his word he loses his honour, and the right to be called a ‘king’; so this was the guarantee.

And, come to think of it, it was also the reason why Ravana did no harm to Sita even his cherished golden city of Lanka was burnt to cinders by Hanuman, about which we shall read shortly, and later on as the ferocious bloody war raged all around, when Lord Ram actually came with his army, even as one after another of all the great demon warriors bit the dust, so much so that his own son Meghnad, as well as his brother Kumbhakaran, too died. Truly indeed, such is the importance that great kings gave to their word of honour. This principle is explicitly declared in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 28 where king Dasrath himself declares “It is a established doctrine and a matter of honour for the kings of the Raghu’s line that it is better to die than to break one’s word”.]

हैं सुत कपि सब तुम्हहि समाना । जातुधान अति भट बलवाना ॥ ६ ॥
 मोरें हृदय परम संदेहा । सुनि कपि प्रगट कीन्हि निज देहा ॥ ७ ॥
 कनक भूधराकार सरिरा । समर भयंकर अतिबल बीरा ॥ ८ ॥
 सीता मन भरोस तब भयऊ । पुनि लघु रूप पवनसुत लयऊ ॥ ९ ॥ hair̄m suta kapi saba tumhahi samānā. jātudhāna ati bhaṭa balavānā. 6.

 mōrēm hr̄daya parama sandēhā. suni kapi pragaṭa kīnhi nija dēhā. 7.
 kanaka bhūdharākāra sarīrā. samara bhayaṅkara atibala bīrā. 8.
 sītā mana bharōsa taba bhaya'ū. puni laghu rūpa pavanasuta laya'ū. 9.

[Upon this assertion of Hanuman—one, that he could have taken her back if he had the permission of Lord Ram, and two, that Lord Ram would come with an army of Kapis to kill the demons and free her—Sita expressed her reservations. The demons were cruel giants; their had huge forms and fierce demeanours; their teeth and nails were like long spears and sharp swords, with which they could tear apart anything no matter how strong and thick it was; their blows put to shame the force of the sledgehammer; eating live creatures raw, and drinking their blood in draughts as if it were wine, was their repast; knowing no mercy and ever ready to shed blood at the slightest provocation, and often even without it, they had trampled underfoot and crushed even the mightiest of warriors, not even sparing the gods of heaven who trembled by the mere mention of their names.

To wit, Sita had her doubts; she wondered if Hanuman's assurances were nothing more than airy bluster; merely a loud talk and pretentious boastfulness with no pith in it. He had a small frame, which was like that of a pygmy, no comparison of course to his adversary, the demons, who were awe-inspiringly colossal in their mere size.

So, unable to repress her anxiety, and so much the better for it because it was far wiser to be sure of something so serious and of grave consequence as that which was proposed, than to rely upon imaginary virtues of chivalry, valiance and bravery only to be ridiculed and dishonoured in the end, Sita said to Hanuman—]

‘My dear son (suta)! All the Kapis (monkeys and bears) must be like you are in their forms (diminutive and like pygmies in size), whereas the demon warriors are giants who not only have colossal frames but are also very powerful and strong (befitting their huge frames). (6)

This has caused a lot of doubt in my mind (if what you say is actually feasible).’

Hearing these words of Sita, Hanuman revealed his true form. (7)

This form was like a golden-coloured mountain, for it was huge and colossal. [To wit, it was the form that Hanuman had revealed to Jamvant and others prior to his departure for Lanka¹.]

This formidable form inspired awe and instilled fear in the mind and heart of the enemy in a battle, for it was most terrifying and fearful, one that was evidently full of strength, courage and valour. (7)

When Sita saw this form of Hanuman, she became reassured; her mind and heart now had faith on the truthfulness of what he had said to her. She no more had any trace of doubts lingering in her.

Soon after that, the son of the wind-god (“pavanasuta”; Hanuman) reverted back to his diminutive form². (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 30.

²Hanuman showed his colossal form for a few minutes, just enough to satisfy Sita. He quickly became small in size, because he wished not to be detected before he would so wish. But this momentary sight reassured Sita that the monkeys and bears were indeed good matches for the demons; rather they surpassed their adversaries by many notches.

The use of the epithet ‘son of the wind-god’ is significant here: the air or the wind is so subtle and invisible that it can enter the smallest crevice easily, even without anyone noticing it. Even light can do so, but there is a big difference between the two. Light would travel only in a straight line, and if the cavern makes a bend, the path of the light would be blocked. But it is not so with the air, or the wind; it would enter at one end of the long corridor, flow through its bends and curves, highs and lows, and make its presence felt at the other end which is at a complete different angle or plane from the point of its entrance. To wit, air has maneuverability and flexibility that other elements of Nature lack, for neither the earth, nor the fire or the water can have it; as the ‘earth’ is fettered by its weight and gravity, the ‘fire’ would lose its heat with distance, and ‘water’ would dry up and evaporate if it has to flow long distances.

Besides this, only the ‘air’ can move about in an invisible form; earth, fire and water can’t remain hidden from sight for long.

To wit, Hanuman, being the ‘son of the wind-god’, had certain singular qualities that no one else possessed, and one such quality was his ability to get in and out without being visibly noticed, and the other was to expand to any size he wished, for his ‘parent’, the wind, can expand to fill the whole space of the sky or limit itself to a small balloon, not to mention of course the powerful force that the ‘wind’ inherently possesses, a force that can cause trees to topple, huge waves to rise in the ocean, and raise dust storms in a desert that obscure the sun.]

दो०. सुनु माता साखामृग नहिं बल बुद्धि बिसाल ।
प्रभु प्रताप तें गरुड़हि खाड़ परम लघु ब्याल ॥ १६ ॥

dōhā.

sunu mātā sākhāmṛga nahim bala bud'dhi bisāla.
prabhu pratāpa tēm garuṛahi khā'i parama laghu byāla. 16.

Hanuman said to Sita, ‘Listen mother! Those who dwell on the branches of trees (“sākhāmṛga”; here referring to the Kapis, the monkeys) do not have any commendable strength or wisdom of their own, but it doesn’t really matter for even a small snake can devour Garud (who is Lord Vishnu’s mount and famed as the eater of serpents, for whom serpents are like fodder) by the grace of the Lord (Sri Ram)¹’.

[To wit, impossible things become possible if the Lord God so wishes. So don’t you worry; for even if the Kapis are weaker in strength and power than the demons, yet if Lord Ram would so wish then the same Kapis would trounce the demons without hesitation, without doubt. So, have faith.] (Doha no. 16)

[Note—¹In this verse, Hanuman shows his humility and devotion for his Lord, Sri Ram. He credits all achievements, of his present efforts as well as all the future successes of his compatriots in the war that is shortly to commence, on the glory and grace of Lord Ram.

He also addresses Sita’s reservations expressed by her in verse nos. 6-7 herein above. Sita need not worry at all; even if what she says were to be true, that the Kapis are no match for the demons, yet she has forgotten about one factor—about the divinity, the glory and the majestic powers that Lord Ram possesses.

If the king is powerful and strong, and his army committed and devoted to him, and this is aided by the fact that the cause and objective for which the war is fought is righteous, noble and honourable, then the victory will surely be theirs; there is no doubt about it.]

चौ०. मन संतोष सुनत कपि बानी । भगति प्रताप तेज बल सानी ॥ १ ॥
आसिष दीन्हि रामप्रिय जाना । होहु तात बल सील निधाना ॥ २ ॥
अजर अमर गुननिधि सुत होहू । करहुँ बहुत रघुनायक छोहू ॥ ३ ॥

करहुँ कृपा प्रभु अस सुनि काना । निर्भर प्रेम मगन हनुमाना ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

mana santōṣa sunata kapi bānī. bhagati pratāpa tēja bala sānī. 1.
āsiṣa dīnhi rāmapriya jānā. hōhu tāta bala sīla nidhānā. 2.
ajara amara gunanidhi suta hōhū. karahum̃ bahuta raghunāyaka chōhū. 3 karahum̃ krpā prabhu asa suni kānā. nirbhara prēma magana hanumānā. 4.

When Sita heard Kapi's (Hanuman's) words imbued with the glorious virtues of devotion, valour, dynamism, self-confidence, courage and strength, she was extremely glad and felt very contented in her heart and mind ("mana santōṣa")¹. (1)

Sita's heart overflowed with gratitude and love for him as she realized that Hanuman was very dear to Lord Ram, and his favourite. Blessing him profusely from the innermost recesses of her heart, she said, 'My dear son (tāta)! May you become an abode of strength, courage and valour; may you be a repository of all the glorious and excellent virtues there are (bala sīla nidhānā)! (2)

My son (suta)! May you ever remain immune to the decay that the body suffers from due to the aging process; may you become immortal; may you be a treasury of all the excellent virtues and the best of qualities that exist in this world! And to crown these blessings, may Lord Ram (raghunāyaka) always be exceptionally gracious and most kind upon you.' (3)

When Hanuman heard with his ears the last blessing of Sita, viz. "may Lord Ram always be gracious and kind upon you", he was so overwhelmed with gratitude, with emotions of love and affection surging in his heart, that for some time he lost awareness of his own self². (4)

[Note—¹Hanuman's words were a moment of epiphany for Sita; she realized that he was truly devoted to Lord Ram, was totally committed to him, and was determined to serve the Lord most diligently, faithfully and sincerely, to the best of his ability.

We have read in previous verses how Hanuman had assured Sita that her sufferings would soon end, that Lord Ram remembers her, grieves for her, and loves her twice as much as she loves him. He had also reminded her of the Lord's majesty, exceptional glories, astounding strength and dynamic powers, reassuring her that her tormentors, the evil demons, would be reduced to ashes by the fire-spewing arrows of Lord Ram which would burn them just like flies are burnt when they swarm around the flames of a raging fire; it would be such a fantastic feat that would be remembered and sung by sages, minstrels and bards for generations after generations to come. Hanuman had also told Sita that he was a devoted servant of Lord Ram, and though he was capable to take her back immediately yet he desists from doing so as it would violate the orders of the Lord, as he had told him just to go and find about her. All these things hint at the virtues listed here for Hanuman—devotion, glory, valour, self-confidence, strength and courage. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 16.}

²We have read earlier that when Sita heard that Lord Ram remembers her and loves her much, she too was overwhelmed with joy and gratitude, and had become so emotional that for some moments she had lost awareness of her own body like the way Hanuman felt when Sita blessed him that he would eternally be in the gracious looks of the Lord. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 15.}}

बार बार नाएसि पद सीसा । बोला बचन जोरि कर कीसा ॥ ५ ॥
अब कृतकृत्य भयउँ मैं माता । आसिष तव अमोघ बिख्याता ॥ ६ ॥ bāra bāra nā'ēsi pada sīsā. bōlā bacana jōri kara kīsā. 5.

aba kṛtakṛtya bhaya'um̐ mair̐ mātā. āsiṣa tava amōgha bikhyātā. 6.

The Kapi (“kīsā”; Hanuman) bowed his head repeatedly at the feet of Sita, and clasping his hands in supplication and humility, he said --- (5)

‘Oh mother (mātā)! I am fully contented and fulfilled; I have accomplished all that is to be accomplished; I am exceptionally grateful and obliged to you (kṛtakṛtya)—for in all sooth and without gainsay, it is known throughout the world that your blessings are infallible and inviolable. [Indeed, I am so fortunate; I am lucky as no one has ever been.] (6)

सुनुहु मातु मोहि अतिसय भूखा । लागि देखि सुंदर फल रूखा ॥ ७ ॥
सुनु सुत करहिं बिपिन रखवारी । परम सुभट रजनीचर भारी ॥ ८ ॥
तिन्ह कर भय माता मोहि नाहीं । जौं तुम्ह सुख मानहु मन माहीं ॥ ९ ॥ sunahu mātu mōhi atisaya bhūkhā. lāgi dēkhi sundara phala rūkhā. 7.

sunu suta karahim̐ bipina rakhavārī. parama subhaṭa rajanīcara bhārī. 8.
tinha kara bhaya mātā mōhi nāhīm̐. jaum̐ tumha sukha mānahu mana māhīm̐. 9.

Listen mother, I am feeling very hungry, and my hunger is particularly stoked by the sight of beautiful raw-and-ripe fruits (sundara phala rūkhā) that I perceive on the trees that are in abundance in this garden.

[To wit, had there been no fruit-trees around this place, perhaps my hunger would have remained forgotten by me as I have a lot of work to do. But I can't help; the sight and the smell of this ripe succulent fruits have ignited my appetite which is now gnawing at my stomach, which seems to be empty; I am starving, and can't wait any longer to eat. So mother, if I have your permission, can I eat?]¹ (7)

Sita replied, ‘Listen son. This garden is being protected by exceptionally strong and bold demon guards. [So it is fraught with grave danger to openly eat fruits from the trees here. I don't want to put you to any unwarranted risks; so I am not sure whether I should agree with your request.]’ (8)

[When Sita expressed her reservations, Hanuman assured her that if she is pleased by his eating fruits from the trees, then she should not worry about anything else because he is competent to tackle all other matters.]

Hanuman said, ‘Mother, if you are pleased and feel happy in your heart by allowing me to eat fruits from these trees, then be rest assured that I have no fear from these demon warriors who guard the garden. [To hell with them; I don’t bother a dime about these demon guards as long as you have no objection to my eating these fruits.]’ (9)

[Note—¹It is a common observation that when a person has to do some important work he loses his appetite till the time that work is not finished, but as soon as the work is completed he suddenly feels very hungry. So was also the case with Hanuman—his mission was successful, for he had found Sita, had talked with her, had given Lord Ram’s ring to her, and had also assured her that soon the Lord would come to free her. He was now set to return home when he saw the beautiful fruit trees. This suddenly made him feel hungry, and so he sought Sita’s permission to eat.]

दो०. देखि बुद्धि बल निपुन कपि कहेउ जानकीं जाहु । रघुपति चरन हृदयँ धरि तात मधुर फल खाहु ॥ १७ ॥

dōhā.

dēkhi bud'dhi bala nipuna kapi kahē'u jānakīm jāhu.
raghupati carana hr̥dayam̐ dhari tāta madhura phala khāhu. 17.

Perceiving that the Kapi (Hanuman) was very wise, intelligent, prudent and adroit, as well as able, strong and valiant, Janki (Sita) gave him her assent, granting him permission to eat fruits to satisfy his hunger. She said, ‘Go my son; after invoking the holy feet of Lord Ram and enshrining them in your heart, eat as many sweet and succulent fruits as is your desire. (Doha no. 17)

[Note—Sita has put only one condition for Hanuman—which is to remember Lord Ram and fix his attention on the holy feet of the Lord while he eats as many fruits as he wants. This means that as long as Hanuman remembers the holy feet of the Lord, as long as he keeps in mind that the Lord is his guardian and protector, no harm can ever come to him; it is a veritable shield that would protect him.

A devotee should take a hint from this advice of Sita—that if he remembers Lord Ram, and always keeps in his mind that the Lord is his greatest protector and a benevolent guardian, then he would be rest assured that no harm whatever can come to him.

Earlier, in Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 17 herein above, we come across a similar idea concerning the excellent qualities of Hanuman.]

चौ०. चलेउ नाइ सिरु पैठेउ बागा । फल खाएसि तरु तोरैं लागा ॥ १ ॥
रहे तहाँ बहु भट रखवारे । कछु मारेसि कछु जाइ पुकारे ॥ २ ॥
नाथ एक आवा कपि भारी । तेहिँ असोक बाटिका उजारी ॥ ३ ॥

खाणसि फल अरु बिटप उपारे । रच्छक मर्दि मर्दि महि डारे ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

calē'u nā'i siru paiṭhē'u bāgā. phala khā'ēsi taru tōraim lāgā. 1.
rahē tahām̃ bahu bhaṭa rakhavārē. kachu mārēsi kachu jā'i pukārē. 2.
nātha ēka āvā kapi bhārī. tēhim̃ asōka bāṭikā ujārī. 3.
khā'ēsi phala aru biṭapa upārē. racchaka mardi mardi mahi ḍārē. 4.

After receiving Sita's permission, Hanuman bowed his head at her feet and proceeded quietly towards the part of the garden which was rich with fruit trees. Once there, he started eating fruits at random, nibbling a little of one and biting a piece of another, all the while breaking trees and their branches (by violently shaking them). (1)

There were numerous guards to protect the garden; some of them were thrashed by Hanuman, others were killed by him, and some who managed to escape took to flight, running to inform their king Ravana about the violent intruder and havoc that he had unleashed in the royal garden¹. (2)

They cried out, 'Oh Lord, a huge monkey has come from somewhere, and he has laid the Ahoka grove to waste. (3)

He is eating fruits (and throwing them all over), uprooting trees, and breaking their branches. As for the guards, he has thrashed all of them mercilessly; some are lying wounded and some dead on the ground.

[The situation the Ashok garden is extremely explosive, and never ever in our lives have we experienced anything of this sort. The garden is ruined, its guards dead or wounded, and the intruder is running amok in it, without anyone being able to stop him. There is complete mayhem and havoc in the garden; virtually all our guards have been massacred; we somehow managed to flee with our lives to inform you, otherwise we were also as good as dead.]' (4)

[Note—¹As soon as Hanuman went on the rampage in the orchard full of ripe and succulent trees, a place that was well planned and laid out as it was Ravana's private garden-of-pleasure, the demon soldiers guarding it panicked as they were caught totally unawares by the unexpected and sudden assault; they were on the back-foot right from the start even as Hanuman mercilessly beat them, resulting in some suffering from severe wounds, and some dying in the mayhem that followed. Feeling out-manuevered and overrun by him, they ran helter-skelter in complete disarray like a defeated army retreating in great haste to escape the wrath of the victorious enemy in hot pursuit, or like dry leaves scattering during a severe storm.

Why did Hanuman ruin Ravana's precious garden? One reason is that he was seething with anger from the time he first saw Sita in a sorry state, and then when he heard Ravana threatening her with dire consequences, even warning to kill her at the end of one month, the fire of his anger was fuelled further. So therefore he wanted to teach Ravana a bitter lesson. The other reason is that he wanted to see how the demon army worked, how prepared it was, what its weapons were, and get an idea of the morale of its soldiers. The third reason is that he wanted to have a personal interview with Ravana so as to judge him, to see him from close quarters, and try to understand his mind and intentions; this would also give him an opportunity to become acquainted with his chief courtiers, so that he can recognize them by face later on. The fourth reason was that he wished to see the city of Lanka as well as the royal court of Ravana by the day light in order see the details of the place's general lay out and topography, and to get an idea of the position of its defenses and population. And the fifth and the most important reason was to break the morale and the courage of the demons, to instill fear in their hearts and terror in their minds, by single-handedly crushing the demon warriors who protected the royal garden, beating and killing them ruthlessly, and devastating the garden itself.

Not only this, more insult and humiliation of the demons were waiting for them, for soon we shall read that Hanuman set the city of Lanka on fire, a raging fire that ravaged the whole city and reduced it to cinders so much so that the famed 'gilded city of Lanka', that was once the envy of heaven, was turned into an eerie and ghostly place of smouldering, blackened and burnt out structures. If any residual pride and esteem was still left in Ravana after the destruction of his favourite garden, then surely it was reduced to dust when his cherished golden city of Lanka was burnt down right before his nose, without his being able to either stop or capture the perpetrator of this large scale devastation.]

सुनि रावन पठए भट नाना । तिन्हहि देखि गर्जेउ हनुमाना ॥ ५ ॥
 सब रजनीचर कपि संघारे । गए पुकारत कछु अधमारे ॥ ६ ॥
 पुनि पठयउ तेहिं अच्छकुमारा । चला संग लै सुभट अपारा ॥ ७ ॥ आवत देखि बिटप गहि तर्जा । ताहि निपाति महाधुनि गर्जा ॥ ८ ॥

suni rāvana paṭha'e bhaṭa nānā. tinhahi dēkhi garjē'u hanumānā. 5.
 saba rajanīcara kapi saṅghārē. ga'e pukārata kachu adhamārē. 6.
 puni paṭhaya'u tēhiṁ acchakumārā. calā saṅga lai subhaṭa apārā. 7.
 āvata dēkhi biṭapa gahi tarjā. tāhi nipāti mahādhuni garjā. 8.

When Ravana heard of the devastation caused by Hanuman, as reported by the guards, he immediately dispatched innumerable demon warriors to the site (to restore order and capture the intruder). However, when Hanuman saw them, he roared aloud (as if to challenge them, and show his utter contempt towards them). (5)

The Kapi (Hanuman) slayed almost all of the demons; the few who somehow managed to escape death, though they were thrashed viciously black-and-blue, ran back with their lives, yelling and pleading in terror.

[To wit, the demons were beaten so ferociously by Hanuman that they were left more dead than alive. The few demon warriors who survived the slaughter ran back in panic to the court of Ravana, limping and staggering, some dumb out of fear and others howling in horror, to report to him of the complete rout of the army.] (6)

Then he (Ravana) sent (his son) Akshayakumar. He proceeded to the site of the confrontation (i.e. the Ashok garden) with a detachment of his crack troops. (7)

As soon as he (Hanuman) saw him (Akshayakumar) approach, he uprooted a huge tree and held it in his hands to threaten him; he then hit the latter (Akshayakumar) so hard with this tree that he fell down dead (with a single blow). Then Hanuman yelled and roared thunderously¹. (8)

[Note—¹After killing Akshayakumar with the blow of the tree, Hanuaman roared in victory. It ought to be noted that Akshayakumar was the first member of the Ravana's family who has died. Obviously his death not only alarmed Ravana but also made him seethe with anger, determined to take revenge.]

दो०. कछु मारेसि कछु मर्देसि कछु मिलएसि धरि धूरि । कछु पुनि जाइ पुकारे प्रभु मर्कट बल भूरि ॥ १८ ॥

dōhā.

kachu mārēsi kachu mardēsi kachu mila'ēsi dhari dhūri.
kachu puni jā'i pukārē prabhu markāṭa bala bhūri. 18.

Out of the demon warriors who had come with Akshayakumar, some were killed, some crushed and smothered, some were caught and stomped underfoot in dust, and some who survived this mayhem and slaughter ran back in panic to plead urgently with Ravana, 'Alack oh Lord, this intruding monkey is terror personified; he seems to be too strong and invincible for us.'¹ (Doha no. 18)

[Note--¹The demon warriors told Ravana that Hanuman had unleashed complete havoc and created utter chaos all over in the royal garden. When Ravana observed the severely wounded demons who were trembling in horror and had fear writ all over their faces, all drenched in blood and somehow just able to breathe and stand on their feet as they were more dead than alive, so when they made no mention of Akshayakumar, Ravana had a hunch that his son was dead, though of course none of the demons had the courage to mention this bad tidings in explicit terms as they feared inviting Ravana's fiery anger and instant punishment, most certainly which would be death.]

चौ०. सुनि सुत बध लंकेस रिसाना । पठएसि मेघनाद बलवाना ॥ १ ॥
मारसि जनि सुत बाँधेसु ताही । देखिअ कपिहि कहाँ कर आही ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

suni suta badha laṅkēsa risānā. paṭha'ēsi mēghanāda balavānā. 1.
māraṣi jani suta bāṁdhēsu tāhī. dēkhi'a kapihi kahām' kara āhī. 2.

When the king of Lanka ("laṅkēsa"; Ravana) heard of the death of his son (Akshayakumar)¹, he got furious; he then sent Meghanad² (his other son), who was extremely strong and powerful (to take revenge). (1)

Ravana instructed him—'Son, don't kill the intruder; just tie him up and bring him here. Let us see who this Kapi (monkey) is, and from whither has he come.'² (2)

[Note—¹The demon warriors who came to report to Ravana had only told him that “the monkey is extremely powerful”: refer Doha no. 18 herein above. But they did not have the guts to clearly tell him that Akshayakumar was also dead as they feared that the demon who would dare to utter this bad news would be singled out to become the object of Ravana’s severe wrath. But Ravana was an intelligent king, and so he could easily guess that his son was no longer alive; for had he been alive these reporters would have told Ravana that his son was safe and has sent such and such urgent message from the battle front, for instance seeking reinforcements. From their terrified countenance and panicky demeanours Ravana could easily deduce that things had gone real nasty on the ground, and that his son Akshayakumar was no more.

²Meghnad was so-called because he could roar as loud as the clap of thunder. “Megha” = cloud, especially rain-bearing clouds that produce lightening and thunder; “Naad” = a loud reverberating noise.

He is also called ‘Indrajeet’ or the one who had conquered Indra, the king of Gods. This relates to the event when he had defeated Indra in a battle to free his father Ravana from his captivity. This story is narrated in Anand Ramayan (of Valmiki), Saar Kand (Chapter 1), Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 78-82.

Why did Ravana decide to take the risk of putting his other son Meghnad to danger even after learning of the ferocity of Hanuman? It was because he was convinced of Meghnad’s strength, powers and abilities. It was Meghnad who had freed him from the captivity of Indra, the king of Gods, which was surely not an easy task. In Valmiki Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 48, verse no. 6, Ravana praises Meghnad as follows: “Oh son. You are like me in the powers derived by Tapa (doing penances and austerities), in the physical strength of the body, in valour and courage, in skill with weapons and force of arms, and in the art of warfare. When I feel myself in danger in the battle-field, then at that time as soon as I remember you I feel encouraged and reassured of victory; all my worries and distresses vanish.’

Ravana was absolutely convinced that Meghnad could capture anyone he wishes, even the mighty gods are no match against him: refer—Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 182.

Another interesting thing is that amongst all the demon warriors, it was only Meghnad who could roar loudly and deafeningly like the clap of thunder. The soldiers who had come back to report of the devastation caused by Hanuman and about his powers must have also reported that the latter roars thunderously like a giant. So therefore, Ravana thought he should send someone who can also roar equally thunderously and was equally powerful and strong so as to show the intruder that he has his match in Lanka. And the only one demon warrior Ravana could think of who could challenge Hanuman was Meghnad.

Why did Ravana ordered Meghnad not to kill the intruder but only tie him up and bring him to the court? Obviously it is because Ravana wished to learn more about the lord or the master on whose orders Hanuman had come to Lanka; if he was killed then no further information would be available about the principle enemy. If the intruder is caught alive then certainly a lot of information can be extracted from him about the enemy, and consequently defenses can be fine tuned and offensive strategy can be formulated in case there is an actual confrontation.]

चला इंद्रजित अतुलित जोधा । बंधु निधन सुनि उपजा क्रोधा ॥ ३ ॥

कपि देखा दारुन भट आवा । कटकटाइ गर्जा अरु धावा ॥ ४ ॥

calā indrajita atulita jōdhā. bandhu nidhana suni upajā krōdhā. 3.
kapi dēkhā dārūna bhaṭa āvā. kaṭakaṭā'i garjā aru dhāvā. 4.

The great warrior (Meghanad) who was peerless in strength and valour, and who once had even vanquished Indra, the king of the gods, proceeded very angrily to face Hanuman when he learnt that his brother (Akshayakumar) had been killed. (3)

When the Kapi (Hanuman) observed that a mighty warrior is approaching him menacingly, he too became angry, and he dashed forward immediately¹, gnashing his teeth violently and roaring thunderously. (4)

[Note—¹This shows that Hanuman did not hesitate even for a moment when he saw Meghnad coming to confront him. It proves that Hanuman was bold and fearless; he was very confident of his own abilities, and was sure that no harm could ever come to him due to the grace of Lord Ram.]

अति बिसाल तरु एक उपारा । बिरथ कीन्ह लंकेस कुमारा ॥ ५ ॥
रहे महाभट ताके संगी । गहि गहि कपि मर्दइ निज अंगा ॥ ६ ॥
तिन्हि निपाति ताहि सन बाजा । भिरे जुगल मानहुँ गजराजा ॥ ७ ॥
मुठिका मारि चढ़ा तरु जाई । ताहि एक छन मुरुछा आई ॥ ८ ॥ उठि बहोरि कीन्हिसि बहु माया । जीति न जाइ प्रभंजन जाया ॥ ९ ॥ ati bisāla taru ēka upārā. biratha kīnha laṅkēsa kumārā. 5.

rahē mahābhaṭa tākē saṅgā. gahi gahi kapi marda'i nija aṅgā. 6.
tinahi nipāti tāhi sana bājā. bhirē jugala mānahum' gajarājā. 7.
muṭhikā māri caṛhā taru jā'ī. tāhi ēka chana muruchā ā'ī. 8.
uṭhi bahōri kīnhisi bahu māyā. jīti na jā'i prabhanjāna jāyā. 9.

He (Hanuman) uprooted a huge tree and slammed the Prince of Lanka (Meghnad) with it, as a result of which the latter fell down from his chariot. (5)

All the great demon warriors who had accompanied the prince were seized by Hanuman one by one, who thrashed them ferociously and then squashed them against his body, reducing them to a pulp. (6)

After decimating the demon warriors, he (Hanuman) engaged the prince (Meghnad) in a duel—the sight of the two mighty warriors engaged in close hand-to-hand combat gave the impression of two great elephants angrily entangled with each other. (7)

Then Hanuman hit Meghand fiercely with his fist, and then jumped onto a tree; this punch left the latter reeling, and he fainted for a moment. (8)

When he (Meghnad) regained his consciousness, he employed many tricks of delusive nature (i.e. many magical charms in which he was an expert)¹, but no matter how hard

he tried the son of the wind god (“prabhanjāna jāyā”; Hanuman) could not be subdued by him. (9)

[Note—¹The fistful that Meghnad suffered from Hanuman was too much for him. He was so rattled by it that he decided that he should best avoid a direct confrontation with his enemy, and so he engaged in an indirect attack on Hanuman by employing certain magical tricks in which he was an expert. Yet, inspite of all his maneuverings and deceptions, Meghnad could not overcome Hanuman who always outwitted him.]

दो०. ब्रह्म अङ्ग तेहिं साँधा कपि मन कीन्ह बिचार । जौं न ब्रह्मसर मानउँ महिमा मिटइ अपार ॥ १९ ॥

dōhā.

brahma astra tēhiṁ sām̐dhā kapi mana kīnha bicāra.
jauṁ na brahmasara māna'um̐ mahimā miṭa'i apāra. 19.

Frustrated and peeved, Meghnad at last aimed the infallible weapon known as ‘Brahma Astra¹’ at the Kapi (Hanuman).

At this, Hanuman thought within himself, ‘If I do not yield to this weapon then it would undermine the authority and the glory of the creator Brahma as this weapon is sanctified and empowered by invoking Brahma’s name.

[To wit therefore, I must submit myself to it, though if I wish I can easily defy it. But if I nullify this weapon of Brahma like I have been neutralizing all other weapons used by Meghnad, it will set a bad precedent, and it would be tantamount to insulting the authority and the powers of the Creator, which I must not do at all. Hence, it is proper for me to submit voluntarily before this weapon to show respect to Brahma. Besides, this will give me an opportunity to come face to face with Ravana in his court; it will help me to see many other things, such as the way he and his court function. It will also help me to get a direct idea of his army, its strengths and weapons, as it is sure that I will have to ultimately face them when I decide to free myself from this snare. So actually this Brahma’s weapon is a god-sent opportunity for me to make more investigations about the demon army and its preparedness.]’ (Doha no. 19)

[Note—¹Brahma-Astra is like an arrow or a missile. It is literally a weapon that cannot fail as it is used by invoking the powers of the creator Brahma.]

चौ०. ब्रह्मबान कपि कहँ तेहिं मारा । परतिहँ बार कटकु संघारा ॥ १ ॥
तेहिं देखा कपि मुरुछित भयऊ । नागपास बाँधेसि लै गयऊ ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

brahmabāna kapi kahum̐ tēhiṁ mārā. paratihum̐ bāra kaṭaku saṅghārā. 1.
tēhiṁ dēkhā kapi muruchita bhaya'ū. nāgapāsa bām̐dhēsi lai gaya'ū. 2.

He (Meghnad) finally shot the Kapi (Hanuman) with Brahma's arrow (or the arrow empowered by invoking Brahma's powers; "brahmabāna"). Even as he fell, Hanuman slayed as many demon warriors as he could lay his hands on. (1)

When he (Meghnad) saw that the Kapi was unconscious, he (gathered courage to go near him and)¹ tied the latter in a snare consisting of snakes (nāgapāsa)² and then took him as a captive (to the court of Ravana). (2)

[Note—¹Meghnad was so terrified of Hanuman that he could not gather courage to approach him till he was certain that the latter was unconscious.

Once when Meghnad had taken Indra as a captive, the creator Brahma had gone to plead for his freedom, and at that time he had given his own weapon, known as 'Brahma Astra', to Meghnad in return of Indra's freedom.

The 'Naag-pash' or the serpent-snare was given to Meghnad by Varun, the god of water.]

जासु नाम जपि सुनहु भवानी । भव बंधन काटहिं नर ग्यानी ॥ ३ ॥

तासु दूत कि बंध तरु आवा । प्रभु कारज लागि कपिहिं बंधावा ॥ ४ ॥ jāsu nāma japi sunahu bhavānī. bhava bandhana kāṭahim nara gyānī. 3.

tāsu dūta ki bandha taru āvā. prabhu kāraja lagi kapihim bamdhāvā. 4.

Expressing his amazement at this singular event, as well as to explain it, Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this magnificent story, told his consort Parvati, who is also known as Bhavani, 'Listen Bhavani. The Lord (i.e. Sri Ram), by repeating whose holy name wise men are able to cut through the formidable snare represented by the cycle of transmigration, and thereby attain freedom from all misery [3]—is it ever possible that the messenger of the same Lord can be captured by any kind of worldly snare? No, it is impossible; it is only for the purpose of serving the Lord's cause that the Kapi (Hanuman) had voluntarily allowed himself to be caught in this 'serpent-snare' [4]'. (3-4)

[Note—As we have already read in Doha no. 19 herein above, Hanuman decided to surrender himself before Brahma's weapon voluntarily so as to maintain its sanctity.

But what about the 'Naag-pash'? We shall read soon that Hanuman freed himself easily from this serpent-snare at the right moment when he decided to do so; he simply reduced the size of his body, which helped to loosen the grip of the snare from which he set himself free by slithering out of it—refer: Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 25.

But till that time arrived he decided to remain ensnared. It helped him to go to Ravana's court unopposed; it helped him to have sneak view of the city as he was being taken to the court through its streets, as well as the entrances to the royal palaces of Ravana while he passed through them; it helped him see the general populace of Lanka and judge its mood; it helped him to see the ministers and the commanders of the demon army who gathered in the court to attend the spectacle of his interview with Ravana. All this would go to serve the interest of the Lord's army when the assault will finally be launched, and help the Lord and his commanders to plan their war strategy.

Hanuman had received a number of boons from different Gods during his early childhood; these are enumerated in Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto 36. Amongst these boons were two that are relevant here—the one granted by the creator Brahma, and the other by Varun, the god of water.

Brahma had blessed Hanuman that none of his weapons, called the Brahma Astra, would ever be able to kill him (refer: Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto 36, verse no. 21); and Varun had blessed him that he would be immune to his snare, known as the Naag Pash, as well as any harm that may come from the water element (refer: Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto 36, verse no. 15).

This is the reason why Hanuman had no fear of the mighty ocean while crossing it, and neither was he even worried when Meghnad shot the Brahma-Astra at him nor when he was tied by the Naag-Pash—because he knew that he was immune to their harmful effects.

So it means that when Meghnad hit Hanuman with the Brahma-Astra, the latter only feigned fainting as a gesture of surrender to the might of Brahma's weapon and to show honour and respect to the Creator. Similar was the case with the Naag-Pash; Hanuman simply wanted to show respect to Varun, the god of water, by pretending to be tied with this snare. As we have observed earlier, it was a strategic move by him so that he can find more details about Lanka, about Ravana and his ministers, and about the demon army and its commanders.

Now therefore, we come to another interesting conclusion here that would answer the question 'how did Meghnad carry Hanuman to Ravana's court? After Meghnad succeeded in subduing Hanuman with the Brahma-Astra and then tying him up with the Naag-Pash, he did not have to carry Hanuman to Ravana's court on a stretcher or a hammock or by any other means that are usually employed to carry unconscious persons, for Hanuman was fully conscious and could easily walk along on his two legs like a captive tied in ropes and being led to the king. As he and his captors wound their way through the streets of Lanka, a huge crowd of excited and curious demon burghers collected and followed them, as it was a spectacle never witnessed earlier. Hanuman was teased and jeered at; he was pushed and shoved; but he kept his cool for the time being, deciding that he would punish his tormentors when the right time came. And so it was that he decided to burn Lanka later on as a severe punishment for its rude, impolite and irreverent inhabitants.

The terror that Hanuman had struck in the psyche of the demons was so severe indeed that later on when Angad, whom we would recognize as being the prince of the monkeys and the commander of the little group to which Hanuman belonged and was sent in the south direction in search of Sita, was sent by Lord Ram as his emissary to the court of Ravana before the war commenced in an attempt to make truce and avoid a bloody war, there was panic in the city as soon as Angad reached there. He was shown respect by the demon citizens; every demon whom he met was too willing to oblige him by showing him the way to Ravana's palace; no one dared to joke at him or report to the demon army about his arrival. We shall read about it in due course. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 19.}]

कपि बंधन सुनि निसिचर धाए । कौतुक लागि सभाँ सब आए ॥ ५ ॥

दसमुख सभा दीखि कपि जाई । कहि न जाइ कछु अति प्रभुताई ॥ ६ ॥

कर जोरें सुर दिसिप बिनीता । भृकुटि बिलोकत सकल सभिता ॥ ७ ॥

देखि प्रताप न कपि मन संका । जिमि अहिगन महुँ गरुड़ असंका ॥ ८ ॥ kapi bandhana suni nisicara dhā'ē. kautuka lāgi sabhām' saba ā'ē. 5.

dasamukha sabhā dīkhi kapi jā'ī. kahi na jā'i kachu ati prabhutā'ī. 6.
kara jōrēm sura disipa binītā. bhṛkuṭi bilōkata sakala sabhītā. 7.
dēkhi pratāpa na kapi mana saṅkā. jimi ahigana mahum' garuṛa asaṅkā. 8.

When the demons heard that the ferocious Kapi (Hanuman) had been subdued and tied¹, everyone dashed forward with great curiosity to watch the spectacle, and a huge crowd collected in the royal court of Ravana. (5)

The Kapi saw the royal court of the ten-headed Ravana; he was amazed at its magnificence and glory, for it was so great and fascinating that it cannot be described in words. [To wit, Hanuman was exceedingly charmed by the sight of Ravana's majesty and opulence; he had never seen such a sight earlier, so he was lost for words.] (6)

[And what did he behold?] He observed that the great gods and the many custodians of the different directions (sura disipa) were all politely standing in attention and in a submissive way with clasped hands before Ravana; they were anxiously watching his eyebrows (or face) in order to perceive his subtle emotions, to judge whether Ravana is favourable towards them or not. (7)

In spite of witnessing such a show of majesty, power and authority on the part of Ravana, there was no trace of disturbance, fear or apprehension in the Kapi (Hanuman); it was like the case of Garud (the king of birds) remaining fearless in the midst of serpents². [To wit, just like Garud has no fear from serpents because the former can easily gobble up the latter, Hanuman too remain unmoved by the sight of so many ferocious demons around him. The presence of Ravana had instilled fear in the hearts of gods and demi-gods, but Hanuman was unbothered.] (8)

[Note—¹The demons had been so terrified that they had remained hidden while Hanuman had gone on the rampage in the Ashok garden, killing and wounding a large number of demon soldiers. The terror became more marked after the killing of Akshayakumar; and it was further aggravated when Hanuman had fiercely beaten Meghnad, and made him faint and fall from his chariot. Now when this ferocious intruder was captured and tied, the demon citizens came out of hiding and rushed to the site to watch the drama unfold.

²Garud, the king of birds, is the legendary mount of Lord Vishnu; he is said to be an eternal enemy of the serpents upon whom he feeds. So Garud is not at all afraid of the serpents; the serpents on the contrary are terrified of him.

Similarly, Hanuman was not at all afraid of either Ravana or any other demon warriors; rather it were the demons who were sore affright of him.]

दो०. कपिहि बिलोकि दसानन बिहसा कहि दुर्बाद ।

सुत बध सुरति कीन्हि पुनि उपजा हृदयँ बिषाद ॥ २० ॥

dōhā.

kapihi bilōki dasānana bihasā kahi durbāda.
suta badha surati kīnhi puni upajā hṛdayam^ṃ biṣāda. 20.

When the ten-headed Ravana saw the Kapi (Hanuman), he laughed aloud and said many insulting things. But soon he became sober and his heart turned gloomy when he remembered the death of his son (Akshayakumar). (Doha no. 20)

[Note—In the beginning Ravana made a lot of fun of Hanuman; but he soon realised that it was the same Hanuman who had killed his own son Akshayakumar. As we have read, a huge crowd had gathered in the court to observe the proceedings. So Ravana immediately realised his folly—he was joking at the strength and ability of the captive now that the latter was tied up in the Naag-Pash, forgetting that this same captive had a little while ago killed Akshayakumar, the prince of Lanka. It made Ravana look ridiculous in the eyes of his subjects. He was laughing and cracking nasty jokes instead of showing anger at the killer of his son.

Hence, Ravana immediately changed tack and corrected himself; instead of laughing and joking at Hanuman he developed a somber and serious mood.]

चौ०. कह लंकेस कवन तैं कीसा । केहि कें बल घालेहि बन खीसा ॥ १ ॥
की धौं श्रवन सुनेहि नहिं मोही । देखउँ अति असंक सठ तोही ॥ २ ॥
मारे निसिचर केहिं अपराधा । कहु सठ तोहि न प्रान कइ बाधा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kaha laṅkēsa kavana taim kīsā. kēhi kēm bala ghālēhi bana khīsā. 1.
kī dhaum^ṃ śravana sunēhi nahim^ṃ mōhī. dēkha'um^ṃ ati asaṅka saṭha tōhī. 2.
mārē niscara kēhim^ṃ aparādhā. kahu saṭha tōhi na prāna ka'i bādha. 3.

The king of Lanka (Ravana) asked Hanuman angrily, 'Say Kapi, who art thou, and on whose strength have thee laid the garden to ruin? [To wit, from whence have thee come, and on whose instructions have thou destroyed my magnificent grove; tell me who art thou.]¹ (1)

Oh thy wicked fellow! Have thou never heard of my name? I observe thee to be exceptionally bold and fearless. [To wit, my name is sufficient to send shivers down the spine of the bravest of warriors, and the boldest of creatures tremble in their knees when they hear of mine name. But I find that thou art haughtily standing before me; how is it ever possible?] (2)

For what crime have thee killed the demons², thou wretch? Aren't thou afraid of thy life?' (3)

[Note—¹This question clearly proves that Lankini, the female demon guard who first encountered Hanuman at the gate of the fort when he was trying to get into the city at night, and who had suffered severely when Hanuman hit her hard with his closed fist, making her bleed in the nose, had decided to keep mum, and had not reported the intrusion to her seniors. The reason she gave at the time was her premonition of the impending elimination of the demon race led by Ravana as it was prophesized by the creator Brahma that when she is hit so hard by someone that she virtually faints then she must realize that the end of the demons was near. So Lankini had blessed Hanuman with success instead of reporting about him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 4—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 5.}

Besides her conviction that the end of the demons was near as it was Brahma's prophesy that cannot be negated, there was one other important reason why she kept quiet about an enemy's spy entering the city. She feared severe punishment for negligence and letting Hanuman in; she was appointed to guard the gates of the fort after due diligence about her abilities and with the full confidence that she had the ability to defend it from any intruder whosoever he might be. She had herself asserted this when she first challenged Hanuman, saying that she feeds on thieves and intruders. {Refer specifically to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 4.}

To wit, till this point Ravana and his military commanders were totally in the dark about Hanuman's entry into the city. They were caught unawares and were so preoccupied about the turmoil created by Hanuman's presence that none of them thought of interrogating Lankini. By the grace of the Lord she escaped scrutiny and perhaps death, and it was because she had served the cause of the Lord.

²Ravana was a great diplomat and politician. He did not ask why Hanuman had killed his son Akshayakumar, but he showed anger about the death of the demon warriors in general. This was primarily meant for the huge crowd of spectators who had assembled to watch the spectacle: Ravana wished to gain their loyalty and praise by showing that he was more concerned about the death of his soldiers than the loss of his own son.]

सुनु रावन ब्रह्मांड निकाया । पाइ जासु बल बिरचति माया ॥ ४ ॥
जाकें बल बिरंचि हरि ईसा । पालत सृजत हरत दससीसा ॥ ५ ॥
जा बल सीस धरत सहसानन । अंडकोस समेत गिरि कानन ॥ ६ ॥
धरइ जो बिबिध देह सुरत्राता । तुम्ह से सठन्ह सिखावनु दाता ॥ ७ ॥
हर कोदंड कठिन जेहिं भंजा । तेहि समेत नृप दल मद गंजा ॥ ८ ॥
खर दूषन त्रिसिरा अरु बाली । बधे सकल अतुलित बलसाली ॥ ९ ॥ sunu rāvana brahmāṇḍa nikāyā. pā'i jāsu bala biracati māyā. 4.

jākēm bala biran̄ci hari īsā. pālata sr̄jata harata dasasīsā. 5.
jā bala sīsa dharata sahasānana. aṇḍakōsa samēta giri kānana. 6.
dhara'i jō bibidha dēha suratrātā. tumha sē saṭhanha sikhāvanu dātā. 7.
hara kōdaṇḍa kaṭhina jēhim̄ bhan̄jā. tēhi samēta nr̄pa dala mada gan̄jā. 8.
khara dūṣana trisirā aru bālī. badhē sakala atulita balasālī. 9.

{In the following verses, Hanuman lists the glories of Lord Ram as an answer to Ravana's first query "who are you and on whose orders have you come here". Hanuman tells Ravana that he is a servant of the Lord whose glories he is enumerating; this is his credential, and the Lord referred to here is his strength and authority.}

[Hanuman replied—] ‘Listen Ravana. He (i.e. the Supreme Being) on whose strength and authority countless universes are created by Maya (the delusion creating powers of the Supreme Being that combine with the creative powers of Mother Nature to create a kaleidoscope of diverse universes) (4), ---

Oh the ten-headed one (Ravana)! He on whose strength and authority the Trinity Gods known as Brahma, Hari and Isha (Shiva) are able to create, nourish and sustain, and bring to an end this creation (5), ---

He on whose strength and authority the thousand-hooded celestial Serpent (known as Seshnath) is able to hold on his hood the entire egg-like creation that consists of huge mountains and forests (6), ---

It is the same Lord (the Supreme Being) who assumes different forms (bodies) to protect the interests of the Gods, and to teach a lesson to those who are stupid and wicked like you. (7)

It is the same Lord (in the form of Lord Ram) who had broken the formidable Bow of Lord Shiva, and had thereby vanquished the pride and ego of haughty kings, including yourself¹. (8)

It is he who had slayed the mighty warriors such as Khar, Dushan, Trishira² and Baali³, all of whom were matchless in strength and valour. (9)

[Note—¹This refers to Lord Ram breaking Lord Shiva’s Bow at Janakpur to marry Sita. All the great kings and princes of the time had assembled there to try their luck, but none of them had been able to even move the Bow an inch. Even Ravana was there, but fearing certain humiliation he had quietly left the place. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 249—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 252; (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 260—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 262.}]

²Khar, Dushan and Trishira were slayed by Lord Ram when they and their army of demons had attacked him at the behest of Supernakha. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20.}

³Baali was the elder brother of Sugriv, the prince of the monkey kingdom. Lord Ram was instrumental in his death as the Lord felt that Baali had done grave injustice to his younger brother Sugriv, and needed punishment. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11.}]

दो०. जाके बल लवलेस तें जितेहु चराचर झारि ।

तासु दूत मैं जा करि हरि आनेहु प्रिय नारि ॥ २१ ॥

dōhā.

jākē bala lavalēsa tēm jitēhu carācara jhāri.
tāsu dūta mair̄ jā kari hari ānēhu priya nāri. 21.

By the miniscule fraction of whose strength you were able to conquer the entire creation consisting of animate and inanimate things, and whose beloved wife you had stolen, know me to be a messenger of that Lord!¹ (Doha no. 21)

[Note—¹Till this point Hanuman had referred to the Supreme Being as the glories he has enumerated belong to that Supreme Being. But finally he disclosed that the Supreme Lord he is referring to is none other but Lord Ram—because it was his wife Sita whom Ravana had abducted.]

चौ०. जानउँ मैं तुम्हारि प्रभुताई । सहसबाहु सन परी लराई ॥ १ ॥

समर बालि सन करि जसु पावा । सुनि कपि बचन बिहसि बिहरावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jāna'um̐ mair̐ tumhāri prabhutāī. sahasabāhu sana parī larāī. 1.

samara bāli sana kari jasu pāvā. suni kapi bacana bihasi biharāvā. 2.

{Now, Hanuman answers the second query of Ravana: “Does Hanuman not know who Ravana was that he fails to show any deference to him; has he not heard of Ravana’s name that he seems not to tremble in fear in the latter’s presence?” Hanuman’s answer is in the form of an insult to Ravana’s self-respect and honour; it is an insinuation that invokes certain unfortunate incidents that show Ravana in a very poor light. Remember: There is a large gathering of courtiers and demon burghers who are watching the proceedings attentively. This stern public rebuke by Hanuman might have shuddered the faint-hearted, but made others smile in sarcasm as every demon was aware of these circumstances, though no one actually spoke of them out of fear of his life.}

[Hanuman continued—] ‘Oh yes, as to your majesty, strength and abilities of which you are so proud, I am indeed aware of them, for I am in the know of your duel with Sahastrabahu!¹ [Hanuman has taunted Ravana by citing this incident because he was defeated and captured by Sahastrabahu in a battle over a trifle matter as narrated in a note below. Sahastrabhu kept Ravana as an ordinary prisoner-of-war till sage Pulastya went and freed him.] (1)

And of course, you have achieved great glory by having a duel with Baali (the king of the monkey race and the ruler of the kingdom of Kishkindha)²! [This was another incident where Ravana was subjected to great humiliation as narrated in a note below. He was captured and tucked under armpit by Baali, where Ravana remained stuck for quite a long time before Baali realized that someone was there. Ravana fell to the ground when Baali raised his arms.]’

When Ravana heard these taunting words of the Kapi (Hanuman), he tried to hide his severe embarrassment and deflect attention that was now focused on his weaknesses by laughing the matter away, pretending that it was of no consequence to him whatsoever. (2)

[Note—¹Sahastrabahu, literally means ‘one with a thousand arms’; he was also known as ‘Sahastrarjun’, i.e. Arjun with a thousand arms.

The story of Sahastrabahu and how Ravana was humiliated by him is narrated in Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33; Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 55-57; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 90-95.

Briefly it is as follows: Sahastrabahu was the son of Kritvirya and the king of Mahishmati situated on the banks of river Narmada. By the blessings of sage Dattatreya he could get a thousand arms when he so desired. One day when he was enjoying himself with his ladies and mistresses in the river, Ravana had too gone there to offer worship to Lord Shiva. Ravana's attendants had collected flowers for offering to Lord Shiva. In the meantime, Sahastrabahu, who was showing off his majesty to impress the women, had used his thousand arms to block the flow of water in the river, which therefore flooded the banks and flowed upstream. The flowers that Ravana's attendants had collected for worship were washed away, which gravely annoyed Ravana as it disrupted his worship. On learning the cause of this flood, Ravana immediately went to challenge Sahastrabahu and started a fierce battle with his soldiers. Upon learning that Ravana has destroyed the entire army, Sahastrabahu himself came to face him. A severe battle ensued. As soon as the chief commander of the demon army, named Prahasta, fell, the rest of the demons fled; and then followed a one-to-one duel between Ravana and Sahastrabahu. These two mighty warriors used massive war-maces to hit each other. Finally, Sahastrabahu hit Ravana so hard that he tottered and swooned, and was so dazed that he sat down to recover himself. Seizing the moment, Sahastrabahu captured Ravana and held him tight in his thousand arms, using these arms like ropes to ensnare him so firmly that Ravana could not wriggle out. After this, Sahastrabahu brought Ravana to his capital city and imprisoned him like an ordinary prisoner of war. Later on, sage Pulastya went to plead with Sahastrabahu, and he not only succeeded in getting Ravana released but also in forging a friendship between the two. {This version is according to Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33.}

The version according to Anand Ramayan and Adhyatma Ramayan has already been narrated in our Book earlier.

A word or two about Sahastrabahu would make this story more interesting. So let us read a little more about him as follows:

There was once a thousand-armed Kshatriya (warrior class) king known as 'Sahastraarjun' or 'Arjun with a thousand hands'. He was the son of king Kritvirya whose kingdom was known as Anup; its capital city was known as Mahishmati and it was situated on the southern bank of river Narmada.

In his early life he was a very righteous and conscientious person, a man of upright thoughts and noble conduct. After the death of his father when the court ministers wished to anoint him on the throne of the kingdom, he refused, saying: 'Kingdom leads a king to hell if he cannot live upto the expectations of his subjects and rule according to the principles of Dharma (righteousness and probity). The main source of income of a king is 'tax collected from his subjects', but if this tax is collected in an improper way, and if it is not utilized for the welfare of the subjects of the kingdom in accordance with the principles of Dharma which say that the main use of state revenue is to ensure that traders are given all facilities and protection for carrying out legitimate trade, are not looted by thieves, the subjects of the kingdom are given due protection and their interests are always kept ahead of everything else, and so on and so forth. So unless I acquire such powers and abilities by doing Tapa (penance), I will not accept the throne.'

When Sahastrabahu said this, the great sage Garg advised him that if he indeed wishes to do Tapa and acquire mythical powers to rule the vast kingdom in accordance to Dharma then he should go and serve Lord Dattatreya, an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. Dattatreya lived in a cave of Mt. SahyaParvat and did Tapa there (Markandeya Puran, Canto 18). So, Sahastrabahu went to Lord Dattatreya and began serving him diligently for a long period of ten thousand years.

According to Padma Puran, Sristi Khand, Canto 12, when Dattatreya was pleased with his service and austerities, he granted him four boons: (i) First, the king asked for one thousand arms. (ii) Second, he wished that no one in his kingdom would even dare to think in an unrighteous and sinful way. (iii) Third, he wanted to conquer the whole earth and rule over it. (iv) Fourth, that if he has to die then it must be in the battle-field at the hands of a warrior who is superior to him in every way.

According to Markandey Puran, Canto 18, verse nos. 14-18, the king was granted ten boons as follows: (i) The powers and authority to rule over his subjects without acquiring sins. (ii) The ability to know the thoughts of others. (iii) No one should be able to face in the battle-field (i.e. he should become invincible). (iv) During a war he should have a thousand arms so as to fight his opponent with all of them at once. [This is also mentioned in Harivansha Puran, Canto 33, verse no. 14.] (v) He should have unhindered access to all places in the sky, water, earth, mountains and the nether world. (vi) If he has to die then it should be at the hands of someone stronger than him. (vii) If by chance he goes astray and falls on the wrong path, then he must have a chance to get good advice and company of saintly persons (i.e. he must be given an opportunity to mend his ways). (viii) He must have illustrious persons as his guests so that he can serve them and get their blessings. (ix) His wealth should never diminish even after liberal charities and giving of alms regularly; there should be no shortage of wealth in his kingdom. (x) The virtue of Bhakti (having devotion for Lord God) should be firm and perpetual in him.

In Mahabharat, Van Parva, Canto 115, verse no. 12, it is said that by the grace of Dattatreya the king acquired an air-plane made of gold; that he ruled over the entire earth; and that no one could stop his chariot. He was a great Emperor who conquered the whole world and made liberal charities. He is also regarded as a great scholar of Tantra Shastra.

He was so powerful and mighty that when he bathed in the ocean and thrashed it with his thousand arms, he could turn the tide backwards. He would splash the water so heavily that marine creatures were tossed into the air like ninepins. [Brahm-Vaivarta Puran, Ganesh Khand, Canto 23-27.]

But the Laws of Creation are such that every good thing has to come to an end one day; nothing is eternal and permanent in this mortal gross world. This also applied to Sahastrabahu. As time passed, he became extremely haughty and cruel. He started subjugating even the Gods so as to remove all challenges to his authority and power. It is said that he ruled for eighty-five thousand years before he was killed by sage Parashuram.

Once he was asked by the Fire God for alms, and the noble king could not refuse. The Fire God used this grant to burn everything and cause havoc everywhere, because he was certain that Sahastrabahu would not stop him. During this burning spree, the Fire destroyed the hermitage of sage Aapava (who was later on known as sage Vasistha according to Brahm Puran during its description of the race of Yayaati). The sage cursed king Sahastrabahu that his arms, relying upon whose strength the Fire God had destroyed his hermitage and was wreaking havoc on earth, would be cut by sage Parashuram. [Refer: Mahabharat, Shanti Parva, Canto 49, verse nos. 35-45; and Padma Puran, Sristi Khand, Canto 12.]

One day, he was wandering along the shore of the ocean and out of his pride and haughtiness he covered it with thousands of arrows. The Ocean assumed a form and appeared before him to plead that he stop showering arrows into the water as all the marine creatures that live in the water would die. Sahastrabahu accepted the prayer but asked the Ocean to tell him about someone who could face him in battle, as he was itching for a face-off with anyone who could claim to be stronger than him as he wished to conquer the opponent and become an unchallenged warrior in this world. The Ocean told him to go sage Jamdagni whose son Parashuram would be fit opponent for him and would welcome him in battle. [Refer: Mahabharat, Ashwamegh Parva, Canto 29.]

Such was Sahastraarjun's sense of ego and pride that he could not bear that someone stronger be there on earth in his presence. So he collected his huge army and went to the hermitage of sage Jamdagni.

The sage duly welcomed the king and extended warm hospitality to him. Sahastraarjun was however astonished at the lavish way the forest-dwelling hermit had entertained him. So he wanted to know the reason. Upon finding out that the sage managed to do this miracle because he possessed a divine cow known as 'Kamdhenu' or Kapila cow which could produce anything desired in an instant, the greedy king was filled with jealousy. Driven by avarice and rapacity, he demanded that the sage give this cow to him. Obviously Jamdagni refused. So the king forcefully snatched the cow from him and in the ensuing tussle he killed Jamdagni.

At that time, Jamdagni's brave son Parashuram was not there. When he returned, home he found his mother grieving. Coming to know of the reason, he immediately took the vow that he will eliminate all the Kshatriya kings from the surface of the earth by killing all of them. His mother had beaten her chest twenty-one times as a sign of mourning, so he declared that he will continue to wipe out the Kshatriya kings for an equal number of times, i.e. for twenty-one generations.

He comforted his mother and attacked Sahastraarjun, severed all his thousand arms with his battle-axe and then killed him. [This story is narrated in Mahabharat, Ashwamegha Parva, Canto 29.]

Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriya to avenge the killing of his father by Sahastraarjun.

²The story of Baali, the king of the Kishkindha and of the monkey race, and how Ravana suffered humiliation at his hand is narrated in Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto no. 34; Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 58-59; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101.

The story in brief is this: Once, the monkey king of Kishkindha, Baali, had put Ravana under his armpit for many days while the latter had gone to challenge the former when he was doing some worship. Peeved by Ravana's arrogance and impertinence, Baali had tucked him under his arms to stop him from annoying him any further. When his worship was finished and he had returned back to his capital at Kishkindha, he realised that Ravana was still squeezed under his armpit. So he released the latter and made a pact of friendship with him. Mandodari refers to that incident when Ravana had tried his best to escape from Baali but could not do so, and remained clamped and squeezed under his armpit for a long time.]

खायउँ फल प्रभु लागी भूँखा । कपि सुभाव तें तोरेउँ रूखा ॥ ३ ॥
 सब कें देह परम प्रिय स्वामी । मारहिं मोहि कुमारग गामी ॥ ४ ॥
 जिन्ह मोहि मारा ते मैं मारे । तेहि पर बाँधेउँ तनयँ तुम्हारे ॥ ५ ॥ मोहि न कछु बाँधे कइ लाजा । कीन्ह चहउँ निज प्रभु कर काजा ॥ ६ ॥ khāya'um' phala prabhu lāgī bhūmkhā. kapi subhāva tēm tōrē'um' rūkhā. 3.

 saba kēm dēha parama priya svāmī. mārahim mōhi kumārāga gāmī. 4.
 jinha mōhi mārā tē mairm mārē. tēhi para bām̄dhē'um' tanayam' tumhārē. 5.
 mōhi na kachu bām̄dhē ka'i lājā. kīnha caha'um' nija prabhu kara kājā. 6.

{Hanuman now answers the third query of Ravana: “Why did he slay so many demon soldiers; what was their fault?”}

Lord¹, I was hungry and so partook of fruits, and as is the habit of our race of monkeys I broke the branches and fell the raw fruits. (3)

Oh Lord, everyone loves his body and no one wants any harm to come to it. But these sinful fellows who follow the wrong path (kumārāga gāmī) began attacking and hitting me (for such a trifling issue, not realizing that I was hungry and was breaking the trees and felling the fruits not out of any bad intentions but because it is my wont as a monkey to do so). (4)

I hit back only those who attacked me (and I did not hit anyone who desisted from hitting me). In spite of this, your son (Meghnad) has tied me (as if I was a criminal). (5)

But I am not ashamed of being captured or tied; my only aim is that I wish to do my Lord's work, and do it with diligence and honesty². (6)

[Note—¹Hanuman shows his diplomatic acumen here. He has already shown to Ravana as well as the rest of the demons how bold and brave he was, so now he plays the diplomatic card of politeness and respect that a messenger from a great king ought to show to another great king to whose court his lord has sent him with a commission. This single word “lord” shot down in one stroke the accusation of being haughty, arrogant and irreverent that Ravana had made on Hanuman.

²Hanuman did not divulge what his ‘Lord's work’ was. He left it to the common sense of Ravana and his ministers. He has already hinted to Ravana that he is a messenger of Lord Ram whose wife Sita has been abducted by him (Ravana). So if Ravana had even a rudimentary intelligence he would know what Hanuman's objective was in coming to Lanka, and what the work was that his Lord had assigned to him.

In spite of these hints and warnings, Ravana could not mend his ways as he was overcome with delusions that usually overcome someone who is on the threshold of death as he fails to see the truth, and voluntarily falls in the trap.]

बिनती करउँ जोरि कर रावन । सुनहु मान तजि मोर सिखावन ॥ ७ ॥
 देखहु तुम्ह निज कुलहि बिचारी । भ्रम तजि भजहु भगत भय हारी ॥ ८ ॥
 जाकेँ डर अति काल डेराई । जो सुर असुर चराचर खाई ॥ ९ ॥ तासों बयरु कबहुँ नहिं कीजै । मोरे कहें जानकी दीजै ॥ १० ॥

binatī kara'um̃ jōri kara rāvana. sunahu māna taji mōra sikhāvana. 7.
 dēkhahu tumha nija kulahi bicārī. bhrama taji bhajahu bhagata bhaya hārī. 8.
 jākēm ḍara ati kāla ḍērāī. jō sura asura carācara khāī. 9.
 tāsōm bayaru kabahum̃ nahim̃ kijai. mōrē kahēm̃ jānakī dījai. 10.

Oh Ravana, I pray to you with joined hands and beg you to pay heed to my advice. (7)

Look at your own exalted family (that traces its lineage to the great and illustrious sage Pulastya), and think over the matter in that perspective¹. You will do good to yourself by overcoming delusions, and instead of falling prey to haughtiness and false sense of pride and grandeur, you should worship the Lord who removes all fears of his devotees. (8)

He from whom even the Kaal—the god of death who devours the mighty gods, the demons as well as the rest of the creation consisting of animate creatures and inanimate things—is afraid [9], it is not at all wise to ever antagonize such a great and almighty Lord.

So therefore, pay heed to my words and listen to my advice by giving Janki (Sita) back to the Lord (Sri Ram). [By doing this you will safeguard yourself from all danger and forestall all chances of ruin and destruction that otherwise stare you in your face if you defy my advice. So be wise and prudent in this matter while there is still time, and avoid being rash as it will be to your own peril.] [9] (8-9)

[Note—¹Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 23 herein below where the same idea is reiterated by Hanuman.]

दो०. प्रनतपाल रघुनायक करुना सिंधु खरारि । गाँ सरन प्रभु राखिहैं तव अपराध बिसारि ॥ २२ ॥

dōhā.

pranatapāla raghunāyaka karunā sindhu kharāri.
 ga'ēm̃ sarana prabhu rākhihair̃ tava aparādha bisāri. 22.

The Lord of the Raghus (“raghunāyaka”; Lord Ram), who though had slayed the demon Khar (kharāri), is nevertheless like an ocean of compassion, mercy and kindness (karunā sindhu), for he protects and sustains all those who come with humility to submit themselves before him (pranatapāla)¹.

If you go to seek shelter in his feet and submit yourself before him, then the Lord will certainly oblige you, and forgive all your mistakes and offences². (Doha no. 22)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had slayed the demon Khar because he came to fight with him; had he come to seek the Lord's mercy and blessings it sure that his wishes would have been granted. But killing of Khar does not mean that the Lord is merciless and cruel; the fact is that he is like an 'ocean' of mercy, grace, compassion, benevolence and kindness. To wit, just like an ocean has no dearth of water, Lord Ram too does not lack in these great virtues.

Here, Hanuman has subtly warned Ravana what fate he faces if he chooses to confront Lord Ram by reminding him of Khar. Khar, Dushan and Trishira were killed in the battle with Lord Ram, and this event is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20.

²Similar advice was given to Ravana on many occasions, but as 'death' had already cast its dark long shadow on him, he paid no attention to these pleadings.

First it was his wife Mandodari who tried her best to make Ravana see reason on different occasions—refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37; (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 8; (c) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 16; (d) Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 38.

Then it was his brother Vibhishan who also tried to advice Ravana to return Sita and avoid a confrontation with Lord Ram—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Doha no. 39; and Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 40.

The third instance is when Malyawanta, an old demon who was very wise and was Ravana's minister, endorsed Vibhishan's view, but he was sternly rebuked by Ravana—refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 40; and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 48—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 49.

Once again, in the fourth instance, Kumbhakaran, Ravana's other brother, also told him that he had committed a grave error by picking up a fight with Lord Ram—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Doha no. 63.]

चौ० राम चरन पंकज उर धरहू । लंका अचल राजु तुम्ह करहू ॥ १ ॥

रिषि पुलस्ति जसु बिमल मयंका । तेहि ससि महुँ जनि होहु कलंका ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

rāma carana pañkaja ura dharahū. lañkā acala rāju tumha karahū. 1.

riṣi pulasti jasu bimala mayāñkā. tēhi sasi mahum' jani hōhu kalañkā. 2.

[Hanuman tried to convince Ravana to abandon animosity with Lord Ram and act wisely. He used many arguments in order to persuade Ravana to become sensible and mend his way while still there was time. So Hanuman advised Ravana as follows—]

Enshrine the holy feet of Lord Ram in your heart¹ and rule over the kingdom of Lanka without any obstacle for eternity.

[To wit, by submitting yourself before Lord Ram you will obtain his grace and protection, and once that is done, you will have no fear from any quarter. No one, whoever he may be or how mighty and powerful he might be, no one will ever dare to disturb you henceforth when it is known that you are being protected by Lord Ram, as the Lord is the Supreme Lord and Protector of this creation, and everyone, from the smallest to the mightiest, from the humblest of creatures to the greatest of gods, is under his jurisdiction. So once you are blessed by the almighty Lord, the only Supreme Emperor and Authority in this creation, no other authority or power will ever disturb you and try to snatch the kingdom from you. You would therefore rule over Lanka perpetually without worry and disturbance.] (1)

The fame and reputation of the illustrious sage Pulastya² is like a moon shining brilliantly with all its glorious radiance. Do not become a dark spot on the surface of this moon!

[Remember that you are a descendant of the great sage Pulastya. You must not do anything that would put to shame this exalted sage. You have a noble lineage and a great heritage to keep; so be mindful of it. Don't act rashly and irresponsibly for things that would surely lead to your ruin and cast a shadow of ignominy and ill-fame on your family.] (2)

[Note—¹Hanuman has already told Ravana that Lord Ram is none but the Supreme Being himself in a human form—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-7 that precede Doha no. 21 herein above.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 32 herein above where the same idea is expressed by Hanuman.]

राम नाम बिनु गिरा न सोहा । देखु बिचारि त्यागि मद मोहा ॥ ३ ॥
 बसन हीन नहिं सोह सुरारी । सब भूषन भूषित बर नारी ॥ ४ ॥
 राम बिमुख संपति प्रभुताई । जाइ रही पाई बिनु पाई ॥ ५ ॥ rāma nāma binu girā na sōhā. dēkhu bicāri tyāgi mada mōhā. 3.

 basana hīna nahir̄n sōha surārī. saba bhūṣana bhūṣita bara nārī. 4.
 rāma bimukha sampati prabhutā'ī. jā'i rahī pā'ī binu pā'ī. 5.

Without the holy name of 'Ram', one's speech and voice is never purified¹. Abandon ego and arrogance, and get rid of all delusions so that you can think properly, wisely and intelligently. (3)

Oh the enemy of gods (surārī; i.e. Ravana)! Even if a woman is richly adorned by all the wonderful ornaments one can think of, but if she does not wear her essential clothes and remains naked, then she does not deserve any praise; she looks dishonourable and unworthy of the ornaments. (4)

Similarly, for a person who is opposed to Lord Ram, all the wealth, prosperity, fame and good virtues that he possesses or would possess in future, are as good as his not having them at all². (5)

[Note—¹The name of the Lord, i.e. the word ‘rāma’, is regarded as a great ‘Tarak Mantra’, a special spiritual formula that grants liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul of the creature. This Mantra grants eternal beatitude, felicity and bliss to the creature. Its glory, importance and significance are expounded in the Upanishads, such as the Ram Tapini Upanishad and the Ram Rahasya Upanishad. No other Mantra other than the holy and the divine name of Lord Ram is honoured by the singular title of being a ‘Tarak Mantra’.

Hanuman means that if a creature does not pronounce the name of Lord Ram, i.e. “rāma”, then he will not be able to purify his tongue no matter which other Mantra he pronounces. To wit, the divine name of Lord Ram is so holy and exalted that is it like an Emperor of all Mantras. The faculty of speech and its manifested form as the voice of a creature acquires its glory and importance only when one pronounces the holy name of Lord Ram at least once with his tongue. Otherwise, one’s tongue is merely a mass of muscles; one’s voice is nothing better than the barking of a mad dog; and the faculty of speech feels dishonoured and insulted and disabled if the holy and purifying name of Lord Ram is not a part of its lexicon.

²Just like the case of a woman who does not get any respect by merely decorating herself by the choicest of jewelry and the costliest of ornaments if she does not wear proper clothes, for remaining naked is a vile thing for a self-respecting, dignified, honourable and chaste woman, being opposed to Lord Ram does not make a person honourable and worthy of respect even though he may have or is entitled to great fortunes, qualities and titles.]

सजल मूल जिन्ह सरितन्ह नाहीं । बरषि गएँ पुनि तबहिं सुखाहीं ॥ ६ ॥
 सुनु दसकंठ कहउँ पन रोपी । बिमुख राम त्राता नहिं कोपी ॥ ७ ॥
 संकर सहस बिष्नु अज तोही । सकहिं न राखि राम कर द्रोही ॥ ८ ॥ sajala mūla jinha saritanha nāhīm. baraṣi ga'eṃ puni tabahim sukhāhīm. 6.

 sunu dasakaṅṭha kaha'um' pana rōpī. bimukha rāma trātā nahim kōpī. 7.
 saṅkara sahasa biṣnu aja tōhī. sakahim na rākhi rāma kara drōhī. 8.

Rivers that do not have a perennial source of water (such as a glacier) flow only while it rains, but they soon dry up when the rainy season passes away¹. (6)

Listen Ravana, the one with ten necks (“dasakaṅṭha”, and therefore ‘the one with ten heads’)! I tell you firmly under oath that no one can ever save anyone or give protection to him who is opposed to Lord Ram. [So be ware!] (7)

Even Lord Shiva and Lord Brahma in their thousands would not be able to protect you or afford to give shelter to you (if you are against Lord Ram).² (8)

[Note—¹Hanuman tells Ravana that all his powers, glory and majesty would remain temporary and transient, as they all depend upon the good effects of the severe Tapa

(penance and austerity) that he had done, and are therefore liable to wear off by time, which would necessitate his doing fresh Tapa to retain them. But if he takes shelter of Lord Ram and gets the Lord's blessings, these virtues would become permanent with him; he will no longer have to fear their loss, and neither would he have to appease Brahma, the creator, or Shiva, the concluder of this creation, in order to retain his authority and eminence.

It ought to be remembered here that Ravana had done severe Tapa in his early life in order to please Brahma and Shiva, and all the powers and strength and eminence that he had acquired were due to their granting of boons to him. This is what Hanuman alludes to here; he says that by the single act of pleasing Lord Ram, Ravana can achieve all that he desires without having to undertake the trouble associated with Tapa etc., and such achievements would be permanent too.

²To wit, thousands of Lord Shivas, Vishnus and Brahmas, i.e. anyone in creation, no matter how powerful and authoritative he may be, cannot protect him who is inimical to Lord Ram. Lord Ram protects his Bhakta (i.e. the Lord's sincere and true devotee) so diligently that no harm would ever come to him. Not even thousands of the creators known as Lord Brahma or the concluder of creation known as Lord Shiva can either harm Lord Ram's devotee or give support to anyone who is opposed to such a devotee. This warning has been given by Hanuman to the demon king Ravana.]

दो०. मोहमूल बहु सूल प्रद त्यागहु तम अभिमान । भजहु राम रघुनायक कृपा सिंधु भगवान ॥ २३ ॥

dōhā.

mōhamūla bahu sūla prada tyāgahu tama abhimāna.
bhajahu rāma raghunāyaka kṛpā sindhu bhagavāna. 23.

Abandon 'abhimāna' (false pride, ego, arrogance and haughtiness) as it is a dark and evil trait that is the root cause of all delusions and mischief that dog a creature, and it ruins his wisdom and rationale thinking.

Instead of harbouring 'Abhiman', you will do good to your own self by worshipping Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghus, and having devotion for him, as he is the all-merciful Lord, and an ocean of compassion, kindness, grace and benevolence.¹ (Doha no. 23)

[Note—¹Hanuman hints to Ravana that if he could offer his worship to Lords Brahma and Shiva by subjecting himself to extreme hardship as part of the Tapa that he did to please them, why can't he attain the same, and even a better objective by worshipping Lord Ram as this needs no great effort or any strenuous exercise. Simple devotion and surrender to the Lord is all that is required.]

चौ०. जदपि कही कपि अति हित बानी । भगति बिबेक बिरति नय सानी ॥ १ ॥
बोला बिहसि महा अभिमानी । मिला हमहि कपि गुर बड़ ग्यानी ॥ २ ॥
मृत्यु निकट आई खल तोही । लागेसि अधम सिखावन मोही ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

jadapi kahī kapi ati hita bānī. bhagati bibēka birati naya sānī. 1.
 bōlā bihasi mahā abhimānī. milā hamahi kapi gura barā gyānī. 2.
 mṛtyu nikaṭa āī khala tōhī. lāgēsi adhama sikhāvana mōhī. 3.

Although the Kapi (Hanuman) had said words that were highly beneficial for Ravana and were meant for his own good and welfare of the demon race, as they were imbued with the virtues of devotion, wisdom, dispassion, probity and propriety [1], ---

--- Yet Ravana, who was haughty and arrogant, would not listen to them. He laughed haughtily, derisively, and retorted sarcastically, ‘Ah, we have met a Kapi who is a very wise teacher, and he seems to be an expert in all sorts of knowledge [2]! (1-2)

[Then turning towards Hanuman, Ravana strongly rebuked him, saying angrily—] Oh you wicked and mischievous fellow (khala)! It seems that ‘death’ has come near you. Though you are fallen creature (adhama), still you have the temerity to preach me.

[To wit, you are merely a little monkey of no consequence, a humble messenger of a prince and tied up in ropes, but you have a big mouth and speak of wisdom and propriety as if you were a wise man, a great and learned professor! You are loud-mouthed and pretentiously upright, trying to behave as if you were my best of friends, teaching me what is good for me, as if I was unaware of my own well-being. Woe to you; mind your tongue, you fool!]’ (3)

उलटा होइहि कह हनुमाना । मतिभ्रम तोर प्रगट मैं जाना ॥ ४ ॥

सुनि कपि बचन बहुत खिसिआना । बेगि न हरहु मूढ़ कर प्राणा ॥ ५ ॥ ulatā hō'ihī kaha hanumānā. matibhrama tōra pragaṭa maim jānā. 4.

 suni kapi bacana bahuta khisi'ānā. bēgi na harahu mūṛha kara prānā. 5.

Hanuman shot back, saying, ‘It will be the other way round. [To wit, it is you who is near ‘death’, instead of me.] It is now clear that your wisdom is clouded by delusions (so much so that you have forfeited any chance of redemption and recovery).

[Well then, so be it. Henceforth you alone are to be blamed for whatever misfortune befalls you and your clan in particular, and the demon race in general. When one is in the throes of death he is so overcome with delusions that no power in this world is able to pull him out of the dark pit into which he is sliding irrecoverably.]’ (4)

Hearing the words of the Kapi (Hanuman), Ravana was extremely peeved; he was miffed and exasperated by Hanuman’s retort, becoming excessively angry. He scowled and immediately ordered his demons, ‘Why don’t anyone of you sniff away the life out of this monkey this instant? [What are you waiting for? Why can’t anyone of you settle the score and teach this wretch the lesson regarding death that he so vociferously preaches me?]’ (5)

सुनत निसाचर मारन धाए । सचिवन्ह सहित बिभीषनु आए ॥ ६ ॥

नाइ सीस करि बिनय बहूता । नीति बिरोध न मारिअ दूता ॥ ७ ॥

आन दंड कछु करिअ गोसाँई । सबहीं कहा मंत्र भल भाई ॥ ८ ॥
 सुनत बिहसि बोला दसकंधर । अंग भंग करि पठइअ बंदर ॥ ९ ॥ sunata nisācara mārana dhā'ē. sacivanha sahita bibhīṣanu ā'ē. 6.

 nā'i sīsa kari binaya bahūtā. nīti birōdha na māri'a dūtā. 7.
 āna daṇḍa kachu kari'a gōsāmī. sabahīm kahā mantra bhala bhā'ī. 8.
 sunata bihasi bōlā dasakandhara. aṅga bhaṅga kari paṭha'i'a bandara. 9.

Hearing the commands of Ravana, the assembled demons rushed to kill Hanuman. At that moment Vibhishan (Ravana's younger brother whom Hanuman had first met when he entered Lanka) arrived with ministers¹. (6)

He (Vibhishan) bowed his head most respectfully before Ravana, and politely pleaded with him, 'Oh Lord, please do not kill a messenger as it is against established traditions and violates the norms regarding how a messenger of someone should be treated.

[To wit, if you allow this messenger to be killed, especially when it is done upon your express orders, it would put you and our family to great shame, and it would cause an irreparable damage to your great reputation. You are a great king, and great kings ought to act like one; they should be very mindful of their glorious name and their reputation, and never behave like street ruffians who cut throats for trifles of things. Oh lord, a messenger is merely an agent for the master who has sent him; he is protected by the law of immunity from personal harm that is granted to all messengers. If you have some score to be settled, then it should be settled with his master, and not him who is merely doing his duty faithfully and loyally. As a great king, even you send messengers, and I am sure you expect your messenger to be treated with similar immunity from personal harm; if the person to whom your messenger carries your words does not agree with you, you have the full right to go and defeat him in a battle. This line of action is sure to give you great name and fame. I am your beloved brother, and so I deem it my duty to advise you.] (7)

So, instead of killing him it is advisable to give him some other kind of punishment.²

Hearing this advice (of Vibhishan), all those who were present there expressed their unanimous approval of it. Everyone said: 'Yes brothers, this is a good advice.'³
 (8)

When Ravana heard of this unanimous decision, he smiled and said, 'Well, if you all are of this opinion, then let some part of this monkey's body be mutilated and he be sent back (to his master).'⁴ (9)

[Note—¹It is clear here that some of the ministers of the royal court of Ravana were on the side of Vibhishan. When the news of Hanuman's arrival and his destruction of the royal garden, the killing of the demon warriors led by Akshayakumar, which was followed by another round of bloody fray with Meghnad in which another detachment of demon troops were slayed, and his subsequent capture and parading through the streets of Lanka as he was being taken to the court of Ravana, had spread like wild-fire in the city, some of the wiser ministers had realized the gravity of the situation even as they had a premonition of the impending catastrophe; so they rushed to Vibhishan to have an urgent conference with him to find out a way to diffuse the situation.

In the meanwhile there was an acrimonious exchange of sharp words between Ravana and Hanuman as we have read herein above. But just at the moment when the demons were instigated by their angry king, Ravana, to take revenge upon Hanuman, and they dashed forward to pounce upon him all at once, Vibhishan and his accompanying ministers made an entry.

²It ought to be noted here that Vibhishan did not waste any time in observing court formalities, such as to being seated first as is the norm for members of the royal family, and then seeking permission from the king to speak before saying what he wished to say, and neither did any of the ministers who accompanied him follow this routine. To wit, all remained standing, and Vibhishan made his submission as soon as he entered the royal court. This is because time was precious, as at the moment Vibhishan entered the hall he observed that a troop of excited demons were already on their way to kill Hanuman.

It is also to be noted here that when Vibhishan began to speak, the demons who had lunged to attack Hanuman halted on their paths, for no matter that they had dashed forward to please their king Ravana when he challenged any one of them to step forward and kill Hanuman, and thereby gain his favour, and hoping to have some reward for showing obedience, they nevertheless wished that some excuse be found by which they are spared the fearful prospect of direct confrontation with Hanuman, for the way he had mercilessly beaten and squashed the demon soldiers to pulp in the Ashok garden was well known by now, and the terror that this had struck in the hearts of the demons was so profound that internally no one wanted to face the same fate!

³Hence, when that much sought-after chance came by way of Vibhishan's advice, everyone seized it instantly, and there was a chorus of approval.

⁴Ravana was not a fool; he had quietly observed how all the demons had kept a safe distance from Hanuman. And when he had challenged them to come forward and kill Hanuman, there was some reluctance and demurring initially in the rank and file of his soldiery, but some of them finally stepped forward when they saw the fire of anger spewing from Ravana's eyes at their cowardice. They feared that Ravana, being of a capricious mind, may suddenly decide to kill all the coward demons because they seemed to be scared to come forward to hit Hanuman. This fear, along with a desire to please Ravana with the hope of some reward and title, motivated the few demons who actually gathered courage to rush at Hanuman.

Ravana had observed all this. So when the assembly unanimously endorsed Vibhishan's advice not to kill Hanuman, Ravana smiled as he concluded that this endorsement was not out of some great propriety which the demons wished to observe, but a way out of their predicament. It was a face-saving formula for everyone.

Ravana was not so easily to be check-mated; he was not accustomed to hearing lectures; so therefore he became excessively wrathful internally as this was the first time in his life that someone (i.e. Hanuman and Vibhishan) had given him such a lecture. But since he faced the entire court, and a multitude of excited burghers and soldiers who had collected there to witness the spectacle, he decided to act more prudently and observe restraint on his emotions. This is the reason why he "smiled", though of course sarcastically.

He had ordered that Hanuman be mutilated, which means that those who thought themselves to be lucky they were spared the prospect of going near Hanuman to kill him would now have to do so in order to inflict some injury to his body! Kings are ruthless when it comes to carrying out their orders; so Ravana devised another device to push his soldiers to confront and punish Hanuman for the disrespect the latter had shown to him.

He also wished to enforce his orders of ‘killing Hanuman’, which was interrupted by Vibhishan’s coming. This would be clear in the following Doha no. 24, which also explains why he “smiled”.]

दो०. कपि कें ममता पूँछ पर सबहि कहउँ समुझाइ । तेल बोरि पट बाँधि पुनि पावक देहु लगाइ ॥ २४ ॥

dōhā.

kapi kēm mamatā pūm̃cha para sabahi kaha'um̃ samujhā'i.
tēla bōri paṭa bām̃dhi puni pāvaka dēhu lagā'i. 24.

[Ravana continued—] Let me tell you all; a monkey loves his tail very much. So you must dip cloth in oil, wrap it around his tail, and set it on fire.¹ (Doha no. 24)

[Note—¹Ravana had ordered the demons to mutilate Hanuman; a while ago he had ordered that they should kill him. So he thought of a wise plan which would bridge the gap between his first order of slaying Hanuman, and his second one that said he should be mutilated.

How will this mutilation be carried out? Those who have any experience of attending courts of kings, especially autocrat kings, they will know that it is the king who orders, and it is he who decides how this order is to be executed. Ministers and others more often than not prefer to wait for the king’s decision rather than endeavouring to take any initiative on how the order of the king is to be implemented in practice unless and until the king expressly asks them for their advice.

Taking advantage of his privileged position, Ravana decided how his order of mutilation ought to be carried out; he ordered that Hanuman’s tail should be wrapped in cloth dipped in oil, and then set on fire! Well, if any part of a captive person is wrapped in cloth soaked in oil and alighted, will he not be roasted alive?

This device seemed to satisfy Ravana’s wish to kill Hanuman: if he cannot be directly beheaded then let him be roasted alive!!

There is however another reason also why Ravana gave this ridiculous order. We have already read that Hanuman had told him that his wisdom and common-sense have come under the cloud of delusions as death has cast its long shadow on him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 24.}

Thus, Ravana forgot for a moment that by putting Hanuman’s tail on fire he would be burnt alive, roasted alive—this is clear in the next verse herein below wherein he says “let this stupid monkey go back to his master without his tail, and then bring him here”. {Chaupai line no. 1 that follows Doha no. 24.}

This means that Ravana thought that Hanuman’s tail alone would be burnt, and he would live to go back to Lord Ram! It is such an incredulous proposition from the practical point of view that it clearly proves that Ravana was truly deluded, and driven by Providence, was under the shadow of an impending disaster.

And as we shall soon read below that the dumb demons were only too eager to please Ravana; either they were so utterly foolish that they did not realize that by setting Hanuman's tail afire he would be burnt to death, or they were so terrified of incurring Ravana's wrath if they questioned his wisdom of doing so, that they all agreed cheerfully to do it. And what was the consequence? The magnificent city of Lanka, gilded and decked up like paradise, was burnt and reduced to a dark smouldering hulk.]

चौ०. पूँछहीन बानर तहँ जाइहि । तब सठ निज नाथहि लइ आइहि ॥ १ ॥

जिन्ह कै कीन्हिसि बहुत बड़ाई । देखउँ मैं तिन्ह कै प्रभुताई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

pūm'chahīna bānara taham' jā'ihī. taba saṭha nija nāthahi la'i ā'ihī. 1.
jinha kai kīnhisi bahuta barā'ī. dēkha'um' mairm' tinha kai prabhutā'ī. 2.

[Ravana was highly sarcastic when he observed in a taunting voice—] Let this stupid monkey go back without his tail, and then let him bring his Lord here! (1)

Let me see how great and powerful His Majesty the Lord is of whom he has sung great laurels and upon whom he has heaped so many praises.¹ (2)

[Note—¹In his haughtiness and a false sense of invincibility, Ravana shot down any chance of reconciliation. By sending back the messenger of a king with a part of his body mutilated is a clear sign of rebuke of that king, because the messenger, though being merely a humble emissary, is nevertheless a representative of the majesty of the king who had sent him, and any insult to this messenger is an insult of the person of that king, and hence it is an open challenge for war.

Had Ravana not gone to such an extreme limit of rashness, and had acted with a little more prudence, had he not provoked the demons to set Hanuman's tail on fire by the method he himself devised, it is quite certain that the doomed fate of Lanka, its burning, would have been avoided. But when the God of Death and Providence itself decide otherwise, and join hands to bring about the downfall of a creature, then his wisdom, rational thinking and discretion go on a tailspin, nose-diving him to his own destruction and end.]

बचन सुनत कपि मन मुसुकाना । भइ सहाय सारद मैं जाना ॥ ३ ॥

जातुधान सुनि रावन बचना । लागे रचैँ मूढ़ सोइ रचना ॥ ४ ॥

रहा न नगर बसन घृत तेला । बाढ़ी पूँछ कीन्ह कपि खेला ॥ ५ ॥ bacana sunata kapi mana musukānā. bha'i sahāya sārada mairm' jānā. 3.

jātudhāna suni rāvana bacanā. lāgē racaim' mūrha sō'i racanā. 4.

rahā na nagara basana ghrta tēlā. bārhi pūm'cha kīnha kapi khēlā. 5.

When the Kapi (Hanuman) heard these words (of Ravana), he smiled and said to himself, ‘There, I am certain that the deity of speech, known as Saraswati (sārada), is helping me (to fulfill my wishes).¹’ (3)

On hearing the commands of Ravana, the dumb-witted demons did as he had ordered them to do (without thinking of its consequence)². (4)

All the cloth, clarified butter and oil that were available in Lanka were brought in even as the Kapi (Hanuman) continued to elongate his tail so that it always exceeded the length of cloth wrapped around it, and which was then soaked in oil and butter.

A time came when no more cloth, oil or butter was left in the city as all the stock available in its homes and shops was exhausted in this enterprise because the Kapi had played a trick upon these demons by continuing to lengthen his tail so much so that it always exceeded the supply of clothes used to cover it, and the combustible material poured over this wrapping.³ (5)

[Note—¹Hanuman had, from the very beginning, but specially after he saw how Sita was being treated in Lanka, wanted to avenge and exact a severe retribution from the demons. Had Ravana acted like a noble king ought to have acted and treated the messenger of his adversary king, and in the way Vibhishan expected him to behave, Hanuman would not have had a chance to vent his suppressed anger on the demons, for then he would be obliged to adhere to diplomatic courtesies and follow norms of behaviour that have been traditionally ordained for messengers of great kings; he would have had to be mindful of the reputation of his own Lord Ram so as not to do anything that was rash and improper.

But the ground situation had drastically changed; Ravana had ordered that his tail be set alight by wrapping it with cloth soaked in oil. So Hanuman thanked Saraswati, the goddess of wisdom and speech, for maneuvering things to his favour, because she had prevailed upon Ravana’s mind and tweaked it such that he said things that gave Hanuman an excuse to fulfill his own wishes—to severely punish the demons in such a way that they will remember it for countless generations. We shall shortly read what havoc Hanuman unleashed on Lanka.

Hanuman was neither intimidated nor felt threatened by this absolutely absurd and madly incredulous order of Ravana. On the one hand Ravana had decided to spare Hanuman’s life when he stopped his soldiers from attacking him on the request of Vibhishan, and then he orders his soldiers to burn Hanuman’s tail! Didn’t Ravana understand that if any part of a person’s body is wrapped in cloth and soaked in oil and then set on fire, it is impossible that he would survive the blaze; he would be roasted alive instead. Even a mad man would know it; so had Ravana taken complete leave of all his senses, or was it that the Lord God was helping Hanuman to carry out his mission to its natural end by creating circumstances that would make it easy for him to wreak vengeance upon the demon race?

Hanuman decided that surely it was the latter case: goddess Saraswati, the deity of speech and wisdom, has tweaked Ravana’s mind and intellect in such a way that he has begun to hallucinate, seeing things that don’t exist, and not seeing things that do exist; for Ravana did not see the impending disaster and the doom knocking at his door, but saw only the pleasure and enjoyment that would come to him in the grand spectacle of Hanuman’s tail burning, and the latter yelling and jumping and running helter-skelter in terror!

²The demons followed Ravana's instructions blindly, either because they were too scared of him to question the rationale of his orders and warn him of its severe consequences, or because they were utterly stupid as not to realize that they are about to light a fuse attached to the keg of gunpowder, or perhaps they were like a child who is more interested in watching and participating in a dangerous spectacle than of thinking of how it would adversely impact him.

Whatever be the reason, but one thing is clear: that the outcome of this dangerous enterprise—of first making a thick wick of clothes by wrapping reams after reams of cloth around the tail of Hanuman, soaking it in combustible oil, then taking him around the city streets so that every household enthusiastically added and wrapped more cloth to the already thick and elongated wick, pour more oil to it so that the already drenched thick coil of cloth could soak no more and from which oil was liberally dripping and spreading all around the ground, and then setting fire to this prodigiously long fuse soaked with inflammable liquid was no less than lighting the fuse of a peg attached to a huge keg of gunpowder—was beyond the ken of both the demon citizens as well as their king, Ravana. They did not foresee that the fire that would ensue would be a huge inferno like the kind of which no one had seen before, and which was bound to engulf the entire city in a very short span of time because all its streets and ground were soaked in oil which would catch fire instantaneously.

This is because these demons, led by their king Ravana, seemed to have been gripped by the God of Death in his vicious embrace, and by Providence that was ill-humoured towards them, as a result of which their wisdom, simple common sense and judgment were obscured in a thick cloud of delusions that made them arrogant, haughty, and develop a false sense of invincibility that made them rash and imprudent.

³The demons brought all cloth available in the city, in its homes and shops, to wrap Hanuman's tail, but how hard they tried the cloth always fell short in length vis-à-vis the tail. It was obviously something very unusual, but the blockheaded demons, who were in the throes of death and destruction, could not understand what it meant. They went on wrapping the tail of Hanuman with reams and reams of cloth, and then emptying cans and drums of combustible liquid such as oil and butter over these wrappings. As the tail elongated, more and more cloth was needed to cover it, and therefore more and more gallons of oil and butter were requisitioned to soak this cloth.

So a time came when there was no cloth or oil left in the city.]

कौतुक कहँ आए पुरबासी । मारहिं चरन करहिं बहु हाँसी ॥ ६ ॥
बाजहिं ढोल देहिं सब तारी । नगर फेरि पुनि पूँछ प्रजारी ॥ ७ ॥ kautuka kham ā'e purabāsī. mārahim carana karahim bahu hāmśī. 6.

bājahim ḍhōla dēhim saba tāri. nagara phēri puni pūṁcha prajāri. 7.

The burghers of Lanka, both males and females, came in large hordes to witness the spectacle. They kicked Hanuman and laughed derisively. (6)

*As if some great carnival was taking place, they beat drums and clapped their hands. They took Hanuman on a round of the city, and then set fire to his tail.¹

[*This stanza can be interpreted in another way also as follows: “The jovial demons beat drums and clapped their hands even as Hanuman’s tail crept through the city streets like a slithering snake, and ultimately encircled the whole city. Then these doomed demons lit its end with a spark of fire.”] (7)

[Note—¹To wit, the demon burghers had a good time at having fun of their lives. They made a procession as done during carnivals and festivities, beating drums and clapping their hands in merriment as they followed Hanuman round the city, pushing and kicking him jokingly all the way.

Of course the long hose made of reams and reams of oil-soaked cloth used to wrap Hanuman’s tail was dragged behind him; and this also proved fatal for Lanka as the dripping oil from the cloth wetted the whole place, and as soon as the end of the cloth was set on fire, the whole place burst out in flames instantly.

It is not difficult to visualize what actually must have happened at that time. After initially wrapping Hanuman’s tail with some length of cloth that was brought in hastily to the court of Ravana and then soaked in oil, or was first wrapped around the tail and then oil was poured over it, Hanuman was ordered to be paraded on the streets of Lanka. A grand procession set forth from Ravana’s palace to go around the main avenues and neighbourhoods of the city; it was accompanied by musicians playing drums and other musical instruments; jesters and fun-seekers joined on the way, and the milling crowd thickened as the procession wound its way ahead. The scene was that of a street carnival. The demon householders ran out of their homes to join the fun, bringing with them their own contribution of cloth and oil which they enthusiastically added to the ever thickening and elongating coil of cloth dragging behind Hanuman. When it became too heavy and thick, some enterprising demons lifted it to carry it on forward, inviting others to add more cloth and oil as well as to help them lift and pull the thick wick forward. Of course there was no dearth of volunteers as everyone thought that more thicker and longer was the coil of cloth and the more properly soaked it became in oil, the grander would be spectacle and the fireworks that would follow when it was finally lit!

That was not all. The cheering crowd teased and jested at Hanuman; some pinched him, some poked at him, some pulled his hairs and arms, and some merely made faces at him. All the while Hanuman kept quiet, though he was seething with anger internally. He clenched his fists and grinded his teeth silently, muttering vehemently under his breath, “Wait a little longer you jesters; wait for some more time you rascals, for then it would be me who will have the last laugh. And don’t worry about the much-expected spectacle that you all are so eager to witness, for on my honour and faith I promise you the grandest of spectacles that this world has ever witnessed! Let me first finish my round of the city; let me first see how beautiful your city of glided buildings and fragrant gardens is; for once the fireworks start, I will no longer have the chance to see its bounty of beauty again, for it would be reduced to a dark smouldering hulk of burnt buildings and smoked out gardens ere I leave it to go back to join my companions on the other shore of the ocean.”

So this is how ‘all the cloth and oil in the city was exhausted’, for every home brought out its own stock of cloth and oil to add to Hanuman’s tail as he was paraded through the streets on the instructions of Ravana.

And this is also how the whole city was set ablaze so quickly, for as soon as the fire was lit, the oil that was spilled all over the city caught fire instantaneously and leapt up in an inferno. A strong breeze started, and this fanned the flames further.

Soon, the whole of the grand city of Lanka, that had put to shame the majesty of paradise, was like a gigantic fire-place, with leaping flames, hot wind howling, crackling timber, collapsing buildings, and dazzling sparks of fire flying everywhere—a sight straight out of doomsday. Whatever cloth and oil that still remained in the homes and shops caught fire in the intense heat, by the flying sparks and the burning debris falling on them, aiding in the blaze spreading. By-and-by, Lanka was completely burnt down to ashes.]

पावक जरत देखि हनुमंता । भयउ परम लघुरूप तुरंता ॥ ८ ॥
निबुकि चढ़ेउ कपि कनक अटारीं । भईं सभित निसाचर नारीं ॥ ९ ॥ pāvaka jarata dēkhi hanumantā. bhaya'u parama laghurūpa turantā. 8.

nibuki caṛhē'u kapi kanaka aṭārīm. bha'īm sabhīta nisācara nārīm. 9.

As soon as Hanuman saw that the fire has been ignited, he immediately assumed a miniature form (like the one he had when he entered Lanka)¹. (8)

Slipping out of his bondage, he immediately sprang on the terraces and the attics of the gilded palaces (jumping from one terrace or attic to another in rapid succession).

This action of his created a flutter amongst the demon ladies who became sore affright². (9)

[Note—¹At the time of being captured by Meghand and being brought as a captive to the court of Ravana, Hanuman was in his normal form, but when he had entered Lanka he had assumed a very small form to avoid detection—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4.

So he assumed that small form once again to slip out easily from the clothes that had been tied to his tail when it was long and thick. The grip of the bondage became loose as soon as Hanuman reduced his physical size. The demons had not thought of this trick, and they were caught unawares.

The thick reams of oil-drenched cloth that spread through the streets of Lanka after Hanuman slipped out of it caught fire and set the whole city alight.

It ought to be noted that he had this magical ability to change the size of his body, for besides assuming a miniature form he had once also assumed a colossal form, like that of a huge mountain, before embarking on the mission—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 30. He does this again after freeing himself from the bondage as we shall read in Doha no. 25 herein below.

²While the male demons joined the revelry on the streets as Hanuman was paraded through Lanka, their ladies watched the spectacle from the terraces and attics of their gilded homes. So as soon as Hanuman freed himself from the wrappings of clothes, that had begun to send tongues of flames leaping high through the streets by now, and started jumping from one house to another, dragging burning cloth behind him, the demonesses watching the scene got terrified out of their wits. They screamed in horror and scrambled madly for cover, for this new terror had come so suddenly and unexpectedly to these poor ladies that they had no time to think.]

दो०. हरि प्रेरित तेहि अवसर चले मरुत उनचास । अट्टहास करि गर्जा कपि बढि लाग अकास ॥ २५ ॥

dōhā.

hari prērita tēhi avasara calē maruta unacāsa.
aṭṭahāsa kari garjā kapi baḍhi lāga akāsa. 25.

Driven (inspired and motivated) by the will of Lord Hari (the Supreme Being; or by Providence), just at that time all the forty-nine forms of the wind¹ began blowing simultaneously².

The Kapi (Hanuman) laughed aloud contemptuously in a resounding tone even as he enlarged his body once again so much so that it seemed to touch the sky². (Doha no. 25)

[Note—¹According to the scriptures there are forty-nine types of wind, and each type is presided over by a god who is called ‘Marut’.

The 49 Maruts—They are the Wind-Gods mentioned in Rig Veda, 1/37-39 and 1/165/3, 5, 7, 9. They are regarded variously as — (i) sons of Indra and Vrishni (Rig Veda, 2/34/2), (ii) Sons of Rudra (Rig Veda, 2/33/1), (iii) similar to the Fire-God (Rig Veda, 6/66/2), and (vi) Indra God (Rig Veda, 1/165, 171). The Purans call them sons of sage Kashyap and Diti.

The Atharva-shikha Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, in its Kandika 1 says that the Maruts were created along with the Moon God, the Mantras of the Atharva Veda, the Viraat Chanda and the Samvartak Agni. It is the fourth leg or Paad of Brahm and corresponds to the Ardha Matra of the half a syllable that follows the the third letter ‘M’ of the ethereal word OM representing Brahm.

The Nrisingh Purvatapini Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, in its Canto 2, verse no. 2 dealing with the concept of OM says that the forty nine 49 Maruts are the Ganas or attendants of the fourth syllable which is the Ardha Matra of OM.

(b) Wind God (Vayu or Anil)—appears first in the Rig Veda, 1/2/1-3; 1/134. The ‘vital air or wind element’ was created from the Pran or the vital life-sustaining vitality of the creator Prajapati Brahma (Rig Veda, 10/90/13). He is regarded as the Atma of all the Gods (Shathpath Brahman, 9/1/2/38). He bestows immortality to the Gods and other exalted souls who are able to please and control him (Rig Veda, 10/186/3). He has the fastest speed amongst the Gods (Taiteriyā Sanhita, 3/8/7/1). He moves in an oblique line (and not straight) (Jaimini Brahman, 3/3/10).

²To wit, a severe storm arose, and it fanned the flames. In this context we must remember that Hanuman was the “son of the wind god”, and one of his many names is ‘Maruti’, i.e. the son of Marut. All the forty-nine Maruts are the same Wind God in different forms and playing different roles.

So when the Wind God’s own son was in action, it is very natural that his exalted and powerful father would help him in the enterprise, especially when this enterprise is in the service of the Gods themselves, in the service of Lord Ram who was none other than the Supreme Being in his form, and for the good of the entire creation in general because the demons had been tormenting all the creatures.

It is common observance that when a huge fire is lit, a strong breeze begins to blow. It is because hot air rises up, and the surrounding cooler air rushes in, or is sucked in by the vacuum thus created, to fill in the space; it is a scientific phenomenon.

So therefore, when the blaze started, and the stronger it grew, a strong breeze swept through the city of Lanka. This wind further fanned the flames, and the fire spread to even those areas where the oil-soaked cloth was not present.

The homes and palaces had wood as their basic framework on which gold was plated; the doors, windows, roofs and walls had wood all over them. So there was no problem for the blaze to spread, and the strong wind aided its progress. Even in modern times when wood is rarely used in buildings, a fire destroys huge buildings and may even spread to the surrounding neighbourhood if not controlled in time.]

चौ०. देह बिसाल परम हरुआई । मंदिर तें मंदिर चढ धाई ॥ १ ॥

जरड़ नगर भा लोग बिहाला । झपट लपट बहु कोटि कराला ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

dēha bisāla parama haru'ā'ī. mandira tēm mandira caṛha dhā'ī. 1.
jara'i nagara bhā lōga bihālā. jhapata lapaṭa bahu kōṭi karālā. 2.

Hanuman assumed a huge form that was light and nimble (instead of being heavy and bulky as it would have impeded his movements) even as he jumped quickly and easily from one building to another. (1)

The whole city was burning; its citizens were exceedingly panicky and at their wit's end. Fierce tongues of flame were leaping ferociously in all the directions, everywhere, even as terrified citizens ran helter-skelter screaming in horror.¹ (2)

[Note—¹The scene of the 'Burning of Lanka' has been very vividly and wonderfully described in Tulsidas' book "Kavitawali". Refer: Kavitawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 3-25.]

तात मातु हा सुनिअ पुकारा । एहिं अवसर को हमहि उबारा ॥ ३ ॥

हम जो कहा यह कपि नहिं होई । बानर रूप धरें सुर कोई ॥ ४ ॥

साधु अवग्या कर फलु ऐसा । जरड़ नगर अनाथ कर जैसा ॥ ५ ॥ tāta mātu hā suni'a pukārā. ēhim avasara kō hamahi ubārā. 3.

hama jō kahā yaha kapi nahim hō'ī. bānara rūpa dharēm sura kō'ī. 4.
sādhu avagyā kara phalu aisā. jara'i nagara anātha kara jaisā. 5.

There was a mighty commotion in Lanka; the only sound that was heard everywhere was the frantic call of the panicky citizens who lamented and wailed, 'Oh my dear, oh my mother, who will save us now! (3)

What we had guessed that this fellow cannot be, and is not an ordinary monkey, turns out to be true, for verily he must be some great God in his form (who has come here to take revenge upon us)¹. (4)

Surely indeed, it is the result of insulting and disobeying pious people (sādhu avagyā), and a curse obtained thereby, that the city is burning like this². (5)

[Note—¹We have already read earlier that there were some demon warriors who had witnessed the mayhem in the Ashok garden when Hanuman killed large number of troops of demon soldiers and Ravana's son Akshayakumar, and had even beaten back the mighty Meghnad before being captured, but who managed to escape death somehow to report the death and destruction to Ravana—it were these demons who had privately concluded that Hanuman was definitely no ordinary creature though they were afraid of punishment if they said this to Ravana or any of the senior demons. But nevertheless, they must have shared their feelings with their family members, albeit on condition of secrecy. So when the city was up in flames, they vented their feelings and shared their premonition publicly. But it was too late by now; the city was already ablaze.

²The citizens were referring to Vibhishan's advice to Ravana to let-off Hanuman with a slight punishment because it is wrong to harm messengers. Vibhishan was amongst the few demons who were pious and devoted to Lord God; defying him has resulted in the burning of Lanka.

It would be clear shortly that Vibhishan's home was spared from the inferno, and so was the garden where Sita stayed and was attended by Trijata, one other female demon who was god-fearing. These two places were spared because holy and pious souls abided in them.]

जारा नगरु निमिष एक माहीं । एक बिभीषन कर गृह नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥
ता कर दूत अनल जेहिं सिरिजा । जरा न सो तेहि कारन गिरिजा ॥ ७ ॥ उलटि पलटि लंका सब जारी । कूदि परा पुनि सिंधु मझारी ॥ ८ ॥ jārā nagaru nimiṣa ēka māhīm. ēka bibhīṣana kara gr̥ha nāhīm. 6.

tā kara dūta anala jēhim sirijā. jarā na sō tēhi kārana girijā. 7.
ulaṭi palaṭi laṅkā saba jāri. kūdi parā puni sindhu majhārī. 8.

The city (of Lanka) was burnt in a short time, in the twinkling of an eye. One home that was spared from the inferno was that of Vibhishan. (6)

And, oh Girija (Parvati; the consort of Lord Shiva)¹, Hanuman was the messenger of the Lord who had produced the 'fire element' itself (at the time of creation), and this is why he escaped from being burnt². (7)

He burnt the whole of Lanka, from one end to the other. After that, he jumped into the middle of the ocean (to douse the lingering fire that still smouldered on the remnant of cloth that stuck to his tail, as well as to cool and refresh himself). (8)

[Note—¹It ought to be remembered that this wonderful story is being narrated by Lord Shiva to his consort goddess Parvati—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 20 also.

²Lord Ram, who is the Supreme Being himself who created this world and its primary elements, such as the sky, air, fire, water and earth, ensured that Hanuman was given immunity from the harm that fire causes. Remember: When king Dasrath performed a fire sacrifice to beget sons, the Fire God had manifested himself and had given a sweet pudding to the king, asking him to let it be shared by his queens, Kaushalya, Kaikeyi and Sumitra. Lord Ram was born of Kaushalya as a reward of her sharing a portion of this blessed pudding. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 189 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.}

To wit, Lord Ram had his own roots in the sacred Fire. So he knew the secrets of the fire element; he could harness the fire's dynamic powers. In effect, Lord Ram was privy to some mystical ways by which he could exercise control over the fire element and its presiding deity, the Fire God, who incidentally was favourably inclined to the Lord's wishes for three reasons: one is that the Lord was the fruit of the blessing of the Fire God himself as is evident in the way he was born; the second is that Lord Ram is the Supreme Being who is the Father of the Fire God himself; and the third is that Lord Ram is on a mission to fulfill the wishes of the Gods themselves who had prayed to Lord Vishnu to help them get rid of the menace of Ravana and the evil demons.

Lord Ram had employed his special relations with the Fire God by placing Sita in the latter's safe custody before Ravana abducted her shadow which she left behind. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 24.}

So here, Lord Ram asked the Fire God to afford his protection to Hanuman and spare him from being burnt in the fire that raged through Lanka.

There is one other obvious reason why Hanuman escaped being scorched. He ran ahead of the spreading blaze, jumping and skipping over buildings as the fire spread rapidly; he had already freed himself from the thick wick of cloth and oil that gave direction to the fire. Besides this, there was another fortunate coincidence: the wind blew in a direction that was opposite of the area of the city where the house of Vibhishan and the Ashok garden were located, so these two also escaped being burnt!]

दो०. पूँछ बुझाइ खोइ श्रम धरि लघु रूप बहोरि । जनकसुता केँ आगेँ ठाढ़ भयउ कर जोरि ॥ २६ ॥

dōhā.

pūm̃cha bujhā'i khō'i śrama dhari laghu rūpa bahōri.
janakasutā kēm āgēm ṭhāṛha bhaya'u kara jōri. 26.

After extinguishing the remnants of fire of his tail and refreshing himself (by dipping in the water of the ocean), Hanuman once again resumed his diminutive form and came to stand submissively with joined hands before Sita.¹ (Doha no. 26)

[Note—¹It was time for departure, so Hanuman decided to meet Sita once again—to see how she had fared during the blaze, to say a final word of assurance to her, to ask her if she has any message for Lord Ram, and take her permission to go back.]

चौ०. मातु मोहि दीजे कछु चीन्हा । जैसें रघुनायक मोहि दीन्हा ॥ १ ॥
चूड़ामनि उतारि तब दयऊ । हरष समेत पवनसुत लयऊ ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

mātu mōhi dījē kachu cīnhā. jaisēm raghunāyaka mōhi dīnhā. 1.
cūrāmani utāri taba daya'ū. haraṣa samēta pavanasuta laya'ū. 2.

[Hanuman said to Sita—] ‘Mother, please be kind to give me some token such as the one which Lord Ram had given me when I had come here¹ (so that when I go back the Lord would be convinced that I have indeed met you).’ (1)

Sita immediately took off the ornament that she wore on her head, the diadem (cūrāmani)², and gave it to the son of the wind god (Hanuman), which the latter most gratefully accepted with immense joy. (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had given his finger ring to Hanuman as a token to prove to Sita that he (Hanuman) was indeed the Lord’s messenger, and not an imposter. It was this ring that convinced Sita that Hanuman was truly a messenger who had been sent by the Lord. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-12 that precede Doha no. 23; and Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 13.

²Though Sita had discarded all her royal ornaments at the time of accompanying Lord Ram to the forest as she was expected to be attired in a fashion that would be suitable for life in as a hermitess as she was to live in the forest with her hermit husband, Lord Ram, but nevertheless there were certain ornaments that she could rightly wear, and would not be required to discard, as she was a married woman who was accompanying her husband on his journey. One such ornament was the “Chudamani”, a jewel that is worn in the hair on the head by all married women.

Just as the ‘finger ring’ is a single most important jewel that honourable men wear, the ‘Chudamani’ is the single most important jewel for all honourable women. When a person is separated from someone whom he loves most dearly in life and a chance fortunately comes when he is able to send a token of his affection and love to that lost individual, he would definitely send a thing that is most valuable for him, such as the finger ring that Lord Ram had sent to Sita to express his deep emotion and remembrance of her. So Sita wished to reciprocate the same emotion by sending her Chudamani to Lord Ram as a gift or a token, because this jewel was the single most important piece of her basic attire as a married woman.

This exchange of gifts, the finger ring by Lord Ram and the chudamani by Sita, had an immense symbolic meaning: when a man gifts a finger ring to a woman he expresses his love for her and his commitment to be ever loyal to her; when the lady gives the jewel of her hair to a man she expresses her deep attachment to him and a desire to submit herself to him without any questions asked.

To wit, when Sita sent the jewel of her head to Lord Ram it was a strong and clear message to him that she has surrendered herself to the Lord, and it is his responsibility to take full care of her. Similarly, when Lord Ram sent his finger ring to Sita it was a clear and incontrovertible message to her that the Lord is fully committed to her and loves no other woman but her.

This exchange of token gifts, Lord Ram's finger ring and Sita's jewel, was a mutual pledge of loyalty between the two, a reiteration of trust and an expression of faith in each other.]

कहेहु तात अस मोर प्रनामा । सब प्रकार प्रभु पूरनकामा ॥ ३ ॥
दीन दयाल बिरिदु संभारी । हरहु नाथ मम संकट भारी ॥ ४ ॥
तात सक्रसुत कथा सुनाएहु । बान प्रताप प्रभुहि समुझाएहु ॥ ५ ॥ मास दिवस महँ नाथु न आवा । तौ पुनि मोहि जिअत नहिँ पावा ॥ ६ ॥ kahēhu tāta asa mōra pranāmā. saba prakāra prabhu pūranakāmā. 3.

dīna dayāla biridu sambhārī. harahu nātha mama saṅkaṭa bhārī. 4.
tāta sakrasuta kathā sunā'ēhu. bāna pratāpa prabhuhi samujhā'ēhu. 5.
māsa divasa mahum' nāthu na āvā. tau puni mōhi ji'ata nahim' pāvā. 6.

[After giving her diadem to Hanuman, Sita told him the message she wished to be conveyed to Lord Ram. She said—] ‘My dear son (tāta)! First convey my deep obeisance and tell that I bow my head, and then prey to the Lord on my behalf, saying “Oh Lord, you are the one who fulfills all wishes (of everyone). (3)

Oh the merciful and gracious Lord! Remembering your reputation as someone who removes all distress and agony of those who suffer but have surrendered themselves to you, please be kind to exterminate my sorrows and miseries which are immense and have become intolerable for me.” (4)

My dear son (tāta)! Then recounting the story related to the son of Indra (sakrasuta) to him (Lord Ram), remind him of the power and the glory of his arrows¹. (5)

If the Lord does not come within one month, then surely he will not find me alive². (6)

[Note—¹This story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 2.

To wit, Sita asks Hanuman to tell Lord Ram that he must recall how he had picked up a humble blade of grass and used it as an arrow to shoot at Jayant, the wicked son of Indra, who had disguised himself as a crow to prick her. When blood had oozed out from the wound, Lord Ram decided to punish him. Jayant had flown round the entire universe in order to find a place to hide, but the arrow pursued it everywhere relentlessly. No god or deity was ready to offer him refuge against Lord Ram's arrow. At last, sage Narad had advised him to go and surrender before the Lord, begging for forgiveness and mercy, for then the Lord will surely excuse him. So Jayant came and fell down before the Lord, and the Lord forgave him and spared his life. But since the Lord's arrow was infallible and could not go in vain, it was obligatory that something must be hit with it. Hence, the arrow hit Jayant's eye and blinded it. For all times to come, Jayant became 'one-eyed', and since he had disguised himself as a crow, it is believed that all the crows were henceforth cursed to become 'crooked-eyed' or 'cock-eyed'.

Sita wished that this story be narrated to Lord Ram to remind him about his astounding potentials and stupendous abilities to motivate and inspire him, to instill confidence in him, and to lift his fighting spirit to its original form. In case he has become too depressed and has lost his willingness to fight Ravana, this story would remind him of his grand reputation and the mystical powers that he possessed that not even the gods of the universe could dare to offer protection to someone, in this case Jayant, who had offended the Lord. If the Lord did not spare even the son of Indra who is the 'king of gods', then what do Ravana count as he is merely a 'evil demon' who ought to be punished nevertheless for his sins and cruel nature, even if he had not abducted her.

²This is because Ravana had threatened to kill Sita after the expiry of one month—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 10.]

कहु कपि केहि बिधि राखौं प्राणा । तुम्हहू तात कहत अब जाना ॥ ७ ॥
तोहि देखि सीतलि भइ छाती । पुनि मो कहूँ सोइ दिनु सो राती ॥ ८ ॥ kahu kapi kēhi bidhi rākhaum̃ prānā. tumhahū tāta kahata aba jānā. 7.

tōhi dēkhi sīтали bha'i chātī. puni mō kahum̃ sō'i dinu sō rātī. 8.

[Expressing her sense of loneliness and gloom, Sita said to Hanuman—] 'Tell me oh Kapi, how and by what means can I hold to my life for now you too say that you are going away. (7)

Since I first saw you my heart has found solace and comfort, and it feels cool after suffering from the intense heat of suffering. But how unlucky and unfortunate I am that I will have to face once again the same sort of day and night that I was compelled to face till your arrival.¹ (8)

[¹Once you go back, I will find myself all alone. While you were here I had felt very safe as I had a protector to protect me; but when you go away I will be left to my ill-fate, and things would be worse for me as these cruel demons will surely vent their anger at me. Till the time you were here I found some peace as these rascals desisted from tormenting me out of your fear; but with your going away they will turn the heat on me, and make life hell for me. Yes truly it was hell even before you came, but I had got some respite while you were here, and so this hell would be felt all the more striking by me when my suffering resume after you go away, even if by some remote good chance the demons decide to leave me alone for fear of severe retribution and backlash later on when you come back again and learn that they had tormented me. This thought fills me with gloom and dismay. But what can be done. I realize that you must be allowed to go, for otherwise how will the Lord get news of my sufferings, and how will the Lord come to free me. So I will bear with my sufferings for some more time.]

दो०. जनकसुतहि समुझाइ करि बहु बिधि धीरजु दीन्ह ।
चरन कमल सिरु नाइ कपि गवनु राम पहिं कीन्ह ॥ २७ ॥

dōhā.

janakasutahi samujhā'i kari bahu bidhi dhīraju dīnha.
carana kamala siru nā'i kapi gavanu rāma pahim kīnha. 27.

Hanuman explained the situation to the daughter of Janak (“janakasutahi”; Sita)¹ and reassured her in various ways, asking her to have courage and patience.

Then he bowed his head before her lotus-like (holy) feet, and took leave of her to start on his journey back to Lord Ram. (Doha no. 27)

[Note—¹Hanuman understood the mental state of Sita. He explained to her that it was crucial for him to go back to Lord Ram to inform him about her, and then soon come back with an army to free her from the clutches of her captors and punish them. Being emotional and getting upset would not serve any purpose, for if he stayed back to please her then the Lord would not know what has happened, and the precious time of one month would pass without any tangible action on the ground. She must understand its gravity and let him go, for it is better to suffer for some short time now than to regret later on.

And as far as the demons are concerned, she must feel secured as they won't feel inclined nor dare to worry her any longer, for they are by now so terrified by what he (Hanuman) had done to them that, first of all they would be busy nursing their wounds and taking stock of the destruction of Lanka, and secondly they would be so occupied with the fearful thoughts of the impending invasion by a formidable army consisting of countless soldiers who are the likes of Hanuman that they won't have any thought left for anything else!

So Hanuman most humbly said to Sita, “Mother, let me say adieu to thee for now. I shall be back in a short time, but at that time I will come to thee as a victor to boldly take thou back to Lord Ram, who will, by then, have exterminated all thine tormentors. A month's time is not a long time, and it will pass away soon. Meanwhile, have courage and faith, and trust me that thy sufferings are nearing their end. Don't lose thy coolness and patience that has been thine wonderful quality that has supported thee in thy moments of suffering. Mother, I repeat, for which I should please be excused, don't forsake hope, trust, equanimity, coolness and patience as they will stand thee in good stead. Adieu for now; I shall be back soon with Lord Ram!”]

चौ०. चलत महाधुनि गर्जेसि भारी । गर्भ स्रवहिं सुनि निसिचर नारी ॥ १ ॥
नाघि सिंधु एहि पारहि आवा । सबद किलिकिला कपिन्ह सुनावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

calata mahādhuni garjēsi bhārī. garbha sravahim suni nisicara nārī. 1.
nāghi sindhu ēhi pārahi āvā. sabada kilikilā kapinha sunāvā. 2.

At the time of his departure from Lanka, Hanuman roared thunderously, as a result of which the pregnant demon females had miscarriage.¹ (1)

He leapt across the ocean and landed jubilantly on this side of the shore, while making a shrill cry of joy and exhilaration (to indicate to his companions, who were eagerly waiting for his arrival, that he had good news for them).² (2)

[Note—¹Hanuman's thunderous roar was so chilling and ear-shattering that it made the female demons abort instantly out of shock. Meanwhile, the male demons were overcome with such terror and were so horrified by the prospects of a deadly war which was sure to exact a heavy toll on them that they forgot all about conjugal pleasures, as their attention was diverted to devising means to survive the war that was looming on the horizon. This effectively meant that one generation of demons was done away with in a jiffy!

Let us pause a while here and reflect on this subject of Hanuman crossing the ocean, or rather 'flying over it'. First of all the question is: can a creature, other than birds and insects and those who have wings, can actually fly in the sky, like the way Hanuman has said to have done? Well, to answer this vexed question, let us take another example. A man can swim in the water like a fish or any other aquatic animal only if he has acquired the necessary skill and have the knowledge of how to do it; not everyone can swim. Similarly, it is also possible to leave the earth and become air-borne if one has the necessary knowledge and skill. We have air planes and both manned and unmanned drones in modern times that do exactly this, and that too with a heavy load of passengers and luggage. So therefore there is no surprise at all that Hanuman could lift himself from the ground and be air-borne because he had this specialized knowledge and skill which enabled him to do so.

And in the entire kingdom of Kishkindha, Hanuman was the only one who had this special ability, most surely because he was the son of the wind god, and Hanuman's father must have taught and trained his son how to 'fly like the wind'. A father would naturally want that his son should acquire skills that are special to his family, and therefore it is quite natural that the wind god taught his son Hanuman the skills required to fly in the air. No other member of the kingdom of Kishkindha had this unique ability. It is for this reason that Lord Ram had selected him to carry his finger-ring and the message for Sita at the time the group of messengers were getting ready for departure from Kishkindha, for the Lord clearly was aware that one would have to cross the barrier of the ocean if he was to find Sita at all as he had already known that she was taken away by Ravana who lived in the island of Lanka in the middle of the ocean, and that Hanuman alone could do so.

This ability of Hanuman to 'fly in the air' came in handy during the war itself; when Laxman was wounded in the battle-field and the need arose to bring some medicine man who would advise some herbs that could revive Laxman, Hanuman was assigned these twin jobs—first to bring a doctor, and then go and bring the herb prescribed by him. When the medicine man prescribed the necessary herbs that could only be found in the Himalayan Mountains in the north of mainland India, it was Hanuman once again who was selected for this job, as he alone could fly swiftly to cover this huge distance and bring the herb within the prescribed time. We shall read about it in due course when we read the details of the epic war and this episode. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 62.}

When Hanuman had entered Lanka he came in quietly, but when he left it he roared thunderously like a victor whose mission was a resounding success. He roared to warn the demons that he is challenging them to stop him if they can, and to be wary of ever disturbing Sita because if he got any wind that they had mistreated her then all hell would break loose upon them, and he would roast them alive.

But what does his entering Lanka ‘silently’ but departing with a ‘thunderous roar’ indicate? Well, when he was on his way to Lanka he had done so as a modern-day drone or a glider does, or the way a kite, a hawk or a vulture would dive or swoop down from the sky on the intended target—they do so silently, almost imperceptibly. Hanuman did not want that his arrival should be a matter of public display in Lanka as it would ruin his prospects of success, and force him to encounter severe resistance from the first instance, which any spy on a reconnoitering mission would obviously like to avoid at all costs. So he glided and landed silently on the soil of Lanka.

However, the departure time was another thing—he was leaving as a triumphant victor who had vanquished his enemy and brought the latter to his heel; he had lain to ruin the magnificent city of Lanka and left its inhabitants reeling with shock. Hence, there was no reason to leave quietly like a thief or a defeated person who goes away gloomily in shame. He was positively proud and upbeat about his achievements, and so he ‘thundered away in jubilation to celebrate the occasion’. A more obvious reason is this: like an air plane using its jet engines to take off from a flat runway, and everyone knows that jet engines make an ear-splitting noise while doing so, Hanuman had made a roar like the thunderclap at the time of leaving Lanka.

These two methods used by Hanuman to arrive and leave Lanka, silently and with a roar respectively, lead us to make another interesting observation: At the time of launching himself from the northern shores of the ocean he had the benefit of using a chain of tall hills upon which he jumped swiftly and ran rapidly across to gain the required momentum and lift to become air borne. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 1.} So therefore, he could rise high up in the sky and silently glide over the water to land quietly at the designated place in the dark of the night.

But this facility was not available to him on the shores of Lanka, and neither was he very particular about keeping himself unknown like he had done while entering Lanka by being silent. So therefore, he launched himself proudly much like an air plane using its jet engines—i.e. with a lot of thunderous noise!

Even if his launch from the northern shore of the ocean from where he took off on his journey for Lanka did make a roaring sound like that of a jet plane taking off, as it surely must have been the case, it didn’t matter much to Hanuman as it was on this side of the ocean which was a long distance of approximately 800 miles off the coast of Lanka. What was crucial for the success of his plan was to enter the demon island of Lanka silently, without making a fuss and alerting anyone, so that the secrecy of the mission can be maintained. This he achieved by setting foot on Lanka’s soil quietly, without making any noise, just like a drone or a glider would do, or like a kite, a hawk or a vulture would also do.

²Ever since Hanuman had gone on his mission to Lanka, all the monkeys and bears sat on the shore of the ocean silently in a very somber mood; some spent time alone and others huddled together in small groups contemplating about the future and praying to God to help them. The overall mood was that of anxiety, worry, uncertainty and gloom. Every now and then they would look up into the sky for any sign of Hanuman returning; they would gaze endlessly into the horizon in the direction they had seen Hanuman go; any sound from that direction would make them prick their ears to hear it and guess what it meant. Each passing hour seemed an era; time virtually stopped; the sun seemed to burn them and the moon aroused ghosts and phantoms.

